START

Microfilmed By:

NORTHEAST DOCUMENT
CONSERVATION CENTER
Andover, MA 01810

July 1994

Camera Operator:
John Sullivan

MASTER
NEGATIVE NUMBER:
BSO-56-048

MICROFILMED
August 1993 - April 1994

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOK MICROFILMING PROJECT

Funded in part by

THE NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES

Grant No. PS-20709-93

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MICROFILMING PROJECT

A Cooperative Project Between the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives and the Boston Public Library (August 1993 - April 1994)

The Microfilming Project incorporates two collections of scrapbooks housed in two separate repositories. The first set of scrapbooks (80 volumes) resides within the Allen A. Brown Collection of the Boston Public Library (BPL) Music Department. Their call number is M.125.5. The second set of scrapbooks (132 volumes) resides within the Press Clippings collection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (BSO) Archives. They have the designation Pres 56.

The BPL scrapbooks begin with the founding of the BSO in 1881 and continue, through 79 seasons, to 1960. Articles consist mainly of reviews and feature stories from Boston and New York newspapers. Occasionally, magazine articles and press releases are also included. The scrapbooks cover most aspects of the BSO.

The BSO scrapbooks run from 1889, the Orchestra's 9th season, to 1973. In addition to local reviews and features, the volumes contain articles culled from national and international publications. The scrapbooks document, in detail, all aspects of the BSO: The Symphony Orchestra (including subscription concerts, tours, and trips), the Boston Pops, the Tanglewood Festival, the Tanglewood Music Center, and Symphony Hall.

The two sets of scrapbooks have been filmed as two separate entities. Researchers wanting to look at specific seasons or subjects must examine both sets of films to ensure full coverage.

The scrapbooks do not represent the complete holdings of either location on the subject of the BSO.

Requests for positive microfilm copies of individual rolls, or of film sets, should be directed to the respective repository:

Music Department
Boston Public Library
Post Office Box 286
Boston, MA 02117

Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives
Symphony Hall
Boston, MA 02115

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOKS

1889 - 1973

132 VOLUMES

Source: Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives

FINDING AID

Boston Symphony Orchestra Scrapbooks (Series 56, Sub-Series 1)

Source: Press Office (Office of the Public Relations Director)

The BSO scrapbooks comprise part of one series in the BSO Archives. Series 56, Press Clippings, is divided by format into 3 sub-series: 1) Scrapbooks, 1889-1973 (132 volumes); 2) Loose Clippings, 1931-1991 (9 record cartons); and 3) Oversize Newspapers and Journals, 1919-1979 (1 oversize box). Each sub-series is arranged chronologically.

The scrapbooks contain concert notices and reviews, record reviews, and feature articles. Early scrapbooks may also contain programs, tickets, and subscription orders. Materials are organized by concert season into the following categories: BSO (including tours); Kneisel Quartet (and later Boston Symphony Chamber Players); Boston Pops (referred to in early years as Promenade concerts); and Tanglewood (including the Tanglewood Music Center, the Tanglewood Festival, Tanglewood-on-Parade, and the Fromm Festival of Contemporary Music).

Reviews and articles cover a wide range of subjects: Founder H.L. Higginson; BSO conductors, players, trustees, and other personnel; guest artists and composers; BSO and Pops performances and recordings; U.S. and overseas tours; BSO/Cecilia Society joint performances; open rehearsals; and special events connected to anniversary celebrations and fundraising.

Feature stories document changes in the size, composition, and location of the orchestra. Topics include the hiring of women and minorities; the unionization of players; controversies (such as the internment of conductor Karl Muck during World War II); the sale of the old Music Hall; and the construction of Symphony Hall and other structures (such as the Koussevitsky Music Shed at Tanglewood).

Reproductions of the materials in the collection may not be made without permission from the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives.

GUIDE TO CONTENTS

Institution: BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Series Name: PRESS CLIPPINGS
Series Number: 56
Series Dates: 1889-1991

Sub-series Name: SCRAPBOOKS
Sub-series Number: 1
Sub-series Dates: 1889-1973

VOLUME LISTING

VOL	TITLE	DATES
1	BSO	1889-1890
2	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1890-1891
3	BSO	1891-1892
4	Promenade (Pops)	1892
5	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1892-1893
6	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1893-1894
7	BSO Kneisel Quartet	1894-1895
8	BSO	1895-1896
9	Promenade (Pops)	1895-1896
10	BSO	1896-1897
11	BSO	1897-1898
12	Promenade (Pops)	1897-1898
13	BSO	1898-1899
14	BSO	1899-1900
15	Pops	1899-1900
16	BSO	1900-1901
17	BSO	1901-1902
18	Pops	1901-1903
19	BSO	1902-1903
20	BSO	1903-1904
21	BSO	1904-1905
22	Pops	1904-1905
23	BSO	1905-1906
24	BSO	1906-1907
25	BSO	1907-1908
26	BSO	1908-1909
27	BSO Pops	1909-1910
28	BSO Pops	1910-1911
29	BSO Advertisements	1910-1911
30	BSO Pops	1911-1912
31	BSO Pops	1912-1913
32	BSO Pops	1913-1914
33	BSO Pops	1914-1915
34	BSO Pops	1915-1916
35	BSO Pops	1916-1917
36	BSO Pops	1917-1918
37	Karl Muck	1918
38	BSO Pops	1918-1919
39	BSO Pops	1919-1920
40	BSO Advertisements	1919-1920
41	BSO Pops	1920-1921
42	BSO Pops	1921-1922
43	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1922-1923
44	BSO Pops	1922-1924
45	BSO Pops	1924
46	BSO BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1924-1926
47	BSO Pops	1925-1926
48	BSO Advertisements Pops Advertisements	1926-1927
49	BSO Pops	1926-1928
50	BSO	1928
51	BSO Pops	1928-1929
52	BSO Pops U.S. Tour	1929-1930
53	BSO	1930-1931
54	BSO Pops	1931-1932
55	BSO Pops	1932-1933
56	BSO	1933-1934
57	BSO	1934-1935
58	BSO	1935-1936
59	BSO	1936-1937

VOL	TITLE	DATES
60	Pops
	Tanglewood	1936-1937
61	BSO	1937
62	BSO	1937-1938
63	Pops
	Tanglewood	1938
64	BSO	1938-1939
65	Pops
	Tanglewood	1939
66	BSO	1939-1940
67	Tanglewood	1939-1941
68	BSO
	Pops	1940
69	BSO	1940-1941
70	Tanglewood	1940-1944
71	BSO	1941-1942
72	BSO	1942-1943
73	BSO	1943-1944
74	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1944-1945
75	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1945-1946
76	BSO
	Pops
	Tanglewood	1946-1947
77	Tanglewood	1947-1948
78	BSO	1947-1949
79	Tanglewood	1949-1950
80	BSO	1949-1951
81	Tanglewood	1950-1951
82	BSO
	Pops	1951-1952
83	BSO
	Pops	1952-1953
84	Tanglewood	1952-1953
85	BSO	1953-1955
86	Tanglewood	1953-1954
87	Tanglewood	1954-1955
88	BSO
	Pops	1955-1956
89	Tanglewood	1955-1956
90	Tanglewood	1955-1956
91	European Tour	1956
92	European Tour	1956-1957
93	BSO
	Pops	1956-1957
94	Tanglewood	1957
95	BSO	1957-1958
96	BSO
	Pops	1958-1959
97	BSO	1958-1959
98	Tanglewood	1958-1959
99	Tanglewood	1959
100	BSO
	Pops	1959-1960
101	Tanglewood	1959-1960
102	Far Eastern Tour	1959-1960
103	BSO
	Pops	1960-1961
104	Tanglewood	1961
105	BSO
	Pops	1961-1962
106	Tanglewood	1962
107	BSO
	Pops	1962-1963
108	Tanglewood	1963
109	BSO
	Pops	1963-1964
110	Tanglewood	1963-1964
111	BSO
	Pops	1964-1966
112	Tanglewood	1965
113	BSO 85th Anniversary	1965
114	BSO
	Pops	1965-1966
115	Tanglewood	1966
116	BSO
	Pops	1966-1967
117	Tanglewood	1967
118	BSO
	Pops	1967-1968
119	Tanglewood	1968-1969
120	BSO
	Pops	1968-1969
121	Tanglewood	1969
122	BSO
	Pops	1969-1970
123	Tanglewood	1970
124	BSO
	Pops	1970-1971
125	Tanglewood	1971
126	BSO
	Pops	1971-1972
127	European Tour	1970-1971
128	European Tour	1971
129	Tanglewood	1972
130	BSO
	Pops	1972-1973
131	Tanglewood	1973
132	BSO
	Pops	1973-1974

MATERIALS NOT FILMED

SUB-SERIES NUMBER	SUB-SERIES NAME	SUB-SERIES DATES
2	Loose Clippings	1931-1991
3	Oversize Newspapers and Journals	1919-1979

COPYRIGHT STATEMENT

The copyright law of the Unites States - Title 17, United States Code - concerns the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted material.

Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a photocopy or other reproduction. One of these specified conditions is that the photocopy or other reproduction is not to be "used for any purpose other than private study, scholarship, or research." If a user makes a request for, or later uses, a photocopy or reproduction for purposes in excess of "fair use," that user may be liable for copyright infringement.

This institution reserves the right to refuse to accept a copy order if, in its judgment, fulfillment of the order would involve violation of the copy-right law.

TECHNICAL DATA

IMAGE PLACEMENT: [✓ IA] IB IIA IIB

REDUCTION RATIO: 14X

FILM STOCK: Kodak

IMAGELINK™ HQ

MICROFILM

35 mm x 30.5 m · 100 ft

Sp 425

DEVELOP BEFORE 05/1996

1461-0341-012-06

CAT 840 3594

04-08

Kodak

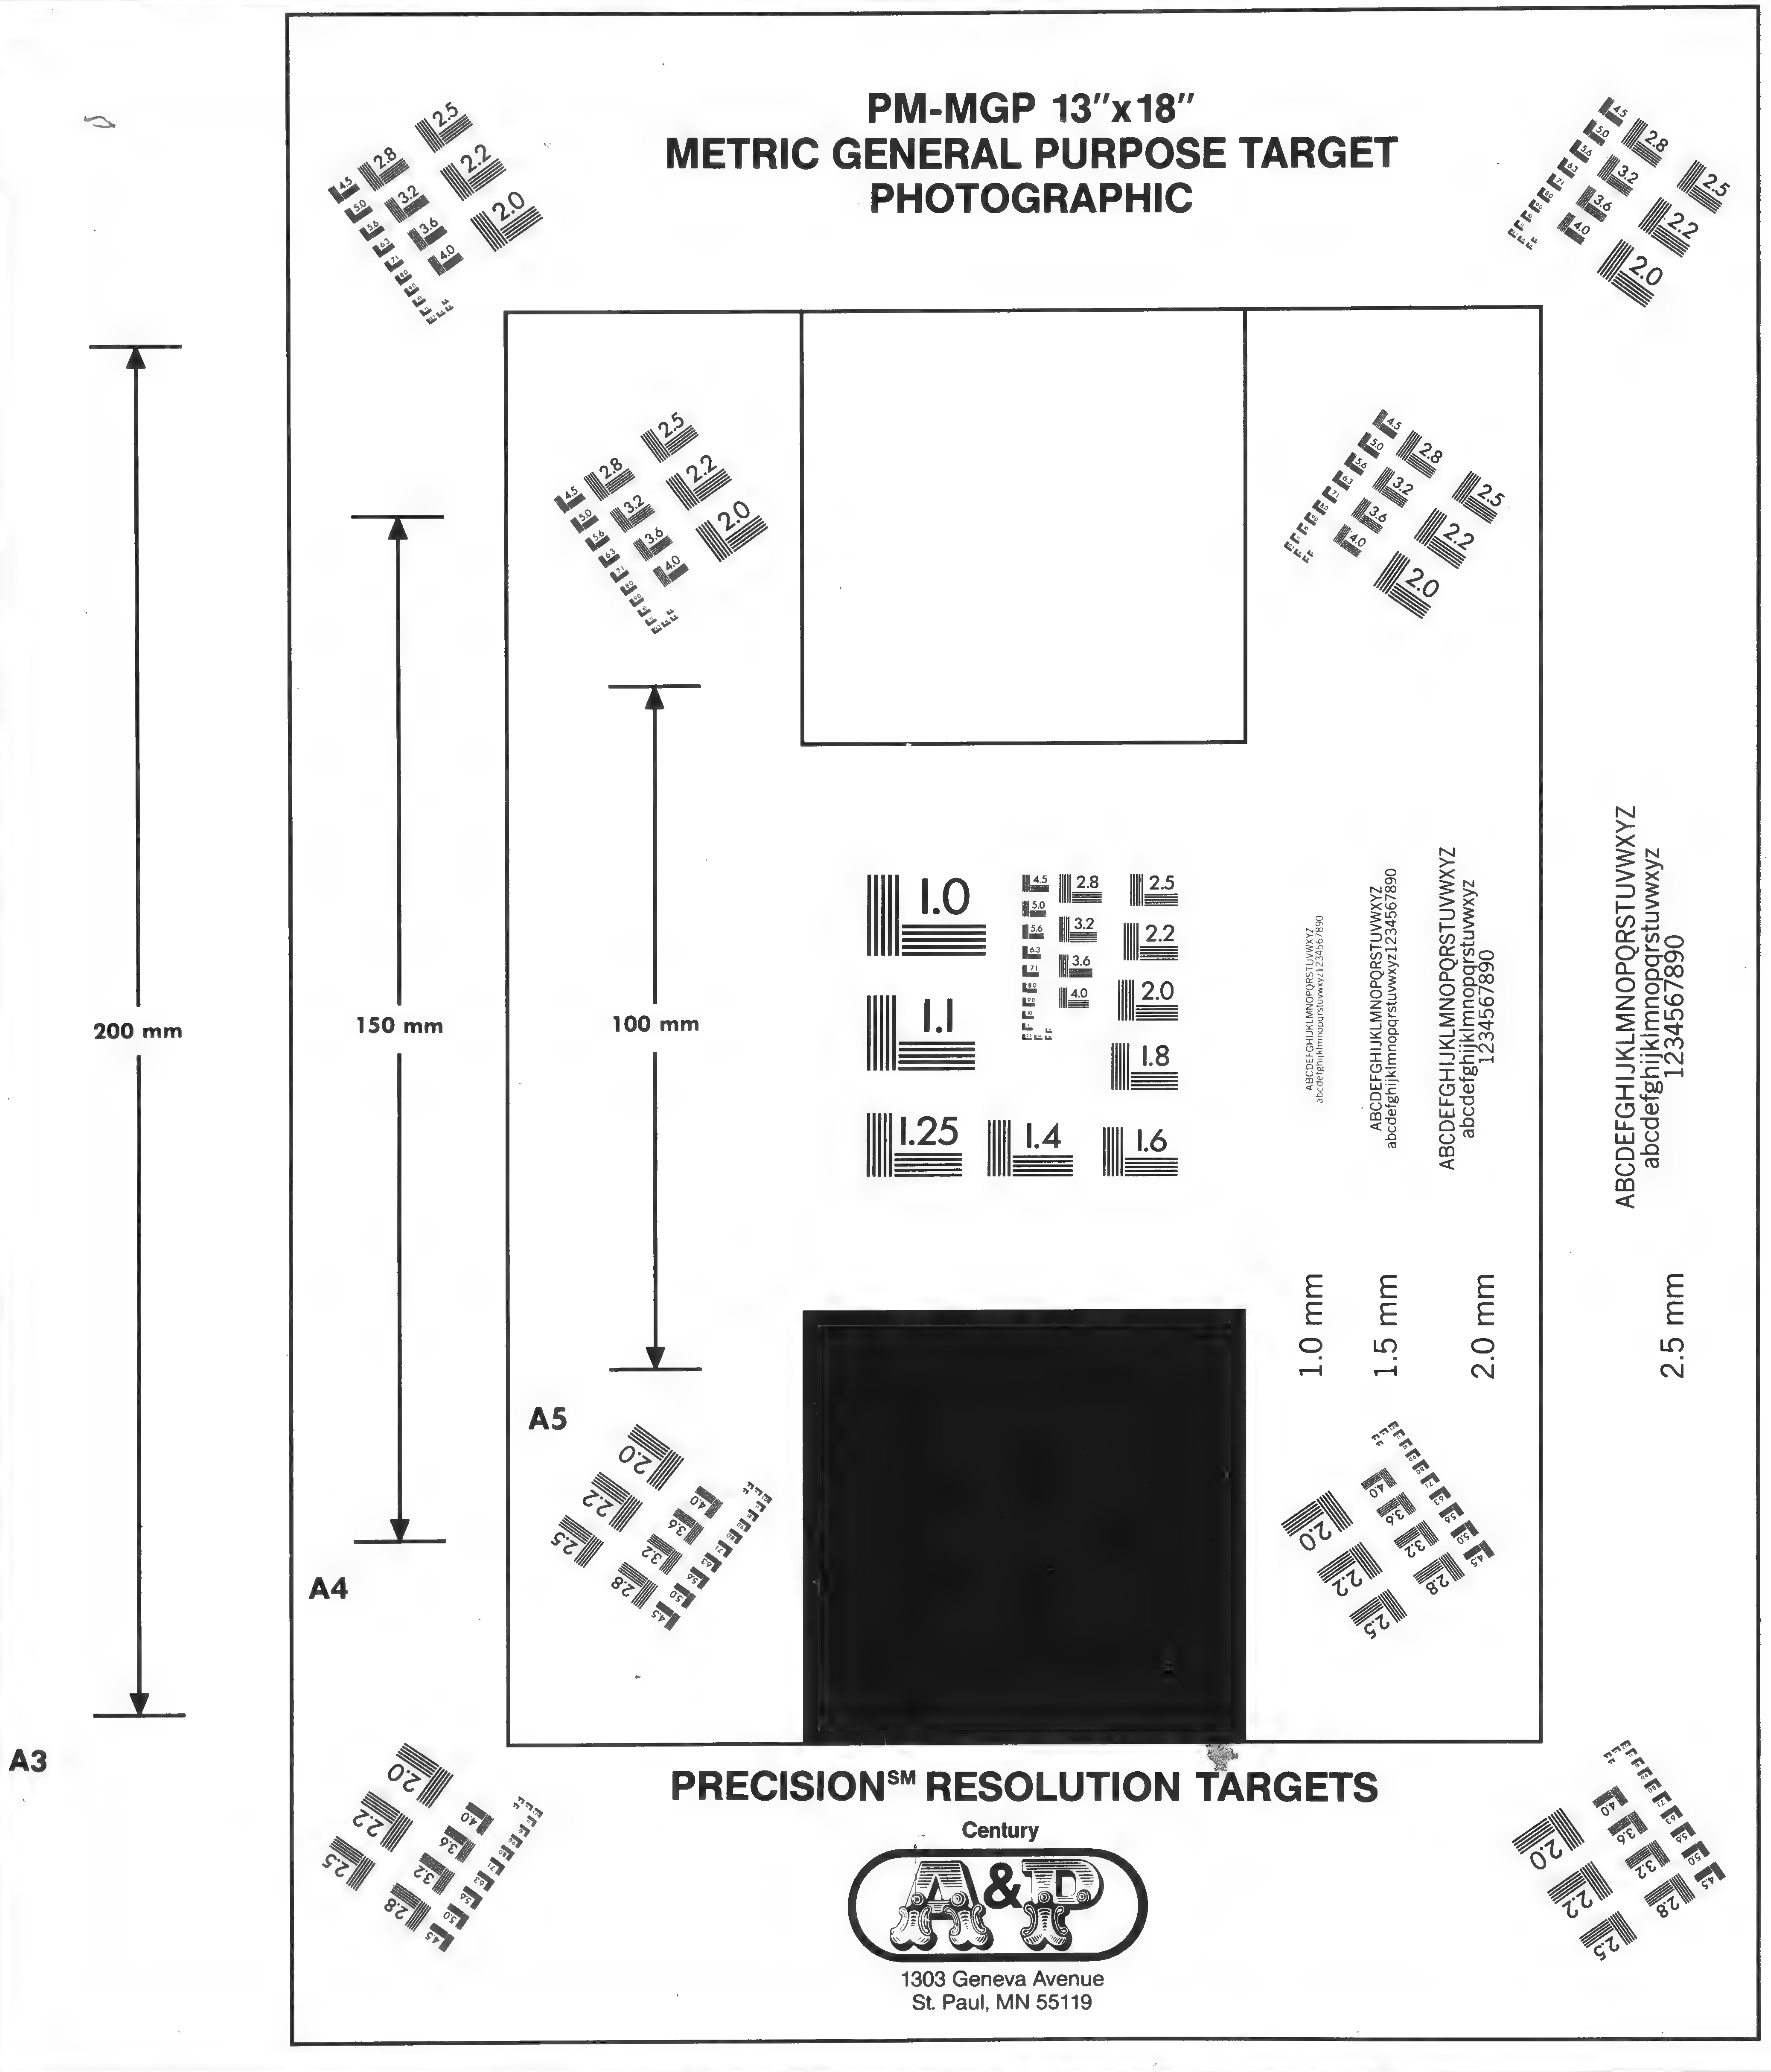
REEL 48

Volume 84

Tanglewood

1952-1953

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



200 mm
150 mm
100 mm
A3
A4
A5
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
7.1
8.0
9.0
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

MULTIPLE EXPOSURES
DUE TO COLOR VARIATIONS
AND OVERLAPPING MATERIAL

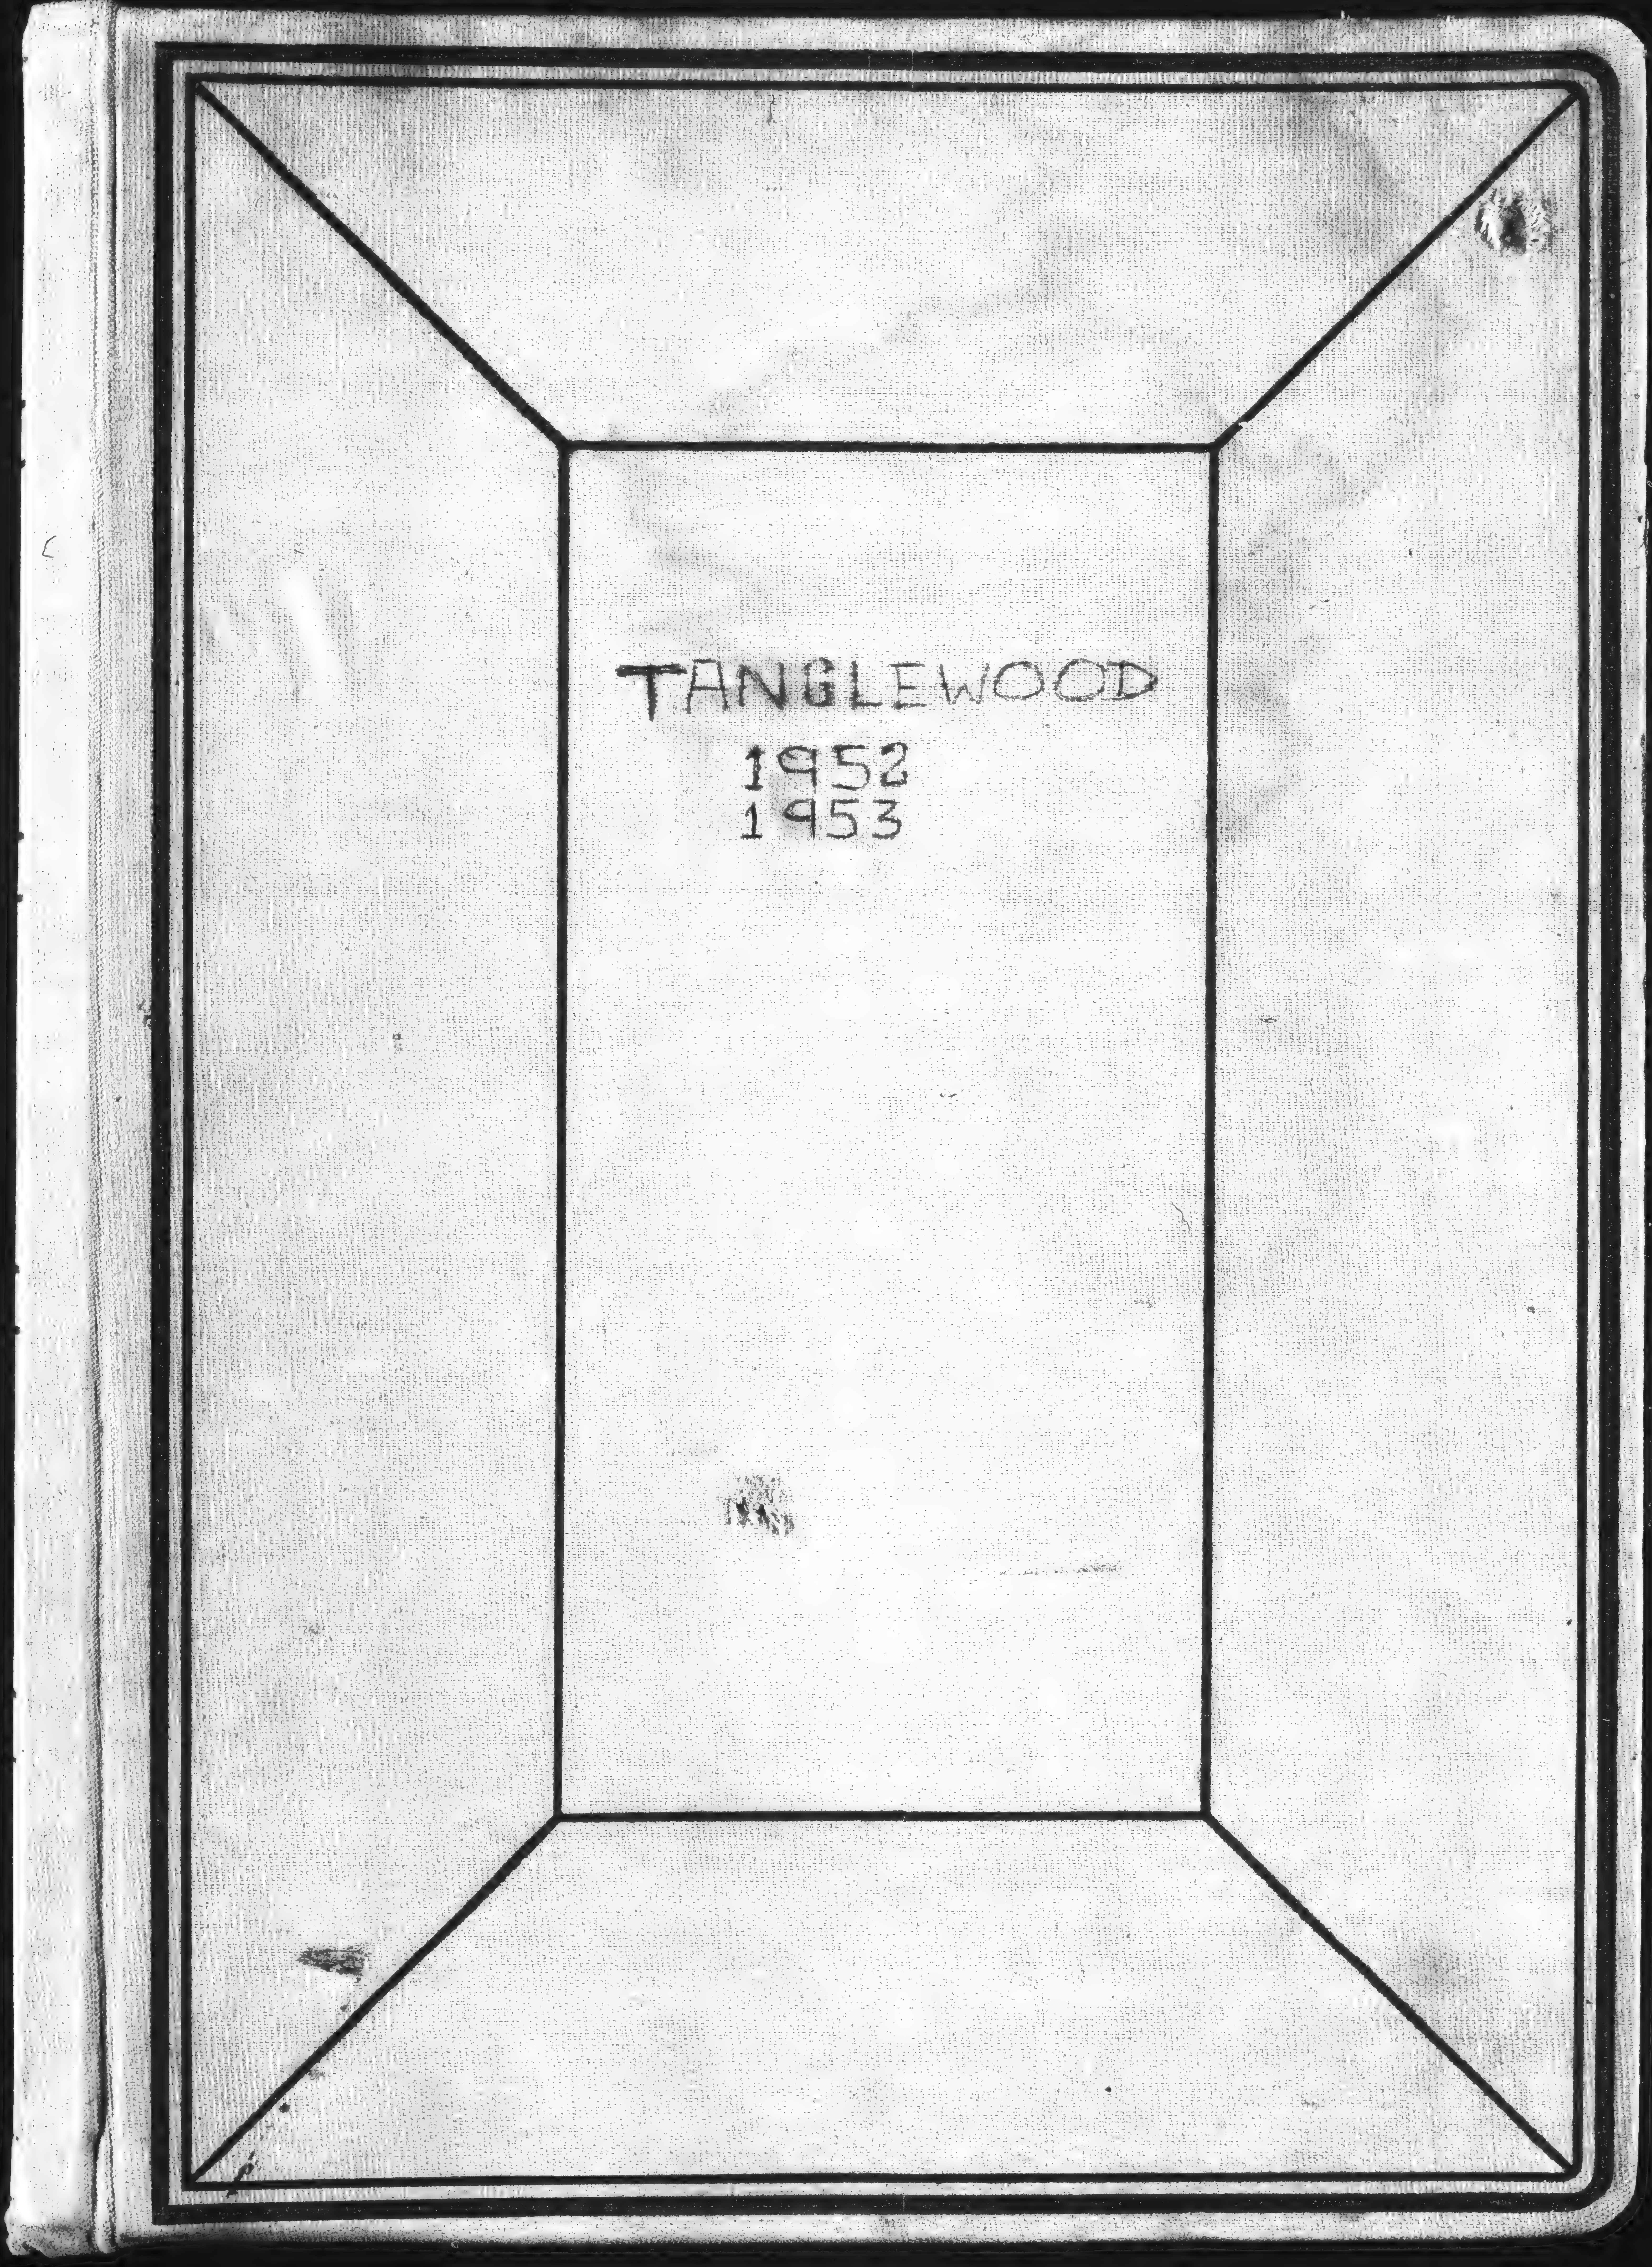
VOLUME 84

Tanglewood

1952 - 1953



TANGLEWOOD

1952
1953

NATIONAL
FLAT BACK SCRAP BOOKS

NATIONAL Made in U.S.A.

FULL DUCK COVER, MANILA PAPER

Without Index, Ruling, Paging or Title

NUMBER	THICKNESS	SIZE
1032	72 Leaves	12⅝ × 10¼
1033	72 Leaves	15 × 10
1034	100 Leaves	15 × 10
1036	90 Leaves	16 × 11⅜
1038	150 Leaves	16 × 11⅜
1039	90 Leaves	18 × 13
↘1041	150 Leaves	18 × 13
1042	150 Leaves	25 × 20

To duplicate this book Order Number indicated by arrow

Eagle — June 28, 1952

Munch Speaks Sunday Afternoon At Tanglewood Season Opening

TANGLEWOOD—Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will speak at the opening exercises of the 10th season of the Berkshire Music Center here Sunday afternoon at 4. It will be his first appearance at Tanglewood since his appointment as director to succeed the late Serge Koussevitzky, who inspired the founding of its summer school by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in connection with its Berkshire Festival, and who was its only director until his death a year ago.

Mr. Munch will leave Paris this evening by plane, arriving in New York tomorrow morning. He is expected in Lenox Saturday to stay at Elm Court during the school and Festival season.

Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center whose contributions help to support the school, and an orchestra trustee, will preside at the exercises. Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Aaron Copland, assistant director, will speak briefly.

As at every opening exercises of the school since it was founded in 1940, the "Alleluia Chorus," written for the occasion by Randall Thompson, will be sung by the student body, conducted by Hugh Ross, director of the choral department.

Guests are invited to tea in the garden following the ceremony.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUN 21 1952 ✓

ALLELUIA CHORUS, written by Randall Thompson for first opening exercises of Berkshire Music Center, Boston Symphony Orchestra's Summer school at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., and sung by students at every subsequent opening, is led by Hug Ross, director of choral department of center. This year's sessic will open next Sunday, June 29. Orchestra's first concerts c season will be presented Saturday and Sunday, July 5 and 6.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
JUN 18 1952

Travel News

Proper Packing Help ... void Wrinkles

By ED CLARKE
Travel Editor

... A series of 15 concerts has been scheduled for the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., July 5 to Aug. 10. ...

CHARLES MUNCH

First Berkshire Concerts To Commence Friday July 4

The first Berkshire Festival concert in the Tanglewood theatre will be held Saturday night, July 5, when Charles Munch will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program consisting of "The Musical Offering", Suite No. 3 in D major, and Concerto for Two Violins, Richard Burgin, concertmaster, and Ruth Posselt, his wife, will be the soloists. The second will be Sunday afternoon, when the program will be Handel's Concerto Grosso in A minor for Strings, Dittersdorf's Symphony in C major, C.P.E. Bach's Symphony No. 5, in B minor and J. S. Bach's Cantata No. 140. The last will be conducted by Hugh Ross, with the Festival chorus.

Included in the 27 Berkshire Music Center performances listed in the Tanglewood calendar of 49 events during the six weeks season are five for the coming week. The first will be the symphony concert Friday night, July 4, by the student orchestra, followed by the first chamber music program Sunday morning at 10 and a composers' forum Sunday evening at 8:15.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
JUN 22 1952

MUSIC

Chorale Group, Jane Pickens Featured In Pops Opener

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

Tanglewood Group To Study Renaissance Music

The Tanglewood Study Group, a department of the Berkshire Music Center whose purpose is "to provide a unique opportunity for teacher and music lover to become familiar in actual practice with a great deal of fresh and useful repertory which they can take back to their communities" is attracting interest this season on the part of serious amateur musicians, music educators, and others interested in community music.

Ingolf Dahl, of the Music Department of the University of California, will head this new project. For two, four, or six weeks, the students will sing and play music of the Italian Renaissance and Elizabethan England, try their voices on the songs of the troubadours and the glees and catches of the time of Charles II, put together scenes from early Italian comic opera and sing and play chamber cantatas by living composers written especially for them. Composers of new works, easy enough to be read at sight, or nearly so, are welcome to submit them for possible performance by the Study Group this Summer.

The Berkshire Festival concerts will get under way on Saturday evening, July 5, with the first program of the Theater-Concert Hall series. The main concerts in the Shed, played by the full Boston Symphony, are scheduled to commence on Thursday evening, July 24, with Mr. Munch conducting.

Eagle — June 3, 1952

Stockbridge Bowl Rescue

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

Walter P. Eaton assured his readers that he did not speak hastily in his composition "Beethoven Backward" but deliberated two full weeks in its make-up. And then he wrote it anyway!

It seems that Leonard Bernstein is going to introduce a piece of "musique concrete" to American audiences (Schaeffer's Symphony for a Lonely Man) and this fact jabs at a very sensitive nerve in Mr. Eaton's imaginative equipment. (I can't say auditory canal because he hasn't even heard it yet.) In his howls of anguish he lashes out at France for having produced so many degenerate and freakish isms and categorically labels all this new art pitifully infertile, futile, and destructive. In the midst of all this raving and lamentation I wish to insert the thought of Manet, the great impressionist painter; the impressionist musicians Debussy, Ravel, and Ibert; and even the anti-impressionists, Milhaud and Honegger. I would also like to inform Mr. Eaton of the French Symbolist writers and poets Pierre Louys, André Gide, Verlaine and of course, Mallarmé, whose poem "Afternoon of a Faun" became the inspiration for Debussy's "Prelude" of the same name. Later, Nijinsky added a choreography to this and it became something new in French ballet. And who could forget the Cyclism of Vincent D'Indy, Lalo, Saint-Saens and Dukas?

But the purpose of this letter is not primarily to inform or remind Mr. Eaton of the glories of this new French art nor to defend the vigor and fertility that France has consistently exhibited through the centuries.

I write to vent my spleen on all those "cognoscenti" to whom anything new or unfamiliar is anathema. They forever hark back to the serenities of the classics and in their ignorance forget the turbulence which greeted those premiers. Brahms has only recently come into his own, Bach was forgotten until the Mendelssohn renaissance, Beethoven was devasted by the critics, and Wagner doubly so; and more recently a squadron of police was called to squelch a riot occasioned by a little piece by Milhaud. Even the pedantic Sibelius was hissed at his debut and Richard Strauss, a modern classicist, was first assailed as a heretic.

It is well said that critics are so consistently blind. They don't see that any device (even a few bars of Beethoven played backward) or any form that serves as an aid to expression is legitimate if it serves an artist's inspiration. They don't see that even if new music is bad it can still have some good effect on future composers. They deplore any conductor who strains at the leash of dogma and forget that he's infinitely more qualified to judge the worth of a composition than they are.

The last straw, of course, is Mr. Eaton's wistful hope that Mr. Bernstein be tossed in the lake for his heresy and that the Shade of Beethoven take over the podium. If the Shade of anybody is exorcised by these tactics then its Torquemada. Anyone familiar with the life of Beethoven and the accomplishments of Mr. Bernstein could only visualize the old firebrand putting an encouraging arm around Bernstein's drenched shoulders and smiling his approval on this kindred spirit.

Mrs. PASQUALE CIOFFI.
Pittsfield.

[illegible] 2, 1952

In Brief . . .

Musical benefactions just never cease with Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge. The four chamber concerts just announced for Tanglewood are to all intents and purposes gifts to Berkshire County since all that is required is to hold membership in the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. This is a consideration which will deny the rare privilege to few music-lovers

---

BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE
JUN 22 1952

Berkshire Festival Staff Making Ready

To make the wheels go 'round for the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center, the school connected with it, a large part of the personnel of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is moving this week from Symphony Hall to its Summer home at Tanglewood in Lenox.

Charles Munch, conductor of the Festival and director of the school, and Pierre Monteux, who will occupy the podium for two concerts, will come later from France.

Eagle July 8 '52

BSO Wins Top Prize Of French Academy

NEW YORK—The first prize of the French Academy of Recordings (Academie du Disque Francais) has been awarded to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Charles Munch, for their album of Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E Minor, Opus 98, it was disclosed in an announcement from Paris.

[2]

Eagle - June 28, 1952

Munch Speaks Sunday Afternoon At Tanglewood Season Opening

TANGLEWOOD—Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will speak at the opening exercises of the 10th season of the Berkshire Music Center here Sunday afternoon at 4. It will be his first appearance at Tanglewood since his appointment as director to succeed the late Serge Koussevitzky, who inspired the founding of its summer school by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in connection with its Berkshire Festival, and who was its only director until his death a year ago.

Mr. Munch will leave Paris this evening by plane, arriving in New York tomorrow morning. He is expected in Lenox Saturday to stay at Elm Court during the school and Festival season.

Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, whose contributions help to support the school, and an orchestra trustee, will preside at the exercises. Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Aaron Copland, assistant director, will speak briefly.

As at every opening exercises of the school since it was founded in 1940, the "Alleluia Chorus," written for the occasion by Randall Thompson, will be sung by the student body, conducted by Hugh Ross, director of the choral department.

Guests are invited to tea in the garden following the ceremony.

Republican

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
JUN 18 1952

Travel News

Proper Packing Helps to Avoid Wrinkles

By ED CLARKE
Travel Editor

concerts has the Berkshire
anglewood, Ma
Aug. 10. . . .

to

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUN 21 1952 ✓

ALLELUIA CHORUS, written by Randall Thompson for first opening exercises of Berkshire Music Center, Boston Symphony Orchestra's Summer school at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., and sung by students at every subsequent opening, is led by Hug Ross, director of choral department of center. This year's sessi will open next Sunday, June 29. Orchestra's first concerts season will be presented Saturday and Sunday, July 5 and 6.

CHARLES MUNCH

First Berkshire Concerts To Commence Friday July 4

The first Berkshire Festival concert in the Tanglewood theatre will be held Saturday night, July 5, when Charles Munch will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program consisting of "The Musical Offering", Suite No. 3 in D major, and Concerto for Two Violins, Richard Burgin, concertmaster, and Ruth Posselt, his wife, will be the soloists. The second will be Sunday afternoon, when the program will be Handel's Concerto Grosso in A minor for Strings, Dittersdorf's Symphony in C major, C.P.E. Bach's Symphony No. 5, in B minor and J. S. Bach's Cantata No. 140. The last will be conducted by Hugh Ross, with the Festival chorus.

Included in the 27 Berkshire Music Center performances listed in the Tanglewood calendar of 49 events during the six weeks season are five for the coming week. The first will be the symphony concert Friday night, July 4, by the student orchestra, followed by the first chamber music program Sunday morning at 10 and a composers' forum Sunday evening at 8:15.

Eagle - June 2, 1952

In Brief . . .

Musical benefactions just never cease with Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge. The four chamber concerts just announced for Tanglewood are to all intents and purposes gifts to Berkshire County since all that is required is to hold membership in the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. This is a consideration which will deny the rare privilege to few music-lovers

---

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
JUN 22 1952

MUSIC

Chorale Group, Jane Pickens Featured In Pops Opener

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

Tanglewood Group To Study Renaissance Music

The Tanglewood Study Group, a department of the Berkshire Music Center whose purpose is "to provide a unique opportunity for teacher and music lover to become familiar in actual practice with a great deal of fresh and useful repertory which they can take back to their communities" is attracting interest this season on the part of serious amateur musicians, music educators, and others interested in community music.

Ingolf Dahl, of the Music Department of the University of California, will head this new project. For two, four, or six weeks, the students will sing and play music of the Italian Renaissance and Elizabethan England, try their voices on the songs of the troubadours and the glees and catches of the time of Charles II, put together scenes from early Italian comic opera and sing and play chamber cantatas by living composers written especially for them. Composers of new works, easy enough to be read at sight, or nearly so, are welcome to submit them for possible performance by the Study Group this Summer.

The Berkshire Festival concerts will get under way on Saturday evening, July 5, with the first program of the Theater-Concert Hall series. The main concerts in the Shed, played by the full Boston Symphony, are scheduled to commence on Thursday evening, July 24, with Mr. Munch conducting.

BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE
JUN 22 1952

Berkshire Festival Staff Making Ready

To make the wheels go 'round for the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center, the school connected with it, a large part of the personnel of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is moving this week from Symphony Hall to its Summer home at Tanglewood in Lenox.

Charles Munch, conductor of the Festival and director of the school, and Pierre Monteux, who will occupy the podium for two concerts, will come later from France.

Eagle July 8 '52

BSO Wins Top Prize Of French Academy

NEW YORK—The first prize of the French Academy of Recordings (Academie du Disque Francais) has been awarded to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Charles Munch, for their album of Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E Minor, Opus 98, it was disclosed in an announcement from Paris.

Eagle - June 3, 1952

Stockbridge Bowl Rescue

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

Walter P. Eaton assured his readers that he did not speak hastily in his composition "Beethoven Backward" but deliberated two full weeks in its make-up. And then he wrote it anyway!

It seems that Leonard Bernstein is going to introduce a piece of "musique concrete" to American audiences (Schaeffer's Symphony for a Lonely Man) and this fact hits at a very sensitive nerve in Mr. Eaton's imaginative equipment. (I can't say auditory canal because he hasn't even heard it yet.) In his howls of anguish he lashes out at France for having produced so many degenerate and freakish isms and categorically labels all this new art pitifully infertile, futile, and destructive. In the midst of all this raving and lamentation I wish to insert the thought of Manet, the great impressionist painter; the impressionist musicians Debussy, Ravel, and Ibert; and even the anti-impressionists, Milhaud and Honegger. I would also like to inform Mr. Eaton of the French Symbolist writers and poets Pierre Louys, André Gide, Verlaine and of course, Mallarmé, whose poem "Afternoon of a Faun" became the inspiration for Debussy's "Prelude" of the same name. Later, Nijinsky added a choreography to this and it became something new in French ballet. And who could forget the Cyclism of Vincent D'Indy, Lalo, Saint-Saens and Dukas?

But the purpose of this letter is not primarily to inform or remind Mr. Eaton of the glories of this new French art nor to defend the vigor and fertility that France has consistently exhibited through the centuries.

I write to vent my spleen on all those "cognoscenti" to whom anything new or unfamiliar is anathema. They forever hark back to the serenities of the classics and in their ignorance forget the turbulence which greeted those premiers. Brahms has only recently come into his own, Bach was forgotten until the Mendelssohn renaissance, Beethoven was devasted by the critics, and Wagner doubly so; and more recently a squadron of police was called to squelch a riot occasioned by a little piece by Milhaud. Even the pedantic Sibelius was hissed at his debut and Richard Strauss, a modern classicist, was first assailed as a heretic.

It is well said that critics are so consistently blind. They don't see that any device (even a few bars of Beethoven played backward) or any form that serves as an aid to expression is legitimate if it serves an artist's inspiration. They don't see that even if new music is bad it can still have some good effect on future composers. They deplore any conductor who strains at the leash of dogma and forget that he's infinitely more qualified to judge the worth of a composition than they are.

The last straw, of course, is Mr. Eaton's wistful hope that Mr. Bernstein be tossed in the lake for his heresy and that the Shade of Beethoven take over the podium. If the Shade of anybody is exorcised by these tactics then its Torquemada. Anyone familiar with the life of Beethoven and the accomplishments of Mr. Bernstein could only visualize the old firebrand putting an encouraging arm around Bernstein's drenched shoulders and smiling his approval on this kindred spirit.

Mrs. PASQUALE CIOFFI
Pittsfield.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

JUN 18 1952

Local Singer Bound for Tanglewood

Shirley Winston Has Lead in Opera At Berkshire Festival

By Betty Miles

This will be a summer to remember for Washington's Shirley Winston.

For when the famed Berkshire Music Festival gets under way at Tanglewood, Mass., in August, Shirley, a mezzo soprano, will have a leading role in a revival of Mozart's "Titus." This is the only full opera production to be given at the festival this summer.

She is slated as soloist with the Boston Symphony and Chorus in "De Profundis" on July 6, too, as well as having a scholarship to the opera department at the Tanglewood Summer Music Study Center.

And when the festival closes she will go directly to Schroon Lake, N. Y., where the Oscar Seagle Music Center will present two performances of "Carmen," with Shirley in the title role.

The 5 foot, 7½ inch singer, an attractive, brown-eyed blond with an enviable complexion, gave her first recital in the spring of 1949, at the Washington Club, as a soprano. But while studying at Tanglewood that summer she felt her top notes changing. When she returned to Washington she was faced with a scheduled recital, at which she had planned to sing again the songs of her debut. She had to set the key down in every one—for she had become a mezzo soprano.

The Winstons—Shirley and her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Alonzo Winston—live a life they describe as slightly like something out of "You Can't Take It with You" in a comfortable home in Chevy Chase. Mrs. Winston paints in the studio her husband built for her behind the house. Mr. Winston, a retired conservation specialist, takes care of the sizeable vegetable garden behind the studio which is his special province. Shirley uses the studio for her own painting, and occasionally practices singing on the white grand piano there when she wants more privacy. Her music room, a comfortable assortment of piano, books, metronome and pictures, is in the house proper.

"I once read a famous singer's advice to a young girl," Shirley recalled. "She said, 'If you can do anything else, don't sing.' I say ditto."

While she was in college, she remembers, she never could ride in a convertible, never could stay out late on Saturday night. She'll continue to live this carefully throughout her career.

"Singing you must be a slave to," she added.

But she loves it, and is perfectly willing to be precisely that. She takes a lesson every day from her teacher, George Myers, works with her coach, Paul Higinbotham, daily, too, and, now that she is learning operatic roles, practices 8 or 9 hours a day besides! She's been given three weeks to master her part in "Titus," which Boris Goldovsky, who is directing the performance, is translating into English.

[illegible] singer met Mr. Goldovsky [illegible] summer she went to Tangle[illegible] the proceeds of her first [illegible] A friend of his referred her to him last year after hearing her sing at the home of her patroness, Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney. Mr. Goldovsky remembered her, but as the soprano she had originally been. He cast her in the romantic lead, Nancy of Loxford, in "Albert Herring," by Benjamin Britten. She made her grand opera debut in this on January 13, 1952, in the Boston Opera House.

"Thirteen is my lucky number," Shirley explained. She auditioned for that role on October 13. And she received the letter inviting her to appear at Tanglewood this summer on May 13.

Surprisingly enough, the busy singer has time for hobbies. "Here's one of them," she explained, bringing in her well-trained Shetland sheep dog, sentimentally named Nancy of Loxford.

Another is collecting and refinishing antiques. An attractive early American cherry corner cupboard that she refinished stands in the Winston dining room, holding part of her collection of old china and glass.

"When I'm traveling, I stop at little antique shops along the way to hunt for good buys," she explained. Right now, there's another cupboard, this time a pine one she picked up on her way from New York recently, waiting to be refinished. She plans to use this in her bedroom, with the top portion reserved for hats, the bottom for shoes.

Shirley attended both American University and the George Washington University, majoring in psychology "because I liked it, but with a singing career always in mind. She began her study of voice when she was 16.

She has sung in recitals at the Phillips Gallery, the National Gallery of Art, the Corcoran Gallery, and as mezzo soloist in a presentation of Verdi's "Requiem" at Constitution Hall. She has been soloist in several churches in this area, and currently sings at the Fourth Church of Christ Scientist.

Winner of the 1951 Career Award of the Washington chapter of the National Society of Arts and Letters, she was second in the national competition. The Washington Chapter of N. S. A. L. recently awarded her the Gold Medal of Merit in recognition of her achievement.

SINGER AT WORK—Nine rehearsal hours, two lessons a day, are routine for Shirley.

HOBBY TIME—A collector of antique china, furniture, Shirley is adept at refinishing, too.

—Star Staff Photos by A. C. Chinn.

PRELUDE TO A BUSY SUMMER—Singer Shirley Winston relaxes in the garden of her home with Nancy of Loxford. A mezzo soprano, she will have a leading role in the opera at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

JUN 15 1952

N. U. Engages Fine Arts for Music Project

The Fine Arts quartet plays weekly concerts over the American Broadcasting system, gives an annual series downtown, and is engaged for such other events as the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood and the New Friends of Music series in New York City. It has recorded for Mercury and Decca.

The six

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD

JUN 18 1952

High French Honor Awarded Symphony

European honors followed the Boston Symphony orchestra home yesterday with the announcement of a French award of such major import that it was also announced before the French Congress, L'Assemblee Nationale.

The new award is the highest of the Academie du Disque Francais.

Symphony Hall officials said a radiogram from Paris announced that the honor was accarded the orchestra's Victor recording of Brahms' fourth symphony.

3

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE

JUN 17 1952

Berkshires to Honor Boston Symphony July 24 a la Europe

STOCKBRIDGE, June 16—The 34 communities of Berkshire County will unite to honor the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with a reception similar to those at which the orchestra was recently feted in Europe, it was announced today.

Tentative plans call for the reception to be held on July 24, the night of the opening concert by Charles Munch and the full orchestra in the Music Shed at Tanglewood. The Tanglewood Advisory Committee is in charge.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUN - 1952

Berkshire Center To Stage Mozart Opera

LENOX, MASS.—Under the name of Titus, Mozart's Clemenza di Tito will be given on Aug. 4 and 5 by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood. It is believed these will be the work's first complete performances in America. Boris Goldovsky, who will be in charge of the production, has prepared the English text with Sarah Caldwell. Charles Elson will design the sets, and a slide-projector will be used for some of the scenic effects.

Through a grant from the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation of the Library of Congress, four concerts of chamber music will be presented in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood on Wednesday evenings in July. The Bel Arte Trio (Ruth Posselt, violinist; Joseph de Pasquale, violist; and Samuel Mayes, cellist) will play on July 9. The following week Janos Scholz, cellist, and Miklos Schwalb, pianist, will give a sonata recital. The July 23 program will be played by the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble under the direction of Louis Speyer, and the final concert will be given on July 30 by the Fine Arts Quartet of the American Broadcasting Company.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR
JUN 18 1952

Local Singer Bound for Tanglewood

Shirley Winston Has Lead in Opera At Berkshire Festival

By Betty Miles

This will be a summer to remember for Washington's Shirley Winston.

For when the famed Berkshire Music Festival gets under way at Tanglewood, Mass., in August, Shirley, a mezzo soprano, will have a leading role in a revival of Mozart's "Titus." This is the only full opera production to be given at the festival this summer.

She is slated as soloist with the Boston Symphony and Chorus in "De Profundis" on July 6, too; as well as having a scholarship to the opera department at the Tanglewood Summer Music Study Center.

And when the festival closes she will go directly to Schroon Lake, N. Y., where the Oscar Seagle Music Center will present two performances of "Carmen," with Shirley in the title role.

The 5 foot, 7½ inch singer, an attractive, brown-eyed blond with an enviable complexion, gave her first recital in the spring of 1949, at the Washington Club, as a soprano. But while studying at Tanglewood that summer she felt her top notes changing. When she returned to Washington she was faced with a scheduled recital, at which she had planned to sing again the songs of her debut. She had to set the key down in every one—for she had become a mezzo soprano.

The Winstons—Shirley and her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Alonzo Winston—live a life they describe as slightly like something out of "You Can't Take It with You" in a comfortable home in Chevy Chase. Mrs. Winston paints in the studio her husband built for her behind the house. Mr. Winston, a retired conservation specialist, takes care of the sizeable vegetable garden behind the studio which is his special province. Shirley uses the studio for her own painting, and occasionally practices singing on the white grand piano there when she wants more privacy. Her music room, a comfortable assortment of piano, books, metronome and pictures, is in the house proper.

"I once read a famous singer's advice to a young girl," Shirley recalled. "She said, 'If you can do anything else, don't sing.' I say ditto."

While she was in college, she remembers, she never could ride in a convertible, never could stay out late on Saturday night. She'll continue to live this carefully throughout her career.

"Singing you must be a slave to," she added.

But she loves it, and is perfectly willing to be precisely that. She takes a lesson every day from her teacher, George Myers, works with her coach, Paul Higinbotham, daily, too, and, now that she is learning operatic roles, practices 8 or 9 hours a day besides! She's been given three weeks to master her part in "Titus," which Boris Goldovsky, who is directing the performance, is translating into English.

The singer met Mr. Goldovsky [illegible] summer she went to Tanglewood on the proceeds of her first recital. A friend of his referred her to him last year after hearing her sing at the home of her patroness, Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney. Mr. Goldovsky remembered her, but as the soprano she had originally been. He cast her in the romantic lead, Nancy of Loxford, in "Albert Herring," by Benjamin Britten. She made her grand opera debut in this on January 13, 1952, in the Boston Opera House.

"Thirteen is my lucky number," Shirley explained. She auditioned for that role on October 13. And she received the letter inviting her to appear at Tanglewood this summer on May 13.

Surprisingly enough, the busy singer has time for hobbies. "Here's one of them," she explained, bringing in her well-trained Shetland sheep dog, sentimentally named Nancy of Loxford.

Another is collecting and refinishing antiques. An attractive early American cherry corner cupboard that she refinished stands in the Winston dining room, holding part of her collection of old china and glass.

"When I'm traveling, I stop at little antique shops along the way to hunt for good buys," she explained. "Right now, there's another cupboard, this time a pine one she picked up on her way from New York recently, waiting to be refinished. She plans to use this in her bedroom, with the top portion reserved for hats, the bottom for shoes."

Shirley attended both American University and the George Washington University, majoring in psychology "because I liked it, but with a singing career always in mind. She began her study of voice when she was 16.

She has sung in recitals at the Phillips Gallery, the National Gallery of Art, the Corcoran Gallery, and as mezzo soloist in a presentation of Verdi's "Requiem" at Constitution Hall. She has been soloist in several churches in the area, and currently sings at the Fourth Church of Christ Scientist.

Winner of the 1951 Career Award of the Washington chapter of the National Society of Arts and Letters, she was second in the national competition. The Washington Chapter of N. S. A. L. recently awarded her the Gold Medal of Merit in recognition of her achievement.

SINGER AT WORK—Nine rehearsal hours, two lessons a day, are routine for Shirley.

HOBBY TIME—A collector of antique china, furniture, Shirley is adept at refinishing, too.
—Star Staff Photos by A. C. Chinn.

PRELUDE TO A BUSY SUMMER—Singer Shirley Winston relaxes in the garden of her home with Nancy of Loxford. A mezzo soprano, she will have a leading role in the opera at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
JUN 15 1952

N. U. Engages Fine Arts for Music Project

The Fine Arts quartet plays weekly concerts over the American Broadcasting system, gives an annual series downtown, and is engaged for such other events as the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood and the New Friends of Music series in New York City. It has recorded for Mercury and Decca.

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
JUN 18 1952

High French Honor Awarded Symphony

European honors followed the Boston Symphony orchestra home yesterday with the announcement of a French award of such major import that it was also announced before the French Congress, L'Assemblee Nationale.

The new award is the highest of the Academie du Disque Francais.

Symphony Hall officials said a radiogram from Paris announced that the honor was accorded the orchestra's Victor recording of Brahms' fourth symphony.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE
JUN 17 1952

Berkshires to Honor Boston Symphony July 24 a la Europe

STOCKBRIDGE, June 16—The 34 communities of Berkshire County will unite to honor the members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with [redacted] to those at which the orchestra was recently feted in Europe, it was announced today.

Tentative plans call for the reception to be held on July 24, the night of the opening concert by Charles Munch and the full orchestra in the Music Shed at Tanglewood. The Tanglewood Advisory Committee is in charge.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUN - 1952

Berkshire Center To Stage Mozart Opera

LENOX, MASS.—Under the name of Titus, Mozart's Clemenza di Tito will be given on Aug. 4 and 5 by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood. It is believed these will be the work's first complete performances in America. Boris Goldovsky, who will be in charge of the production, has prepared the English text with Sarah Caldwell. Charles Elson will design the sets, and a slide-projector will be used for some of the scenic effects.

Through a grant from the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation of the Library of Congress, four concerts of chamber music will be presented in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood on Wednesday evenings in July. The Bel Arte Trio (Ruth Posselt, violinist; Joseph de Pasquale, violist; and Samuel Mayes, cellist) will play on July 9. The following week Janos Scholz, cellist, and Miklos Schwalb, pianist, will give a sonata recital. The July 23 program will be played by the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble under the direction of Louis Speyer, and the final concert will be given on July 30 by the Fine Arts Quartet of the American Broadcasting Company.

MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE
JUN 1952

nal Opera Written By Mozart on Schedule at Tanglewood

Titus, the opera which Mozart ote in the last year of his life d the only "opera seria" of his ture years, is announced by ris Goldovsky as the major proction of the Opera Department f the Berkshire Music Centre in anglewood this summer.

Titus (La Clemenza di Tito) will then have what will probably be its first complete production in America. There will be two performances on August 4 and 5 at Tanglewood to which Friends of the Berkshire Music Centre will be invited. The score of Titus, parts of which will be brought from Europe, consist of an overture and 25 numbers in 3 acts. The score is entirely by Mozart except for certain recitative passages in which he was helped by Suessmayer. There are to be no cuts in this production, although the text, which is being translated into English by Mr. Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell, has been slightly revised.

A feature of the production will be a new scenic plan in which an elaborate mechanism for projection by slides, the invention of Paul Planer, will be used, Planer's invention has been used in the larger opera houses in Europe with conspicuous success. It permits spectacle effects in such scenes as the burning and destruction of a palace in this opera. The scenery is being designed by Charles Elson.

Betty Coe Armstrong has been appointed to the faculty of the Opera Department to teach scenic design according to an announcement by Mr. Goldovsky. She has taught stage design and lighting at Alabama College and Oklahoma University, served as costume technician and assistant to the professor of costume design at Yale and taught at the Wellesley College Summer Theatre. Designing scenery and costumes at the Cape Theatre, Cape May, New Jersey, Miss Coe worked as commercial artist for Scrugg - Vandervoort-Barney of St. Louis. Currently a free lance designer in New York, she assisted this season in the Broadway productions of Anna Christie and Flight into Egypt. At present she is working on La Boheme with Donald Oenslager for Central City.

Like all student performances at Tanglewood, one-full length work (Titus) and several "evenings of opera" in the last weeks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school will be open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Centre whose contributions help to support the school.

Sunday Standard
Times-June 22'52

Concert List Is Revised At Tanglewood

Special to The Standard-Times

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, June 21—A change in the order of the programs for the Berkshire Festival, with a slight change in the works to be played, is announced by Charles Munch, conductor.

The revision will affect only the first concerts in the theater-concert hall by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Programs for July 13, 19 and 20 and for the major festival in the shed beginning July 24 remain as previously announced.

The revised programs:

Saturday Night, July 5

The Musical Offering	Bach
Concerto for Two Violins Ruth Posselt, Richard Burgin, Soloists	Bach
Suite No. 3 in D-major	Bach

Sunday Afternoon, July 6

Concerto Grosso in A-minor for Strings, Op 6, No. 4	Handel
Symphony in C-major	Dittersdoff
Symphony No. 5, in B-minor	C. P. E. Bach
Cantata No. 140 "Wachet auf, rft uns die Stimme," conducted by Hugh Ross	J. S. Bach

Saturday Night, July 12

Suite from Dardanus	Rameau
Concert Dans le Gout Theatral	Couperin
Fantasio in A, for Strings	Purcell
Concerto Grosso in D-minor, Op.3, No. 11	Vivaldi
De Profundis for chorus and orchestra (conducted by Hugh Ross)	Lalande

The opening program becomes all-Bach by the substitution of "The Musical Offering" for C. P. E. Bach's Symphony No. 5. The July 6 program is postponed in toto to July 12. In its place will be played the Handel and Dittersdoff originally planned and the two numbers deleted from the July 5 program.

Tickets for all concerts are on sale at the box office at Tanglewood, to which may be addressed inquiries on the festival and events at the Berkshire Music Center, the Summer school of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
JUN 22 1952

Music:

Festival Programs Revised

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

Achange in the order of the programs for the Berkshire Festival, with a slight change in the works to be played at Tanglewood, is announced by Charles Munch, the conductor. The revision will affect only the first concerts in the theatre-concert hall by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Programs for July 13, 19 and 20 and for the major Festival in the shed beginning July 24, remain as prevxiously announced.

The revised programs read as follows:

Saturday evening July 5

Bach........"The Musical Offering"
Bach........Concerto for Two Violins (Ruth Posselt, Richard Burgin, Soloists)
Bach........Suite No. 3, in D Major

Sunday afternoon, July 6

Handel........Concerto Grosso in A minor for Strings, Op 6, No. 4
Dittersdorf........ Symphony in C major
C. P. E. Bach......Symphony No. 5, in B minor
J. S. Bach....Cantata No. 140 (Conducted by Hugh Ross)

Saturday evening, July 12

Rameau......Suite from "Dardanus"
Couperin........Concert dans le gout theatral
Purcell........Fantasia in A, for Strings
Vivaldi.......“De Profundis”, for Chorus and Orchestra (conducted by Hugh Ross)

The opening program becomes all-Bach by the substitution of "The Musical Offering" for C. P. E. Bach's Symphony No. 5. The July 6 program is postponed in toto to July 12. In its place will be played the Handel and Dittersdorf originally planned and the two numbers deleted from the July 5 program.

Tickets for all concerts are on sale at the box office at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. to which may be addressed inquires on the Festival and events at the Berkshire Music Center, the summer school of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

TIFFIN, OHIO
ADVERTISER-TRIBUNE
JUN 16 1952

CHAUTAUQUA SETS AMERICAN OPERAS

Concert Series Arranged For Tanglewood

Sponsored by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, four concerts of chamber music will be presented at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Wednesday evenings in July.

The series will open on July 9 with a recital by the Bel Arte Trio, a string trio consisting of Ruth Posselt, Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes. The three musicians are members of the Berkshire Music Center faculty.

On July 16 there will be a sonata recital by James Scholz, cello and Miklos Schwalb, piano.

On July 23, the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble will be held under the direction of Louis Speyer.

The final concert will be given by the Fine Arts Quartet of the American Broadcasting Company on July 30.

Plouffe

BREAKFAST CHAT: Passing the time of day at the annual breakfast of the Berkshire Music Center staff this morning are, from left to right, Ralph Berkowitz, dean; Mrs. Thomas D. Perry Jr.; Gail Rector, assistant to the executive secretary; Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Center and a Boston Symphony Orchestra trustee; and Thomas D. Perry Jr., executive secretary. Director Charles Munch missed the event, but is in town and will make his first public appearance at the opening exercises at the Center tomorrow afternoon at 3.30.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
JUN 22 1952

10 Home Gardens Will Be Visited On Tour of Hospital Auxiliary

Pittsfield General Women's Group Plans Event for July 10; Welcome Underway for Symphony Director

The feeling the Berkshire-ites have for the Boston symphony orchestra and its conductor Charles Munch will be expressed in a county-wide welcoming being planned for the musicians on the opening day of the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood music shed on July 24. Music lovers as well as town and county officials will take part in the home-coming of the orchestra which made a successful tour of Europe several weeks ago. The "home-coming" will be in the form of a huge reception for Conductor Munch and his musicians. At a meeting held this week at Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, preliminary plans were outlined. The meeting followed a luncheon by the Tanglewood advisory committee. George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, expressed his thanks for the fine support the Berkshires have given the orchestra. Mr. Judd in turn heard replies from Robert K. Wheeler of Great Barrington, and Lawrence K. Miller of Pittsfield, members of the advisory committee, in which they expressed their gratitude on behalf of the Berkshire folks for what the orchestra has done for the community, not only in a cultural sense, but economical as well, and felt the orchestra merited a reception without question.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
JUN 22 1952

Mozart's 'Titus' To Be Presented

"Titus," the opera which Mozart wrote in the last year of his life and the only "opera seria" of his maturer years, is announced by Boris Goldovsky as the major production of the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Mass., this summer. "Titus" (La Clemenza di Tito) will then have what probably will be its first complete production in America.

There will be two performances on Aug. 4 and 5 at Tanglewood. The score of "Titus," parts of which will be brought from Europe, consists of an overture and 25 numbers in three acts. The score is entirely by Mozart except for certain recitative passages in which he was helped by Suessmayer.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES
JUN 22 1952

Concert List Is Revised At Tanglewood

Special to The Standard-Times

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, June 21—A change in the order of the programs for the Berkshire Festival, with a slight change in the works to be played, is announced by Charles Munch, conductor.

The revision will affect only the first concerts in the theater-concert hall by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Programs for July 13, 19 and 20 and for the major festival in the shed beginning July 24 remain as previously announced.

The revised programs:

Saturday Night, July 5

The Musical Offering .... Bach
Concerto for Two Violins .... Bach
Ruth Posselt, Richard Burgin, Soloists
Suite No. 3 in D-major .... Bach

Sunday Afternoon, July 6

Concerto Grosso in A-minor for Strings, Op 6, No. 4 .... Handel
Symphony in C-major .... Dittersdoff
Symphony No. 5, in B-minor C. P. E. Bach
Cantata No. 140 .... J. S. Bach
"Wachet auf, rft uns die Stimme,"
conducted by Hugh Ross

Saturday Night, July 12

Suite from Dardanus .... Rameau
Concert Dans le Gout Theatral .. Couperin
Fantasio in A, for Strings .... Purcell
Concerto Grosso in D-minor, Op.3, No. 11 .... Vivaldi
De Profundis .... Lalande for chorus and orchestra
(conducted by Hugh Ross)

The opening program becomes all-Bach by the substitution of "The Musical Offering" for C. P. E. Bach's Symphony No. 5. The July 6 program is postponed in toto to July 12. In its place will be played the Handel and Dittersdoff originally planned and the two numbers deleted from the July 5 program.

Tickets for all concerts are on sale at the box office at Tanglewood, to which may be addressed inquiries on the festival and events at the Berkshire Music Center, the Summer school of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
MAY 22 1952

J. S. Bach, Handel, Lelande Works in 'Tanglewood'

A J. S. BACH program is announced for Saturday night, July 5 in the Theater-Concert Hall, "Tanglewood," by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch. The Concerto for Two Violins will be played by Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin. Other numbers: "The Musical Offering" and the Suite No. 3 in D Major. The Sunday afternoon, July 6, program will comprise the Concerto Grosso in A Minor for Strings, by Handel; the Dittersdorf Symphony in C. Major, the J. S. Bach Cantata No. 140, conducted by Hugh Ross, and the C. P. E. Bach Symphony No. 5 in B Minor.

THE PROGRAM for Saturday night, July 12, includes The Suite, from "Dardanus," by Rameau; Couperin's "Concert dans le Gout Theatral," Purcell's "Fantasia in A for Strings," and the Vivaldi "Concerto Grosso in D Minor, Opus 3, No. 11," will be played by the orchestra members. Lalande's "De Profundis," for orchestra and chorus, will be conducted by Hugh Ross.

THE THEATER-CONCERT Hall concerts continue July 13, July 19-20. Performances during the Berkshire Music Center, created by the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, are continued June 30-Aug. 10, with the school orchestra, chorus and the several music departments for the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center participating. Full orchestra concerts in The Shed in "Tanglewood" are July 24, 26, 27, July 31, Aug. 2, 3 and Aug. 7, 9 and 10. Symphony conductors: Charles Munch, Pierre Monteaux and Leonard Bernstein. Hugh Ross conducts the chorus in certain programs.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
JUN 18 1952

County Board Backs Reception For Munch, BSO

The County Commission yesterday voted an enthusiastic endorsement of the proposed county-wide reception for the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Charles Munch, its conductor.

The reception is set for July 24, the opening date of the major Berkshire Festival in the Tanglewood Music Shed.

In a letter to Bartlett Hendricks, president of the Berkshire Hills Conference, the commission called the orchestra a "great asset to Berkshire County," and promised to assist the reception committee in any way it can.

First Festival Week End Draws 6300 to Tanglewood

Munch Adds Other Contemporaries To Bach-Mozart Series—Critic Notes 'Muddy Confusion' in Saturday Concert

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

TANGLEWOOD—The 1952 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood got under way officially Saturday night and yesterday afternoon when 6300 music lovers turned out for the two programs of music selected from the 18th century classics. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led the small ensemble of the orchestra's strings and winds in the two programs.

In previous years these early three weeks of the Festival, played in the theatre concert-hall, have been devoted to Bach and Mozart. This year the programs are going a bit farther afield to include other contemporaries of those masters. Yesterday afternoon Handel, Dittersdorf and Philip Emanuel Bach were listed.

The first concert Saturday evening was entirely Johann Sebastian Bach. He also was used yesterday for the final number on the program which was the lovely Cantata "Wachet Auf, ruft uns die Stimme" which was conducted by Hugh Ross with the Berkshire Festival Chorus also taking part.

Handel's Concerto grosso in A minor, Opus 6, No. 4, was played first yesterday afternoon, followed by von Dittersdorf's C major symphony and, in turn by C. P. E. Bach's symphony No. 3. There was quite a bit of spread in the type of performance accomplished during the afternoon. There were some impressive moments with others decidedly less so. The Dittersdorf little symphony is a gay, bright thing and it was played with an infectious levity and effervescent spirit.

Cantata Deeply Effective

Mr. Ross made the cantata deeply effective. He was aided by three very able vocal soloists, Sarah Fleming, soprano, John McCollum, tenor and Mac Morgan, baritone, while the chorus responded to him with an alert resonance. It is one of the loveliest of Bach's cantatas and Ross caught the spirit faithfully. The wonderful chorale "Zion hoert die Wachter singen" for the tenor section was sung with relentless power which was not obviously necessary because the strings played with well-restrained fluency.

It was a pity that some few chose to miss the magnificent final short glorious chorale rather than miss their chance to be first off the parking lot. This happens, we are told, at Symphony Hall in Boston, and in other concert halls so that it is not a unique Tanglewood phenomenon but it is hardly to be compared with the situation in a ball park when the home team is apparently safely ahead in the ninth inning.

Saturday evening the concert was at sixes and sevens. There were some lofty moments and also some when the artistic altitude was less noticeable. Mr. Munch attacked the D major suite which was the final work on the program immediately after bowing to the audience. He allowed the musicians no respite whatsoever and plunged into the overture impetuously. It took several bars before the tempo was established and the muddy confusion clarified. Subsequently when the movement steps up, it was thanks to the sterling first violin section of the orchestra and particularly to concertmaster Richard Burgin that the change of tempo was so definite and positive and satisfying.

The slow movement, so familiar because of its transcription by Wilhemji into the violin solo, "Air on the G String" was unplayably slow. To conserve their bows the violins had to play so softly that when a 'piano' was called for, they had no softer quality. It resembled an underwater swimmer who has to traverse a certain distance before surfacing and everyone wonders whether he must come up for air before reaching his goal.

First Movement Slow

Ruth Posselt and Mr. Burgin gave a clear, strong and straightforward reading of the double concerto for two violins. The first movement was slower than was comfortable for our ears and certain slides crept in at unexpected places which would have been well left out. The slow movement offered the well-known pitfalls of making the mountain peak notes stand out because they are effective violinistically rather than preserving the musical line. As they were played Saturday they reminded us of unshaded electric light bulbs, furnishing plenty of brilliance but a bit offensive to one's senses.

The "Musical Offering" in its entirety is very long. It would still be a marvel if it were the result of long hours of scholarly research instead of the instantaneous answer to the royal request of Frederick the Great, as the legend goes, but some sections are repetitious and interminable, and judicious editing is usually beneficial. The main statement had character and stature as Munch directed it Saturday evening and served especially to show the substance of the orchestra itself. Very few pieces are more revealing and more demanding than this fugal subject developed in the various choirs of the strings. The thorough purity and solidity of tone, the homogeneous sense of style, features which we sometimes take for granted, become apparent as under a searchlight as the music progresses.

Tanglewood

Friends Overflow Chamber Music Hall

The chamber music hall overflowed twice over the week-end with audiences for the chamber music concert Sunday morning and the composers' forum last evening. Open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, both will be held weekly, with different programs, for the Tanglewood season.

The chamber music concert, attended by 500, was prepared under the direction of William Kroll, associate head of the department. Aaron Copland, assistant director of the school and head of the composition department, acted as moderator in the discussions of the works played last evening, when members of the audience of 350 commented and the composers replied.

Bus for Students

Added to the equipment of the Berkshire Music Center this year is a bus, to carry students to and from the dormitories at the Lenox School and Wheatleigh. In the interests of economy, the vehicle is leased for the season, as the irregular hours make continuous operation necessary. When the schedule becomes heavy with rehearsals and performances the working day begins at 8 AM or earlier and ends at 11 PM or after. The bus is operated by the Tanglewood crew.

Leonard Bernstein, head of conducting and the orchestral department at the Berkshire Music Center, and Mrs. Bernstein, are occupying Sunset Farm, in East Lee, for the summer.

John McCollum, who sang the tenor solo yesterday afternoon at the Berkshire Festival in Bach's Cantata No. 140, is the brother-in-law of Mark Robbins, formerly of Pittsfield. Mr. McCollum, who will be a soloist again Saturday night, in Lalande's "DeProfundis" Motet, is enrolled as a student in the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
CHRONICLE

JUL 20 1952

Berkshire Festival

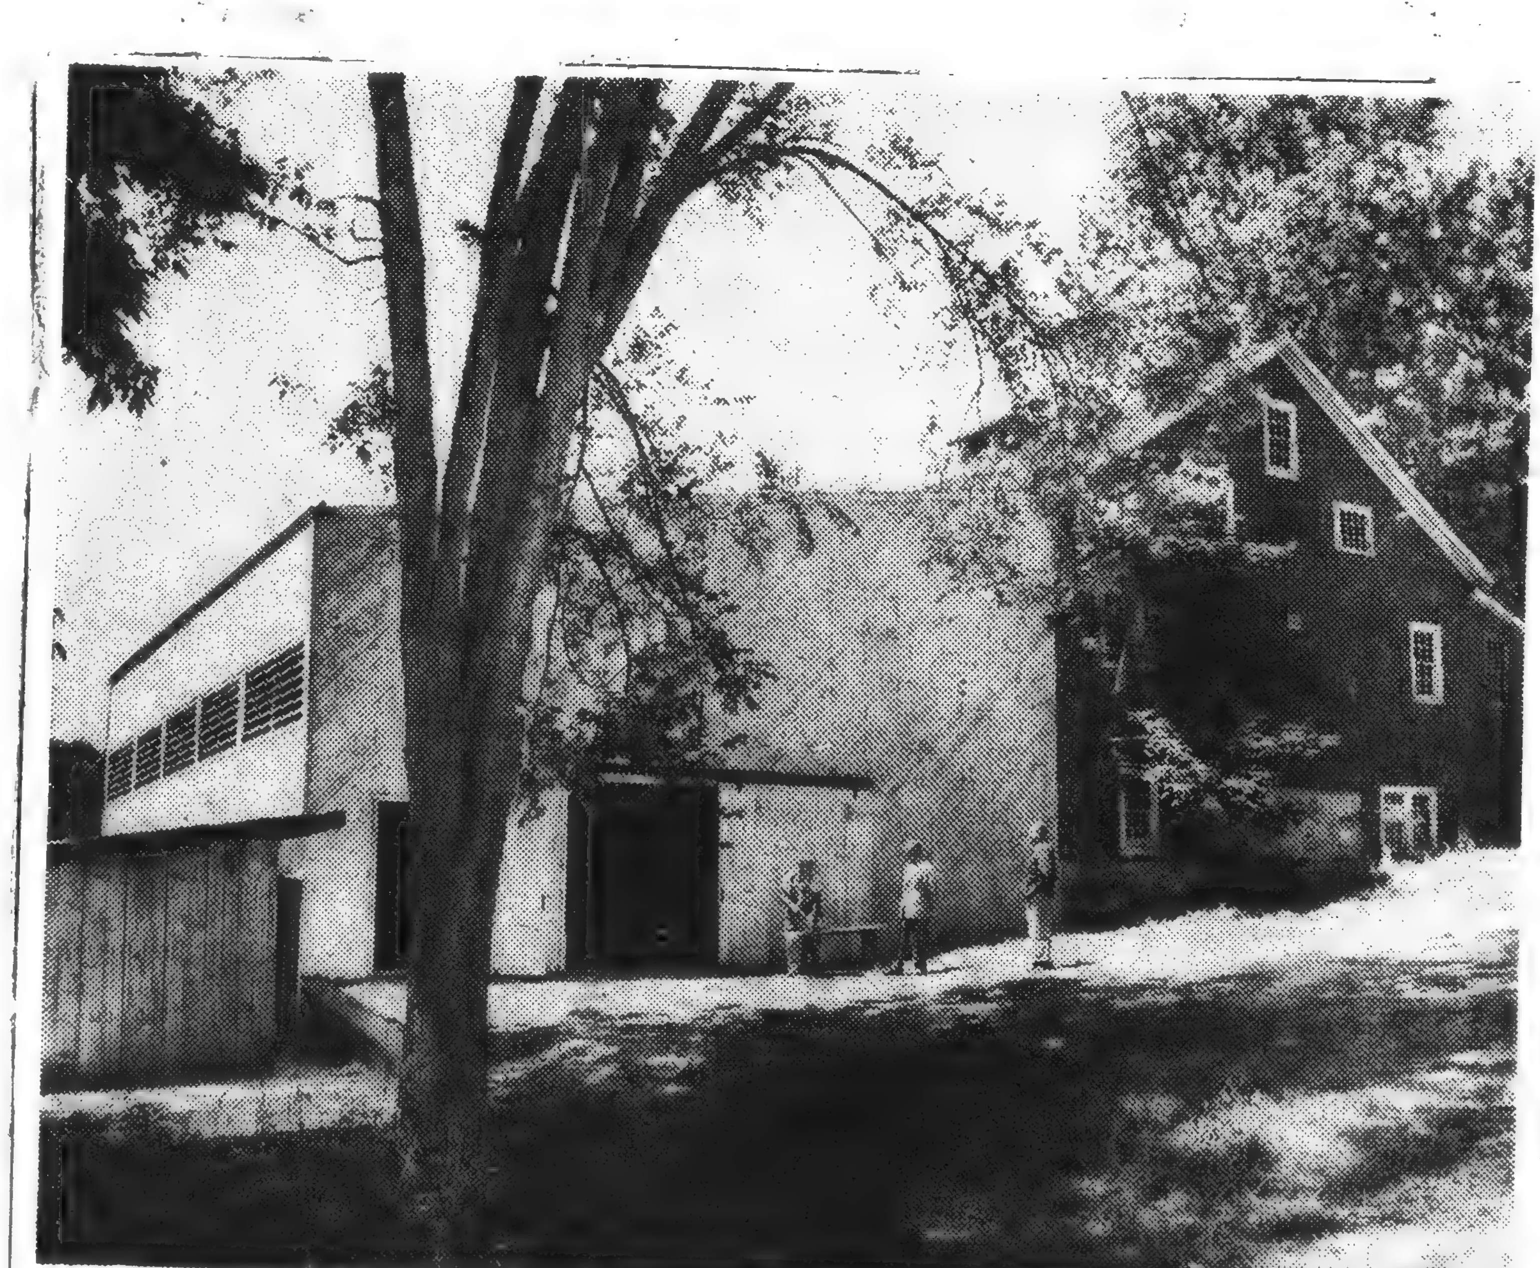
The Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., is featuring a series of 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this summer. Conductors are Pierre Monteux, Leonard Bernstein and Charles Munch. Performances continue through August 10.

Plouffe

OVATION FOR SOLOISTS: Sarah Jane Fleming, Mac Morgan and John McCollum, soloists in the Bach cantata at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon, take a bow with Hugh Ross, the conductor, members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Festival. Miss Fleming and Mr. McCollum are studying opera at the Berkshire Music Center. Mr. Morgan is a former student.

Plouffe

WELL DONE: Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, shakes the hand of concertmaster Richard Burgin after a performance of Bach's Suite No. 3 at the opening concert of the Berkshire Festival in the theatre concert hall at Tanglewood Saturday evening.



Plouffe

NEW REHEARSAL HALL: James Brosnahan, treasurer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Alfred Finch, director of music at the Emma Willard School, Troy, N.Y., and a member of the Tanglewood Study Group, inspect the new extension to the 50-year-old barn at Tanglewood. Now a rehearsal hall for orchestra and chorus, the barn will eventually be used for recording. Placing the finishing touches on the structure is Anthony Conti of Pittsfield.

Back Bay Ledger — and Beacon Hill Times
July 7, 1952

Plouffe

COMPOSERS AIR VIEWS: Halim El-Dabh of Cairo, Egypt (left) and Leonard Rosenman of Oakland, Cal. (at post), students at the Berkshire Music Center, join the discussion of their works, performed for 350 fellow students and Friends at the first weekly composers' forum of the season at Tanglewood last evening. Written for the piano and played by the authors, the compositions were on a program with four works by other composers, performed by fellow students.

---

6 GAZETTE PHONE 4-4141

Record Audience Acclaims Tanglewood Bach Program

By D. E. RITZ

Perfect weather brought a record audience of 3,800 to the opening all-Bach program at Tanglewood near Lenox, Mass., on Saturday evening. Charles Munch conducted the chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony men for the program at the Theatre-Concert hall with Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin as the soloists in the "Concerto in D Minor for two violins and string orchestra." The program opened with the seldom performed "Musical Offering" and concluded with the "Suite Number 3 in D Major."

* * *

THE HALL WAS FILLED, part of the overflow audience was seated on the stage in back of the performers and the balance enjoyed music and moonlight on the lawn that extends from the hall to the shed. Yesterday's festival concert was heard by 2,500 and 500 students attended the chamber music program yesterday morning making a total of 6,800 persons attending the first music weekend.

Bach enthusiasts from far and wide assembled to hear the program, which under the direction of Munch had an authoritative interpretation that was musically most satisfying. The Bach-era-size ensemble of 40 had a resonance out of all proportion to the number of performers.

* * *

MISS POSSELT and Burgin gave double concerto a brilliant performance marked with sonority and true oneness of artistic interpretation. Miss Posselt possesses a vigorous technique and robust tone admirably suited to the Bach number. Burgin, as concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, is equal to any era in music and his tone and technique need no introduction. The string orchestra accompaniment, quite as intricate as the solo writing, was admirably performed.

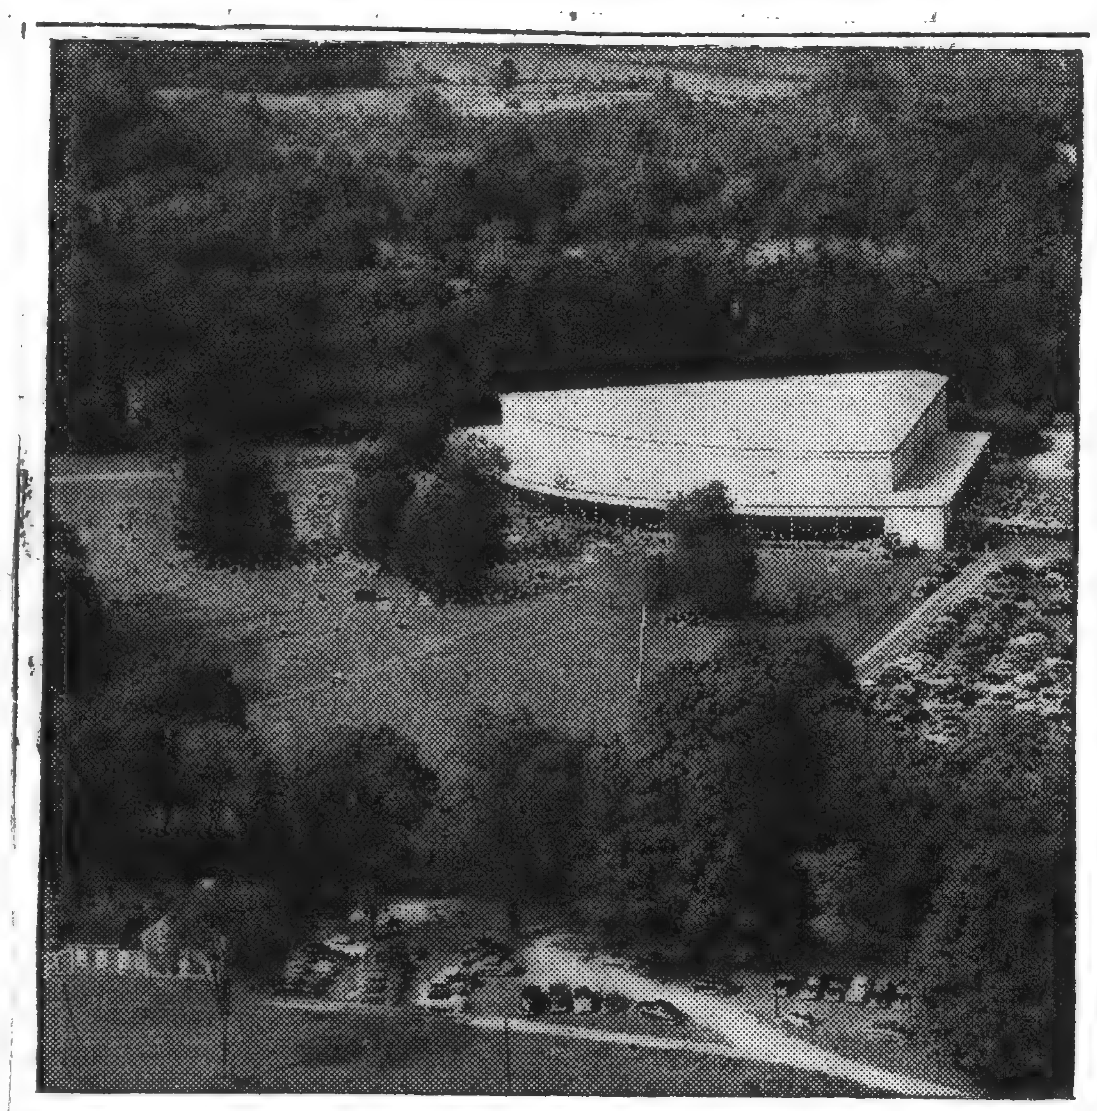
"The Musical Offering," which formed the first half of the evening's program, includes two Ricercars, one for three and one for six instruments; eight canons; a trio sonata including a largo, allegro, andante and allegro moderato; a canonic fugue and a perpetual canon. It is one of the most amazing of the Bach instrumental compositions and was written in 1747, three years before the great contrapuntist's death.

Burgin and flutist Georges Laurent were the incidental soloists. Every canonic and contrapuntal device known to J. S. Bach is included but at no time did one feel that they were listening to a museum piece, but to living music pulsing with life and enthusiasm.

* * *

THE "SUITE NUMBER 3" with the haunting interpretation given the famous air by Munch closed an outstanding program.

The Theatre-Concert hall programs will continue each Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon through July 20 and will be followed by shed concerts from July 24 through Aug. 10.



The Berkshire Music Festival Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Here the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor, will perform nine weekend concerts from July 24 to August 10.

The Second Week-End Of Berkshire Festival Concerts Open Sat. Evening

The second weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts in the Tanglewood theatre will open Saturday evening with a varied selection of works by late 17th and early 18th century composers, to be followed Sunday afternoon by an all-Mozart program of three symphonies: in E-flat major, G minor and C major ("Jupiter"). Excepting the "De Profundis", for Chorus and Orchestra by Lalande, to be led by Hugh Ross, all will be conducted by Charles Munch. He will lead members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday night in Rameau's Suite from "Dardanus", Couperin's "Concert dans le gout theatral", "Purcell's "Fantasia in A, for Strings" and Vivaldi's "Concerto Grosso in D minor,"

Revising the Berkshire Festival program for two concerts in the shed series, Mr. Munch has announced that Arthur Rubinstein will be the soloist Aug. 7, when the orchestra will play Brahms' Second Piano Concerto. Announcement is also made that Margaret Harshaw, soprano, Charles Kullman, tenor, and James Pease, bass, will be soloists for the Wagner program that Pierre Monteux will conduct Aug. 2. Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor part in Berlioz' "Requiem" for the final Festival concert Aug. 10.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUN 22 1952

Summer Music

Charles Munch has made some changes in the programs for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's firs[illegible]rkshire Festival concerts in the Berkshire Music Center's Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The revised lists are:

Saturday, July 5, 8:15: Music by J. S. Bach: The Musical Offering, Concerto for two violins (Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin), Suite No. 3, in D major.

Sunday, July 6, 3: Handel, concerto grosso in A minor, Op. No. 4; Dittersdorf, Symphony in C; C. P. E. Bach, Symphony No. 5, in B minor; J. S. Bach, Cantata No. 140, "Machet auf" (Hugh Ross conducting).

Saturday, July 12, 8:15: Rameau, suite from "Dardanus"; Couperin, Concert dans le gout theatral; Purcell, fantasia in A; Vivaldi, concerto grosso in D minor; Lelande, De Profundis, for chorus and orchestra (Hugh Ross conducting).

The programs for July 13, 19 and 20, and those of the nine concerts by the full orchestra in Tanglewood's Music Shed (July 24, 26, 27, 31; Aug. 2, 3, 7, 9 and 10) are unchanged.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUN 26 1952

TANGLEWOOD CENTER EXPECTS 400 STUDENTS

Four hundred students from forty-one states and sixteen countries will arrive at Tanglewood, Mass., this week-end for the opening of the tenth annual session of the Berkshire Music Center.

For the opening exercises Sunday afternoon, Charles Munch, director of the Center, will arrive from France, where he had remained after his tour last month with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Also arriving will be a faculty of thirty-six, including Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Luigi Dallapiccola, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross, Richard Burgin, Ingolf Dahl, William Kroll and first-chair players of the Boston Symphony.

Seven students will come from Canada; five from Israel; two each from Mexico and Argentina and one each from Brazil, Chile, Turkey, Italy, France, Egypt, South Africa, Hong Kong, New Zealand, Honolulu, England and Germany. New York leads the states with eighty-eight students, including sixty-two from New York City. Massachusetts is second with forty-two.

[6]

Tanglewood Greets Students From Around the World

More than 400 students from 41 states and 16 countries arrived at Tanglewood last Sunday to spend six weeks of concentrated study at the 10th session of the Berkshire Music Center.

For the opening exercises Charles Munch, the director, came from France, where he remained after his tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Also on hand to greet the students are a distinguished faculty of 36, including Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Luigi Dallapiccola, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross, Richard Burgin, Ingolf Dahl, William Kroll and first chairs of the Boston orchestra.

Seven students came from Canada; five from Israel; two each from Mexico and Argentina and one from Brazil, Chile, Turkey, Italy, France, Egypt, South Africa, Hong Kong, New Zealand, Honolulu, England and Germany. New York leads the states with 88, including 62 from New York City. Massachusetts is second with 42.

Ranging in age from 15 to 58, the majority of students are from 18 to 25. The 75 percent in the regular six weeks course are highly talented, as competition was keen for the tuition scholarships awarded for the first time automatically to those who will play in the orchestra and chamber music groups or lead in the choral or opera departments.

Nearly all are professional or pre-professional, excepting in the Tanglewood Study Group, where lawyers, teachers, stenographers and even housewives, avocation is music, will spend their vacations of two, four or six weeks, doing something that they have always wanted to do.

Among the auditors of orchestral conducting will be Christopher von Dohnanyi, who will come from Munich, where he lives with his distinguished grandfather, the composer Erno von Dohnanyi.

A symphony concert this Friday evening, July 4 at 8:15, will be the first of nearly 40 performances by students. Open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, whose members contribute to the support of the school, the programs will include symphony, choral and chamber music, evenings of opera and composition and chamber music concerts donated for the last four Wednesday evenings of July by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress.

Students are living at the Lenox Preparatory School and Wheatleigh, a nearby estate owned by the orchestra. For recreation they will swim and boat in Stockbridge Bowl, whose shoreline includes the edge of the Tanglewood estate.

The registration list of the Study Group will remain open for the convenience of those who wish to enroll for two or four weeks. The Berkshire Festival concerts on week-ends from July 5 through Aug. 10 are a part of the student's program. Information about the Festival, student performances or school enrollment will be mailed on request to Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Eagle July 5

Tanglewood Season Opening With Bach Concert Tonight

TANGLEWOOD — Tonight Charles Munch and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the Berkshire Festival in the Tanglewood theatre-concert hall with an all-Bach program. Beginning the conductor's second season in the Berkshires, the concert will be the first of six on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons before the Festival in the Music Shed seating 6000 that will start July 24.

Known variously as the little festival, the minor festival or the lesser festival, the early series has attracted increasing audiences due to the character of its classical programs, the musicianship of the players and the intimate atmosphere of the hall seating 1200 and the beauty of the lawn and nearby gardens. Often the audience is larger than that in the theatre.

Mr. Munch has chosen for the opening work Bach's "The Musical Offering," which was composed in 1747 and presented engraved to the King of Prussia with a suitable dedication 205 years ago next Monday. It consists of 14 contrapuntal numbers upon a theme provided by Frederick the Great.

Burgin, Posselt Soloists

Richard Burgin, the orchestra's concertmaster, and Ruth Posselt, his wife, will be the soloists for the Concerto in D minor, for Two violins and string orchestra. Miss Posselt has played many times with the Boston and other orchestras. She is a concert violinist and a teacher. Mr. Burgin is conductor of the Portland (Me.) Symphony Orchestra.

The Suite No. 3 in D major, with which the program closes, is one of four overtures generally believed to have been written between 1717 and 1723, when Bach was Kapellmeister to Prince Leopold of Anhalt- Cothen, who was not only a patron but also a musician.

The Concerto Grosso in A minor for string orchestra, with which the program for Sunday afternoon will start, is one of 12 written by Handel in London in 1739. Karl Ditters vonDittersdorf, whose work will be played for the first time at Tanglewood, was a violinist, conductor and composer who was born in Vienna in 1739 and died 60 years later in Neuhaus, Bohemia. He was the author of an autobiography, finished two days before his death, that is important as a vivid picture of music as cultivated by royalty in central Europe in the 18th cenury.

Tanglewood

Continued From First Page

Ross To Conduct Cantata

Three of the four soloists in Johann Sebastian Bach's Cantata No. 140, "Wachet auf, ruft uns die Stimme," which Hugh Ross, head of choral conducting and singing at the Berkshire Music Center, will lead, are studying in the opera department and the fourth is a former student. Miss Sarah Jane Fleming, soprano, of Winston-Salem, N.C., after attending Hamline University, St. Paul, Minn., spent the past two years at the Juilliard School of Music, New York City. A pupil of Madame Freschl, she has sung in church and concert.

John Mc Collum, tenor, studied music and journalism at the University of California, from which he graduated. Starting his career as a newspaperman, he changed to music when he won an Atwater Kent award in 1950. During World War II he served for three years as a Navy fighter pilot. He won the American Theatre Wing Award for 1952, which resulted in a Town Hall debut last May.

Mac Morgan, bass, of Southport, Conn., studied music at the Eastman School, Rochester, N.Y., and at Tanglewood in the past two seasons.

Tickets are on sale at the box office for the theatre concerts, as well as for the later series in the Shed. General admission for listening from the lawn will be sold before the concerts.

The week-end programs follow:

Tonight

The Musical Offering .... Bach
Concerto in D minor, for two violins and string orchestra.
Suite No. 3, in D major.

Sunday Afternoon at 3.00

Concerto Grosso in A minor for string orchestra. .... Handel
Symphony in C major ...... Dittersdorf
Symphony No. 3, in F major, C. P. C. Bach
Cantata, Wachet auf, ruft uns die Stimme," No. 140 .... J. S. Bach Hugh Ross, conducting.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUN 21 1952

Titus to Be Featured As Tanglewood Opera

Special to The Hartford Times

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. — "Titus," the opera which Mozart wrote in the last year of his life and the only "opera seria" of his maturer years, is announced by Boris Goldovsky as the major production of the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood this Summer. "Titus" (La Clemenza di Tito) will then have what will probably be its first complete production in America. There will be two performances Aug. 4 and 5 at Tanglewood to which Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be invited.

A feature will be a new scenic plan in which an elaborate mechanism for projection by slides, the invention of Paul Planer, will be used. It permits spectacle effects in such scenes as the burning and destruction of a palace in this opera.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUN 26 1952

FIRST CONCERT AT TANGLEWOOD SLATED ON JULY 4

Three Students From This Section to Participate in Summer Study

The first of nearly 40 performances by the Tanglewood Symphony Orchestra will take place the night of July 4 at the Berkshire Music Center. More than 400 students from 16 countries and 41 of the United States will participate in the summer study and concert series.

Included in the group of Tanglewood students are three from this area, Nancy Pease of 15 Welcome Pl., a violinist, Ruth N. Stephens of 116 Donbray Rd., pianist, both of Springfield, and Julliette Letourneau of 53 Mill St., Westfield, soprano.

During the six weeks study period, students will leave at the Lenox Preparatory School and Wheatleigh, a nearby estate owned by the orchestra.

Charles Munch, the director, will arrive from France, where he remained following his tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the opening exercises. Among the auditors of orchestral conducting will be Christopher von Dohnanyi, who is coming from Munich, Germany.

The students are mostly between the ages of 18 and 25. The symphonic group is composed of lawyers, teachers, housewives, etc., whose avocation is music and who have attained a professional status thereby. Applications for registrations for the study groups are still being accepted.

BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE

JUL 20 1952

Koussevitzky Foundation

The Koussevitzky Music Foundation will mark next Saturday the birthday of the late Serge Koussevitzky, by a program at the Lenox Library, Lenox. At that time, the foundation will present a gift of scores, music, recordings and books on music to the Lenox Library, which has cooperated in many ways with the Berkshire Music Center, the school established at Tanglewood by Dr. Koussevitzky.

Eagle

Pittsfield, Massachusetts, Tuesday, July 8, 1952.

Plouffe

FRIENDS OF MRS. COOLIDGE: The Bel Arte Trio, who will give the first of four weekly concerts at the Berkshire Music Center tomorrow night, was organized through the generosity of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. The concerts are open to Friends of the Music Center and Mrs. Coolidge. The trio consists of, left to right, Joseph dePasquale, violist; Ruth Posselt, violinist; Samuel Mayes, cellist.

Bel Arte Trio Opens Concert Series Tomorrow

TANGLEWOOD — The Bel Arte Trio, who will play at Tanglewood tomorrow night the first of four weekly concerts to be given through the generosity of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, was organized during the past winter.

Miss Ruth Posselt, concert violinist, Samuel Mayes, first cellist, and Joseph dePasquale, first violist in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, played their first concert last winter for the Harvard Music Society and later gave a concert at Jordan Hall, Boston.

With her husband, Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Miss Posselt was a soloist in the Bach concerto for two violins, conducted by Charles Munch at the opening concert of the Berkshire Festival in the Tanglewood theatre Saturday night. A native of Medford, she gave a recital in Carnegie Hall at the age of nine. She has toured Europe six times, playing with the principal orchestras there and in America. With the Boston Orchestra she has introduced many new works, and has been guest soloist at Tanglewood.

A native of Philadelphia, Mr. dePasquale studied viola at the Curtis Institute in that city, with the late Louis Bailly, and with William Primrose and Max Aranoff. During World War II he played with the Marine Band in Washington and subsequently with the American Broadcasting Company's orchestra in New York. He has held the first viola chair with the Boston orchestra since 1947. He is married to the former Maria von Leuchtenberg, niece of Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky. With their two small daughters they occupy for the summer an apartment at Saranac, the Koussevitzky estate in Lenox.

Samuel Houston Mayes, as his name suggests, was born in Texas of partly Cherokee Indian parentage. He came to the Boston orchestra five seasons ago from the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, where he occupied the first desk. He has made several solo appearances with the Boston orchestra and is widely known as a player of chamber music.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center and of Mrs. Coolidge are invited to the series of concerts.

Tomorrow's program follows:

Trio in G major .... Beethoven
Trio, Op. 34 .... Hindemith
Divertimento for String Trio, K. 563 Mozart

Rubinstein To Play Piano Solo At Tanglewood Concert Aug. 7

TANGLEWOOD—Arthur Rubinstein will play the solo in Brahms' second piano concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival Aug. 7. The announcement was made by Charles Munch, the conductor, who made known at the same time other changes in the program and the names of additional Festival soloists. Brahms' fourth symphony was included in the July 31 program following the receipt by the orchestra of the highest award of the Academie du Disque Francais for its recording of the Brahms work.

Margaret Harshaw, soprano, Charles Kullman, tenor, and James Pease, bass, will be soloists for the Wagner program that Pierre Monteux will conduct Aug. 2. Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor part in Berlioz' "Requiem" in the final Festival concert Aug. 10.

Canceling the program scheduled for Thursday evening, July 31, Mr. Munch will conduct instead Faure's Incidental Music for "Pelleas and Melisande" and Ballade for Piano and Orchestra, Ravel's Piano Concerto and Brahms' fourth symphony. Series A remains unchanged.

BALTIMORE, MD.
NEWS-POST

JUN 18 1952

Bach Program To Open Fete

An innovation in the plans for the Berkshire Music Festival, conducted by the Boston Symphony, has been announced by Charles Munch, the noted Frenchman who is to conduct the concerts this season.

The programs for chamber orchestra have hitherto been limited to the works of Bach and Mozart, but while these two will continue to dominate, some of their contemporaries will be included, as well as a few present-day luminaries.

OPENING JULY 5

At the opening on July 5, the program will still be "all Bach," but John Sebastion's son, Carl Philipp Emmanuel, will provide the Fifth Symphony. Hugh Ross will conduct a cantata, and the Concerto for two violins will be played by Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin.

On Sunday, July 6, the program will be chosen from the works of Rameou, Couperin, Purcell, Vivaldi and Lalande.

CONCERTO GROSSO

A week later, Handel's Concerto Grosso, for strings, will be given on Saturday evening, with a symphony by Dittersdorf, and "Metamorphoses," by Richard Strauss, scored for 23 solo string instruments. Also Milhaud's "La Creation du Monde."

On Sunday of the week end, July 13, the three final symphonies of Mozart will be played.

H. A. F. P.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

MAY 20 1952

AT TANGLEWOOD

INGOLF DAHL

Ingolf Dahl of the music faculty of the University of California will head the Tanglewood Study Group, a new department of the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school. More than 100 students, teachers and amateur musicians will spend two, four or six weeks studying and participating in the performance of music from the Baroque period to the present. The school will open June 29.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST

JUL 20 1952

THE BERKSHIRE Music Festival opens [illegible] concerts this week, and runs for three weeks on a Thursday and Saturday evening, Sunday afternoon schedule.

The Berkshire Sketch June 26, 1952

June 29

Cadenza

* * *

TANGLEWOOD PROGRAM OF BOSTON SYMPHONY

The Boston Symphony concerts at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Massachusetts, draw many music lovers from Meriden. In order to assist inquirers I hasten to print their summer program.

Everyone has seen pictured the enormous music shed which holds thousands, and permits other thousands to hear from the lawn. To indulge oneself in a week-end of these concerts, or to attend merely an evening or an afternoon is an experience impossible to duplicate. I urge everyone to spend a bit more and listen and see from inside. Charles Munche will [illegible].

Sta[illegible] [illegible]mes for the concerts are Th[illegible] [illegible]y and Saturday evenings at [illegible]15; Sunday afternoon at 3 p. m.

MEMO:

Please clip this listing for reference!

Sat. eve., July 5, Bach, "The Musical Offering." Bach, "Concerto for Two Violins," soloists, Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin. Bach, Suite No. 3 in D major.

Sunday aft., July 6, Handel, Concerto Grosso in A minor for Strings. Dittersdorf, Symphony in C. C. P. E. Bach, Symphony No. 5 in B minor. J. S. Bach, Cantata No. 140, (Wachet auf.), (conducted by Hugh Ross).

Sat. eve., July 12, Rameau, Suite from "Dardanus," Couperin, Concert dans le gout theatral. Purcel, Fantasia in A, for Strings. Vivaldi, Concerto Grosso in D minor. Lalande, De Profundis," for chorus and orchestra, (conducted by Hugh Ross).

Sun. aft., July 13, Mozart, Symphony in E flat, No. 39. Mozart, Symphony in G. Minor, No. 40. Mozart, Symphony in C major (Jupiter), No. 41.

Sat. eve., July 19, Mozart, Litaniae, for chorus and orchestra, (conducted by Hugh Ross), Mozart, Concerto in C major (Lucas Foss). Schubert, Mass in G Major.

Sun. aft., July 20, Haydn, Symphony No. 99, in E flat. Haydn, Symphony No. 86, in D major. Schubert, Mass in G major.

SERIES A

Thurs. eve., July 24, Beethoven, Symphony No. 3 (Eroica) Brahms Symphony No. 1 in C minor.

Sat. eve., July 26, conducted by Pierre Monteux. Cimarosa, Overture, "The Secret Marriage." Schubert, Symphony No. 7 in C major. Stravinsky, "The Rite of Spring."

Sun. aft., July 27, Franck, Symphonic Piece from "Redemption." Bizet, "Symphony in C major. Dallapiccola, "Three Prisoners' Songs," with chorus, (conducted by Hugh Ross.) Ravel, Daphnis and Chloe," Suites 1 and 2, (with chorus).

SERIES B

Thurs. eve., July 31, Beethoven, Overture to "Leonore, No. 3." Schumann, Piano Concerto. Hindemith, Metamorphosis on Themes of Weber." D'Indy, Symphony on a Mountain Air, soloist Nicole Henriot.

Sat. eve., Aug. 2, conducted by Pierre Monteux. All Wagner program. Prelude and Love - Death, "Tristan and Isolde." Wotan's Farewell and Fire Music, from "Die Walkure." Final scene from "Siegfried." Immolation Scene, "Gotterdammerung."

Sun. aft., Aug. 3, Beethoven, Overture to "Egmont." Beethoven, Symphony No. 8 Debussy, "Iberia." Honegger, "Danse des Morts," (with chorus.)

SERIES C

Thurs. eve., Aug. 7, Schumann, Symphony No. 1, ("Spring"). Swanson, Short Symphony. Tschaikowski, Symphony No. 4.

Sat. eve., Aug. 9, (Koussevitzky Memorial Concert), conducted by Leonard Bernstein. C. P. E. Bach, Andante from Concerto in D major. Copland, Symphony No 3, Sibelius, Symphony No. 5.

Sun. aft., Aug. 10, Berlioz, Requiem (with chorus).

BY MARJORIE C. TOWER

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

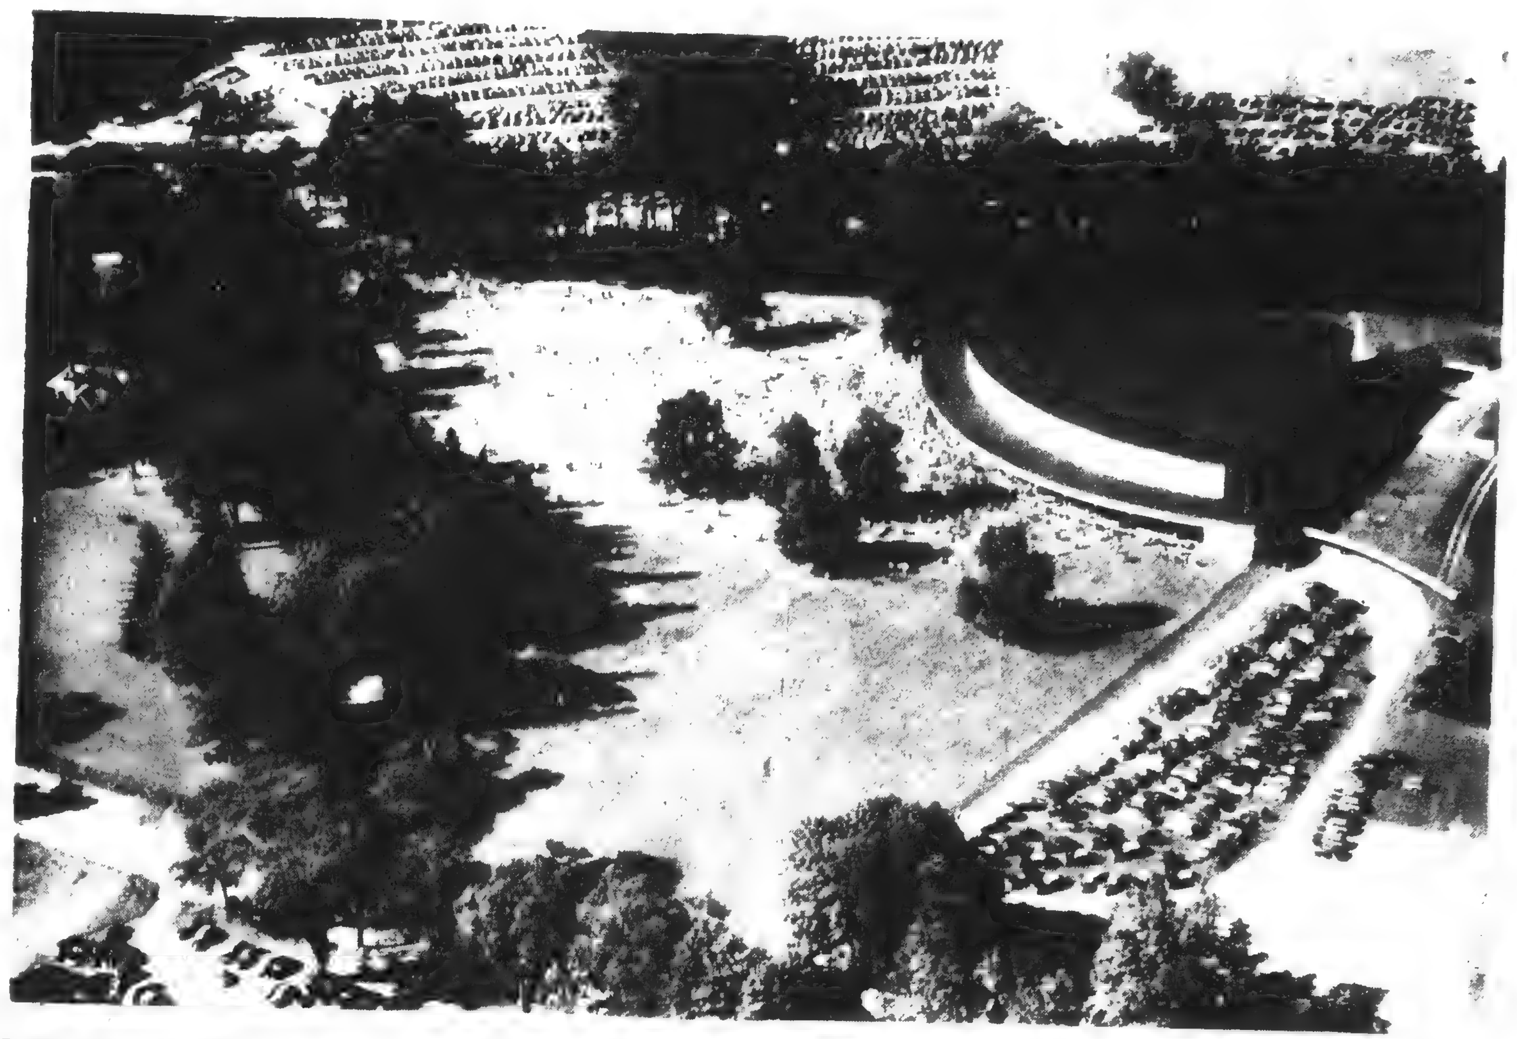
JUN 30 1952

Tanglewood Season Opens

LENOX, Mass., June 29 (AP) — Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center, today opened the 10th session at Tanglewood.

Dr. Munch urged some 400 students at the Boston Symphony's Summer School to take the responsibility for developing and expressing the inner life of the 17 nations from which they come.

"The realm of action, represented by the social struggle, aims at a momentary goal," Munch said, "while the realm of the spirit, represented by the arts, is eternal."



THE CURTAIN GOES UP!

The Berkshire Sketch
June 26 1952

CONDUCTOR Leonard Bernstein, shown here in a moment of meditation, will be seen in dynamic action at Tanglewood on Saturday evening, Aug. 9 when he conducts the Koussevitzky Memorial Concert.

Night and day the electrical crews and handymen have labored to make Tanglewood ready for the big opening of the Berkshire Festival on Saturday evening, July 5 when Charles Munch (above) conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an All-Bach program.

BOSTON, MASS.
AMERICAN

JUN 30 1952

TANGLEWOOD OPENS

LENOX (AP)—Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center, opened the 10th session at Tanglewood.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

JUN 28 1952

Butler to Take 6-Week Course At Berkshire Music Center

Among scholarship winners taking six-week courses of concentrated study at the 10th session of the Berkshire Music Center this summer will be Bruce Butler, 16 Troy Pl.

A string bass player, Butler also plays the tuba. He is one of more than 400 students from 41 states and 16 countries who will attend the classes at the center, which will open Sunday.

A graduate of Nott Terrace high school, Butler will begin his senior year at the Eastman School of Music next year. He is studying for a degree of bachelor of music and is taking a double major in string bass and tuba. He has been playing in the bass section of the Rochester Philharmonic orchestra and is principal bass of the Eastman senior symphony.

When he was at Nott Terrace high school, he played in both the band and orchestra.

He won a SPEBSQSA scholarship in 1948 and for three years attended the National Music camp at Interlochen, Mich. He is a member of Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia, national honorary music fraternity.

Locally, he studied tuba with Walter A. Beck and bass with the late Carl Demangate.

Butler is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Stannard M. Butler.

Mrs. Uhl Named On Berkshire National Group

Mrs. Raymond Uhl of 829 Albion road, Columbia, has been notified by Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, that she has been elected a member of the National committee.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center is an organization of several thousand persons who are interested in supporting this summer school for talented young musicians which was founded by the late Serge Koussevitzky and for which he acted as director until his death in 1951.

Charles Munch, the present conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will carry on the leadership of the school.

Mrs. Uhl is the first person in South Carolina to be added to the national committee, which is headed by such musical figures as Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky and Mrs. Elizabeth Spague Coolidge, known as the "Fairy Godmother of Chamber Music."

Anyone interested either in joining the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center or in attending the concerts of the Berkshire Festival may communicate with Mrs. Uhl for information.

The concerts of the Boston Symphony will be held at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from July 24 to August 10. The concerts of the Berkshire Music Center will be held at the same place from June 30 to August 10.

It is too late for students to be accepted for the school this year, but next spring, Mrs. Uhl hopes to interest some talented young musicians from South Carolina to audition for the Berkshire Music Center.

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL, 1952

By: ERNEST LUKAS.

Summer is back and I am looking forward to spend again my vacation at HILL TOP REST, SOUTH WORTHINGTON, MASS. This lovely spot, built on a rock and surrounded by wild mountain streams, offers as the greatest advantage its vicinity to the BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL.

Before talking about the musical portion of this year's festival, I would like to mention that the location of the concerts is of superb natural beauty, the Shed being placed on the highest plateau of the BERKSHIRE MOUNTAINS. There is a charming lake also to enhance even more the magnificent beauty of the mountains and the grounds are wonderfully kept.

The program of this year's festival is of an exceptionally interesting nature. The world's finest orchestra, the BOSTON SYMPHONY, will be conducted by Mr. CHARLES MUNCH, LEONARD BERNSTEIN and for the first time this season by the other famous French conductor, PIERRE MONTEUX who until recently has been the leader of the SAN FRANCISCO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Preceding the three series of performances held at the Shed, there will be six concerts at the SUMMER OPERA HOUSE, consisting of works by BACH, MOZART, HAYDN and SCHUBERT. As outstanding events in the major series I would like to mention MONTEUX'S conducting of the "RITE OF SPRING" by STRAVINSKY and CHARLES MUNCH'S execution of the "METAMORPHOSIS" by Hindemith but there will be many other great compositions performed of the standard repertoire.

Last year I was able to attend five concerts and I hope to hear this year again at least that many. After hearing this summer's concerts I shall be writing again in detail about the individual compositions.

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK CITY

JUN 28 1952

IN THE COUNTRY

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL—Charles Münch conducting the Boston Symphony in the opening performances of the season, which will run through Sunday, Aug. 10—Saturday, July 5, at 8:15: An all-Bach program, with Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin, violins. . . . ¶ Sunday, July 6, at 3: No soloist. (Theatre-Concert Hall, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.)

[8]

June 21, 52

Cadenza

• • •

TANGLEWOOD PROGRAM OF BOSTON SYMPHONY

BY MARJORIE C. TOWER

The Boston Symphony concerts at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Massachusetts, draw many music lovers from Meriden. In order to assist inquirers I hasten to print their summer program.

Everyone has seen pictured the enormous music shed which holds thousands, and permits other thousands to hear from the lawn. To indulge oneself in a week-end of these concerts, or to attend merely an evening or an afternoon is an experience impossible to duplicate. I urge everyone to spend a bit more and listen and see from inside. Charles Munche will conduct.

Starting times for the concerts are Thursday and Saturday evenings at 8:15; Sunday afternoon at 3 p. m.

MEMO:

Please clip this listing for reference!

Sat. eve., July 5, Bach, "The Musical Offering." Bach, "Concerto for Two Violins," soloists, Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin. Bach, Suite No. 3 in D major.

Sunday aft., July 6, Handel, Concerto Grosso in A minor for Strings. Dittersdorf, Symphony in C. C. P. E. Bach, Symphony No. 5 in B minor. J. S. Bach, Cantata No. 140, (Wachet auf.), (conducted by Hugh Ross).

Sat. eve., July 12, Rameau, Suite from "Dardanus," Couperin, Concert dans le gout theatral. Purcel, Fantasia in A, for Strings. Vivaldi, Concerto Grosso in D minor. Lalande, De Profundis," for chorus and orchestra, (conducted by Hugh Ross).

Sun. aft., July 13, Mozart, Symphony in E flat, No. 39. Mozart, Symphony in G. Minor, No. 40. Mozart, Symphony in C major (Jupiter), No. 41.

Sat. eve., July 19, Mozart, Litaniae, for chorus and orchestra, (conducted by Hugh Ross), Mozart, Concerto in C major (Lucas Foss). Schubert, Mass in G Major.

Sun. aft., July 20, Haydn, Symphony No. 99, in E flat. Haydn, Symphony No. 86, in D major. Schubert, Mass in G major.

SERIES A

Thurs. eve., July 24, Beethoven, Symphony No. 3 (Eroica) Brahms Symphony No. 1 in C minor.

Sat. eve., July 26, conducted by Pierre Monteux. Cimarosa, Overture, "The Secret Marriage." Schubert, Symphony No. 7 in C major. Stravinsky, "The Rite of Spring."

Sun. aft., July 27, Franck, Symphonic Piece from "Redemption." Bizet, "Symphony in C major. Dallapiccola, "Three Prisoners' Songs," with chorus, (conducted by Hugh Ross.) Ravel, Daphnis and Chloe," Suites 1 and 2, (with chorus).

SERIES B

Thurs. eve., July 31, Beethoven, Overture to "Leonore, No. 3." Schumann, Piano Concerto. Hindemith, Metamorphosis on Themes of Weber." D'Indy, Symphony on a Mountain Air, soloist Nicole Henriot.

Sat. eve., Aug. 2, conducted by Pierre Monteux. All Wagner program. Prelude and Love - Death, "Tristan and Isolde." Wotan's Farewell and Fire Music, from "Die Walkure." Final scene from "Siegfried." Immolation Scene, "Gotterdammerung."

Sun. aft., Aug. 3, Beethoven, Overture to "Egmont." Beethoven, Symphony No. 8 Debussy, "Iberia." Honegger, "Danse des Morts," (with chorus.)

SERIES C

Thurs. eve., Aug. 7, Schumann, Symphony No. 1, ("Spring"). Swanson, Short Symphony. Tschaikowski, Symphony No. 4.

Sat. eve., Aug. 9, (Koussevitzky Memorial Concert), conducted by Leonard Bernstein. C. P. E. Bach, Andante from Concerto in D major. Copland, Symphony No 3, Sibelius, Symphony No. 5.

Sun. aft., Aug. 10, Berlioz, Requiem (with chorus).

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
JUN 30 1952

Tanglewood Season Opens

LENOX, Mass., June 29 (AP) — Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center, today opened the 10th session at Tanglewood.

Dr. Munch urged some 400 students at the Boston Symphony's Summer School to take the responsibility for developing and expressing the inner life of the 17 nations from which they come.

"The realm of action, represented by the social struggle, aims at a momentary goal," Munch said, "while the realm of the spirit, represented by the arts, is eternal."

The Berkshire Sketch June 26, 1952

THE CURTAIN GOES UP!

Night and day the electrical crews and handymen have labored to make Tanglewood ready for the big opening of the Berkshire Festival on Saturday evening, July 5 when Charles Munch (above) conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an All-Bach program.

The Berkshire Sketch
June 26, 1952

CONDUCTOR Leonard Bernstein, shown here in a moment of meditation, will be seen in dynamic action at Tanglewood on Saturday evening, Aug. 9 when he conducts the Koussevitzky Memorial Concert.

BOSTON, MASS.
AMERICAN
JUN 30 1952

TANGLEWOOD OPENS

LENOX (AP)—Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center, opened the 10th session at Tanglewood.

Columbia, S.C.
June 2?, '52

Mrs. Uhl Named On Berkshire National Group

Mrs. Raymond Uhl of 829 Albion road, Columbia, has been notified by Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, that she has been elected a member of the National committee.

The Friends of the Berkshire Music Center is an organization of several thousand persons who are interested in supporting this summer school for talented young musicians which was founded by the late Serge Koussevitzky and for which he acted as director until his death in 1951.

Charles Munch, the present conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will carry on the leadership of the school.

Mrs. Uhl is the first person in South Carolina to be added to the national committee, which is headed by such musical figures as Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky and Mrs. Elizabeth Spague Coolidge, known as the "Fairy Godmother of Chamber Music."

Anyone interested either in joining the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center or in attending the concerts of the Berkshire Festival may communicate with Mrs. Uhl for information.

The concerts of the Boston Symphony will be held at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from July 24 to August 10. The concerts of the Berkshire Music Center will be held at the same place from June 30 to August 10.

It is too late for students to be accepted for the school this year, but next spring, Mrs. Uhl hopes to interest some talented young musicians from South Carolina to audition for the Berkshire Music Center.

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL, 1952

Jersey Herald June 5 1952

By: ERNEST LUKAS.

Summer is back and I am looking forward to spend again my vacation at HILL TOP REST, SOUTH WORTHINGTON, MASS. This lovely spot, built on a rock and surrounded by wild mountain streams, offers as the greatest advantage its vicinity to the BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL.

Before talking about the musical portion of this year's festival, I would like to mention that the location of the concerts is of superb natural beauty, the Shed being placed on the highest plateau of the BERKSHIRE MOUNTAINS. There is a charming lake also to enhance even more the magnificent beauty of the mountains and the grounds are wonderfully kept.

The program of this year's festival is of an exceptionally interesting nature. The world's finest orchestra, the BOSTON SYMPHONY, will be conducted by Mr. CHARLES MUNCH, LEONARD BERNSTEIN and for the first time this season by the other famous French conductor, PIERRE MONTEUX who until recently has been the leader of the SAN FRANCISCO SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Preceding the three series of performances held at the Shed, there will be six concerts at the SUMMER OPERA HOUSE, consisting of works by BACH, MOZART, HAYDN and SCHUBERT. As outstanding events in the major series I would like to mention MONTEUX'S conducting of the "RITE OF SPRING" by STRAVINSKY and CHARLES MUNCH'S execution of the "METAMORPHOSIS" by Hindemith but there will be many other great compositions performed of the standard repertoire.

Last year I was able to attend five concerts and I hope to hear this year again at least that many. After hearing this summer's concerts I shall be writing again in detail about the individual compositions.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR
JUN 28 1952

Butler to Take 6-Week Course At Berkshire Music Center

Among scholarship winners taking six-week courses of concentrated study at the 10th session of the Berkshire Music Center this summer will be Bruce Butler, 16 Troy Pl.

A string bass player, Butler also plays the tuba. He is one of more than 400 students from 41 states and 16 countries who will attend the classes at the center, which will open Sunday.

A graduate of Nott Terrace high school, Butler will begin his senior year at the Eastman School of Music next year. He is studying for a degree of bachelor of music and is taking a double major in string bass and tuba. He has been playing in the bass section of the Rochester Philharmonic orchestra and is principal bass of the Eastman senior symphony.

When he was at Nott Terrace high school, he played in both the band and orchestra.

He won a SPEBSQSA scholarship in 1948 and for three years attended the National Music camp at Interlochen, Mich. He is a member of Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia, national honorary music fraternity.

Locally, he studied tuba with Walter A. Beck and bass with the late Carl Demangate.

Butler is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Stannard M. Butler.

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK CITY
JUN 28 1952

IN THE COUNTRY

Berkshire Festival—Charles Münch conducting the Boston Symphony in the opening performances of the season, which will run through Sunday, Aug. 10—Saturday, July 5, at 8:15: An all-Bach program, with Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin, violins. . . . ¶ Sunday, July 6, at 3: No soloist. (Theatre-Concert Hall, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.)

Summer 1952

The Tanglewood Program - 1952

Berkshire Music Festival, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch Conducting

Guest Conductors: Pierre Monteux - Leonard Bernstein

Theatre-Concert Hall

Saturday Evenings at 8:15

Sunday Afternoons at 3:00

6 Concerts by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

Conducted by CHARLES MUNCH

Saturday Evening, July 5

Bach — The Musical Offering
Bach — Concerto for Two Violins (Ruth Posselt, Richard Burgin, soloists)
Bach — Suite No. ? in D major

Sunday Afternoon, July 6

Handel — Concerto Grosso in A min. for Strings Op. 6. No. 4
Dittersdorf — Symphony in C major
C. P. E. Bach — Symphony No. 5, in B minor
J. S. Bach — Cantata No. 140. Wachet auf, ruft uns die Stimme

(Conducted by Hugh Ross)

Saturday Evening, July 12

Rameau — Suite from Dardanus
Couperin — Concert dans le gout theatral
Purcell — Fantasia in A, for Strings
Vivaldi — Concerto Grosso in D minor Op. 3, No. 11
Lalande — De Profundis, for Chorus and Orchestra

(Conducted by Hugh Ross)

Sunday Afternoon, July 13

MOZART

Symphony in E-flat, No. 39
Symphony in G minor, No. 40
Symphony in C major ("Jupiter") No. 41

Saturday Evening, July 19

Mozart — Litaniae, for Chorus and Orchestra (K. 125)
(Conducted by Hugh Ross)
Mozart — Piano Concerto in C major (K. 467) (Lukas Foss)
Schubert — Mass in G major

Sunday Afternoon, July 20

Haydn — Symphony No. 99, in E-flat
Hadyn — Symphony No. 86, in D major
Schubert — Mass in G major

Concerts in the Shed

Conducted by CHARLES MUNCH

Thursday and Saturday Evenings at 8:15

Sunday Afternoons at 3:00

SERIES A

Thursday Evening, July 24

Beethoven — Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"
Brahms — Symphony No. 1, in C minor

Saturday Evening, July 26

(Conducted by Pierre Monteux

Cimarosa — Overture, "The Secret Marriage"
Schubert — Symphony No. 7 in C major
Stravinsky — "The Rite of Spring"

Sunday Afternoon, July 27

Franck — Symphonic Piece from "Redemption"
Bizet — Symphony in C major
Dallapiccola — "Three Prisoners' Songs" (with Chorus)
(Conducted by Hugh Ross)
Ravel — "Daphnis and Chloe," Suites 1 and 2 (with Chorus)

SERIES B

Thursday Evening, July 31

Beethoven — Overture to "Leonore, No. 3"
Schumann — Piano Concerto
Hindemith — Metamorphosis on Themes of Weber
D'Indy — Symphony on a Mountain Air
(Soloist: Nicole Henriot

Saturday Evening, August 2

(Conducted by Pierre Monteux

WAGNER

Prelude and Love-death, "Tristan und Isolde"
Wotan's Farwell and Fire Music "Die Walkure"
Final Scene, "Siegfried"
Immolation Scene, "Gotterdammerung"
(Soloists to be announced)

Sunday Afternoon, August 3

Beethoven — Overture to "Egmont"
Beethoven — Symphony No. 8
Debusssy — "Iberia"
Honegger — "Danse des Morts" (with Chorus)

SERIES C

Thursday Evening, August 7

Schumann — Symphony No. 1 ("Spring")
Swanson — Short Symphony
Tchaikovsky — Symphony No. 4

Saturday Evening, August 9

The Koussevitzky Memorial Concert
Conducted by Leonard Bernstein
C. P. E. Bach — Andante from Concerto in D major
Copland — Symphony No. 3
Sibelius — Symphony No. 5

Sunday Afternoon, August 10

Berlioz — Requiem (with Chorus)
(Programs Subject to Change)

CHEF K
Corner Church and W
Featuring Elegant Breakfas
KARL GROS

CRANE MUSEUM
Dalton, Massachusetts
Historical Exhibits of Fine Papermaking since Revolutionary Times

* * *

We predict there will be more than one echo of Tanglewood and the Boston Symphony at the International Festival of Contemporary Music which Koussevitzky's friend, composer Roy Harris is heading in Pittsburgh, November 24-30. A Congress of Music and Art Critics will assemble at the same time.

* * *

We hope that one day The ANNOITED of Tadeuz Kassern will be presented at Tanglewood. It's a full length opera commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation.

* * *

Robert Shaw, a Tanglewood prod-

Composer LUIGI DALLAPICCOLA is at Tanglewood again this year assisting Copland in Composition Class. His "Three Prisoners' Song" at Tanglewood July 27th.

Whitestone Photo

TITUS, AUG. 4 & 5

Titus (La Clemenza di Tito), Mozart's only opera "seria", in 3 acts, will be presented Tues. and Wed. eves. Aug. 4 and 5 by the Berkshire Music Center Opera Dept. for the Friends of The Music Center. To become a Friend, simply make a donation and mail it to the BMC at Tanglewood. Contributions are used to support the BMC. Friends will see excerpts of the other operas also.

MUSIC STUDENTS, NOTICE:
THERE IS NO EASY ROAD

By ESTHER OSTROFF

To me, the most precious thing in the world is time, since it can never be recaptured. If one could find a short cut to substitute for the seemingly endless hours necessary to master the technique and the substance of an art, many more aspirants to a musical career would succeed in realizing their goal. There is no easy road, but at least there is a plan one can follow that will make the most out of the expenditure of time and energy.

First it is necessary to know what there is to do. That means one must analyze the structure from every point of view: melodic, harmonic and formal design. Then one must recognize the problems involved, both technical and musical. The difficult parts should be attacked first and worked in many different ways, as follows:

Break up the passage into its component parts so as to simplify the problem and conquer each individual part separately. For example, in a contrapuntal composition, study one voice at a time, then combine any two parts such as soprano and tenor, soprano and alto, alto and tenor etc. Emphasize one voice throughout, then bring out into relief another voice so as to achieve individuality of parts.

Any passage in uniform rhythm should be varied rhythmically for practice. For example, a repeated pattern of four even notes could be precticed as two fast and two slow ones, playing the two fast notes in any position, first, last or middle.

Difficult stretches should be practiced slowly, holding down the keys involved, playing one finger at a time repeatedly or alternating any two fingers in triple rhythm to give each finger a chance to accent.

Knowing specifically how to conquer a difficulty obviates the necessity for dull, repetitious drilling which numbs the senses of the performer and sharpens the irritability of the neighbors. Some of the technical problems could be worked out, even without the use of the instrument, such as breathing exercises and diction practice for singers, or finger gymnastics for instrumentalists.

Different fingerings and transposition to different keys are useful for grasping the interval relationship instead of relying upon the kinetic sense alone, too much.

The speed of a composition should be varied from very slow to very fast, no matter what performing tempo is indicated.

One should experiment with dynamics from pianissimo to fortissimo for tonal control.

Begin playing at any portion of the composition, not only at the beginning, but keep in mind the relation of that part to the whole.

Finally, try to reconstruct mentally the modulations and cadences in the piece so that should the memory lapse for a moment, all would not turn into chaos, but you could start comfortably at some thematic entrance or beginning of a phrase. Remember that attention to detail and complete absorption for a short time is worth hours of blind groping towards improvement.

ASSORTED TRIVIA FROM THE
TANGLEWOOD TIMES
Summer 1952

[9]

MONTEUX
SOLDIER, MUSICIAN, CITIZEN

What a man! Pierre Monteux, at 39 as a French infantryman (Aug. 5, 1914-Sept. 10, 1916), slogged thru Verdun, Rheims, Soissons and Argonne pour la belle Patrie.

Paris-born, (April 4, 1875), he launched his long career in that city as a master of the viola, first with the Colonne Orchestra then the Opera Comique and the Society of Modern Music, which he founded.

Next he achieved distinction as a conductor at home, at Covent Garden and Drury Lane and the opera houses of Berlin, Vienna and Budapest. (Those were the days, when gay Vienna was the capital of wine, women and song). The maestro then introduced his "Concerts Monteux" at the Paris Casino, followed by European tours with the Ballet Russe de Diaghileff.

He conducted Amsterdam's Concertgebouw (1924-1934), simultaneously (1929-1936) conducting the Paris Symphony. The San Francisco Symphony gave him a contract in 1936 and he remained with the SFO 17 years, resigning this year. Formerly he was with the Boston Symphony and he opened the NBC Symphony program in '37 till Arturo Toscanini could reach these shores. (He became an American Citizen in 1942).

This year he and the San Francisco Symphony won the coveted Grand Prix du Disque, France's highest recording honor for excellence of performance of Berlioz's Symphonie Fantastique, (RCA Victor recording, which we urge you to buy). Incidentally Jascha Heifetz won the Grand Prix for instrumentalists with an RCA Victor red seal recording of Tchaikovsky's Violin Concerto in D.

Besides guest conducting with the BSO at Tanglewood this summer, he will among other things appear at Lewishon Stadium. He has been a guest conductor 10 years at Ravinia with the Chicago Symphony. This man of boundless energy has also operated a school for conductors at Hancock, Maine.

Five Universities have conferred a doctor's degree on him and Stanford University gave him a Fellowship. Harvard asked him to occupy the Horatio Apelleton Lamb Chair. He is an officer of: The French Legion of Honor and the French Academy, the Crown of Rumania and Holland's Orange-Nassau. (The Editor)

Program - 1952
y Orchestra, Charles Munch Conducting onteux - Leonard Bernstein

ing, July 19
Chorus and Orchestra
Hugh Ross)
to in C major (K. 467)
major

oon, July 20
99, in E-flat
86, in D major major

the Shed
ARLES MUNCH
ay Evenings at 8:15
oons at 3:00

S A

ing, July 24
No. 3, "Eroica"
o. 1, in C minor

ning, July 26
Pierre Monteux
"The Secret Marriage"
No. 7 in C major e of Spring"

oon, July 27
iece from "Redemption"
major Prisoners' Songs" (with Hugh Ross)
Chloe," Suites 1 and 2

SERIES B

Thursday Evening, July 31

Beethoven — Overture to "Leonore, No. 3"
Schumann — Piano Concerto
Hindemith — Metamorphosis on Themes of Weber
D'Indy — Symphony on a Mountain Air
(Soloist: Nicole Henriot

Saturday Evening, August 2

(Conducted by Pierre Monteux

WAGNER

Prelude and Love-death, "Tristan und Isolde"
Wotan's Farwell and Fire Music "Die Walkure"
Final Scene, "Siegfried"
Immolation Scene, "Gotterdammerung"
(Soloists to be announced)

Sunday Afternoon, August 3

Beethoven — Overture to "Egmont"
Beethoven — Symphony No. 8
Debusssy — "Iberia"
Honegger — "Danse des Morts" (with Chorus)

SERIES C

Thursday Evening, August 7

Schumann — Symphony No. 1 ("Spring")
Swanson — Short Symphony
Tchaikovsky — Symphony No. 4

Saturday Evening, August 9

The Koussevitzky Memorial Concert
Conducted by Leonard Bernstein
C. P. E. Bach — Andante from Concerto in D major
Copland — Symphony No. 3
Sibelius — Symphony No. 5

Sunday Afternoon, August 10

Berlioz — Requiem (with Chorus)
(Programs Subject to Change)

The New Tanglewood Tales

By RAYMOND LIBRIZZI

CHARLES MUNCH CONDUCTS FRENCH MUSIC, that's the title of a new RCA Victor album out this July. Munch and the Boston Symphony perform the music of Ravel, Lalo, Berlioz and Saint-Saens — something you will prize.

* * *

There's hysteria in the land and if friend Serge Koussevitzky had come to the U.S. at such a time as Now Mr. M and perhaps Red Channels would shout: Bolshevik, Red, Commissar. And it is doubtful if he would find entry, and that would have been our profound loss and France's lush gain. Twenty five distinguished years with the Boston Symphony, Tanglewood, the Monument that is Koussevitzky's, the helping hand that he extended to rising stars, black and white, his faith in America and genuine Freedom, all add up to a great American.

* * *

We predict there will be more than one echo of Tanglewood and the Boston Symphony at the International Festival of Contemporary Music which Koussevitzky's friend, composer Roy Harris is heading in Pittsburgh, November 24-30. A Congress of Music and Art Critics will assemble at the same time.

* * *

We hope that one day The ANNOITED of Tadeuz Kassern will be presented at Tanglewood. It's a full length opera commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation.

* * *

Robert Shaw, a Tanglewood product, in May led the RCA Symphony in the American premiere of Francis Poulenc's Stabat Mater.

* * *

Hugh Ross, past spring, conducted the Marymount College Glee Club in Kodaly's The Spinning Room.

* * *

Boris Goldovsky under the aegis of the New England Opera Theatre next season will present 2 English versions of the Barber of Seville and Falstaff.

* * *

Lukas Foss, attention. "Big Six" was the winner of the annual Calaveras County Frog jumping contest with a leap of 14 ft. 6 inches.

* * *

Composer LUIGI DALLAPICCOLA is at Tanglewood again this year assisting Copland in Composition Class. His "Three Prisoners' Song" at Tanglewood July 27th.

Whitestone Photo

MUSIC STUDENTS, NOTICE: THERE IS NO EASY ROAD

By ESTHER OSTROFF

To me, the most precious thing in the world is time, since it can never be recaptured. If one could find a short cut to substitute for the seemingly endless hours necessary to master the technique and the substance of an art, many more aspirants to a musical career would succeed in realizing their goal. There is no easy road, but at least there is a plan one can follow that will make the most out of the expenditure of time and energy.

First it is necessary to know what there is to do. That means one must analyze the structure from every point of view: melodic, harmonic and formal design. Then one must recognize the problems involved, both technical and musical. The difficult parts should be attacked first and worked in many different ways, as follows:

Break up the passage into its component parts so as to simplify the problem and conquer each individual part separately. For example, in a contrapuntal composition, study one voice at a time, then combine any two parts such as soprano and tenor, soprano and alto, alto and tenor etc. Emphasize one voice throughout, then bring out into relief another voice so as to achieve individuality of parts.

Any passage in uniform rhythm should be varied rhythmically for practice. For example, a repeated pattern of four even notes could be precticed as two fast and two slow ones, playing the two fast notes in any position, first, last or middle.

Difficult stretches should be practiced slowly, holding down the keys involved, playing one finger at a time repeatedly or alternating any two fingers in triple rhythm to give each finger a chance to accent.

Knowing specifically how to conquer a difficulty obviates the necessity for dull, repetitious drilling which numbs the senses of the performer and sharpens the irritability of the neighbors. Some of the technical problems could be worked out, even without the use of the instrument, such as breathing exercises and diction practice for singers, or finger gymnastics for instrumentalists.

Different fingerings and transposition to different keys are useful for grasping the interval relationship instead of relying upon the kinetic sense alone, too much.

The speed of a composition should be varied from very slow to very fast, no matter what performing tempo is indicated.

One should experiment with dynamics from pianissimo to fortissimo for tonal control.

Begin playing at any portion of the composition, not only at the beginning, but keep in mind the relation of that part to the whole.

Finally, try to reconstruct mentally the modulations and cadences in the piece so that should the memory lapse for a moment, all would not turn into chaos, but you could start comfortably at some thematic entrance or beginning of a phrase. Remember that attention to detail and complete absorption for a short time is worth hours of blind groping towards improvement.

TITUS, AUG. 4 & 5

Titus (La Clemenza di Tito), Mozart's only opera "seria", in 3 acts, will be presented Tues. and Wed. eves. Aug. 4 and 5 by the Berkshire Music Center Opera Dept. for the Friends of The Music Center. To become a Friend, simply make a donation and mail it to the BMC at Tanglewood. Contributions are used to support the BMC. Friends will see excerpts of the other operas also.

ASSORTED TRIVIA FROM THE
TANGLEWOOD TIMES
Summer 1952

[9]

Whitestone Photo

Whitestone Photo

MUNCH, Above

MONTEUX, Above left

BERNSTEIN, Lower left

Tanglewood Applications Up

The number of advanced students of music applying for summer enrollment at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Mass., is greater than at this time a year ago. An attraction is the recent announcement that all advanced students will receive grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund. An Egyptian from Cairo will study composition, and another young composer has been accepted from Tel Aviv, Israel.

MUNCH, MONTEUX AND BSO ACCLAIMED IN EUROPE --- SET FOR TANGLEWOOD

Conductors Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, after a triumphant tour of Europe in May, are all set for an expected grand season at Tanglewood.

Wherever they went they brought good cheer and extraordinary music; they were in fine fettle all the way. The BSO from Free America won the admiration of Free Europe: Paris, Strasbourg, Lyons, Bordeaux, Metz, Berlin, Frankfort, Brussels, the Hague, Turin and London. Audience and press yelled: "More, more." And, we believe, had the orchestra been behind the "curtain," Moscow, Prague, Budapest and Warsaw would have received it with warm acclaim.

Among the pieces that wowed Europe were Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring", which will be performed at Tanglewood, Saturday evening, July 26th, and Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe, which will be presented Sunday afternoon, July 27th.

The tour began in the Paris Opera House and wound up in London's Albert Hall with 16 curtain calls.

(continued on page 4)

Enroute to the U.S.A. aboard the Ile de France the BSO played two benefit performances and added $420 to the Seamen's Pension Fund.

BSO Manager George Judd executed a difficult itinerary with smooth efficiency.

And here we are again: Another Tanglewood Season: Take over Maestros Munch, Monteux and Bernstein.

June 2

400 Students To Study At Berkshire Music Center

More than 400 students from 41 states and 16 countries will arrive at Tanglewood this weekend to spend six weeks of concentrated study at the 10th session of the Berkshire Music Center. For the opening exercises Sunday afternoon Charles Munch, the director, will come from France, where he remained after his tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Also arriving are a distinguished faculty of 36, including Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Luigi Dallapiccola, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross, Richard Burgin, Ingolf Dahl, William Kroll and first chairs of the Boston orchestra.

Seven students will come from Canada; five from Isreal; two each from Mexico and Argentina and one from Brazil, Chile, Turkey, Italy, France, Egypt, South Africa, Hong Kong, New Zealand, Honolulu, England and Germany. New York leads the states with 88, including 62 from New York City. Massachusetts is second with 42.

DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS
UN 22 1952

Berkshire Festival Concerts To Feature Boston Symphony

BOSTON, Mass., June 21.—First of the Berkshire Festival's programs at Tanglewood is scheduled for July 5. The opening concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra is the first of six programs to be presented in the Theatre-Concert hall under the direction of Charles Munch. Concerts in this series are scheduled for July 5, 6, 12, 13, 19 and 20.

Concerts in the Shed—Series A—will begin Thursday, July 24. Munch will conduct the opening program including Beethoven's "Eroica" and Brahms' First Symphony as well as the July 27 program which will include works by Ravel, Franck and Bizet. Pierre Monteux will direct the July 26 concert with Schubert's Symphony Nov. 7, the overture of Cimarosa's Secret Marriage and Stravinsky's The Rite of Spring.

Nicole Henriot will be soloist in the first concert in Series B. Monteux will return to the podium Aug. 2 and the third concert in the series will be Aug. 2.

Series C will begin Aug. 7 with a concert that includes Schumann's "Spring" symphony, Swanson's Short Symphony and Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony. Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Koussevitzky Memorial concert Aug. 9, performing works by C. P. E. Bach, Aaron Copland and Jean Sibelius.

Final performance will be that of the Berlioz Requiem, slated for Sunday, Aug. 10.

COOLIDGE CHAMBER CONCERTS

Four chamber music concerts thru the generosity of the Elizabeth Sprague Foundation in the Library of Congress will be presented in the Berkshire Music Center, July 9, The Bel Arte Trio; July 16, sonato recital by James Scholz, cello and Miklos Schwab, piano; July [illegible], Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble; July 30, The Fine Arts Quartet of the American Broadcasting Co. Curtain time is 8.15. These concerts are open to Friends of the BMC and take place in the Theatre-Concert Hall.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUN 28 1952

BY W. HARLEY RUDKIN

Two of this area's hot weather specials swing into action this weekend, at Tanglewood and Jacob's Pillow. At the former, more than 400 students from 41 states and 16 countries arrive to spend six weeks of concentrated study at the 10th session of the Berkshire Music Center. Among them are Nancy Pease of Welcome Pl., and Ruth N. Stephens of 116 Donbray Rd., this city and Juliette Latourneau of 53 Mill St., Westfield. Miss Pease, a violinst, will concentrate on chamber music; Miss Stephens is a pianist and organist, who will study with Ingolf Dahl. Miss Latourneau, a soprano, will be in the Tanglewood Study Group.

* * *

For tomorrow afternoon's opening exercises, Charles Munch, director, will return from France, where the Boston Symphony has recently concluded a most successful and gratifying tour, and among the other musical celebrities on hand for the Tanglewood opening will be Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross, Richard Burgin, William Kroll, and other members of the Tanglewood faculty.

* * *

There will be seven students from Canada; five from Israel, two each from Mexico and Argentina, and one each from Brazil, Chile, Turkey, Italy, France, Egypt, South Africa, Hong Kong, New Zealand, Honolulu, England and Germany. We envy these students, along with the others who will be there from our own country, for here is a priceless opportunity for the promotion of better international relations. Music has brought them together from the far ends of the earth, but they will absorb more than music. They will get to know each other, to share each other's interests, and consider each other's problems. You might ask what so small a group can do to help bring peace to a troubled world, but, get enough of this kind of collaboration, based on mutual interests, and you're on the way toward the most desired of goals.

* * *

There is a conception that this Tanglewood school is for professional musicians only, but that is not so. The Study Group still has openings for two weeks, or four weeks, for housewives, lawyers, teachers, stenographers, or anyone else whose avocation is music. At Tanglewood, they are given an opportunity to pursue their hobby at a higher level, among surroundings, and with teachers whose excellence are an international byword. Anyone desiring further information on this Study Group, should address his queries to Tanglewood, Lenox.

* * *

e, Bill Hooks Falco...Incidentally, in case you're interested in the Tanglewood program for next week, here it is: Tomorrow at 4 p. m., opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center; Friday, at 8.15 p. m., symphony concert by student orchestra; Saturday, July 5, at 8.15, opening concert of Berkshire Festival in theater-concert hall, by Boston Symphony members, Charles Munch conducting; Sunday, July 6, 10 a. m., chamber music concert; 3 p. m., concert in theater-concert hall; 8.15 p. m., composers forum.

BOSTON, MASS.
ADVERTISER
JUN 22 1952

Tanglewood

The celebrated Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, will open on July 5 with all-Bach concert in the Theatre-Concert Hall by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch. On Sunday afternoon they will play works of Handel, Dittersdorf, C. P. E. Bach and J. S. Bach. Hugh Ross will conduct.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
JUN 29 1952

All-Bach Program Saturday To Open Tanglewood Season

'Musical Offering,' Concerto for Two Violins, Suite in D Major to Be Heard Bach Chorale Cantata On Sunday Program in Theater-Concert Hall

By VICTOR PRAHL

The all-Bach program by members of the Boston Symphony under the direction of Charles Munch at Tanglewood next Saturday night will mark the opening of the new season of six week end concerts in the Theater-Concert Hall. Formerly known as the Bach-Mozart concerts, Haydn was finally included two seasons ago, but now they have become more all-embracing and this season will include works by Rameau, Couperin, Purcell, Vivaldi, Ialande, Handel, Dittersdorf and Schubert. In fact the original prospectus programmed compositions by Milhaud and Strauss but these have now been replaced with classics.

Six-Part Fugue

Bach's "Musical Offering," a rather curious and rarely heard work, will open the concert on Saturday night. The circumstances which led to the creation of this work are of especial interest. In 1740 Bach's son Philipp Emanuel was appointed Kapellmeister to the court of Frederick the Great. The king often expressed a desire to meet the great Johann Sebastian, so in 1747 he was ultimately persuaded to visit the king.

One of the first things the monarch did was to give Bach a theme and ask him to improvise a six-part fugue. After he returned home he hastened to work out the right royal theme more fully and to make it known to the world." With the completed work he sent a most elaborate letter of dedication to the king.

The concerto for two violins is much more familiar both in performances and on records. One of the first recordings was made by Kreisler and Elmann, another by Menuhin and his teacher Georges Enesco, and Jascha Heifitz can boast of the achievement of making one in which he plays both parts. At this concert it will be performed by the orchestra's concertmaster, Richard Burgin and his gifted wife, Ruth Posselt. The expressive slow movement represents Bach in one of his most exalted moods.

Group of Dances

The Suite No. 3 in D major which concludes the program consists of the traditional "overture," grave, vivace, the famous air for strings, gavotte, bouree and gigue. Albert Schweitzer, Bach's biographer writes of these dances, a fragment of a vanished world of grace and eloquence has been preserved for us. They are the ideal musical picture of the rococo period. Their charm resides in the perfection of their blending of strength and grace."

Sunday's concert will close with another work by Bach, the Cantata No. 140, "Wachet auf," or "Sleepers Awake." This is one of the chorale cantatas in which the chorale serves as the basis of most of the numbers. The opening chorus with its sustained melody against the elaborate figuration of the other voices, syncopations and cross rhythms, is one of the glories of the cantata literature. The number in which the tenors sing the chorale in unison against a dance-like accompaniment is equally familiar as an organ prelude.

Other numbers on Sunday's concert will be Handel's Concerto Grosso for strings Op. 6 No. 4, Dittersdorf's Symphony in C major, and C. P. E. Bach's Symphony No. 5.

BOSTON SYMPHONY EXCELS IN WORKS OF SIX COMPOSERS

Plenty of Variety Provided In Pleasing Concert at Tanglewood

By VICTOR PRAHL

Lenox, July 12—Six composers instead of one figured on the third program given by members of the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch at Tanglewood tonight. Although no single towering genius dominated the evening, there was a distinct flavor of the epoch in the works of these composers from 17th century France, England and Italy. It made one realize as well, that all of the music of this period did not come from Germany.

Profound Impression

We enjoyed greatly the beautiful, expressive polyphonic writing in the fantasias of Henry Purcell composed in the days before a figured bass made music more static. Purcell, England's greatest composer, died in 1695 in his 31st year, somewhat antedating the others represented here, but his five pieces made a profound impression at this concert. A suite from Rameau's opera, "Dardanus," and short pieces for the theater by Couperin opened the concert. French in character, alternating between the tender air and the gay dances of the epoch, they were probably composed as an accompaniment for the ballet. In fact there was plenty of variety in the first half of the program which consisted of 23 short pieces or movements in all. Mr. Munch and his men played all of these compositions with an ingratiating charm and appropriate style. There was real warmth in the muted passages.

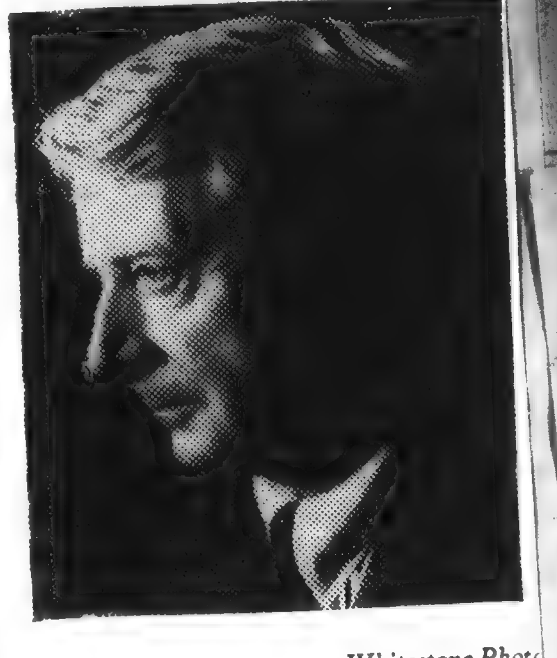
BOSTON SYMPHONY

(Continued From Page 1A)

Stunning Performance

The vivaldi concerto in D minor is surely one of the glories of this literature and this stunning performance explored fully its rich sonorities, sustained the poetic flow of its lovely largo and bristled with a brilliant virtuosity in the final allegro. Altogether we have never enjoyed Charles Munch's conducting more than we did in this varied lot of pieces. After intermission the chorus, five student soloists, and the orchestra performed Lalande's "De Profundis" under the direction of Hugh Ross.

This afternoon the Juilliard string quartet attracted the largest audience we have ever seen assembled at a South Mountain concert. They held the audience spellbound in quartets by Mozart, Beethoven and Debussy. We shall write at greater length of their marvelous playing later.



Whitestone Photo

Whitestone Photo

MUNCH, Above

MONTEUX, Above left

BERNSTEIN, Lower left

Tanglewood Applications Up

The number of advanced students of music applying for summer enrollment at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Mass., is greater than at this time a year ago. An attraction is the recent announcement that all advanced students will receive grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund. An Egyptian from Cairo will study composition, and another young composer has been accepted from Tel Aviv, Israel.

MUNCH, MONTEUX AND BSO ACCLAIMED IN EUROPE --- SET FOR TANGLEWOOD

Conductors Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, after a triumphant tour of Europe in May, are all set for an expected grand season at Tanglewood.

Wherever they went they brought good cheer and extraordinary music; they were in fine fettle all the way. The BSO from Free America won the admiration of Free Europe: Paris, Strasbourg, Lyons, Bordeaux, Metz, Berlin, Frankfort, Brussels, the Hague, Turin and London. Audience and press yelled: "More, more." And, we believe, had the orchestra been behind the "curtain," Moscow, Prague, Budapest and Warsaw would have received it with warm acclaim.

Among the pieces that wowed Europe were Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring", which will be performed at Tanglewood, Saturday evening, July 26th, and Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe, which will be presented Sunday afternoon, July 27th.

The tour began in the Paris Opera House and wound up in London's Albert Hall with 16 curtain calls.

(continued on page 4)

Enroute to the U.S.A. aboard the Ile de France the BSO played two benefit performances and added $420 to the Seamen's Pension Fund.

BSO Manager George Judd executed a difficult itinerary with smooth efficiency.

And here we are again: Another Tanglewood Season: Take over Maestros Munch, Monteux and Bernstein.

News-Rep June 21

400 Students To Study At Berkshire Music Center

More than 400 students from 41 states and 16 countries will arrive at Tanglewood this weekend to spend six weeks of concentrated study at the 10th session of the Berkshire Music Center. For the opening exercises Sunday afternoon Charles Munch, the director, will come from France, where he remained after his tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Also arriving are a distinguished faculty of 36, including Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Luigi Dallapiccola, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross, Richard Burgin, Ingolf Dahl, William Kroll and first chairs of the Boston orchestra.

Seven students will come from Canada; five from Isreal; two each from Mexico and Argentina and one from Brazil, Chile, Turkey, Italy, France, Egypt, South Africa, Hong Kong, New Zealand, Honolulu, England and Germany. New York leads the states with 88, including 62 from New York City. Massachusetts is second with 42.

COOLIDGE CHAMBER CONCERTS

Four chamber music concerts thru the generosity of the Elizabeth Sprague Foundation in the Library of Congress will be presented in the Berkshire Music Center: July 9, The Bel Arte Trio; July 16, sonato recital by James Scholz, cello, and Miklos Schwab, piano; July 23, Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble; July 30, The Fine Arts Quartet of the American Broadcasting Co. Curtain time is 8.15. These concerts are open to Friends of the BMC and take place in the Theatre-Concert Hall.

DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS
JUN 22 1952

Berkshire Festival Concerts To Feature Boston Symphony

BOSTON, Mass., June 21.—First of the Berkshire Festival's programs at Tanglewood is scheduled for July 5. The opening concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra is the first of six programs to be presented in the Theatre-Concert hall under the direction of Charles Munch. Concerts in this series are scheduled for July 5, 6, 12, 13, 19 and 20.

Concerts in the Shed—Series A—will begin Thursday, July 24. Munch will conduct the opening program including Beethoven's "Eroica" and Brahms' First Symphony as well as the July 27 program which will include works by Ravel, Franck and Bizet. Pierre Monteux will direct the July 26 concert with Schubert's Symphony Nov. 7, the overture of Cimarosa's Secret Marriage and Stravinsky's The Rite of Spring.

Nicole Henriot will be soloist in the first concert in Series B. Monteux will return to the podium Aug. 2 and the third concert in the series will be Aug. 2.

Series C will begin Aug. 7 with a concert that includes Schumann's "Spring" symphony, Swanson's Short Symphony and Tschaikowsky's Fourth Symphony. Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Koussevitzky Memorial concert Aug. 9, performing works by C. P. E. Bach, Aaron Copland and Jean Sibelius.

Final performance will be that of the Berlioz Requiem, slated for Sunday, Aug. 10.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUN 28 1952

BY W. HARLEY RUDKIN

Two of this area's hot weather specials swing into action this weekend, at Tanglewood and Jacob's Pillow. At the former, more than 400 students from 41 states and 16 countries arrive to spend six weeks of concentrated study at the 10th session of the Berkshire Music Center. Among them are Nancy Pease of Welcome Pl., and Ruth N. Stephens of 116 Donbray Rd., this city and Juliette Latourneau of 53 Mill St., Westfield. Miss Pease, a violinst, will concentrate on chamber music; Miss Stephens is a pianist and organist, who will study with Ingolf Dahl. Miss Latourneau, a soprano, will be in the Tanglewood Study Group.

* * *

For tomorrow afternoon's opening exercises, Charles Munch, director, will return from France, where the Boston Symphony has recently [redacted]uccessful and gratifying tour, and among the other musical celebrities on hand for the Tanglewood opening will be Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross, Richard Burgin, William Kroll, and other members of the Tanglewood faculty.

* * *

There will be seven students from Canada; five from Israel, two each from Mexico and Argentina, and one each from Brazil, Chile, Turkey, Italy, France, Egypt, South Africa, Hong Kong, New Zealand, Honolulu, England and Germany. We envy these students, along with the others who will be there from our own country, for here is a priceless opportunity for the promotion of better international relations. Music has brought them together from the far ends of the earth, but they will absorb more than music. They will get to know each other, to share each other's interests, and consider each other's problems. You might ask what so small a group can do to help bring peace to a troubled world, but, get enough of this kind of collaboration, based on mutual interests, and you're on the way toward the most desired of goals.

* * *

There is a conception that this Tanglewood school is for professional musicians only, but that is not so. The Study Group still has openings for two weeks, or four weeks, for housewives, lawyers, teachers, stenographers, or anyone else whose avocation is music. At Tanglewood, they are given an opportunity to pursue their hobby at a higher level, among surroundings, and with teachers whose excellence are an international byword. Anyone desiring further information on this Study Group, should address his queries to Tanglewood, Lenox.

* * *

e, Bill [illegible] Falco.. Incidentally, in case you're interested in the Tanglewood program for next week, here it is: Tomorrow at 4 p. m., opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center; Friday, at 8.15 p. m., symphony concert by student orchestra; Saturday, July 5, at 8.15, opening concert of Berkshire Festival in theater-concert hall, by Boston Symphony members, Charles Munch conducting; Sunday, July 6, 10 a. m., chamber music concert; 3 p. m., concert in theater-concert hall; 8.15 p. m., composers forum.

BOSTON, MASS.
ADVERTISER
JUN 22 1952

Tanglewood

The celebrated Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, will open on July 5 with all-Bach concert in the Theatre-Concert Hall by members of the Boston Sy[redacted]stra conducted by Charles Munch. On Sunday afternoon they will play works of Handel, Dittersdorf, C. P. E. Bach and J. S. Bach. Hugh Ross will conduct.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
JUN 29 1952

All-Bach Program Saturday To Open Tanglewood Season

'Musical Offering,' Concerto for Two Violins, Suite in D Major to Be Heard Bach Chorale Cantata On Sunday Program in Theater-Concert Hall

By VICTOR PRAHL

The all-Bach program by members of the Boston Symphony under the direction [redacted]h at Tanglewood next Saturday night will mark the opening of the new season of six week end concerts in the Theater-Concert Hall. Formerly known as the Bach-Mozart concerts, Haydn was finally included two seasons ago, but now they have become more all-embracing and this season will include works by Rameau, Couperin, Purcell, Vivaldi, Lalande, Handel, Dittersdorf and Schubert. In fact the original prospectus programmed compositions by Milhaud and Strauss but these have now been replaced with classics.

Six-Part Fugue

Bach's "Musical Offering," a rather curious and rarely heard work, will open the concert on Saturday night. The circumstances which led to the creation of this work are of especial interest. In 1740 Bach's son Philipp Emanuel was appointed Kapellmeister to the court of Frederick the Great. The king often expressed a desire to meet the great Johann Sebastian, so in 1747 he was ultimately persuaded to visit the king.

One of the first things the monarch did was to give Bach a theme and ask him to improvise a six-part fugue. After he returned home he hastened to work out the right royal theme more fully and to make it known to the world." With the completed work he sent a most elaborate letter of dedication to the king.

The concerto for two violins is much more familiar both in performances and on records. One of the first recordings was made by Kreisler and Elmann, another by Menuhin and his teacher Georges Enesco, and Jascha Heifits can boast of the achievement of making one in which he plays both parts. At this concert it will be performed by the orchestra's concertmaster, Richard Burgin and his gifted wife, Ruth Posselt. The expressive slow movement represents Bach in one of his most exalted moods.

Group of Dances

The Suite No. 3 in D major which concludes the program consists of the traditional "overture," grave, vivace, the famous air for strings, gavotte, bouree and gigue. Albert Schweitzer, Bach's biographer writes of these dances, a fragment of a vanished world of grace and eloquence has been preserved for us. They are the ideal musical picture of the rococo period. Their charm resides in the perfection of their blending of strength and grace."

Sunday's concert will close with another work by Bach, the Cantata No. 140, "Wachet auf," or "Sleepers Awake." This is one of the chorale cantatas in which the chorale serves as the basis of most of the numbers. The opening chorus with its sustained melody against the elaborate figuration of the other voices, syncopations and cross rhythms, is one of the glories of the cantata literature. The number in which the tenors sing the chorale in unison against a dance-like accompaniment is equally familiar as an organ prelude.

Other numbers on Sunday's concert will be Handel's Concerto Grosso for strings Op. 6 No. 4, Dittersdorf's Symphony in C major, and C. P. E. Bach's Symphony No. 5.

BOSTON SYMPHONY EXCELS IN WORKS OF SIX COMPOSERS

Plenty of Variety Provided In Pleasing Concert at Tanglewood

Springfield Republican
July 13

By VICTOR PRAHL

Lenox, July 12—Six composers instead of one figured on the third program given by members of the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch at Tanglewood tonight. Although no single towering genius dominated the evening, there was a distinct flavor of the epoch in the works of these composers from 17th century France, England and Italy. It made one realize as well, that all of the music of this period did not come from Germany.

Profound Impression

We enjoyed greatly the beautiful, expressive polyphonic writing in the fantasias of Henry Purcell composed in the days before a figured bass made music more static. Purcell, England's greatest composer, died in 1695 in his 31st year, somewhat antedating the others represented here, but his five pieces made a profound impression at this concert. A suite from Rameau's opera, "Dardanus," and short pieces for the theater by Couperin opened the concert. French in character, alternating between the tender air and the gay dances of the epoch, they were probably composed as an accompaniment for the ballet. In fact there was plenty of variety in the first half of the program which consisted of 23 short pieces or movements in all. Mr. Munch and his men played all of these compositions with an ingratiating charm and appropriate style. There was real warmth in the muted passages.

BOSTON SYMPHONY

(Continued From Page 1A)

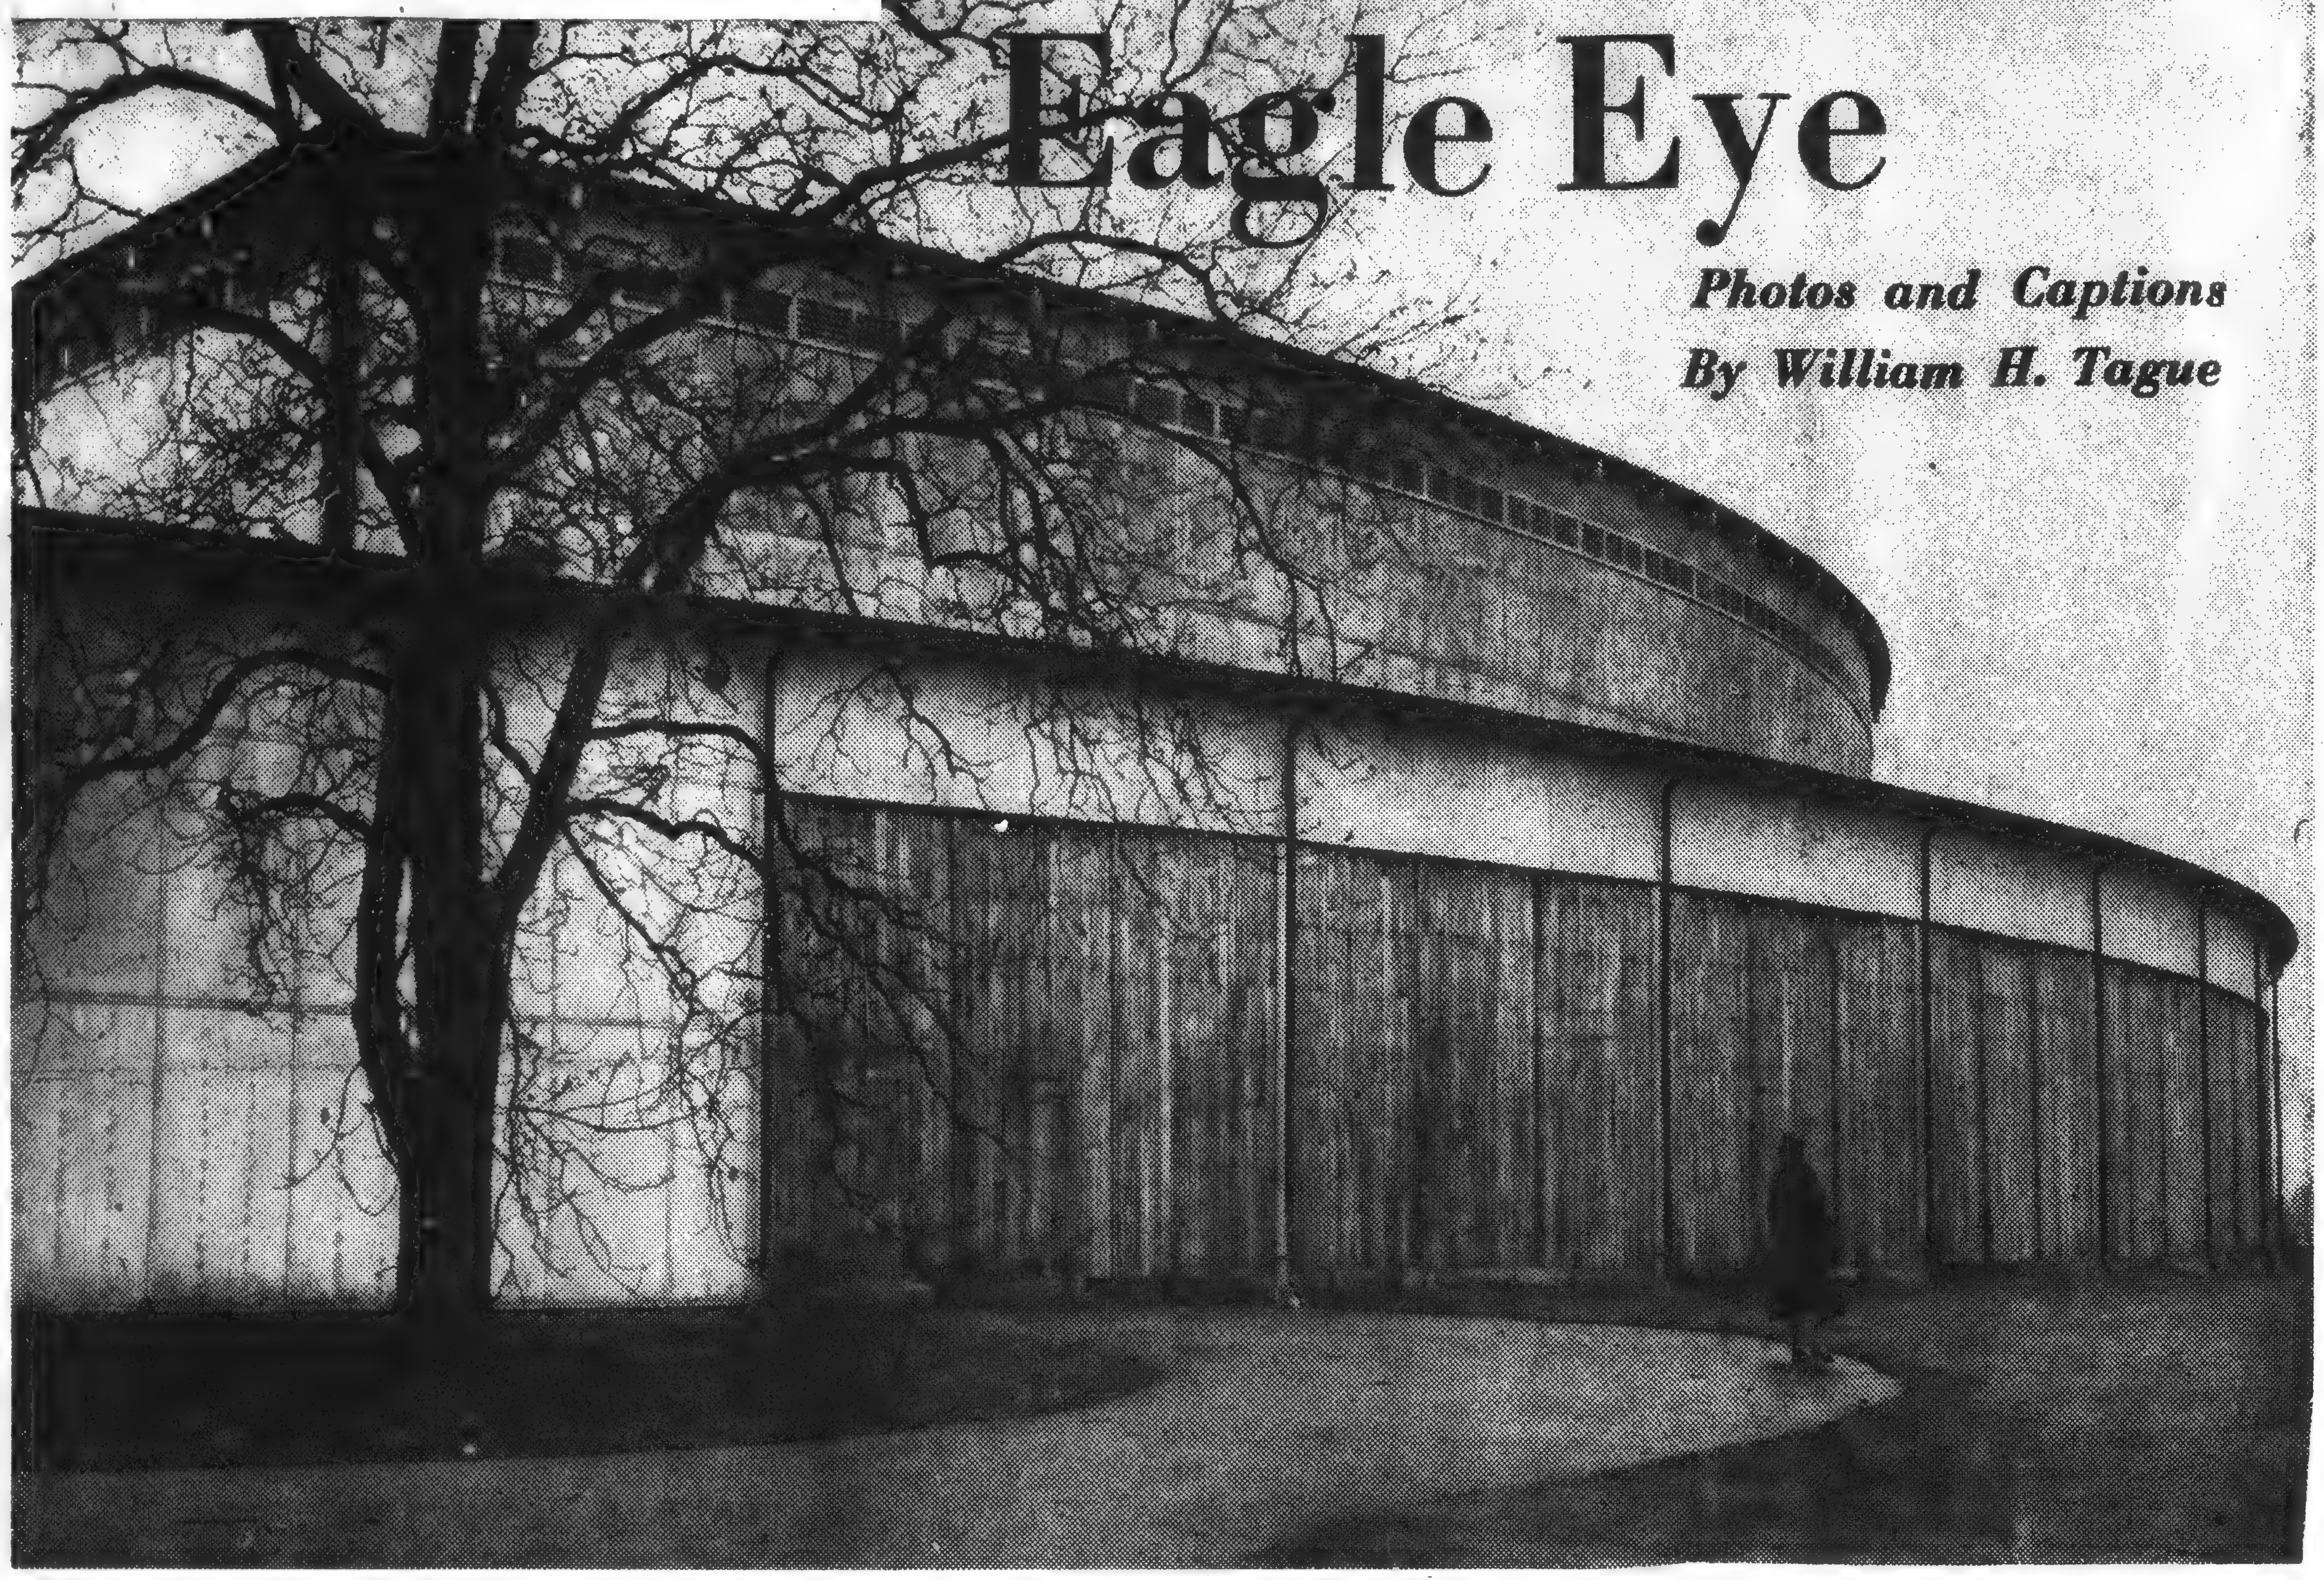
Stunning Performance

The vivaldi concerto in D minor is surely one of the glories of this literature and this stunning performance explored fully its rich sonorities, sustained the poetic flow of its lovely largo and bristled with a brilliant virtuosity in the final allegro. Altogether we have never enjoyed Charles Munch's conducting more than we did in this varied lot of pieces. After intermission the chorus, five student soloists, and the orchestra performed Lalande's "De Profundis" under the direction of Hugh Ross.

This afternoon the Juilliard string quartet attracted the largest audience we have ever seen assembled at a South Mountain concert. They held the audience spellbound in quartets by Mozart, Beethoven and Debussy. We shall write at greater length of their marvelous playing later.

Eagle Eye

Photos and Captions
By William H. Tague



MUTE POINT: The vast, pie-shaped Music Shed at Tanglewood looms silently under wraps awaiting summertime and return of music lovers attending the Berkshire Festival. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play here on three week ends in July and August for many thousands of visitors.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUN 20 1952

Changes Made In Program of Festival Music

Tanglewood, Lenox, June 19—A change in the order of the programs for the Berkshire Festival, with a slight change in the works to be played, is announced by Charles Munch, the conductor. The revision will affect only the first concerts in the theater-concert hall by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Programs for July 13, 19 and 20 and for the major Festival in the shed beginning July 24, remain as previously announced.

The revised programs read as follows:

Saturday Evening, July 5
Bach .... "The Musical Offering"
Bach .... Concerto for Two Violins (Ruth Posselt, Richard Burgin, Soloists)
Bach .... Suite No. 3, in D major

Sunday Afternoon, July 6
Handel ...... Concerto Grosso in A minor for Strings, Op. 6, No. 4
Dittersdorf .... Symphony in C major
C. P. E. Bach .... Symphony No. 5, in B minor
J. S. Bach .... Cantata No. 140 ("Wachet auf, ruft uns die Stimme," conducted by Hugh Ross)

Saturday Evening, July 12
Rameau .... Suite from "Dardanus"
Couperin .... Concert dans le gout theatral
Purcell .... Fantasia in A, for Strings
Vivaldi ...... Concerto Grosso in D minor, Op. 3, No. 11
Lalande .. "De Profundis," for Chorus and Orchestra (conducted by Hugh Ross)

The opening program becomes all-Bach by the substitution of "The Musical Offering" for C. P. E. Bach's Symphony No. 5. The July 6 program is postponed in toto to July 12. In its place will be played the Handel and Dittersdorf originally planned and the two numbers deleted from the July 5 program.

Tickets for all concerts are on sale at the box office at Tanglewood, Lenox, to which may be addressed inquiries on the Festival and events at the Berkshire Music Center, the summer school of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
JUL 20 1952

Tanglewood Trippers Advised to Bring Lunch

The Berkshire Music Festival-Tanglewood Trip being sponsored by the YWCA will leave Sunday, the 27th at 11.30 a. m. All are advised to bring a snack for the return trip. All reservations must be in by Tuesday. Tickets are for the shed and all seats are reserved, but registrations are limited. For more information call 2-3121 at anytime.

AT TANGLEWOOD

INGOLF DAHL

Ingolf Dahl of the music faculty of the University of California will head the Tanglewood Study Group, a new department of the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school. More than 100 students, teachers and amateur musicians will spend two, four or six weeks studying and participating in the performance of music from the Baroque period to the present. The school will open June 29.

NY TIMES -

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL THEATRE CONCERT HALL
Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

TODAY, 3 P. M. Members of Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch; Ruth Posselt, Richard Burgin, violinists.
Concerto Grosso in A minor for strings, Op. 6, No. 4 .... Handel
Symphony in C .... Dittersdorf
Symphony No. 5 .... C. P. E. Bach
Cantata No. 140, Wachet auf, ruft uns die Stimme (conducted by Hugh Ross). Bach

SATURDAY, 8:15 P. M. Members of Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Mr. Munch.
Suite from Dardanus .... Rameau
Concert dans le gout theatral ... Couperin
Fantasia in A, for strings .... Purcell
Concerto Grosso in D minor, Op. 3, No. 11 .... Vivaldi
De Profundis, for chorus and orchestra (conducted by Hugh Ross) ...... Lalande

NEXT SUNDAY, 3 P. M. Members of Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Mr. Munch.
Symphony in E flat, No. 39; Symphony in G minor, No. 40; Symphony in C, No. 41 .... Mozart

---

HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR
JUN 27 1952

BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER TO OPEN THIS WEEK END

The the opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center this Sunday (June 29) at 4 p. m. the first school performance will be given Friday evening July 4 at 8:15, when for the first time the symphony orchestra of talented students will play together. The first of six weekly chamber music concerts will be given in the chamber music hall Sunday morning (July 6) at 10, and in the evening at 8:15 the first composers' forum will be held, when the works of those studying with Aaron Copland, Luigi Dallapiccola and Lukas Foss will be performed by their fellow students, and commented upon. Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, whose contributions help to support it, are invited to all performances at the school.

Tickets are available at the box office for all festival concerts, including the early series. Programs for the festival and calendars of events at the school, with information on joining the Friends Society, will be mailed on request to Tanglewood.

Week's calendar of events at Tanglewood:

Sunday, June 30 at 4 p. m., Opening exercises of 10th session of Berkshire Music Center.

Friday, July 4 at 8:15 p. m., Symphony concert by student orchestra.

Saturday, July 5 at 8:15 p. m., Opening concert of Berkshire Festival in theatre concert hall by members of Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor.

Sunday, July 6, at 10 a. m., Chamber music concert at Berkshire Music Center.

At 3 p. m., Concert in theatre concert hall by members of Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor.

At 8:25 p. m. Composers' forum at Berkshire Music Center.

in

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUN 21 1952

SEASON OF 1952 MOST PROMISING AT TANGLEWOOD

Munch, Monseux and Bernstein Will Share Conducting Honors This Year

By WILLARD M. CLARK

The season of 1952 at Tanglewood promises to eclipse in brilliance some of the past seasons when programs were more or less those one might hear in a concert hall during any winter season. Charles Munch, Pierre Monteux and Leonard Bernstein will share conducting honors, with the last named conducting the annual Koussevitzky Memorial Concert on Aug. 9.

Program Enlarged

It is noted that the scope of the Theater-Concret Hall programs have been enlarged. While Bach and Mozart will get their just due, such other composers as Handel, Dittersdorf, C. P. E. Bach, Rameau, Couperin, Purcell, Vivalid, and others, will be included. This will tend to a welcome variety.

These concerts will be held Saturday nights at 8:15 and Sunday afternoons at 3 for three week ends commencing July 5. The complete programs for these concerts are as follows:

Saturday Evening, July 5
Bach .... "The Musical Offering"
Bach .... Concerto for Two Violins (Ruth Posselt, Richard Burgin)
Bach .... Suite No. 3 ,in D major

Sunday Afternoon, July 6
Handel .... Concerto Grosso in A minor for Strings, Op. 6, No. 4
Dittersdorf .... Symphony in C major
C. P. E .Bach .... Symphony No. 5, in B minor
J. S. Bach .... Cantata No. 140 "Wachet auf, ruft uns die Stimme" (Conducted by Hugh Ross)

Saturday Evening, July 12
Rameau .... Suite from "Dardanus"
Couperin .. Concert dans le gout theatral
Purcell ...... Fantasia in A, for Strings
Vivaldi .. Concerto Grosso in D minor, Op. 3 ,No. 11
Lalande .. "De Profundis," for Chorus and Orchestra (Conducted by Hugh Ross)

Sunday Afternoon, July 13
Mozart .... Symphony in E-flat, No. 39
Mozart .. Symphony in G minor, No. 40
Mozart .. Symphony in C major ("Jupiter") No. 41

Saturday Evening, July 19
Mozart .. Litaniae, for Chorus and Orchestra (K. 125) (Conducted by Hugh Ross)
Mozart .... Piano Concerto in C major (K. 467) (Lukas Foss)
Schubert .... Mass in G major

Sunday Afternoon, July 20
Haydn ...... Symphony No. 99, in E-flat
Haydn .. Symphony No. 86, in D major
Schubert .... Mass in G major

The Shed Concerts

Charles Munch will open the Shed Concert Thursday evening, July 24, playing two symphonies, "Symphony No. 3" by Beethoven and "Symphony No. 1" by Brahms.

Saturday night, July 26, Pierre Monteux will conduct, playing the Overture to "The Secret Marriage" by Cimarosa; Schubert's "Symphony No. 7 in C major," and "The Rites of Spring" by Stravinsky.

The Sunday afternoon program, July 27, will find Charles Munch giving his readings of a Symphonic Piece from "The Redemption" by Franck; "Symphony in G major," Bizet; "Three Prisoners Songs," with chorus, by Dallapiccola, and the two "Daphne and Chloe" suites by Ravel. The chorus will also be used in these suites.

Series B will open Thursday evening, July 31, with Charles Munch conducting. The program starts with the overture to "Leonora, No. 3" by Beethoven. Nicole Henriot, pianist, will be heard in the Schumann "Concerto for Piano and Orchestra." Hindemith's "Metamorphosis on Themes of Weber" and the "Symphony on a Mountain Air" by D'Indy will complete the program.

The second concert, Saturday evening, Aug. 2, will be conducted by Pierre Monteux and will be an all-Wagner program, with soloists to be announced.

The final concert of Series B, on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 3, will be directed by Charles Munch and the program includes the Overture to "Egmont" by Beethoven, and the same composer's "Symphony No. 8." Then follows "Iberia" by Debussy and "Dance of Death," with chorus, by Honegger.

Series C opens Thursday evening with Mr. Munch conducting. For this program he has chosen the "Spring" symphony by Schumann; Swanson's "Short Symphony" and Tschaikowsky's "Symphony No. 4."

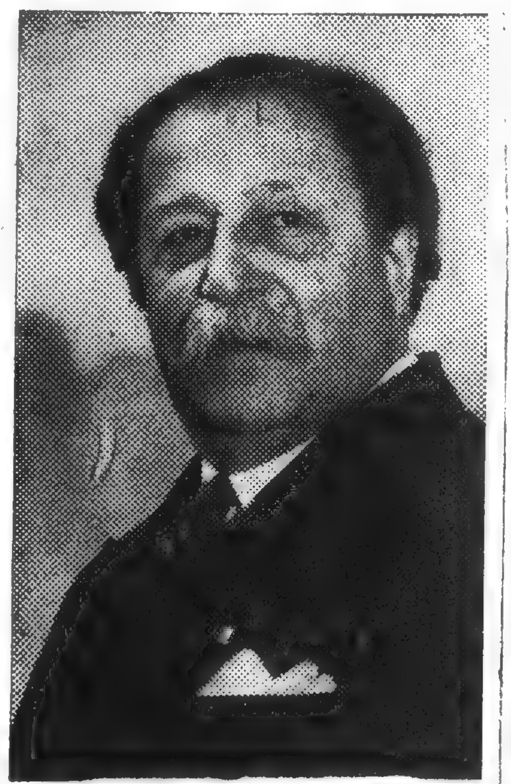
Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Koussevitzky Memorial Concert. The program will open with the Andante from "Concerto in D Major" by C. P. E. Bach; "Symphony No. 1" by Copland and "Symphony No. 5" by Sibelius.

in

Der Schauplatz des Berkshire Musikfestes

Die Theaterhalle und das Rasenvorgelände in Tanglewood

CHARLES MUNCH,
Musikdirektor der Berkshire Festwochen



PIERRE MONTEUX
dirigiert zwei Konzerte in Tanglewood

Berkshire Musikfest beginnt am 5. Juli in Tanglewood

Von FRED LOW

Das Berkshire Musikfest wird Samstag, 5. Juli, mit einem Bachkonzert im Theater in Tanglewood eröffnet; das Berkshire Music Center beginnt seine sechs Wochen umfassenden Kurse bereits am 30. Juni. Charles Munch ist der Leiter der Veranstaltungen und wird den Großteil der Konzerte im Theater und in der Freilufthalle dirigieren, er hat auch die Direktion der Klassen des Music Center übernommen. Das Orchester der Konzerte im Theater ist ein Kammerensemble aus Musikern der Boston Symphonie gebildet und in den Veranstaltungen der Freilufthalle wirkt das komplette Boston Symphonie Orchester mit. Hugh Ross leitet einige Chorwerke, die im Rahmen der Festwochen zur Aufführung kommen und vom Festival Chorus gesungen werden. Pierre Monteux wurde eingeladen, zwei Konzerte in der Freilufthalle zu dirigieren und Leonard Bernstein leitet das "Koussevitzky Gedächtnis-Konzert" Samstag, 9. August.

Die Kammerorchester-Konzerte

Charles Munch ist von der bisherigen Gepflogenheit, die Kammerorchesterkonzerte nur den zwei Komponisten Bach und Mozart zu widmen, abgegangen und bringt im Eröffnungskonzert dieser Serie Samstag, 5. Juli, 8.15 Uhr, ein Bach-Programm mit dem "Musikalischen Opfer", dem Konzert für zwei Geigen (Solisten Ruth Posselt und Richard Burgin) und der Suite Nr. 3 in D-Dur. Im Sonntag-Nachmittagskonzert, 6. Juli, kommen Kompositionen von Händel, Dittersdorf, Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach, dem Sohn des deutschen Meisters zur Aufführung; Hugh Ross leitet den Vortrag der Bach-Kantate Nr. 140 "Wachet auf, ruft uns die Stimme". Auch das Programm des Konzertes am Samstag, den 12. Juli, enthält Werke verschiedener Komponisten (Rameau, Couperin, Purcell, Vivaldi und Lalande); Hugh Ross ist der Dirigent von Lalandes "De Profundis" für Chor und Orchester. Sonntag, 13. Juli, nachmittags, kommen ausschließlich Werke von Mozart zum Vortrag; die Symphonien Nr. 39 in Es, Nr. 40 in G-moll und Nr. 41 C-Dur (Jupiter). Die beiden letzten Konzerte dieser Serie bringen am Samstag, den 19. Juli, Mozarts "Litaniae" für Chor und Orchester (K. 125), geleitet von Hugh Ross, das Klavierkonzert C-Dur von Mozart (K. 467), Solist Lukas Foss, und die Messe in G-Dur von Franz Schubert; das Sonntagsprogramm ist den beiden Symphonien von Haydn Nr. 99 und Nr. 86 sowie der Wiederholung der Schubert-Messe gewidmet. — Charles Munch hatte ursprünglich für die beiden ersten Konzerte der Serie ein anderes Programm bestimmt, in dem zwei Werke zeitgenössischer Komponisten zur Aufführung hätten kommen sollen; er hat die Abänderung vorgenommen, um die Einheitlichkeit des Programms zu wahren.

Die Konzerte der Freilufthalle

Die Konzerte des kompletten Boston Symphonie-Orchesters in der Freilufthalle werden Donnerstag, den 24. Juli, 8.15 Uhr, eröffnet; zur Aufführung kommen die Symphonien No. 3 (Eroica) von Beethoven und No. 1 C-Moll von Brahms. Pierre Monteux leitet die Veranstaltung Samstag, 26. Juli; er hat durch die Wahl seines Programms den Wunsch zahlreicher Hörer erfüllt, nochmals Stravinskys "Le Sacre du printemps", mit welchem Werk er vor kurzem anläßlich des Gastspiels der Bostoner in Paris wahre Triumphe feierte, nun auch in Tanglewood zu dirigieren. Schuberts C-Dur Symphonie (No. 7) und eine Ouvertüre Cimarosas ergänzen das Programm. Pierre Monteux erscheint zum erstenmal in diesem Konzert in Tanglewood. Sonntag, 27. Juli, nachmittags 3 Uhr, dirigiert Charles Munch Cesar Francks symphonisches Stück "Redemption", Bizets Symphonie C-Dur und Ravels Suites No. 1 und 2 "Daphnis et Chloe" (mit Chor); Hugh Ross leitet die Wiedergabe des Chorwerkes von Dallapiccola "Three Prisoners Song". — Das folgende Wochenende bringt im Donnerstag-Konzert, 31. Juli, Hindemiths "Metamorphosis über Themen von Weber" D'Indys "Symphony on a Mountain Air" und Beethovens Ouvertüre "Leonore No. 3"; Nicole Henriot ist Solistin in Schumanns Klavierkonzert. — Pierre Monteux hat für sein zweites Konzert, Samstag, 2. August, ein Wagnerprogramm gewählt; zur Aufführung kommen Vorspiel und Liebestod aus "Tristan und Isolde", Wotans Abschied und Feuerzauber aus "Walküre", die Schlußszene aus "Siegfried" und die Brünhilden-Szene des letzten Aktes aus "Götterdämmerung". Die mitwirkenden Solisten werden in einigen Tagen genannt werden. Honeggers "Danse des Morts" (mit Chor) steht im Mittelpunkt des Konzertes Sonntag, 3. August; das Programm wird durch Debussys "Iberia" und Beethovens Ouvertüre zu "Egmont" sowie achte Symphonie ergänzt. — Die vom New York Music Circle preisgekrönte "Short Symphony" Howard Swansons, Schumanns Frühlingssymphonie und Tschaikowskys Symphonie No. 4 werden Donnerstag, den 7. August, gespielt.

Leonard Bernstein hat für das "Gedenk-Konzert Koussevitzky" folgendes Programm gewählt: C. P. E. Bache, Andante aus dem Concerto D-Dur, Coplands Symphonie No. 3 und Sibelius Symphonie No. 5. Serge Koussevitzky gebührt der Hauptanteil an dem großen Erfolg der Berkshire Musikfeste; er war der Begründer dieser Konzertveranstaltungen und hat durch die Förderung der zeitgenössischen Musik einer großen Zahl junger Komponisten die Gelegenheit zur Aufführung ihrer Werke geboten. Ohne Koussevitzky, der durch viele Jahre der Hauptdirigent des Boston Symphonie-Orchesters gewesen ist, wäre Tanglewood kaum mehr als ein Projekt geworden. Leonard Bernstein, einer der Hauptschüler des berühmten Dirigenten, hat erst vor kurzem im Musikfest der Brandeis Universität ein Konzert dem Gedächtnis Koussevitzkys gewidmet; er hat die Gelegenheit zur Ehrung seines Meisters gerne ergriffen, nun auch im Rahmen der Berkshire Musikwochen ein Programm Serge Koussevitzky zu weihen. — Die Schlußveranstaltung des Musik-Festes Sonntag, den 10. August, bringt die Totenmesse von Hector Berlioz, die, mit Ausnahme einer Aufführung der National Orchestral Association in New York, schon seit vielen Jahren nicht zu hören war.

Berkshire Music Center

Das Berkshire Music Center wird von Boston Symphonie Orchester im Zusammenhang mit den Veranstaltungen des Musikfestes, erhalten. Der Lehrkörper des Center besteht aus 20 Mitgliedern des Bostoner Ensembles sowie Aaron Copland als stellvertretenden Direktor und Leiter der Kompositionskurse, Leonard Bernstein für die Kapellmeisterschule, William Kroll Leiter der Kammermusikklassen (in Abwesenheit von Gregor Piatigorsky), Hugh Ross für Chorgesang und Boris Goldovsky als Leiter der Opernklasse. Luigi Dallapiccola kommt von Italien, um Kurse in Komposition zu leiten. Die Verleihung von Stipendien wird in wesentlich größerem Umfang als bisher vorgenommen werden; es werden begabte Musikstudenten ohne Rücksich auf Zahlung von Beiträgen für die Kurse zum Studium herangezogen und neue Kurse für allgemeine Musik, Musikerziehung und Amateure eröffnet. Das genaue Programm der Aufführungen des Music Center ist im Augenblick, da diese Zeilen geschrieben werden, noch nicht erschienen, doch sind eine Reihe von Opernvorstellungen, Kammermusik und Chorkonzerte sowie Aufführungen des Studentenorchesters geplant. Die Veranstaltungen des Berkshire Music Center sind für die "Gesellschaft der Freunde des Berkshire Music Center" zugänglich. Diese Aufführungen bilden einen wesentlichen Bestandteil des Musikfestes und geben einen guten Überblick über die Tätigkeit und Fortschritte der Musikstudenten; viele, heute bekannte Künstler haben im Rahmen der Veranstaltungen in Tanglewood debutiert und dort ihre solistische Laufbahn begründet. Wir werden über die Aufführungen des Berkshire Musikfestes und des Music Center berichten.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AY 11 1952

Full Summer Of Arts Again In Berkshires

Little Music Season Opens July 5; Dance Festival on June 27; Plays on June 16

By Richard V. Happel

PITTSFIELD, Mass.

Ski tow ropes have been coiled away, the wooden shutters that enclose the Tanglewood Music Shed have come down, and the new season in the Berkshires is about to start. As usual, the biggest attraction will be the Berkshire Music Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Six concerts again will be presented in the small theater across the lawns from the Music Shed at Tanglewood. These new "little seasons" are becoming more popular each year, and for this summer the programs will be devoted to works of Bach, Mozart, Haydn and Schubert. They will take place Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, starting July 5 and 6 with Bach; July 12 and 13, Mozart and July 19 and 20 with Haydn and Schubert. Charles Munch will conduct all three week ends.

Nine concerts will be played in the Music Shed, starting July 24 with Beethoven's Symphony No. 3, and Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C minor with Mr. Munch conducting. Pierre Monteux will lead the orchestra July 26 with Cimorosa overture, "The Secret Marriage"; Schubert Symphony No. 9 in C major, and Stravinsky's, "The Rite of Spring." July 27 Mr. Munch will take the podium to lead the Franck symphonic piece from "The Redemption"; Bizet's Symphony; Dellapiccola's, "The Release of Savonarola"; and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe, Suites 1 and 2."

July 31 Mr. Munch will again lead the orchestra, in Beethoven's overture to "Leonora. No. 3"; Schuman's piano concerto; Hindemith's Metamorphosis; and D'Indy's Symphony on a Mountain Air. Mr. Monteux will lead again Aug. 2 in an all-Wagnerian program with soloists to be announced later. On Aug. 3 Mr. Munch will lead with Beethoven's overture to "Egmont" and Symphony No. 8; and Honegger's "Danse des Morts."

The final series will open Aug. 7 with Mr. Munch conducting Schumann's Symphony No. 1; Swanson's Short Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4. For the middle program, Aug. 9, Leonard Bernstein will conduct symphonies by Aaron Copland (No. 3) and the Sibelius No. 5. The season will close Aug. 10 with Mr. Munch conducting the Berlioz Requiem, with chorus.

Stockbridge the

MILLERTON, N.Y.
NEWS-REPUBLICAN
MAY 29 1952

Tanglewood Group Invites Composers Of New Works

The Tanglewood Study Group, a department of the Berkshire Music Center, is inviting composers of new works, easy enough to be read at sight, or nearly so, to submit them for possible performance at Tanglewood this season. Under the direction of Ingolf Dahl, since 1945 associate professor of music at the University of Southern California, professional and non-professional music lovers will delve for two, four or six weeks into the realm of musical repetrtoire that is largely outside of that of the other departments at Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In addition to works of Lully, Vivaldi, Johann Christian Bach and early Haydn, which are easy without being trivial or perfunctory, they will perform contemporary music, easy in the same sense, if it is possible to obtain them.

Aaron Copland, who is the assistant director of the School, is sending out a call for compositions for the new project, as follows: "The preferred form is that of the chamber cantata for 30 to 50 mixed voices (including solo singers, if wanted) and a small orchestra of unspecified instrumentation. The instrumental parts should be grouped into nothing more definite than 'high, middle and low' instruments with parts in Bb, F. Bb basso, alto clef, etc. provided wherever feasible. Indications such as 'strings only', 'woodwind only', 'brass only' (in the sense of options within the continuous parts) may be helpful to overcome the possibility of monotony by constant doubling."

Composers having works to submit are requested to describe their length and nature in a letter addressed to Mr. Dahl at Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass.

The director of the group, whose main concern is "to encourage active musical participation of the music lover and the development of wider and higher tastes", was born in Germany of Swedish parents. After studying in Europe and serving as associate conductor of the Municipal Opera in Zurich he worked as arranger and pianist in Hollywood radio and film studios. A composer of chamber and orchestral music he received the award for 1950 of the Society for the Publication of American Music and in 1951 a Guggenheim fellowship for musical composition. As pianist and conductor he has been active in the performance of contemporary music on the West Coast, introducing works by Schoenberg, Stravinsky, Ives, Copland, Foss, and Cowell. He believes that through cultivating a more natural and sympathetic attitude toward pre-classical music a similar attitude will result toward contemporary composers. The enrollment list is still open for the course.

"Titus" Will be Tanglewood Feature

"Titus," the opera which Mozart wrote in the last year of his life and the only "opera seria" of his maturer years, is announced by Boris Goldovsky as the major production of the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood this summer. "Titus" (La Clemenza di Tito) will then have what will probably be its first complete production in America. There will be two performances on August 4th and 5th at Tanglewood to which Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be invited. The score of "Titus," parts of which will be brought from Europe, consist of an overture and 25 numbers in 3 acts. The score is entirely by Mozart except for certain recitative passages in which he was helped by Suessmayer. There are to be no cuts in this production, although the text, which is being translated into English by Mr. Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell, has been slightly revised.

A feature of the production will be a new scenic plan in which an elaborate mechanism for projection by slides, the invention of Paul Planer, will be used. Planer's invention has been used in the larger opera houses in Europe with conspicuous success. It permits spectacle effects in such scenes as the burning and destruction of a palace in this opera. The scenery is being designed by Charles Elson.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN

JUN 28 1952

Tanglewood Bows in Tonight

By ROBERT BAGAR.

Well, the Berkshire Music Festival gets under way tonight in the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood. This is the first of six events, on three consecutive weekends, which precede the Symphonic Festival itself. That starts on Thursday evening, July 24.

Charles Munch, who conducts this evening, has selected an all-Bach program. Featured soloists will be Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, and his wife Ruth Posselt, noted violinist. They will be heard, together with a band recruited from the Boston, in the Concerto for Two Violins and Orchestra. To open the concert, there will be a performance of "The Musical Offering." And proceedings close with the Suite No. 3, in D major.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

JUN 12 1952

Summer Staff at Tanglewood Includes Many From Berkshire

TANGLEWOOD—Twelve Berkshire County residents have been appointed to the summer staff at Tanglewood. Seventeen permanent members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra managerial staff at Symphony Hall are transferring their activities to the orchestra's summer home for from 3 to 10 weeks. The remainder of the staff of 50 odd in the Tanglewood offices are teachers, students or musicians who come to spend the summer in an atmosphere of music while they work.

From Berkshire County are Spencer P. Kennard, in charge of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, and his assistant, Roger Hinman, teachers at Lenox Preparatory School; Miss Josephine Testa of 71 Stoddard Avenue, James P. Reynolds, principal of Allendale School and Robert Edwards, a high school teacher, and for two weeks, Mrs. Priscilla Edwards Fitch, all in the box office; Mrs. George W. Edman in the press office; Miss Heidi Bakker of Great Barrington, assistant to the registrar, and Ross Edman in the school office; Rodman C. Henry Jr. of 19 Bartlett Avenue, assistant equipment custodian; Willard M. Sistare, director of ushers; and Charles VanWynbergen of West Stockbridge, library assistant.

Boston Personnel

Headed by George E. Judd, orchestra manager, with Thomas D. Perry Jr., assistant manager as executive secretary of the school, the Boston personnel includes John Burk, program director; James A. Brosnehan, treasurer; Miss Lillian MacDougall, secretary to the manager; Miss Jean Fraser, school secretary; Miss Edith Bossler, registrar; Allan Smith, box office head; Miss Katherine Mealey, telephone operator; Leonard Berkatt, librarian; Miss Dorothy Sullivan and Miss Irene MacKenzie of the treasurer's office; Miss Peggy Burk, orchestra personnel secretary and Harvey Genereux, equipment custodian.

On the summer staff are: Gail Rector of the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, assistant to the school executive; Mrs. Frank Patterson of Winnetka, Ill., custodian of the lake front and student adviser; Joseph LaPlante of Salem, in charge of the store, assisted by Mrs. Celia Salata of Peabody and Ralph Pottle of Luisiana, musicians; Miss Elizabeth Burnett of Putnam, Conn., viola player with the Indiana Symphony Orchestra, and Ellery Woodworth of Cambridge, recent Harvard graduate, assistants in the library; Miss Anngenette Groton, teacher at the Rivers Country Day School, Boston, assistant telephone operator; Charles B. Milliken of Simsbury, Conn., recent Yale graduate, press office; and Herbert Stebbins of the staff of the Loomis School, Windsor, Conn., head steward.

Guides Named

Frank Patterson will again head the corps of guides for the grounds which includes: Charles Heard of Nonquit, Yale graduate; Kenneth Levy of Newark, N.Y., Princeton graduate recently returned from a year in Paris on a Fulbright grant who will join the music faculty at Princeton in the fall; Walter Brasert of Bloomfield, Ind., Charles Hoppin of New York and Peter Schultz, all Harvard students; William Andrews of Pelham, Amherst; Vernon Gotwals of Conshohocken, Pa., of the graduate school of Princeton who will teach at Smith College in the fall; Thomas Garven of Winnetka; William Vernon of Baltimore, and Charles Stuck, graduate of the Yale School of Music who has been teaching in Arkansas.

Charles Munch, conductor of the Berkshire Festival and director of the Music Center, and Aaron Copland, assistant director of the school, will arrive later in the month, as will the faculty except Ralph Berkowitz, the dean, of Philadelphia, who with his secretary, Miss Patsy Hayes, a student at the Curtis School of Music, came a week ago.

Festival tickets, memberships in the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center and information on the concerts and school curriculum are available at the offices at the Tanglewood gate. A calendar of events at the school, open to contributors to its support, is being prepared for distribution later in the month.

ANNOUNCEMENTS for 1952 and 1953
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
CHARLES MUNCH, Music Director
EUROPEAN TOUR Spring 1952
France, Holland, Belgium, Germany, England
Conductors, CHARLES MUNCH and PIERRE MONTEUX
BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL Summer of 1952
Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., July 5-Aug. 10
Conductors, CHARLES MUNCH, PIERRE MONTEUX, LEONARD BERNSTEIN
SUBSCRIPTION SERIES Season 1952/3
Boston, Cambridge, Providence, Brooklyn, New York, Washington
Conductors, CHARLES MUNCH, PIERRE MONTEUX and GUIDO CANTELLI
TRANSCONTINENTAL TOUR Spring 1953
Conductors, CHARLES MUNCH and PIERRE MONTEUX
Address inquiries to Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.
Baldwins Piano
R.C.A. Victor Records

Play Bach Concerto

(Plouffe Photo)

Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (Mr. and Mrs. Burgin), who played the solo parts in the Concerto for Two Violins on the all-Bach program that opened the Berkshire Festival in the Tanglewood theater, Lenox, last night.

Eagle 6/11/52

JUDD REPORTS: George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, gives a report at the Red Lion Inn, Stockbridge, on the recent BSO tour of Europe. He addressed members of the Tanglewood Advisory Committee and representatives of towns and cities in the Berkshires at a luncheon meeting yesterday. Later the group voted to plan a county-wide reception for the orchestra and conductor, Charles Munch, when the Music Shed concerts open at Tanglewood July 24.

(Continued on Page 13A)

Spfld Rep. July 6

RECORD AUDIENCE AT FIRST CONCERT AT TANGLEWOOD

3800 Give Munch and Boston Symphony Welcome at All-Bach Program

By VICTOR PRAHL

Lenox, July 5—With a perfect evening, including a full moon, a record audience of 3800 turned out for the opening concert at Tanglewood tonight. There was an extra warmth in their reception of the members of the Boston Symphony and their conductor, Charles Munch, in this first appearance after their successful European tour. Mr. Munch, just back from France, looked well rested and conducted with his usual youthful verve and the men of the orchestra seemed in top form.

All-Bach Program

The musical offering, which opened the all-Bach program, may not rate as one of the master's major works but listening to this rarely performed collection of pieces was almost in the nature of a novelty. Written for Frederick the Great and built on a theme given the composer by the king, it is essentially a theoretical work with its ricercare in three voices, different kinds of canons, and its fugure in six voices which is also called a ricercare. The orchestra lent charm to its six parts and gave a clear, telling exposition to this abundance of contrapuntal complexities. The six voiced fugure as heard in this performance was a thing of beauty, showing how a genius can pour poetry into a mathematical formula.

More relaxing to the ears was the concerto for two violins played by the orchestra's concert-master, Richard Burgin and his wife, Ruth Posselt. Miss Posselt's vigorous, forthright manner had free play in the animated first movement and Mr. Burgin's fine sense of lyricism came into its own in the beautiful largo.

Although both of these artists have their own distinct style and musicality, they understand each other, and succeeded in merging them in a performance that was expressive and well-balanced. Their brisk way with the lilting finale and their impeccable clarity in the rapid contrapuntal passages, won them an ovation at its finish. Mr. Munch and the orchestra who gave them a perfect accompaniment shared in the numerous recalls. The concert closed with the suite No. 3 in D. Major.

Music Lovers Enjoy Enchanted Evening

Lenox, July 5—A record audience of 3800 international music lovers enjoyed a truly enchanted evening on the moon-drenched grounds of Tanglewood tonight as the 15th season of the Berkshire Music Festival was launched. With the gates swung wide for the official opening program the summer throngs began to arrive as much as an hour and a half before concert time.

With an all-Bach program under the baton of Dr. Charles Munch, the theater-concert hall was soon filled to over-flowing and the audience spread far out onto the spacious lawns to hear the music of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra just recently returned from a great tour of Europe. Forty of the 48 states and at least 15 foreign countries were represented in the vast crowd that applauded long the work of the noted French conductor.

With the season now in full sway, a day-long program is in the offing for Sunday. The departmental chamber music will be given its first airing tomorrow morning at 10. The second of the concerts in the theater-concert hall tomorrow afternoon will be followed in the evening by a composers' forum in the chamber music hall at 8:15.

The first of the chamber music concerts of the season under the Elizabeth Coolidge Foundation will be offered Wednesday night at 8:15.

Tomorrow afternoon's concert too will have a real audience appeal for Hugh Ross will conduct the festival chorus in Bach's cantata "Wachet Auf, Ruft Uns Die Stimme." In that portion of the program preceding intermission, Dr. Munch will conduct the works of Handel, Dittersdorf and C. P. E. Bach.

NORWICH, CONN.
BULLETIN

JUN 30 1952

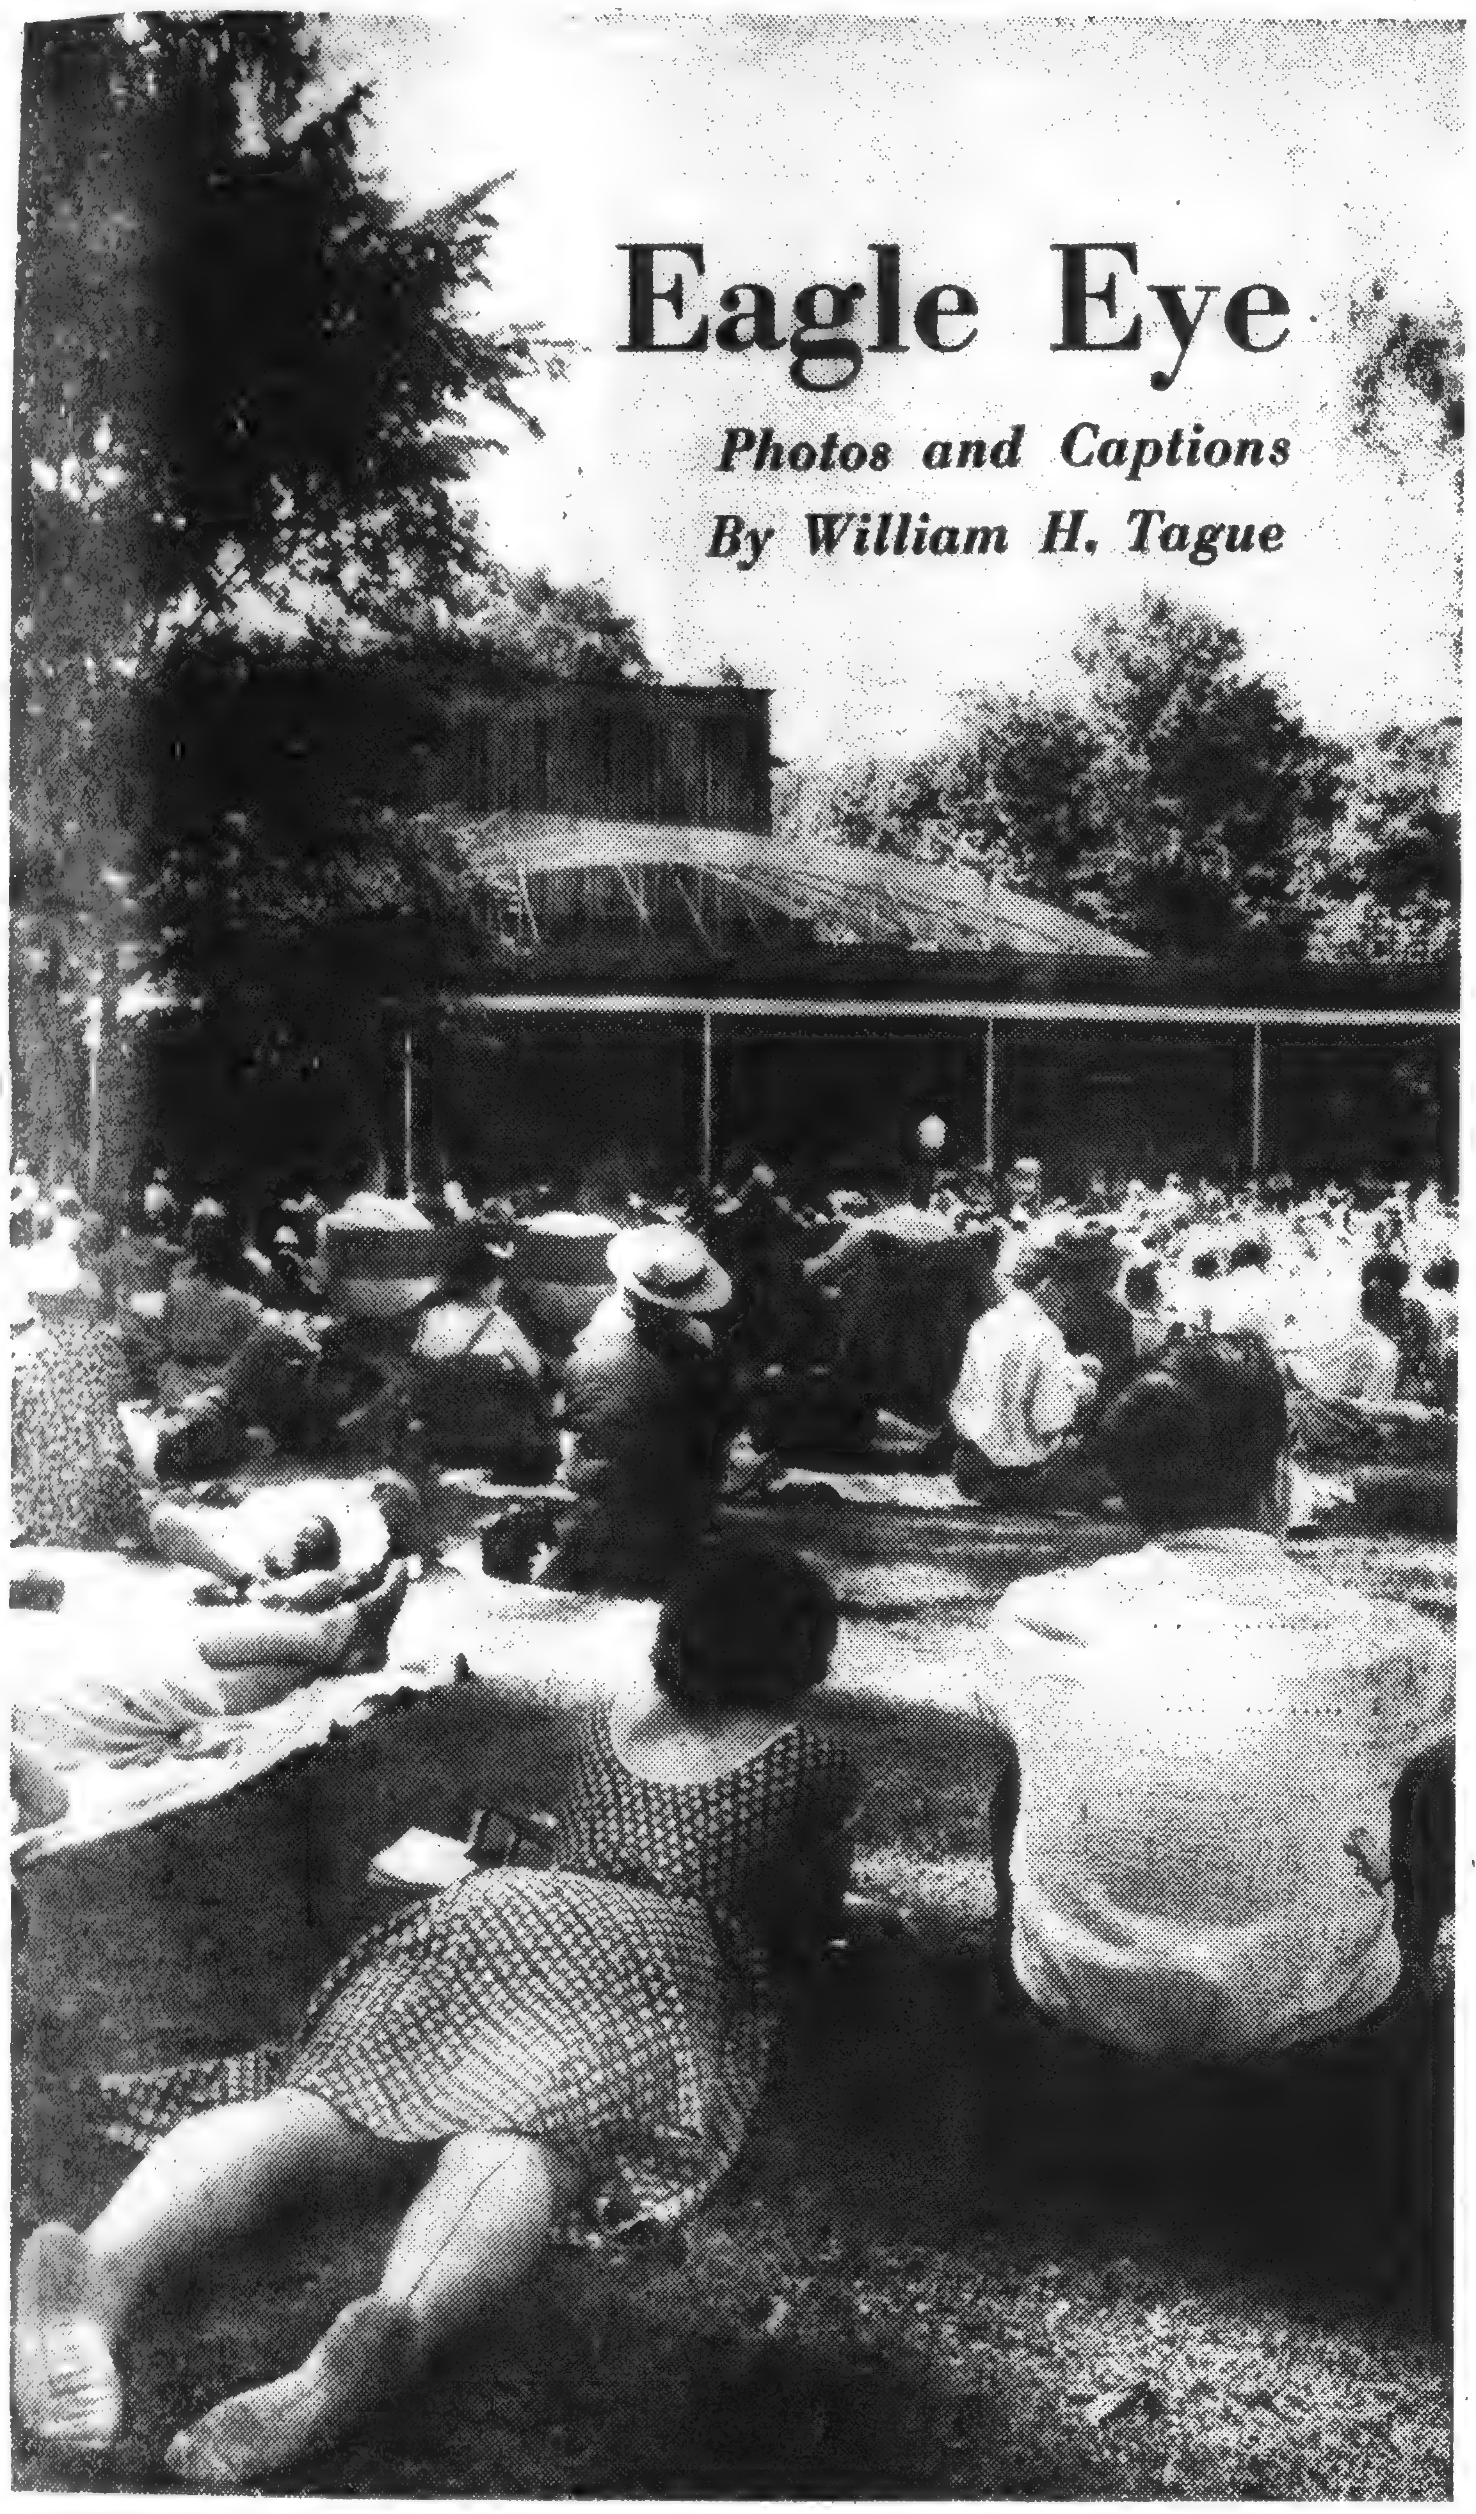
Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra and the Berkshire Music center, today opened [redacted] at Tanglewood.

[13]

Eagle Eye

Photos and Captions

By William H. Tague



LAWN PARTY: Music lovers at Tanglewood, the summer tourist magnet with the spacious lawns in Lenox, supinely hear a selection for strings played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra as concerts resume in the theatre-concert hall. A larget proportion of the fans prefer to stretch out and listen on the grass rather than take seats inside the hall, even though the acoustics aren't as good.

Berkshire Center's Tenth Year

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood will observe its 10th anniversary this season. An invitation to join the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, issued this week by Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman, asks for continued support from former members, solicits new ones, and lists some of the accomplishments of the 3,000 students who have attended one or more sessions of the six-week school inspired by the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Among the former students are :onductors, assistant conductors, ind players in major and minor ırchestras, six Metropolitan)pera and 20 New York City 'enter Opera Company singers, eaders of prominent choruses nd choirs, teachers, and music upervisors.

Members of the "Friends," as 1 former years, are invited to 1e 40 performances at the school. hey will include symphony conerts each Friday evening, beginning July 4, conducted by Leonrd Bernstein, Richard Burgin, harles Munch, and others; hamber music concerts on Sunay mornings under the superision of William Kroll; opera erformances under the direction f Boris Goldovsky, including vhat is believed to be the first ull stage presentation in this ountry of Mozart's "La Clemenza di Tito"; composers' forums Sunday evenings, with Aaron Copland as moderator; choral concerts prepared and conducted by Hugh Ross; song recitals and other events of interest to music lovers.

The invitation states that the contributions of the members are used for the maintenance of the school. It invites donations in any amount, adding that gifts of $150 or more will be added to the principal of the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund, which enables preprofessional musicians to have a summer at Tanglewood, tuition free.

Mr. Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is director of the school. Mr. Copland is assistant director; Ralph Berkowitz, dean; and Thomas D. Perry, Jr., executive secretary. Dr. Perry, headmaster emeritus of Phillips Academy, Exeter, and a trustee of the orchestra, has headed the Friends Society since its organization in 1946.

Contributions and requests for information should be sent to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston, until June 1, when the office will be transferred to Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

This Clipping From
TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE

JUN 8 - 1952

Mozart's Last Opera Set At Tanglewood

Special to The Blade

TANGLEWOOD, Mass., June 7 — "La Clemenza di Tito," which Mozart wrote in the last year of his life, and the only "opera seria" of his maturer years, will be the major production of the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center this summer. There will be two performances, Aug. 4 and 5, to which Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be invited.

The score, parts of which will be brought from Europe, consists of an overture and 25 numbers, in three acts. It is entirely by Mozart except for certain recitative passages, in which he was helped by Suessmayer. There are to be no cuts. The text, translated into English by Boris Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell, has been slightly revised. A new scenic plan, in which an elaborate mechanism for projection by slides, the invention of Paul Planer, will be used.

This Clipping From
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

JUN 1 - 1952

Music

TANGLEWOOD TO STAGE 'TITUS'

By RAYMOND MORIN

The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center will attempt to revitalize Mozart's dust-collecting opera "Titus" (La Clemenza di Tito) on August 4th and 5th at Tanglewood.

It is announced by Boris Goldovsky as the department's major production of the Summer. This will probably be its first complete performance in America, and an English translation of the Metastasio text is being prepared by Mr. Goldovsky and his assistant, Sarah Caldwell.

Unless the textbooks are unanimously wrong, it's going to take some doing to sustain interest in what Mozart authority, Marcia Davenport, describes as "a stiff, tiresome tragedy of the Italian vintage of Mozart's boyhood in Naples."

The opera was commissioned during Mozart's last year to serve as a festival opera for the coronation of Leopold II at Prague. Much as he disliked the assignment (he was cramped for time to finish "The Magic Flute" and the "Requiem") it was an invitation he felt he could not refuse.

It took 18 days of nerve-racking wor kto finish La Clemenza di Tito, and except for some of Mozart's loyal old friends, it was considered a failure.

This doesn't mean too much because according to historians, the Emperor and Empress were too much impressed with their coronation to pay much attention to Mozart's music.

In the Tanglewood performance, the score of "Titus," parts of which are being brought from Europe, will consist of an overture and 25 numbers in three acts. The score is entirely by Mozart except for certain recitative passages in which he was helped by Suessmayer. There are to be no cuts in this production.

A feature of the production will be a new scenic plan in which an elaborate mechanism for projection by slides, the invention of Paul Planer, will be used. Planer's invention has been used in the larger opera houses in Europe with success. It permits spectacle effects in such scenes as the burning and destruction of a palace in this opera.

Recalling what Goldovsky did with Mozart's "Idomeneo," also at Tanglewood in 1947, it's possible that "Titus" will gain a new lease on life after 161 years of seclusion.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

UN 6 - 1952

Tanglewood Chorus To Be Heard Today

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

Sarah Fleming, soprano, Shirley Winston, mezzo soprano, John McCollum, tenor and Richard Sharrets, bass, will be the soloists in Bach's Cantata No. 140 that Hugh Ross will conduct for the second half of the Berkshire Festival concert in the Tanglewood theatre this afternoon at 3 o'clock, with the Berkshire chorus and members of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Charles Munch will conduct the orchestra in the first half as he did in the all-Bach program with which the early festival opened last night. General admission will be sold for listening from the lawn, as in previous years. A few seats remain in the hall.

Haydn's Symphony No. 68, conducted by Robert Mandell of The Bronx, and the first and second movements of Hindemith's "Mathis de Maler," conducted by Lorin Maazel of Pittsburgh, Pa., will form the first half of Friday night's program by the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center. The second half will be devoted to the Cesar Franck Symphony, which the school's director, Charles Munch, will conduct.

The second student performance of the season will be at 10 a. m. next Sunday when the chamber music group will play Mozart's Quartet in G minor, and Piston's Quartet No. 3, prepared under the direction of William Kroll, and Schumann's Quintet in E flat, prepared under Alfred Zighera. Like the composers' forum that will be held Sunday evening at 8:15, the school concerts are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, which anyone may join by a voluntary gift towards the support of the school.

This Clipping From
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE

MAY 27 1952

Mozart's 'Titus' Major Opera At Berkshire Music Center

LENOX — "Titus," the opera which Mozart wrote in the last year of his life and the only "opera seria" of his maturer years, is announced by Boris Goldovsky as the major production of the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood this summer. "Titus" (La Clemenza di Tito) will then have what will probably be its first complete production in America. There will be two performances on Aug. 4 and 5 at Tanglewood to which Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be invited.

The score of "Titus," parts of which will be brought from Europe, consists of an overture and 25 numbers in three acts. The score is entirely by Mozart except for certain recitative passages in which he was helped by Suessmayer. There are to be no cuts in this production, although the text, which is being translated into English by Mr. Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell, has been slightly revised.

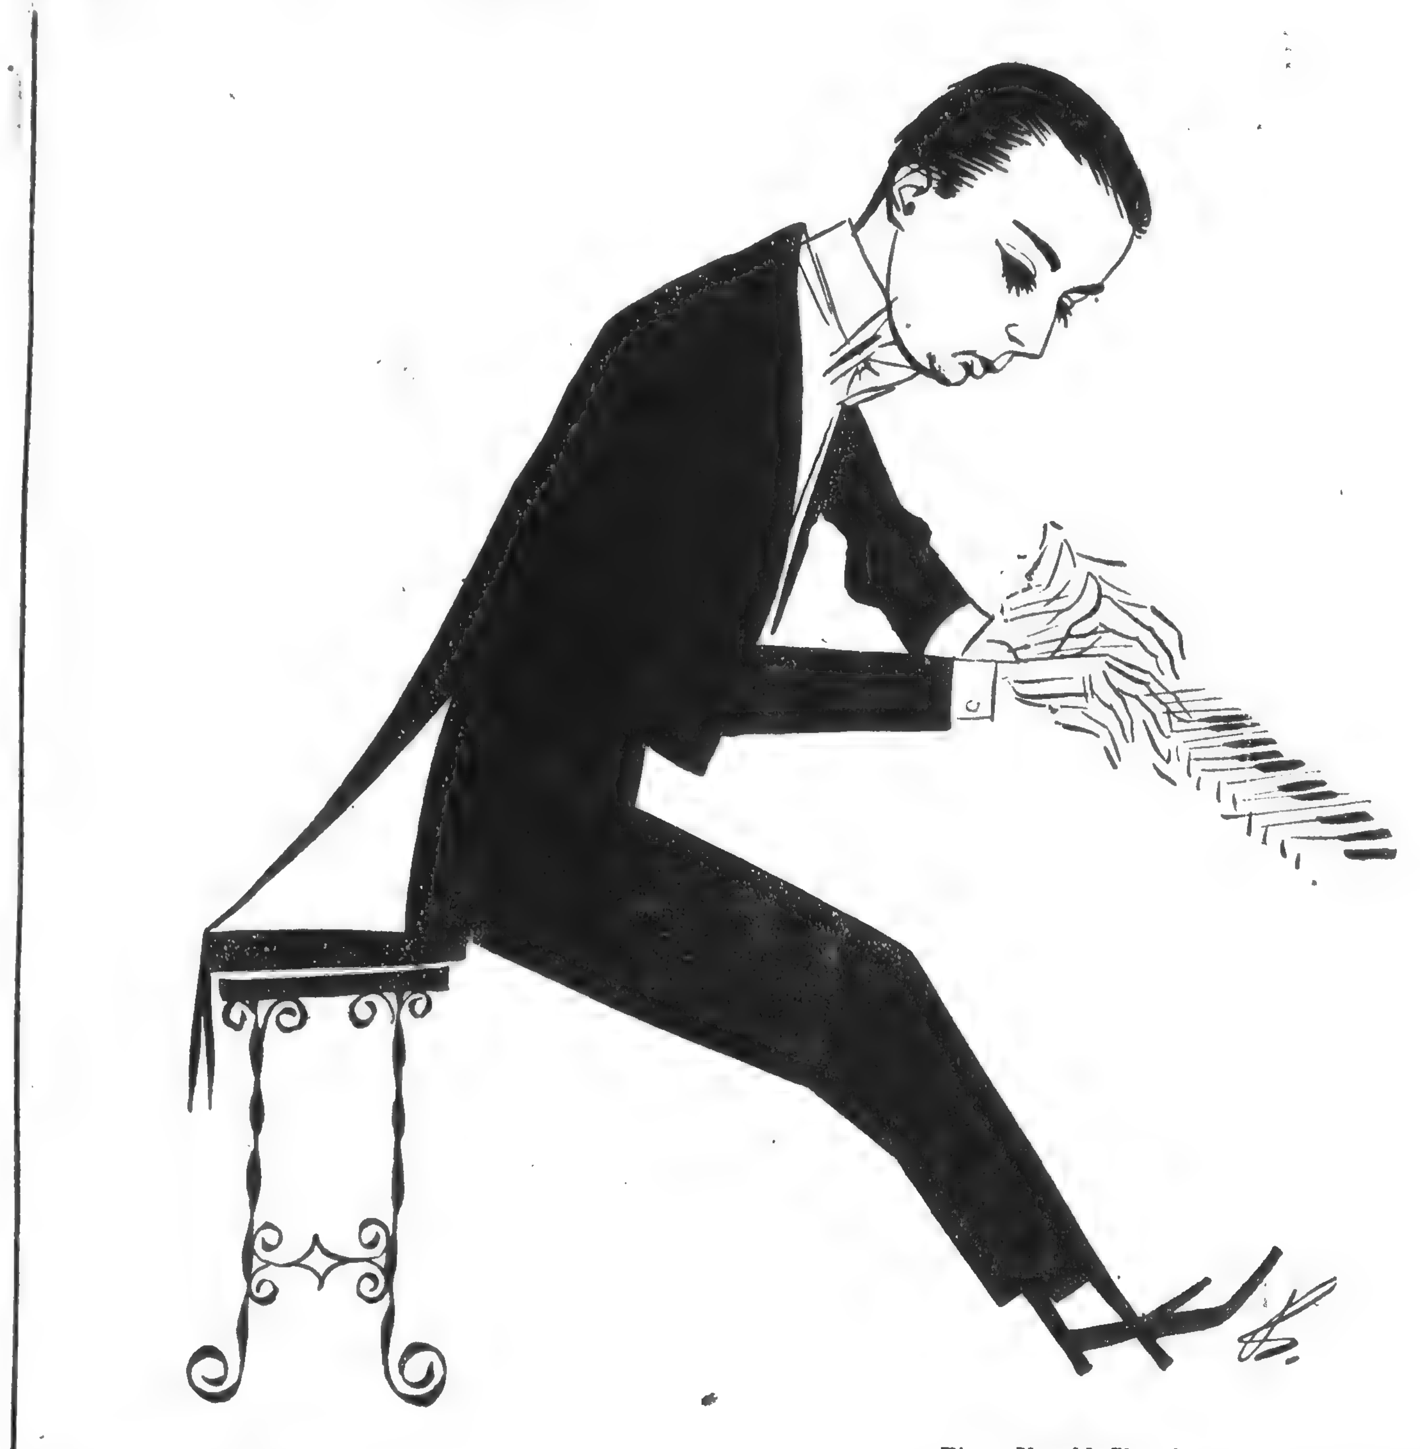
Permits Spectacle Effects

A feature of the production will be a new scenic plan in which an elaborate mechanism for projection by slides, the invention of Paul Planer, will be used. Planer's invention has been used in the larger opera houses in Europe with conspicuous success. It permits spectacle effects in such scenes as the burning and destruction of a palac in this opera. The scenery is bein designed by Charles Elson.

Miss Betty Coe Armstrong ha been appointed to the faculty of th Opera Department to teach sceni design, according to an announcement by Mr. Goldovsky. She ha taught stage design and lighting a Alabama College and Oklahom University, served as costume technician and assistant to the professo of costume design at Yale an taught at the Wellesley Colleg Summer Theatre. Designing scener and costumes at the Cape Theatre Cape May, N.J., Miss Coe worke as commercial artist for Scrugg Vandervoort-Barney of St. Louis Currently a free lance designer i New York, she assisted this seaso in the Broadway productions o "Anna Christie," and "Flight Int Egypt." At present she is workin on "La Boheme," with Donal Oenslager for Central City.

Like all student performances a Tanglewood, one full-length worl ("Titus) and several "evenings o opera" in the last weeks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summe school will be open to Friends o the Berkshire Music Center whos contributions help support th school. Contributions to the Friend Society and requests for information about the events of the sessio that will run from July 1 to Aug. 1 may be mailed to Tanglewood in Lenox.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES-HERALD
JUN 29 1952



Times-Herald Sketch by Brian Brown

Youth in Music:

Pianist Lipkin Fulfills a Prophecy

When Seymour Lipkin, the brilliant young virtuoso of the keyboard, played a recital at the age of 10 in his native Detroit he was not aware that seated beyond the footlights was one of the twentieth century's most celebrated men of music. The man was Percy Grainger, the famous Australian composer-pianist who had been drawn to the youth's concert by the wildly emotional reports circulating thru musical circles of "this fabulous new child genius."

The concert over, Grainger made his way backstage. To the parents of the young artist he had but one statement to make: "This boy should rise to any conceivable heights."

At 25 Lipkin, the only pianist ever to win the Rachmaninoff Fund award, has already fulfilled this prophecy.

But being one of the foremost pianists of the day is apparently not enough to satisfy the musician in Lipkin, for in recent years he has turned to conducting.

And that he is as prodigiously gifted on the podium as at the piano was proved when the late Dr. Serge Koussevitsky invited the versatile young musician to join the conducting faculty of the Berkshire Music school.

—DONALD VAIL ALLEN

NEXT SUNDAY—Sylvia Zaremba

This Clipping From
HUNTINGTON, W. VA.
HERALD-DISPATCH
MAY 21 1952

WIN SCHOLARSHIPS TO MUSIC CENTER — Robert Fleming, left, a senior at Marshall College, and Kenneth Hayes, son of Mrs. Homer T. Hayes, 1032 Seventh Avenue, have won Summer scholarships to the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass. Both are members of the Huntington Symphony Orchestra. The men were selected through competitive examination to attend the school which is conducted annually by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Fleming is the son of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Fleming, 3109 Central Avenue, Ashland.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
MAY 18 1952

Music:

Tickets to Berkshire Music Festival on Sale

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

Subscription tickets for the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Charles Munch, are on sale at Symphony Hall, Boston. Subscribers may reserve, through May, seats for any or all of the three series of concerts to be held the last week-end in July and the first two in August.

Early subscribers will have the advantage of a lower price and a wider preference of seat location for the concerts in the big shed and the privilege of securing seats for the six extra concerts to be conducted by Dr. Munch in the Theatre-Concert Hall for the first three weekends in July. These more intimate programs will include works by Bach, Mozart, Haydn and by composers earlier and later than these.

Inquiries and ticket orders have come from as far distant points as Havana, Mexico and the West Coast. More than 50 per cent of those who held series tickets in 1951 have already renewed their subscriptions, the majority requesting the same seats that they have held for as many as 10 festival years.

BOSTON OFFICE OPEN

Orders and inquiries should be mailed to Symphony Hall, Boston, until June 1st when the box office will be moved to Tanglewood. After that date remaining tickets will be available at single concert prices.

Nine concerts will be played in the Music Shed, starting July 24 with Beethoven's Symphony, No. 3 and Brahm's Sympmhony No. 1 with Dr. Munch conducting. Pierre Monteux will lead the orchestra, July 26, with the Cimorosa Overture, "The Secret Marriage;" Schubert's Symphony, No. 9 and "The Rite of Spring" by Stravinsky. July 27, Dr. Munch will return to the podium to lead the Franck Symphonic Piece from "The Redemption"; Bizet's Symphony; Dellapiccola's "The Release of Savonarola" and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe," Suites 1 and 2.

July 31 Mr. Munch will again lead the orchestra in Beethovens Overture to "Leonora, No. 3;" Schuman's piano concerto; Hindemith's "Metamorphosis;" and the D'Indy Symphony on a French Mountain Air. Mr. Monteux will again take over the orchestra, Aug. 2 in an all-Wagnerian program with soloists to be announced later. On Aug. 3, Mr. Munch will conduct the Overture to "Egmont," and Symphony, No. 8 by Beethoven in addition to Honegger's "Danse De Morts."

The final series will open Aug. 7 with Dr. Munch conducting Schumann's Symphony, No. 1; Swanson's Short Symphony and Tchaikowsky's Symphony, No. 4. For the middle program, Aug. 9, Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Symphony, No. 3 by Aaron Copland. The season will close Aug. 10 with Dr. Munch conducting the orchestra and chorus in the "Requiem" by Berlioz.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
EVENING GLOBE
MAY 28 1952

Theatre Talk

Berkshire Music Center Invites New Composers

By JOHN WM. RILEY

The Berkshire Music Center is expanding by crochet[illegible] and quavers. The Summer ho[illegible] [illegible] the Boston Symphony and [illegible]s famous school [illegible]y a active place indeed during the warm months.

Boris Goldovsky has announced that the major opera production of the season will be Mozart's last work for the lyric stage, "La Clemenza di Tito," whose title Mr. Goldovsky shortens to "Titus" for his in-English version. A feature of the production will be an elaborate mechanism for projection of scenic effects from slides. It's the invention of Paul Planer and has been widely used in European opera houses.

The Tanglewood Study Group is a new addition to the Music Center's projects of special interest to amateurs. Participants will sit in on lectures, concerts and will be able to take part in many activities. But they will not have to study for credits. Ingolf Dahl will be the director of this department and he is sending out a call to composers of new works for his group to perform. Mr. Dahl requests that they be easy enough to read at sight "or nearby so". Aaron Copland, assistant director of the Music Center, suggests the following: "The preferred form is the chamber cantata of 30 to 50 mixed voices, including soloists if wanted, and a small chamber orchestra of unspecified instrumentation."

There you have it. Here's an opportunity for young composers to be heard, and to hear their own works performed. Composers are asked to write Mr. Dahl of Symphony Hall, Boston, describing the length and nature of the works they intend to submit.

This Clipping From
HOUSTON, TEXAS
CHRONICLE
JUN 1 1952

Mozart Opera Is Scheduled

Tanglewood, Mass., May 31.—"Titus," the opera which Mozart wrote in the last year of his life and the only "opera seria" of his more mature years, has been announced by Boris Goldovsky as the major production of the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood this summer.

"Titus" (La Clemenza di Tito) will then have what will probably be its first complete production in America. There will be two performances on August 4 and 5 at Tanglewood.

The score of "Titus," parts of which will be brought from Europe, consists of an overture and 25 numbers in three acts. The score is entirely by Mozart except for certain recitative passages in which he was helped by Suessmayer. There are to be no cuts in this production, although the text, which is being translated into English by Mr. Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell, has been slightly revised.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUN 28 1952

Tanglewood Expects 400 This Weekend

Lenox, Mass.—More than 400 students from 41 states and 16 countries will arrive at Tanglewood this weekend for the 10th session of the Berkshire Music Center. For the opening exercises Sunday afternoon Charles Munch, the director, will come from France. Also arriving are a distinguished faculty of 36, including Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Luigi Dallapiccola, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross, Richard Burgin, Ingolf Dahl, William Kroll and first chairs of the Boston Symphony.

Seventy-five per cent of the students in the regular six weeks course are highly talented, as competition was keen for the tuition scholarships awarded to those who will play in the orchestra and chamber music groups or lead in the choral or opera departments. Nearly all are professional or pre-professional, except in the Tanglewood Study Group where lawyers, teachers, stenographers and even housewives whose avocation is music will spend their vacations of two, four or six weeks.

A symphony concert July 4 at 8:15 p. m. will be the first of nearly 40 performances by students. Programs will include symphony, choral and chamber music, evenings of opera and composition and chamber music concerts.

Pittsfield, Massachusetts, Saturday, July 12, 1952.

Plouffe

TANGLEWOOD SINGERS: These five soloists who will appear in Lalande's "De Profundis" motet at the Berkshire Festival concert tonight go over the score on the Tanglewod grounds following a rehearsal. Left to right, Miss Shirley Winston, Miss Sarah Fleming, Richard Sharrets, Betty Lou Allen and John McCollum.

Five Soloists On Program Tonight

Charles Munch Will Conduct Mozart Concert

TANGLEWOOD—The last three symphonies by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart make up the program of the fourth Berkshire Festival concert in the Tanglewood theatre, which will be played tomorrow by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting.

Written in a single summer, they are described in the program book as "the lovely E-flat, the impassioned G minor and the serene 'Jupiter'." Dated June 26, July 25 and Aug. 10, 1788, they were apparently not commissioned, and it is not known why he departed from the pattern of his 38 earlier symphonies to write them.

In the "De Profundis" motet by Lalande, that forms the second half of tonight's program, five soloists will appear with the orchestra and the Berkshire Festival chorus, conducted by Hugh Ross. The soprano, Sarah Fleming, and the tenor, John McCollum, sang last Sunday in the Bach Cantata No. 140. Three other Berkshire Music Center students will sing tonight: Miss Shirley Winston of Chevy Chase, Md., mezzo soprano; Miss Betty Lou Allen, contralto, of Hartford; and Richard Sharretts of New York. Miss Winston was a student at Tanglewood in 1940. Miss Allen studied in the opera department last season.

Students in the opera department under Boris Goldovsky, all have had considerable professional experience in concert, radio, church and opera. Miss Allen returned recently from Paris, where she sang in the ANTA production of "Four Saints in Three Acts" by Virgil Thomson and Gertrude Stein.

Tickets are on sale at the Tanglewood box office for both concerts, as for the larger series in the Shed that will open July 24. General admission will be sold on the day of the concerts, for listening from the lawn.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 7 1952

Tanglewood

The Berkshire Festival

* * *

By Jay S. Harrison

LENOX, Mass., July 6.—Charles Munch and forty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday night inaugurated the fifteenth season of concerts in Tanglewood, festival home of music in the Berkshire Hills. The event was the first in a series of week-end chamber concerts performed Saturdays and Sundays in the theater-concert hall, with the major part of the season scheduled to begin on July 24 in the large outdoor shed. For the opening concert music by Bach was the featured fare and the program listed "the musical offering," in an orchestral arrangement by Fernand Oubradous, the concerto in D minor for two violins, with Richard Burgin and Ruth Posselt as soloists, and the orchestral suite No. 3, in D major.

Mr. Munch has [illegible] built himself the reputation of doing to standard classics what a hot-rod youngster does to old cars. It came as a surprise, therefore, to discover that his performance of "the musical offering" was ragged, colorless and entirely lacking in exuberance. "The offering" is a winged work of immense technical ingenuity and it wants nothing less than perfection in matters of balance, phrase and clarity. Without these, frankly, its constant canonic structure becomes deadly dull, and Saturday night neither Mr. Munch nor the orchestra were able to supply the work with the vigor, majesty and elegance it openly demands. As music devoted to the contrapuntal graces its entire meaning revolves about the concept of polyphonic tensions, for which reason its lines must be kept taut and active. The slightest halting or fumbling releases these tensions like the snap of a bow and without them the work turns limp, discontinuous and withal rather stodgy. In Mr. Munch's reading, the work did not breath freely nor did it flow. It was a rendition unworthy of the performances which followed it.

These performances, after the intermission, again evidenced the brighter side of Mr. Munch's enormous orchestral command. The two violin concertos, played to perfection by Miss Posselt and Mr. Burgin, were all fire and passion and the D major suite was as rich in sentiment as a family hymnal. The suite, especially, we have rarely heard played with such hearty fervor. And even though the overture and air were otherwise a mite unorthodox, there was litheness, suppleness to every measure with which the orchestra came to grips. In the latter part of the program Mr. Munch gave us a vivid Bach, a pulsing Bach, a Bach whose rythm churns and moves; for, given the proper work to do it with, the conductor draws lightening from the sky.

The concert of Sunday afternoon equalled in every respect Saturday evening's better moments. In a program listing Handel's Concerto Grosso in A Minor, Op. 6, No. 4; Dittersdorf's Symphony in C Major, C P. E. Bach's Symphony No. 3, in F Major and J. S. Bach's Cantata "Wachet Auf," the last conducted by Hugh Ross and with Sarah Fleming, John McCollum and Mac Morgan as soloists, all hands joined in providing a concert of endless delight.

Beginning with some of Handel's matchless string poetry, Mr. Munch insured the proper expanse of line by insisting on a broad and sustained beat. As a result, the tender music unfolded effortlessly and with the deepest of meaning. It was a performance serene and reposed; it was Handel as Handel should be.

The concerto was followed by the Dittersdorf Symphony, a precious gem and nothing less. What Dittersdorf did, he did well, and, if his efforts are not aimed in the direction of profundity, here is a composer, at any rate, who offers us humor and charm, gentleness and jest. Through every phrase, Mr. Munch caught the work's light and cast it back to his listeners.

The Bach Cantata concluded the program and in it the soloists and chorus acquitted themselves grandly. Mr. Ross is surely one of the most dependable musicians now working among us and a minor error on the part of the concertmaster was the only slip to mar an otherwise sturdy performance.

Let there be no doubt of it—the pleasures of Tanglewood are back. A weekend audience of 6,300 found them so, as did this reporter. And let us all give thanks.

TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD

JUN 29 1952

JOAN MURPHY FIRST AUDITION ENTRANT

Winner to Appear Feb. 23 With Tulsa Philharmonic

Joan Murphy

Joan Murphy, Tulsa violinist, has the distinction for the second year of being the first to enter the annual young artists auditions sponsored by the Women's Association of the Tulsa Philharmonic society. This is the second year the women's association has sponsored the auditions, prize of which is a professional appearance as soloist with the Tulsa Philharmonic orchestra, H. Arthur Brown conducting, at one of its regularly scheduled concerts.

This year's auditions will be held Saturday, Dec. 20, and the winner will appear as soloist at the Feb. 23 concert. This year's auditions, for the first time, will be open to vocalists.

Applicants must be residents of Oklahoma six months prior to Dec. 20 or registered students in Oklahoma colleges or universities by Oct. 1. The applicant must be under 30 years of age by Dec. 1. Voice entries must not be below the rank of college freshmen.

Entry blanks must be filled out and mailed to the Tulsa Philharmonic office, now at Stotler Music Co., 710 S. Main st., not later than Oct. 15. Entry blanks, governing regulations and requirements may be obtained by writing the office.

Rosalie Talbott is again chairman of the auditions committee, whose members are Miriam Spindler, Mrs. Rex Evans and Getty Krieg Murphy.

Miss Murphy sent in her entry blank just before leaving Friday for Lenox, Mass., where she will spend six weeks attending Tanglewood Music school in the Berkshires, as a full scholarship pupil.

She was graduated from Will Rogers High school in May, and was awarded a $250 scholarship by Hyechka club, which she will use to apply on her expenses next year at the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston, where she has enrolled as a freshman, taking a degree course.

Miss Murphy was given third place among the 14 talented contestants who appeared before the three out-of-state judges last December, and played a solo with the Tulsa Philharmonic at its youth concerts in February. She was a member of the violin section of the orchestra, and also played in the University of Tulsa orchestra and the Will Rogers High school orchestra, where she was concertmaster.

She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Murphy, 920 E. 36th pl.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

MAY 25 1952

Boston Symphony's Music School Marks 10th 'Birthday' This Year

More Than 3000 Have Studied in Summer Classes, Many Doing Very Well Later

(Special to The Republican)

Berkshire Hills, May 24—The summer music school of Boston Symphony Orchestra will observe its 10th anniversary this year; and for the occasion, Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman of the Friends of Berkshire Music Center, has issued invitations to join the organization, and also solicits support of the school More than 3000 students have attended at least a session of the school since it was started by the late Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

That the school has enhanced the opportunity of its students can be seen from the fact that many have gone on to distinguish themselves in the field of music. Among them are conductors, assistant conductors, musicians in major and minor orchestras about the country, 20 New York City Center Opera Company singers, leaders of prominent choruses, teachers and music supervisors. And speaking of singers, probably the best known who attended the music school is Mario Lanza, now one of the top-ranking singers in the world.

Dr. Charles Munch, director of Boston Symphony Orchestra, is head of the six-weeks school. His assistant is Aaron Copeland. Ralph Berkowitz is dean, and Dr. Thomas D. Perry, Jr., executive secretary. Dr. Perry, headmaster-emeritus of Phillips Exeter Academy, has headed the Friends Society since its organization in 1946. Contributions for the school may be sent to Symphony Hall, Boston, until July 1, when the office will be transferred to Tanglewood, Lenox.

Tanglewood

Tomorrow Night

8.15—First symphony concert by student orchestra.

Symphony No. 88 .... Haydn (Conducted by Robert Mandell)

Mathis der Maler ..... Hindemith
(1st and 2d movements)
(Conducted by Lorin Maazel)

Symphony .... Cesar Franck
(Conducted by Charles Munch)

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center invited.

Soloists Named For Bach Cantata At Festival Sunday

John McCollum

Sarah Fleming, soprano, Shirley Winston, mezzo soprano, John McCollum, tenor, and Richard Sharrets, bass, will be the soloists in Bach's Contata No. 140 Sunday afternoon at 3 for the second Berkshire Festival concert in the Tanglewood theatre.

Hugh Ross will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the festival chorus in the second half of the program. Charles Munch will lead the first half, as he will the all-Bach concert with which the festival in the theatre will open Saturday night.

Tickets are on sale at the box office and England Brothers for seats in the hall. General admission will be sold before the concert for listening from the lawn, as in previous years.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

MAY 28 1952

'TITUS,' MOZART OPERA, IS LISTED AT TANGLEWOOD

Will Be Major Production of Opera Department This Summer

Tanglewood—"Titus," the opera which Mozart wrote in the last year of his life and the only "opera seria" of his maturer years, is announced by Boris Goldovsky as the major production of the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center this summer. "Titus" (La Clemenza di Tito) will then have what probably be its first complete production in America. There will be two performances on Aug. 4 and 5 to which Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be invited. The score of "Titus," parts of which will be brought from Europe, consist of an overture and 25 numbers in three acts. The score is entirely by Mozart except for certain recitative passages in which he was helped by Suessmayer. There are to be no cuts in this production, although the text, which is being translated into English by Mr. Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell, has been slightly revised.

New Scenic Plan

A feature of the production will be a new scenic plan in which an elaborate mechanism for projection by slides, the invention of Paul Planer, will be used. Planer's invention has been used in the larger opera houses in Europe with conspicuous success. It permits spectacle effects in such scenes as the burning and destruction of a palace in this opera. The scenery is being designed by Charles Elson.

Miss Betty Coe Armstrong has been appointed to the faculty of the Opera Department to teach scenic design, according to an announcement by Mr. Goldovsky. She has taught stage design and lighting at Alabama College and Oklahoma University, served as costume technician and assistant to the professor of costume design at Yale and taught at the Wellesley College Summer Theater.

Like all student performances at Tanglewood, one full-length work ("Titus") and several "evenings of opera" in the last weeks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school will be open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center whose contributions help to support the school. Contributions to the Friends Society and requests for information about the events of the session that will run from July 1 to Aug. 10 may be mailed to Tanglewood, Lenox.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUN 2 1952

Berkshire Festival Programs Shifted

Boston Symphony Lists New July 5, 6 Offerings

Charles Munch has made some changes in the first three programs to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under his direction in the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., in the Berkshire Music Center's Theater-Concert Hall.

The first program, at 8:15 Saturday night, July 5, will be devoted to three works of Johann Sebastian Bach: "The Musical Offering," a concerto for two violins, with Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin as soloists, and the third suite, in D major.

The new program for Sunday afternoon, July 6, at 3 o'clock, includes Handel's concerto grosso in A minor, Op. 6, No. 4; Dittersdorf's symphony in C major, C. P. E. Bach's fifth symphony, in B minor, and J. S. Bach's cantata, "Wachet auf." Hugh Ross will conduct the cantata.

The program originally set for July 6 has been moved to Saturday night, July 12; this includes a suite from Rameau's "Dardanus," Couperin's "Concert dans le gout theatral," a fantasia by Purcell, Vivaldi's concerto grosso in D minor and Lalande's "De Profundis" for chorus and orchestra.

The programs for the remaining concerts in the Theater-Concert Hall (July 13, 19 and 20) and for the nine concerts by the full orchestra in Tanglewood's Music Shed (July 24, 26, 27, 31; August 2, 3, 7, 9 and 10) remain as previously announced.

MERIDEN, CONN.
RECORD

JUN 21 1952

TANGLEWOOD PROGRAM OF BOSTON SYMPHONY

The Boston Symphony concerts at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Massachusetts, draw many music lovers from Meriden. In order to assist inquirers I hasten to print their summer program.

Everyone has seen pictured the enormous music shed which holds thousands, and permits other thousands to hear from the lawn. To indulge oneself in a week-end of these concerts, or to attend merely an evening or an afternoon is an experience impossible to duplicate. I urge everyone to spend a bit more and listen and see from inside. Charles Munche will conduct.

Starting times for the concerts are Thursday and Saturday evenings at 8:15; Sunday afternoon at 3 p. m.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUN 1 - 1952

CHAMBER MUSIC CONCERTS IN JULY

Lenox, May 31 — Through the generosity of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, four concerts of chamber music will be presented at the Berkshire Music Center here on Wednesday evenings in July.

The series will open on July 9 with a recital by the Bel Arte Trio, a string trio consisting of Ruth Posselt, Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, all members of the Berkshire Music Center faculty. On July 16 there will be a sonata recital by Janos Scholz, cello, and Miklos Schwalb, piano.

On July 23 the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble will be held under the direction of Louis Speyer. The members are James Pappoutsakis, flute; Pasquale Cardillo, clarinet; Raymond Allard, bassoon; Harold Meek, French horn, and Speyer; Miklos Schwalb will assist as pianist. The final concert will be given by the Fine Arts Quartet of the American Broadcasting Co., on July 30 with Leonard Sorkin and Joseph Stepansky, violins; Sheppard Lehnhoff, viola, and George Sopkin, cello.

These concerts will be held at the Theater-Concert Hall at 8.15 as in previous years. They will be open by invitation to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

C— M— May 19

Tanglewood Amateur Group

The Tanglewood Study Group, a department of the Berkshire Music Center whose purpose is "to provide an unusual opportunity for teacher and music lover to become familiar in actual practice with a great deal of fresh and useful repertory which they can take back to their communities" is attracting interest on the part of serious amateur musicians, music educators, and others interested in community music.

* * *

At Tanglewood—the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, where Charles Munch will direct not only the Festival but the school maintained in connection with it—Ingolf Dahl of the Music Department of the University of California in Los Angeles, will head the Study Group.

For two, four, or six weeks the students will sing and play music of the Italian Renaissance and Elizabethan England, try their voices on the songs of the troubadours and the glees and catches of the time of Charles II, put together scenes from early Italian comic opera, and sing and play chamber cantatas by living composers written especially for them.

* * *

Like most of the Tanglewood students they will be members of the Festival chorus, who will be trained by Hugh Ross to sing in the Festival concerts, including Berlioz' "Requiem," to be conducted by Mr. Munch. They may attend lectures, forum discussions, and the performances by students and the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the period of their enrollment.

Applicants include doctors, lawyers, insurance brokers, an Air Corps Reserve officer, a social worker, a woman accountant from Honolulu, and an engineer from California whose daughter, an advanced student of the flute, wishes to play in the orchestra. The two-and-four-week terms give opportunity to those for whom music is an avocation to spend their vacation periods in its atmosphere.

Applications and inquiries about the departments of the school, which include sections in orchestra and orchestral conducting, chamber music, choral singing and conducting, composition and opera should be sent to Symphony Hall, Boston.

Sunday Standard Times
7/6/52

Rubinstein to Play Brahms Concerto

Special to The Standard-Times

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, July 5—Artur Rubinstein will play the solo in Brahms' Second Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival Aug. 7. The announcement was made by Charles Munch, conductor, who made known at the same time other changes in the program and the names of additional festival soloists.

Brahms' Fourth Symphony was included in the July 31 program following the receipt by the orchestra of the highest award of the Academie du Disque Francais for its recording of the Brahms work.

Margaret Harshaw, soprano, Charles Kullman, tenor, and James Pease, bass, will be soloists for the Wagner program that Pierre Monteux will conduct Aug. 2. Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor part in Berlioz' "Requiem" in the final festival concert Aug. 10.

6/17/52

County-Wide Reception Set For Boston Symphony July 24

STOCKBRIDGE — The Boston Symphony Orchestra and Charles Munch, its conductor, will be given a county-wide welcome home July 24, the opening date of the major Berkshire Festival in the Tanglewood Music Shed.

The plan to ask the Berkshire County Commissioners to vote an official welcome on the orchestra's first appearance following its European tour was made by 50 leaders of local civic and social organizations yesterday.

Speaking at lunch, sponsored by the Tanglewood Advisory Committee at the Red Lion Inn, George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, thanked the Berkshire community for its interest and support. He compared the reception in European cities, where orchestras are regarded as a civic responsibility, with the attitude of Boston public officials.

"In Europe," Mr. Judd said, "the mayors of cities greeted the conductor and took him to receptions for the musicians. In Boston, the mayors show no interest. The American press, on the other hand," he added, "works for music, while in Europe there is little news of it in the papers."

1st Page

He told of traveling from Frankfurt to Berlin, through the Russian Zone, in sealed cars; of the audiences of 1000 young people from East Berlin, to whom tickets had been distributed. Saddened by the appearance of Berlin, he said that he found "remarkable courage and strength and no chauvinism, and witnessed no ill feeling. They are probably afraid the Americans might leave," he said. "The people in Europe may not like everything we do," he concluded, "but they do like the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

Plan Is Merited

In a discussion opened by Robert K. Wheeler, advisory committee member from Great Barrington, Lawrence K. Miller, another member, said, "The debt of the Berkshires to the Boston Symphony Orchestra will never be repaid spiritually. Perhaps we are likely to take it a little for granted. The fantastic notices in both the European and American press has brought its importance to the attention of some of us for the first time. A reception to express our appreciation is certainly merited."

"The tangible advantages that the Boston orchestra has brought to the Berkshires," were cited by Jay C. Rosenfeld, Eagle music critic who accompanied it on the tour.

"We are losing some of our mills in New England," said Mr. Rosenfeld, "and we are thinking of replacing them by other mills. There are other things that benefit a community. Tanglewood and the Berkshire Festival, through the Boston Symphony Orchestra, are known wherever people know music. The receptions in Europe were manifestations of respect for American culture. They were impressed by the orchestra. They don't have such things in Europe. I hope we can show our appreciation to the Boston Symphony Orchestra for what they have done for us."

Bartlett Hendricks, speaking as president of the Berkshire Hills Conference, agreed to organize a committee to plan an observance of the Festival opening, including a reception.

52

Dr. Munch Opens Tanglewood Session, Urges Students Probe Realm of Spirit

LENOX, June 29 (AP) — Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center, today opened the 10th session at Tanglewood.

Dr. Munch urged some 400 students at the Boston Symphony's summer school to take responsibility for developing and expressing the inner life of the 17 nations from which they came.

"The realm of action, represented by the social struggle, aims at a momentary goal," Munch said, "while the realm of the spirit, represented by the arts, is eternal.

"The arts are a civilizing strength and civilization, despite its failures, is a just goal of the human spirit."

The six-week summer school session is held in connection with the 15 concerts of the Berkshire Festival, which commences Saturday night.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUN 17 1952

Berkshire County to Honor Boston Symphony July 24

Civic Reception Will Be Tendered That Night at Tanglewood, Following Concert

Stockbridge, June 16—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be tendered a civic reception by Berkshire County on the night of July 24 and that day will be proclaimed "BSO Day" in the Berkshires. These plans were made at the Red Lion Inn here today following a luncheon meeting of the Tanglewood Advisory Committee which had as its guests representative citizens of the various communities and cities of the area.

Report Is Given

Highlighting the prefestival meeting was an interesting and comprehensive report on the Boston Symphony Orchestra's recent triumphant tour through Europe. George E. Judd, manager of the world famous musical unit, described the great receptions the musicans received in the various concert cities of Europe.

He also made known that next year the orchestra will make a tour across the country to the West Coast.

At the conclusion of the luncheon program members of the Tanglewood Advisory Group and the Berkshire Hills Conference decided upon a tentative plan to welcome the Boston Symphony back to Tanglewood and the Berkshire Symphonic Festival with a civic reception. A committee will be selected within the next few days to draft details.

It was pointed out that on Thursday night, July 24, when the main concerts of the festival will be inaugurated the whole orchestra will be playing together for the first time since its return from Europe and following the Beethoven concert in the shed under the baton of Charles Munch, the reception will be held. As part of the program a scroll will be presented on behalf of the residents of Berkshire County.

County Action Due

Tomorrow J Joseph McCabe of the county commissioners will present a resolution before the board calling for the designation of Thursday, July 24, as "BSO Day" in Berkshire County. Following the formal adoption, a chairman and committee will be selected to arrange for the civic reception. Civic, fraternal and official groups of the cities and towns of the county will be invited to participate.

The festival has long been an important part in the life of Berkshire County and has given the section publicity across the nation and in foreign lands from where vacationists come to Tanglewood to enjoy the music from July 5 to Aug. 10.

Tanglewood

2500 Hear Students With Munch Conducting

An audience of 2500 heard the first symphony concert by the students of the Berkshire Music Center last evening, when Charles Munch, the school's director and conductor of the Berkshire Festival, conducted Cesar Franck's Symphony in D minor.

Robert Mandell of the Bronx led his fellow-students in Haydn's Symphony in G major and Lorin Maazen of Pittsburgh, Pa., conducted Hindemith's symphony, "Mathis der Maler."

The second student symphony concert will be led next Friday evening by students of Leonard Bernstein and a member of the conducting faculty.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK

Tonight

8.15 Opening concert of Berkshire Festival in theatre. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conducting. Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin, soloists.

Tomorrow

AM
10.00—*Chamber Music at Berkshire Music Center.
Quartet in G minor for violin, viola, violoncello and piano, K 478..Mozart Luanne Gewinner, violin; Lynn Egli, viola; Evalyn Steinbock, violoncello; Gilbert Kalish, piano.
Quartet No. 3 .... Piston
Serge Blanc, violin; Virginia Hyde, violin; Victor Alpert, viola; Martha Field, violoncello.
Quintet in E-flat major, Op. 44, Schumann
Jeanne Sandbank, violin; Doris Chuberk, violin; Michael Denesuk, viola; John Sant Ambrogio, violoncello; Karen Keys, piano.

PM
3.00 Berkshire Festival concert.
8.15 *Composers' Forum.
Two piano pieces, Leonard Rosenman
Miniatures for 2 trumpets and 2 trombones .... Darius Thieme Compositions for piano, Halim El-Dabh
Meditation on the Nile Valley.
Suite for flute, oboe and clarinet, Marshall Bialosky
Sonata for flute and piano, Yehoshua Lakner
Three Housman Poems (soprano and piano), Raymond Wilding-White

Wednesday Evening

8.15 *Bel Arte Trio (Coolidge Concert).

Friday Evening

8.15 *Symphony Concert by Student Orchestra.

Saturday Evening

8.15 Berkshire Festival concert, Charles Munch, conducting.

*Open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

[17]

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
952

THE WORLD OF MUSIC: 'TITUS' AT TANGLEWOOD

Retitled Mozart Opera Will Be Presented By Berkshire Music Center in August

By ROSS PARMENTER

MOZART'S final opera, "La Clemenza di Tito," will be the major work to be mounted this summer at Tanglewood by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center. Boris Goldovsky, who will be in charge, believes the production will be the opera's first complete presentation in America. If the facts sustain this contention, the department will have an enviable record, for in 1947 it was responsible for the American première of another of Mozart's major operas. "Idomeneo."

"La Clemenza di Tito" was composed by Mozart in the final year of his life. In sequence it comes after "The Magic Flute," but it beat that more famous opera to the boards. It [illegible] its première in [illegible]gue on Sept. 6, 1791. "The Magic Flute" was first performed in Vienna twenty-four days later.

Mr. Goldovsky will present the work in a new English version that he has prepared with Sarah Caldwell. It will be given under the title of "Titus." August 4 and 5 are the dates. The opera calls for ten scenes, one of which is the burning and destruction of a palace. In order to stage this effect the production will rely on an invention of Paul Planer's that creates the illusion of scenery by projecting slides on the theatre's cyclorama.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

Va[illegible]

Tanglewood Festival --

Events at Berkshire Festival

Mozart's last three symphonies, the E-flat (K. 543), the G minor (K. 550) and the "Jupiter," will form the program to be presented by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and conducted by Charles Munch in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood in the Berkshires this afternoon at 3.

The music of Mozart, Haydn and Schubert will be played next Saturday and Sunday in the last weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts before the opening of the major Festival in the Music Shed, July 24. Lukas Foss will be the soloist in the Mozart Piano Concerto in C major Saturday evening, under the baton of Charles Munch, who will conduct all but Mozart's Litaniae, for chorus and orchestra, for which Hugh Ross will take the podium.

Haydn's Symphonies No. 99, in E-flat and 86, in D major, and Schubert's Mass in G major will be played Sunday afternoon. The Mass will be the concluding work in both programs.

The first evening of opera scenes by the Berkshire Music Center for the current season will be given Monday night, to be followed by a concert by the small choir Tuesday evening and a sonata recital, gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, Wednesday evening. Janos Scholz, cellist, and Miklos Schwalb, pianist, will perform Beethoven's Sonata in A major, Sonata, Op. 4 by Zoltan Kodaly and Sonata, Op. 8 by Dohnanyi.

Richard Burgin will lead the student orchestra in Richard Strauss' "Don Quixote" Friday night for the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, contributors to the support of the school, who are invited to all school performances. Soloists will be Joanne Dempsey, violin, Victor Alpert, viola and Robert Sayre, cello. For the first half of the program Robert Mandell of the Bronx will conduct Prokofieff's Classical Symphony and Elyakum Shapira of Israel will conduct Beethoven's Violin Concerto, with Serge Blanc of Paris as soloist.

Chamber music will be heard Sunday morning at 10 and the composers' forum Sunday evening, as usual.

---

400 Students to Register At Tanglewood over Weekend

Students will begin arriving at Tanglewood this week for the 10th session of the Berkshire Music Center, until some 400 have been registered by the weekend, together with a faculty of 36 distinguished figures in the music world, such as Charles Munch, the director; Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Luigi Dallapiccola, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross, Richard Burgin, Ingolf Dahl, William Kroll and first chairs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Opening exercises are to take place Sunday, with Mr. Munch in charge.

Ranging in age from 15 to 58, many of the students will hold Berkshire Center scholarships, awarded for the first time this year. They will live at Lenox Preparatory School and Wheatleigh House during their stay.

Seven students are from Canada, five from Israel, two each from Mexico and Argentina, while others are from as far distant as Hong Kong, New Zealand, Germany and points between. New York leads the states with 88 and Massachusetts is second with 42.

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
JUN 29 1952

Program Changes in Concert Hall Programs

A change in the order of the programs for the Berkshire Festival, with a slight change in the works to be played, is announced by Charles Munch, the conductor. The revision will affect only the first concerts in the theater-concert hall by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Programs for July 13, 19 and 20, and for the major festival in the shed beginning July 24, remain as previously announced.

The revised programs read as follows:

SATURDAY EVENING, JULY 5
Bach "The Musical Offering"
Bach Concerto for Two Violins (Ruth Posselt, Richard Burgin, soloists)
Bach Suite No. 3, in D major
SUNDAY AFTERNOON, JULY 6
Handel Concerto Grosso in A minor for Strings, Op. 6, No. 4 Dittersdorf . . . Symphony in C major C. P. E. Bach . . . Symphony No. 5, in B minor J. S Bach . . . Cantata No. 140 ("Wachet auf, ruft uns die Stimme," conducted by Hugh Ross).
SATURDAY EVENING, JULY 12
Rameau Suite from "Dardanus"
Couperin Concert dans le gout theatral
Purcell Fantasia in A, for Strings
Vivaldi Concerto Grosso in D minor, Op. 3, No. 11
Lalande "De Profundis," for Chorus and Orchestra (conducted by Hugh Ross).

The opening program becomes all-Bach by the substitution of "The Musical Offering" for C. P. E. Bach's Symphony No. 5. The July 6 program is postponed in toto to July 12. In its place will be played the Handel and Dittersdorf originally planned and the two numbers deleted from the July 5 program.

Tickets for all concerts are on sale at the box office at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., to which may be addressed inquiries on the Festival and events at the Berkshire Music Center, the summer school of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Bosn Da[illegible]
[illegible]
952

Study Group Being Formed at Tanglewood

The Tanglewood Study Group, a department of the Berkshire Music Center, whose purpose is "to provide a unique opportunity for teacher and music lover to become familiar in actual practice with a great deal of fresh and useful repertory which they can take back to their communities," is attracting serious amateur musicians, music educators and others.

Ingolf Dahl of the music department of the University of California in Los Angeles, will head the study group. For two, four or six weeks the students will sing and play music of the Italian Renaissance and Elizabethan England, try their voices on the songs of the troubadours and the glees and catches of the time of Charles II, put together scenes from early Italian comic opera and sing and play chamber cantatas by living composers written especially for them.

Like most of the Tanglewood students, they will be members of the Festival chorus, who will be trained by Hugh Ross to sing in the Festival concerts, including Berlioz' "Requiem," to be conducted by Charles Munch. They may attend lectures, forum discussions and the performances by students and the Boston Symphony Orchestra during their enrollment.

Applicants include doctors, lawyers, insurance brokers, an Air Corps Reserve officer, a social worker, a woman accountant from Honolulu and an engineer from California whose daughter, an advanced student of the flute, wishes to play in the orchestra.

Applications and inquiries about the departments of the school, which include sections in orchestra and orchestral conducting, chamber music, choral singing and conducting, composition and opera, should be sent to Symphony Hall, Boston.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
JUN 13 1952

Tanglewood Ready for 10th Season

Albany Knickerbocker 13/

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are moving this week from Symphony Hall, Boston, to their summer quarters at Tanglewood to get the wheels in motion for the 10th season of the Berkshire Music Center, which includes the Berkshire Music Festival.

Charles Munch, conductor of the orchestra and director of the center and Pierre Monteux, who will conduct two festival concerts, will arrive later from France, where they remained after the Boston Symphony completed its European tour.

Some 17 staff members of the Boston office and 33 teachers, including Aaron Copland, assistant director, and Leonard Bernstein, head of the orchestra department, soon will be there to receive students and musicians scheduled to appear before the opening of the school June 29.

Thomas D. Perry Jr., executive secretary, and Dean Ralph Berkowitz are preparing a calendar of 40 performances which may be attended by the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Registrations still are open for the Tanglewood Study Group, a new group for amateur and professional musician performance of Baroqua period music.

Reservations are available at the Tanglewood boxoffice for the six Theater-Concert Hall concerts to be conducted by Mr. Munch Saturday evening and Sunday afternoons beginning July 5 and for the nine major festival concerts Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons in the Shed beginning July 24. Mr. Munch will conduct all Thursday and Sunday concerts. Mr. Monteux will conduct the Saturday evenings of July 26 and Aug. 2 and Mr. Bernstein on Aug. 9.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
JUN 5 - 1952

Music

Tanglewood A Shrine for Koussevitzky

By LOUIS BIANCOLLI.

Now that Tanglewood is once more opening its green portals to music, it is good to think of the man whose memory is permanently enshrined there — Serge Koussevitzky.

This thought is also prompted by reports of the touring Boston Symphony. As that noble band of musicians piles triumph on triumph in Europe, one likes to think that the glory that was Koussevitzky's marches with it.

That is a unique fate for a conductor. As a rule the prestige and power that are his die with him. A memorial or two, in word or music, and the rest is an entry in small type in the music dictionaries.

Faithful Minister.

Not so Koussevitzky. So long as Tanglewood and the Boston Symphony last they will remind the world of the devoted little man who served so long and so faithfully in the ministry of music.

One of the inspiring things about music is the humility of spirit that rules those in its service. The higher up you go, the humbler and more self-effacing the attitude. I know this is contrary to the popular notion.

Many people still think of our best conductors as frenzied tyrants governed by giant egos. The prima donnas they regard as hopelessly vain and self-centered creatures, and the pianists and violinists not far behind in conceit.

Saints of Modesty.

This has not been my experience among the best musicians. I have found them pretty sure of themselves, as a rule, and determined to get what they want. But toward their music they were saints of modesty. Nothing was too good for the composer, not even their sacrifice of anything like a personal life.

Koussevitzky was no ascetic; his life out of the concert hall was rich and abundant. But his first love was music. It dominated his whole personality; it was his motive power, and that power was such that it has survived him as a monument.

Symphony Magnificent.

The Boston Symphony has gone on playing magnificently since the death of this idealist. There are those who even think that in some ways it has grown and taken on fresh life under the guidance of its new masters.

Yet, few subscribers can hear a Boston Symphony concert without finding their thoughts reverting to the tense and wiry conductor whose personality molded it for good. The very soul of the man seems still to infuse the orchestra.

And so with the festival. The words Tanglewood and Berkshire have become magic in the ears of all music lovers. But the name that still haunts the landscape of that smiling countryside is Koussevitzky.

That, rather than Tanglewood, is where the Berkshire Festival is located.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
JUN 29 1952

OVER 400 STUDENTS ARRIVING FOR WORK AT MUSIC CENTER

Visitors From Many Foreign Countries On Hand At Tanglewood

Lenox, June 28—More than 400 students from 41 states and 16 countries are arriving at Tanglewood this week end to spend six weeks of concentrated study at the 10th session of the Berkshire Music Center. For the opening exercises tomorrow afternoon Charles Munch, the director, will come from France, where he remained after his tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Also arriving are a distinguished faculty of 36, including Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Luigi Dallapiccola, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross, Richard Burgin, Ingolf Dahl, William Kroll and first chairs of the Boston orchestra.

Foreign Students

Seven students will come from Canada; five from Israel; two each from Mexico and Argentina and one from Brazil, Chile, Turkey, Italy, France, Egypt, South Africa, Hong Kong, New Zealand, Honolulu, England and Germany. New York leads the states with 88, including 62 from New York City. Massachusetts is second with 42.

A symphony concert Friday evening (July 4) at 8.15 will be the first of nearly 40 performances by students. Open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, whose members contribute to the support of the school, the programs will include symphony, choral and chamber music, evenings of opera and composition and chamber music concerts donated for the last four Wednesday evenings of July by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress.

Students will live at the Lenox Preparatory Schol and Wheatleigh, a nearby estate owned by the orchestra. For recreation they will swim and boat in Stockbridge Bowl, whose shoreline includes the edge of the Tanglewood estate. The registration list of the Study Group will remain open for the convenience of those who wish to enroll for two or four weeks.

The Berkshire Festival concerts on week-ends from July 5 through Aug. 10 are a part of the students' program. Information about the Festival, student performances or school enrollment will be mailed on request to Tanglewood, Lenox.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
JUN 22 1952

Boston Symphony Lists Tanglewood Programs

TANGLEWOOD, Mass.—A change in the order of the programs for the Berkshire Festival, with a slight change in the works to be played, is announced by Charles Munch, the conductor. The revision will affect only the first concerts in the theatre-concert hall by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Programs for July 13, 19 and 20 and for the major Festival in the shed beginning July 24, remain as previously announced.

The revised programs read as follows:

SATURDAY, JULY 5 . . . . . .
Bach——"The Munsical Offering"
Bach——Concerto for Two Violins (Ruth Posselt, Richard Burgin, Soloists)
Bach——Suite No. 3, in D major
SUNDAY AFTERNOON, JULY 6
Handel——Concerto Grosso in A minor for Strings, Op. 6, No. 4
Dittersdorf——Symphony in C major
C. P. E. Bach—Symphony No. 5, in B minor
J. S. Bach——Cantata No. 140 ("Wachet auf, ruft uns die Stimme," conducted by Hugh Ross)
SATURDAY, JULY 12 . . . .
Rameau——Suite from "Dardanus"
Couperin——Concert dans le gout theatral
Purcell——Fantasia in A, for Strings
Vivaldi——Concerto Grosso in D minor, Op. 3, No. 11
Lalande——"De Profundis," for Chorus and Orchestra (conducted by Hugh Ross)

The opening program becomes all-Bach by the substitution of "The Musical Offering" for C.P.E. Bach's Symphony No. 5.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE Monitor

Concerts for Berkshires

Munch Taking Up His Duties At Tanglewood

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will assume his duties as director of the Berkshire Music Center (the summer school at Tanglewood operated by the Boston Symphony) at the opening exercises of the school's tenth session Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock. He succeeds the late Serge Koussevitzky in this position.

Mr. Munch arrived in New York by plane yesterday and will drive to Lenox, Mass., today. On Saturday, July 5, at 8:15 he will open the series of six concerts that he will conduct in the Theater-Concert Hall. These more intimate concerts will take place on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons for three successive week ends. The major Berkshire Music Festival will be held on the final three week ends (of the six-week season) in the Music Shed.

Tickets are available at the box office for all festival concerts, including the Theater-Concert Hall series. Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, whose contributions help to support it, are invited to all performances at the school. Programs for the festival and calendars of events at the school will be mailed on request to the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The programs for the first three week ends follow:

Saturday evening, July 5

"The Musical Offering"	Bach
Concerto for Two Violins (Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin, soloists	Bach
Suite No. 3 in D major	Bach

Sunday afternoon, July 6

Concerto Grosso in A minor for Strings, Op. 6, No. 4	Handel
Symphony in C major	Dittersdorf
Symphony No. 5 in B minor	C. P. E. Bach
Cantata No. 140, "Wachet auf, ruft uns die Stimme" (Conducted by Hugh Ross)	Bach

Saturday evening, July 12

Suite from "Dardanus"	Rameau
Concert dans le gout théâtral	Couperin
Fantasia in A for String	Purcell
Concerto Grosso in D minor, Op. 3, No. 11	Vivaldi
"De Profundis" for Chorus and Orchestra (Conducted by Hugh Ross)	Lalande

Sunday afternoon, July 13

Symphony in E-flat, No. 39	Mozart
Symphony in G minor, No. 40	Mozart
Symphony in C major ("Jupiter") No. 41	Mozart

Saturday evening, July 19

Litaniae for Chorus and Orchestra (K. 125) (Conducted by Hugh Ross)	Mozart
Piano Concerto in C major (K. 467) (Lukas Foss, soloist)	Mozart
Mass in G major	Schubert

Sunday afternoon, July 20

Symphony No. 99 in E-flat	Haydn
Symphony No. 86 in D major	Haydn
Mass in G major	Schubert

This Clipping From
COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
JUN 1 - 1952

'Titus' Top Tanglewood Attraction

Mozart Opera Will Be Prime Novelty Of Summer Season

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASS.—"Titus," the opera which Mozart wrote in the last year of his life and the only "opera seria" of his maturer years, is announced by Boris Goldovsky as the major production of the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood this summer. "Titus" (La Clemenza di Tito) will then have what will probably be its first complete production in America. There will be two performances on August 4th and 5th at Tanglewood to which friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be invited.

The score of "Titus," parts of which will be brought from Europe, consist of an overture and 25 numbers in three acts. The score is entirely by Mozart except for certain recitative passages in which he was helped by Suessmayer. There are to be no cuts in this production, although the text, which is being translated into English by Mr. Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell, has been slightly revised.

A feature of the production will be a new scenic plan in which an elaborate mechanism for projection by slides, the invention Paul Planer, will be used. Planer's invention has been used in the larger opera houses in Europe with conspicuous success. It permits spectacle effects in such scenes as the burning and destruction of a palace in this opera. The scenery is being designed by Charles Elson.

Like all student performances at Tanglewood, one full-length work ("Titus") and several "evenings of opera" in the last weeks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school will be open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center whose contributions help to support the school. Contributions to the Friends Society and requests for information about the events of the session that will run from July 1 to Aug. 10 may be mailed to Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
MAY 25 1952

10TH ANNIVERSARY OF TANGLEWOOD SCHOOL

Lenox, May 24—The Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood will observe its 10th anniversary this season. An invitation to join the Friends of the Berkshire Music Conter, issued by Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman, asks for continued support from former members, solicits new ones and lists some of the accomplishments of the 3000 students who have attended one or more sessions of the six-week school inspired by the late Serg Koussevitsky.

Among the former students are conductors, assistant conductors and players in major and minor orchestras, six Metropolitan Opera and 20 New York City Center Opera Co., singers, leaders of prominent choruses and choirs, teachers and music supervisors.

Members of the "Friends," as in former years, are invited to the 40 performances at the school. They will include symphony concerts each Friday evening, beginning July 4, conducted by Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Charles Much and others; chamber music concerts on Sunday mornings under the supervision of William Kroll; opera performances under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, including what is believed to be the first full stage presentation in this country of Mozart's "La Clemenza di Tito"; composers' forums Sunday evenings, with Aaron Copland as moderator; choral concerts prepared and conducted by Hugh Ross; song recitals and other events of interest to music lovers.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
MAY 13 1952

High Interest in Tanglewood Study Group

Special to The Hartford Times

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.—Attracted by the recent announcement that all students in the advanced, active divisions will receive grants for tuition at the Berkshire Music Center from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Funds, young musicians from nearly every state and some foreign countries have askel for auditions, which are being held in centers throughout the United States by members of the faculty.

Nearly 50 per cent of the applicants are former students.

* * *

ELIGIBLE for scholarship grants are members of the student orchestra and chamber music groups, chorus leaders, students of orchestral or choral conducting, students of composition with Aaron Copland and with Luigi Dallapicocola of Italy, and those studying actively in the opera department. They will be required to pay only living expenses.

* * *

THE FEATURE project of the Opera Department this season will be Mozart's seldom performed Opera Seria, "La Clemenza di Tito."

Applications for admission to the school and inquiries should be sent to Symphony Hall Boston.

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
JUN 30 1952

Dr. Munch Opens Tanglewood Session, Urges Students Probe Realm of Spirit

LENOX, June 29 (AP) — Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center, today oppened the 10th session at Tanglewood.

Dr. Munch urged some 400 students at the Boston Symphony's summer school to take responsibility for developing and expressing the inner life of the 17 nations from which they came.

"The realm of action, represented by the social struggle, aims at a momentary goal," Munch said, "While the realm of the spirit, represented by the arts, is eternal.

"The arts are a civilizing strength and civilization, despite its failures, is a just goal of the human spirit."

The six-week summer school session is held in connection with the 15 concerts of the Berkshire Festival, which commences Saturday night.

This Clipping From
HOLYOKE, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM
MAY 9 - 1952

Keen Interest Shown In New Study Group At Tanglewood School

The Tanglewood Study group, a new department of the Berkshire Music center whose purpose is "to provide a unique opportunity for teacher and music lover to become familiar in actual practice with a great deal of fresh and useful repertory which they can take back to their communities" is attracting interest on the part of serious amateur musicians, music educators and others interested in community music.

At Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra, where Charles Munch will direct both the Berkshire Symphonie festival and the school maintained in connection with it, Ingolf Dahl of the music department of the University of California in Los Angeles, will head the study group. For two, four, or six weeks the students will sing and play music of the Italian Renaissance and Elizabethan England, try their voices on the songs of the troubadours and the "glees" and "catches" of the time of Charles II, put together scenes from early Italian comic opera and sing and play chamber cantatas by living composers written especially for them.

Like most of the Tanglewood students they will be members of the festival chorus, who will be trained by Hugh Ross to sing in the festival concerts, including Berlioz' "Requiem" to be conducted by Mr. Munch. They may attend lectures, forum discussions and the performances by students and the Boston Symphony orchestra during the period of their enrollment.

Applicants include doctors, lawyers, insurance brokers, an air force reserve officer, a social worker, a woman accountant from Honolulu and an engineer from California whose daughter, an advanced student of the flute, wishes to play in the orchestra. The two and four-week terms give opportunity to those for whom music is an avocation to spend their vacation periods in its atmosphere.

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
JUN 5 - 1952

Berkshire Festival Programs Changed

Artur Rubinstein will play the solo in Brahms' Second Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival Aug. 7. The announcement was made today by Charles Munch, conductor, who made known at the same time other changes in the program and the names of additional Festival soloists. Brahms' Fourth Symphony was included in the July 31 program following the reecipt by the orchestra of the highest award of the Academis du Disque Francais for its recording of the Brahms work.

Margaret Harshaw, soprona, Charles Kullman, tenor, and James Pease, bass, will be soloists for the Wagner program that Pierre Monteux will conduct Aug. 2. Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor part in Berlioz' "Requiem" in the final Festival concert Aug. 10.

Cancelling the program listed for Thursday evening, July 31, Mr. Munch will conduct instead Faure's Incidental Music for "Pelleas and Melisande" and Ballade for Piano and Orchestra, Ravel's Piano Concerto and Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

Following the opening of the festival in the Tanglewood theatre this week-end, with an all-Bach program for Saturday evening (July 5) and Handel's Concerto Grosso in A minor for Strings, Dittersdorf's Symphony in C major, C. P. E. Bach's Symphony No. 5 in B minor, and J. S. Bach's Cantata No. 140, next week-end's programs will consist of Rameau's Suite from "Dardanus," Couperin's Concert dans le gout theatral, Purcells' Fantasia in A. for Strings, Vivaldi's Concerto Gross o in D minor and Lalande's "De Profudis" for Chorus and Orchestra Saturday evening, with an all-Mozart program of the three Symphonies in E-flat, G minor and C major ("Jupiter") Sunday afternoon.

Included in the 27 Berkshire Music Center performances listed in the Tanglewood calender of 49 events are five for the coming week: chamber music Sunday morning at 10, a composer's forum Sunday evening, the Bel Arte Trio, gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress Wednesday afternoon and a symphony concert by the student orchestra Friday evening.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUN 28 1952

MUNCH TO DIRECT ALL-BACH EVENT IN LENOX JULY 5

Opening Exercises of Berkshire Music Center Sunday at 3.30

Tanglewood, Lenox, June — Charles Munch will conduct men of the Boston Symphony Orche in an all-Bach program Satu evening, July 5, at 8.15 to open series of six concerts in the Tang wood theater-concert on the comin three week ends. Preceding the major Berkshire Festival in the music shed, which will start July 24, the concerts in the more intimate hall have proven more popular each year, until the audience on the lawn exceeds that within.

Richard Burgin, concertmaster, and Ruth Posselt, his wife, will be the soloists for the Concerto for Two Violins. The program will begin with "The Musical Offering" and close with the Suite No. 3, in D major.

Sunday afternoon at 3 the program will be Handel's Concerto Grosso for Strings, Dittersdorf's Symphony in C major, C. P. E. Bach's Symphony No. 5 in B minor and J. S. Bach's Cantata No. 140, the last to be conducted by Hugh Ross.

With the opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center this Sunday at 3.30 p. m., the first school performance will be given Friday evening July 4 at 8.15, when for the first time the symphony orchestra of talented students will play together. The first of six weekly chamber music concerts will be given in the chamber music hall Sunday morning, July 6, at 10, and in the evening at 8.15 the first composers' forum will be held.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
JUN 15 1952

In the East a series of 15 Concerts has been scheduled for the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., from July 5 to Aug. 10. Early reservations are advisable.

The program, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, ~~will be conducted~~ by Charles Munch, Pierre Monteux and Leonard Bernstein.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 5 - 1952

Munch Conduct Concert Tonight; Tanglewood Bow

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. — Charles Munch will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program tonight at 8:15 to open the series of six concerts in the Tanglewood theater-concert hall on the coming three weekends, preceding the major Berkshire Festival in the music shed, which starts on July 24.

Richard Burgin, concertmaster, and Ruth Posselt, his wife, will be the soloists for the Concerto for Two Violins. The program will begin with "The Musical Offering" and close with the Suite No. 3 in D major.

Sunday at 3 p. m. the program will be Handel's Concerto Grosso for Strings, Dittersdorf's Symphony in C major, C. P. E. Bach's Symphony No. 5 in B minor and J. S. Bach's Cantata No. 140, the last to be conducted by Hugh Ross.

* * *

THE BERKSHIRE Music Center's first school performance was given Friday evening when for the first time the symphony orchestra of talented students played together.

The first of six weekly chamber music concerts will be given in the chamber music hall Sunday at 10 a. m., and the first composers' forum at 8:15 p. m., when the works of those studying with Aaron Copland, Luigi Dallapiccola and Lukas Foss will be performed by their fellow students, and commented upon.

Music Shed concerts, in three series of Thursday and Saturday at 8:15 p. m. and Sunday at 3 p. m. each, will be as follows, conducted by Charles Munch unless otherwise specified:

* * *

SERIES A — Thursday, July 24: Beethoven, Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"; Brahms, Symphony No. 1 in C minor.

Saturday, July 26, conducted by Pierre Monteux: Cimarosa, Overture, "The Secret Marriage;" Schubert, Symphony No. 7 in C major; Stravinsky, "The Rite of Spring."

Sunday, July 27: Franck, symphonic piece from "Redemption"; Bizet, Symphony in C major; Dallapiccola, "Three Prisoners' Songs" (with chorus), conducted by Hugh Ross; Ravel, "Daphnis and Chloe," Suites 1 and 2 (with chorus).

* * *

SERIES B—Thursday, July 31: Faure, Incidental Music for "Pelleas and Melisande" and Ballade for Piano and Orchestra; Ravel, Piano Concerto; Brahms, Symphony No. 4.

Saturday, Aug. 2: all Wagner program conducted by Pierre Monteux: Prelude and Love-death, "Tristan and Isolde;" Wotan's Farewell and Fire Music, "Die Walkure;" Final Scene, "Siegfried"; Immolation Scene, "Gotterdammerung;" soloists, Margaret Harshaw, soprano, Charles Kullman, tenor, James Pease, Bass.

Sunday, Aug. 3: Beethoven, Overture to "Egmont;" Beethoven, Symphony No. 3; Debussy, "Iberia"; Honegger, "Danse de Morts" (with chorus).

* * *

SERIES C — Thursday, Aug. 7: Schumann, Symphony No. 1 ("Spring"); Swanson, Short Symphony; Tchaikovski, Symphony No. 4; Brahms, Seond Piano Conerto, soloist, Artur Rubinstein.

Saturday, Aug. 9: Koussevitsky Memorial Concert: C. P. E. Bach, Andante from Concerto in D major; Copland, Symphony No. 3; Sibelius, Symphony No. 5.

Sunday, Aug. 10: Berlioz, Requiem (with chorus) Andrew McKinley, tenor, soloist.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
NEWS
JUN

Berkshire Fete

Dates for this year's Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., are July 5 to Aug. 10. The festival is one of the Berkshire's top Summer tourist events.

[19]

The Times Union, Albany
July 13, 1952

Tanglewood Again Music Capital With Opening of Berkshire Festival

First Symphony Concert July 24

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

FACULTY—Hugh Ross, Aaron Copland and Charles Munch talk after the opening ceremonies of the Berkshire Music Center. Mr. Ross heads the department of Choral Conducting and Chorus, Mr. Copland is assistant director of the school and teaches composition, and Mr. Munch is director of the school and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Tanglewood, sandwiched between Lenox and Stockbridge, an hour and a half's motor trip from Albany, becomes the musical capital of the world with the opening of the major concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the big music shed, Thursday night, July 24. The fresh country air, cool breezes, ancient trees and gently sloping hills of the New England Berkshires provide an ideal setting for the three weekend series of orchestral concerts.

The guests at Tanglewood who are not holders of seats in the 6,000 capacity shed lounge on the lawns and listen to the music. On Sunday afternoons, when the weather is pleasant, it is not unusual for an audience of 14,000 music lovers to gather in the shed and on the surrounding lawns to listen to the world's finest orchestral music.

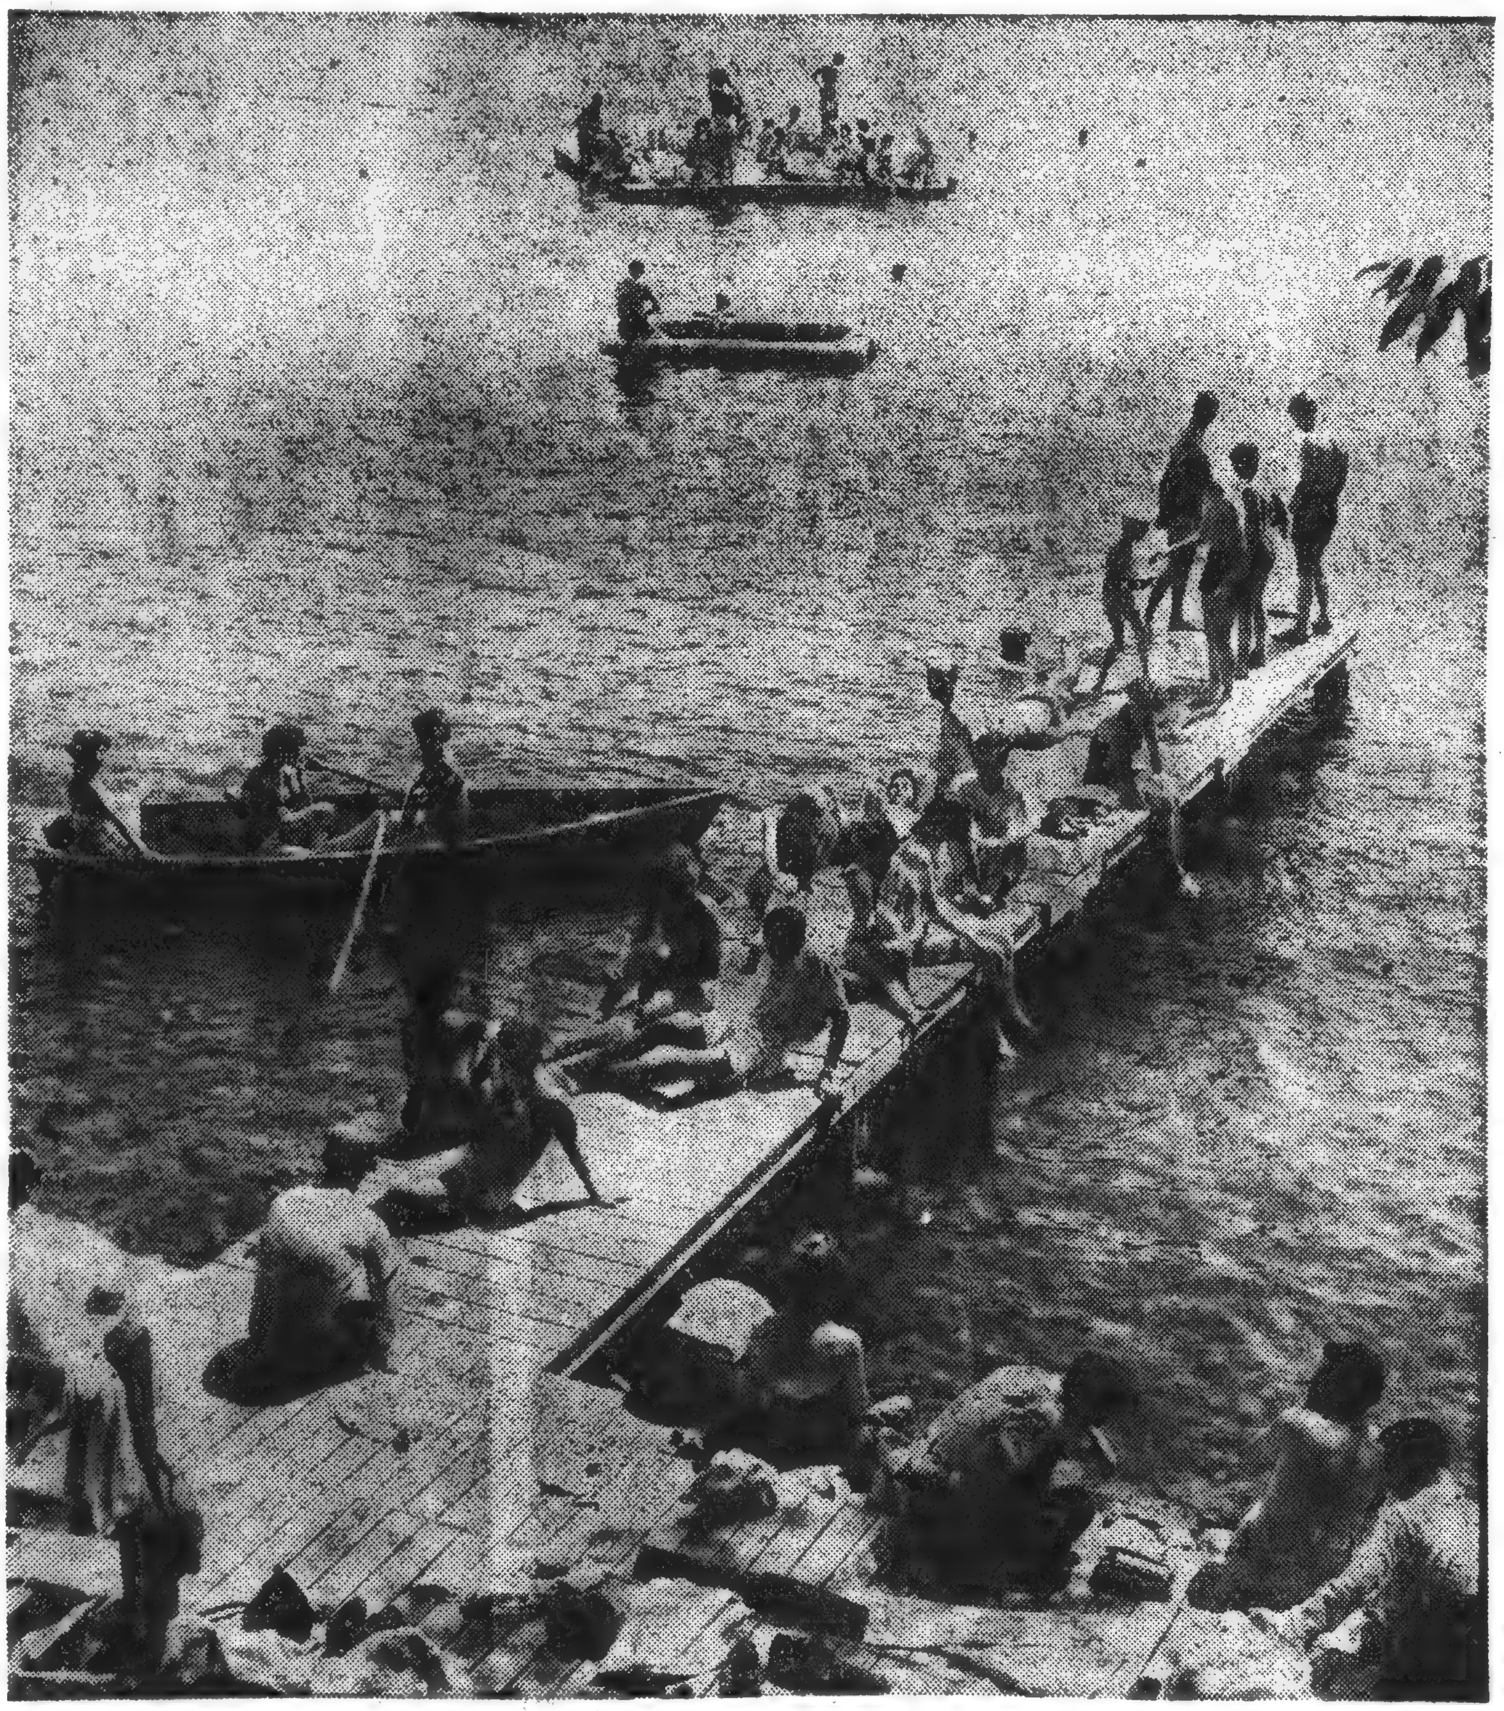
OPEN TO PUBLIC

Grounds are open to the public three hours before a concert. One may buy buffet lunches and dinners inside the gates. One is perfectly welcome to explore the grounds—the functional, starkly handsome shed; the Concert Hall and Theatre; the Victorian-gabled Tanglewood headquarters, once the estate's mansion, the converted barn, now used as studios, the lovely formal gardens and cultivated orchards.

Highlights of the three weekend series include Beethoven's Third and Brahms' First, conducted by Charles Munch, July 24; the controversial "Rite of Spring," conducted by Pierre Monteux, July 26. On August 9, Leonard Bernstein will conduct Aaron Copland's too-seldom performed Third Symphony.

Many of the concerts through August 10 are by invitation only to the friends of the Music Center. However, a nominal contribution constitutes membership. All other concerts are open to the public for a small admission fee.

The festival, which had its inception on the old Hanna Farms nearby, was first called: "Music Under the Stars." The orchestra shell protected only the players from elements. Today, the $80,000 shed, designed by the modernist, Eliel Saarinen, and built in the shape of a huge piece of pie, is equipped with a double roof to prevent the sound of rain drowning out the orchestra. Music lovers share the programs with the very essence of New England aristocracy. Formal attire in the double row of boxes which bisect the huge auditorium is balanced outside by thousands of young people, attired in plaid shirts, peasant blouses and blue jeans, the proper dress for their appreciation of Bach, Beethoven and Brahms music in the Berkshire Mountains.



ENJOYABLE—A crowd of students from the Berkshire Music Center relax in and around the waters of Lake Mahkeenac on a sunny Saturday afternoon.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.

JUN - 1952

Berkshire Festival Plans

The plan of procedure inaugurated by the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky for the Berkshire Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood is to be followed in general by Charles Munch who will conduct the concerts. There will be six concerts in the Theatre on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, from July 5 to July 20 inclusive and three series of concerts in the Shed from July 24 to Aug. 10 on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons.

The Berkshire Music Center will observe its tenth anniversary this season. Over 3000 students have attended one or more sessions of the six-week school of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Among the former students are conductors, assistant conductors and players in major and minor orchestras, singers in both the Metropolitan Opera and the New York City Center Opera, leaders of prominent choruses and choirs and teachers and music supervisors. Among the forty performances at the school will be symphony concerts conducted by Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Charles Munch and others; chamber music concerts under the supervision of William Kroll; opera performances under the direction of Boris Goldovsky; composers' forums with Aaron Copland as moderator; choral concerts directed by Hugh Ross and other events of interest to music lovers.

On Wednesday evenings in July four concerts of chamber music will be presented through the generosity of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. These will include the Bel Arte Trio; a sonata recital by Janos Scholz, cello, and Mikolas Schwalb, piano; the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble; and the Fine Arts Quartet of the American Broadcasting Company. Munch is director of the school with Aaron Copland as assistant director, Ralph Berkewitz, dean, and Thomas E. Perry Jr., executive secretary.

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE

JUN 27 1952

Music And Art

anglewood Opera Head o Lecture In Town Hall

Patrons of the Town Hall lec- re series in Toledo, directed Flora Ward Hineline, will ar a world authority on oper- ic stage direction and produc- on. Dr. Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan and San Francisco peras, head of the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, and artistic director of the official opening pageant at the World's Fair in 1939, will address the Town Hall ladies Jan. 31 on "Opera—Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow." These lectures are given at the Commodore Perry Hotel Saturday mornings at 11. Dr. Graf has produced operas in Vienna, Rome and Paris; has been stage director of the Central City Opera Festival and the festivals n Florence and Salzburg. He as written two books on various spects of opera.

BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE

JUN 28 1952

400 Students Arriving at Tanglewood School

LENOX, June 27—More than 400 students from 41 states and 16 countries will arrive at Tanglewood this week-end to spend six weeks of concentrated study at the 10th session of the Berkshire Music Center. For the opening exercises Sunday afternoon Charles Munch, the director, will come from France.

Also arriving are a distinguished faculty of 36, including Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Luigi Dallapiccola, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross, Richard Burgin, Ingolf Dahl, William Kroll and first chairs of the Boston orchestra.

Seven students will come from Canada; five from Israel; two each from Mexico and Argentina and one from Brazil, Chile, Turkey, Italy, France, Egypt, South Africa, Hong Kong, New Zealand, Honolulu, England and Germany. New York leads the states with 88, including 62 from New York city. Massachusetts is second with 42.

Ranging in age from 15 to 58, the majority of students are from 18 to 25.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 18 1952

BERNSTEIN CONDUCTS AT MUSIC FESTIVAL

Leonard Bernstein will conduct excerpts from Berlioz' dramatic symphony, "Romeo and Juliet," tonight at Tanglewood, when the Berkshire Music Center's student orchestra will give its third weekly concert of the season. Eminent as a conductor, composer and pianist, and director of the arts department at Brandeis University, Mr. Bernstein heads the conducting and orchestral sections at the Tanglewood school.

On the program also will be Schubert's Fifth Symphony, Elyakum Shapira of Israeli conducting, and Benjamin Britten's "The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra," Lorin Maazel of Pittsburgh conducting, with McHenry Boatwright of Boston as narrator.

Sunday morning's chamber music program, at 10, prepared under the direction of William Kroll, will include Mozart's Woodwind Quintet in E-flat major, Mendelssohn's String Quartet in E minor and Faure's Piano Quartet No. 1.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, by voluntary contribution to the school, are invited to both concerts, as to all other school performances.

[26]

The Times-Union, Albany
July 13, 1952

Tanglewood Again Music Capital With Opening of Berkshire Festival

First Symphony Concert July 24

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

Tanglewood, sandwiched between Lenox and Stockbridge, an hour and a half's motor trip from Albany, becomes the musical capital of the world with the opening of the major concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the big music shed, Thursday night, July 24. The fresh country air, cool breezes, ancient trees and gently sloping hills of the New England Berkshires provide an ideal setting for the three weekend series of orchestral concerts.

The guests at Tanglewood who are not holders of seats in the 6,000 capacity shed lounge on the lawns and listen to the music. On Sunday afternoons, when the weather is pleasant, it is not unusual for an audience of 14,000 music lovers to gather in the shed and on the surrounding lawns to listen to the world's finest orchestral music.

OPEN TO PUBLIC

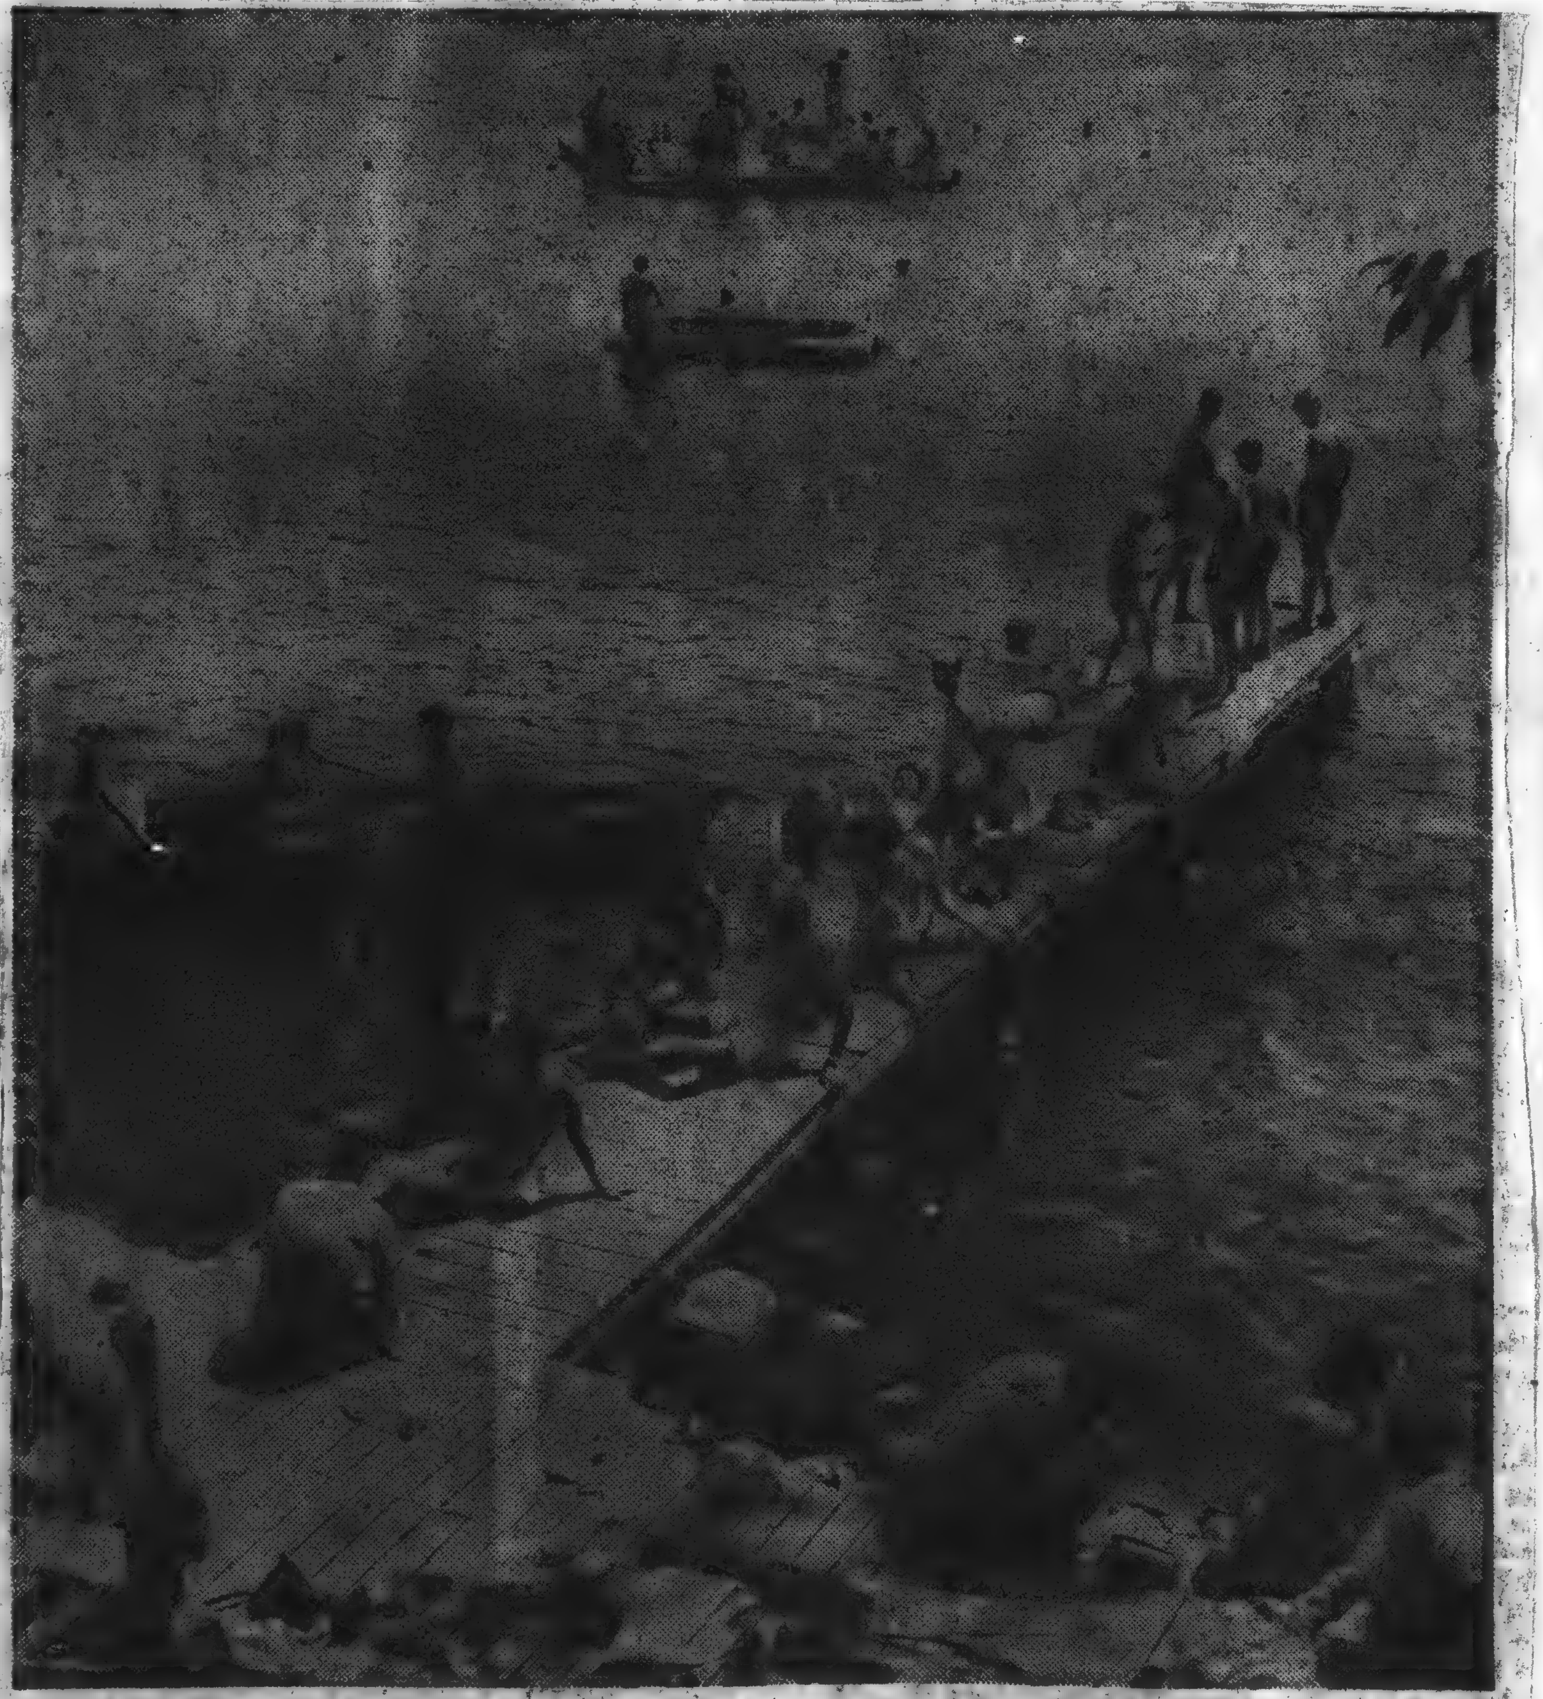
Grounds are open to the public three hours before a concert. One may buy buffet lunches and dinners inside the gates. One is perfectly welcome to explore the grounds—the functional, starkly handsome shed; the Concert Hall and Theatre; the Victorian-gabled Tanglewood headquarters, once the estate's mansion, the converted barn, now used as studios, the lovely formal gardens and cultivated orchards.

Highlights of the three weekend series include Beethoven's Third and Brahms' First, conducted by Charles Munch, July 24; the controversial "Rite of Spring," conducted by Pierre Monteux, July 26. On August 9, Leonard Bernstein will conduct Aaron Copland's too-seldom performed Third Symphony.

Many of the concerts through August 10 are by invitation only to the friends of the Music Center. However, a nominal contribution constitutes membership. All other concerts are open to the public for a small admission fee.

The festival, which had its inception on the old Hanna Farms nearby, was first called: "Music Under the Stars." The orchestra shell protected only the players from elements. Today, the $80,000 shed, designed by the modernist, Eliel Saarinen, and built in the shape of a huge piece of pie, is equipped with a double roof to prevent the sound of rain drowning out the orchestra. Music lovers share the programs with the very essence of New England aristocracy. Formal attire in the double row of boxes which bisect the huge auditorium is balanced outside by thousands of young people, attired in plaid shirts, peasant blouses and blue jeans, the proper dress for their appreciation of Bach, Beethoven and Brahms music in the Berkshire Mountains.

FACULTY—Hugh Ross, Aaron Copland and Charles Munch talk after the opening ceremonies of the Berkshire Music Center. Mr. Ross heads the department of Choral Conducting and Chorus, Mr. Copland is assistant director of the school and teaches composition, and Mr. Munch is director of the school and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.



ENJOYABLE—A crowd of students from the Berkshire Music Center relax in and around the waters of Lake Mahkeenac on a sunny Saturday afternoon.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
JUN - 1952

Berkshire Festival Plans

The plan of procedure inaugurated by the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky for the Berkshire Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood is to be followed in general by Charles Munch who will conduct the concerts. There will be six concerts in the Theatre on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, from July 5 to July 20 inclusive and three series of concerts in the Shed from July 24 to Aug. 10 on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons.

The Berkshire Music Center will observe its tenth anniversary this season. Over 3000 students have attended one or more sessions of the six-week school of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Among the former students are conductors, assistant conductors and players in major and minor orchestras, singers in both the Metropolitan Opera and the New York City Center Opera, leaders of prominent choruses and choirs and teachers and music supervisors. Among the forty performances at the school will be symphony concerts conducted by Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Charles Munch and others; chamber music concerts under the supervision of William Kroll; opera performances under the direction of Boris Goldovsky; composers' forums with Aaron Copland as moderator; choral concerts directed by Hugh Ross and other events of interest to music lovers.

On Wednesday evenings in July four concerts of chamber music will be presented through the generosity of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress. These will include the Bel Arte Trio; a sonata recital by Janos Scholz, cello, and Mikolas Schwalb, piano; the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble; and the Fine Arts Quartet of the American Broadcasting Company. Munch is director of the school with Aaron Copland as assistant director, Ralph Berkewitz, dean, and Thomas E. Perry Jr., executive secretary.

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
JUN 27 1952

usic And Art

anglewood Opera Head o Lecture In Town Hall

Patrons of the Town Hall lec- re series in Toledo, directed y Flora Ward Hineline, will ear a world authority on oper- ic stage direction and produc- on. Dr. Herbert Graf of the etropolitan and San Francisco peras, head of the opera de- partment at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, and artistic director of the official opening pageant at the World's Fair in 1939, will address the Town Hall ladies Jan. 31 on "Opera—Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow." These lectures are given at the Commodore Perry Hotel Saturday mornings at 11. Dr. Graf has produced operas in Vienna, Rome and Paris; has been stage director of the Central City Opera Festival and the festivals in Florence and Salzburg. He has written two books on various aspects of opera.

BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE
JUN 28 1952

400 Students Arriving at Tanglewood School

LENOX, June 27—More than 400 students from 41 states and 16 countries will arrive at Tanglewood this week-end to spend six weeks of concentrated study at the 10th session of the Berkshire Music Center. For the opening exercises Sunday afternoon Charles Munch, the director, will come from France.

Also arriving are a distinguished faculty of 36, including Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Luigi Dallapiccola, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross, Richard Burgin, Ingolf Dahl, William Kroll and first chairs of the Boston orchestra.

Seven students will come from Canada; five from Israel; two each from Mexico and Argentina and one from Brazil, Chile, Turkey, Italy, France, Egypt, South Africa, Hong Kong, New Zealand, Honolulu, England and Germany. New York leads the states with 88, including 62 from New York city. Massachusetts is second with 42.

Ranging in age from 15 to 58, the majority of students are from 18 to 25.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUL 18 1952

BERNSTEIN CONDUCTS AT MUSIC FESTIVAL

Leonard Bernstein will conduct excerpts from Berlioz' dramatic symphony, "Romeo and Juliet," tonight at Tanglewood, when the Berkshire Music Center's student orchestra will give its third weekly concert of the season. Eminent as a conductor, composer and pianist, and director of the arts department at Brandeis University, Mr. Bernstein heads the conducting and orchestral sections at the Tanglewood school.

On the program also will be Schubert's Fifth Symphony, Elyakum Shapira of Israeli conducting, and Benjamin Britten's "The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra," Lorin Maazel of Pittsburgh conducting, with McHenry Boatwright of Boston as narrator.

Sunday morning's chamber music program, at 10, prepared under the direction of William Kroll, will include Mozart's Woodwind Quintet in E-flat major, Mendelssohn's String Quartet in E minor and Faure's Piano Quartet No. 1.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, by voluntary contribution to the school, are invited to both concerts, as to all other school performances.

זיק מואוויס

דער 10טער יובל פון דעם בוירקשיר מוזיק פעסטיוואל איצט געפייערט אין טאנגעלוואוד

הגם דער בוירקשיר מיוזיק פעסטיוואל האט זיך אנגעהויבן אין יאר 1934, פייערט היינטיגן זומער טאנגלוואוד דעם 10טן יובל, דעם 10טן געבוירנטאג פון דעם „בוירקשיר מוזיק צענטער". לכבוד דעם 10טן יובל גרייט זיך טאנגלוואוד מיט א סעריע יום־טוב'דיגע, מוזיקאלישע אקטיוויטעטן פון אויסערגעוויינלעכן פארנעם.

עס כמעט ניט צו באגרייפן ווי שנעל און ווי ריזיג דער אמעריקאנער מוזיקאלישער צענטער, וואס געפינט זיך אין טאנגלוואוד, ניט ווייט פון פיטספילד, מאס., איז אויסגעוואקסן אין א משך פון 10 יאר. ווען מען פארגלייכט בלויז די ציפערן פון דעם עולם וואס האט באזוכט די קאנצערטען זינט 1934, ווערט קלאר ווי פאנטאסטיש די גאנצע אונטערנעמונג איז און אויף וויפיל דער באגער פאר ערנסטע מוזיק אין אמעריקע האט זיך פארגרעסערט זייט דאן.

אין 1934 זיינען די קאנצערטען באזוכט געווארען פון 5,000 מענשען. אין 1950 דערגרייכט די צאל באזוכער ביז 130,000. די מוזיק ענטוזיאסטען קומען ניט פון פיטספילד אדער לענאקס נאר פון גאנץ אמעריקע. מוזיקאלישע חסידים פארען אין דעם ניי־אויסגעוואקסענעם מוזיקאלישען צענטער ניט נאר צו הערען די וויכטיגע קאנצערטען, וואס ווערען געגעבען פון דעם באסטאן סימפאני ארקעסטער, אונטער דער לייטונג פון וויכטיגע דיריגענטען, נאר פשוט צו אטעמען יעדען טאג מוזיק. פון אין דער פרי ביז שפעט אין דער נאכט געפינט מען זיך אין א מוזיקאלישער אטמאספערע. מען מישט זיך מיט די בארימטסטע קאמפאזיטארען פון אונזער צייט, מיט די וויכטיגסטע דיריגענטען, די גרעסטע ווירטואזען.

מער פון אלץ פאראינטערעסירט דעם צושויער די באגייסטערונג, דער ענטוזיאזם, דאס פליהען אין די הימלען פון די זעהר טאלאנטפולע סטודענטען וואס קומען קיין טאנגלוואוד לערנען די העכערע למודים פון מוזיק, סטודענטען וואס קומען פון אלע עקען וועלט.

אפיציעל האט זיך דער פעסטיוואל געעפענט שבת אוונט, ווען טשארלס מינש, דער שטענדיגער דיריגענט פון דעם באסטאן סימפאני ארקעסטער, האט דורכגעפירט א באך־פראגראם מיט א פארקלענערטען ארקעסטער, מיטגלידער פון דעם פולען סימפאנישען ארקעסטער. די באך־מוזיק איז געווען זעלטען געהערטע מוזיק. דער עולם איז געווען א גרויסער. ניט נאר איז דער טעאטער וואו דער קאנצערט איז געגעבען געווארען געווען איבערפולט, נאר טויזענטער מענשען זיינען געזעסען אויפ'ן גראז אין דרויסען און זיך פלייסיג צוגעהערט צו די אומפארגלייכבארע באך־מוזיק. עס מוז דערמאנט ווערען, אז די אקוסטיק איז אזוי וואונדערליך, אז ווי ווייט אוועק אויפ'ן גראז מען זאל ניט זיצען הערט מען אפילו די שטילסטע און צארטסטע ניואנסען פונקט ווי מען הערט ווען מען זיצט אין דער צווייטער אדער דריטער רייע פון טעאטער.

זונטאג אין דער פרי האבען די תלמידים געשפילט קאמער־מוזיק. נאכמיטאג האט מינש ווידער דיריגירט א ריין קלאסישע פראגראם און אין אוונט איז אפגעהאלטען געווארען דער ערשטער פארום פון סעזאן. ביי דעם פארום איז געהערט געווארען מוזיק פון די יונגע קאמפאזיטארען וואס שטודירען אין טאנגלוואוד. די מוזיק אין מאדערניסטישען סטיל איז געווען מכל המינים — מוזיק פאר פיאנא, פאר סטרונע־אינסטרומענטען, פאר האלץ־אינסטרומענטען, פאר מעש־אינסטרומענטען און אויך פאר געזאנג.

נאך דער פראגראם ווערען געשטעלט פראגעס פון די איבעריגע סטודענטען, ווי אויך פון דעם עולם, בנוגע די קאמפאזיציעס. און די יונגע קאמפאזיטארען האבען א געלעגענהייט צו ענטפערען אויף די פראגעס ווי אויך אויף די קריטישע באמערקונגען וואס ווערען געמאכט.

לויט די באריכטען, וואס דער בוירקשיר מוזיק צענטער האט ארויסגעגעבען, געפינען זיך איצט אין די פארשיידענע קלאסען אין טאנגלוואוד אן ערך פון 400 סטודענטען. 41 שטאטען פון די פאראייניגטע שטאטען זיינען פארטראטען צווישען די תלמידים ווי אויך 16 לענדער פון אויסלאנד. אין דעם פאקולטעט געפינען זיך 36 לערער מיט אינטערנאציאנאלע רעפוטאציעס. צווישען די לערער געפינען זיך נעמען ווי אהרן קאפלאנד, לעאנארד בערנשטיין, דאלאפיקאלא, באריס גאלדאווסקי און אנדערע.

אויס'ן צעטל פון תלמידים, וואס קומען פון פרעמדע לענדער, געפינען מיר: 7 פון קאנאדע, 5 פון ישראל, 2 פון מעקסיקא און 2 פון ארגענטינע. די פאלגענדע לענדער האבען געשיקט צו איינציגע תלמידים — בראזיל, טשילע, טערקיי, איטאליע, פראנקרייך, עגיפטען, דרום־אפריקע, האנג־קאנג, ניו־זילאנד, האנאלולו, ענגלאנד און דייטשלאנד.

צווישען די קורסען, וואס ווערען אויפגענומען אין טאנגלוואוד איז אויך דא א קורס פאר דיריזשארען אונטער דער לייטונג פון לעאנארד בערנשטיין. פאר דעם צוועק איז ארגאניזירט געווארען א סטודענטען־ארקעסטער, וואס שטעהט אויף א גאר הויכער מדרגה. יעדען פרייטאג אוונט שפילט דער סטודענטען ארקעסטער א פולשטענדיגע פראגראם פון סימפאנישען רעפערטואר, דיריגירט פון די תלמידים־דיריגענטען. פרייטאג, דעם 4טען יולי, איז געגעבען געווארען דער ערשטער פון די קאנצערטען, די ערשטע העלפט, אנגעפירט פון די תלמידים מיט גרויס ערפאלג און די צווייטע העלפט פון טשארלס מינש, וועלכער האט דיריגירט די סטודענטען־גרופע, אין סעזאר פראנקא'ס סימפאני אין רע מינאר.

ווען מען דערמאנט טאנגלוואוד, מוז דערמאנט ווערען סערגעי קוסעוויצקי, דער איניציאטאר, ארגאניזאטאר און ערשטער דירעקטאר פון דעם „בוירקשיר מוזיק צענטער". א דאנק זיין אומערמידליכער ענערגיע, מוט, ווי אויך געלט איז דער דאזיגער וויכטיגסטער מוזיק־צענטער פון אמעריקע געווארען א רעאליטעט. ער האט צוגעצויגען צו זיך ניט נאר די גרעסטע קינסטלער, ווירטואזען און פעדאגאגען נאר אויך מעצענאטען, וועלכע האבען פינאנציעל געהאלפען פארווירקליכען זיין לאנגיעריגען חלום. ער האט ביי זיין לעבען געזעהן ווי צוויי פון זיינע תלמידים, וואס האבען שטודירט מיט אים אין טאנגלוואוד די קונסט פון דיריגירען, האבען דערגרייכט הויכע פאזיציעס אלס וויכטיגע דיריזשארען פון סימפאנישע ארקעסטערס. די צוויי תלמידים זיינען איצט זעהר טיכטיג אין דעם מוזיק צענטער אויף דעם זעלבען געביט. זיי זיינען: לעאנארד בערנשטיין און אליעזר דע קארוואלהא.

נאכ'ן טויט פון סערגעי קוסעוויצקי האט טשארלס מינש, דערזעלבער דיריגענט וואס איז באשטימט געווארען צו דיריגירען דעם באסטאן סימפאני ארקעסטער, אויך איבערגענומען דעם אמט פון דירעקטאר פון בוירקשיר מוזיק צענטער. מינש, צוזאמען מיט אהרן קאפלאנד, וועלכער איז געווארען דער געהילפס־דירעקטאר, פירען אן דעם צענטער וואס וואקסט פון יאר צו יאר און ציט־צו מער און מער מוזיק־חסידים, מוזיק ענטוזיאסטען, און וויכטיגער פון אלץ — מוזיקאלישע טאלאנטען וואס האבען די מעגליכקייטען צו קריסטאליזירען זייער טאלאנט.

דער גרויסער יובל וועט געפייערט ווערען די וואך פון אויגוסט דעם 1טען ביז דעם 8טען.

---

at 8:15

Bsn Daily [illegible] May 16 '52

Berkshire Friends

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Summer school at Tanglewood will observe its 10th anniversary this season. An invitation to join the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, issued this week by Dr. Lewis Perry, chairman, asks for continued support from former members, solicits new ones and lists some of the accomplishments of the 3000 students who have attended one or more sessions of the six-week school inspired by the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Among the former students are conductors, assistant conductors and players in major and minor orchestras, six Metropolitan Opera and 20 New York City Center Opera Company singers, leaders of prominent choruses and choirs, teachers and music supervisors.

Members of the "Friends," as in former years, are invited to the 40 performances at the school. They will include symphony concerts each Friday evening, beginning July 4, conducted by Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Charles Munch and others; chamber music concerts on Sunday mornings under the supervision of William Kroll; opera performances under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, including what is believed to be the first full stage presentation in this country of Mozart's "La Clemenza di Tito"; composers' forums Sunday evenings, with Aaron Copland as moderator; choral concerts prepared and conducted by Hugh Ross; song recitals and other events of interest to music lovers.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

MAY 4 - 1952

MUSIC STUDENTS SEEK TO ENROLL

More Tanglewood Applicants Than in 1951

Lenox, May 3—The number of advanced students of music who have applied for enrollment at the Berkshire Music Center, the summer school maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in connection with its ~~Berkshire~~ Festival concerts at Tanglewood, is greater than at this time a year ago.

Attracted by the recent announcement that all students in the advanced, active divisions will receive grants for tuition from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund young musicians from nearly every state and some foreign countries have asked for auditions, which are being held in centers throughout the United States by members of the faculty. Nearly 50 per cent of the applicants are former students, some returning for the third season. An Egyptian from Cairo will return to study composition; another young composer has been accepted from Tel Aviv.

Those eligible for scholarship grants include members of the student orchestra and chamber music groups, chorus leaders, students of orchestral or choral conducting, students of composition with Aaron Copland and with Luigi Dallapiccola of Italy, and those studying actively in the opera department. They will be required to pay only living expenses in the school dormitories or in guest houses or private homes in Lenox, Stockbridge and surrounding towns.

Interest is also being shown in the Tanglewood Study Group, in which amateur musicians and music educators may enroll for two, four or six weeks at the regular tuition rates.

The feature project of the Opera Department this season will be Mozart's seldom performed Opera Seria, "La Clemenza di Tito." Applications for admission to the school and inquiries should be sent to Symphony Hall, Boston.

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE

JUN 22 1952

Rare Works On Parade In East

By JAY S. HARRISON

THIS AWESOME array of goods continues with the already announced performance, by the opera department of the Berkshire ~~Music~~ Center in Tanglewood, Mass., on Aug. 4 and 5, of Mozart's "La Clemenza di Tito," a work of the composer's last year and a classic example of the final flowering of Baroque opera seria. The production, in most respects complete and the first of its kind in America, will make use of a new scenic device based on an elaborate slide projection mechanism, which was developed by the inventor, Paul Planer.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

MAY 30 1952

~~Four~~ Chamber Music Concerts At Tanglewood

Tanglewood, Lenox, May 29—Through the generosity of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, four concerts of chamber music will be presented at the Berkshire Music Center on Wednesday evenings in July.

The series will open ~~on July~~ 9 with a recital by the Bel Arte Trio, a string trio consisting of Ruth Posselt, Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes. The three musicians are members of the Berkshire Music Center faculty. On July 16 there will be a sonato recital by Janos Scholz, cello, and Miklos Schwalb, piano. On July 23 the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble will be held under the direction of Louis Speyer. The members consist of James Pappousakis, flute, Pasquale Cardillo, clarinet, Raymond Allard, bassoon, Harold Meek, French horn, and Mr. Speyer; Miklos Schwalb will assist as pianist. The final concert will be given by the Fine Arts Quartet of the American Broadcasting Co. on July 30 with Leonard Sorkin, and Joseph Stepansky, violins, Sheppard Lehnhoff, viola, and George Sopkin, cello.

These concerts will be held at the Theater-Concert Hall at 8.15. They will be open by invitation to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. All who are interested in the activities at Tanglewood are invited to join this society through which contributions help to support the school.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUN 1 - 1952

NEW WORKS SOUGHT FOR STUDY GROUP

Lenox, May 31—The Tanglewood Study Group, a department of the Berkshire Music Center, is inviting ~~composers of~~ new works, easy enough to be read at sight, or nearly so, to submit them for possible performance at Tanglewood this season. Under the direction of Ingolf Dahl, since 1945 associate professor of music at the University of Southern California, professional and nonprofessional music lovers will deive for two, four or six weeks into the realm of musical repertoire that is largely outside that of the other departments at Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In addition to works of Lully, Vivaldi, Johann Christian Bach and early Haydn, which are easy without being trivial or perfunctory, they will perform contemporary music, easy in the same sense, if it is possible to obtain them.

Aaron Copland, who is the assistant director of the school, is sending out a call for compositions for the new project as follows: "The preferred form is that of the chamber cantata for 30 to 50 mixed voices (including solo singers, if wanted) and a small orchestra of unspecified instrumentation. The instrumental parts should be grouped into nothing more definite than 'high, middle and low' instruments with parts in B flat, F. B flat basso, alto clef, etc. provided wherever feasible.

"Indications such as 'strings only,' 'woodwind only,' brass only' (in the sense of options within the continuous parts) may be helpful to overcome the possibility of monotony by constant doubling." Composers having works to submit are requested to describe their length and nature in a letter addressed to Mr. Dahl at Symphony Hall, Boston.

Munch Opens Tanglewood

By the Associated Press

Lenox, Mass.

Charles Munch, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center, yesterday opened the tenth session at Tanglewood.

Mr. Munch urged some 400 students at the Boston Symphony's summer school to take the responsibility for developing and expressing the inner life of the 17 nations from which they come.

"The realm of action, represented by the social struggle, aims at a momentary goal," Munch said, "while the realm of the spirit, represented by the arts, is eternal. The arts are a civilizing strength and civilization, despite its failures, is a just goal of the human spirit."

The six weeks summer school session is held in connection with the 15 concerts of the Berkshire Music festival which commences Saturday night.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
EVENING GLOBE

MAY 1952

Study Group Being Formed at Tanglewood

The Tanglewood Study Group, a department of the Berkshire Music Center, whose purpose is "to provide a unique opportunity for teacher and music lover to become familiar in actual practice with a great deal of fresh and useful repertory which they can take back to their communities," is attracting serious amateur musicians, music educators and others.

Ingolf Dahl of the music department of the University of California in Los Angeles, will head the study group. For two, four or six weeks the students will sing and play music of the Italian Renaissance and Elizabethan England, try their voices on the songs of the troubadours and the glees and catches of the time of Charles II, put together scenes from early Italian comic opera and sing and play chamber cantatas by living composers written especially for them.

Like most of the Tanglewood students, they will be members of the Festival chorus, who will be trained by Hugh Ross to sing in the Festival concerts, including Berlioz' "Requiem," to be conducted by Charles Munch. They may attend lectures, forum discussions and the performances by students and the Boston Symphony Orchestra during ~~their~~ enrollment.

Applicants include doctors, lawyers, insurance brokers, an Air Corps Reserve officer, a social worker, a woman accountant from Honolulu and an engineer from California whose daughter, an advanced student of the flute, wishes to play in the orchestra.

Applications and inquiries about the departments of the school, which include sections in orchestra and orchestral conducting, chamber music, choral singing and conducting, composition and opera, should be sent to Symphony Hall, Boston.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

MAY 18 1952

TANGLEWOOD STUDY GROUP ANNOUNCED

Lenox, May 17—The Tanglewood Study Group, a department of the Berkshire Music Center whose purpose ~~is to provide~~ a unique opportunity for teacher and music lover to become familiar in actual practice with a great deal of fresh and useful repertory which they can take back to their communities," is attracting interest on the part of serious amateur musicians, music educators and others interested in community music.

At Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, where Charles Munch will direct not only the festival, but the school maintained in connection with it, Ingolf Dahl of the music department of the University of California in Los Angeles, will head the study group. For two, four or six weeks the students will sing and play music of the Italian Renaissance and Elizabethan England, try their voices on the songs of the troubadours and the glees and catches of the time of Charles II, put together scenes from early Italian comic opera and sing and play chamber cantatas by living composers written especially for them.

Like most of the Tanglewood students, they will be members of the festival chorus, who will be trained by Hugh Ross to sing in the festival concerts, including Berlioz' "Requiem" to be conducted by Mr. Munch. They may attend lectures, forum discussions and the performances by students and the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the period of their enrollment.

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD

JUN 28 19

Berkshire Center Opens Tomorrow

More than 400 students from 41 states and 16 countries arrived at Tanglewood in Lenox this morning to spend six weeks of concentrated study at the 10th session of the Berkshire Music Center. For the opening exercises tomorrow afternoon Director Charles Munch will come from France, where he remained after the Boston Symphony tour. Also arriving ~~are a distinguished~~ faculty including Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Luigi Dallapiccoola, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross, Richard Burgin, Ingolf Dahl, William Kroll and first chairs of the Boston Symphony.

Welcome-Home Concert

[5]

Berkshire Welcome-Home Concert

Following Their Triumphal Tour of Europe

The 15th Berkshire Festival Will Open in the Shed

at Tanglewood . . . Thursday, July 24th, 8.15

The
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

in a

Brahms - Beethoven Program

Jay C. Rosenfeld, in a special dispatch to The Eagle, wrote under the heading TUMULT IN PARIS—"President Auriol and his family occupied the large main box to the left of the hall, which was filled to the last inch. Not a single person in the audience left his seat at the finale of the printed program but stayed prepared to show their genuine appreciation without regard for time . . . There has been a galaxy of orchestras and conductors in the past few days and there is no sense denying that the orchestras of the European capitals are of high calibre. But last night's event was of the deepest inner satisfaction to everyone concerned, the men of the orchestra, the conductor, the many Americans in the audience, and everyone else present. It was an artistic triumph."

Reserved Tickets $2.50 to $6.00

at

Tanglewood, England Brothers, Pittsfield, and Blue Bird Sport Shop, Stockbridge

iaole

Pittsfield, Massachusetts, Saturday, July 19, 1952

Plouffe

WEEK-END SOLOISTS: This trio will appear tomorrow afternoon at Tanglewood as soloists in Schubert's Mass No. 2 in G major with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Left to right, Lloyd Oostenbrug, tenor; Miss Sarah Mae Endich, soprano; and Mac Morgan, bass.

Haydn Works, Schubert Mass Highlight Festival Tomorrow

TANGLEWOOD — Two Haydn symphonies and Schubert's Mass No. 2 in G major are the program for tomorrow's Festival concert in the Tanglewood theatre by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting.

The Symphony in E-flat major was the 10th of a series of 12 which Haydn composed for performance in London. The Symphony in D major, composed for Paris as the fifth in a series of six between 1784 and 1789, was probably performed for the first in 1789.

The Schubert Mass, the second of six, was performed in 1815 at the parish church of Liechtental when the composer was 18 years of age. Written in six days, it was described by Sir George Grove as "not without tokens of hurry, it is a masterpiece." In the same year Schubert wrote 149 songs, including the famous "Erlkonig" and "Heidenroslein."

Soloist Tonight, Tomorrow

Miss Sarah Mae Endich will sing the soprano part in the Mass, as she will in Mozart's "Litaniae" this evening. Born in Steubenville, Ohio, she is a graduate of Ohio University. She has studied voice at Chautauqua, N.Y., and in New York City, where she is a secretary at the office of the Herald-Tribune. Soloist at the Central Synagogue in New York, she has sung in concert since 1947.

Lloyd Oostenbrug, tenor in the trio, graduated from the Curtis Institute of Music in May, studying with Madame Eugenia Gregory. He was leading tenor with the Curtis Opera and Musical Matinee in Philadelphia. He and Miss Endich are studying at the Berkshire Music Center, Mac Morgan, bass soloist, a former student, sang in the quartet for the Bach Cantata No. 140 at the second theatre concert July 6.

Hugh Ross, who has trained the Festival chorus for the Litaniae and the Mass, will conduct the former.

Tickets are on sale at Tanglewood for both programs, as for the major Festival that will open in the shed Thursday evening with an official welcome from Berkshire County. General admission for listening from the lawn will be sold the day of each concert.

Schedule Listed At Tanglewood

Standard-Times. New Bedford July 13

Special to The Standard-Times

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, July 12—The music of Mozart, Haydn and Schubert will be played next Saturday and Sunday in the Tanglewood Theater in the last weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts before opening of the major festival in the shed July 24.

Lukas Foss will be soloist in the Mozart "Piano Concerto in C Major" next Saturday night with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Charles Munch, who will conduct all but Mozart's "Litaniae, for Chorus and Orchestra," for which Hugh Ross will take the podium.

Haydn's "Symphony No. 99 in E-flat" and "Symphony No. 86, in D Major," and Schubert's "Mass in G Major" will be played Sunday afternoon. The Mass will be the concluding work in both programs.

The first evening of opera scenes by the Berkshire Music Center for the current season will be given Monday night, to be followed by a concert by the small choir Tuesday night and a Sonata Recital, gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress Wednesday evening. Janos Scholz, cellist, and Miklos Schwalb, pianist, will perform Beethoven's "Sonata in A Major," "Sonata Opus 4" by Zoltan Kodaly and Sonta Opus 8" by Dohnanyi, whose grandson, Christolph, is attending the school.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN

JUL 7 1952

Rubinstein to Appear At Tanglewood Aug. 7

Arthur Rubinstein, noted pianist, will be the featured soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, Mass, Aug. 7.

The announcement was made today by Charles Munch, conductor, who also made known the names of additional festival soloists.

Margaret Harshaw, soprano; Charles Kullman, tenor, and James Pease, bass, will be featured in the Wagner program that Pierre Monteux will conduct Aug. 2. Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor role in Berlioz' "Requiem" in the final festival concert Aug 10.

WILLIAMSON, W. VA.
NEWS

JUN 17 1952

World Of Music

Sponsored by the Elizabeth ...prague Coolidge Foundation in ...e Library of Congress, four con...rts of chamber music will be ...esented at the Berkshire Music ...nter at Tanglewood, ... on Wednesday evenings in ...ly.

The series will open on July 9 ...th a recital by the Bel Arte Trio, ... string trio consisting of Ruth ...sselt, Joseph de Pasquale and ...muel Mayes. The three musi...ans are members of the Berk...re Music Center faculty.

...nly July 16 there will be a so...ta recital by Janos Scholz, cello ...d Miklos Schwalb, piano.

...On July 23 the Berkshire Wood...nd Ensemble will be held under ...e direction of Louis Speyer.

The final concert will be given ... the Fine Arts Quartet of the ...merican Broadcasting Company ... July 30.

HACKENSACK, N. J.
BERGEN RECORD

MAY 27 1952

VIOLINIST GIVEN BERKSHIRE AWARD

Doris Chuberk Wins Scholarship At Massachusetts Music Center

Fair Lawn — Doris Chuberk, local violinist, has been awarded a scholarship for summer study at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass. The Music Center is a summer school of music maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in connection with its Berkshire Festival concerts.

The scholarship provides for the study of chamber music with William Krol and other distinguished musicians, and membership in the Music Center Symphony Orchestra. The orhestra will be directed by Leonard Bernstein, American composer, conductor, and pianist, and Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony.

In addition to private teaching and solo work, Miss Chuberk, who is a graduate of the Juilliard School of Music, New York, plays in the National Orchestral Association under Leon Barzin.

BOSTON, MASS.
ADVERTISER

JUN 22 1952

Castle Hill Concerts Set At Ipswich

IRIS FRIBROCK, 26-year-old soprano and very lovely to look at, will sing the role of "Zelmira" in the Arabian Nights farce which Gluck first produced in 1751 at Schonbrunn for the German emperor. Miss Fribrock, a graduate of the University of Washington School of Drama, has won many contests and prizes and sung several leading operatic roles. Since 1947, she has sung with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the late Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, at Tanglewood, in the Royal Theater in Sweden and at Carnegie Hall.

This Clipping From
PATERSON, N. J.
CALL

MAY 26 1952

Doris Chuberk Gets Berkshire Scholarship

FAIR LAWN—Doris Chuberk, Fair Lawn violinist, has been awarded a scholarship for study this summer at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass. The Music Center is a summer school of music maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in connection with its Berkshire Festival concerts.

The scholarship provides for the study of chamber music with William Krol and other distinguished musicians and membership in the Music Center Symphony Orchestra. The orchestra will be directed by Leonard Bernstein, well-known American composer, conductor and pianist, and also Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony.

In addition to private teaching and solo work, Miss Chuberk, who is a graduate of the Juilliard School of Music, New York, plays in the National Orchestral Association under Leon Barzin.

1952

Aliferis on Staff at Tanglewood

James Aliferis, associate music professor at the University of Minnesota, will join the staff of the Berkshire Music Center for its 10th season this summer June 30-August 10, in Tanglewood, Mass. He has been invited to work with Hugh Ross, director of New York city's Schola Cantorum, in preparing two choruses for appearances with the Boston symphony orchestra. The two groups consist of a large chorus which will perform the Berlioz Requiem and the complete "Daphnis and Chloe" suite by Ravel with the orchestra and a smaller group which specializes in unusual early and contemporary music.

GLOBE—TUESDAY, JUNE 3, 1952

Berkshire Chamber Music

The Elizabeth Sprague Foundation in the Library of Congress will sponsor four concerts of chamber music to be presented at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood on Wednesday evenings in July.

The series will open on July 9 with a recital by the Bel Arte Trio, a string trio consisting of Ruth Posselt, Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes.

On July 16 there will be a sonata recital by Janos Scholz, cello, and Miklos Schwalb, piano.

On July 23 the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble will be held under the direction of Louis Speyer.

The final concert will be given by the Fine Arts Quartet of the American Broadcasting Company on July 30.

These concerts will be held at the Theatre-Concert Hall at 8:15 as in previous years.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH

JUN 28 1952

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

JUN 29 1952

Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., begin Saturday night. First there will be a series of six concerts by members of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting. These will be given July 5, 6, 12, 13, 19, and 20 in the theater-concert hall. In the larger music shed there will be three series of three concerts each, to be played by the full orchestra. The respective series will be July 24, 26, and 27; July 31, Aug. 2 and 3, and Aug. 7, 9, and 10. Pierre Monteux will conduct on July 26 and Aug. 2. Leonard Bernstein will direct a Koussevitzky memorial concert Aug. 9. All other programs in the shed will be presented by Mr. Munch

---

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUN 30 1952

Munch Opens Tanglewood's 10th Season

Lenox, Mass.,—(AP)—Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center, yesterday opened the 10th season at Tanglewood.

Dr. Munch urged some 400 students at the Boston Symphony's Summer School to take the responsibility for developing and expressing the inner life of the 17 nations from which they come.

"The realm of action, represented by the social struggle, aims at a momentary goal," Munch said, "while the realm of the spirit, represented by the arts, is eternal.

"The arts are a civilizing strength and civilization, despite its failures, is a just goal of the human spirit."

The six weeks' summer school session is held in connection with the 15 concerts of the Berkshire Festival which commences Saturday night.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST

...Y 23 1952

"Titus," the opera which Mozart wrote in the last year of his life, will be performed by the Opera Dept. of the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 4-5.

This Clipping From
BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

JUN 7

Recitals by

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS

"TITUS," the opera Mozart wrote during the last year of his life, and the only "opera seria" of his maturer years, will be the only major production of the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood this Summer, Boris Goldovsky, director of the department, has announced.

The opera, "La Clemenza di Tito," will then have what will be probably its first complete production in America. There will be performances Aug. 4 and 5. There are to be no cuts, although the text, which is being translated into English, has been slightly revised.

[23]

TOMORROW'S SOLOIST: Lukas Foss, soloist for tomorrow night's Berkshire Festival concert in Mozart's concerto in C major, studies his score during the lunch hour in the Tanglewood buffet tent.

Final Series in Small Concerts At Tanglewood This Week End

TANGLEWOOD—The last series of Berkshire Festival concerts in the theatre concert hall will open tomorrow night at Tanglewood with two Mozart works and the Schubert Mass No. 2 in G major, in which Charles Munch will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mass will be repeated Sunday afternoon with Haydn Symphonies in E flat and D major.

The Mozart concerto in C major for pianoforte and orchestra, in which Lukas Foss will play the solo, was first performed in Vienna in 1785. The soloist is one of the Berkshire Music Center's outstanding alumni. He is famous as a composer, a conductor and a pianist. Formerly pianist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and often soloist, he is teaching conducting, chamber music and composition at Tanglewood this summer.

The Berkshire Festival Chorus will sing in Mozart's Litaniae de venerable altaris sacramento Saturday night under the baton of Hugh Ross, and in both concerts for the Mass, Mr. Munch conducting.

In the Litaniae tomorrow night the soloists will be Sara Mae Endich, soprano; Jacqueline Langee, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and Bernard Green, bass, all students in the choral and opera departments.

In the Mass the trio is composed of Sara Mae Endich, soprano; Lloyd Oostenbrug, tenor, and Mac Morgan, bass, a former student.

Tickets are on sale at Tanglewood and England Brothers for both programs. General admission for listening from the lawn will be sold before the concerts.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

MISS HILLIS DIRECTS CONCERT CHOIR HERE

THE CONCERT CHOIR, Margaret Hillis, conductor. Assisted by a chamber orchestra. Soloists: Jeanette Scovotti, Erna Gwillim, Eleanor Dubrer, sopranos; Mary Lynn Lucas, Ann English, altos; Grant Williams, Alan Sokoloff, tenors; Warren Wyrick, Eugene Brice, Robert Bald, basses. Carnegie Recital Hall.

Mass in B flat, "Theresian" .... Haydn
Three Psalms .... Eliot Greenberg
Liebeslieder Walzer .... Brahms
Trois Chansons .... Debussy

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood has been a germinal influence in the country's musical life, and one of its fruitful results was evidenced last night at Carnegie Recital Hall, when the Concert Choir, led by Margaret Hillis, gave a program of rare musical excellence.

The choir formerly was known as the Tanglewood Alumni Chorus, for Miss Hillis studied at Tanglewood and so did her singers of last season. The Tanglewood singers still form the nucleus of the thirty-two-voice group, and it is probably safe to say that many of the sixteen instrumentalists who assisted them last night also were from Tanglewood.

PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS-HERALD

JUN 3[illegible]

Munch Opens Tenth Tanglewood Season

Lenox, Mass., June 29. (AP)—Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center, today opened the tenth session at Tanglewood.

Doctor Munch urged some 400 students at the Boston Symphony's summer school to take the responsibility for developing and expressing the inner life of the 17 nations from which they come.

"The realm of action, represented by the social struggle, aims at a momentary goal," Munch said, "while the realm of the spirit, represented by the arts, is eternal.

"The arts are a civilizing strength and civilization, despite its failures, is a just goal of the human spirit."

The six weeks summer school session is held in connection with the 15 concerts of the Berkshire festival which commences Saturday night.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUN 29 1952

Six R.I. Music Students Enroll At Tanglewood

Six Rhode Island music students are enrolled at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., where more than 400 students from 41 states and 16 countries are expected to arrive this weekend to spend six weeks of concentrated study at the 10th session of the center.

The Rhode Islanders are Mildred S. Field, Providence, pianist; Jean Nixon, Pawtucket, soprano in the choir; Edith Fischer, Riverside, soprano, an associate in the opera department; Eleuftheria Constant, Newport, violinist; Jayne Bradshaw, Westerly, alto, a chorus leader; and Nedo Pandolfi, Manville, trumpet.

A symphony concert Friday night, July 4, will be the first of nearly 40 performances by students. The programs will include symphony, choral and chamber music, evenings of opera and composition, and chamber music concerts donated by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress.

They are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, whose members contribute to the support of the school. The Berkshire Festival concerts on weekends from July 5 through Aug. 10 are a part of the student program.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
JOURNAL-COURIER

JUN 30 1952

Boston Symphony Students Urged To Boost Arts

Lenox, Mass., June 29—(AP)—Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center, today opened the 10th session at Tanglewood.

Dr. Munch urged some 400 students at the Boston Symphony's Summer School to take the responsibility for developing and expressing the inner life of the 17 nations from which they come.

"The realm of action, represented by the social struggle, aims at a momentary goal," Munch said, "while the realm of the spirit represented by the arts, is eternal.

"The arts are a civilizing strength and civilization, despite its failures, is a just goal of the human spirit."

The six weeks Summer School session is held in connection with the 15 concerts of the Berkshire Festival which commences Saturday night.

BOSTON, MASS.
EVENING GLOBE

JUN 30 1952

Tanglewood Session Opened by Munch

LENOX, June 29 (AP)—Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center, today opened the 10th session at Tanglewood.

Munch urged some 400 students at the Boston Symphony's Summer school to take the responsibility for developing and expressing the inner life of the 17 nations from which they come.

"The realm of action, represented by the social struggle, aims at a momentary goal," Munch said, "while the realm of the spirit, represented by the arts, is eternal.

"The arts are a civilizing strength and civilization, despite its failures, is a just goal of the human spirit."

The six weeks Summer school session is held in connection with the 15 concerts of the Berkshire Festival which commences Saturday night.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.
NEWS

JUL 1 1952

★ Mildred Norton

Tanglewood

Charles Muench, returning from his history-making European visit with the Boston Symphony, plunges fr[illegible] Paris festival directly into the staider activities of the annual Tanglewood festival which opens this weekend in the Berkshires.

Arriving also to spearhead the six weeks of concentrated study for the Berkshire music center's 10th session are Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Luigi Dallapiccola, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross, Richard Burgin, Ingolf Dahl, William Kroll, and first chairs of the Boston orchestra.

KINGSTON, N.Y.
[illegible] LEADER
5/26/52

MUSIC NOTES

By JANE C. SHIREY

William Kroll, director of the Kroll Quartet and head of the Musicians Guild in New York City, will again direct the Maverick Concerts. Kroll will divide his time between Woodstock and Tanglewood, Mass., where he is to direct the chamber music department [illegible] Center.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
OKLAHOMAN

JUN 26 1952

Two City Residents Leave for New York

Miss Phyllis Prather and Miss Paula Bucy left Sunday for New York. Miss Prather is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hersel Prather, 1912 NW 12, and Miss Bucy is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. P. Bucy, 3213 N Virginia.

During the summer Miss Prather will study at the Juilliard school of music in New York and Miss Bucy will participate in the Berkshire music festival in Tanglewood, Mass. Both are members of the Oklahoma City symphony orchestra and of Sigma Alpha Iota honorary music fraternity.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.
OBSERVER

JUN 29 1952

RECORD CORNER

BY BOB PAGE

CHARLES MUNCH CONDUCTS

The performances given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the recent Paris festival of "masterpieces of the Twentieth Century" were unanimously hailed by European and American critics and served to reaffirm the imposing stature of conductor Charles Munch.

The festival once again proved that Munch is as much at home with contemporary music as he is with the classical and romantic. Although he is consistently identified with the music of his homeland — such as is heard in his new RCA Victor album, "Charles Munch Conducts French Music" — his actual repertoire is catholic in the extreme.

This new album by the Boston Symphony under its distinguished permanent conductor is made up of five shorter pieces by French composers. These performances fully reveal a facet of Munch's conducting that has helped place him in the forefront of the world's orchestral leaders — his unsurpassed creative expression of his country's music.

Playing works by Ravel, Lalo, Saint-Saens, and Berlioz, the Boston Symphony is heard in the rich tones and musical integration that made it a European sensation. Conductor Munch's inspired and understanding leadership is revealed in each measure of this sparkling collection.

PENSACOLA, FLA
NEWS
6/22/52

"Titus," the opera which Mozart wrote in the last year of his life and the only "opera seria" of his maturer years, is announced by Boris Goldovsky as the major production of the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Mass., this summer. "Titus" (La Clemenza di Tito) will then have what probably will be its first complete production in America.

There will be two performances on Aug. 4 and 5 at Tanglewood. The score of "Titus," parts of which will be brought from Europe, consists of an overture and 25 numbers in 3 acts. The score is entirely by Mozart except for certain recitative passages in which he was helped by Suessmayer.

Lenox Library Receives Grant From Koussevitzky Foundation

LENOX—The Koussevitzky Music Foundation will mark Saturday, July 26, the birthday of the late Serge Koussevitzky, by a musical program at the Lenox Library, and the presentation to the library of a check for $2000 to be used to make additions to its collection of books on music, scores and records.

This was made known today when Mrs. Koussevitzky, president of the Foundation, released a letter she had written to Miss Irene M. Poirier, the librarian, telling her of the action taken by the Foundation board on June 28.

"This gift from the Foundation to the Lenox Library has a deep meaning for me," wrote Mrs. Koussevitzky, "for, as you know, the Library held a special place in Dr. Koussevitzky's affection. He never forgot the enthusiastic co-operagiven by the Library to the Berkshire Music Center from the beginning. He also remembered with gratitude its help in keeping the spirit of music alive in the Berkshires during the war [the summer of 1943], when the Center and the Festival were suspended. It is fitting that the Foundation should recognize this bond of association with a gift. It is our hope tha this gift will help the Library t broaden its service in the field o music to the school and the community which he loved."

Program Next Saturday

The program of the birthday remembrance occasion, to be held next Saturday afternoon will include chamber music played by members of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center and motion picture films of Tanglewoo and the "March of Time." The program will take place in Sedgwick Hall, according to John H. P Gould, president of the Lenox Library. The auditorium, in the rea of the main library building, seat 325 and was the locus of a series o instrumental and vocal concerts fo the benefit of the Red Cross whic Dr. Koussevitzky sponsored in th summer of 1943 when all music activity at Tanglewood was su pended because of the war.

As in previous years, the Kouss vitzky Music Foundation has ma a grant to the Berkshire Mus Center, which was founded by D Koussevitzky in 1940 at Tangl wood, to be used in providing a to scholarship students.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 5 1952

Music Festival Opens Tonight At Tanglewood

Munch Will Conduct Boston Symphony in Program of Bach; Changes Listed

Special to the Herald Tribune

LENOX, Mass., July 4.—The annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood opens at 8:15 tomorrow night, when Charles Munch will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a Bach program. He will conduct five other concerts of early music at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon, Saturday nights, July 12 and 19, and Sunday afternoons, July 13 and 20.

Mr. Munch has made changes in two of the nine programs which the full Boston Symphony will play at Tanglewood between Thursday, July 24, and Sunday, Aug. 10.

Artur Rubinstein will be the soloist in Brahms' piano concerto in B flat major on Thursday night, Aug. 7, and Brahms' fourth symphony will be played in the completely revised program for Thursday night, July 31. The symphony was chosen after the Bostonians had received the highest award of the Academie du Disque Francais for its recording of this work under Mr. Munch's direction. The other works selected for July 31 are Faure's incidental music for "Pelleas et Melisande" and Ballad for piano and orchestra, and Ravel's piano concerto with Nicole Henriot as soloist.

The soloists for the Wagner program under Pierre Monteux on Saturday night, Aug. 2, will be Margaret Harshaw, soprano; Charles Kullman, tenor, and James Pease, bass. Andrew McKinley will be the tenor soloist in the Berlioz Requiem in the closing festival concert Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10.

The Berkshire Music Center's schedule for the coming week at Tanglewood includes chamber music concerts at 10 a. m. Sunday, and Sunday, July 13, a composer's forum at 8:15 Sunday night; a concert of the Bel Arte Trio, including works of Beethoven, Hindemith and Mozart, Wednesday night, and a student orchestra concert Friday night.

This Clipping From
CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
APR 1 - 1952

Final Auditions

Boris Goldovsky will hold final auditions for the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood Thursday, at 2 p. m., at the Cleveland Institute of Music, 3411 Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, O. An accompanist will be present. The Music Center's tenth season will open at Tanglewood on June 30 for a six-week session under the direction of Charles Munch and Aaron Copland, as assistant director.

N.Y. TIMES MAY 30

NEW TANGLEWOOD SERIES

Four Chamber-Music Concerts Set for Wednesdays in July

Four concerts of chamber music will be presented at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., on Wednesday evenings in July. The concerts have been made possible through the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, it was announced yesterday by officials of the center.

On July 9, the Bel Arte Trio will appear. A sonata recital will be given on July 16 by Janos Scholz, 'cellist, and Miklos Schwalb, pianist. The Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble under the direction of Louis Speyer will appear on July 23. For the final concert, on July 30, the Fine Arts Quartet has been engaged.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
MAY 30 1952

NEW TANGLEWOOD SERIES

Four Chamber-Music Concerts Set for Wednesdays in July

Four concerts of chamber music will be presented at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., on Wednesday evenings in July. The concerts have been made possible through the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, it was announced yesterday by officials of the center.

On July 9, the Bel Arte Trio will appear. A sonata recital will be given on July 16 by Janos Scholz, 'cellist, and Miklos Schwalb, pianist. The Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble under the direction of Louis Speyer will appear on July 23. For the final concert, on July 30, the Fine Arts Quartet has been engaged.

This Clipping From
PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
MAY 25 1952

TRAVEL AND RESORTS

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival will present Charles Munch and other guest conductors in a series of concerts of the great masters each weekend from July 5 through Aug. 10

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS
MAY 25 1952

Bassoonist Wins Scholarship To Berkshire Center

RONLAND SMALL, bassoonist who will graduate in June from Fairview high school, has been granted a scholarship to the Berkshire Music Center. The music center at Tanglewood, Mass., is conducted in conjunction with the Berkshire Festival concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Small, who is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Small of W. Norman av., will be a member of the student orchestra conducted by Leonard Bernstein and Charles Munch. He will also participate in chamber music activities. During the six-week period, Small will live at Hawthorne Hill at Lenox.

In the fall the young bassoonist will enter the University of Dayton

---

PAGE SIX

Tanglewood Group Applications Now

Applications and inquiries for the Tanglewood Study Group, a department of the Berkshire Music Center, are now being accepted at Symphony H… The two, four and six-week terms are designed to give an opportunity to those in this department for whom music is an avocation, to spend their vacations in its atmosphere.

Evanston, Ill
Review

JUN 12 1952

Fine Arts Quartet to Teach at N. U.

Members of the Fine Arts quartet of the American Broadcasting company will join the Northwestern school of music faculty as artists-in-residence for the fall, winter and spring terms next year, according to arrangements just completed.

The quartet, made up of Leonard Sorkin and Joseph Stepansky, violinists; Shappard Lehnhoff, violist, and George Sopkin, cellist, will come to Evanston after a summer at the Berkshire Music festival in Tanglewood, Mass.

Internationally known, the ensemble presents a weekly radio program over ABC, has toured extensively and records for Mercury Classics and Decca Gold Seal records. The group last year received the Musical America award for the best radio program of its kind, based on a national poll of music critics, teachers and radio feature editors.

At Northwestern, the four artists will give weekly lecture-demonstrations covering representative chamber music of the classic, romantic and contemporary periods, with a full discussion and performance of at least one string quartet at each session. The course will be open to all students of the university through the regular registration procedure. The quartet will also present a series of six public concerts throughout the season in Cahn auditorium of Scott hall.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
JUN 29 1952

Irene Jordan in leading role

To star in opera—Irene

Irene Jordan is singing the leading role in a Mozart Opera at the Berkshire Festival this Summer.

The Birmingham soprano will be heard in the Zilitta role in Mozart's "Clemenza de Tito," which will be making it's premiere in this country on Aug. 5 or 6.

Irene writes her mother, Mrs. Eugene Jordan, that she will sing with the Boston Symphony, Goldovsky conducting.

Birmingham's Irene Jordan, who made her Metropolitan Opera debut, then retired from the Met when she married Arnold Caplan, violinist in the Metropolitan orchestra, is a Judson College graduate. She studied—and later taught voice at the college, before going to New York to begin a career.

With her husband and two children, Irene is living in a cottage on a lake, seven miles from Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
JUN 1 - 1952

Mozart's 'Titus' At Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, Mass.—"Titus," the opera which Mozart wrote in the last year of his life and the only "opera seria" of his later years, is announced by Boris Goldovsky as the major production of the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood this summer.

It will have what will probably be its first complete production in America on Aug. 4 and 5.

A feature of the production will be a new scenic plan in which an elaborate mechanism for projection by slides, the invention of Paul Planer, will be used. Planer's invention has been used in the larger opera houses in Europe with conspicuous success. It permits spectacle effects in such scenes as the burning and destruction of a palace in this opera.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
SENTINEL
JUN 12 1952

MUSIC and the ARTS

By REV GEORGE ROBERT GARNER III

We have accepted invitation to attend the music series at the Berkshire music festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. in July. Last season we arrived at the end of the festival presentations. This year we will be present for the opening.

This Clipping From
CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
MAY 12 1952

To Tanglewood

Margaret McClure, mezzo-soprano, who studies voice with Robert Powell at the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, has been accepted by Boris Goldovsky to study in the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Mass., this summer. Miss McClure, a junior at the Conservatory, was auditioned by Goldovsky in Chicago last week and was informed Friday that she had been accepted. She is a resident of Portland, Ore.

BOSTON, MASS.
POST
JUN 30 1952

SESSIONS BEGIN AT TANGLEWOOD

LENOX, June 29 (AP)—Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center, today opened the 10th session at Tanglewood.

Dr. Munch urged some 400 students at the Boston Symphony's Summer School to take the responsibility for developing and expressing the inner life of the 17 nations from which hey come.

Composers Invited

The Tanglewood Study Group, a department of the Berkshire Music Center, is inviting composers of new works, easy enough to be read at sight, or nearly so, to submit them for possible performance at Tanglewood this season.

Under the direction of Ingolf Dahl, since 1945 associated professor of music at the University of Southern California, professional and non-professional music lovers will delve for two, four, or six weeks into the realm of musical repertoire that is largely outside of that of the other departments at Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In addition to works of Lully, Vivaldi, Johann Christian Bach, and early Haydn, which are easy without being trivial or perfunctory, they will perform contemporary scores, easy in the same sense, if it is possible to obtain them.

Aaron Copland, assistant director of the school, is sending out a call for compositions for the new project as follows:

"The preferred form is that of the chamber cantata for 30 to 50 mixed voices (including solo singers, if wanted) and a small orchestra of unspecified instrumentation. The instrumental parts should be grouped into nothing more definite than 'high, middle, and low' instruments with parts in Bb, F, Bb basso, alto clef, etc., provided wherever feasible. Indications such as 'strings only,' 'woodwind only,' 'brass only' (in the sense of options within the continuous parts) may be helpful to overcome the possibility of monotony by constant doubling."

Composers having works to submit are requested to describe their length and nature in a letter addressed to Mr. Dahl at Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
JUN 17 1952

Berkshire Festival Seats Available

Seats may be reserved now at the boxoffice of Symphony Hall for the six concerts at the Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the theater-concert hall. Charles Munch will conduct on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons starting July 5. Seats are also available for the nine programs in the Festival shed by the complete Boston Symphony on Thursday and Saturday evenings, Sunday afternoons, beginning July 24 and closing August 10. All Thursday and Sunday concerts in the shed will be conducted by Mr. Munch. Pierre Monteux takes the baton for Saturday evenings, July 26 and August 2, and Leonard Bernstein for August 9.

Summer Music

Charles Munch has made some changes in the programs for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first three Berkshire Festival concerts in the Berkshire Music Center's Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The revised lists are:

Saturday, July 5, 8:15: Music by J. S. Bach: The Musical Offering, Concerto for two violins (Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin), Suite No. 3, in D major.

Sunday, July 6, 3: Handel, concerto grosso in A minor, Op. No. 4; Dittersdorf, Symphony in C; C. P. E. Bach, Symphony No. 5, in B minor; J. S. Bach, Cantata No. 140, "Machet auf" (Hugh Ross conducting).

Saturday, July 12, 8:15: Rameau, suite from "Dardanus"; Couperin, Concert dans le gout theatral; Purcell, fantasia in A; Vivaldi, concerto grosso in D minor; Lelande, De Profundis, for chorus and orchestra (Hugh Ross conducting).

The programs for July 13, 19 and 20, and those of the nine concerts by the full orchestra in Tanglewood's Music Shed (July 24, 26, 27, 31; Aug. 2, 3, 7, 9 and 10) are unchanged.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

Berkshire Music Center Starts Session Tomorrow

The Berkshire Music Center will open its tenth session at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., with exercises at 4 p. m. tomorrow. It concert schedule begins with a student orchestra program Friday night, a chamber music concert Sunday morning, July 6, and a composers' forum that evening. As already announced, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood opens next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon with concerts of eighteenth century music under Charles Munch's direction.

Samuel Antek, conductor of the New Jersey Symphony Orchestra, will conduct today's concert of the NBC Symphony's summer broadcast series from 6:30 to 7:30 p. m. The program includes works by Frescobaldi, Haydn, Moussorgrsky and Jacques Ibert.

HYANNIS, MASS.
TIMES
JUN 28 1952

Calendar at Tanglewood Center Is Announced

Opening exercises of the 10th season at the Berkshire Music Center will take place at 4 tomorrow afternoon at Tanglewood, Lenox. Next Friday at 8:15 p. m., the symphony concert by the student orchestra is scheduled. On July 5 at the same time is the opening concert of the Berkshire Festival in the theater concert hall by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conducting.

July 6, at 10 a. m. will be the chamber music concert at the Center while at 3, a concert will be given in the theater concert hall by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Munch, again conducting. At 8:15 will be the composers' forum in Berkshire Music Center.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUN 13 1952

Tanglewood Seats Available

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces that seats now may be reserved at its Tanglewood, Mass., box office for six Berkshire Festival concerts on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons beginning July 5, and for the nine …ts by the full orchestra on …y and Saturday evenings …day afternoons beginning

---

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
JUN 9 - 1952

Going Places

And a must on our schedule is Tanglewood and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is preparing ~~a particularly~~ interesing season, including Pierre Monteux conducting Berlioz' "Requiem."

[25]

This Clipping From
CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
APR 1 - 1952

Final Auditions

Boris Goldovsky will hold final auditions for the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood Thursday, at 2 p. m., at the Cleveland Institute of Music, 3411 Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, O. An accompanist will be present. The Music Center's tenth season will open at Tanglewood on June 30 for a six-week session under the direction of Charles Munch and Aaron Copland, as assistant director.

N.Y. TIMES MAY 25

NEW TANGLEWOOD SERIES

Four Chamber-Music Concerts Set for Wednesdays in July

Four concerts of chamber music will be presented at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., on Wednesday evenings in July. The concerts have been made possible through the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, it was announced yesterday by officials of the center.

On July 9, the Bel Arte Trio will appear. A sonata recital will be given on July 16 by Janos Scholz, 'cellist, and Miklos Schwalb, pianist. The Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble under the direction of Louis Speyer will appear on July 23. For the final concert, on July 30, the Fine Arts Quartet has been engaged.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
MAY 30 1952

NEW TANGLEWOOD SERIES

Four Chamber-Music Concerts Set for Wednesdays in July

Four concerts of chamber music will be presented at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., on Wednesday evenings in July. The concerts have been made possible through the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, it was announced yesterday by officials of the center.

On July 9, the Bel Arte Trio will appear. A sonata recital will be given on July 16 by Janos Scholz, 'cellist, and Miklos Schwalb, pianist. The Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble under the direction of Louis Speyer will appear on July 23. For the final concert, on July 30, the Fine Arts Quartet has been engaged.

This Clipping From
PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
MAY 25 1952

TRAVEL AND RESORTS

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival will present Charles Munch and other guest conductors in a series of concerts of the great masters each weekend from July 5 through Aug. 10.

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS
MAY 25 1952

Bassoonist Wins Scholarship To Berkshire Center

RONLAND SMALL, bassoonist who will graduate in June from Fairview high school, has been granted a scholarship to the Berkshire Music Center. The music center at Tanglewood, Mass., is conducted in conjunction with the Berkshire Festival concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Small, who is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Small of W. Norman av., will be a member of the student orchestra conducted by Leonard Bernstein and Charles Munch. He will also participate in chamber music activities. During the six-week period, Small will live at Hawthorne Hill at Lenox.

In the fall the young bassoonist will enter the University of Dayto

---

PAGE SIX Boston Herald May 12

Tanglewood Group Applications Now

Applications and inquiries for the Tanglewood Study Group, a department of the Berkshire Music Center, are now being accepted at Symphony H The two, four and six-week terms are designed to give an opportunity to those in this department for whom music is an avocation, to spend their vacations in its atmosphere.

Evanston, Ill
Review
JUN 12 1952

Fine Arts Quartet to Teach at N. U.

Members of the Fine Arts quartet of the American Broadcasting company will join the Northwestern school of music faculty as artists-in-residence for the fall, winter and spring terms next year, according to arrangements just completed.

The quartet, made up of Leonard Sorkin and Joseph Stepansky, violinists; Shappard Lehnhoff, violist, and George Sopkin, cellist, will come to Evanston after a summer at the Berkshire Music festival in Tanglewood, Mass.

Internationally known, the ensemble presents a weekly radio program over ABC, has toured extensively and records for Mercury Classics and Decca Gold Seal records. The group last year received the Musical America award for the best radio program of its kind, based on a national poll of music critics, teachers and radio feature editors.

At Northwestern, the four artists will give weekly lecture-demonstrations covering representative chamber music of the classic, romantic and contemporary periods, with a full discussion and performance of at least one string quartet at each session. The course will be open to all students of the university through the regular registration procedure. The quartet will also present a series of six public concerts throughout the season in Cahn auditorium of Scott hall.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS
JUN 29 1952

Irene Jordan in leading role

To star in opera—Irene

Irene Jordan is singing the leading role in a Mozart Opera at the Berkshire Festival this Summer.

The Birmingham soprano will be heard in the Zilitta role in Mozart's "Clemenza de Tito," which will be making it's premiere in this country on Aug. 5 or 6.

Irene writes her mother, Mrs. Eugene Jordan, that she will sing with the Boston Symphony, Goldovsky conducting.

Birmingham's Irene Jordan, who made her Metropolitan Opera debut, then retired from the Met when she married Arnold Caplan, violinist in the Metropolitan orchestra, is a Judson College graduate. She studied—and later taught voice at the college, before going to New York to begin a career.

With her husband and two children, Irene is living in a cottage on a lake, seven miles from Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
JUN 1 - 1952

Mozart's 'Titus' At Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, Mass.—"Titus," the opera which Mozart wrote in the last year of his life and the only "opera seria" of his later years, is announced by Boris Goldovsky as the major production of the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood this summer.

It will have what will probably be its first complete production in America on Aug. 4 and 5.

A feature of the production will be a new scenic plan in which an elaborate mechanism for projection by slides, the invention of Paul Planer, will be used. Planer's invention has been used in the larger opera houses in Europe with conspicuous success. It permits spectacle effects in such scenes as the burning and destruction of a palace in this opera.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
SENTINEL
JUN 12 1952

MUSIC and the ARTS

By REV GEORGE ROBERT GARNER III

We have accepted invitation to attend the music series at the Berkshire music festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. in July. Last season we arrived at the end of the festival presentations. This year we will be present for the opening.

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
JUN 17 1952

Berkshire Festival Seats Available

Seats may be reserved now at the boxoffice of Symphony Hall for the six concerts at the Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the theater-concert hall. Charles Munch will conduct on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons starting July 5. Seats are also available for the nine programs in the Festival shed by the complete Boston Symphony on Thursday and Saturday evenings, Sunday afternoons, beginning July 24 and closing August 10. All Thursday and Sunday concerts in the shed will be conducted by Mr. Munch. Pierre Monteux takes the baton for Saturday evenings, July 26 and August 2, and Leonard Bernstein for August 9.

Herald Tribune
Sund. June 22

Summer Music

Charles Munch has made some changes in the programs for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first three Berkshire Festival concerts in the Berkshire Music Center's Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The revised lists are:

Saturday, July 5, 8:15: Music by J. S. Bach: The Musical Offering, Concerto for two violins (Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin), Suite No. 3, in D major.

Sunday, July 6, 3: Handel, concerto grosso in A minor, Op. No. 4; Dittersdorf, Symphony in C; C. P. E. Bach, Symphony No. 5, in B minor; J. S. Bach, Cantata No. 140, "Machet auf" (Hugh Ross conducting).

Saturday, July 12, 8:15: Rameau, suite from "Dardanus"; Couperin, Concert dans le gout theatral; Purcell, fantasia in A; Vivaldi, concerto grosso in D minor; Lelande, De Profundis, for chorus and orchestra (Hugh Ross conducting).

The programs for July 13, 19 and 20, and those of the nine concerts by the full orchestra in Tanglewood's Music Shed (July 24, 26, 27, 31; Aug. 2, 3, 7, 9 and 10) are unchanged.

Monitor, June 8

Composers Invited

The Tanglewood Study Group, a department of the Berkshire Music Center, is inviting composers of new works, easy enough to be read at sight, or nearly so, to submit them for possible performance at Tanglewood this season.

Under the direction of Ingolf Dahl, since 1945 associated professor of music at the University of Southern California, professional and non-professional music lovers will delve for two, four, or six weeks into the realm of musical repertoire that is largely outside of that of the other departments at Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In addition to works of Lully, Vivaldi, Johann Christian Bach, and early Haydn, which are easy without being trivial or perfunctory, they will perform contemporary scores, easy in the same sense, if it is possible to obtain them.

Aaron Copland, assistant director of the school, is sending out a call for compositions for the new project as follows:

"The preferred form is that of the chamber cantata for 30 to 50 mixed voices (including solo singers, if wanted) and a small orchestra of unspecified instrumentation. The instrumental parts should be grouped into nothing more definite than 'high, middle, and low' instruments with parts in Bb, F, Bb basso, alto clef, etc., provided wherever feasible. Indications such as 'strings only,' 'woodwind only,' 'brass only' (in the sense of options within the continuous parts) may be helpful to overcome the possibility of monotony by constant doubling."

Composers having works to submit are requested to describe their length and nature in a letter addressed to Mr. Dahl at Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass.

This Clipping From
CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR
MAY 12 1952

To Tanglewood

Margaret McClure, mezzo-soprano, who studies voice with Robert Powell at the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, has been accepted by Boris Goldovsky to study in the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Mass., this summer. Miss McClure, a junior at the Conservatory, was auditioned by Goldovsky in Chicago last week and was informed Friday that she had been accepted. She is a resident of Portland, Ore.

BOSTON, MASS.
POST
JUN 30 1952

SESSIONS BEGIN AT TANGLEWOOD

LENOX, June 29 (AP)—Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center, today opened the 10th session at Tanglewood.

Dr. Munch urged some 400 students at the Boston Symphony's Summer School to take the responsibility for developing and expressing the inner life of the 17 nations from which they come.

HYANNIS, MASS.
TIMES
JUN 28 1952

Calendar at Tanglewood Center Is Announced

Opening exercises of the 10th season at the Berkshire Music Center will take place at 4 tomorrow afternoon at Tanglewood, Lenox. Next Friday at 8:15 p. m., the symphony concert by the student orchestra is scheduled. On July 5 at the same time is the opening concert of the Berkshire Festival in the theater concert hall by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conducting.

July 6, at 10 a. m. will be the chamber music concert at the Center while at 3, a concert will be given in the theater concert hall by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Munch, again conducting. At 8:15 will be the composers' forum in Berkshire Music Center.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUN 13 1952

Tanglewood Seats Available

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces that seats now may be reserved at its Tanglewood, Mass., box office for six Berkshire Festival concerts on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons beginning July 5, and for the nine ts by the full orchestra on ay and Saturday evenings nday afternoons beginning

---

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUN 28 1952

Berkshire Music Center Starts Session Tomorrow

The Berkshire Music Center will open its tenth session at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., with exercises at 4 p. m. tomorrow. Its concert schedule begins with a student orchestra program Friday night, a chamber music concert Sunday morning, July 6, and a composers' forum that evening. As already announced, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood opens next Saturday night and Sunday afternoon with concerts of eighteenth century music under Charles Munch's direction.

Samuel Antek, conductor of the New Jersey Symphony Orchestra, will conduct today's concert of the NBC Symphony's summer broadcast series from 6:30 to 7:30 p. m. The program includes works by Frescobaldi, Haydn, Moussorgrsky and Jacques Ibert.

This Clipping From
ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
JUN 9 - 1952

Going Places

And a must on our schedule is Tanglewood and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is preparing a particularly interesing season, including Pierre Monteux conducting Berlioz' "Requiem."

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 7 - 1952

Tanglewood Throng Welcomes Munch Back

RUTH POSSELT, right, and Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (Mr. and Mrs. Burgin) played the solo parts in the Concerto for Two ~~Violins for~~ the all-Bach program opening the Berkshire Festival in the Tanglewood theater, Saturday night.

Tanglewood—Another Berkshire Festival season is underway.

Charles Munch conducted members of the Boston Symphony in the theater-concert hall Saturday night and Sunday afternoon, and incidentally they received a hearty homecoming welcome that must have made them feel glad to be back even from their triumphs in Europe.

The first program was all-Bach, "The Musical Offering," the D Minor Concerto with Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin as violin soloists, and Suite No. 3 in D Major. An overflow audience enjoyed it all.

Sunday's program started with Handel's Concerto Grosso in A Minor for string orchestra. There are partisans for smaller player groups for this concerto, but it is worth considering that Handel himself would have enjoyed this augmented presentation.

* * *

THEN CAME the Dittersdorf Symphony in C Major. Have you ever heard it? Karl Ditters von Dittersdorf himself is hardly known except to students of music history. He was of the same period as the Bach family; he produced operas, oratorios and symphonies. Gluck took him to Italy where he won renown as a violinist. But his star was eclipsed by other composers of his time. Because of the story of his poverty and sad death, his corner was sentimental enough to hope that his star might shine at Tanglewood.

* * *

BUT IT WASN'T the right symphony. The larghetto had a pale melodic appeal. The final prestissimo was flashy, calling upon all the technical reserves of the violinists—remember Dittersdorf was a violinist—but that was not enough for greatness.

* * *

HOW SHALLOW it seemed beside the work that followed—that of his contemporary, Carl Philip Emanuel Bach, third son of Johann Bach. Carl Bach's Symphony No. 3 in F major had body and tone and showed free use of harmonic color.

Then came the Johann Bach cantata No. 140 "Wachet auf, ruft uns die Stimme." Hugh Ross conducted the Berkshire Festival Chorus in it. Soloists were Sarah Fleming soprano, Mac Morgan baritone and John McCollum tenor.

It was a grand climax—that cantata.—M. I. F.

Music, Gentle Breeze, Moon at Tanglewood

This is not a critique. I am not a qualified reviewer; I merely go to concerts to enjoy them. And so was the case as I found myself sitting in the Theater Concert Hall listening to Charles Munch conduct in an all-Bach concert.

Waiting for the concert to begin I scanned the program notes and found the following: "Bach composed his Musical Offering in 1747 and presented it engraved to the King of Prussia with a suitable dedication on July 7 of that year." Saturday night, July 5, he not only presented his Musical Offering to a most attentive audience within and without at Tanglewood, but presented his Concerto in D minor for Two Violins and Suite No. 3 in D major.

* * *

MR. MUNCH, silently and yet so firmly, led his orchestra through the Musical Offering. I thought a particularly fine job was done in the Trio Sonata. Someone next to me remarked "That was a meaty dish" after it was all over, and that it was. One would have been satisfied to hear only the Musical Offering. But we were to experience more.

After intermission, during which time we all went out on the moonlit Tanglewood grounds, the Violin Concerto in D minor wove itself magically into our hearts and minds. Blond Ruth Posselt, lovely and graceful in her blue bouffant gown, and Richard Burgin played with verve and zest. The Largo was much like the breeze which you felt coming in through the side and back entrances of the hall — gentle and soothing. And then the verve of the Allegro! And the precision playing with which it came to an end! It was breathtaking and left a silence among the audience before the loud and appreciative applause.

* * *

THEN THERE was only the Suite in D major left to hear.

And we soon found ourselves out on the grounds again, the same moon peering through the trees, the same gentle breeze, only this time you were humming the Air from the Suite. It was a lovely feeling and for this we thank you Mr. Bach, Mr. Munch, Miss Posselt, Mr. Burgin and gentlemen of the orchestra.

—H. R. R.

Tanglewood Session Opened by Munch

Boston Globe 6/30/52

LENOX, June 29 (AP)—Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Center, today opened the 10th session at Tanglewood.

Munch urged some 400 students at the Boston Symphony's Summer school to take the responsibility for developing and expressing the inner life of the 17 nations from which they come.

"The realm of action, represented by the social struggle, aims at a momentary goal," Munch said, "while the realm of the spirit, represented by the arts, is eternal.

"The arts are a civilizing strength and civilization, despite its failures, is a just goal of the human spirit."

The six weeks Summer school session is held in connection with the 15 concerts of the Berkshire Festival which commences Saturday night.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 13 1952

Student Chorus Achieves High Standard in Cantata

Hugh Ross Directs Bach's 'Sleepers Awake' With Student Soloists at Tanglewood; Handel Concerto Grosso On Same Program; Three Mozart Symphonies Today

By VICTOR PRAHL

With the school at Tanglewood now in session, in addition to the regular concerts by members of the Boston Symphony, student concerts by ~~the~~ several orchestras, opera scenes, composer's forums, chamber and choral groups as well as the concerts buy visiting artists, are a daily occurrence. In listening to these performances most of which suggest the young professional rather than the student, one realizes the exceptionally high standard of talent maintained in the student body.

Balance of Parts

This was demonstrated again in the Bach cantata "Sleepers Awake" sung by the student chorus and soloists under the direction of Hugh Ross, as the second half of Sunday's concert. Such a performance was an achievement when one considered that the school had been in session but a week. Mr. Ross is a gifted and efficient director but it must be a source of great satisfaction to get such an understanding and musical response from his singers.

The tone was sure and beautiful in quality, there was a thrilling climax in the mighty opening chorus and a fine balance of parts throughout the work. All of the singers, including women who could negotiate the unison tenor line, joined the men in their chorus, and when the same melody was sung as the final choral there was a voluminous release of full-throated tone.

Among the soloists were John McCollum, tenor, remembered for his fine performance in the Messiah here this season. His short recitative was sung with style and authority. Mac Morgan, heard in several opera performances last year, lent his clear, lyric baritone effectively to a similar bit and joined Sarah Fleming in the grateful duet "Mein Freund Ist Mein." MIss Fleming has a youthful, fresh soprano voice of personal appeal which we look forward to hearing again during the season.

In a splendid performance of the Concerto Grosso Op. 6, No. 4 in A minor, Handel made his debut on these programs. With Bach's marvelous Brandenburg Concerti and the revival of interest in those of Vivaldi we are apt to take the 12 works in this form by Handel for granted, so it was good to hear this fine, sturdy piece played in such fine style.

Equally pleasant in this rspect was the short symphony No. 3, in three movements by C. P. E. Bach. Between these two numbers Charles Munch introduced a symphony by Karl Ditters von Dittersdorf (1739-1799). John Burk informs us in a program note that the music of Dittersdorf reflected the musical taste and fashion of the period more clearly than that of Haydn and, Mozart for while they too were of their time they stood above it as individuals of genius.

Just the same, the repetitious banalities of this work began to pall after a while, in spite of all the gusto Ccharles Munch and his players put into it, and one longed for a lesser-known work of one of the greater composers.

Mozart Symphonies

Tthis afternoon's concert will consist of three of Mozart's greatest symphonies, the E flat (K. 543), the G minor (K. 550) and the "Jupiter" (K. 551). The chamber concert by visiting artists will be given on Wednesday night by Janos Scholz, cello, and Miklos Schwalb, piano, who will play sonatas by Beethoven, Kodaly, and Dohnanyi. This concert is given through the generosity of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation.

Tangleeewood, however does not have a complete monopoly on summer music-making in the Berkshires. The Julliard String Quartet gave a concert at South Mountain yesterday afternoon which included works by Mozart, Beethoven, and Debussy and on July 26 will give another concert in the same setting when they will perform quartets by Haydn, Alban Berg, and Schubert.

This series will continue on Aug. 17 with the Cambridge Collegium Musicum, Aug. 24, Fania Chapiro, pianist, in an all-Beethoven program, Aug. 31, the Bennington Ensemble, Sept. 7, the Griller String Quartet.

LUKAS FOSS SOLIST SATURDAY NIGHT IN MOZART CONCERTO

Opera Scenes at Berkshire Music Center Start Tomorrow

Lenox, July 12—The music of Mozart, Haydn and Schubert will be played next Saturday and Sunday July 19 and 20 in the Tanglewood theater in the last week end of Berkshire Festival concerts before the opening of the major festival in the shed July 24. Lukas Foss will be the soloist in the Mozart piano concerto in C major on the evening of the 19th, with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Charles Munch, who will conduct all but Mozart's Litaniae for Chorus and Orchestra, for which Hugh Ross will take the podium.

Opera Tomorrow

Haydn's Symphonies No. 99, in E flat and 86, in D major, and Schubert's Mass in G major will be played Sunday afternoon. The Mass will be the concluding work in both programs. Tomorrow afternoon's program conducted by Mr. Munch will be all—Mozart Symphonies—in E-flat, G minor and C major ("Juniper").

The first evening of opera scenes by the Berkshire Music Center for the current season will be given Monday night the 14th, to be followed by a concert by the small choir Tuesday evening and a sonata recital, gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress Wednesday evening. Janos Scholz, cellist, and Miklos Schwalb, pianist, will perform Beethoven's Sonata in A major, Sonata, op. 4 by Zoltan Kodaly and Sonata, op. 8 by Dohnanyi, whose grandson, Christolph, is attending the school.

Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston orchestra and conductor of the Portland Symphony Orchestra, who is a member of the conducting and orchestra faculty, will lead the student orchestra in Richard Strauss' "Don Quixote" Friday night for the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, contributors to the support of the school, who are invited to all school performances.

Soloists will be Joanne Dempsey, violin, Victor Alpert, viola and Robert Sayre, cello. For the first half of the program Robert Mandell of the Bronx will conduct Prokofieff's "Classical" Symphony and Elyakum Shapira of Israel will conduct Beethoven's violin concerto, with Serge Blanc of Paris as soloist.

Chamber music will be heard Sunday morning at 10 and the composers' forum Sunday evening, as usual. Information on programs and admission for all Tanglewood activities will be mailed on request.

MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

JUL 5 - 1952

Artur Rubinstein Is Soloist In Brahms Work at Tanglewood

Artur Rubinstein will play the solo in Brahms' Second Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra [illegible] the Berkshire Festival on M[illegible]

Brahms' Fourth Symphony was included in the July 31 program following the receipt by the orchestra of the highest award of the Academie du Disque Francais for its recording of the Brahms' work.

[illegible] soprano [illegible] and James [illegible] soloists for the [illegible] Pierre [illegible] Incidental M[illegible] Pelleas and Melisande and Ba[illegible] Orchestra, Rav[illegible] and Brahms' F[illegible]

Following the opening of the Festival in the Tanglewood Theatre this week-end, [illegible] all-Bach program for tonight and Handel's Concerto Grosso in A minor for Strings, Dittersdorf's Symphony in C major, C. P. E. Bach's Symphony No. 5 in B minor, and J. S. Bach's Cantata No. 140, next week-end's programs will consist of Rameau's Suite from Dardanus, Couperin's Concert dans le gout theatral, Purcell's Fantasia in A, for Strings, Vivaldi's Concerto Grosso in D minor and Lalande's De Profundis for Chorus and Orchestra Saturday evening, with an all-Mozart program of the three Symphonies in E-flat, G minor and C major (Jupiter) Sunday afternoon.

Included in the 27 Berkshire Music Center performances listed in the Tanglewood calendar of 49 events are five for the coming week: chamber music tomorrow morning, a composer's forum tomorrow evening, the Bel Arte Trio, gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress Wednesday afternoon and a symphony concert by the student orchestra Friday evening.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 10 1952

Tanglewood Lists Week-End Programs

Programs for the Tanglewood Theater concerts by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday ~~and Sunday~~, at Lenox, Mass., are:

Saturday evening, 8:15 o'clock—Rameau, Suite from "Dardanus"; Couperin, Concert dan le gout theatral; Purcell, Fantasia in A, for Strings; Vivaldi, Concerto Grosso in D Minor, Op. 3, No. 11; Lalande, "De Profundis," for chorus and orchestra (Hugh Ross, conductor).

Sunday afternoon, 3 o'clock—Symphonies Nos. 39, 40 and 41, Mozart.

BOSTON, MASS.
POST

JUL 7 - 1952

6800 AT CONCERTS AT TANGLEWOOD

LENOX, July 6 (AP)—Three holiday week-end concerts at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, attracted ~~6800 persons~~.

An all-Bach program Saturday night drew a record attendance of 3800. Today's festival concert was heard by 2500 and 500 students attended the Sunday morning chamber music program.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE

JUL 7 - 1952

Record Crowd At Tanglewood

The Berkshire ~~Music Center~~ at Tanglewood, initiated in 1940, Saturday began what may be its greatest year.

A record crowd of 3800 turned out, under ideal weather conditions which included a full moon, to see and hear Charles Munch conduct the celebrated Boston Symphony orchestra in an all Bach program. It was an auspicious start as the conductor and musicians expertly presented three of Bach's compositions.

A crowd of 2500 heard the second concert yesterday afternoon as the fine weather continued. This brought the two-day total attendance to 6300.

[26]

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUL 5 - 1952

CHARLES MUNCH, Tanglewood director, swings a golf club as well as a baton

music in the mountains

In the rolling Berkshire hills July 5, the nation's top music festival will be officially launched when a six-foot, slender, gray-haired conductor steps briskly to the podium of an ultra-modern theatre.

The conductor will be, of course, Charles Munch, brilliant French-born director of the Boston Symphony, and the occasion the annual Music Festival at Tanglewood, Massachusetts. This six-week music conclave has put the United States on the musical map, to rank along with the tourist-packed festivals Europeans have so carefully nurtured for generations.

Tanglewood, sandwiched between Lenox and Stockbridge, is just 150 miles from New York, convenient to reach by car or train. It is one of the most beautiful vacation areas in the East—no guide-book propaganda, either. The fresh country air, cool breezes, ancient trees and gently sloping hills of the New England Berkshires provide a spectacular setting for the music.

The guests at Tanglewood lounge on the lawns and listen to the music. Although the $80,000 Shed, designed by modernist Eliel Saarinen, seats some 6,000, an equal number can hear the concerts from the lawn. Many al fresco listeners come equipped with blankets, pillows and picnic baskets.

Grounds are open to the public three hours before a concert. You may buy buffet lunches and dinners inside the gate. And you are perfectly welcome to explore the grounds—the functional, starkly handsome Shed, the Concert Hall and Theatre; the Victorian-gabled Tanglewood General Headquarters, once the estate's mansion; the converted barn and garage now used as studios; the lovely formal gardens and cultivated orchards.

It is difficult to suggest any single performance to the Berkshire vacationer. Any day, from 10:15 in the morning to 11 at night, you can hear some of the finest musicians anywhere. Munch and members of the Boston Symphony, Saturday evening, July 5, will present three works of Bach as well as the little known "Fifth Symphony" by his son, C.P.E. Bach. Sunday afternoon, July 6, Munch will conduct short compositions of Rameau, Couperin, Purcell and the magnificent "Concerto Grosso in D Minor" of Vivaldi. Maestro Munch, Saturday evening, July 19, conducts Mozart's "Piano Concerto in C Major" and Hugh Ross conducts Mozart's "Litaniae for Chorus and Orchestra." Other choice programs include: July 24, Beethoven's Third and Brahms' First, conducted by Munch; July 26, Pierre Monteux conducting the Boston Symphony in the perennially controversial "Rite of Spring"; August 9, Leonard Bernstein conducting Aaron Copland's too-seldom-performed Third Symphony.

Photo by Edward Blakeman

MUSIC FANS at Berkshire Festival collect autograph of Gregor Piatigorsky, who teaches chamber music classes in the summer school

MANY of the concerts, through August 10, are by invitation only to the Friends of the Music Center. However, a nominal contribution constitutes membership. All other concerts are open to the public for a small admission fee.

During the day, musicians practice on the lawn outside their studios. There is a wonderful air of informality about the place. You may find yourself chatting with Gregor Piatigorsky or Aaron Copland over a frozen Popsicle or playing poker with Leonard Bernstein. On announced Saturday mornings at ten sharp. you may attend the rehearsals in the Shed.

Tanglewood is a famed summer school for professional musicians as well as a festival; its students come from all over the globe. They set the clothes style. Don't dress for Carnegie in these hills. Plaid shirts, peasant blouses and blue jeans are proper attire for listening to Beethoven under the stars. —E. L.

14

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 5 -

BRAHMS WORK WILL BE PLAYED BY RUBINSTEIN

Munch Reveals Changes in Aug. 7 Program at Tanglewood

Tanglewood, Lenox—Artur Rubinstein will play the solo in Brahms' Second Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival Aug. 7. The announcement was made by Charles Munch, conductor, who made known at the same time other changes in the program and the names of additional Festival soloists. Brahms' Fourth Symphony was included in the July 31 program following the receipt by the orchestra of the highest award of the Academie du Disque Francais for its recording of the Brahms work.

Margaret Harshaw, soprano, Charles Kullman, tenor, and James Pease, bass, will be soloists for the Wagner program that Pierre Monteux will conduct Aug. 2. Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor part in Berlioz' "Requiem" in the final Festival concert Aug. 10.

Cancelling the program lsited for Thursday evening, July 31, Mr. Munch will conduct instead Faure's Incidental Music for "Pelleas and Melisande" and Ballade for Piano and Orchestra, Ravel's Piano Concerto and Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

Saturday, July 5 at 8.15. Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program in the Theater (Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin, soloists). The Musical Offering Concerto for Two Violins Suite No. 3, in D major.

Sunday, July 6 at 10 a. m. * Chamber Music.

At 3 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert (Charles Munch, conducting)

Handel .... Concerto Grosso in A minor for Strings
Dittersdorf .... Symphony in C major
C. P. S. Bach .... Symphony No. 5
J. S. Bach .... Cantata No. 140
(Conducted by Hugh Ross)

At 8.15. * Composers' Forum.

Wednesday, July 9 8.15. Bel Arte Trio (Coolidge Concert) (Ruth Posselt, violinist, Joseph de Pasquele, violist, and Samuel Mayes, cellist)

Beethoven .... Trio in G major
Hindemith .... Trio, opus 34
Mozart .... Divertimento for Violin Viola and Violincello

Friday, July 11 at 8.15. Symphony Concert by Student Orchestra.

Saturday, July 12 at 8.15. Berkshire Festival Concert (Charles Munch, conductor)

Rameau .... Suite from "Dardanus"
Couperin .... Concert dans le gout theatral
Purcell .... Fantasia in A. for Strings
Vivaldi ...... Concerto Grosso in D minor
Lalande ...... "De Profundis" for Chorus and Orchestra
(Conducted by Hugh Ross)

Sunday, July 13, at 10 a. m. Chamber Music.

At 3 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert (Charles Munch, conducting)

Mozart .... Symphony in E flat
Mozart .... Symphony in G minor
Mozart .... Symphony in C major ("Jupiter")

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
JUL 3 - 1952

All-Bach Program Set At Tanglewood Saturday

The Berkshire Music Festival Theater-Concert Hall series will open at 8:15 p. m. Saturday at Tanglewood with Charles Munch conducting members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program.

The musical offerings will be the famous Double Violin Concerto, with Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin as the soloists, and also the Suite No. 3 in D Major.

On Sunday this phase of the festival will continue with a concert at 3 p. m. in which the program will consist of Handel's Concerto Grosso in A Minor for Strings, Dittersdorf's Symphony in C Major, Q.P.S. Bach's Symphony No. 5 and J. S. Bach's Cantata No. 140. Mr. Munch will conduct the orchestra and Hugh Ross the cantata chorus. The vocal soloists will be Sarah Fleming, soprano; Shirley Winston, mezzo soprano; John McCollum, tenor and Richard Sharretts, bass.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
JUL 6 - 1952

FIVE YOUNG DETROIT musicians will take part in activities at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Matha Alexander, of 15 Webb, will study piano with the Tanglewood Study Group; Leah Crohn, of 9269 Wildemere, will be in the soprano section of the Opera Associates; Kurt Safir, of 18618 Ilene, will study coaching and piano, and Shirley R. Schubiner, of 3315 Webb, will study piano.

DALLAS, TEX.
TIMES HERALD
JUL 7 - 1952

Artur Rubinstein in Tanglewood Solo Spot

Special to The Times Herald

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., July 7.—Artur Rubinstein will play the solo in Brahms' Second Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival Aug. 7.

The announcement was made by Charles Munch, conductor, who made known at the same time other changes in the program and the names of additional Festival soloists. Brahms' Fourth Symphony was included in the July 31 program following the receipt by the orchestra of the highest award of the Academie du Disque Francais for its recording of the Brahms work.

Margaret Harshaw, soprano, Charles Kullman, tenor, and James Pease, bass, will be soloists for the Wagner program that Pierre Monteux will conduct Aug. 2. Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor part in Berlioz' "Requiem" in the final Festival concert Aug. 10.

Canceling the program listed for Thursday evening, July 31, Mr. Munch will conduct instead Faure's Incidental Music for "Pelleas and Melisande" and Ballade for Piano and Orchestra, Ravel's Piano Concerto and Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

FORT WORTH, TEXAS
MORNING STAR-TELEGRAM
JUL 6 1952

400 Are Enrolled For Berkshire Music Sessions

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 5 (Spl).—More than 400 students from 41 states and 16 countries have begun their six-week study program at the 10th session of the Berkshire Music Center.

Charles Munch has returned from France, where he remained after his tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the opening exercises. Among the faculty of 36 are Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Luigi Dallapiccola, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross, Richard Burgin, William Kroll and first chairmen of the Boston Symphony. Students are here from as far as Egypt, South Africa and New Zealand.

[27]

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 6 1952

CHANGES AT BERKSHIRE

New Programs July 31, Aug. 7 Listed for Music Festival

Several changes in the programs of the Berkshire Festival were made known yesterday. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, has canceled the program originally scheduled for July 31, and has substituted instead the incidental music to Fauré's "Pelléas et Mélisande" Suite, the Fauré Ballade for Piano and Orchestra, the Ravel Piano Concerto and the Brahms Fourth Symphony. Nicole Henriot will be the soloist.

Another change involves the program of Aug. 7, when Artur Rubinstein will be piano soloist in the Brahms Second Concerto, which replaces the Tchaikovsky Fourth Symphony.

The soloists for the all-Wagner program, to be conducted by Pierre Monteux on Aug. 2, also were announced yesterday. They will be Margaret Harshaw, soprano; Charles Kullmann, tenor, and James Pease, bass.

At the final concert of the festival, the afternoon of Aug. 10, Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor part in the Berlioz Requiem.

BOSTON, MASS.
POST
JUL 6 - 1952

The Observant Citizen

Artur Rubinstein will play the solo in Brahms' Second Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival Aug. 7. The announcement was made by Charles Munch, conductor, who made known at the same time other changes in the program and the names of additional festival soloists. Brahms Fourth Symphony was included in the July 31 program, following the receipt by the orchestra of the highest award of the Academie du Disque Francais for its recording of the Brahms work.

Margaret Harshaw, soprano; Charles Kullman, tenor, and James Pease, bass, will be soloists for the Wagner program that Pierre Monteux will conduct Aug. 2. Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor part in Berlioz' "Requiem" in the final festival concert Aug. 10.

Cancelling the program listed for Thursday evening, July 31, Mr. Munch will conduct instead Faure's Incidental Music for "Pelleas and Melisande" and Ballade for Piano and Orchestra, Ravel's Piano Concerto and Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUL 5 - 1952

CHARLES MUNCH, Tanglewood director, swings a golf club as well as a baton

music in the mountains

In the rolling Berkshire hills July 5, the nation's top music festival will be officially launched when a six-foot, slender, gray-haired conductor steps briskly to the podium of an ultra-modern theatre.

The conductor will be, of course, Charles Munch, brilliant French-born director of the Boston Symphony, and the occasion the annual Music Festival at Tanglewood, Massachusetts. This six-week music conclave has put the United States on the musical map, to rank along with the tourist-packed festivals Europeans have so carefully nurtured for generations.

Tanglewood, sandwiched between Lenox and Stockbridge, is just 150 miles from New York, convenient to reach by car or train. It is one of the most beautiful vacation areas in the East—no guide-book propaganda, either. The fresh country air, cool breezes, ancient trees and gently sloping hills of the New England Berkshires provide a spectacular setting for the music.

The guests at Tanglewood lounge on the lawns and listen to the music. Although the $80,000 Shed, designed by modernist Eliel Saarinen, seats some 6,000, an equal number can hear the concerts from the lawn. Many al fresco listeners come equipped with blankets, pillows and picnic baskets.

Grounds are open to the public three hours before a concert. You may buy buffet lunches and dinners inside the gate. And you are perfectly welcome to explore the grounds—the functional, starkly handsome Shed, the Concert Hall and Theatre; the Victorian-gabled Tanglewood General Headquarters, once the estate's mansion; the converted barn and garage now used as studios; the lovely formal gardens and cultivated orchards.

It is difficult to suggest any single performance to the Berkshire vacationer. Any day, from 10:15 in the morning to 11 at night, you can hear some of the finest musicians anywhere. Munch and members of the Boston Symphony, Saturday evening, July 5, will present three works of Bach as well as the little known "Fifth Symphony" by his son, C.P.E. Bach. Sunday afternoon, July 6, Munch will conduct short compositions of Rameau, Couperin, Purcell and the magnificent "Concerto Grosso in D Minor" of Vivaldi. Maestro Munch, Saturday evening, July 19, conducts Mozart's "Piano Concerto in C Major" and Hugh Ross conducts Mozart's "Litaniae for Chorus and Orchestra." Other choice programs include: July 24, Beethoven's Third and Brahms' First, conducted by Munch; July 26, Pierre Monteux conducting the Boston Symphony in the perennially controversial "Rite of Spring"; August 9, Leonard Bernstein conducting Aaron Copland's too-seldom-performed Third Symphony.

MANY of the concerts, through August 10, are by invitation only to the Friends of the Music Center. However, a nominal contribution constitutes membership. All other concerts are open to the public for a small admission fee.

During the day, musicians practice on the lawn outside their studios. There is a wonderful air of informality about the place. You may find yourself chatting with Gregor Piatigorsky or Aaron Copland over a frozen Popsicle or playing poker with Leonard Bernstein. On announced Saturday mornings at ten sharp, you may attend the rehearsals in the Shed.

Tanglewood is a famed summer school for professional musicians as well as a festival; its students come from all over the globe. They set the clothes style. Don't dress for Carnegie in these hills. Plaid shirts, peasant blouses and blue jeans are proper attire for listening to Beethoven under the stars. —E. L.

Photo by Edward Blakeman

MUSIC FANS at Berkshire Festival collect autograph of Gregor Piatigorsky, who teaches chamber music classes in the summer school

---

DALLAS, TEX.
TIMES HERALD
JUL 7 1952

Artur Rubinstein in Tanglewood Solo Spot

Special to The Times Herald

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., July 7.—Artur Rubinstein will play the solo in Brahms' Second Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival Aug. 7.

The announcement was made by Charles Munch, conductor, who made known at the same time other changes in the program and the names of additional Festival soloists. Brahms' Fourth Symphony was included in the July 31 program following the receipt by the orchestra of the highest award of the Academie du Disque Francais for its recording of the Brahms work.

Margaret Harshaw, soprano, Charles Kullman, tenor, and James Pease, bass, will be soloists for the Wagner program that Pierre Monteux will conduct Aug. 2. Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor part in Berlioz' "Requiem" in the final Festival concert Aug. 10.

Canceling the program listed for Thursday evening, July 31, Mr. Munch will conduct instead Faure's Incidental Music for "Pelleas and Melisande" and Ballade for Piano and Orchestra, Ravel's Piano Concerto and Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

FORT WORTH, TEXAS
MORNING STAR-TELEGRAM
JUL 6 1952

400 Are Enrolled For Berkshire Music Sessions

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 5 (Spl).—More than 400 students from 41 states and 16 countries have begun their six-week study program at the 10th session of the Berkshire Music Center.

Charles Munch has returned from France, where he remained after his tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the opening exercises. Among the faculty of 36 are Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Luigi Dallapiccola, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross, Richard Burgin, William Kroll and first chairmen of the Boston Symphony. Students are here from as far as Egypt, South Africa and New Zealand.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 6 1952

CHANGES AT BERKSHIRE

New Programs July 31, Aug. 7 Listed for Music Festival

Several changes in the programs of the Berkshire Festival were made known yesterday. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, has canceled the program originally scheduled for July 31, and has substituted instead the incidental music to Fauré's "Pelléas et Mélisande" Suite, the Fauré Ballade for Piano and Orchestra, the Ravel Piano Concerto and the Brahms Fourth Symphony. Nicole Henriot will be the soloist.

Another change involves the program of Aug. 7, when Artur Rubinstein will be piano soloist in the Brahms Second Concerto, which replaces the Tchaikovsky Fourth Symphony.

The soloists for the all-Wagner program, to be conducted by Pierre Monteux on Aug. 2, also were announced yesterday. They will be Margaret Harshaw, soprano; Charles Kullmann, tenor, and James Pease, bass.

At the final concert of the festival, the afternoon of Aug. 10, Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor part in the Berlioz Requiem.

BOSTON, MASS.
POST
JUL 6 - 1952

The Observant Citizen

Artur Rubinstein will play the solo in Brahms' Second Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival Aug. 7. The announcement was made by Charles Munch, conductor, who made known at the same time other changes in the program and the names of additional festival soloists. Brahms Fourth Symphony was included in the July 31 program, following the receipt by the orchestra of the highest award of the Academie du Disque Francais for its recording of the Brahms work.

Margaret Harshaw, soprano; Charles Kullman, tenor, and James Pease, bass, will be soloists for the Wagner program that Pierre Monteux will conduct Aug. 2. Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor part in Berlioz' "Requiem" in the final festival concert Aug. 10.

Cancelling the program listed for Thursday evening, July 31, Mr. Munch will conduct instead Faure's Incidental Music for "Pelleas and Melisande" and Ballade for Piano and Orchestra, Ravel's Piano Concerto and Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 5 - 1952

BRAHMS WORK WILL BE PLAYED BY RUBINSTEIN

Munch Reveals Changes in Aug. 7 Program at Tanglewood

Tanglewood, Lenox—Artur Rubinstein will play the solo in Brahms' Second Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival Aug. 7. The announcement was made by Charles Munch, conductor, who made known at the same time other changes in the program and the names of additional Festival soloists. Brahms' Fourth Symphony was included in the July 31 program following the receipt by the orchestra of the highest award of the Academie du Disque Francais for its recording of the Brahms work.

Margaret Harshaw, soprano, Charles Kullman, tenor, and James Pease, bass, will be soloists for the Wagner program that Pierre Monteux will conduct Aug. 2. Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor part in Berlioz' "Requiem" in the final Festival concert Aug. 10.

Cancelling the program liseted for Thursday evening, July 31, Mr. Munch will conduct instead Faure's Incidental Music for "Pelleas and Melisande" and Ballade for Piano and Orchestra, Ravel's Piano Concerto and Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

Saturday, July 5 at 8.15. Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program in the Theater (Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin, soloists), The Musical Offering Concerto for Two Violins Suite No. 3, in D major.

Sunday, July 6 at 10 a. m. * Chamber Music.

At 3 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert (Charles Munch, conducting)

Handel	Concerto Grosso in A minor for Strings
Dittersdorf	Symphony in C major
C. P. S. Bach	Symphony No. 5
J. S. Bach	Cantata No. 140

(Conducted by Hugh Ross)

At 8.15. * Composers' Forum.

Wednesday, July 9 8.15. Bel Arte Trio (Coolidge Concert) (Ruth Posselt, violinist, Joseph de Pasquele, violist, and Samuel Mayes, cellist)

Beethoven	Trio in G major
Hindemith	Trio, Opus 34
Mozart	Divertimento for Violin, Viola and Violincello

Friday, July 11 at 8.15. Symphony Concert by Student Orchestra.

Saturday, July 12 at 8.15. Berkshire Festival Concert (Charles Munch, conductor)

Rameau	Suite from "Dardanus"
Couperin	Concert dans le gout theatral
Purcell	Fantasia in A, for Strings
Vivaldi	Concerto Grosso in D minor
Lalande	"De Profundis" for Chorus and Orchestra

(Conducted by Hugh Ross)

Sunday, July 13, at 10 a. m. Chamber Music.

At 3 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert (Charles Munch, conducting)

Mozart	Symphony in E flat
Mozart	Symphony in G minor
Mozart	Symphony in C major ("Jupiter")

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
JUL 3 - 1952

All-Bach Program Set At Tanglewood Saturday

The Berkshire Music Festival Theater-Concert Hall series will open at 8:15 p. m. Saturday at Tanglewood with Charles Munch conducting members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program.

The musical offerings will be the famous Double Violin Concerto, with Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin as the soloists, and also the Suite No. 3 in D Major.

On Sunday this phase of the festival will continue with a concert at 3 p. m. in which the program will consist of Handel's Concerto Grosso in A Minor for Strings, Dittersdorf's Symphony in C Major, Q.P.S. Bach's Symphony No. 5 and J. S. Bach's Cantata No. 140. Mr. Munch will conduct the orchestra and Hugh Ross the cantata chorus. The vocal soloists will be Sarah Fleming, soprano; Shirley Winston, mezzo soprano; John McCollum, tenor and Richard Sharretts, bass.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
JUL 6 - 1952

FIVE YOUNG DETROIT musicians will take part in activities at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Matha Alexander, of 2315 Webb, will study piano with the Tanglewood Study Group; Leah Crohn, of 9269 Wildemere, will be in the soprano section of the Opera Associates; Kurt Safir, of 18618 Ilene, will study coaching and piano, and Shirley R. Schubner, of 8315 Webb, will study piano.

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUL 5 - 1952

CHARLES MUNCH, Tanglewood director, swings a golf club as well as a baton

music in the mountains

In the rolling Berkshire hills July 5, the nation's top music festival will be officially launched when a six-foot, slender, gray-haired conductor steps briskly to the podium of an ultra-modern theatre.

The conductor will be, of course, Charles Munch, brilliant French-born director of the Boston Symphony, and the occasion the annual Music Festival at Tanglewood, Massachusetts. This six-week music conclave has put the United States on the musical map, to rank along with the tourist-packed festivals Europeans have so carefully nurtured for generations.

Tanglewood, sandwiched between Lenox and Stockbridge, is just 150 miles from New York, convenient to reach by car or train. It is one of the most beautiful vacation areas in the East—no guide-book propaganda, either. The fresh country air, cool breezes, ancient trees and gently sloping hills of the New England Berkshires provide a spectacular setting for the music.

The guests at Tanglewood lounge on the lawns and listen to the music. Although the $80,000 Shed, designed by modernist Eliel Saarinen, seats some 6,000, an equal number can hear the concerts from the lawn. Many al fresco listeners come equipped with blankets, pillows and picnic baskets.

Grounds are open to the public three hours before a concert. You may buy buffet lunches and dinners inside the gate. And you are perfectly welcome to explore the grounds—the functional, starkly handsome Shed, the Concert Hall and Theatre; the Victorian-gabled Tanglewood General Headquarters, once the estate's mansion; the converted barn and garage now used as studios; the lovely formal gardens and cultivated orchards.

It is difficult to suggest any single performance to the Berkshire vacationer. Any day, from 10:15 in the morning to 11 at night, you can hear some of the finest musicians anywhere. Munch and members of the Boston Symphony, Saturday evening, July 5, will present three works of Bach as well as the little known "Fifth Symphony" by his son, C.P.E. Bach. Sunday afternoon, July 6, Munch will conduct short compositions of Rameau, Couperin, Purcell and the magnificent "Concerto Grosso in D Minor" of Vivaldi. Maestro Munch, Saturday evening, July 19, conducts Mozart's "Piano Concerto in C Major" and Hugh Ross conducts Mozart's "Litaniae for Chorus and Orchestra." Other choice programs include: July 24, Beethoven's Third and Brahms' First, conducted by Munch; July 26, Pierre Monteux conducting the Boston Symphony in the perennially controversial "Rite of Spring"; August 9, Leonard Bernstein conducting Aaron Copland's too-seldom-performed Third Symphony.

Photo by Edward Blakeman

MUSIC FANS at Berkshire Festival collect autograph of Gregor Piatigorsky, who teaches chamber music classes in the summer school

MANY of the concerts, through August 10, are by invitation only to the Friends of the Music Center. However, a nominal contribution constitutes membership. All other concerts are open to the public for a small admission fee.

During the day, musicians practice on the lawn outside their studios. There is a wonderful air of informality about the place. You may find yourself chatting with Gregor Piatigorsky or Aaron Copland over a frozen Popsicle or playing poker with Leonard Bernstein. Or announced Saturday mornings at ten sharp, you may attend the rehearsals in the Shed.

Tanglewood is a famed summer school for professional musicians as well as a festival; its students come from all over the globe. They set the clothes style. Don't dress for Carnegie in these hills. Plaid shirts, peasant blouses and blue jeans are proper attire for listening to Beethoven under the stars. —E. L.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 5

BRAHMS WORK WILL BE PLAYED BY RUBINSTEIN

Munch Reveals Changes in Aug. 7 Program at Tanglewood

Tanglewood, Lenox—Artur Rubinstein will play the solo in Brahms' Second Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival Aug. 7. The announcement was made by Charles Munch, conductor, who made known at the same time other changes in the program and the names of additional Festival soloists. Brahms' Fourth Symphony was included in the July 31 program following the receipt by the orchestra of the highest award of the Academie du Disque Francais for its recording of the Brahms work.

Margaret Harshaw, soprano, Charles Kullman, tenor, and James Pease, bass, will be soloists for the Wagner program that Pierre Monteux will conduct Aug. 2. Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor part in Berlioz' "Requiem" in the final Festival concert Aug. 10.

Cancelling the program liseted for Thursday evening, July 31, Mr. Munch will conduct instead Faure's Incidental Music for "Pelleas and Melisande" and Ballade for Piano and Orchestra, Ravel's Piano Concerto and Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

Saturday, July 5 at 8.15. Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program in the Theater (Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin, soloists). The Musical Offering Concerto for Two Violins Suite No. 3, in D major.

Sunday, July 6 at 10 a. m. * Chamber Music.

At 3 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert (Charles Munch, conducting)

Handel	Concerto Grosso in A minor for Strings
Dittersdorf	Symphony in C major
C. P. S. Bach	Symphony No. 5
J. S. Bach	Cantata No. 140

(Conducted by Hugh Ross)

At 8.15. * Composers' Forum.

Wednesday, July 9 8.15. Bel Arte Trio (Coolidge Concert) (Ruth Posselt, violinist, Joseph de Pasquele, violist, and Samuel Mayes, cellist)

Beethoven	Trio in G major
Hindemith	Trio, opus 34
Mozart	Divertimento for Violin, Viola and Violincello

Friday, July 11 at 8.15. Symphony Concert by Student Orchestra.

Saturday, July 12 at 8.15. Berkshire Festival Concert (Charles Munch, conductor)

Rameau	Suite from "Dardanus"
Couperin	Concert dans a gout theatral
Purcell	Fantasia in A, for Strings
Vivaldi	Concerto Grosso in D minor
Lalande	"De Profundis" for Chorus and Orchestra

(Conducted by Hugh Ross)

Sunday, July 13, at 10 a. m. Chamber Music.

At 3 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert (Charles Munch, conducting)

Mozart	Symphony in E flat
Mozart	Symphony in G minor
Mozart	Symphony in C major ("Jupiter")

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
JUL 3 - 1952

All-Bach Program Set At Tanglewood Saturday

The Berkshire Music Festival Theater-Concert Hall series will open at 8:15 p. m. Saturday at Tanglewood with Charles Munch conducting members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program.

The musical offerings will be the famous Double Violin Concerto, with Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin as the soloists, and also the Suite No. 3 in D Major.

On Sunday this phase of the festival will continue with a concert at 3 p. m. in which the program will consist of Handel's Concerto Grosso in A Minor for Strings, Dittersdorf's Symphony in C Major, Q.P.S. Bach's Symphony No. 5 and J. S. Bach's Cantata No. 140. Mr. Munch will conduct the orchestra and Hugh Ross the cantata chorus. The vocal soloists will be Sarah Fleming, soprano; Shirley Winston, mezzo soprano; John McCollum, tenor and Richard Sharretts, bass.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
JUL 6 - 1952

from Detroit

Julius and Marguerite Chajes are in Europe on a concert tour which will include a first performance of Chajes' new piano concerto in Vienna. Mrs. Chajes has been engaged for several

---

DALLAS, TEX.
TIMES HERALD
JUL 7 - 1952

Artur Rubinstein in Tanglewood Solo Spot

Special to The Times Herald

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., July 7.—Artur Rubinstein will play the solo in Brahms' Second Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival Aug. 7.

The announcement was made by Charles Munch, conductor, who made known at the same time other changes in the program and the names of additional Festival soloists. Brahms' Fourth Symphony was included in the July 31 program following the receipt by the orchestra of the highest award of the Academie du Disque Francais for its recording of the Brahms work.

Margaret Harshaw, soprano, Charles Kullman, tenor, and James Pease, bass, will be soloists for the Wagner program that Pierre Monteux will conduct Aug. 2. Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor part in Berlioz' "Requiem" in the final Festival concert Aug. 10.

Canceling the program listed for Thursday evening, July 31, Mr. Munch will conduct instead Faure's Incidental Music for "Pelleas and Melisande" and Ballade for Piano and Orchestra, Ravel's Piano Concerto and Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

FORT WORTH, TEXAS
MORNING STAR-TELEGRAM
JUL 6 1952

400 Are Enrolled For Berkshire Music Sessions

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 5 (Spl).—More than 400 students from 41 states and 16 countries have begun their six-week study program at the 10th session of the Berkshire Music Center.

Charles Munch has returned from France, where he remained after his tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the opening exercises. Among the faculty of 36 are Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Luigi Dallapiccola, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross, Richard Burgin, William Kroll and first chairmen of the Boston Symphony. Students are here from as far as Egypt, South Africa and New Zealand.

[27]

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 6 1952

CHANGES AT BERKSHIRE

New Programs July 31, Aug. 7 Listed for Music Festival

Several changes in the programs of the Berkshire Festival were made known yesterday. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, has canceled the program originally scheduled for July 31, and has substituted instead the incidental music to Fauré's "Pelléas et Mélisande" Suite, the Fauré Ballade for Piano and Orchestra, the Ravel Piano Concerto and the Brahms Fourth Symphony. Nicole Henriot will be the soloist.

Another change involves the program of Aug. 7, when Artur Rubinstein will be piano soloist in the Brahms Second Concerto, which replaces the Tchaikovsky Fourth Symphony.

The soloists for the all-Wagner program, to be conducted by Pierre Monteux on Aug. 2, also were announced yesterday. They will be Margaret Harshaw, soprano; Charles Kullmann, tenor, and James Pease, bass.

At the final concert of the festival, the afternoon of Aug. 10, Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor part in the Berlioz Requiem.

BOSTON, MASS.
POST
JUL 6 - 1952

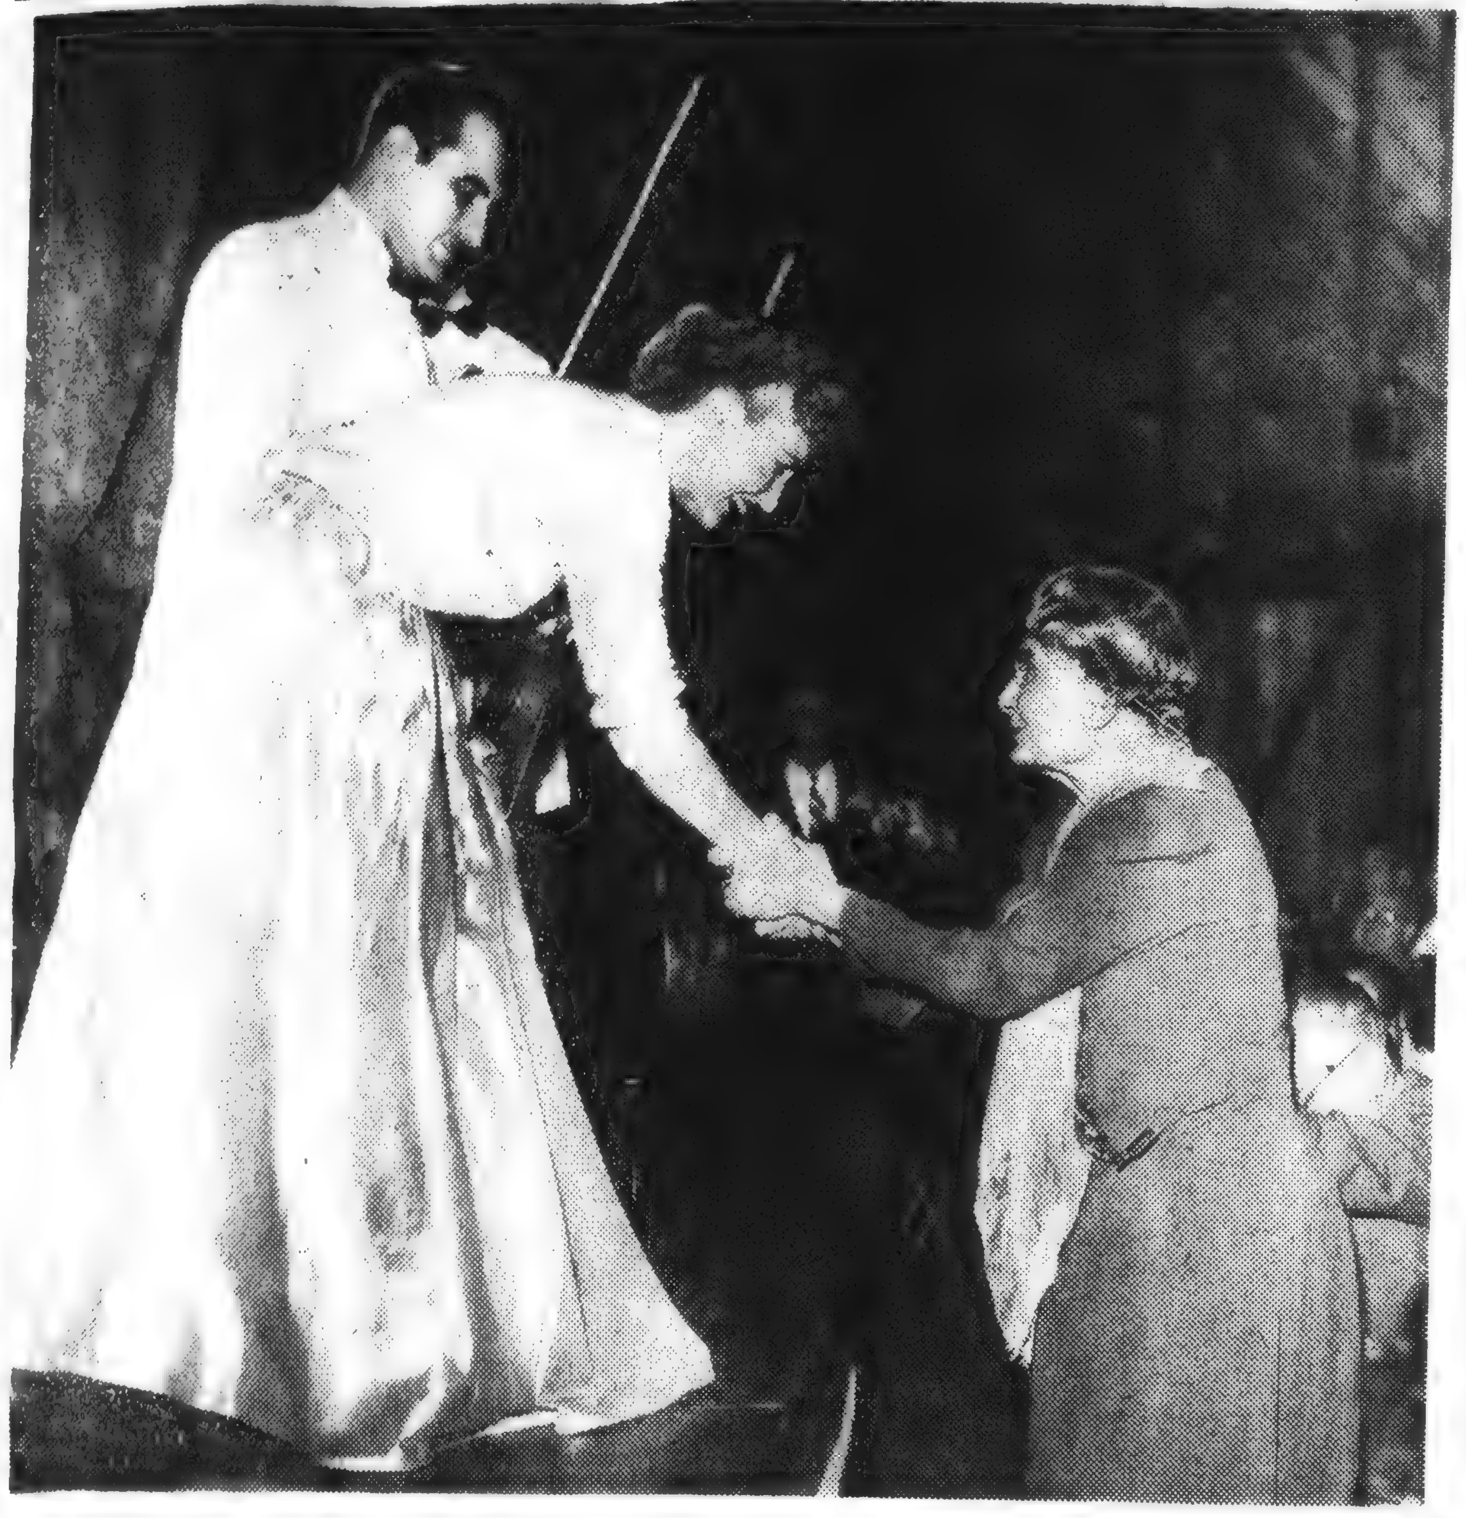
The Observant Citizen

Artur Rubinstein will play the solo in Brahms' Second Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival Aug. 7. The announcement was made by Charles Munch, conductor, who made known at the same time other changes in the program and the names of additional festival soloists. Brahms Fourth Symphony was included in the July 31 program, following the receipt by the orchestra of the highest award of the Academie du Disque Francais for its recording of the Brahms work.

Margaret Harshaw, soprano; Charles Kullman, tenor, and James Pease, bass, will be soloists for the Wagner program that Pierre Monteux will conduct Aug. 2. Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor part in Berlioz' "Requiem" in the final festival concert Aug. 10.

Cancelling the program listed for Thursday evening, July 31, Mr. Munch will conduct instead Faure's Incidental Music for "Pelleas and Melisande" and Ballade for Piano and Orchestra, Ravel's Piano Concerto and Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

Pittsfield, Massachusetts, Thursday, July 10, 195



Plouffe

BRAVO: Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, the fairy godmother of chamber music, stands to congratulate Ruth Posselt, violinist, with the Bel Arte Trio after the first of four concerts sponsored by the Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, at Tanglewood last night. Looking on is Joseph dePasquale, violist. Samuel Mayes, cellist, is the third member of the trio.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL [illegible] 1952

Tanglewood Concerts Will Begin Saturday

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program Saturday evening at 8:15, to open the series of six concerts in the Tanglewood theatre on the coming three weekends.

Richard Burgin, concertmaster, and Ruth Posselt, his wife, will be the soloists for the Concerto for Two Violins. The program will begin with "The Musical Offering" and close with the Suite No. 3, in D major.

Sunday afternoon at 3 the program will be Handel's Concerto Grosso for Strings, Dittersdorf's Symphony in C major, C.P.E. Bach's Symphony No. 5, in B minor and J. S. Bach's Cantata No. 140, the last to be conducted by Hugh Ross.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

JUL 4 - 1952

All-Bach Program At Lenox on Saturday

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program Saturday evening at 8:15, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Ruth Posselt and Richard will play a Concerto For Two Violins. The program will also include "The Musical Offering" and the Suite No. 3, in D Major.

Sunday at 3 o'clock, the program will include Handel's Concerto Grosso in A Minor, Dittersdorf's Symphony in C Major, C.P.E. Bach's Symphony No. 5, and J.S. Bach's Cantata No. 140, conducted by Hugh Ross.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUL 7 - 1952

Tanglewood Concerts

6800 Are Attracted to 3 Holiday Weekend Programs

Lenox, Mass. — (AP) — Three holiday weekend concerts at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, attracted 6800 persons.

An all-Bach program Saturday night drew a record attendance of 3800. Yesterday's festival concert we heard by 2500 and 500 students attended the Sunday morning chamber music program.

Charles Munch directed 40 members of the orchestra in its first concerts, opening a six-week season. The second series will be [illegible]d next weekend.

Music

Bel Arte Trio Wins Praise of Big Audience

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

TANGLEWOOD—The first of four Wednesday evening programs being presented by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress was played in the Theatre-Concert Hall last night by the Bel Arte Trio of which Ruth Posselt is violin, Joseph de Pasquale, viola, and Samuel Mayes, cello. A record crowd gave the three artists an extremely cordial reception in the Beethoven G major trio, opus 9, No. 1, the Hindemith trio, opus 34, and the Mozart divertimento, (K 563).

The three instrumentalists are superbly able individually and in the introduction of the Beethoven gave evidence of the heights of which they were capable as an ensemble. They played with a style that had nobility and taste and with a tone that had warmth and cohesion. It was an outstanding performance.

This rarely heard combination of instruments requires special adjustments and compensations. Lacking one violin of the more commonly used string quartet it becomes necessary for the lower and stronger-voiced instruments to allow for the timbre of the violin. This they did in the Beethoven conspicuously and thereby added immeasurably to the total success of their playing. There was a tendency for the warm and enthusiastic vigor in the cello and viola to overmatch the smoother elegance of the violin but the overall conception was so well poised and so well produced that it could not mar the polish and general inner grasp they conveyed so vividly.

This balance was not quite so felicitous in the Hindemith for here there are three individual parts playing in counterpoint rather than in support of one another. Each instrument is an integral line, to be maintained substantially while still allowing his confreres to do the same. The result was to diminish the dominance of the violin which continued to play with suavity while the other two bit in more incisively, whereas underemphasis might have maintained clarity better.

Hindemith's trio is compelling rather than appealing, if that is a valid distinction. It makes no bid for favor with anything that approaches sentiment, yet it takes command of its players and its audience by its irrespective emphasis on a certain brutality and guttural stresses.

Miss Posselt set the tone of the Mozart divertimento in an imaginative courtliness which allowed her and her colleagues to show their technical mastery and virtuosity. This betrayed them at times to individual excesses in which the violin was the unequal contender in actual power, but this upset of balance increased the conviction and authority with which they played and added a lustiness which coincides exactly with our understanding of this wonderful work.

At the close of the program the artists expressed their homage to Mrs. Coolidge, who was seated in the front row of the auditorium and the whole audience rose to add their gratitude. The next program this coming Wednesday evening will be a recital of sonatas of Beethoven, Kodaly and Dohnanyi by Janos Scholz, violoncello, and Miklos Schwalb, piano.

READING, PA.
EAGLE

JUL 4 1952

School, College News About Berks Students

RICHARD W. OLLIVIERRE

Richard W. Ollivierre, son of H. A. Ollivierre, president of the B. O. R. Corporation, 217 Chestnut St., recently received a bachelor of science degree in econon ics from the Wharton School, University of Pennsylvania. While in school, Ollivierre was vice president of Kappa Signa fraternit and the athletic managerial boar manager of the golf team for fo years; played varsity football f one year, and was a member the Franklin Society, Marketin Society and the Varsity Club. H was also associate business ma ager of the Record and took pa in Mask and Wig shows.

* * *

Richard LeRoy Kline, of Flee wood, recently received a maste of arts degree from Teachers Co lege, Columbia University, Ne York City, in music education.

* * *

William Vorsteg, 535 North Fift St., a student at the Wyomissin Institute of Fine Arts, is agai enrolled for a six-week summe course at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. He is one of some 400 students who will study and take part in programs, which will include symphony, choral and chamber music. Listed among the faculty of 36 are such distinguished musicians as Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Luigi Dallapiccola, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross, Richard Burgin, Ingolf Dahl and William Kroll.

[28]

NEW YORK, N. Y.
MIRROR

JUL 10 1952

Only Human

By SIDNEY FIELDS

PIERRE MONTEUX: FRISCO'S FRENCHMAN DEPARTS

BEFORE he started working on the scores for tonight's conducting assignment at Lewisohn Stadium, Pierre Monteux, who is a young 77, wanted to get two things off his ample chest: The nasty rumor that he dyes his hair black and the increasing freeze he's been getting from Stadium fans since he began guest-conducting up there seven years ago.

"My moustache is white from kissing the girls," he said defiantly. "But my hair is true black. Anyone is welcome to come with alcohol, with shampoo, with anything to wash my hair and prove it.

"And for the Stadium, there is too much noise, and the audience applauds a minute with politeness. All over the world they applaud without end. They do not let me off the stage."

Monteux is a bristling, round, ubiquitous little man, who has been waving the baton for 60 years and has conducted at least 65 of the world's most famous orchestras. His memory is prodigious. He looks at a score just once and remembers it thereafter. In this country he is perhaps best known for taking over the broken-down San Francisco Symphony 17 years ago and building it to international eminence, and for nurturing such new talent as William Kapell, Leon Fleischer and Vera Franchesi.

San Francisco adored this roly-poly with the bright eyes whose corners were always creased in friendly laughter; who liked big pearl stickpins and disliked fancy dinner parties. Monteux preferred a little French restaurant opposite the city morgue. He resigned from the San Francisco Symphony last April. . . .

"So I can be free to be a guest conductor anywhere in the world. Also, I want to be at my home in Maine more. There I like to repair my clocks. No, I am only an amateur with clocks."

Musician's Musician

On his 200 acre farm in Hancock, Maine, he also grows his own vegetables and flowers, and every August runs his class in conducting, a chore he began in Paris over 50 years ago. Musicians are fondly devoted to him. He's a czar for exactness, but he's never been known to raise his voice in anger during a rehearsal, and usually works his men for an hour and a half on a scheduled two hour rehearsal . . .

"I always make rehearsals as short as possible, and they always play better. When a conductor is kind to musicians they are kind to him. After all, we need each other."

As gentle as he is, Monteux can drip acid. Once Leopold Stokowski took a leave of absence from the Philadelphia Orchestra, and Monteux was asked to fill in. The critics applauded Monteux, but the ticket buyers, accustomed to the Stokowski flash, sat on their hands. Monteux left America with the crack:

"I'm through with a country that wants only slim, well-tailored conductors."

But in 1942 he became a citizen of the United States.

Monteux is a Parisian by birth. His father was a shoe dealer; his mother, a piano teacher. But at six he heard a Mozart violin piece played by his brother-in-law and decided on the violin. His brother-in-law taught him until he was nine, when Pierre started at the Paris Conservatory of Music. He began composing at nine too . . .

"But I stopped at twelve when I began to conduct seriously. A man cannot do both and do them well. I have all my compositions in a strong box. I will burn them when it gets very cold in Maine."

The Turning Point

By the time he was 21 and a graduate of the Paris Conservatory with the first prize for the violin, he was a struggling conductor, and the viola player for the Opera Comique, the Beethoven Foundation Quartet, and the Concert Colonne. At the Colonne he became the concert master, the assistant conductor, and finally the conductor. . . .

"Which was the turning point for me, because Serge Diaghilev hears me and makes me the principal conductor of the Ballet Russe, which has the great Nijinsky in it."

While with the Ballet Russe he premiered such works as Debussy's "Jeux," Ravel's "Dahpnis and Chloe," and Stravinsky's "Petrouchka," "Rossignol," and "Sacre du Printemps." His spreading fame got him invitations all over Europe and he organized an orchestra of his own to give new musicians a break. He continued his frantic pace until he enlisted as an infantry private in the French Army in 1914, getting directly involved in the battles of Verdun, Rheims, Soissons and the Argonne.

In 1916 he was in America conducting the Ballet Russe again; remained to handle the French Operas at the Metropolitan, and then reorganized the Boston Symphony, which fell apart during a strike. Before he settled here permanently he ran the Amsterdam Orchestra and the Amsterdam Wagner Society for 10 years and, while leading the Paris Symphony for another 10, began transatlantic commuting to double in San Francisco.

He's been married three times, has three children, two stepchildren and 12 grandchildren. His oldest son, Jean, plays jazz on the piano, bass fiddle and drums, and his youngest son, Claude, a flutist, will appear in the Stadium Orchestra tonight...

"Now you know my career, my family and everything. Do you wish to know my future, too? Say then that I will conduct until I cannot walk any more. I don't ever have enough music."

BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

JUL 27 [illegible]

Mail from the Berkshire Music Center brings word from Lois Murray, young Amherst violinist, who is at Tanglewood under scholarship. A violin major at Eastman, Miss Murray tells of a busy schedule involving six hours' daily practice in addition to student orchestra concerts every Friday night. Working under the instruction of Charles Munch this past week was a top experience, she said.

July [illegible] 1952

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTO

Munch Conducts at Tanglewood

Will Plouffe

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, shakes the hand of Richard Burgin, concertmaster, after the first Tanglewood concert of the season on Saturday night.

Baroque Music Opens Season In Berkshires

By Jules Wolffers

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Ideal weather conditions favored the opening of the Berkshire Festival Saturday night when Charles Munch conducted a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony musicians in a program of works by Johann Sebastian Bach.

More than 3,800 persons were present, 1,200 filling the Theater-Concert Hall, with the remainder outside on the beautiful Tanglewood grounds. This establishes a new attendance record for an opening concert.

The first work, "The Musical Offering," at once plunged the Festival into a controversial issue.

It will be remembered that "The Musical Offering" was the outgrowth of a command visit paid by J. S. Bach in 1747 to the flutist and monarch, Frederick the Great of Prussia. During the visit, the King played a theme for Bach, which the composer utilized without preparation at a piano keyboard as the subject for a three-part improvisation in fugue style. Later, he composed "The Musical Offering" in 13 parts, all based on the King's original theme, and dedicated it to Frederick.

* * *

Although the work had its genesis at the keyboard, Bach expanded his original idea to include ensemble music. One of the sections is a sonata for flute, violin, and piano with cello; another calls for two violins.

Perhaps the best way of presenting this composition would be in a mixture of solo piano with instrumental ensemble where directly or implicitly indicated by the composer. Yet there can be little objection to playing the whole work via an instrumental realization with the piano accompanying the melodic lines. Bach himself rarely had any qualms when it came to transcriptions of his or any one else's music.

The objection to Mr. Munch's presentation, then, is not that transcription was involved, but rather to the number of instruments he used for each part. The music does not lend itself to an orchestral interpretation. It demands the intimacy and care of one skilled musician, and no more, for each part.

"The Musical Offering" has been peculiarly the province of the erudite listener. But an expressive rendition can make the work accessible to a hearer who doesn't know and doesn't care that a canon is a form of composition where one voice exactly imitates another at a higher or lower pitch.

* * *

Granted that the musicians played splendidly and that the execution of the Messrs. Richard Burgin, violin, Georges Laurent, flute, and Bernard Zighera, piano, was enjoyable throughout, the work yet failed to achieve its full effect. The multiplicity of instruments weighed down the moving lines and added an unnatural flavor to several of the sections. The fine flute-violin sonata, in particular, suffered a complete sea-change to emerge as the typical large-sounding concerto grosso of the period.

After-intermission pieces were the Concerto for Two Violins and Orchestra in D minor, and the Suite No. 3 in D major for Orchestra. Mr. Munch provided a full-bodied and sympathetic accompaniment for the joint efforts of Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin in the double concerto. Admirable results were attained with glowing string colors, technical proficiency, and expert ensemble much in evidence. Had the style, tone, and intensity of Miss Posselt and Mr. Burgin been more on a par, a definitive performance might well have emerged.

The closing Suite was strikingly projected with the beautiful and famous Air (not on the G-string in this original version) receiving a particularly telling performance.

* * *

The second program on Sunday afternoon was delightful from start to finish. Together with a Handel Concerto Grosso and a Bach Cantata, Mr. Munch programmed two rarities—symphonies by Karl Ditters von Dittersdorf, and C. P. E. Bach.

We can never tire of hearing Bach, Handel, Haydn, and Mozart. Their music remains a monumental legacy, a rich treasure of the past that gains luster with each retelling. But there is much value in hearing other, if lesser, masters of the period.

To many in the audience the name of Dittersdorf must have been a novelty, yet he was a musician of great renown in his day and his Symphony in C major a much better than average specimen of symphonic writing of the second half of the 18th century.

The work is bustling and cheerful, full of interesting little effects and studied repetitions, It doesn't take us very far, but there is good-humored chatter and clatter along the way with airy persiflage mixed in with some shrewd observations.

The opening Allegro is energetic and decided with the following Larghetto showing a pretty wistfulness. The two menuets which make up the third movement are inventive, and the Finale brings the ebullient work to a perky, prestissimo close.

* * *

Mr. Munch's fine reading of the C. P. E. Bach Symphony No. 3 disclosed a work of rare charm and considerable interest. This is not a composition we care to patronize. Quite apart from its historical value as a model for later composers, it speaks its own language persuasively and can stand on its own merits as an affecting and effective piece of musical craftsmanship.

The symphony is dramatic and eloquent. One senses in it a striving after a type of communication new to the 18th century music.

The Handel Concerto Grosso in A minor for String Orchestra, Opus 6, No. 4, was a first-rate choice to open a program. Its dignity and stateliness in the Italian tradition clings close to the influence of Corelli and Vivaldi.

The same composers influenced Bach's concerti grossi also, but while Handel left the outlines clear and spacious, Bach, in the words of Albert Spalding, filled in the spaces with rich embroidery. We are much the gainers that both composers tried their hands in the Italian form, each in his own way.

The well-loved and often-performed Cantata No. 140 brought Hugh Ross on stage for a devoted and spirited reading of the Bach masterpiece. The Berkshire Festival Chorus appears to be somewhat smaller this year than in other years, but its quality remains unimpaired.

Soloists were Sarah Fleming, soprano, Mac Morgan, baritone, and John McCollum, tenor. All three sang to fine effect. Miss Fleming has an affecting quality which searches out the meaning of the music. Both the Messrs. Morgan and McCollum sang in correct cantata style with its blend of affirmation, reverence, and expressiveness. Mr. Ross brought the orchestra and chorus together in a well-modulated balance for the famous chorale sections.

Small Concert Series Closes As BSO Prepares for Big Show

Ideal Weather Prevails for First Three Week Ends—Orchestra Moves to Shed For Major Programs Opening Thursday

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

TANGLEWOOD — The first half of the Tanglewood season was brought to a highly successful close yesterday afternoon when Charles Munch repeated the lovely second Mass of Schubert, in G major, which he had also performed on the previous evening. This final brace of concerts ends the so-called smaller series played in the Theatre Concert-Hall and the locus operandi now moves to the huge main Shed for the final three weeks starting this Thursday evening.

For the first time the management had made plans this year to move the concerts by the smaller ensemble to the larger Shed in case of bad weather, thus providing shelter for thousands who always choose to lie on the grass or bring their own folding chairs and listen from without the hall. But they were favored with three perfect week ends and for this final one a record crowd (about 8000) attended. By some token which soothsayers may be able to discern the programs also proved to be the high points of the series as well.

Praises Ross and Chorus

The Saturday evening concert rode the tide of high exuberance. It was happy music-making, from the first note to the final soft tender vanishing phrase of Schubert. Hugh Ross made the Mozart Litaniae fairly glow with vigor and warmth and spirit. It seem inconceivable that this Mass and the Schubert in G major with which Charles Munch closed the program, but in which, also, Mr. Ross had prepared the chorus, could have been written by young men of 16 and 18, respectively. But age had no consideration in the character of the music, and certainly not in its performance, for it was the happiest fusion of youthful buoyancy and mature performance.

The soloists in the Mozart work were Sara Mae Endich, soprano, Jacqueline Langee, contralto, John McCollum, tenor, and Bernard Green, bass.

There exists the opinion in some quarters that it is more fun to participate in a performance, no matter what the degree of proficiency, than to listen to one of the highest degree of skill. We wonder if any others had the impression Saturday night that we were a part of the performance of the Mozart C major concerto in which Lukas Foss was the piano soloist. It seemed to enter our veins, or to make us a fibre of the whole cloth, or in some way to penetrate us by more and other means than our ears. The vibrancy and sparkle of the whole concerto, from the long overture, in which Mr. Munch caught the delightful lilt so perfectly, to the entrance of the keyboard on which Foss pranced with such secure and optimistic domination was solid Mozart of the most approved style but it was also off and out of this world. It becomes futile and redundant to point out details of finger work and tone balance. This just flowed, or soared, and nothing less than that is worth while reporting.

Repeats Schubert's Mass

Yesterday afternoon Munch repeated the Schubert Mass, a first-time for this manner of repetition, and played two Haydn symphonies: The D major No. 86 and the E flat No. 99, both admirably suited to this size ensemble and incidentally the exact type of grist that the Boston musicians can use to such perfection with which to brew a stimulating draught. Munch gave the various movements, both quite analagous in designation and juxtaposition, style and substance. The later one uses a clarinet which is not yet required for the D major, which, however, has the added designation of capriciosso to its slow movement. The final movements in each case had especial zest.

Miss Endich was again the soprano soloist in the Schubert, Lloyd Oostenbrug, the tenor, and Mac Morgan, the bass. Schubert's Mass endears itself in a completely different manner from that of Mozart. The opening Kyrie is gentle and modest, and, while there are bolder contrasts, the stronger impression remains of humility and sincere supplication.

The chorus starts with the very first beat, without a note of introduction. They were brought in with remarkable restraint and control, a tribute both to the training they received and to their calibre as vocalists. Miss Endich had by far the greater opportunities among the soloists and acquitted herself with excellent vocalism, producing easy and clear tone in every register. The Benedictus was sung by all three soloists with especial consideration to the total effect and Mr. Morgan's short sentence in the beautiful Agnus Dei was noticeable even in its fleeting brevity.

The entire chorus did some outstanding singing in several sections, none more effective for tone quality in its softness than in the Credo in Nnum Deo, while in the Gloria in Excelsis Deo they released a stunning power and impact.

RADIO MIRROR
NEW YORK, N. Y.

He's Pop

Dear Editor:

Who is the native of … eferred to as "Pop" of the Boston … rchestra?

I. R., E… …ool, Ohio

Maestro Arthur Fie… the fame "Pop" of the Boston P… The conductor was born in Boston into family of … cians. His father was violinist … the Boston Symphony Orchest… his … father was a violinist in E…pe… … his three sisters are all musi… … He has been conducting the Pops … 193…

HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST

JUL 1 1952

Tanglewood Air Abuzz Again as Festival Opens

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass. June 30—(Sp)—More than 400 students from 41 states and … countries arrived at Tangle… wood this week-end to … weeks of concentrated … the 10th session of the B… Music Center.

For the opening exercises … day afternoon Charles M… the director, will come from France, where he remained after his tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Also arriving are a distinguished faculty of 36, including Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Luigi Dallapiccola, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross, Richard Burgin, Ingolf Dahl, William Kroll and first chairs of the Boston orchestra.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

JUL 6 - 1952

The following Washington musicians are taking courses at the Berkshire Music Center this summer: Marie Kopulos, pianist; Joachim Lorenz, violinist; Dr. Frederick Fall, conductor, who is studying stage directing, and Ruth C. Gaines, soprano.

Four hundred students from 41 States and 16 countries are registered at the famous Tanglewood school.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 4 1952

Boston Symphony Wins Prize

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Charles Munch, have been awarded the first prize of the French Academy of Recordings (Academie du Disque Francais) for their recording of Brahms' fourth symphony, it was announced yesterday by R. C. A. Victor.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 6 - 1952

Tanglewood Leaders

(Ploufie Photo)

Hugh Ross, Aaron Copland and Charles Munch (left to right) talk over plans at the Berkshire Music Center, Lenox. Ross will conduct the LaLande "De Profundis" for chorus and orchestra at the concert in the Theater Concert Hall at Tanglewood this afternoon, while Munch, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the remainder of today's program. Copland is assistant director and teacher of composition at the Music Center, and one of America's foremost composers.

[29]

July 7, 1952

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOST

Munch Conducts at Tanglewood

Will Plouffe

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, shakes the hand of Richard Burgin, concertmaster, after the first Tanglewood concert of the season on Saturday night.

Baroque Music Opens Season In Berkshires

By Jules Wolffers

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Ideal weather conditions favored the opening of the Berkshire Festival Saturday night when Charles Munch conducted a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony musicians in a program of works by Johann Sebastian Bach.

More than 3,800 persons were present, 1,200 filling the Theater-Concert Hall, with the remainder outside on the beautiful Tanglewood grounds. This establishes a new attendance record for an opening concert.

The first work, "The Musical Offering," at once plunged the Festival into a controversial issue.

It will be remembered that "The Musical Offering" was the outgrowth of a command visit paid by J. S. Bach in 1747 to the flutist and monarch, Frederick the Great of Prussia. During the visit, the King played a theme for Bach, which the composer utilized without preparation at a piano keyboard as the subject for a three-part improvisation in fugue style. Later, he composed "The Musical Offering" in 13 parts, all based on the King's original theme, and dedicated it to Frederick.

* * *

Although the work had its genesis at the keyboard, Bach expanded his original idea to include ensemble music. One of the sections is a sonata for flute, violin, and piano with cello; another calls for two violins.

Perhaps the best way of presenting this composition would be in a mixture of solo piano with instrumental ensemble where directly or implicitly indicated by the composer. Yet there can be little objection to playing the whole work via an instrumental realization with the piano accompanying the melodic lines. Bach himself rarely had any qualms when it came to transcriptions of his or any one else's music.

The objection to Mr. Munch's presentation, then, is not that transcription was involved, but rather to the number of instruments he used for each part. The music does not lend itself to an orchestral interpretation. It demands the intimacy and care of one skilled musician, and no more, for each part.

"The Musical Offering" has been peculiarly the province of the erudite listener. But an expressive rendition can make the work accessible to a hearer who doesn't know and doesn't care that a canon is a form of composition where one voice exactly imitates another at a higher or lower pitch.

* * *

Granted that the musicians played splendidly and that the execution of the Messrs. Richard Burgin, violin, Georges Laurent, flute, and Bernard Zighera, piano, was enjoyable throughout, the work yet failed to achieve its full effect. The multiplicity of instruments weighed down the moving lines and added an unnatural flavor to several of the sections. The fine flute-violin sonata, in particular, suffered a complete sea-change to emerge as the typical large-sounding concerto grosso of the period.

After-intermission pieces were the Concerto for Two Violins and Orchestra in D minor, and the Suite No. 3 in D major for Orchestra. Mr. Munch provided a full-bodied and sympathetic accompaniment for the joint efforts of Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin in the double concerto. Admirable results were attained with glowing string colors, technical proficiency, and expert ensemble much in evidence. Had the style, tone, and intensity of Miss Posselt and Mr. Burgin been more on a par, a definitive performance might well have emerged.

The closing Suite was strikingly projected with the beautiful and famous Air (not on the G-string in this original version) receiving a particularly telling performance.

* * *

The second program on Sunday afternoon was delightful from start to finish. Together with a Handel Concerto Grosso and a Bach Cantata, Mr. Munch programmed two rarities—symphonies by Karl Ditters von Dittersdorf, and C. P. E. Bach.

We can never tire of hearing Bach, Handel, Haydn, and Mozart. Their music remains a monumental legacy, a rich treasure of the past that gains luster with each retelling. But there is much value in hearing other, if lesser, masters of the period.

To many in the audience the name of Dittersdorf must have been a novelty, yet he was a musician of great renown in his day and his Symphony in C major a much better than average specimen of symphonic writing of the second half of the 18th century.

The work is bustling and cheerful, full of interesting little effects and studied repetitions, It doesn't take us very far, but there is good-humored chatter and clatter along the way with airy persiflage mixed in with some shrewd observations.

The opening Allegro is energetic and decided with the following Larghetto showing a pretty wistfulness. The two menuets which make up the third movement are inventive, and the Finale brings the ebullient work to a perky, prestissimo close.

* * *

Mr. Munch's fine reading of the C. P. E. Bach Symphony No. 3 disclosed a work of rare charm and considerable interest. This is not a composition we care to patronize. Quite apart from its historical value as a model for later composers, it speaks its own language persuasively and can stand on its own merits as an affecting and effective piece of musical craftsmanship.

The symphony is dramatic and eloquent. One senses in it a striving after a type of communication new to the 18th century music.

The Handel Concerto Grosso in A minor for String Orchestra, Opus 6, No. 4, was a first-rate choice to open a program. Its dignity and stateliness in the Italian tradition clings close to the influence of Corelli and Vivaldi.

The same composers influenced Bach's concerti grossi also, but while Handel left the outlines clear and spacious, Bach, in the words of Albert Spalding, filled in the spaces with rich embroidery. We are much the gainers that both composers tried their hands in the Italian form, each in his own way.

The well-loved and often-performed Cantata No. 140 brought Hugh Ross on stage for a devoted and spirited reading of the Bach masterpiece. The Berkshire Festival Chorus appears to be somewhat smaller this year than in other years, but its quality remains unimpaired.

Soloists were Sarah Fleming, soprano, Mac Morgan, baritone, and John McCollum, tenor. All three sang to fine effect. Miss Fleming has an affecting quality which searches out the meaning of the music. Both the Messrs. Morgan and McCollum sang in correct cantata style with its blend of affirmation, reverence, and expressiveness. Mr. Ross brought the orchestra and chorus together in a well-modulated balance for the famous chorale sections.

Eagle - 7

Small Concert Series Closes As BSO Prepares for Big Show

Ideal Weather Prevails for First Three Week Ends—Orchestra Moves to Shed For Major Programs Opening Thursday

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

TANGLEWOOD — The first half of the Tanglewood season was brought to a highly successful close yesterday afternoon when Charles Munch repeated the lovely second Mass of Schubert, in G major, which he had also performed on the previous evening. This final brace of concerts ends the so-called smaller series played in the Theatre Concert-Hall and the locus operandi now moves to the huge main Shed for the final three weeks starting this Thursday evening.

For the first time the management had made plans this year to move the concerts by the smaller ensemble to the larger Shed in case of bad weather, thus providing shelter for thousands who always choose to lie on the grass or bring their own folding chairs and listen from without the hall. But they were favored with three perfect week ends and for this final one a record crowd (about 8000) attended. By some token which soothsayers may be able to discern the programs also proved to be the high points of the series as well.

Praises Ross and Chorus

The Saturday evening concert rode the tide of high exuberance. It was happy music-making, from the first note to the final soft tender vanishing phrase of Schubert. Hugh Ross made the Mozart Litaniae fairly glow with vigor and warmth and spirit. It seem inconceivable that this Mass and the Schubert in G major with which Charles Munch closed the program, but in which, also, Mr. Ross had prepared the chorus, could have been written by young men of 16 and 18, respectively. But age had no consideration in the character of the music, and certainly not in its performance, for it was the happiest fusion of youthful buoyancy and mature performance.

The soloists in the Mozart work were Sara Mae Endich, soprano, Jacqueline Langee, contralto, John McCollum, tenor, and Bernard Green, bass.

There exists the opinion in some quarters that it is more fun to participate in a performance, no matter what the degree of proficiency, than to listen to one of the highest degree of skill. We wonder if any others had the impression Saturday night that we were a part of the performance of the Mozart C major concerto in which Lukas Foss was the piano soloist. It seemed to enter our veins, or to make us a fibre of the whole cloth, or in some way to penetrate us by more and other means than our ears. The vibrancy and sparkle of the whole concerto, from the long overture, in which Mr. Munch caught the delightful lilt so perfectly, to the entrance of the keyboard on which Foss pranced with such secure and optimistic domination was solid Mozart of the most approved style but it was also off and out of this world. It becomes futile and redundant to point out details of finger work and tone balance. This just flowed, or soared, and nothing less than that is worth while reporting.

Repeats Schubert's Mass

Yesterday afternoon Munch repeated the Schubert Mass, a first-time for this manner of repetition, and played two Haydn symphonies: The D major No. 86 and the E flat No. 99, both admirably suited to this size ensemble and incidentally the exact type of grist that the Boston musicians can use to such perfection with which to brew a stimulating draught. Munch gave the various movements, both quite analagous in designation and juxtaposition, style and substance. The later one uses a clarinet which is not yet required for the D major, which, however, has the added designation of capriciosso to its slow movement. The final movements in each case had especial zest.

Miss Endich was again the soprano soloist in the Schubert, Lloyd Oostenbrug, the tenor, and Mac Morgan, the bass. Schubert's Mass endears itself in a completely different manner from that of Mozart. The opening Kyrie is gentle and modest, and, while there are bolder contrasts, the stronger impression remains of humility and sincere supplication.

The chorus starts with the very first beat, without a note of introduction. They were brought in with remarkable restraint and control, a tribute both to the training they received and to their calibre as vocalists. Miss Endich had by far the greater opportunities among the soloists and acquitted herself with excellent vocalism, producing easy and clear tone in every register. The Benedictus was sung by all three soloists with especial consideration to the total effect and Mr. Morgan's short sentence in the beautiful Agnus Dei was noticeable even in its fleeting brevity.

The entire chorus did some outstanding singing in several sections, none more effective for tone quality in its softness than in the Credo in Nnum Deo, while in the Gloria in Excelsis Deo they released a stunning power and impact.

RADIO MIRROR
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL - 1952

He's Pop

Dear Editor:
Who is the native of Boston referred to as "Pop" of the Boston Pops Orchestra?
A. R., East Liverpool, Ohio

Maestro Arthur Fiedler is the famed "Pop" of the Boston Pops. The conductor was born in Boston into a family of musicians. His father was a violinist for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, his grandfather was a violinist in Europe, and his three sisters are all musicians. He has been conducting the Pops since 1930.

HOUSTON, TEXAS
POST

JUL 1 1952

Tanglewood Air Abuzz Again as Festival Opens

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass, June 30—(Sp)—More than 400 students from 41 states and 16 countries arrived at Tanglewood this week-end to spend six weeks of concentrated study at the 10th session of the Berkshire Music Center.

For the opening exercises Sunday afternoon Charles Munch, the director, will come from France, where he remained after his tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Also arriving are a distinguished faculty of 36, including Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Luigi Dallapiccola, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross, Richard Burgin, Ingolf Dahl, William Kroll and first chairs of the Boston orchestra.

WASHINGTON, D. C.
STAR

JUL 6 - 1952

The following Washington musicians are taking courses at the Berkshire Music Center this summer: Marie Kopulos, pianist; Joachim Lorenz, violinist; Dr. Frederick Fall, conductor, who is studying stage directing, and Ruth C. Gaines, soprano.

Four hundred students from 41 States and 16 countries are registered at the famous Tanglewood school.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 4 1952

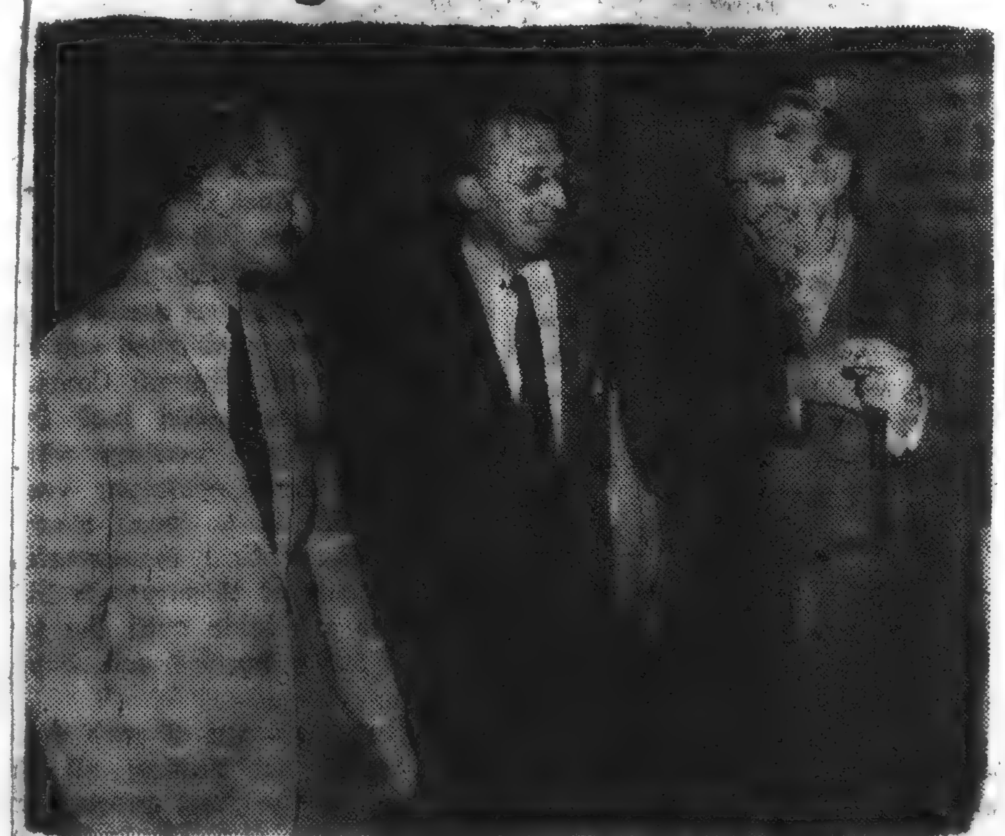
Boston Symphony Wins Prize

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Charles Munch, have been awarded the first prize of the French Academy of Recordings (Academie du Disque Francais) for their recording of Brahms' fourth symphony, it was announced yesterday by R. C. A. Victor.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 6 - 1952

Tanglewood Leaders



(Plouffe Photo)

Hugh Ross, Aaron Copland and Charles Munch (left to right) talk over plans at the Berkshire Music Center, Lenox. Ross will conduct the LaLande "De Profundis" for chorus and orchestra at the concert in the Theater Concert Hall at Tanglewood this afternoon, while Munch, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the remainder of today's program. Copland is assistant director and teacher of composition at the Music Center, and one of America's foremost composers.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUL 7 - 1952

BEL ARTE TRIO WILL BE HEARD AT TANGLEWOOD

Tanglewood, Lenox—The Bel Arte Trio which will play at Tanglewood Wednesday evening the first of four concerts to be given on successive Wednesday evenings through the generosity of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, was organized during the past winter. Miss Ruth Posselt, concert violinist, Samuel Mayes, first cellist, and Joseph dePasquale, first violist in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, played their first concert last winter for the Harvard Music Society and later gave a concert at Jordan hall, Boston.

With her husband, Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Orchestra, Miss Poselt was a soloist in the Bach Concerto for Two Violins, conducted by Charles Munch at the opening concert of the Berkshire Festival in the Tanglewood theater Saturday night. A native of Medford, she gave a recital in Carnegie Hall (New York) at the age of nine. She has toured Europe six times, playing with the principal orchestras there and in America. With the Boston Orchestra she has introduced many new works, and has been guest soloist at Tanglewood.

A native of Philadelphia, Mr. dePasquale studied viola at the Curtis Institute in that city, with the late Louis Bailly, and with William Primrose and Max Aranoff. During World War II he played with the Marine Band in Washington and subsequently with the American Broadcasting Co. orchestra in New York. He has held the first viola chair with the Boston orchestra since 1947. He is married to the former Maria von-Leuchtenberg, niece of Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky. With their two small daughters they occupy for the summer an apartment at Saranac, the Koussevitzky estate in Lenox.

Samuel Houston Mayes, as his name suggests, was born in Texas, of partly Cherokee Indian parentage. He came to the Boston orchestra five seasons ago from the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, where he occupied the first desk. He has made several solo appearances with the Boston orchestra and is widely known as a player of chamber music.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center and of Mrs. Coolidge are invited to the series of concerts. Wednesday's program follows:

Beethoven .... Trio in G major
Hindemith .... Trio, Op. 34
Mozart .... Divertimento for String
.... Trio, K. 563

PORTLAND, ME.
PRESS-HERALD
JUL 7 - 1952

Tanglewood Concerts Attract About 7,000

Lenox, Mass., July 6. (AP) — Three holiday week-end concerts at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, attracted 6,800 persons.

An all-Bach program Saturday night drew a record attendance of 3,800. Today's festival concert was heard by 2,500 and 500 students attended the Sunday morning chamber music program.

Charles Munch directed 40 members of the orchestra in its first two concerts, opening a six-week season. The second series will be heard next week end.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUL 8 - 1952

Groups Plan Attendance At Tanglewood Concert

Sigma Nu Upsilon, Western N. E. Club to Make Trip

Sigma Nu Upsilon Sorority and the Outdoor Club of Western New England College will hold their second annual trip to Tanglewood Saturday, the 26th. They will have dinner in Lenox and attend the night concert in the shed. Pierre Monteux will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Miss [illegible] Williams of 10 Trento St., this city, is serving chairman of the committee planning the event. Reservations for members and friends may be made with her before Thursday and should be accompanied by check for tickets.

Play Bach Concerto

(Plouffe Photo)

Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (Mr. and Mrs. Burgin), who played the solo parts in the Concerto for Two Violins on the all-Bach program that opened the Berkshire Festival in the Tanglewood theater, Lenox, last night.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
JUL 6 1952

All-Bach Program Opens Concerts In Tanglewood

AN ALL Johann Sebastian Bach concert, "The Musical Offering," a Concerto for two Violins, Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin soloists, and the Suite No. 3 in D Major, comprised last night's program in the Theater-Concert Hall in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. under direction of Charles Munch. This afternoon, the program, in the same hall, will include the Handel Concerto Grosso in A Minor for Strings, Opus 6, No. 4; Dittersdorf's "Symphony in C Major," the Fifth Symphony of CPE Bach, in B Minor and the Johann Sebastian Bach Cantata No. 140, conducted by Hugh Ross.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
JUL 7 - 1952

Tanglewood Concerts

6800 Are Attracted to 3 Holiday Weekend Programs

Lenox, Mass. — (AP) — Three holiday weekend concerts at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, attracted 6800 persons.

An all-Bach program Saturday night drew a record attendance of 3800. Yesterday's festival concert we heard by 2500 and 500 students attended the Sunday morning chamber music program.

Charles Munch directed 40 members of the orchestra in its first two concerts, opening a six-week season. The second series will be heard next weekend.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
JUL 6 - 1952

RECORD AUDIENCE AT FIRST CONCERT AT TANGLEWOOD

3800 Give Munch and Boston Symphony Welcome at All-Bach Program

By VICTOR PRAHL

Lenox, July 5—With a perfect evening, including a full moon, a record audience of 3800 turned out for the opening concert at Tanglewood tonight. There was an extra warmth in their reception of the members of the Boston Symphony and their conductor, Charles Munch, in this first appearance after their successful European tour. Mr. Munch, just back from France, looked well rested and conducted with his usual youthful verve and the men of the orchestra seemed in top form.

All-Bach Program

The musical offering, which opened the all-Bach program, may not rate as one of the master's major works but listening to this rarely performed collection of pieces was almost in the nature of a novelty. Written for Frederick the Great and built on a theme given the composer by the king, it is essentially a theoretical work with its ricercare in three voices, different kinds of canons, and its fugure in six voices which is also called a ricercare. The orchestra lent charm to its six parts and gave a clear, telling exposition to this abundance of contrapuntal complexities. The six voiced fugure as heard in this performance was a thing of beauty, showing how a genius can pour poetry into a mathematical formula.

More relaxing to the ears was the concerto for two violins played by the orchestra's concert-master, Richard Burgin and his wife, Ruth Posselt. Miss Posselt's vigorous, forthright manner had free play in the animated first movement and Mr. Burgin's fine sense of lyricism came into its own in the beautiful largo.

Although both of these artists have their own distinct style and musicality, they understand each other, and succeeded in merging them in a performance that was expressive and well-balanced. Their brisk way with the lilting finale and their impeccable clarity in the rapid contrapuntal passages, won them an ovation at its finish. Mr. Munch and the orchestra who gave them a perfect accompaniment shared in the numerous recalls. The concert closed with the suite No. 3 in D. Major.

Music Lovers Enjoy Enchanted Evening

Lenox, July 5—A record audience of 3800 international music lovers enjoyed a truly enchanted evening on the moon-drenched grounds of Tanglewood tonight as the 15th season of the Berkshire Music Festival was launched. With the gates swung wide for the official opening program the summer throngs began to arrive as much as an hour and a half before concert time.

With an all-Bach program under the baton of Dr. Charles Munch, the theater-concert hall was soon filled to over-flowing and the audience spread far out onto the spacious lawns to hear the music of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra just recently returned from a great tour of Europe. Forty of the 48 states and at least 15 foreign countries were represented in the vast crowd that applauded long the work of the noted French conductor.

With the season now in full sway, a day-long program is in the offing for Sunday. The departmental chamber music will be given its first airing tomorrow morning at 10. The second of the concerts in the theater-concert hall tomorrow afternoon will be followed in the evening by a composers' forum in the chamber music hall at 8:15.

The first of the chamber music concerts of the season under the Elizabeth Coolidge Foundation will be offered Wednesday night at 8:15.

Tomorrow afternoon's concert too will have a real audience appeal for Hugh Ross will conduct the festival chorus in Bach's cantata "Wachet Auf, Ruft Uns Die Stimme." In that portion of the program preceding intermission, Dr. Munch will conduct the works of Handel, Dittersdorf and C. P. E. Bach.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 7 - 1952

TANGLEWOOD HAS 6300 ATTENDANCE FOR TWO EVENTS

Conductor Munch Displays Intimate Touch in Wielding Baton

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Tanglewood, July 6—With 6300 music enthusiasts attending the first two concerts of the current Berkshire Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night and this afternoon, the festival has gotten off to a fine start. Indeed, the 3800 audience of Saturday night was an all-time opening record. It appears that the interest in seldom-heard music played by the smaller ensembles is growing and when more than a 1000 persons were willing to brave a hot sun today to hear such music, that seems proof aplenty.

Style Is Intimate

Charles Munch, music director of the festival and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, seems to enjoy these intimate concerts. His own style of conducting is intimate and he seems very close to his players as he conducts the music of Bach, Handel and others. This afternoon his face was often wreathed in smiles as some passage went particularly well. It must be a source of keen satisfaction to work with such a skilled ensemble as that which performs the music given the first three week ends of the festival. Really all a conductor has to think about is interpretation. Thus the results are often of compelling interest.

The audience, inside and outside the theater-concert hall, looked pretty much as it has these past years. Kipling described the prevailing modes when he wrote "the uniform he wore was nothing much before and little less than half of that behind." The fully dressed dowager really attracted interest.

The concert Friday night was devoted to the music of Johann Sebastian Bach, with the master's "Musical Offering" as the important performance. One hears it seldom. This may be due to the fact that the work is the theoreticians delight and that there are not enough of them in the average audience to bring many conductors to the point of programming it. The Trio Sonata is beautiful and the final Canon is impressive. It was superbly played with emphasis on the utmost clarity and technical flexibility. This year as last, we noticed that the players seemed relaxed and utterly co-operative.

In Top Form

Concertmaster Richard Bergin and his wife, Ruth Posselt, were the soloists in the magnificent performance of the "Concerto in D Minor for Two Violins and String Orchestra." Both soloists were in top form with Miss Posselt playing with enormous vitality and rhythmic incisiveness, somewhat a foil to the liquid beauty and plastic grace of her husband's playing.

The program this afternoon strayed from the beaten path, bringing us such delicacies as the "Symphony in C Minor," by Dittersdorf; the "Symphony in F Major, No. 3" by C. P. E. Bach and the Cantata "Sleepers Awake" by J. S. Bach. The program opened with a noble performance of Handel's "Concerto Grosso in A Minor, No. 4." Not for a long long time will any audience hear a more beautiful performance than that given the opening Larghetto and the Largo movement.

The Dittersdorf symphony is a product of its time. That was a time when music was written by command, for entertainment, often of dilettantes. It is a well written, sparkling work, superficial, but vastly entertaining. Mr. Munch and the players seemed to enjoy every note of it. So did the audience. C. P. E. Bach's "Symphony No. 3 in F Major" was another matter. Like his illustrious father, the son had something to say and was fully aware as to how he might say it best. The symphony is in three solid movements. Its outlines are broad and its melodic lines are rich and varied. It was given a performance of surpassing interest; one which roused the audience to unusual enthusiasm, as well it might, for Mr. Munch and his players gave it everything they had, and that's a lot.

Featured in Cantata

The festival chorus was featured in J. S. Bach's, cantata "Sleepers Awake," sung under the direction of Hugh Ross. As yet not quite coordinated and a bit shaky as to entrance and tempi, the best singing was in the final straight-forward chorale "Gloria Sei Dir Gesungen." This cantata is based on the parable of the wise and foolish virgins. The soloists were Sarah Fleming, soprano; Mac Morgan, baritone, and John McCollum, tenor. Mr. McCollum was heard in a Springfield performance of Handel's "Messiah" last season. Miss Fleming revealed a truly lovely voice, silvery in color, high and true to pitch. She negotiated the difficult passages with ease. Mr. Morgan again revealed his fine musicianship and excellent voice which will undoubtedly be heard several times during the festival. In his only solo, a taxing recitative, Mr. McCollum sang brilliantly.

Early Arrivals Seek Seats Under Shade

Lenox, July 5—With a brillant sun beaming down on the stately 60-foot pines of Tanglewood, some 2500 attended the second program of the Berkshire Festival in the theater-concert hall of the world renowned music center.

Early arrivals soon monopolized the shadows bordering the sprawling green that has become known world-wide during the colorful 15 year history of the Berkshire music festival. Before and long after the concert the vast audience roamed leisurely through the magnificent formal gardens south of the theater-concert hall and overlooking Lake Mahkeenac.

Receives Applause

Certainly the popularity enjoyed by Dr. Munch has never been surpassed here on the grounds of Tanglewood. The applause given him seemed to have the air of the chant which members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave spontaneously at a reception when they sang forth "We want Charlie."

After intermission he sat midway in the theater to enjoy Bach's Cantata No. 140 and the chorale as conducted by Hugh Ross. Mr. Munch was greatly impressed and was quick to applaud the masterful performance.

The third program of these popular so-called small concerts will be next Saturday night when a varied program of the works of Rameau, Couperin, Purcell, Vivaldi and Lalande will be offered. Highlighting this will be the "De Prefundis," noted for solo voices, chorus and orchestra.

Berkshire Concert on WGBH Tomorrow

Henry B. Cabot, Charles Munch, Aaron Copland and Lewis B. Perry will be heard in the opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center to be broadcast tomorrow evening at 7 p. m. over WGBH. Mr. Cabot is president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Mr. Perry is chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Recorded on last Sunday at Tanglewood, the program also includes the singing of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" by the Berkshire Festival Chorus conducted by Hugh Ross.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 6 1952

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL
THEATRE CONCERT HALL
Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

TODAY, 3 P. M. Members of Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch; Ruth Posselt, Richard Burgin, violinists.
Concerto Grosso in A minor for strings, Op. 6, No. 4 ....Handel
Symphony in C ....Dittersdorf
Symphony No. 3........ C. P. E. Bach
Cantata No. 140, Wachet auf, ruft uns die Stimme (conducted by Hugh Ross). Bach

SATURDAY, 8:15 P. M. Members of Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Mr. Munch.
Suite from Dardanus...............Rameau
Concert dans le gout theatral...Couperin
Fantasia in A, for strings..........Purcell
Concerto Grosso in D minor, Op. 3, No. 11......................Vivaldi
De Profundis, for chorus and orchestra (conducted by Hugh Ross)......Lalande

NEXT SUNDAY, 3 P. M. Members of Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Mr. Munch.
Symphony in E flat, No. 39; Symphony in G minor, No. 40; Symphony in C, No. 41 ....Mozart

---

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE
JUL 6 - 1952

* * *

EIGHTH NOTES: Theodore Grimes, 36 Elmhurst St., a bassoon player, is registered at the Berkshire Music Center. . "Titus," the opera which Mozart wrote in the last year of his life and the only "opera seria" of his maturer years, is announced by Boris Goldovsky as the major production of the opera departmnet of the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Mass., with performances on Aug. 4 and 5. . .

[30]

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
JUL 6 - 1952

Many Changes Announced In Tanglewood Programs

Artur Rubinstein in Brahms' Second Piano Concerto Aug. 7, Brahms' Symphony No. 4 On New July 31 Program; Chorus in 'De Profundis' Today

Lenox, July 5—Artur Rubinstein will play the solo in Brahms' second piano concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the ~~Berkshire Festival~~ Aug. 7, it has been announced by Charles Munch, conductor. He made known at the same time other changes in the program and the names of additional Festival soloists. Brahms' fourth symphony was included in the July 31 program following the receipt by the orchestra of the highest award of the Academie du Disque Francais for its recording of the Brahms work.

Margaret Harshaw, soprano, Charles Kullman, tenor, and James Pease, bass, will be soloists for the Wagnen program that Pierre Monteaux will conduct Aug. 2. Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor part in Berlioz' "Requiem" in the final Festival concert Aug. 10.

July 31 Program

Cancelling the program listed for Thursday evening, July 31, Mr. Munch will conduct instead Faure's Incidental Music for "Pelleas and Melisande" and Ballade for Piano and Orchestra, Ravel's piano Concerto and Brahms' fourth symphony.

Next week end's programs will consist of Rameau's Suite from "Dardanus," Couperin's Concert dans le gout theatral, Purcell's Fantasia in A, for String's Vivaldi's Concerto Grosso in D minor and Lalande's "DeProfundis" for chorus and orchestra Saturday evening, with an all-Mozart program of the three symphonies in E flat, G minor and C major ("Jupiter") Sunday afternoon.

Included in the 27 Berkshire Music Center performances listed in the Tanglewood calender of 49 events are five for the coming week: Chamber music Sunday morning at 10, a composer's forum Sunday evening, the Bel Arte Trio, gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress Wednesday afternoon and a symphony concert by the student orchestra Friday evening.

All events at the school are open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Anyone may become a Friend by making a contribution in any amount to the support of the school. Program and ticket information will be mailed on request to Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. This week's programs:

Sunday, July 6
(At 10 A. M.)
Chamber Music
(At 3 P. M.)
Berkshire Festival Concert (Charles Munch, conducting)
Handel. . . .Concerto Grosso in A minor for Strings
Dittersdorf. . .Symphony in C major
C. P. S. Bach. . .Symphony No. 5
J. S. Bach. . . .Cantata No. 140
(Conducted by Hugh Ross)
(At 8:15 p. m.)
Composers' Forum
Wednesday, July 9 At 8:15)
Bel Arte Trio (Coolidge Concert) (Ruth Posselt, violinist, Joseph de Pasquale, violist, and Samuel Mayes, cellist)
Beethoven. . .Trio in G major
Hindemith. . .Trio, Opus 34
Mozart. . . . .Divertimento for Violin, Viola and Violincello
Friday, July 11
(At 8:15 p. m.)
Symphony Concert by Student Orchestra
Saturday, July 12
At 8:15
Berkshire Festival Concert (Charles Munch, conductor)
Rameau .... Suite from "Dardanus"
Couperin. . .Concert dans le gout theatral
Purcell. . . .Fantasia in A, for Strings
Vivaldi. . . .Concerto Grosso in D minor
Lalande .... "De Profundis" for Chorus and Orchestra (Conducted by Hugh ss)
Sunday, July 13
(At 10 A. M.)
Chamber Music
(At 3 P. M.)
Berkshire Festival Concert (Charles unch, conductinb) ozart. . . .Symphony in E flat ozart. . . .Symphony in G minor ozart. . . .Symphony in C major "Jupiter").

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 11 1952

Boston Concertmaster At Lenox Tonight

Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, ~~will lead the~~ student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Richard Strauss' "Don Quixote" tonight at 8:15. Conductor of the Portland Symphony Orchestra, he is a member of the conducting and orchestra faculty of the school.

The first half of the program will be led by students in the active conducting class. Robert Mandell of the Bronx will open the program with Prokofieff's Classical Symphony and Elyakum Shapira of Israel will conduct Beethoven's Violin Concerto, with Sarge Blanc of Paris as soloist.

SPOKANE, WASH.
SPOKESMAN-REVIEW
JUL 8 1952

Musicians Gather at Tanglewood

The 10th year of activity at Tanglewood, Mass., has begun with more than 400 students from 41 states and 16 countries enrolled in the Berkshire Music center.

To the general public it is the summer-long concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra that make the green acres that once housed Nathaniel Hawthorne a happy place to be. But the school's the thing for those who supervise the whole activity.

Among the new students this year will be Christopher von Dohnanyi, grandson of the composer of the favorite "Variations on a Nursery Theme." He's ambitious for a career as a conductor.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
JUL 7 1952

All Bach Concert Is Highly Stimulating

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 7. — Refreshed from recent Euro- Munch and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened the annual Berkshire Festival here this weekend.

Traditionally, the programs pean triumphs, Charles were 18th-century. Perfect weather conditions encouraged over 6,000 people to attend the two concerts in the theatre-concert hall.

The all-Bach concert on Saturday night proved a highly stimulating experience. Munch's approach to Bach vitalizes performances. His rhythms throb and his lyricism sings, especially through the Bostonian's strings.

The familiar music of the double-violin concerto and the Suite No. 3 captivated an audience of 3,800, only 1,300 of whom could occupy the hall, the remainder listening from the lawn.

To Bach devotees, a performance of "The Musical Offering" afforded special pleasure. Its demonstration of the beauty of theory in sound fascinates the initiated. If its canonic theorizing palls on the uninitiated, there are always the "Ricercare" and "Trio Sonata" movements to compensate. These latter were quite purely set forth on this occasion.

Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin were soloists in the concerto. They played it with a nice blend of finesse and abandon. The ensemble effect of the whole performance drew loud acclaim.

A varied program on Sunday afternoon scanned the 18th-century field. Munch conducted Handel's Concerto Grosso, Opus 6, No. 4, Dittersdorf Symphony in C, C. P. E. Bach's Third Symphony; and Hugh Ross led the Berkshire Festival Chorus in J. S. Bach's Cantata No. 140. Again Munch's vigorous beat and sensuous tone quality for the slow movements brought keen enjoyment.

The Dittersdorf symphony was a novelty, refreshing in the conventionality of its style as well as its touches of originality. C. P. E. Bach made still another bid for wider recognition. Both the Handel and Bach contata were more familiar items, set forth stylistically and stylishly.

Three excellent young soloists highlighted the cantata performance: Sarah Fleming, soprano; John McCollum, tenor, and Mac Morgan, bass. Miss Fleming has a beautiful voice. With a bit more personality in her singing, she should catch attention. Both McCollum and Morgan are already qualified singers. The chorus sang conscientiously, not quite meshed this early in the season.

Two weekends remain before the big shed concerts. They will feature works by Mozart, Haydn, and Schubert's Mass No. 2. The first concert in the music shed is scheduled for July 24.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 12 1952

Tanglewood Schedule

Munch to Lead Boston Symphony Tonight and Tomorrow Night

Special to the Herald Tribune

LENOX, Mass., July 11.—Charles Munch will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at 8:15 tomorrow night and 3 p. m. Sunday in the concerts of the Berkshire Festival's second week end at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Music by Rameau, Couperin, Purcell, Vivaldi and Lalande will be heard tomorrow night, and Mozart's last three symphonies Sunday.

The Berkshire Music Center's program for the coming week at Tanglewood includes chamber music at 10 a. m. Sunday, a composer's forum at 8:15 Sunday night, opera scenes Monday night, a concert by a small choir Tuesday night, sonatas for cello and piano played by Janos Scholz and Miklos Schwalb Wednesday night and a student orchestra concert, including Strauss' "Don Quixote" under Richard Burgin, Friday night. The center's programs are open to contributing Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUL 7 1952

BERKSHIRE STARTS FESTIVAL OF MUSIC

First Two Chamber Orchestra Concerts Attract 6,300 to Tanglewood Auditorium

By ROSS PARMENTER

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 6—The 1952 Berkshire Music Festival opened at Tanglewood this week-end. Though the first two programs consisted of chamber orchestra works of rather austere character, they attracted 6,300 listeners.

These chamber orchestra concerts at Tanglewood began almost as a necessity. During the second World War they proved the only way the late Serge Koussevitzky could keep a semblance of a festival going. But now they have become traditional and, since 1946, when the full-scale Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts were resumed, the "Little Festival" has always been incorporated in the big one.

Bach and Mozart were the composers of Dr. Koussevitzky's seven Little Festivals in the theatre-concert hall, but last year he planned to add Haydn as well. After Dr. Koussevitzky's death, Charles Munch, his successor as director of the Festival, carried out his wishes and conducted the works of all three composers.

This year Mr. Munch is branching out still farther. His Saturday night program followed custom in being all-Bach, but this afternoon he added works by Handel, Dittersdorf and Bach's son, Karl Philipp Emanuel. Next week-end he will offer Mozart, but he will also take the audience back to Rameau, Couperin, Purcell, Vivaldi and Lalande. During the third week-end he will bring the programs forward as late as Schubert's Mass in G Major.

Played by Boston Symphony

The works of the Little Festival are played by approximately a third of the members of the Boston Symphony. This week-end the thirty or forty instrumentalists were almost engulfed by the large audiences. Sitting on the stage behind the musicians were 200 students of the Berkshire Music Center. In front were 1,100 in the auditorium proper, and surrounding the building, sitting and lying on rugs spread on the lawns, was an outdoor audience. On Saturday night it outnumbered the one inside two to one.

Fortunately, the weather was beautiful for both concerts. Those persons 100 yards back from the open front of the auditorium reported that they could hear only faintly. That they could hear at all was partly due to the intentness with which everyone listened and partly due to the mountain stillness. There was hardly breeze enough to stir a pine needle.

"The Musical Offering" was the major work of the opening program. Mr. Munch gave it a justly paced, admirably clear and searching performance; and the flutist, Georges Laurent, distinguished himself in the Trio Sonata, the longest of its thirteen numbers. But the forty-five-minute work did not catch the fancy of the audience as much as the two works that followed.

2-Violin Concerto Given

They were the Concerto in D Minor for two violins, with Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin as the soloists, and the Suite No. 3 in D Major. The slow movement of the concerto, with its sustained interweaving strands of melody, was especially beautiful. And the Suite, with its familiar G string air and its joyous closing gigue, made a felicitous piece with which to end.

The Bach work on this afternoon's program was the Cantata No. 140, "Sleepers Awake." It was led by Hugh Ross, who is in charge of choral singing at Tanglewood and who utilized forty members of the Berkshire Festival Chorus. Sarah Fleming, soprano; John McCollum, tenor, and Mac Morgan, bass-baritone, were the soloists.

The singing of the soloists was clear, skillful, sincere and sympathetic, and the fresh-voiced young chorus did very well considering it had been together only for a week, but it was the compositions of the three newcomers that nearly stole the show. The two slow movements of Handel's Concerto Grosso No. 4, Op. 6, were spacious and lovely; Dittersdorf's Symphony in C Major was a marvel of Viennese lightness, and K. P. E. Bach's Symphony No. 3 in F Major was remarkable for its originality and depth of personal feeling.

Mr. Munch led the three works with great sensitivity and the control of the true orchestral master, and the musicians of the Boston Symphony were at their best as members of a virtuoso team.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
JUL 8 - 1952

Tanglewood Festival Is Opened with Bach

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

Bach was the piece de resistance at the opening of the Tanglewood music festival in the Theatre-Concert Hall Sat~~urday night with three~~ works for small orchestra, directed by Charles Munch. The Concerto for two violins and orchestra was brilliantly played by Richard Burgin, concert master, and Ruth Posselt (Mrs. Burgin) with the Suite No. 3 as the closing work.

Sunday afternoon, the Concerto Grosso by Handel; the Symphony in C1major by Dittersdorf and the Symphony No. 3 by the son of Johann Sebastian Bach, C. E. P. Bach constituted the first half of the program. The second half was the Bach Cantata, "Sleepers Wake," with orchestra, soloists and chorus.

YOUNG SOLOISTS

Three young soloists, Sarah Fleming, soprano; John McCullum, tenor and Mac Morgan, baritone were more than adequate for the taxing arias and duets which utilize a considerable part of the score. Miss Fleming has a pure soprano, of wide range and beautiful work of Mac Morgan were in the finest traditions of the German composer, earning for all three soloists and Hugh Ross, the conductor, numerous recalls to the stage. The programs for next Saturday night will include works by Rameau, Couperin, Purcell, Vivaldi, Lalande. Sunday afternoon will feature an all-Mozart program with the "Jupiter" Symphony as the final work.

BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE
JUL 13 1952

Events at Berkshire Festival

Mozart's last three symphonies, the E-flat (K. 543), the G minor (K. 550) and the "Jupiter," will form the program to be presented by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and conducted by Charles Munch in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood in the Berkshires this afternoon at 3.

The music of Mozart, Haydn and Schubert will be played next Saturday and Sunday in the last weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts before the opening of the major Festival in the Music Shed, July 24. Lukas Foss will be the soloist in the Mozart Piano Concerto in C major Saturday evening, under the baton of Charles Munch, who will conduct all but Mozart's Litaniae, for chorus and orchestra, for which Hugh Ross will take the podium.

Haydn's Symphonies No. 99, in E-flat and 86, in D major, and Schubert's Mass in G major will be played Sunday afternoon. The Mass will be the concluding work in both programs

The first evening of opera scenes by the Berkshire Music Center for the current season will be given Monday night, to be followed by a concert by the small choir Tuesday evening and a sonata recital, gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, Wednesday evening. Janos Scholz, cellist, and Miklos Schwalb, pianist, will perform Beethoven's Sonata in A major, Sonata, Op. 4 by Zoltan Kodaly and Sonata, Op. 8 by Dohnanyi.

Richard Burgin will lead the student orchestra in Richard Strauss' "Don Quixote" Friday night for the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, contributors to the support of the school, who are invited to all school performances. Soloists will be Joanne Dempsey, violin, Victor Alpert, viola and Robert Sayre, cello. For the first half of the program Robert Mandell of the Bronx will conduct Prokofieff's Classical Symphony and Elyakum Shapira of Israel will conduct Beethoven's Violin Concerto, with Serge Blanc of Paris as soloist

Chamber music will be heard Sunday morning at 10 and the composers' forum Sunday evening, as usual.

BOSTON, MASS.
RECORD
JUL 14 1952

RUBINSTEIN WILL PLAY TANGLEWOOD

Artur Rubinstein will play the solo in Brahms' Second Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the ~~Berkshire~~ Festival, Aug. 7. The announcement is made by Charles Munch, conductor.

Brahms' Fourth Symphony is included in the July 31 program

July 14, 52

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON

Music in the Berkshires

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 13 1952

BOSTON SYMPHONY EXCELS IN WORKS OF SIX COMPOSERS

Plenty of Variety Provided In Pleasing Concert at Tanglewood

By VICTOR PRAHL

Lenox, July 12—Six composers instead of one figured on the third program given by members of the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch at Tanglewood tonight. Although no single towering genius dominated the evening, there was a distinct flavor of the epoch in the works of these composers from 17th century France, England and Italy. It made one realize as well, that all of the music of this period did not come from Germany.

Profound Impression

We enjoyed greatly the beautiful, expressive polyphonic writing in the fantasias of Henry Purcell composed in the days before a figured bass made music more static. Purcell, England's greatest composer, died in 1695 in his 31st year, somewhat antedating the others represented here, but his five pieces made a profound impression at this concert. A suite from Rameau's opera, "Dardanus," and short pieces for the theater by Couperin opened the concert. French in character, alternating between the tender air and the gay dances of the epoch, they were probably composed as an accompaniment for the ballet. In fact there was plenty of variety in the first half of the program which consisted of 23 short pieces or movements in all. Mr. Munch and his men played all of these compositions with an ingratiating charm and appropriate style. There was real warmth in the muted passages.

Stunning Performance

The Vivaldi concerto in D minor is surely one of the glories of this literature and this stunning performance explored fully its rich sonorities, sustained the poetic flow of its lovely largo and bristled with a brilliant virtuosity in the final allegro. Altogether we have never enjoyed Charles Munch's conducting more than we did in this varied lot of pieces. After intermission the chorus, five student soloists, and the orchestra performed Lalande's "De Profundis" under the direction of Hugh Ross.

This afternoon the Juilliard string quartet attracted the largest audience we have ever seen assembled at a South Mountain concert. They held the audience spellbound in quartets by Mozart, Beethoven and Debussy. We shall write at greater length of their marvelous playing later.

Munch Plays Smaller Works At Tanglewood

By Jules Wolffers

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Charles Munch turned the attention of his audience to early French music Saturday evening for the third program of the Tanglewood season. In addition to items by Henry Purcell and Antonio Vivaldi, the chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony musicians played works by three French contemporaries of Johann Sebastian Bach.

From the opening notes of the Rameau suite from the opera, "Dardanus," it was evident that the conductor was at his best. The assertive "Entrée," the tender "Rondeau du sommeil," the buoyant Rigaudoon; and the tender hearted "Rondeau gai"—all were transmitted with that blend of energy and grace which Rameau's music demands. The orchestra was extremely sensitive to Mr. Munch's direction for the happiest of performance results.

⁂

If the Rameau suite is relatively familiar, the suite "Concert dans le goût théâtral" by François Couperin was a "first for most of the hearers. This "concert in the theatrical style" was written to serve as interlude during an operatic performance. After an attention-demanding overture, a succession of contrasting airs and dances follows to the concluding "Air de bachantes," with its early 18th-century conception of wild abandon.

The performance of the highly ornamented and intricate music was expert. Couperin's scores abound with the graces and embellishments characteristic of the period. Proper realization of the little shorthand signs is always a problem in early music, since the indications and their meaning vary considerably according to composer, period, and country. But half the charm of Couperin's music is lost if the ornaments are omitted or imperfectly played.

In this performance Mr. Munch wisely used a realization which left nothing to chance. All the ornaments were written out in modern notation and the skilled Boston Symphony players had no trouble with any of the trills, turns, and figures which have plagued generations of performers.

This matter settled, conductor and orchestra were free to transmit the full flavor of the delightful and fanciful entr'acte.

For those unfamiliar with Purcell, the superb craftsmanship and beauty of the English composer's Fantasias for Strings must have come as a revelation. These "fancies," as the Stuart composer called them, are three- and four-part pieces for violins, violas, and cellos. Mr. Munch programed five of these remarkable little compositions, including a graceful Pavane and the famous Fantasia on One Note.

While the renditions were clear and satisfying, the interpretation seemed somewhat over-stressed at times. This subtle and intimate music sounds best when it emerges spontaneously in unforced manner.

⁂

The "One-Note" Fantasia, in particular, made its point almost too plainly. The technical tour de force is built, as its title implies, around a single pitch which keeps sounding throughout. Mr. Munch kept the note so much in evidence that some of the marvelous modulations and expressive effects of the other voices were lost.

Greatly to the delight of the listeners on the lawns outside the Theater-Concert Hall, the conductor led the Vivaldi Concerto for String Orchestra, Op. 3, No. 11, in the grand manner. The use of added winds to double some of the parts produced still more resonance, so that the outside audience, which sometimes misses softer effects, heard the Vivaldi as a complete entity.

This treatment produced enormously effective results in the first and third movements. The middle Largo movement, with its tender and pathetic violin solo over a sighing muted string accompaniment, is not too well suited for a massed string effect. Eight soloists were seven too many. With this exception, the Concerto was an outstanding success. Mr. Munch was called back to the podium repeatedly.

For the final item, Hugh Ross conducted the Berkshire Festival Chorus in the "De Profundis," Motet for Solo Voices, Chorus and Orchestra, by Michel Richard de Lalande, church composer in the service of Louis XIV and Louis XV. Considered to be the leading French liturgical composer of the period, Lalande was an artist of high attainment, a sort of Gallic minor Bach.

⁂

The Motet is set to a Latin translation of Psalm CXXX—"Out of the depths have I cried unto Thee, O Lord." Lalande's treatment is reverential and persuasive, achieving that sense of dedication which uses the music as a means to an end instead of as an end in itself.

The same may be said of the interpretation. Mr. Ross and his forces were responsible for a singularly moving performance. Soloists, all uniformly excellent, were Sarah Fleming, soprano; Shirley Winton, mezzo soprano; Betty Lou Allen, alto; John McCollum, tenor, and Richard Sharretts, bass.

Originally, this series of chamber music concerts had been planned as Bach-Mozart festivals. For those who had been missing their Mozart, Mr. Munch made up the deficiency in handsome style by listing three Mozart symphonies in a row for the fourth program on Sunday afternoon. These were that famous trio of symphonies that Mozart composed in the summer of 1788, his final efforts in the form.

Mr. Munch projected the marvelous works with the decision and energy he customarily brings to Mozart. Such treatment is greatly to be preferred to the mincing, over-refined versions we sometimes hear. At the same time one regrets the absence of the flowing, unaccented lines which can make of Mozart melodies things of living, rapturous beauty.

Thus while the lovely E-flat Symphony was set in too square a compass, the energetic Symphony No. 40 fits exactly into Mr. Munch's Mozartian framework. The nobility and dignity of the "Jupiter" Symphony brought to a close this absorbing and interesting week end.

N.Y. Times, July 13

SKIRTS: Women are not allowed to wear shorts at the concerts of the Berkshire Music Festival. Last season Tanglewood officials devised a polite way of enforcing the ban. They loaned yellow wrap-around skirts to the ladies who turned up in the verboten apparel. Feelings and propriety were both assuaged by the solution, but, like many solutions, it created unforeseen problems. One was that some of the ladies walked off with the temporary skirts.

This gave eagle-eyed gate officials a delicate problem of discrimination. As women left wearing yellow skirts, the men were faced with determining whether the skirts were permanent or borrowed. Rather than run the risk of divesting a lady of her own honest-to-goodness skirt, it was decided to let all get by.

But before this decision was reached one official suggested that Tanglewood be printed in large letters across the back of each one. Then there would be no doubt. This scheme was scotched when it was pointed out the lettering would mean a still greater loss. Such skirts would be tourist souvenirs.

Tanglewood Festival

Events at Berkshire Festival

Mozart's last three symphonies, the E-flat (K. 543), the G minor (K. 550) and the "Jupiter," will form the program to be presented by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and conducted by Charles Munch in the Theatre-Concert Hall at Tanglewood in the Berkshires this afternoon at 3.

The music of Mozart, Haydn and Schubert will be played next Saturday and Sunday in the last week-end of Berkshire Festival concerts before the opening of the major Festival in the Music Shed, July 24. Lukas Foss will be the soloist in the Mozart Piano Concerto in C major Saturday evening, under the baton of Charles Munch, who will conduct all but Mozart's Litaniae, for chorus and orchestra, for which Hugh Ross will take the podium.

Haydn's Symphonies No. 99, in E-flat and 86, in D major, and Schubert's Mass in G major will be played Sunday afternoon. The Mass will be the concluding work in both programs.

The first evening of opera scenes by the Berkshire Music Center for the current season will be given Monday night, to be followed by a concert by the small choir Tuesday evening and a sonata recital, gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, Wednesday evening. Janos Scholz, cellist, and Miklos Schwalb, pianist, will perform Beethoven's Sonata in A major, Sonata, Op. 4 by Zoltan Kodaly and Sonata, Op. 8 by Dohnanyi.

Richard Burgin will lead the student orchestra in Richard Strauss' "Don Quixote" Friday night for the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, contributors to the support of the school, who are invited to all school performances. Soloists will be Joanne Dempsey, violin, Victor Alpert, viola and Robert Sayre, cello. For the first half of the program Robert Mandell of the Bronx will conduct Prokofieff's Classical Symphony and Elyakum Shapira of Israel will conduct Beethoven's Violin Concerto, with Serge Blanc of Paris as soloist.

Chamber music will be heard Sunday morning at 10 and the composers' forum Sunday evening, as usual.

SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 11 1952

NEXT WEEK'S PROGRAM AT TANGLEWOOD

Student Orchestra Will Play Tonight; Munch to Conduct Tomorrow

Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will lead the student orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Richard Strauss' "Don Quixote" tonight. Conductor of the Portland Symphony Orchestra, he is a member of the conducting and orchestra faculty of the school.

The first half of the program will be led by students in the active conducting class. Robert Mandell of the Bronx will open the program with Prokofieff's Classical Symphony and Elyakum Shapira of Israel will conduct Beethoven's Violin Concerto, with Serge Blanc of Paris as soloist.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to the concert, which like all evening performances at Tanglewood will start at 8.15. Anyone may join the Friends Society by making a voluntary contribution toward the support of the school.

Next Week's Program

This is the program previously announced for next Friday. The works to be played that evening will be listed later. The Tanglewood program for next week follows:—

TOMORROW

8.15 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting.
Rameau—Suite from "Dardanus"
Couperin—Concert dans le gout theatral
Fantasia in A for Strings
Vivaldi—Concerto Grosso in D minor
Lalande—"De Profundis" for Chorus and Orchestra conducted by Hugh Ross

SUNDAY

*10 a. m. Chamber Music at Berkshire Music Center.
3 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting.
Mozart—Symphony in E-flat
Symphony in G minor
Symphony in C
*8.15 p. m. Composer's Forum

MONDAY

*8.15 p. m. Evening of Opera Scenes

TUESDAY

*Concert by Small Choir

WEDNESDAY

*8.15 p. m. Sonata Recital by Janos Scholzz, violincello, and Miklos Schwalb, piano, through the generosity of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress
Beethoven—Sonata in A major Kodaly—Sonata, opus 4
Dohnanyi—Sonata, opus 4

FRIDAY

*8.15 p. m. Symphony concert by Berkshire Music Center Orchestra

SATURDAY

8.15 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting Mozart—Litaniae for Chorus and Orch. (K. 125) conducted by Hugh Ross
—Piano Concerto in C major. (K. 467) solo by Lukas Foss
Schubert—Mass in G major

SUNDAY, JULY 20

*10 a. m. Chamber Music at Berkshire Music Center
3 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting.
Haydn—Symphony No. 99 in E-flat
Symphony No. 86 in D major
Schubert—Mass in G major
*8.15 p. m. Composer's Forum

* Open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

7/14/52
W. American

Mozart Works Offered By Symphony

(Special to The American)

Lenox, Mass., July 14—Three short symphonies of Mozart, the E-flat major, G minor and C major ("Jupiter") were offered by the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in the fourth concert of the 1952 festival season at Tanglewood.

Charles Munch conducted the group, before an audience of 3,300 seated in the rustic Theater-Concert Hall and sprawled on its sunny, green lawns.

The three week ends of "little concert" music, of which this was the second, have become a vital part of this summer musical institution. Preceding the major Berkshire Festival concerts in the big Shed, they have branched out from their original Bach-Haydn-Mozart schedule to include works by other composers, fitted for small orchestration.

Saturday night's program, for instance, included music by Rameau, Couperin, Purcell, Vivaldi and Lalande.

Of yesterday afternoon's works, the opening, the E flat major symphony, was without doubt the most delightful. With its delicate airs for clarinet and strings, reminiscent of the best in Mozart's chamber music repertoire, it was delightful summer listening.

The G minor is not my favorite Mozart. It was brooding, almost oppressively heavy in interpretation. In the spirited "Jupiter," however, Mr. Munch revived both himself and Mozart, working up to this rhythmic symphony's magnificent finale, with an enthusiasm that drew call after call from his audience in appreciation.

The Concert Hall program next Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon will consist of two Haydn symphonies; the Mozart C major piano concert with Lukas Foss as soloist; and choral litanies and Mass by Mozart and Schubert.

F. Z.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN

JUL 13 1952

Series 'A' Opens July 24 in Shed In Tanglewood

THE FIRST CONCERT in The Shed in "~~Tanglewood~~," Lenox, Mass., in the 1952 season of the Berkshire Festival is set for Thursday night, July 24, Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony in the Beethoven Third Symphony, ("Eroica"), and the Brahms Symphony No. 1 in C Minor. Second concert in this "A" Series will be Saturday night, July 26, Pierre Monteux conducting. The program will comprise the Overture to Cimarosa's "The Secret Marriage," the Schubert Symphony No. 7 in G Major and Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring." Series "B" concerts are July 31, Aug. 2, Aug. 3; Series "C," Aug. 7, 9, 10.

"TANGLEWOOD ON PARADE," the 10th anniversary celebration of the Berkshire Music Center, founded by the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will be Friday, Aug. 1. Conductors of the Boston Symphony on certain nights, Aug. 2, Monteux, a Wagnerian program; Aug. 9, the Koussevitzky Memorial concert, Leonard Bernstein. The final concert of the season, Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10, will be a presentation of the Berlioz "Requiem" with Chorus, Andrew McKinley, tenor soloist. Hugh Ross is Chorus Conductor. Soloists during the three series: Pianists Nicole Henriot and Artur Rubinstein; vocalists Margaret Harshaw, Charles Kullman and James Pease

[32]

Staatszeitung July 13, 1952

Pierre Monteux, Meisterinterpret klassischer und moderner Werke

Von FRED LOW

Pierre Monteux hat in der vergangenen Woche eine Reihe von Stadiumkonzerten geleitet und wird am 26. Juli zum erstenmal auch im Rahmen der Berkshire Musikfeste in der Freilufthalle in Tanglewood erscheinen. Der berühmte Dirigent war bis zum Vorjahr der ständige Leiter der San Francisco Symphonie und konnte nur selten einige kurze Gastspiele in New York im Stadium oder in der Carnegie Hall akzeptieren; er hat nun die Leitung des San Francisco Orchesters niedergelegt und wird abgesehen von seinen europäischen Dirigentenverpflichtungen auch in New York öfters zu sehen sein.

Monteux ist in Paris am 4. April 1875 geboren, er absolvierte das "Conservatoire" und war dann Violaspieler im Colonne Orchester, später in der Opera Comique. Er erzählt in launigen Worten von dem Beginn seiner künstlerischen Laufbahn: "Zuerst versuchte ich es mit der Geige, dann als ich etwas älter wurde begann ich mit der Viola und noch ein paar Jahre später tauschte ich die Viola für einen Taktstock ein. Wenn ich zu dem Punkt komme, wo ich auch dafür zu alt bin, dann werde ich Musikkritiker." Seine Laufbahn hat ihn mit den größten Komponisten der Gegenwart zusammengebracht: Debussy, Saint-Saens, Cesar Franck, Ravel, Massenet, vor allem aber Stravinsky und Prokofieff gehörten zu seinen intimsten Freunden und viele Erinnerungen an diese Freundschaft werden in den Erzählungen des Dirigenten wach.

Pierre Monteux hat sein erstes bedeutendes Engagement als Dirigent, Igor Stravinsky zu danken; er war zweiter Dirigent der Colonne-Konzerte als Diaghileff Aufführungen in Paris vorbereitete und das Colonne-Orchester zur Begleitung der Ballette verpflichtete. Die Proben zu "Petruschka" wurden von Monteux in Vertretung des ständigen Ballettdirigenten geleitet; Stravinsky wohnte den Proben bei und erklärte Diaghileff kategorisch, daß niemand anderer als Monteux die Petruschka - Premiere dirigieren werde." Seit damals ist der Name Monteux' mit den Aufführungen der Werke Stravinskys aufs innigste verknüpft.

Serge von Diaghileff, der Direktor und Begründer des russischen Balletts, verpflichtete Monteux nach seinem großen Erfolg der "Petruschka"-Aufführung zu einem der Hauptdirigenten des Ensembles; die Premieren von "Sacre du Printemps" und "Rossignol" von Stravinsky und "Daphnis et Chloe" von Ravel wurden von ihm dirigiert. Die Premiere des Balletts "Le Sacre du Printemps" führte bekanntlich zu einem der größten und heftigsten Theaterskandale in Paris und Monteux erinnerte vor kurzem anläßlich des Gastspieles der Bostoner in Paris, in dessen Rahmen "Le Sacre du Printemps" aufgeführt und begeistert akklamiert wurde, an die nun schon lange zur Theatergeschichte gehörende Premiere. In den Jahren 1913 und 1914 dirigierte Monteux in der Pariser Oper sowie in Covent Garden, London; er absolvierte Gastspiele in Berlin, Budapest und Wien und vom 5. August 1914 bis September 1916 war er Soldat der französischen Armee, kämpfte in Verdun, Reims, Soissons und in den Argonnen. 1916 wurde er vom Militärdienst befreit und kam mit dem Diaghileff-Ballett nach Amerika. Der damalige General-Manager der Metropolitan Oper Giulio Gatti-Casazza engagierte ihn für die Spielzeit 1917/18 an die Oper und Monteux kehrte auch in der folgenden Saison an das Institut zurück, wurde aber 1919 an die Spitze des Bostoner Symphonie Orchesters berufen, wo Henri Rabaud kurz vorher zurückgetreten war. In der Geschichte des Bostoner Ensembles wird seine Tätigkeit als hervorragend bezeichnet . . . ."; er war rastlos und mit Selbstverleugnung im Interesse des Boston Orchesters bemüht und erweiterte das Repertoire des Ensembles, indem er neben den klassischen Hauptwerken auch viele Kompositionen aufführte, die vorher nur sehr selten oder überhaupt nicht in den Spielplänen amerikanischer Orchester vertreten gewesen waren." 1924 ist Monteux Dirigent des berühmten Concertgebouw Orchesters in Amsterdam und von 1929—1936 Leiter des Paris Symphonie Orchesters.

Seine Tätigkeit in Amerika führte ihn dann nach Philadelphia, New York und Los Angeles und 1936 übernimmt er die ständige Leitung der San Francisco Symphonie, die er durch 16 Jahre lang innehatte. Pierre Monteux hat in dieser Periode das Ensemble zu einem der ersten in Amerika herangebildet und der ihm verliehene Titel "Ambassador Extraordinary for the City of San Francisco" zeigt die Liebe und Verehrung die der Maestro genießt.

1937 war Monteux Dirigent des NBC Symphonie-Orchesters und 1944—1945 erschien er an der Spitze der New Yorker Philharmoniker als Gastdirigent. 1950 kehrte er zur Leitung einiger Konzerte der Bostoner zurück und 1951 war er Gast des Cleveland Orchesters; während dieser Zeit blieb er aber immer der ständige Dirigent des San Francisco Ensembles. Im Vorjahr begeisterte er das New Yorker Publikum in seiner meisterhaften Interpretation des Stravinsky Werkes "Le Sacre du printemps" im Rahmen der Boston Symphonie-Orchesterkonzerte in der Carnegie Hall, und die Leitung der Stadiumkonzerte der vergangenen Woche zeigte wieder seine Meisterschaft in der Wiedergabe moderner und klassischer Kompositionen. Pierre Monteux leitet im Rahmen der Berkshire Musikwochen das Bostoner Ensemble in einer Wiederholung des Stravinsky Werkes sowie in einem Wagner-Programm.

Pierre Monteux dirigiert mit knappen, aber ungemein klaren und deutlichen Gesten; er vermeidet Effekthascherei und versteht seinen Willen mit unbedingter Autorität durchzusetzen. Die Musiker anerkennen seine Interpretationen als authentisch und folgen begeistert jeder Nuance; dieser Begeisterung ist auch der große Erfolg zu danken das Orchester bietet unter seiner Leitung fast immer außerordentliche Leistungen. Monteux versteht auch die Proben interessant und abwechslungsreich zu halten; er plagt die Musiker nicht mit Detailarbeit in den Repertoirwerken und weiß, daß er gerade dadurch bei der Aufführung die größte Aufmerksamkeit erreicht. Pierre Monteux meint, daß der Dirigent sich an die Stelle des Komponisten setzen müsse; die Anweisungen, Vorzeichen in einem Werk genügen nicht, der Orchesterleiter muß zwischen den Zeilen lesen können. Er erinnert an seine Gespräche mit Richard Strauß, der ihm seine Ideen für die Ausführung der "Josephslegende" gab, an Claude Debussy, der als Interpret seiner Klavierkompositionen unvergleichlich war, aber in den Orchesterwerken dem Dirigenten die Auslegung überließ. — Pierre Monteux dirigiert mit dem Taktstock, aber er gibt diesem Werkzeug richtiges Leben, er versteht jede kleinste Nuance damit anzugeben und erreicht im Rhythmus durch die Präzision und Deutlichkeit wesentlich mehr als die "Publikumsdirigenten", die ihre Gesten weniger für die Musiker als für ihr Publikum einrichten. Man wird an die Worte Bruno Walters erinnert, der den Taktstock als die verlängerte Hand des Dirigenten bezeichnet. Monteux dirigiert einen Großteil der klassischen Werke auswendig; wenn es sich aber um ein neueres Werk handelt, das er noch nicht so gut kennt, hat er immer die Musik vor sich und auch beim Begleiten mancher Solisten zieht er es vor mitzulesen. Der 77jährige Maestro zählt zu den beliebtesten Dirigenten der Gegenwart; jedes der von ihm geleiteten Konzerte bedeutet einen besonderen musikalischen Genuß und seine Musiker haben für ihn den gleichen Enthusiasmus wie das Publikum. Beethovens Worte, "der Dirigent leitet das Orchester nur um der Musik willen, ohne Pose und Geste, ohne Arroganz und Koketterie" treffen auf Pierre Monteux voll und ganz zu.

N.Y. Staatszeitung
July 15

AUS DER MUSIKWELT

Von FRED LOW

Berkshire Musikfest

(Sondermeldung für die "New Yorker Staats-Zeitung und Herold")

LENOX, Mass., 14. Juli. — Charles Munch leitete das Kammerorchester der Boston Symphonie Samstag abend und Sonntag nachmittags in zwei Konzerten im Theatersaal in Tanglewood. Er hatte für das Samstagkonzert ein Programm von Werken des 17. und 18. Jahrhunderts gewählt und brachte Sonntag drei Symphonien von Mozart (in Es, Jupiter und G-Moll) zum Vortrag.

Rameaus Suite aus der Oper "Dardanus", Couperins "Concert dans le gout theatral", zwei Werke französischer Meister aus dem 17. Jahrhundert und Purcells "Fantasia für Streicher" als Werk eines englischen Komponisten aus dem gleichen Zeitalter waren im ersten Teil des Samstagkonzertes zu hören; trotz der stellenweise reizenden Melodien und des Reichtums der Einfälle kommt der gleiche Charakter manchmal etwas monoton zum Vorschein.

Das Bild ändert sich vollkommen mit Vivaldis "Concerto in D-Moll für Streicher", das in der Reife der Auffassung und der Durchführung des Themenmaterials die anderen Werke weit überragt. Schon die einleitenden machtvollen Geigenpassagen und die anschließende Antwort der Bässe wirkt dramatisch hervorragend, und die graziösen, heiteren Weisen des Largo sowie die Figuren des Allegro zeigen die Meisterschaft des italienischen Komponisten von der besten Seite. Die Bostoner spielten das Vivaldi-Werk ganz ausgezeichnet und die Einheitlichkeit der einzelnen Instrumentengruppen war bemerkenswert.

Hugh Ross leitete Lalandes "De Profundis", Mottette für Solostimmen und Chor mit Orchester zum Abschluß des Abends. Sarah Fleming (Sopran), Shirley Winston (Mezzosopran), Betty Lou Allen (Alt), John McCollum (Tenor) und Richard Sharretts (Baß) sangen ihre Solopartien mit musikalischer Einfühlung, und die Leistung des Festival Chorus, der nur wenige Proben zur Verfügung hatte, verdient alle Anerkennung.

Im Sonntagnachmittagkonzert brachte Munch mit dem Kammerorchester der Bostoner Symphonie die drei letzten Symphonien Mozarts in Es (K 543), G-Moll No. 40 (550) und die Jupitersymphonie in C-Dur (K 551) zur Wiedergabe. Das Klarinettensolo mit der rhythmischen Begleitung des Fagotts im Trio des Menuetts (Symphonie in Es) war besonders schön vorgetragen und die Streicher glänzten im Finale des gleichen Werkes, während einzelne Streicherpassagen der G-Moll-Symphonie weniger einheitlich gelangen.

Munch bevorzugt im Allegro assai dieser Symphonie ziemlich starke Kontraste, die wohl die Wirkung erhöhen, aber auf Kosten des intimen Charakter des Werkes gehen. Mozart schreibt hie nur piano und forte vor, die kleinen Akzente sind im Verhältnis zu den vorhergehenden und nachfolgenden Passagen auszuführen. Viele Dirigenten versuchen nun die Wirkung durch zartesten piano und starkes fortissimo zu erreichen und gehen damit weit über den Rahmen der vorgeschriebenen Nuancen hinaus. Möglicherweise war auch die Akustik des Theatersaales in Tanglewood im Widerhall der Forte-Passagen zu stark, da die langsamen Sätze in der zarten Cantilene viel schöner gelangen.

Das Programm des Wochenendes wurde am Freitag abend mit einem Konzert des Studentenorchesters eingeleitet und brachte ferner Sonntag vormittags ein Kammermusikkonzert der Studenten des Berkshire Music Center mit ausgezeichneten Leistungen in Werken von Mozart, Dvorak und Lukas Foss. Die Opernklassen stellen sich heute mit dem Vortrag von Szenen aus Opernwerken vor und ein Sonatenabend am Mittwoch bringt den Cellisten Janos Scholz und den Pianisten Miklos Schwalb im Vortrag von Werken Beethovens, Kodalys und Dohnanyis.

Freitag findet ein Konzert des Studentenorchesters (Dirigenten: Richard Burgin und Robert Mandell) statt und zum Abschluß der Serie der Kammerorchesterveranstaltungen dirigiert Charles Munch Samstag, 19. Juli, Mozarts Klavierkonzert C-Dur (K 467), Solist Lukas Foss, sowie Schuberts Messe in G-Dur; Hugh Ross leitet eine Aufführung von Mozarts "Litaniae" für Chor und Orchester. Sonntag, 20. Juli, wird Schuberts Messe wiederholt und außerdem zwei Haydn-Symphonien (No. 99 und 86) gespielt.

News Republican - July 17

Boston Symphony Orchestra Opens It's 13th Season Of The Berkshire Festival

Charles Munch and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will complete the series of Berkshire Festival concerts in the Tanglewood theatre this weekend, Thursday night, July 24, they will move to the big shed seating 6000, where for the first time since their triumphal European tour Charles Munch will conduct the full orchestra. The concert will open the 15th season of the big Berkshire Festival and the 13th of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Berkshire.

Berkshire County officials and heads of boards of selectman will be guests of honor at the opening concert to represent their communities. Mayor Robert T. Capeless of Pittsfield, honorary chairman, will present a resolution of welcome and appreciation, voted by the Berkshire County Commissioners, to the conductor. The program — Beethoven's Third ("Eroica") Symphony and Brahms' First, will be the first of nine on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons through Aug. 10. Each Sunday morning at 10, beginning July 26, the orchestra will hold a public rehearsal for the benefit of its pension fund.

NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
JUL 18 1952

Last Small Concerts To Feature Mozart, Schubert and Haydn

The final small concerts in the series of six opening the 1952 Berkshire Music festival season at Tanglewood, Lenox, will take place tomorrow evening and Sunday afternoon. Works of Mozart, Schubert and Haydn will be on the program.

Tomorrow evening, Lukas Foss, pianist, and selected members of the Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch, the orchestra's conductor, will play Mozart's concerto in C major, the orchestra musicians will perform Schubert's Mass in G major, and Mozart's Litaniae for chorus and orchestra will be done under the direction of Hugh Ross, instructor in choral work at the Berkshire Music Center, with the student chorus taking part.

The program Sunday afternoon by members of the Boston orchestra under Mr. Munch's direction will include Haydn's 99th symphony in E flat and the 86th in D major, and Schubert's Mass in G major.

With the close of the series of six small concerts, preparations will swing into their final phases for the nine major concerts of the 1952 season, to be given by the complete Boston orchestra in the vast Tanglewood music shed on three successive Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons.

At the first of these on next Thursday evening, Berkshire county will give an official welcome to the Boston orchestra and its conductor, making their first formal appearance since their triumphal European tour. Mayor Robert T. Capeless of Pittsfield, for the inhabitants of the county, will present a scroll in appreciation of the orchestra's service in making Tanglewood, in the Berkshires, world famed. Officials of the county government and all Berkshire cities and towns have been invited to attend as guests.

Principal incidental musical events at Tanglewood next week will include a chamber music program Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, a composers' forum of informal music Sunday evening at 8.15, a song recital at 4.30 and an evening of one-act operas at 8.15 on Tuesday, and a concert at 8.15 Friday evening when Aaron Copland, assistant director of the school, will conduct his own composition from "Billy the Kid." All of these will be given by student musicians and will be open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Also on the week's schedule are a concert by the Berkshire Woodwind ensemble, the gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge foundation in the Library of Congress, at 8.15 o'clock Wednesday evening, and the public rehearsal of the orchestra a week from tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock, the proceeds to go to the orchestra pension fund.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
JUL 13 1952

MUSIC

Berkshire Center To Produce Mozart's 'Titus'

"Titus", the opera which Mozart wrote in the last year of his life and the only "opera seria" of his maturer years, is announced by Boris Goldovsky as the major production of the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood this Summer. "Titus" (La Clemenza di Tito) will then have what will probably be its first complete production in America. There will be two performances on August 4th and 5th at Tanglewood to which Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be invited.

The score of "Titus", parts of which will be brought from Europe, consist of an overture and 25 numbers in 3 acts. The score is entirely by Mozart except for certain recitative passages in which he was helped by Suessmayer. There are to be no cuts in this production, although the text, which is being translated into English by Mr. Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell, has been slightly revised.

A feature of the production will be a new scenic plan in which an elaborate mechanism for projection by slides, the invention of Paul Planer, will be used. Planer's invention has been used in the larger opera houses in Europe with conspicuous success. It permits spectacle effects in such scenes as the burning and destruction of a palace in this opera. The scenery is being designed by Charles Elson.

[33]

Works by Luigi Dallapiccola On Festival Program Sunday

TANGLEWOOD—Luigi Dallapiccola will be in the Berkshire Festival audience tomorrow afternoon when his "Three Songs in Captivity" are played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Written between 1938 and 1941 for chorus, two harps, two pianos and percussion, the piece was introduced to America by the International Society for Contemporary Music in 1951. The third song was performed at a Berkshire Music Center concert at Tanglewood last season. Hugh Ross will conduct the number.

Mr. Dallapiccola, who has come from Italy for the second time to teach composition at the school, is the son of a professor of classical languages. Born in Austria, he studied piano at the conservatory in Florence, Italy, where he became an instructor. His one-act opera, "The Prisoner," was first performed in Florence in 1950. He is one of the most popular figures on the Tanglewood campus.

Berkowitz, Foss Soloists

The piano parts will be played by Ralph Berkowitz and Lukas Foss. Mr. Barkowitz is the dean of the Berkshire Music Center and accompanist for Gregor Piatigorsky, the cellist. Mr. Foss, a pianist and composer and a former Tanglewood student, teaches in the composing and conducting departments. He was soloist in the first Festival series in the shed. Excerpts from his composition, "The Prarie," will be played in the evening concert of Tanglewood on Parade Friday.

For the opening of the concert, Charles Munch, the conductor, has chosen Cesar Franck's Symphonic Piece from "Redemption," to be followed by the Symphony in C Major by Georges Bizet. The French Bizet composed this symphony at the age of 17. For almost 80 years it reposed in the archives of the Paris Conservatory, unknown to his biographers.

Suites I and II from the ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe" by Maurice Ravel, form the second half of the program. The ballet was completed in 1911 and first produced in 1912 by the Ballet Russe in Paris, Pierre Monteux conducting. It is described by the composer as "a choreographic symphony in three parts." The story is from a document of ancient Greece.

Tonight's program, conducted by Pierre Monteux will be:

Overture to The Secret Marriage, ... Cimarosa
Symphony in C major, No. 7 .. Schubert
The Rite of Spring .... Stravinsky

Tickets are on sale at Tanglewood for all of the Festival programs. General admission tickets for listening from the lawn are on sale before the concerts.

Plouffe

THE BIG THREE: Charles Munch, left, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, discusses the Berkshire Festival programs with the two guest conductors for the 1952 series. In the center is Pierre Monteux, who will conduct the BSO tonight, and at right, Leonard Bernstein, who will appear as guest conductor with the orchestra Aug. 9.

Studios in Hawthorne House To Be Dedicated on Aug. 1

TANGLEWOOD — At a meeting of the New England district of the National Federation of Music Clubs to be held at Tanglewood Aug. 1, the two practice studios in the replica of Nathaniel Hawthorne's Little Red House will be dedicated. Mrs. Ada Holding Miller, of Providence, R.I., federation president, will preside at the all-day session, at which one studio will be dedicated to the late Anne H. Gannett of Portland, Me., and the other to the late Robert W. Roberts.

Mrs. Gannett was president of the federation when the house was built, and remained chairman of its committee until her death in May, 1951. It was largely through her efforts that the money for the project was raised. Mr. Roberts was the husband of a member of the board of directors of the national organization who cleared off the last few thousands of debt on the property. Mrs. Roberts and Mrs. Roger C. Williams will be guests of honor.

Carved wooden plaques will be placed in the two studios, which seat 36 students. It was in one that the late Serge Koussevitzky held his conducting classes and conferences. They are occupied this season by Leonard Bernstein, Dr. Koussevitzky's pupil, who succeeded him as teacher of conduct-

Mrs. Ada Holding Miller

at 10 AM in Sedgwick Hall, Lenox, with reports by Mrs. Lyman, Mrs. Frederick R. Fish of Fairfield, Conn., secretary treasurer of the district, and the presidents of the six New England state federations. At 1 PM they will lunch at the Tanglewood

Tanglewood

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK

TONIGHT

PM
8.10—Berkshire Festival Concert.
Pierre Monteux, conducting.
Overture, The Secret Marriage, Cimarosa
Symphony No. 7, in C major, Schubert
The Rite of Spring .... Stravinsky

SUNDAY

AM
*10.00—Chamber Music.
PM
3.00—Berkshire Festival Concert.
Charles Munch, conducting.
Symphonic piece from Redemption. Franck
Symphony in C major ...... Bizet
Three Prisoners' Songs, with chorus. Dallapiccola
Conducted by Hugh Ross.
Daphnis and Chloe, Suites 1 and 2, with chorus .... Ravel
*8.15—Composers' Forum.

TUESDAY

PM
*4.30—Unscheduled lecture-recital of Dutch songs by Arthur Schoep, baritone. Felix Wolfes, accompanist.

WEDNESDAY

PM
*8.15—Fine Arts Quartet, gift of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress.

THURSDAY

PM
8.15—Berkshire Festival Concert.
Charles Munch conducting.
Incidental Music for Pelleas et Melisande .... Faure
Ballade for piano and orchestra.
Piano Concerto .... Ravel
Nicole Henrio, soloist.
Symphony No. 4, in E minor, Brahms

FRIDAY

TANGLEWOOD ON PARADE

Tenth celebration of Berkshire Music Center

PM
4.00—Special opera performance in the

Plouffe

NOT SO LOUD: Leonard Bernstein, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight at Tanglewood in a program dedicated to his former teacher, the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, attempts to quiet the violin section during rehearsals for this evening's concert. Mr. Bernstein succeeded Dr. Koussevitzky as teacher of conducting at the Berkshire Music Center.

Three thousand p

Springfield - Union July 25

8250 Present at Opening Of Tanglewood Season

Dr. Munch Conducts Two Sure-Fire Favorites to Delight Patrons at 15th Annual Festival

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Tanglewood, July 24—Beethoven's Third Symphony, the "Eroica," and Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C Minor were chosen by Dr. Charles Munch to open tonight the series of nine concerts of the Berkshire Music Festival given in the shed during the next three weeks. An estimated 8250 people reacted as was to be expected to the performances of these two sure-fire, favorite symphonies.

Here are two symphonies, each so great in its own right, that each can stand a variety of interpretations without losing, or failing to communicate, their inherent greatness. There have been as many interpretations of these two works as there have been conductors to interpret them. We have ceased to compare the various readings.

Intensely Personal

Dr. Munch brings to all his readings an intimacy, sensitivity and

Continued On Page 19

Monitor July 18

*7

Music Clubs Of N.E. to Meet At Tanglewood

Women's Activities

The Little Red House on the grounds at Tanglewood will be the scene of special dedication ceremonies on Friday, Aug. 1.

In connection with the New England district meeting of the National Federation of Music Clubs to be held at the Berkshire Music Center at Lenox, Mass., the afternoon session is to feature the installation of two plaques at the Little Red House. One plaque will dedicate the Anne M. Gannett Studio and the other the Robert W. Roberts studio. The plaques are the gift of the National Federation. Mrs. Ada Holding Miller of Providence, R.I. national president, will conduct the ceremony.

Following the dedication, there will be a concert in the Red Barn to be presented by Claudette Sorel, National Federation Young Artist winner of piano in 1951; Warren Locke, baritone; John Cox of California, violinist studying at Tanglewood on an Anne M. Gannett scholarship; and chamber music group.

Aug. 1 is to be celebrated as "Tanglewood on Parade" day, according to Thomas D. Perry, Jr., executive secretary of the music center. As this year marks the 10th anniversary of the center, a special program is to be presented in the evening by former students who have distinguished themselves.

Mr. Locke also will perform on the evening program, presenting the premier of "My Home" written by Peggy Stuart, who will be the accompanist, with words by Joseph Coolidge.

Mrs. Willis Lyman of Stamford, Conn., district president of the music federation, is in charge of the meeting.

---

bert's "Symphony in C Major No. 7" and Stravinsky's "Rites of Spring." Anyone who has heard Monteux conduct this Stravinsky work will never forget it and Saturday night, with the great Boston Symphony Orchestra at his command, there should be a thrilling, definitive performance of this work. Mr. Monteux was conductor of the Boston orchestra from 1929 to 1934. He became conductor of the San Francisco Symphony orchestra in 1935. Remaining with that orchestra until retirement this year. He shared conducting duties with Dr. Munch during the Boston orchestra's tour of Europe. To have Mr. Monteux at Tanglewood this season is indeed a privilege.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 18 1952

Bernstein Leads 'Romeo and Juliet' Excerpts Tonight

Berkshire Music Center's Student Orchestra Gives Its Third Concert

Leonard Bernstein will conduct excerpts from Berlioz' dramatic symphony, "Romeo and Juliet," Friday night at Tanglewood, when the Berkshire Music Center's student orchestra gives its third weekly concert of the season. Eminent as a conductor, composer and pianist, and director of the arts department at Brandeis University, Mr. Bernstein heads the conducting and orchestral sections at the Tanglewood school.

On the program also will be Schubert's Fifth Symphony, Elyakum Shapira of Israeli conducting, and Benjamin Britten's "The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra," Lorin Maazel of Pittsburgh conducting, with McHenry Boatwright of Boston as narrator.

Sunday morning's chamber music program, at 10, prepared under the direction of William Kroll, will include Mozart's Woodwind Quintet in E-flat major, Mendelssohn's String Quartet in E minor and Faure's Piano Quartet No. 1.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, by voluntary contribution to the school, are invited to both concerts, as to all other school performances.

[34]

Works by Luigi Dallapiccola On Festival Program Sunday

TANGLEWOOD—Luigi Dallapiccola will be in the Berkshire Festival audience tomorrow afternoon when his "Three Songs in Captivity" are played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Written between 1938 and 1941 for chorus, two harps, two pianos and percussion, the piece was introduced to America by the International Society for Contemporary Music in 1951. The third song was performed at a Berkshire Music Center concert at Tanglewood last season. Hugh Ross will conduct the number.

Mr. Dallapiccola, who has come from Italy for the second time to teach composition at the school, is the son of a professor of classical languages. Born in Austria, he studied piano at the conservatory in Florence, Italy, where he became an instructor. His one-act opera, "The Prisoner," was first performed in Florence in 1950. He is one of the most popular figures on the Tanglewood campus.

Berkowitz, Foss Soloists

The piano parts will be played by Ralph Berkowitz and Lukas Foss. Mr. Barkowitz is the dean of the Berkshire Music Center and accompanist for Gregor Piatigorsky, the cellist. Mr. Foss, a pianist and composer and a former Tanglewood student, teaches in the composing and conducting departments. He was soloist in the first Festival series in the shed. Excerpts from his composition, "The Prarie," will be played in the evening concert of Tanglewood on Parade Friday.

For the opening of the concert, Charles Munch, the conductor, has chosen Cesar Franck's Symphonic Piece from "Redemption," to be followed by the Symphony in C Major by Georges Bizet. The French Bizet composed this symphony at the age of 17. For almost 80 years it reposed in the archives of the Paris Conservatory, unknown to his biographers.

Suites I and II from the ballet, "Daphnis and Chloe" by Maurice Ravel, form the second half of the program. The ballet was completed in 1911 and first produced in 1912 by the Ballet Russe in Paris, Pierre Monteux conducting. It is described by the composer as "a choreographic symphony in three parts." The story is from a document of ancient Greece.

Tonight's program, conducted by Pierre Monteux will be:

Overture to The Secret Marriage, Cimarosa
Symphony in C major, No. 7 .. Schubert
The Rite of Spring .... Stravinsky

Tickets are on sale at Tanglewood for all of the Festival programs. General admission tickets for listening from the lawn are on sale before the concerts.

Plouffe

THE BIG THREE: Charles Munch, left, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, discusses the Berkshire Festival programs with the two guest conductors for the 1952 series. In the center is Pierre Monteux, who will conduct the BSO tonight, and at right, Leonard Bernstein, who will appear as guest conductor with the orchestra Aug. 9.

Studios in Hawthorne House To Be Dedicated on Aug. 1

TANGLEWOOD — At a meeting of the New England district of the National Federation of Music Clubs to be held at Tanglewood Aug. 1, the two practice studios in the replica of Nathaniel Hawthorne's Little Red House will be dedicated. Mrs. Ada Holding Miller, of Providence, R.I., federation president, will preside at the all-day session, at which one studio will be dedicated to the late Anne H. Gannett of Portland, Me., and the other to the late Robert W. Roberts.

Mrs. Ada Holding Miller

Mrs. Gannett was president of the federation when the house was built, and remained chairman of its committee until her death in May, 1951. It was largely through her efforts that the money for the project was raised. Mr. Roberts was the husband of a member of the board of directors of the national organization who cleared off the last few thousands of debt on the property. Mrs. Roberts and Mrs. Roger C. Williams will be guests of honor.

Carved wooden plaques will be placed in the two studios, which seat 36 students. It was in one that the late Serge Koussevitzky held his conducting classes and conferences. They are occupied this season by Leonard Bernstein, Dr. Koussevitzky's pupil, who succeeded him as teacher of conducting at the Berkshire Music Center, and Luigi Dallapiccola, who came from Italy to teach composition.

Mrs. Willis J. Lyman of Stamford, Conn., president of the New England district, is arranging the meeting. The program will open at 10 AM in Sedgwick Hall, Lenox, with reports by Mrs. Lyman, Mrs. Frederick R. Fish of Fairfield, Conn., secretary treasurer of the district, and the presidents of the six New England state federations. At 1 PM they will lunch at the Tanglewood cafeteria. The dedication ceremony at 2.30 will be followed by a concert at the Tanglewood barn, below the little red house at 3.15. The delegates will attend Tanglewood on Parade, starting at 6 o'clock.

Tanglewood

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK

TONIGHT

PM
8.10—Berkshire Festival Concert.
Pierre Monteux, conducting.
Overture, The Secret Marriage. Cimarosa
Symphony No. 7, in C major. Schubert
The Rite of Spring .... Stravinsky

SUNDAY

AM
*10.00—Chamber Music.
PM
3.00—Berkshire Festival Concert.
Charles Munch, conducting.
Symphonic piece from Redemption. Franck
Symphony in C major ...... Bizet
Three Prisoners' Songs, with chorus. Dallapiccola
Conducted by Hugh Ross.
Daphnis and Chloe, Suites 1 and 2, with chorus .... Ravel
*8.15—Composers' Forum.

TUESDAY

PM
*4.30—Unscheduled lecture-recital of Dutch songs by Arthur Schoep, baritone. Felix Wolfes, accompanist.

WEDNESDAY

PM
*8.15—Fine Arts Quartet, gift of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress.

THURSDAY

PM
8.15—Berkshire Festival Concert.
Charles Munch conducting.
Incidental Music for Pelleas et Melisande .... Faure
Ballade for piano and orchestra.
Piano Concerto .... Ravel
Nicole Henrio, soloist.
Symphony No. 4, in E minor. Brahms

FRIDAY

TANGLEWOOD ON PARADE

Tenth celebration of Berkshire Music Center

PM
4.00—Special opera performance in the garden for holders of reserved and box seats.
6.00—Fanfare, followed by simultaneous performances in departments of the school.
7.00—Choral concert on the porch and time for picnic on the lawn.
8.15—Concert by Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Tanglewood students and faculty, with prominent alumni as soloists.

SATURDAY

AM
10.00—Public rehearsal of Boston Symphony Orchestra (benefit, pension fund).
*4.00—Composers' Forum.
8.15—Berkshire Festival Concert.
Pierre Monteux, conducting
AM
*10.00—Chamber Music.
3.00—Berkshire Festival Concert.
Charles Munch, conducting.

Lecture-Recital on Dutch Songs Tuesday

An unscheduled lecture-recital of Dutch songs will be given at Tanglewood Tuesday afternoon at 4.30 by Arthur Schoep, baritone. A student in stage direction in the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, Mr. Schoep collected the material for his performance while studying in Holland on a Fulbright grant by the United States Department of State. His piano accompanist will be Felix Wolfes of the faculty of the school.

The recital, which will be held in the chamber music hall, will be open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Springfield - Union July 25

8250 Present at Opening Of Tanglewood Season

Dr. Munch Conducts Two Sure-Fire Favorites to Delight Patrons at 15th Annual Festival

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Tanglewood, July 24—Beethoven's Third Symphony, the "Eroica," and Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C Minor were chosen by Dr. Charles Munch to open tonight the series of nine concerts of the Berkshire Music Festival given in the shed during the next three weeks. An estimated 8250 people reacted as was to be expected to the performances of these two sure-fire, favorite symphonies.

Here are two symphonies, each so great in its own right, that each can stand a variety of interpretations without losing, or failing to communicate, their inherent greatness. There have been as many interpretations of these two works as there have been conductors to interpret them. We have ceased to compare the various readings.

Intensely Personal

Dr. Munch brings to all his readings an intimacy, sensitivity and

Continued On Page 19

bert's "Symphony in C Major No. 7" and Stravinsky's "Rites of Spring." Anyone who has heard Monteux conduct this Stravinsky work will never forget it and Saturday night, with the great Boston Symphony Orchestra at his command, there should be a thrilling, definitive performance of this work. Mr. Monteux was conductor of the Boston orchestra from 1929 to 1934. He became conductor of the San Francisco Symphony orchestra in 1935. Remaining with that orchestra until retirement this year. He shared conducting duties with Dr. Munch during the Boston orchestra's tour of Europe. To have Mr. Monteux at Tanglewood this season is indeed a privilege.

Monitor July 18

*7

Music Clubs Of N.E. to Meet At Tanglewood

iven to Mr. Latva. And nybody else who might help this man out of a nto which he was by smart strangers town. Certainly his old o anything for him. let it be broadcast ned in the sky: THINK YOU SIGN ANY R STRANGERS IN as a legislative counsel for a group of insurance companies in the Legislature. The report shows that Conley, a lawyer who spent most of his working days this year in the State House, was given the emolument of $1000. Not only that; he hit the jackpot on about all of the major insurance legislation he was assigned to influence. The Conley fee looks absurd in the light of the report filed by the First Church of Christ, Scientist, an organization which admits paying its lobbyist, Douglas L. Russell, a fee of $1500. The Christian Scientist lobby return stands almost by itself for sheer honesty.

JOHN G. QUIRK.

unemployment compensati accomplished in 1951, it ca consolidate its gains by o which would liberalize un sation benefits. The counc year but the pressure it high-handed tactics. Wo papermen, either in the hi or the council lobby, move no-man's-land, the legisla and threatened newspape didn't vote against the la record—either in 1951 or $80,000 was spent.

+Hatr

ANGLEWOOD PARADE SLATED FRIDAY, AUG. 1

Tanglewood will be on Parade Friday, Aug. 1, to celebrate its 10th season and to help the Berkshire Music Center for whose benefit the event is held each year. Some of its most illustrous alumni will return to appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the evening concert, at Lenox, Mass.

At 6 o'clock, as in previous benefits, the school will be on with a symphony concert in the shed, the chorus on the porch and chamber music in its hall. "Alcottiano" by Singer will be given its first performance in the theatre. After time for a picnic on the lawn, James Aliferis will conduct the last movement of Lukas Foss' "The Prairie." Howard Shanet will conduct Chausson's "Poeme" with Jacob Krachmalnick, concertmaster of the Philadelphia Orchestra as soloist, and Mr. Foss will conduct Mendelssohn's Piano Concerto in G minor with Seymour Lipkin, winner of the Rachmaninoff Award, as soloist. In the second half Leonard Bernstein will take the podium for the last act of "Carmen" with the Festival Chorus and Mildred Miller, mezzo-soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company; David Lloyd, tenor of the New York City Center Opera Company and James Pease, baritone with the Hamburg Opera. The program will close with waltzing on the lawn.

Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is director at Lenox, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky, its founder.

Mrs. Koussevitzky is chairman of the Ticket Committee.

3000 Honor Koussevitzky At Music Center Concert

Three thousand persons turned out last night for the symphony concert given by the Berkshire Music Center as a tribute to the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, founder of the Center and conductor for 25 years of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose birthday is today. Compositions by his friends were conducted by Tanglewood pupils and Hugh Ross, a Tanglewood associate.

sary

One Hundred Years of Hot Dogs

nsberg, writing in the k Times Magazine)

zens of Frankfurt on Germany, are in the gala celebration these e one of their proudlishments, the frank-00 years old. According rians on the subject, ed sausage was de-1852 by members of a butchers' guild in One student of the said that its final s determined by a o was inspired by his a dachshund.

student admitted, the t come into internaminence until it was by the United States s an attraction at the World's Fair in 1893. noted, the original and h, the hot dog, were the meeting devoured by the thousands.

While the elongated, pork-filled, secretly smoked product has made the city of Frankfurt famous internationally, it has taken American enthusiasm, American resort life and American spectator sports, especially baseball, to put the hot dog into the big time. For in this country the frankfurter actually is so popular as to be a national institution. One in eight pounds of meat eaten by the average American is of the sausage family, and 32 per cent of the meat consumed in this family is in the form of the hot dog.

Stastics for last year for example, show that 3.7 billion hot dogs (canned, boiled or on a roll) were devoured by Americans of all ages. A steady increase from year to year has been noted by manufacturers since 1931.

German manufacturers condemn the American variety as inferior. One of them explains that a good frankfurter should snap when you bite it. Explaining why his own product is so successful, he adds, "Our best frankfurter skins used to come from Russian and Chinese lambs. We can't get them now, but we are getting some from Persia. Half the secret of a good frankfurter is in the casing."

This maker says the American model is pale and wrinkled in contrast to the original. "It can't even be compared," he says. "No flavor, no texture, no snap!"

American manufacturers shrug off comparison with the Frankfurt model, and statistics show that they have just cause. Four times as many casings for hot dogs are imported into this country than into Germany.

Admirers of the Frankfurt product explain that the secret of a successful weiner is in the smoking. turer won smokes his

One inf besides th uses nothi pork fro pigs, and trusted c is in the But he re how long also what Proud into their mate su (American taken aba of the fra

Asked if that he or slip in so crease the manufactu tion. "Hor butchers chiselers."

certs, as to all other school performances.

[34]

The Talk Was of Music

July 24 Eagle

Charles Munch Recalls the Boston Symphony's 'Best Concert' in Europe When They Played at His Birthplace, Strassburg

By Jay C. Rosenfeld

The following is an account of an informal luncheon conversation last week at the Lenox Club between Charles Munch, Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor Albert Spalding, one-time noted concert violinist and Berkshire summer resident, and this newspaper's music critic, who accompanied the BSO on its recent spring European tour. As a coincidence, all three are violinists.

"THE MOST BEAUTIFUL gesture they could possibly have made" is the way Charles Munch spoke of "the extra affection" the men of the Boston Symphony Orchestra put into the concert in Strassburg, Munch's home town, last May on their first European tour. "They had arrived from Berlin at 5 o'clock, yet even after the long train ride, they were ready by 8 to play their best concert of the whole tour."

Many of us, no doubt, have had dreams of grandeur, much as the current New Yorker series portrays, but a very, very few have had the opportunity of a lieftime that came to Charles Munch when he returned to the city of his birth last May at the head of one of America's peerless orchestras. True, Munch has not been a resident of Strassburg for some years, since he moved on and up to wider circles and broader horizons, but his large family, many of them professional musicians, still are a prominent part of the city's musical life.

* * *

AS A MATTER of fact, he recalled with especial warmth the evening music gatherings at home when his father, himself a violinist, and all the other five brothers and sisters played chamber music practically every night. It is not only now a source of great comfort as a memory but, Munch thinks, one of the great factors in his musical education. He thinks that a young person gets immersed and impregnated with the essence of music in intimate home evenings of ensemble music which no other kind of training will supply. Lunching with Albert Spalding and this writer recently at the Lenox Club, Munch also recalled his innumerable family sessions and spoke with great pride of the ability of his mother as a pianist. Such practice takes the place of reading aloud from the Bible or the classics which is the rule in some homes, or maybe, at least, ought to be.

Munch continues a line of foreign conductors which has led the Boston Symphony since Major Higginson founded it in 1881. None of these men have been American citizens except Koussevitzky, who, in the last couple years of his quarter-century tenure, became a naturalized citizen. This is not hard to understand. Each conductor has been engaged for a term of varying length and can not have known at the beginning of his job whether he would like it and whether, on the other hand, the trustees of the orchestra would like him well enough to re-engage him. In the case of Munch, he has lived in the maelstrom of European music for all his near three-score years. He is not an aggressive person nor one to take command of a discussion to the exclusion of all others. He listens attentively and only with difficulty can be induced to take the floor from more assertive participants, yet when he is sure no one else for the moment has something to say, he will then speak from his vast store of current musical history and acquaintance with the traditions of previous generations.

* * *

MUNCH WAS A violinist but rarely now, he says, touches his fiddle. He still retains his Guarnerius, however, a revelation which struck a responsive fraternal chord in Spalding who cherishes most among his violin collection also a beautiful Guarnerius. These days he has no time, Munch claims. "Only in summer time" was it possible for him to unpack his violin since he has been a conductor, but this and last year, there has been no time and the instrument is in a safe in Paris right now.

This is the first year that Munch has taken a hand in the Berkshire Music Center, the school which is so important a part of Tanglewood. Last year, his first year there, he was not familiar with the procedure and only observed that part of the activities from the sidelines. This year he has taken an active interest and right in the first week of the school prepared the student orchestra for a performance of the César Franck symphony five days after the young men and women had enrolled for the season. It was a new experience for him and a tremendous one for his young musicians. He winced a few times in rehearsals when certain sour notes and unexpected effects blurted out from the stands of "wonderful players" as he called them, but of whom many were quite inexperienced in orchestral work. But they learned with unbelievable speed and any who heard that first program of the student orchestra will recall the swelling spirit that characterized that performance and the near perfection in accuracy he had achieved in such few short days. Probably no test can prove a conductor more than his accomplishments, not with an orchestra of the rank of the professional Bostonians but with one with such little experience among the individuals and so little familiarity with the literature as a whole.

* * *

MUNCH IS A large, tall man and must weigh close to two hundred, yet he moves with a short swift pace and light step on his entrances and exits at concerts. This year it is noticeable that he is happy and pleased with the cordiality the audiences show him on every occasion. Last year his face had a severe expression, as though he could not fathom the seas of faces in front of him and almost as if he doubted whether he understood them. There is certainly much more rapport this year. There is very often a slight reassuring smile on his face as he notices with his appreciative keen ear some especially fine phrase performed in one particular section or by one particular performer. And after several recalls the smile expands until his lips part and his face relaxes into a genuine laugh as he enjoys the great enthusiasm American audiences express.

The European tour last May was one of the great moments in his artistic life as it was in the careers of all the musicians in the orchestra. The problems of transporting and readying an orchestra for concerts on another continent were not his province nor responsibility, but George Judd, manager of the orchestra, on whose shoulders these duties fell, said that Munch made one statement concerning the plans. There had been much discussion concerning hotel arrangements. Some thought the management should undertake that function entirely while others did not want to be herded together like sheep and wanted to go where they pleased. The final decision was to give the men an agreed-upon allowance and let them make their own arrangements. "I don t care if they sleep together," Munch said. "All I care is that they play together."

Tanglewood

The Berkshire Festival

* * *

By Arthur Berger

The Bostonians

LENOX, Mass., July 24.—The Berkshire Festival entered its major phase here this evening with more than its usual atmosphere of festivity, for this was the first appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in full body since its successful spring tour aboard. Berkshire County rose to the occasion of welcoming the orchestra back to Tanglewood with a variety of official features, the most notable of which was the presentation by Pittsfield's mayor, Robert T. Capeless of a certificate expressing the pride of the Berkshire region in the "unparalleled adulation" that greeted the musical emissaries in Europe.

The mayor was introduced by Henry B. Cabot, president of the boar dof trustees of the orchestra, just before the start of the program of Beethoven and Brahms under the direction of Charles Munch. The scroll was the handiwork of people of towns and cities in the general neighborhood of the Tanglewood Estate. The paper was made by Crane & Co., of Dalton; the leather for the frame was tanned by the Widen Tanning Company, of North Adams; the Eaton Paper Compayn, of Pittsfield, takes credit for illuminating the script, and Duilio Boldrini, of Lenox, carved the frame.

The mayor, in presenting the scroll, sai dthat when Berkshire County had the news of the orchestra's reception abroad it felt it wanted to give the Bostonian's a reception too. Berkshire, he wanted it known, felt that the Boston Symphony belong to it as wel as to Boston. This feeling, he made it understood, had existed for some time, though this was the first time it was officialy expressed.

A representative of some twenty-five officials from the county's thirty-two towns was in the audience, which also included two of the three Berkshire county commissioners who voted the official welcome. They were J. Joseph McCabe and John F. Shea. The third commissioner was John Henderson, and the names of all three were ascribed to the certificate. Charles Munch accepted the framed scroll with words of appreciation.

Mr. Cabot read from the platform congratulatory telegrams from Senator Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts and Congressman John W. Heselton of the first district in Massachusetts where Tanglewood is situated. Senator Saltonstall extended his "welcome home greetings" to the orchestra and its musical director, Charles Munch, and described the orchestra as "for many years one of Massachusetts' and one of America's greatest institutions, bring pleasure and inspiration to all our people." Congressman Heselton regretted that congressional appointments made it impossible for him to be at Tanglewood tonight. "I am sure," he wrote, "that the people of the ifrst district were proud of you all throughout your recent European tour and that you made a very real contribution to our country internationally."

The atmosphere of festivity was pointed up for those who entered Tanglewood's main gate by the arch of evergreen and geraniums prepared by volunteers from Lenox and Pittsfield. The weather could scarcely have been more congenial for outdoor listening than it was this evening, with clear skies and fresh breezes wafting the listeners in the shed and the usual additional auditors sprawled on the lawns behind it.

The change to cool fresh weather had arrived very much with a flourish last night, during a concert in the theater concert hall by the Berkshire Woodwinde Ensemble in a chamber music series sponsored by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation. The storm broke loose during the last part of the program, while the men were playing Poulenc's sextet. Against serious competition from the patter of rain on the wooden roof, the ensemble valiantly continued to the end, while some of the listeners had to shift positions from one place to another to avoid a few leaks in the ceiling. The contemporary program included, besides the Poulenc, works of Irving Fine, Arthur Berger, Roussel and DeBussy.

The present season is the Berkshire Festival's fifteenth. While it started in 1934 under different auspices than the present, the project was shelved during the war. The Boston group held forth here for the first time in 1936. In the following year it moved to the Tanglewood estate, the gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks. In 1938 the shed was built and this is thus the fifteenth summer of the existence of the hugh fan-shaped construction that is acoustically reinforced and seats 6,000. This summer, too, the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's school here at Tanglewood, will hold its tenth session, the anniversary will be marked at the annual Tanglewood on parade, Friday, Aug. 1.

TANGLEWOOD PARADE LEADERS: Committee members of the Tanglewood on Parade benefit to be held for the Berkshire Music Center at the Festival grounds next Friday meet in the reception room at Tanglewood. Left to right: Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, chairman; Mrs. John L. Senior, Mrs. David B. Karrick, Mrs. George W. Edman, Mrs. Donald F. McPherson, Miss Anna R. Alexandre, Mrs. Alexandre Hoppin, Miss Virginia deBlasiis, Miss Carla Hofmeister, Thomas D. Perry Jr., secretary of the school, Mrs. Jay C. Rosenfeld, Mrs. Alexander Block, Mrs. John Rice, Mrs. Percy Musgrave, Mrs. Joseph dePasquale, Mrs. C. D. Jackson, Mrs. Bruce Sanborn, Karl Weston.

Jul 26 Eagle

Berkshire Festival

The Major Berkshire Festival Begins Thursday in Music Shed

The major portion of the Berkshire Festival will begin Thursday evening in the Music Shed at Tanglewood in Lenox. This concert will be the first in which Charles Munch has conducted the full numbers of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since they returned from their triumphal tour of Europe. Accordingly there will be appropriate festivities on the part of Berkshire County officials. Mayor Robert T. Capeless of Pittsfield will present to Mr. Munch a resolution of welcome and appreciation.

This concert will bring the "Eroica" Symphony of Beethoven and the First Symphony of Brahms.

The series of concerts in the Theatre—Concert Hall by small orchestra will be concluded this afternoon at 3, when Mr. Munch will conduct two symphonies of Haydn, No. 99 in E-flat, and No. 86, in D major, and the little Mass in G major by Schubert.

At the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's Summer school concerts will take place almost every day. Aaron Copland will conduct the student orchestra Friday evening in excerpts from his ballet, "Billy the Kid," and Hugh Ross will lead orchestra and chorus in Orgad's "Cantata." Lorin Maazel will conduct Barber's Violin Concerto.

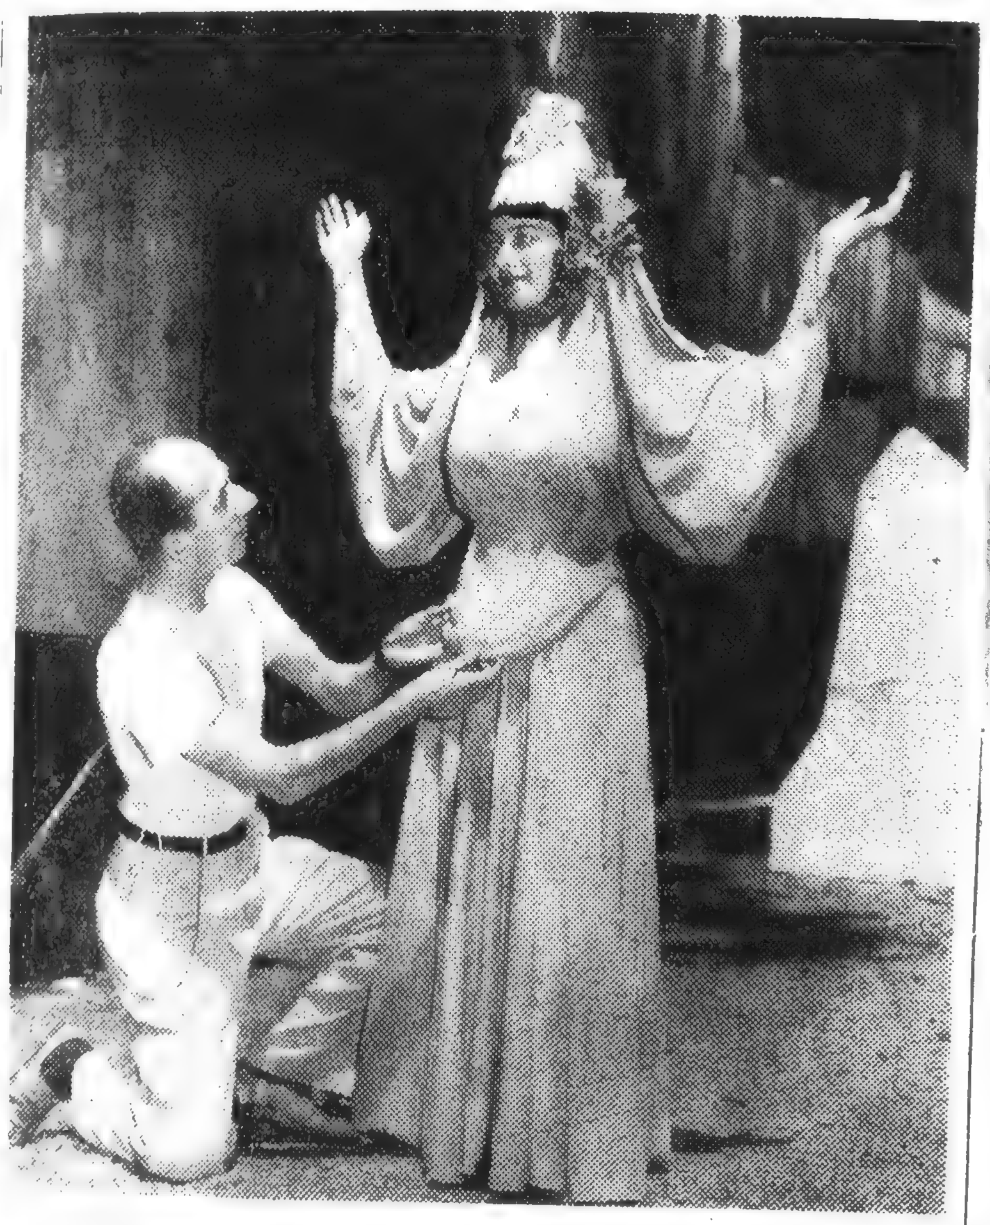
Under Boris Goldovsky, the opera department will stage an evening of one-act operas Tuesday, the choral department will present a song recital Tuesday afternoon at 4:30, and Wednesday the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation, in the Library of Congress, will offer the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble. Chamber music will be played Sunday mornings at 10 and composers' forums will be held Sunday evenings at 8:15.

To all school events Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited. They may join by contributing to the support of the school.

The detailed programs for the remainder of the first week-end of concerts in the Music Shed are as follows:

Saturday at 8:15, Pierre Monteux conducting. Cimarosa, Overture to "The Secret Marriage"; Schubert, Symphony No. 7, in C major; Stravinsky, "The Rite of Spring."

Sunday, July 27, at 3: Charles Munch conducting. Franck, Symphonic Piece from "Redemption"; Bizet, Symphony in C major; Luigi Dallapiccola, "Three Prisoners' Songs" (chorus conducted by Hugh Ross); Ravel, "Daphnis and Chloe" Suites Nos. 1 and 2 (with chorus).



Plouffe

A PRIESTESS GETS READY: Leo VanWitsen, director of costuming in the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, fits the dress of an Inca priestess that Miss Selma Borenstein of Waban will wear tonight in Rameau's "The Incas of Peru," one of three operas to be staged at the Berkshire Music Center under Boris Goldovsky.

Opera Scenes Open to Friends Of Music Center

TANGLEWOOD—An evening of opera will be presented tonight at Tanglewood under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, department head.

Mr. Goldovsky was assisted in the preparation by Miss Betty Armstrong, Miss Sarah Caldwell, Robert Lawthers, Nathaniel C. Merrill, Paul Ulanowsky, Leo VanWitsen, Felix Wolfes, Laura Zirner and Ludwig Zirner.

"The Incas of Peru" from "Les Indes Galantes" by Rameau, is directed by Harold Blumenfeld, who made the English translation, with scenery designed by Miss Armstrong and costumes by Mr. VanWitsen. The choreography is by Katya Delakova. The chorus was prepared with the co-operation of the choral department.

Three scenes from Donizetti's "Don Pasquale" will form the second number. The third will be Jacques Ibert's "Angelique," for which costumes were designed by Mr. VanWitsen, through the courtesy of the Juilliard School of Music and scenery by Robert O'Hearn, through the courtesy of Boston University. The English translation is based on that of Ezra Rachlin.

In the cast of the Rameau will be Maria Martino, Marvin S. Worden, Bernard Green, Alfred Popper, Selma Borenstein, Rosalind Burzinski, Patricia Cloud, Anita Mendez, Harris Crohn, Robert Hess, Charles Lawrie and George Walter.

For "Don Pasquale" the roles will be sung by James Joyce, Robert Mesrobian, John McCollum, Jacqueline Bazinet, David Rae Smith, Norma Guist Cleary and William Harder.

In "Angelique" the singers will be Arlene Stone, Arthur Shoop, Mr. Mesrobian, Mr. McCollum, Robert Matheson, Richard Sharretts, Joseph Scott, Miss Cleary, Betty Lou Allen, Marcelle Hammond and Mr. Smith.

Musical assistants are Louis Bagger, Mr. Blumenfeld, Christoph von Dohnanyi, Frederick Fall, Frederick Popper and Kurt Saffir.

Costumes were executed by Naomi Blake, Selma Borenstein and Lou Rodger. Maida Burr and Don David Lev were assistants to Mr. VanWitsen.

Production assistants were Ellen Berkowitz, Fredric Blumberg, Walter Cavalieri, Carolyn Jenkins, Ann Porges, Dorothy Troupin, Georgianna Wilmot, Baba Henkin and Jack MacGowan.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
JUL 17 1952

AT TANGLEWOOD SESSION

David D. Kaplan of 9 Fairbanks street is among more than 400 music students from 41 states and 16 foreign countries who are currently attending the 10th annual session of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

Students take part in the six-weeks' program.

The festival's director, Charles Munch, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra head a distinguished faculty of musicians including Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Boris Goldovsky and William Kroll.

Times

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
JUL 18 1952

The Berkshire Music Festival Tanglewood trip sponsored by the YWCA will leave Sunday, the 27th, at 11.30 a. m. All reservations may be made by Tuesday. Tickets are for the shed and all seats are reserved. Half of the total fee is needed to hold reservations. Those attending should take a snack for the return trip. Registrations are limited and further information may be had by calling the YWCA.

Albany, N.Y.

NOTED MUSICIANS—Leonard Bernstein (left), guest conductor; Charles Munch (center), permanent conductor, and Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, admiring Mr. Burgin's princeless "Strad" at Tanglewood. Series A will open the concerts in the Big Shed Thursday night, with succeeding concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

Globe - July 25
1952

Sports Seven

Boston Symphony Honored at Lenox Festival Opening

By CYRUS DURGIN

LENOX, July 24—Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra received a cordial official welcome from authorities of Berkshire County, as the main portion of the Berkshire Festival opened here tonight in the music shed at Tanglewood.

This was the first time that the full numbers of the Boston Symphony had gathered for a public concert since they ended their first European tour in the Royal Festival Hall in London last May 26.

Evereything combind to make this occasion pleasant—even the weather. The day was clear and warm, but with a lively breeze, and the evning was really cool. Accordingly one of the largest Berkshire Fstival opening night audiences attended. The box office count was more than 8000 persons, who sat in the huge music shed and spread out upon the lawn before it.

Mayor Makes Presentation

Before Charles Munch and the orchestra embarked upon the program of two symphonies—Beethoven's "Eroica" and the C Minor of Brahms—the conductor appeared at stage front with Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's board of trustees, and Mayor Robert T. Capeless of the adjoining city of Pittsfield, the Berkshire County seat.

Mr. Cabot introduced Mayor Capeless, who said, in part that Berkshire County, when its inhabitants heard of the wonderful reception given the orchestra in Europe, decided it, too, wanted to extend as cordial a reception to the returning musicians, for, he said, Berkshire County feels that the Boston Symphony belongs to it as well as to its home city.

Mayor Capless then presented a framed certificate, signed by County Commissioners J. Joseph McCabe, John Henderson and John F. Shea, which reads as follows:

"The people of Berkshire County salute the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the occasion of its first concert after its triumphant tour of Europe.

"As friends and neighbors we shared with delight, though at a distance. The unparalleled adulation which greeted this peerless band of musicians in its first tour abroad, in the Spring of 1952.

"We marked with pride that this orchestra was a chosen democratic instrument to sound the notes of freedom in an embattled continent. We rejoice that this great ensemble returns to us at Tanglewood to enrich our lives and to glorify, in its majestic fashion, our beautiful Berkshire Hills."

"World's Greatest"

"It is my good privilege," added Mayor Capeless, "to present this certificate to Mr. Charles Munch, and through him, to the members of the greatest orchestra in the world."

The certificate was made in Berkshire County by Berkshire artisans and designers. Further Berkshire tribute came from a group of Lenox and Pittsfield florists who erected over the main entrance gate to Tanglewood, an arch of evergreens and pink geraniums.

Congratulatory telegrams were received from United States Senator Leverett Saltonstall and Congressman John W. Heselton of the Massachusetts First Congressional District.

The welcoming ceremonies over, Mr. Munch and the orchestra addressed themselves to the resounding glories of the "Eroica" symphony. This classic masterpiece he read with his usual over-mastering intensity, although the pace of the first movement seemed a little more moderate than the conductor might have taken it at other times.

The opening program of familiar eBethoven and Brahms, though containing nothing "newsy" in a conventional sense, was nonetheless the sort of music which, I suspect, eFstival audiences prefer at a season's opening.

The words "season's opening" are reasonably correct, too, for although there have been the customary and preliminary three weekends of small orchestra concerts in the theatre-concert hall, a festival does not really "begin" until the main series is opened in the music shed. Novelties, such as they are this Summer will come later.

As always, the audience tonight was noisily cordial in its applause for Mr. Munch and the Boston Symphony. They know perfectly well when they are hearing a very, very, good thing.

LONG BRANCH, N. J.
RECORD
JUL 12 1952

THE MUSI

lcentury Pattern: On And 3,000 Take H

By IRVING KOLC

Tanglewood

The tenth year of activity at Tanglewood, Mass., began this week (July 5-12) with more than 400 students from 41 States and 16 countries enrolled in the Berkshire Music Center. To the general public it is the summer-long concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra that make the green acres that once housed Nathaniel Hawthorne a happy place to be, but the school's the thing for those who supervise the whole activity. Among the new students this year will be Christopher von Dohnanyi, grandson of the composer of the favorite "Variations on a Nursery Theme". He's ambitions for a career as a conductor.

MunchOpensTanglewood Series Next Saturday

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, June 28—Charles Munch will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program next Saturday evening at 8:15 to open the series of six concerts in the Tanglewood Theatre-Concert Hall the coming three weekends.

Richard Burgin, concertmaster, and Ruth Posselt, his wife, will be soloists in the Concerto for Two Violins. The program will begin with "The Musical Offering" and close with the Suite No. 3, in D major.

Sunday afternoon, July 6, at 3, the program will be Handel's Concerto Grosso for Strings, Dittersdorf's Symphony in C major, C. P. E. Bach's Symphony No. 5, in B minor and J. S. Bach's Cantata No. 140, the last to be conducted by Hugh Ross.

Globe

[6]

ANNUAL FESTIVAL AND MUSIC CENTER IN FULL SWING AT TANGLEWOOD

Although the concerts in the Music Shed do not begin until next Thursday evening, Tanglewood, under Charles Munch's leadership, has been busy since late in June. These photographs give an idea of the wide-ranging program, from studies in conducting, orchestral playing and composition to the festival to be led by Mr. Munch, Pierre Monteux and Leonard Bernstein.

Will Plouffe Studio

tudent orchestra: Lorin Maazel of Pittsburgh directs a rehearsal.

Mr. Munch (center) with Mr. Bernstein and Richard Burgin, concertmaster.

Aaron Copland te ers from Michigan, Egypt, New

AKRON, OHIO
BEACON JOURNAL
JUL 14 1952

Maazel Reveals Marriage

★ ★ ★

Brazilian Composer Bride Of 'Boy Prodigy' Conductor

★ ★

By DON EARLENBAUGH

THE YOUNG conductor and violinist, proclaimed by Leopold Stokowski as the "prodigy of the century," has taken a bride.

Handsome 22-year-old Lorin Maazel announced his marriage to a Brazilian beauty during an interview at intermission time of a "pop" concert he conducted with the Cleveland Summer Orchestra last week.

The conductor and his bride, the former Mimi Sandbank, were married three weeks ago in Tanglewood, Mass., site of the annual Berkshire Music Festival.

Maazel had just finished the first half of a Gershwin program, when he announced it.

* * *

JESUS MARIA SONROMA, internationally known pianist who was on the program, exclaimed, "Maazel is a brilliant conductor. Do you know that we rehearsed together only 10 or 15 minutes?"

Maazel, the famous boy prodigy, looked at his bride and explained:

"There is a reason why I'm able to do a better job of conducting. I'm very much in love with my wife. I'm happy and that makes me a better artist."

The new Mrs. Maazel, at 22, has accomplished nearly as much as her talented husband.

Her dark eyes flashed as she told of the thrill she experienced when she heard her own musical compositions played for the first time. It was just before she left Brazil last time that a South American concert orchestra played her work.

* * *

MIMI IS WORKING now on an opera. She has composed a piano concerto and several violin sonatas. She also is a poetess. She was graduated from Sarah Lawrence College in New York City just a few weeks ago.

Her education in the United States explains her almost perfect English. The newlyweds will go to Italy in the Fall. Maazel has won a fellowship to do research on little known works of great Italian composers. This will be their honeymoon.

LORIN MAAZEL

Maazel attended the University of Pittsburgh three years. He did not attend a music school.

"Music schools are distracting, because of the many imposed extracurricular activities," he says.

* * *

REGARDED BY many as a foremost authority on the compositions of the late George Gershwin, Maazel considers Gershwin's works "the first point which has focalized on and formalized Americanism in music."

Maazel was born in 1930 at Neuilly, France, of American parents. His father, a professional singer, was touring Europe that year and Mrs. Maazel accompanied him.

The prodigy got a lot of encouragement from his family in his violin studies. For 25 years his grandfather was first violinist with the Metropolitan Opera orchestra. Isaac Maazel was a brilliant violinist and a concertmaster in Warsaw at the age of 14.

At 5 years Maazel took his first violin lessons. Two years later he started practicing piano. He played simplified versions of symphonic themes to begin with. Then, given the original scores, he quickly demonstrated an ability to memorize them and conduct recordings of what he had learned.

* * *

IN 1938 HE took his primer conducting lesson from Vladimir Bakaleinikoff. Six months later he conducted Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony" from memory.

e was 11 he had
s Angeles Philollywood Bowl
m with Stokow-Symphony.
ducted the New Chicago and mphony

phony. In 1946 he made his debut as a violinist with the latter.

In January, 1951, Maazel conducted the first performance of Roy Harris' "Third Symphony."

"It is my considered conviction that young Maazel could develop most orchestras with such sure, steady growth that he would be a cultural benefactor of the community that has the wisdom to engage him," Harris said.

---

it is a very pleasant piece and the early reference to the opening cromatic phase of the "Afternoon of a Faun" was amusing as well as agreeable to hear in any guise.

The storm which had been gathering and rumbling distantly during the latter half of the program finally arrived at the end of the last work: the Poulenc sextet. The artists valiantly plodded through the prestissimo although the attention of the audience was diverted by the patter of the rain, the wind rushing through the open, and, in some cases, swinging doors, and the rivulets coming through the "stream-lined" roof. Fortunately it ceased reasonably swiftly so that every one reached his car in safety.

Philadelphia Orchesters, Jacob Krachmalnick, spielt Chaussons "Poème" (Dirigent Howard Shanet) und Seymour Lipkin, der Preisträger des Rachmaninoff-Wettbewerbes, ist Solist in Mendelssohns Klavier-Konzert in G-Moll, Dirigent Lukas Foss. Der zweite Teil des Konzertes wird von Leonard Bernstein geleitet, der den Schlußakt der Oper "Carmen" von Bizet zur Wiedergabe bringt; mitwirkende Solisten Mildred Miller, David Lloyd, James Pease und der Festival Chorus. Der Rest des Abends ist dem Tanz im Freien gewidmet. Außerdem kommt Pergolesis Oper "Livietta und Tracolo" im Garten neuinszeniert zur Aufführung.

Die Leitung der Berkshire Music Center gibt bekannt, daß in den zehn Jahren seiner Tätigkeit, die nur durch den Krieg unterbrochen waren, 3812 Studenten die Kurse besucht haben. In 21 großen Orchestervereinigungen des Landes sind nun 120 Absolventen des Center beschäftigt, davon im Cleveland Orchester allein 15 Musiker. Charles Munch hat nach dem Ableben Serge Koussevitzkys die Leitung des Music Center übernommen.

Berkshire Eagle July 24

Tanglewood Has Festive Air As Tonight's Opening Nears

Excitement heightened at Tanglewood this morning in preparation for the opening of the major Berkshire Festival in the Shed tonight. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, held its final rehearsal for this evening's program of Beethoven's third ("Eroica") symphony under Charles Munch. The ticket office was busy taking last-minute reservations for seats. The corps of groundsmen under the estate superintendent, Ward Gaston, were giving the final touch to the lawns and paths, and the refreshment department, with an augmented staff, was preparing to serve those who will come for supper on the grounds and a snack at intermission.

At the main gate volunteers were erecting an arch of evergreens, dotted with geraniums, in honor of the home-coming of the orchestra and its conductor, Charles Munch.

Mayor Presenting Scroll

The welcoming ceremony, with the presentation by Mayor Robert T. Capeless of the scroll of appreciation from official Berkshire County, will take place at the opening of the concert. The Pittsfield mayor will be introduced by Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the orchestra. Berkshire town chairmen and county officials as guests of honor will occupy boxes for the concert.

In the audience will be some 40 officials of Berkshire cities and towns, three trustees, including Edward T. Thaw and Mrs. Thaw, and Boston's Fire Commissioner Michael T. Kelleher and Mrs. Kelleher. Also in this week-end audience will be Julius Fleischman of Cincinnati, member of the American Committee of Congress, who was instrumental in arranging the orchestra's European trip, and Mrs. Fleischman and Mr. and Mrs. Julius Bloom. Mr. Bloom is director of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, under whose auspices the orchestra has played at the Academy of Music each season for 65 years.

Pupils of Dr. Koussevitzky To Participate in Memorial

To observe the birthday of its founder and until his death a year ago its director, Serge Koussevitzky, the Berkshire Music Center will feature for its symphony program tomorrow night works by his friends, including his pupils.

The program.

American Festival Overture .... Schuman
Elyakum Shapira, conducting.
Concerto for violin and orchestra . Barber
Lorin Maazel, conductor.
Jeanne Sandbank, soloist.
Three variations from the ballet, Fancy Free .... Bernstein
Robert Mandell, conducting.
Cantata for chorus and orchestra (first performance) .... Orgad
Hugh Ross, conducting.
Suite from the ballet, Billy the Kid. Copland
Leonard Bernstein, conducting.

For the chamber music concert at 10 o'clock under the direction of William Kroll, the program will include quartets by Brahms and Bitter and a sextet by Bridge.

The concerts are open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center who contribute to its support in any amount they choose to give.

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
JUL 20 1952

Koussevitzky Day Is Celebrated

Special to The Blade

LENOX, Mass., July 19—The Koussevitzky Music Foundation will celebrate the birthday of the late Serge Koussevitzky here next Saturday with ceremonies in the Lenox Library. The Foundation will present scores, music, recordings and books to the Library, which has cooperated with the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, established by Dr. Koussevitzky. The program will include chamber music played by members of the Berkshire Music Center faculty and films of Tanglewood and the March of Time. The Foundation, as in previous years, has made a grant to the Center, to aid scholarship students.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
JUL 20

TANGLEWOOD OPERA TUESDAY

Goldovsky Will Direct Performance

For the evening of one-act operas to be staged Tuesday evening in the Tanglewood Theater, Boris Goldovsky, the director, has chosen "The Incas of Peru" by Rameau, from his "Indes Galantes," "Don Pasquale" by Donizetti and "Angelique" by Jacques Ibert, who taught composition at Tanglewood in 1950.

Beginning at 8.15, the performance will be open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center whose contributions help to support the school.

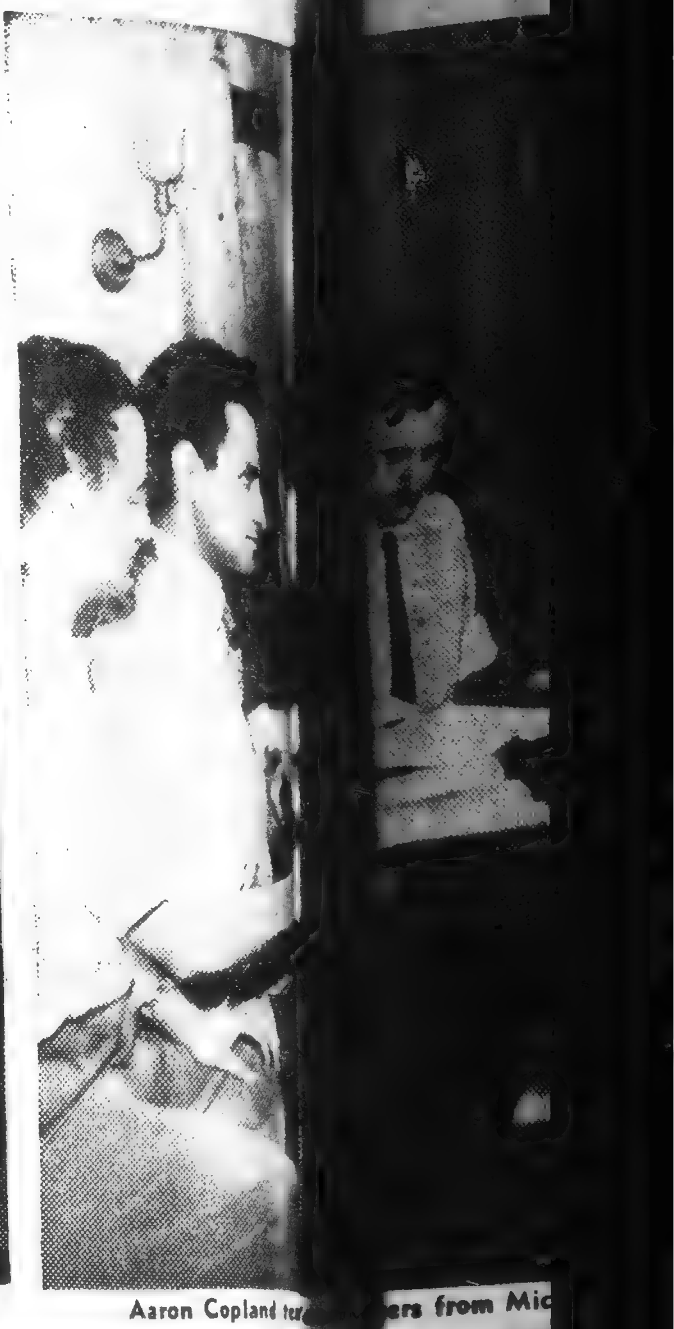
ANNUAL FESTIVAL AND MUSIC CENTER IN FULL SWING AT TANGLEWOOD

Although the concerts in the Music Shed do not begin until next Thursday evening, Tanglewood, under Charles Munch's leadership, has been busy since late in June. These photographs give an idea of the wide-ranging program, from studies in conducting, orchestral playing and composition to the festival to be led by Mr. Munch, Pierre Monteux and Leonard Bernstein.

Will Plouffe Studio

Student conductor with student orchestra: Lorin Maazel of Pittsburgh directs a rehearsal.

Mr. Munch (center) with Mr. Bernstein and Richard Burgin, concertmaster.



Aaron Copland te ers from Mic

MR. AND MRS. E. J. THOMAS, THE NEWLYWEDS AND SIR PERCY S

one of the guests.

Music

Woodwind Ensemble Heard In Concert at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

One of the great boons which the concerts in the Theatre Concert Hall at Tanglewood sponsored by Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge foundation in the Library of Congress provides is the opportunity it gives the student body of the Berkshire Music Center, which is such a substantial part of the large audiences, to hear both rare and new music. Such a special opportunity was the third in the series of four Wednesday evenings in which the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble was the guest organization last night. Their program was entirely of this century with three French composers represented and two Americans, both of whom were present in the audience.

The members of the ensemble are James Pappoutsakis, flute, Louis Speyer, oboe and English horn, Pasquale Cardillo, clarinet, Theodore Brewster, bassoon, Harold Meek, French horn, and pianist David Barnett, assisting artist.

Arthur Berger's quartet for the reed quartet is dated 1941 while Irving Fine's partita for woodwind quintet, which includes a French horn with the flute, oboe, clarinet and bassoon, is only since 1948. Both works, as was the whole program, in fact, were played with the skill and distinction for which the artists of the evening are recognized and they gave an air of refinement to the entire concert. However, the character of wind instruments limits their expressive capacity and tends to make such a program one of scholarly interest and enjoyment rather than of emotional impact. Thus, composers who channel their inspiration into these formulae, unless it be on commission, truly do so for love of their art.

Interlude Obscured

The use by both young Americans, naturally, of the contemporary idiom was no added burden to the ears of the young students and the many others in the audience to whom this era's music is familiar in varying degrees. Berger's quartet is in three movements, a slow section between two animated ones; Fine's partita has five sectional designations. It seemed to us that a more carefully adjusted tonal balance might have clarified the lovely Interlude, for the line was obscured for us by the perpendicular and static approach of the players.

The three French works included the Roussel Divertissment, written very early in this century, the Poulenc sextet for woodwind quintet and piano, and Debussy's Rapsodie for English horn and piano. Roussel's little sketch, in one movement, is a racy and light number, while Poulenc has written a pseudo-medley of sentimental comic-opera situations, very fetching but cafe-concert music. Debussy's entry was originally for saxophone and orchestra and was written on commission of a Boston patron of music of the turn of the century, Mrs. Richard Hall (nee Elise Coolidge and no kin of the sponsor of this concert). Mr. Speyer played it on the English horn for the first time with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky in 1932.

Debussy was mildly annoyed by the tenacity of Americans, especially the "Femme-saxophone," as he called her, who kept him "searching desperately for novel combinations calculated to show off this aquatic instrument." Nevertheless it is a very pleasant piece and the early reference to the opening cromatic phase of the "Afternoon of a Faun" was amusing as well as agreeable to hear in any guise.

The storm which had been gathering and rumbling distantly during the latter half of the program finally arrived at the end of the last work: the Poulenc sextet. The artists valiantly plodded through the prestissimo although the attention of the audience was diverted by the patter of the rain, the wind rushing through the open, and, in some cases, swinging doors, and the rivulets coming through the "stream-lined" roof. Fortunately it ceased reasonably swiftly so that every one reached his car in safety.

Springfield Union July 21

LECTURE-RECITAL BY ARTHUR SCHOEP

Lenox, July 26—An unscheduled lecture-recital of Dutch songs will be given at Tanglewood Tuesday afternoon at 4.30 by Arthur Schoep, baritone. A student in stage directing from Platte, S. D., Mr. Schoep collected the material for his performance while studying in Holland on a Fulbright grant by the United States Department of State. He will be accompanied on the piano by Felix Wolfes of the faculty of the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center.

The recital, which will be held in the chamber music hall, will be open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center who contribute in any amount to the support of the school.

ANNIVERSARY

Next Sunday will be the anniversary of the birth of the late Serge Koussevitzky. To honor the occasion the Koussevitzky Music Foundation will present a gift of scores, music, recordings and books of music to the Lenox Library.

The gift will enlarge the library's music collection so that it will be more useful to members of the community and to students of the near-by Berkshire Music Center. The music to be included in the gift includes works being performed by the center's student orchestra, the opera department and its chamber music groups.

mußte.

Staats Zeitung Jul 24

"Tanglewood in Parade"

Freitag, 1. August, wird die 10. Saison des Berkshire Musikfestes mit der Veranstaltung "Tanglewood in Parade" gefeiert. Der Ertrag kommt dem Berkshire Music Center zugute und einige der erfolgreichsten Absolventen des Music Center werden als Solisten mitwirken. Drei Konzerte werden um 6 Uhr abgehalten: das Studentenorchester spielt in der Freilufthalle, der Chor ist im Vorgelände zu hören und die Kammermusikgruppe gibt im kleinen Saal ein Konzert; im weiteren Verlauf des Abends wird "Alcottiano" von Singer im Theater erstmalig aufgeführt.

James Aliferis leitet den Schluß-Satz von Lukas Foss "The Prairie" (für Chor und Orchester), der Konzertmeister des Philadelphia Orchesters, Jacob Krachmalnick, spielt Chaussons "Poème" (Dirigent Howard Shanet) und Seymour Lipkin, der Preisträger des Rachmaninoff-Wettbewerbes, ist Solist in Mendelssohns Klavier-Konzert in G-Moll, Dirigent Lukas Foss. Der zweite Teil des Konzertes wird von Leonard Bernstein geleitet, der den Schlußakt der Oper "Carmen" von Bizet zur Wiedergabe bringt; mitwirkende Solisten Mildred Miller, David Lloyd, James Pease und der Festival Chorus. Der Rest des Abends ist dem Tanz im Freien gewidmet. Außerdem kommt Pergolesis Oper "Livietta und Tracolo" im Garten neuinszeniert zur Aufführung.

Die Leitung der Berkshire Music Center gibt bekannt, daß in den zehn Jahren seiner Tätigkeit, die nur durch den Krieg unterbrochen waren, 3812 Studenten die Kurse besucht haben. In 21 großen Orchestervereinigungen des Landes sind nun 120 Absolventen des Center beschäftigt, davon im Cleveland Orchester allein 15 Musiker. Charles Munch hat nach dem Ableben Serge Koussevitzkys die Leitung des Music Center übernommen.

[37]

Berkshire Eagle July 24

Tanglewood Has Festive Air As Tonight's Opening Nears

Excitement heightened at Tanglewood this morning in preparation for the opening of the major Berkshire Festival in the Shed tonight. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, held its final rehearsal for this evening's program of Beethoven's third ("Eroica") symphony under Charles Munch. The ticket office was busy taking last-minute reservations for seats. The corps of groundsmen under the estate superintendent, Ward Gaston, were giving the final touch to the lawns and paths, and the refreshment department, with an augmented staff, was preparing to serve those who will come for supper on the grounds and a snack at intermission.

At the main gate volunteers were erecting an arch of evergreens, dotted with geraniums, in honor of the home-coming of the orchestra and its conductor, Charles Munch.

Mayor Presenting Scroll

The welcoming ceremony, with the presentation by Mayor Robert T. Capeless of the scroll of appreciation from official Berkshire County, will take place at the opening of the concert. The Pittsfield mayor will be introduced by Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the orchestra. Berkshire town chairmen and county officials as guests of honor will occupy boxes for the concert.

In the audience will be some 40 officials of Berkshire cities and towns, three trustees, including Edward T. Thaw and Mrs. Thaw, and Boston's Fire Commissioner Michael T. Kelleher and Mrs. Kelleher. Also in this week-end audience will be Julius Fleischman of Cincinnati, member of the American Committee of Congress, who was instrumental in arranging the orchestra's European trip, and Mrs. Fleischman and Mr. and Mrs. Julius Bloom. Mr. Bloom is director of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, under whose auspices the orchestra has played at the Academy of Music each season for 65 years.

Pupils of Dr. Koussevitzky To Participate in Memorial

To observe the birthday of its founder and until his death a year ago its director, Serge Koussevitzky, the Berkshire Music Center will feature for its symphony program tomorrow night works by his friends, including his pupils.

The program.

American Festival Overture .... Schuman
Elyakum Shapira, conducting.
Concerto for violin and orchestra . Barber
Lorin Maazel, conductor.
Jeanne Sandbank, soloist.
Three variations from the ballet. Fancy Free .... Bernstein
Robert Mandell, conducting.
Cantata for chorus and orchestra (first performance) .... Orgad
Hugh Ross, conducting.
Suite from the ballet, Billy the Kid Copland
Leonard Bernstein, conducting.

For the chamber music concert at 10 o'clock under the direction of William Kroll, the program will include quartets by Brahms and Bitter and a sextet by Bridge.

The concerts are open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center who contribute to its support in any amount they choose to give.

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
JUL 20 1952

Koussevitzky Day Is Celebrated

Special to The Blade

LENOX, Mass., July 19—The Koussevitzky Music Foundation will celebrate the birthday of the late Serge Koussevitzky here next Saturday with ceremonies in the Lenox Library. The Foundation will present scores, music, recordings and books to the Library, which has cooperated with the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, established by Dr. Koussevitzky. The program will include chamber music played by members of the Berkshire Music Center faculty and films of Tanglewood and the March of Time. The Foundation, as in previous years, has made a grant to the Center, to aid scholarship students.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
JUL 20

TANGLEWOOD OPERA TUESDAY

Goldovsky Will Direct Performance

For the evening of one-act operas to be staged Tuesday evening in the Tanglewood Theater, Boris Goldovsky, the director, has chosen "The Incas of Peru" by Rameau, from his "Indes Galantes," "Don Pasquale" by Donizetti and "Angelique" by Jacques Ibert, who taught composition at Tanglewood in 1950.

Beginning at 8.15, the performance will be open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center whose contributions help to support the school.

CLUB NOTES

Sale Procee Conservatio

By HELEN

EXECUTIVE BOARD OF an auction Thursday at the Am blvd., to raise money for conse

Women in the clubs have and some 40 flowering crab tr
larch and sycamore trees in Che along Christensen av., and 15

The sale Thursday will start at
1 p. m.

Mrs. Pauline Edwards will be the auctioneer.

Drama Section

MEMBERS of the Drama Section of the Goodyear Woman's Club will give skits and Mrs. G. A. Mahoney will give readings on a program she and Mrs. W. H. Armstrong are arranging for Tuesday.

The program will follow a picnic luncheon at 12 noon with Mrs. Thomas E. Morehead, 1551 Brittain rd., as hostess.

She'll be assis
Cockim, Mrs. F
Mrs. Glenn Gre

Flower Ar

SUNSET Ga
early and have cussion on fl
9:30 a. m. W

July 24

ir

rs

Berkshire
the open-Pittsfield
by Henry trustees re town icials as boxes

ne 40
and including Thaw, missioner
Mrs. week-end
chman
Amers, who ing the
, and nd Mrs. directute of whose played each sea-

Bernstein
first Organ
Copland concert direction gram will
and

MASS.
ICAN
1952

TUESDAY

Direct Per-

Aaron Copland tea... posers from Michigan, Egypt, New York, New Zealand and Israel.

N. Y. July 20
Journal-American

Miles Kastendieck:

Berkshire Festival Season's Event

MILES KASTENDIECK

THIS THURSDAY the regular expansion of the Berkshire Festival takes place. When the Boston Symphony moves into the famous Music Shed, the festival as most people know it begins. It is then that events at Tanglewood assume major proportions, and the festival becomes the most important Summer event of its kind in the East.

The three symphonic weekends this year supply some novelty in the appearance of Charles Munch as conductor.

Having had Pierre Monteux at Lewisohn Stadium for a fortnight recently will in no way lessen interest in his appearance for one program in each of the first two weekends. When Leonard Bernstein conducts his annual program the third weekend, it will be designated "The Koussevitzky Memorial Concert."

As for the programs, most of them will adhere to standard repertory as expected. The theory is that people come to hear the Bostonians play familiar music.

Modern music will have a fair amount of representation. Monteux will conduct Stravinsky's "Rites of Spring." Hugh Ross will offer Dallapiccola's "Three Prisoners' Songs" for chorus. Nicole Henriot will play Ravel's Piano Concerto. Munch will conduct Honegger's "Danse des Morts" and Swanson's "Short Symphony."

Plouffe

000TH FRIEND: Mrs. Ture Bengtz of Boston and Lenox, left, becomes the 3000th Friend f the Berkshire Music Center while Mrs. Tabea Hoffman Thieme of New York, whose son, Darius, is tudying composition at the Tanglewood school, waits her turn to sign up. Mrs. David Karrick of ashington, D.C., and Stockbridge, a member of the national committee, looks on. Contributions rom members of the Friends help to support the Center and also entitle them to events during the Festival season.

Tanglewood Music Season Reaches Intensive Stage

Jul 20

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

The first half of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., closes this afternoon, when Charles Munch will conduct a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony musicians in works of Haydn and Schubert. The festival then moves from Tanglewood's Theater-Concert Hall to the large Music Shed, where the first of the nine concerts of the complete Boston Symphony will be held Thursday night. Mr. Munch will conduct on that date and next Sunday afternoon; Pierre Monteux, in his Berkshire debut, will conduct Saturday night.

Five contemporary composers (using the term for those born after 1880) will be represented in the regular festival programs. Mr. Monteux, who introduced Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" both to Paris and to New York, will conduct it on Saturday, and Hugh Ross will conduct Luigi Dallapiccola's "Three Prisoners' Songs," for chorus and orchestra, next Sunday. Mr. Dallapiccola is teaching composition at Tanglewood for a second consecutive summer. Mr. Munch will conduct Arthur Honegger's "Danse des Morts," also for orchestra and chorus, on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 3. Two works by American-born composers are scheduled: Howard Swanson's "Short Symphony," which won the New York Music Critics' Circle's latest orchestral award, for Thursday night, Aug. 7, and Aaron Copland's third symphony for Saturday night, Aug. 9.

Closing Fortnight

Mr. Munch's program for Thursday night, July 31, opens with works of Gabriel Fauré and closes with Brahms's fourth symphony; Nicole Henriot will be the soloist in Fauré's Ballade and Ravel's piano ocncerto. Mr. Monteux will conduct a Wagner program Aug. 2, with Margaret Harshaw, Charles Kullman and James Pease as soloists. On Aug. 3, Mr. Munch with preface the Honegger work with Beethoven's "Egmont" overture and eighth symphony and Debussy's "Iberia." In his program for Thursday, Aug. 7, Schumann's "Spring" symphony precedes the Swanson work, and Artur Rubinstein will be the soloist in Brahm's second piano concerto. The concert of Aug. 9, under Leonard Bernstein, is dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky. Besides the Copland symphony, it will include an andante by C. P. E. Bach and the fifth symphony of Sibelius. The festival closes with the first Tanglewood performance of the Berlioz Requiem Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10, under Mr. Munch. The orchestra will also hold public rehearsals on the next three Saturday mornings for the benefit of its pension fund.

The Berkshire Music Center's schedule for the coming week includes chamber music at 10 this morning; a student song recital at 4:30 and one act operas at 8:15 on Tuesday; a concert by the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble Wednesday evening and a student orchestra concert Friday evening.

The annual "Tanglewood on Parade" program, with demonstrations by the Center's departments and a concert by the Boston Symphony, will be held Friday afternoon and evening, Aug. 1. As its annual production of an unfamiliar work, the Center's opera department will stage Mozart's "La Clemenza di Tito" for the first time in this country Monday and Tuesday nights, Aug. 4 and 5. Details for a special concert Friday night, Aug. 8, are not yet announced. Tickets for the festival concerts and "Tanglewood on Parade" are on public sale; the Center's programs are open to contributing members of its Society of Friends.

This is the fifteenth regular Berkshire Festival, the thirteenth to be given by the Boston Symphony and the twelfth at Tanglewood

---

COLUMBUS, OHIO
CITIZEN
JUL 5 - 1952

Boston Symphony Disc Wins Prize

First prize of the French Academy of Recordings has been awarded to the Boston Symphony Orchestra and ~~its permanent con~~ductor, Charles Munch, for their RCA Victor album of Brahms' Symphony No. 4, in E minor, Op. 98, it was disclosed in an announcement from Paris.

The awarding of the prize, highest honor conferred by the academy, will be publicly proclaimed in the French National Assembly.

The Boston Symphony recently concluded its first European engagement, during which it was conducted by both Charles Munch and Pierre Monteux. The orchestra took part in the Paris festival of "Masterpieces of the Twentieth Century" and packed concert halls in The Hague, Amsterdam, Brussels, Frankfort, Berlin, Strasbourg, Metz, Lyon, Paris Bordeaux and London.

New York Tribune

The Musical Scene

~~A Slander That Ruined a Concert Tour;~~ Study Group Studying Hard

July 27, 52

By JAY S. HARRISON

Sturdy Study Group: The search for unfamiliar compositions is an unceasing one. The pianist who rifles through a thousand off-the-beaten-track pages to find a single acceptable sonata, the violinist whose fingers grow calloused in the playing of countless scores—these are familiar figures on the musical scene. And yet, for a city dweller, access to a work that may lighten and brighten the stark and standard Bach-Beethoven-Brahms recital diet is not hard to come by. Libraries are readily available for consultation and musicological nuggets covered with the dust of oblivion have a way of dropping from conservatory shelves into the unsuspecting arms of academicians. Then, too, composers, classically said to congregate in large towns, are never averse to answering the inquiries of artists bent on enlivening their repertoire.

But what of the suburbanite musician or the performer to whose home no highways lead? His potential resources are, to say the least, few and dreary. This is doubly the case with serious amateurs, music educators and others interested in community music, for these alone do not fall heir to the network of channels which distribute to the needy new new and new old music found or produced in our time.

A major step in the direction of alleviating this artistic bottleneck has been brought about by the foundation of the Tanglewood Study Group, a department of the Berkshire Music Center. Under the guidance of Ingolf Dahl, a member of the music staff of the University of California, a group of students including among others a doctor, a lawyer, an insurance broker, an army officer and an accountant is now dedicating from two to six weeks of its time to perusing and performing music of another day whose proper message and practice shall then return with the classmates to their own community. Thus one discovers that this summer the Study Group will try its hand at the music of Elizabethan England and Rennaisance Italy, together with glees and catches put together in the time of Charles II's merry reign. There will also be scenes from early Italian comic opera and chamber cantatas composed by contemporary composers especially for Mr. Dahl's participating members. In all, the curriculum represents a heady brew and one of ample substance. It speaks of careful preparation and trumpets well its future.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST
JUL 20 1952

Boston Symphony in Concert At Tanglewood Thursday

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., July 19—Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the opening of the major Berkshire Festival in the Tanglewood music shed Thursday evening in Beethoven's Third ("Eroica") and Brahms' First Symphonies.

The concert will be the first of nine in the shed on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons. Pierre Monteux will take the baton for the first two Saturday programs and Leonard Bernstein for August 9.

July 24 1952 - Eagle

Ramon Tapales Of Philippines At Tanglewood

Ramon Tapales, director of the Conservatory of Music of the University of the Philippines, Manila, arrived at Tanglewood today to stay until Sunday night.

Making his first visit to the United States under the Department of State's exchange program, he will travel for six months to observe music education in New York City, Boston, Interlochen, Mich., Knoxville, Tenn., and other cities. Interested principally in observing music teaching methods at the grade school level in urban and rural areas, he will consult with authorities in the field and will visit conservatories and schools of music.

Mr. Tapales has been engaged for some years in developing the music instruction programs in Filipino public schools, especially in the villages. In this connection he has produced a series of textbooks entitled "Singing and Growing," which has been adopted by the Philippines Bureau of Education for general use among 7,000,000 pupils and private grade schools.

Recently appointed by the United Nations General Assembly to serve as representative in the Philippines for UNESCS's International Music Council, he was a member in 1950 of the Philippines' National Commission on Educational Scientific and Cultural Matters.

BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE
JUN 29 1952

MunchOpensTanglewood Series Next Saturday

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, June 28—Charles Munch will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program next Saturday evening at 8:15 to open the series of six concerts in the Tanglewood Theatre-Concert Hall the coming three weekends.

Richard Burgin, concertmaster, and Ruth Posselt, his wife, will be soloists in the Concerto for Two Violins. The program will begin with "The Musical Offering" and close with the Suite No. 3, in D major.

Sunday afternoon, July 6, at 3, the program will be Handel's Concerto Grosso for Strings, Dittersdorf's Symphony in C major, C. P. E. Bach's Symphony No. 5, in B minor and J. S. Bach's Cantata No. 140, the last to be conducted by Hugh Ross.

BOSTON SYMPHONY EXCELS IN CONCERT AT TANGLEWOOD

Excellent Weather Draws Large Crowd to Berkshire Festival

By VICTOR PRAHL

Lenox, July 19—For the third Saturday concert by members of the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch here at Tanglewood tonight, favorable weather again prevailed with a large audience extending far out on the lawn and totaling altogether some 4200.

Two Youthful Compositions

The first half of the program consisted of two youthful compositions by Mozart, "A Litaniae" for chorus and the "C Major Piano Concerto." The Litaniae written when the composer was only 16 consisted of eight parts. It is a work of the mind as well as the heart for here the young composer was obviously interested in the form of his composition. In fact, it often suggests an instrumental rather than a vocal work, but in the more expressive, lyrical numbers, one hears the voice that is unmistakably that of the real Mozart. Hugh Ross, directing the Berkshire Festival Chorus, adhered throughout the work to the high standard and the chorus has set in its previous performances this season.

BOSTON SYMPHONY

(Continued From Page 1A)

The chorus was impressive in the full-throated and authoritative manner it sang the opening "Kyrie" and really thrilling in the elaborate coloratura passages of the final "Pignus Futurae." Sara Mae Endich, soprano, Jacqueline Langee, contralto, John McCollum, tenor and Bernard Green, bass, were a finely balanced quartet in their ensemble and short solo passages. Miss Endich's tones were firm and even in her solo "Panis Vivus" and John McCollum showed excellent control in the long, florid phrases of "Panis Omnipotentia."

Lukas Foss was the soloist in Mozart's "Piano Concerto in C Major." He gave the extended passages of the first movement a purity of articulation and general technical perfection that bespoke the perfect Mozart style. We have remarked before on this young pianist's ability to identify himself completely with the music. This was evident again in the Andante where the piano carries the solo part simply in a single melodic line above the colorful accompaniment of the orchestra. Here the two were welded as one in an expression that was truly exquisite. After the lilting finale, the pianist received a rousing ovation which was shared deservedly by Mr. Munch and the members of the orchestra.

The second half consisted of Schubert's "Mass No. 2 in G Major" which will be repeated at tomorrow's concert when in addition there will be two symphonies by Haydn, "No. 99 in E Flat" and "No. 86 in D Major."

Record Crowd of 4200 At Tanglewood

Lenox, July 19—Both the charm and casualness of conductor Hugh Ross caught the imagination of the estimated 4200 in attendance at tonight's Mozart-Schubert concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the theater concert hall here on the grounds of Tanglewood. The crowd was said to be the biggest in history. He caught both the eye and ear of his vast audience at the very outset of Mozart's "Litaniae De Venerabile Altaris Sacramento" as he rested his left hand on his hip and used his long thin right forefinger as his baton.

His nimble six foot plus frame moved in lightening gestures as he brought forth the music from the great symphony unit and the unexceled beauty of the voices of his soloist and Berkshire Festival chorus alike. Indeed Mr. Ross was most fascinating to the music lovers who enjoyed this excellent program under the clear Berkshire evening skies and the cooling breezes that gently floated across Tanglewood.

Following the first number on the program, Mr. Ross was seen keeping the soloists relaxed during the delay caused by the seating of late arrivals which of late have become increasing in numbers and more bothersome to all concerned. Completely calm and patient, the popular composer and conductor brought broad smiles to the faces of the soloists who awaited resumption of the concert.

At the conclusion of this first Mozart number those seated within the theater gave Mr. Ross, the orchestra, soloists and chorus one of the greatest bursts of applause heard here in the history of the Berkshire Musical Festival. It even surpassed that heard at many an intermission or program finale. Out on the broad lawns the overflow crowd leaped to its feet to shout its wholehearted approval. Throughout the audience shouts of "bravo" continued.

On the first recall Mr. Ross very humbly dropped back into the orchestra and applauded his soloists with equal vigor. However upon coming back to the stage in answer to the tumultous applause that continued, he was personally given one of the finest tributes ever given a conductor by a Tanglewood orchestra.

Even at intermission tonight, continual lines of late arrivals streamed through the main gate and purchased general admission tickets with but the privilege of sitting on the lawn some one hundred yards from the concert hall.

July [illegible], 1952

MUNCH LAUNCHES TANGLEWOOD FETE

Conducts Boston Symphony in Berkshire Festival Program —Orchestra Is Honored

By OLIN DOWNES
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 24—Returning from its phenomenally successful spring tour of Europe, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor, gave the opening concert of its Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight in the Music Shed at Tanglewood.

The occasion had a special glamor and festivity. The orchestra, as the writer can testify, was not less on the qui vive than when it first astonished Paris, under Mr. Munch's baton, on May 6. That, too, was an occasion to remember, when one of the most brilliant audiences of years in the French capital was overwhelmed by the style, technical precision and tonal beauty of the famous band.

In a very different environment, one certainly not less beautiful and conducive to the thrill of great music, the Berkshire audience listened tonight to the same orchestra and the same conductor that had set the tongues of aristic Paris wagging overseas.

Special Scroll Presented

There were special ceremonies of welcome. A triumphal arch of greenery has been designed and placed over the gate of the entrance to the grounds by volunteers of Berkshire County. Before the performances of the orchestra, Mayor Robert T. Capeless of Pittsfield was presented to the audience by Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's board of trustees.

Mayor Capeless tendered Mr. Munch a scroll of welcome, handsomely bound and tooled, signed and sealed by the Berkshire County Commissioners.

It said, in part, that the people of Berkshire County saluted the Boston Symphony after its international triumphs; that "as friends and neighbors, we shared the delight, though at a distance, and the unparalleled adulation which greeted this peerless band of musicians on its first tour abroad;" that "this orchestra was a chosen democratic instrument to sound the notes of freedom in an embattled continent," and that "we rejoice that this great ensemble returns to us at Tanglewood to enrich our lives and to glorify in its majestic fashion our beautiful Berkshire hills."

The singers were J. Joseph McCabe, John Henderson and John F. Shea. The document bore the date of the occasion, "Presented at Tanglewood, July 24, 1952."

The two conductors to be heard here, present and past musical directors of the Boston Symphony, directed the opening concerts of the European tour, which it was invited to make by the Congress of Cultural Freedom as the representative of America in the musical field. Their appearances, exactly as in Paris, will be two nights apart.

Two Masterpieces Offered

This evening Mr. Munch selected for his program simply two great masterpieces, the "Eroica" of Beethoven, and the C Minor Symphony of Brahms. This is a different program than that of the Paris opening.

But Pierre Monteux, on Saturday night, will end his concert with Stravinsky's "Sacre du Printemps," the performance of which, in the Champs-Elysees Theatre, under his baton, created a riot in Paris in 1913; the repetition of which, with the Boston Symphony, in the same theatre, on May 8, was acclaimed as few orchestral performances the writer ever witnessed.

Mr. Monteaux could not have brought back with him a more significant work to interpret for the Berkshire audiences than this one. Moreover, the "Sacre" will be one of the highlights of a series of programs that lean heavily to the conservative side.

New York 'TIMES' - July 28, '52

DALLAPICCOLA OPUS IS PLAYED AT LENOX

Ross Leads Boston Symphony in His 'Songs of Captivity'— 'Sacre du Printemps' Given

By OLIN DOWNES
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 27—The Boston Symphony Orchestra's first Sunday afternoon concert of the Berkshire Festival was devoted principally to works of long proved popularity.

The orchestral compositions, conducted by Charles Munch, included the familiar "Symphony Piece" from Cesar Franck's "Redemption," the adorable Symphony in C Major by the youthful Bizet and both the ballet suites from Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe." Done this time, for a rarity, with the choral parts for which the work was originally scored.

The novelty of the program, so far as the festival audiences were concerned, was the first performance here of Luigi Dallapiccola's "Songs of Capticity," for mixed chorus, two pianos, harps and percussion instruments. This performance was under the baton of Hugh Ross, the director and trainer of the Berkhire Music Center Chorus.

This is arresting music. The composer has set his three poems —the Prayer of Mary E. Stuart, the Invocation of Boethius and the Farewell of Girolamo Savonarola —in an idiom that is ultra-modern, which is not so important as the fact that it is also his own.

Whether he persistently follows the doctrine of the twelve-tone scale or not in these pages is beside the point. Whether he is courting public favor in these deeply felt compositions which, in one mood or another, contemplate the mortal end and the fate of the human spirit is, one would say, equally a matter beside the point where Mr. Dallapiccolla is concerned.

Finds Style of His Own

He was written with al lthat is in him, and without imitation of anyone. He is a twelve-toner, but not a doctrinaire. The twelve-tone system sets him free from accepted harmonic boundaries, that is all. He finds a new style of his own.

The poems make in effect a kind of a religious tryptich, each part contrasted in treatment and mood. At an initial hearing, the first poem, the supplication of Mary Stuart, is the surest in style and the most affecting of the three.

It was enough for this writer that some music, new to him, by a young composer of the most sincere and idealistic aims was presented. After the performance, Mr. Dallapiccola was called to the platform to acknowledge the applause of the 8,250 persons in the audience.

The outstanding items of the works conducted by Mr. Munch were the Bizet symphony and the music of Ravel, which was a pleasure to hear in its completeness and with the effective measures of the chorus added to the brilliant ensemble of the instruments.

But the symphony of Bizet, a school-boy symphony in its careful regard for classic form and its dutiful observation of first themes and second themes, sonata and rondo procedure and all the rest of it, is nevertheless a jewel.

The slow movement is of course the height of the work. It is music of far-away lands, dreams, one would say, of distant climes — a very typical outpouring of the romantic period in nineteenth-century France. The audience delighted in this fresh and naive music and in Mr. Munch's delightful performance.

The music of Dallapiccola wasn't the only modern touch of this week-end's programs. At last night's concert, the sensation was the repetition of Stravinsky's "Sacre du Printemps," under Pierre Monteux, who had conducted (1) its première in Paris in 1913, with the riot of public disapproval that was a scandal of the period; (2) the first performance in America, by the Boston Symphony, in 1924; (3) the Paris repetition of the work, with the same orchestra, and in the same theatre that had witnessed the scandalous première, now turned into an uncontrolable demonstration of enthusiasm for the same music, the eighth of last May; (4) and last night, the first performance of the music by the Boston Symphony since its return from the triumph it had in Europe with this and other modern orchestral works.

Two Questions Raised

And now one asks: Just how much of an abiding masterpiece is this audacious and highly dramatic score going to prove to be? Is it a masterpiece in itself, or is it a fiercely transitional work that marks a turning point in the technique of musical composition of the Twentieth Century?

The Monteux performance may have something to do with this question arising in the mind. It is simply unapproachable for its microscopic clarity, precision, authority and control on the conductor's part.

If we are to accept this as the final word in interpretation, we then have to admit that last evening, far from the special and very exciting circumstances of the Paris performance of last May, the music sounded a little pale, a little less kinetic and volcanic and new, than it has usually rung in our ears in late seasons. It was not so with the audience, that long applauded and cheered Mr. Monteux, the orchestra, and beyond doubt the very stimulating music of Stravinsky.

Prior to this, Mr. Monteux conducted a very beautiful performance, of the C Major Symphony of Schubert, technically, harmonically, naïve; apparently, in its chords and sequences, repetitious.

And yet, this symphony, approximately an hour long against Stravinsky's twenty-five minutes, has an incomparable and undismissable freshness, grandeur of form, and winged lyric flight that does not stale upon us even today.

DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS
JUL 13 1952

Rubinstein To Be Berkshire Soloist In Work By Brahms

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass. July 12. — Artur Rubenstein will play the solo in Brahms' Second Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Berkshire Festival Aug. 7. The announcement was made today by Charles Munch, conductor, who made known at the same time other changes in the program and the names of additional Festival soloists. Brahms' Fourth Symphony was included in the July 31 program following receipt by the orchestra of the highest award of the Academie du Disque Francais for its recording of the Brahms work.

Margaret Harshaw, soprano; Charles Kullman, tenor, and James Pease, bass, will be soloists for the Wagner program that Pierre Monteux will conduct Aug. 2. Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor part in Berlioz' "Requiem" in the final festival concert Aug. 10.

Canceling the program listed for Thursday evening, July 31, Munch will conduct instead Faure's incidental music for Pelleas and Melisande and Ballade for Piano and Orchestra, Ravel's Piano Concerto and Brahms Fourth Symphony.

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y
HERALD
7/11/52

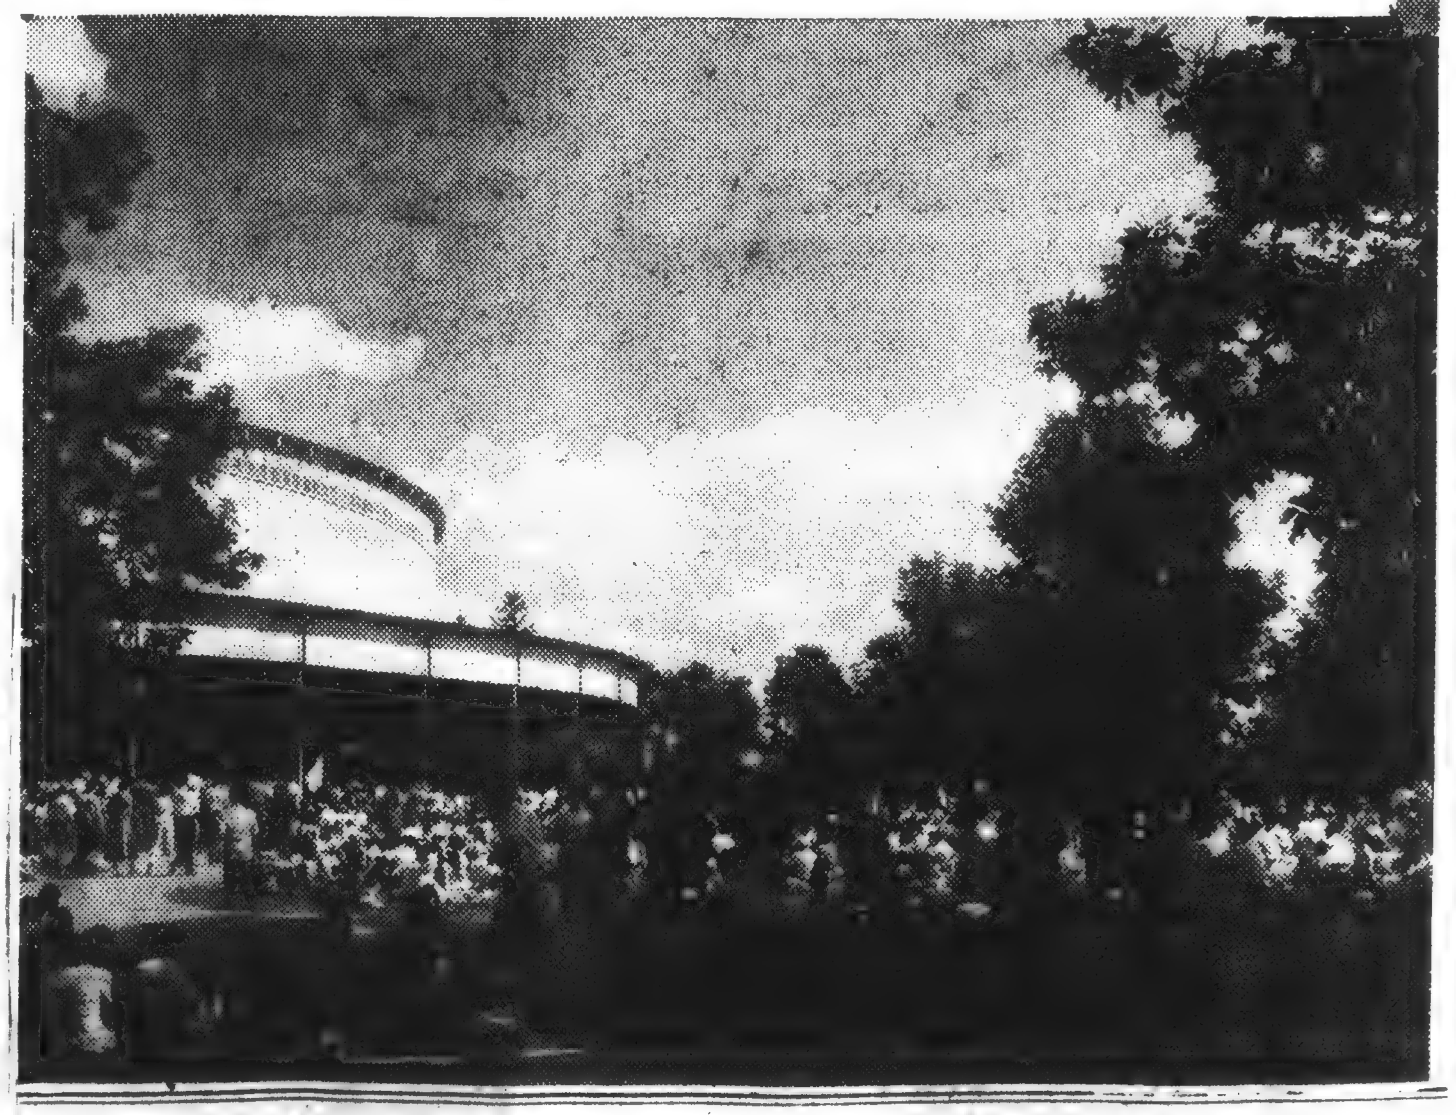
Berkshire Festival Attracting Devotees

Music lovers from Westchester will be making another pilgrimage to Lenox, Mass., to be on hand for the second weekend of the 1952 Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

Charles Munch, successor to the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has not only scheduled a program of the works of Mozart, but he will also take the audience back to Rameau, Couperin, Purcell, Vivaldi and Lalands. During the July 19-20 weekend, Mr. Munch plans to bring the programs forward as late as Schubert's Mass in G Major.

Beginning in answer to [illegible] during the war, these chamber concerts proved the only way Koussevitzky could [illegible] a [illegible] lance of a festival [illegible] they have become [illegible] since 1946, when the [illegible] ton Symphony Orch[illegible] were resumed, the "I[illegible] has always been in[illegible] the big one.

Equally famous, though only in its fifteenth year, is the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Mass. (below right). Technically this is not an open-air event, since the Boston Symphony plays under a huge shed. But since only 6,000 can fit in the shed and another 9,000 sprawl on the grass outside, it is not stretching a point to say that it also is an outdoor affair.



BOSTON SYMPHONY EXCELS IN CONCERT AT TANGLEWOOD

Excellent Weather Draws Large Crowd to Berkshire Festival

By VICTOR PRAHL

Lenox, July 19—For the third Saturday concert by members of the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch here at Tanglewood tonight, favorable weather again prevailed with a large audience extending far out on the lawn and totaling altogether some 4200.

Two Youthful Compos...

The first half of the program consisted of two youthful compositions by Mozart, "A Litaniae" for chorus and the "C Major Piano Concerto." The Litaniae written when the composer was only 16 consisted of eight parts. It is a work of the mind as well as the heart for here the young composer was obviously interested in the form of his composition. In fact, it often suggests an instrumental rather than a vocal work, but in the more expressive, lyrical numbers, one hears the voice that is unmistakably that of the real Mozart. Hugh Ross, directing the Berkshire Festival Chorus, adhered throughout the work to the high standard and the chorus has set in its previous performances this season.

BOSTON SYMPHONY

(Continued From Page 1A)

The chorus was impressive in the full-throated and authoritative manner it sang the opening "Kyrie" and really thrilling in the elaborate coloratura passages of the final "Pignus Futurae." Sara Mae Endich, soprano, Jacqueline Langee, contralto, John McCollum, tenor and Bernard Green, bass, were a finely balanced quartet in their ensemble and short solo passages. Miss Endich's tones were firm and even in her solo "Panis Vivus" and John McCollum showed excellent control in the long, florid phrases of "Panis Omnipotentia."

Lukas Foss was the soloist in Mozart's "Piano Concerto in C Major." He gave the extended passages of the first movement a purity of articulation and general technical perfection that bespoke the perfect Mozart style. We have remarked before on this young pianist's ability to identify himself completely with the music. This was evident again in the Andante where the piano carries the solo part simply in a single melodic line above the colorful accompaniment of the orchestra. Here the two were welded as one in an expression that was truly exquisite. After the lilting finale, the pianist received a rousing ovation which was shared deservedly by Mr. Munch and the members of the orchestra.

The second half consisted of Schubert's "Mass No. 2 in G Major" which will be repeated at tomorrow's concert when in addition there will be two symphonies by Haydn, "No. 99 in E Flat" and "No. 86 in D Major."

Record Crowd of 4200 At Tanglewood

Lenox, July 19—Both the charm and casualness of conductor Hugh Ross caught the imagination of the estimated 4200 in attendance at tonight's Mozart-Schubert concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the theater concert hall here on the grounds of Tanglewood. The crowd was said to be the biggest in history. He caught both the eye and ear of his vast audience at the very outset of Mozart's "Litaniae De Venerabile Altaris Sacramento" as he rested his left hand on his hip and used his long thin right forefinger as his baton.

His nimble six foot plus frame moved in lightening gestures as he brought forth the music from the great symphony unit and the unexcelled beauty of the voices of his soloist and Berkshire Festival chorus alike. Indeed Mr. Ross was most fascinating to the music lovers who enjoyed this excellent program under the clear Berkshire evening skies and the cooling breezes that gently floated across Tanglewood.

Following the first number on the program, Mr. Ross was seen keeping the soloists relaxed during the delay caused by the seating of late arrivals which of late have become increasing in numbers and more bothersome to all concerned. Completely calm and patient, the popular composer and conductor brought broad smiles to the faces of the soloists who awaited resumption of the concert.

At the conclusion of this first Mozart number those seated within the theater gave Mr. Ross, the orchestra, soloists and chorus one of the greatest bursts of applause heard here in the history of the Berkshire Musical Festival. It even surpassed that heard at many an intermission or program finale. Out on the broad lawns the overflow crowd leaped to its feet to shout its wholehearted approval. Throughout the audience shouts of "bravo" continued.

On the first recall Mr. Ross very humbly dropped back into the orchestra and applauded his soloists with equal vigor. However upon coming back to the stage in answer to the tumultous applause that continued, he was personally given one of the finest tributes ever given a conductor by a Tanglewood orchestra.

Even at intermission tonight, continual lines of late arrivals streamed through the main gate and purchased general admission tickets with but the privilege of sitting on the lawn some one hundred yards from the concert hall.

July 25, 1952

AMUSEMENTS

MUNCH LAUNCHES TANGLEWOOD FETE

Conducts Boston Symphony in Berkshire Festival Program —Orchestra Is Honored

By OLIN DOWNES

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 24—Returning from its phenomenally successful spring tour of Europe, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor, gave the opening concert of its Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight in the Music Shed at Tanglewood.

The occasion had a special glamor and festivity. The orchestra, as the writer can testify, was not less on the qui vive than when it first astonished Paris, under Mr. Munch's baton, on May 6. That, too, was an occasion to remember, when one of the most brilliant audiences of years in the French capital was overwhelmed by the style, technical precision and tonal beauty of the famous band.

In a very different environment, one certainly not less beautiful and conducive to the thrill of great music, the Berkshire audience listened tonight to the same orchestra and the same conductor that had set the tongues of aristic Paris wagging overseas.

Special Scroll Presented

There were special ceremonies of welcome. A triumphal arch of greenery has been designed and placed over the gate of the entrance to the grounds by volunteers of Berkshire County. Before the performances of the orchestra, Mayor Robert T. Capeless of Pittsfield was presented to the audience by Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's board of trustees.

Mayor Capeless tendered Mr. Munch a scroll of welcome, handsomely bound and tooled, signed and sealed by the Berkshire County Commissioners.

It said, in part, that the people of Berkshire County saluted the Boston Symphony after its international triumphs; that "as friends and neighbors, we shared the delight, though at a distance, and the unparalleled adulation which greeted this peerless band of musicians on its first tour abroad;" that "this orchestra was a chosen democratic instrument to sound the notes of freedom in an embattled continent," and that "we rejoice that this great ensemble returns to us at Tanglewood to enrich our lives and to glorify in its majestic fashion our beautiful Berkshire hills."

The singers were J. Joseph McCabe, John Henderson and John F. Shea. The document bore the date of the occasion, "Presented at Tanglewood, July 24, 1952."

The two conductors to be heard here, present and past musical directors of the Boston Symphony, directed the opening concerts of the European tour, which it was invited to make by the Congress of Cultural Freedom as the representative of America in the musical field. Their appearances, exactly as in Paris, will be two nights apart.

Two Masterpieces Offered

This evening Mr. Munch selected for his program simply two great masterpieces, the "Eroica" of Beethoven, and the C Minor Symphony of Brahms. This is a different program than that of the Paris opening.

But Pierre Monteux, on Saturday night, will end his concert with Stravinsky's "Sacre du Printemps," the performance of which, in the Champs-Elysees Theatre, under his baton, created a riot in Paris in 1913; the repetition of which, with the Boston Symphony, in the same theatre, on May 8, was acclaimed as few orchestral performances the writer ever witnessed.

Mr. Monteaux could not have brought back with him a more significant work to interpret for the Berkshire audiences than this one. Moreover, the "Sacre" will be one of the highlights of a series of programs that lean heavily to the conservative side.

New York Times – July 28, '52

AMUSEMENTS

DALLAPICCOLA OPUS IS PLAYED AT LENOX

Ross Leads Boston Symphony in His 'Songs of Captivity'— 'Sacre du Printemps' Given

By OLIN DOWNES

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 27—The Boston Symphony Orchestra's first Sunday afternoon concert of the Berkshire Festival was devoted principally to works of long proved popularity.

The orchestral compositions, conducted by Charles Munch, included the familiar "Symphony Piece" from Cesar Franck's "Redemption," the adorable Symphony in C Major by the youthful Bizet and both the ballet suites from Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe." Done this time, for a rarity, with the choral parts for which the work was originally scored.

The novelty of the program, so far as the festival audiences were concerned, was the first performance here of Luigi Dallapiccola's "Songs of Capticity," for mixed chorus, two pianos, harps and percussion instruments. This performance was under the baton of Hugh Ross, the director and trainer of the Berkhire Music Center Chorus.

This is arresting music. The composer has set his three poems —the Prayer of Mary E. Stuart, the Invocation of Boethius and the Farewell of Girolamo Savonarola —in an idiom that is ultra-modern, which is not so important as the fact that it is also his own.

Whether he persistently follows the doctrine of the twelve-tone scale or not in these pages is beside the point. Whether he is courting public favor in these deeply felt compositions which, in one mood or another, contemplate the mortal end and the fate of the human spirit is, one would say, equally a matter beside the point where Mr. Dallapiccolla is concerned.

Finds Style of His Own

He was written with al lthat is in him, and without imitation of anyone. He is a twelve-toner, but not a doctrinaire. The twelve-tone system sets him free from accepted harmonic boundaries, that is all. He finds a new style of his own.

The poems make in effect a kind of a religious tryptich, each part contrasted in treatment and mood. At an initial hearing, the first poem, the supplication of Mary Stuart, is the surest in style and the most affecting of the three.

It was enough for this writer that some music, new to him, by a young composer of the most sincere and idealistic aims was presented. After the performance, Mr. Dallapiccola was called to the platform to acknowledge the applause of the 8,250 persons in the audience.

The outstanding items of the works conducted by Mr. Munch were the Bizet symphony and the music of Ravel, which was a pleasure to hear in its completeness and with the effective measures of the chorus added to the brilliant ensemble of the instruments.

But the symphony of Bizet, a school-boy symphony in its careful regard for classic form and its dutiful observation of first themes and second themes, sonata and rondo procedure and all the rest of it, is nevertheless a jewel.

The slow movement is of course the height of the work. It is music of far-away lands, dreams, one would say, of distant climes—a very typical outpouring of the romantic period in nineteenth-century France. The audience delighted in this fresh and naive music and in Mr. Munch's delightful performance.

The music of Dallapiccola wasn't the only modern touch of this week-end's programs. At last night's concert, the sensation was the repetition of Stravinsky's "Sacre du Printemps," under Pierre Monteux, who had conducted (1) its première in Paris in 1913, with the riot of public disapproval that was a scandal of the period; (2) the first performance in America, by the Boston Symphony, in 1924; (3) the Paris repetition of the work, with the same orchestra, and in the same theatre that had witnessed the scandalous première, now turned into an uncontrolable demonstration of enthusiasm for the same music, the eighth of last May; (4) and last night the first performance of the music by the Boston Symphony since its return from the triumph it had in Europe with this and other modern orchestral works.

Two Questions Raised

And now one asks: Just how much of an abiding masterpiece is this audacious and highly dramatic score going to prove to be? Is it a masterpiece in itself, or is it a fiercely transitional work that marks a turning point in the technique of musical composition of the Twentieth Century?

The Monteux performance may have something to do with this question arising in the mind. It is simply unapproachable for its microscopic clarity, precision, authority and control on the conductor's part.

If we are to accept this as the final word in interpretation, we then have to admit that last evening, far from the special and very exciting circumstances of the Paris performance of last May, the music sounded a little pale, a little less kinetic and volcanic and new, than it has usually rung in our ears in late seasons. It was not so with the audience, that long applauded and cheered Mr. Monteux, the orchestra, and beyond doubt the very stimulating music of Stravinsky.

Prior to this, Mr. Monteux conducted a very beautiful performance, of the C Major Symphony of Schubert, technically, harmonically, naïve; apparently, in its chords and sequences, repetitious.

And yet, this symphony, approximately an hour long against Stravinsky's twenty-five minutes, has an incomparable and undismissable freshness, grandeur of form, and winged lyric flight that does not stale upon us even today.

DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS
JUL 13 1952

Rubinstein To Be Berkshire Soloist In Work By Brahms

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass., July 12.—Artur Rubenstein will play the solo in Brahms' Second Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Berkshire Festival Aug. 7. The announcement was made today by Charles Munch, conductor, who made known at the same time other changes in the program and the names of additional Festival soloists. Brahms' Fourth Symphony was included in the July 31 program following receipt by the orchestra of the highest award of the Academie du Disque Francais for its recording of the Brahms work.

Margaret Harshaw, soprano; Charles Kullman, tenor, and James Pease, bass, will be soloists for the Wagner program that Pierre Monteux will conduct Aug. 2. Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor part in Berlioz' "Requiem" in the final festival concert Aug. 10.

Canceling the program listed for Thursday evening, July 31, Munch will conduct instead Faure's incidental music for Pelleas and Melisande and Ballade for Piano and Orchestra, Ravel's Piano Concerto and Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y
HERALD
7/19/52

Berkshire Festival Attracting Devotees

Music lovers from Westchester will be making another pilgrimage to Lenox, Mass., to be on hand for the second weekend of the 1952 Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

Charles Munch, successor to the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has not only scheduled a program of the works of Mozart, but he will also take the audience back to Rameau, Couperin, Purcell, Vivaldi and Lalands. During the July 19-20 weekend, Mr. Munch plans to ring the programs forward as late as Schubert's Mass in G Major

Beginning in answer to need during the war, these chamber concerts proved the only way Dr. Koussevitzky could keep a semlance of a festival going. Today, they have become traditional and, since 1946, when the full scale Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts were resumed, the "Little Festival" has always been incorporated in the big one.

Equally famous, though only in its fifteenth year, is the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Mass. (below right). Technically this is not an open-air event, since the Boston Symphony plays under a huge shed. But since only 6,000 can fit in the shed and another 9,000 sprawl on the grass outside, it is not stretching a point to say that it also is an outdoor affair.

NYHT 7/20/52

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
ARK. DEMOCRAT

JUL 13 1952

Arkansan First Woman to Direct Opera Company

Staging for a New England Opera Theatre production is discussed by: (left to right) Leo Van Witsen, costumer; Sarah Caldwell; Barbara Lawthers, scenic designer, and Boris Goldovsky.

Sarah Caldwell.

Sarah Caldwell, U. of A. Graduate, Left Fayetteville in 1942 to Study Violin With Richard Burgin of Boston Symphony

By HELEN YVONNE HUGHES

IF SUCCESS can be measured by the number of times one's name and photograph appear in newspapers—and in the world of music it can—then a former University of Arkansas student is having a highly successful career.

But Sarah Caldwell isn't having the kind of success classmates predicted for her 10 years ago when she trudged around the university campus with a violin case tucked under one arm.

She didn't achieve fame dreamed of by her parents, Dr. Henry Alexander, chairman of the department of political science at the university, and Mrs. Alexander.

Sarah herself didn't have the remotest idea she would undertake her present career back in the days when she was studying violin and music theory at the university. She wanted to become a concert viloinist. Instead, she became the first woman ever to direct a professional opera company.

When she left Arkansas in 1942 to study violin with Richard Burgin, concert master of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Sarah disliked opera. But one day she was persuaded to visit an opera class taught by Boris Goldovsky at the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston. The noted director of the New England Opera Theater and commentator of the Metropolitan Opera broadcasts then replaced violinist Fritz Kreisler as her ideal musician, and he soon persuaded her to devote her talents to opera rather than to violin.

★ ★ ★

She has had no reason to regret following Goldovsky's advice. Instead of traveling constantly around the country, playing the same program again and again to the point of boredom, she is having a varied and incessantly interesting career.

She holds several jobs simultaneously. She is Goldovsky's assistant in the opera department of the New England Conservatory of Music, and both his assistant and the chorus master of the New England Opera Theater.

For several summers she has been Goldovsky's assistant in the opera department at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, and she is his assistant and chorus master for the annual Worcester, Mass., Music Festival.

Sarah founded and is now director of the Opera Workshop of Boston University, where the college of music has 10,000 students.

"All honor must go to Sarah Caldwell for her conducting, English translation and direction," a Boston Herald critic said this February after a Boston University workshop production of two comic one-act operas, Martinu's "Comedy on the Bridge" and Puccini's "The Cloak." Conducting, directing and translating are the three fields in which she won distinction in the music world.

In 1949, Sarah became the first woman ever to mount the podium at the Worcester Music Festival. Breaking a 90-year-old tradition, she conducted both a chorus and an orchestra made up of Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra musicians in one of the programs of the week-long festival.

★ ★

One Sunday afternoon in December, 1950, she again made huge headlines. She became the first woman ever to direct a professional opera company when she conducted and staged Mozart's "Violanta" for the New England Opera Theater. She had revised the plot and translated the opera. New dialogues in English were by another Arkansan, Eugene Haun of Little Rock.

In June of this year, Sarah staged Benjamin Britten's "Rape of Lucretia" for the Opera Futures Workshop in New York City. When the work had its American premiere at Tanglewood three years ago, she assisted Goldovsky in directing it. A New York Times critic said of the recent New York production: "Sarah Caldwell managed to get all her players acting in a uniform manner. The groupings were good and the stylization of the gestures was effective."

"An intriguing evening" is a typical write-up of an opera she has directed. Perhaps this is because she feels opera must first of all be a good show; it must be good theater, intensified by good music. She sees to it that costumes and scenery add to the production's effectiveness.

Sarah's sparkling translations have won many a critic's praise.

★ ★ ★

"How Sarah Caldwell manages to make this libretto—a staple of Elizabethan plays incidentally—seem like one of the funniest things I've ever heard will have to remain a mystery," remarked one critic after a Boston University Opera Workshop production of the Jacques Ibert opera, "Angelique," in April. "Her staging, stylized and overblown, her colloquial dialogue, impudent and direct, provide a wonderfully ironic contrast to a work that reminds me of an old silent movie with a nickelodeon accompaniment."

★ ★ ★

Sarah has translated numerous Italian and French operas, both alone and in collaboration with Goldovsky, since all public performances of the workshops and the New England Opera Theater are given in English. Many of the operas presented have never been translated before, and new translations are made of others. It isn't easy to translate Italian and French into colloquial Engilsh and to make the words fit the music; but Sarah manages to do this and, in addition, to inject wit into her translations.

Sarah has yet to translate a German opera. She doesn't speak the language, and says she hopes American singers don't get hefty enough to sing Wagner before she has time to learn German.

Although public performances are given in English, opera workshop students must learn the operas both in Engilsh and in the language in which the operas were written. Since she has worked on the translations, Sarah knows every word in every opera and she directs in both languages, and can give singers a cue without looking at the score. She also gives stage directions in the language in which the opera is being done at the moment.

Part of the Boston University Opera Workshops performances are done without orchestra, using only piano accompaniment. "Opera in shirtsleeves," as this type of production has been called, has proved as entertaining to Bostonians as opera in ermine.

Goldovsky calls Sarah "my right hand." He told her mother, back in 1949 when she conducted for the first time at the Worcester Music Festival: "Sarah's gone far since she left Fayetteville, but she's going farther still." And, even though it seems impossible, a pioneering artist like Sarah undoubtedly will find greater heights to climb.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 14 1952

SOLOISTS who appeared Saturday night in a performance of Lalande's motet "De Profundis" at Tanglewood included Hartford's Betty Lou Allen, second from right. Others are: left to right, Shirley Winston, mezzo-soprano; Sarah Fleming, soprano; Richard Sharretts, bass; Miss Allen, contralto, and John McCollum, tenor. Hugh Ross conducted.

THERE was a weekend of gracious music played with consummate skill and lots of spirit Saturday and Sunday at Tanglewood, outside of Lenox, Mass.

The two programs merit the word gracious because they featured music by Rameau, Couperin, Purcell, Vivaldi and Lalande on Saturday and the last three Mozart symphonies on Sunday.

* * *

THE GRACE of this baroque music comes from the fact that it has nothing to say; it does not attempt to exalt the listener with the great chords of spiritual turbulence.

It was designed to be listened to for the sheer delight of formal and tonal beauty, and it was in this eminently just and proper spirit that Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony succeeded in ma~~king the week~~end a shimmering experience.

Saturday's concert opened with two French suites, one by Rameau drawn from his opera "Dardanus," one by Couperin Le Grand titled "Concert in the Theatrical Style."

* * *

BOTH OF these works are made up of short bits of dances, each with its own climax, and exquisite though they are, there are 15 in all. That's quite a large number of short dances, and after a while, the listener tends to get lost.

A pavane and four fantasias including the famous Fantasia On One Note by Purcell were given a warm, sweet reading by Mr. Munch and the orchestra, while the Lalande "De Profundis," conducted by Hugh Ross, proved to be a moving, persuasive work. It was admirably sung by the Berkshire Festival Chorus.

* * *

BETTY LOU ALLEN, the Hartford contralto, was listed as a soloist in this work. She had approximately five or six notes to sing as part of a quintet, hardly enough to bear judgment.

The most impressive work of the weekend, superior even to the Mozart, was Mr. Munch's breathtaking version of Vivaldi's Concerto Grosso in D Minor, the eleventh in the opus known as "L'Estro Harmonico."

This was a volatile, spell-binding conception of a magnificent work. It is music that might have been composed yesterday as far as Mr. Munch and the orchestra were concerned, for they did not reproduce a piece of 18th Century music, they re-created a living, breathing inspiration with crystalline brilliance and style. I doubt if the concerto has ever been played so well.

Well played, too, were the last three symphonies of Mozart—the 39th and 40th and 41st—Sunday afternoon.

It may seem to some that there never could be enough Mozart on any program, but this listener found that perhaps there can be.

* * *

MR. MUNCH and the orchestra, with special commendation going to Richard Burgin and his string section, gave each piece a gleaming tonal surface. They also put great gusto into the stirring Menuetto movements, particularly into the ones in the 39th and 40th.

Unfortunately, the three symphonies are much alike in conception and tone, and it is little wonder that even with familiarity they eventually begin to sound a bit repititious.

Nevertheless, Saturday's huge audience and Sunday's large one seemed to find both programs a source of immeasurable delight. I did too. —E. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
JUL 13 1952

Rubinstein Signed For Tanglewood Concert Series

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASS.—Artur Rubinstein will play the solo in Brahms' Second Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire ~~Festival~~, Aug. 7. The announcement was made by Charles Munch, conductor, who made known at the same time other changes in the program and the names of additional festival soloists. Brahms' Fourth Symphony was included in the July 31 program following the receipt by the orchestra of the highest award of the Academie du Disque Francais for its recording of the Brahms work.

Margaret Harshaw, soprano, Charles Kullman, tenor, and James Pease, bass, will be soloists for the Wagner program that Pierre Monteux will conduct Aug. 2. Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor part in Berlioz' "Requiem" in the final festival concert, Aug. 10.

Canceling the program listed for Thursday evening, July 31, Mr. Munch will conduct instead Faure's Incidental Music for "Pelleas and Melisande" and Ballade for Piano and Orchestra, Ravel's Piano Concerto and Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
JUL 22 1952

Tanglewood Offers
3 One-Act Operas

Three one-act operas will be given tonight in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood under direction of Boris Goldovsky.

They will be "The Incas of Peru" from Rameau's "Indes Galantes," Donizetti's "Don Pasquale" and Jacques Ibert's "Angelique." The program is open to members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, which consists of those who contribute in any amount to the support of the center.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 14 1952

Tanglewood Concert Offers Mozart's Works

Crowd of 3300 Hears Munch Direct Boston Symphony

MOZART HONORED IN 2ND WEEK AT TANGLEWOOD

By PEGGY MUNOZ

Cold storage music was again the offering of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Charles Munch last week-end at Tanglewood. Despite the conductor's continual attempts to inject a little life and warmth into his interpretations of the 17th and 18th century music which made up the programs, his musicians appeared to be rather bored by the entire proceedings, unresponsive to both baton and scores and altogether unsatisfactory performers of some of the most delightful and, in the case of Mozart, the greatest music that has ever been written.

On Saturday evening we first heard a lovely suite from the Opera "Dardanus" by Jean Philippe Rameau, who could never have been such a dull old sobersides as the Boston Orchestra made him. Technical imperfections, such as ragged entrances, the lack of uniformity in bowing, etc., were also marring elements although the sonority of the string ensemble was as usual magnificently colored.

"Concert dans le gout theatral," a series of divertimenti sketches by Couperin, was performed with an equal lack of wit and sparkle, almost completely devoid of theatrical effects and often rhythmically off in the wood wind section. Nor was the great beauty and skillful writing of Purcell's "Fantasies for Strings" particularly in evidence. However, we could not help but be delighted at the elegant way in which the composer set off an intricate flow of counterpoint against one long note played by the violas in the last section of the Purcell piece.

Dr. Munch finally tightened the reins during the Vivaldi Concerto Grosso in D Minor, which emerged as the great masterpiece that it is. The Maestoso was alive with definite statements of elaborate barroque wit; the Largo lingered in beauty as the conductor savored every note of flowing poetry; and the Allegro sparkled with the brilliance of Vivaldi's rare genius.

Lalande's "De Profundis," a Motet for solo voices, chorus and orchestra, was the final offering of the evening. Hugh Ross, whose student chorus showed a tremendous improvement in accuracy, spirit and balance, conducted; while the second viola player appeared to have dozed until a nudge from his companion reminded him to make his entrance four bars late the second section of the work and the concertmaster led the first violins into the tenor solo where only the flute and a bass continuo were supposed to be accompanying. Under such harrowing circumstances, Mr. Ross is to be congratulated on the results that he did obtain.

Soloists for the Lalande work included Sarah Fleming, soprano; Shirley Winston, mezzo; Betty Allen, alto; John McCollum, tenor; and Richard Sharretts, bass, all of whom were adequate but not exciting.

Sunday afternoon at Tanglewood was devoted entirely to three great symphonies of Mozart—the E-flat major, the G "Jupiter." Although the musicians appeared to be in a more serious and workmanlike frame of mind forthis program, the first two symphonies appeared much too heavy and cold for Mozart. There was no sense of enjoyment in the playing, very little humor or poetry, and certainly a lack of respons to Dr. Munch's indications by facial expression and baton gestures of what he wanted, all of which we were privileged to see from our seat on the stage behind the orchestra. Only the Trios in all three symphonies were performed with real love and musicality. The rest was precise, in excellent taste, and dry as a bone.

Mozart finally came into his own, however, in the "Jupiter" Symphony, which was brilliant, to a certain extent inspired, and fully deserved the enthusiastic applause which followed the final chord.

icacy and surprise within the scor Mr. Munch has seldom seemed mo akin to music than he did today a he read these three Mozart symphonies.

Charming Experience

The concert Saturday night was charming experience. There w much gracious, gentle music by composers who wrote more to entertai than anything else. Rameau, Couperin, Purcell and Vivaldi, giants their day, knew the art of entertaining. LaLande's "De Profundi a motet for chorus and five soloist with orchestra, was conducted Hugh Ross. The performance, far as chorus was concerned wel well. The soloists and orchestra we not always together and there w a feeling that so demanding a wo should have had longer preparatio

The soloists were Sarah Flemin and Shirley Winston, sopranos; Betty Lou Allen, alto; John McCollun tenor and Richard Sharretts, bas Mrs. Sharretts was by far the best the soloists.

The program for Saturday nigh July 19, will open with the Mozar "Litanie," (K.125); the "Concerto i C Major for Piano and Orchestra by Mozart, with Lukas Foss at th piano; and Schubert's "Mass No. 2 i G Major."

Sunday afternoon, the final conc of the series, will include two Hay Symphonies, Nos. 99 and 8 and a repetition of the Schubert Mass

---

Crowd of 26,500 at F
For First Series in th

TANGLEWOOD — Attendance records for the first series of concerts in the Music Shed at Tanglewood were broken over the week end with a crowd of 26,500 turning out for the three programs.

Saturday night's crowd of 10,050 was the largest single concert audience thus far this season. It compared to 8800 on the same night a year ago.

Thursday evening and Sunday afternoon 8250 attended each concert. The total for the first series last year was 25,450.

This morning the Boston Symphony Orchestra management expressed its "satisfaction and apprecition" with the handling of the heavy traffic following the first two evening concerts of the Berkshire Festival.

James A. Brosnahan, orchestra treasurer, stated that with more than 10,000 persons attending Saturday's program, the cars had left the parking lots quickly and with a minimum of waiting. He said that as he stood on the corner of the monument in Lenox center he was impressed by the speed with which West Street, the main route from Tanglewood cleared, and out at the mo

Mr. Brosna ficient opera Lenox and th men, James officio chief Massachusett charge of th headed by O'Leary and the Northam Western Massachusetts.

OTTAWA, CANADA
CITIZEN
JUL 12 1952

Music A

Edited by L

New York Round-Up

Now Need 3,
For N.Y. Ph

By Irving Kolodin

NEW YORK — It's not ofte

The 10th year of activity at Tanglewood, Mass., began this week (July 5-12) with more than 400 students from 16 countries enrolled in the Berkshire Music Center. To the general public it is the summer-long concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra that ~~make~~ the green acres that once housed Nathaniel Hawthorne a happy place to be, but the school's the thing for those who supervise the whole activity. Among the new students this year will be Christopher von Dohnanyi, grandson of the composer of the favorite Variations on a Nursery Theme. He's ambitious for a career as a conductor.

Yvonne Leroux

Charles Kullman, tenor, will be one of the soloists for the Wagner program to be conducted by Pierre Monteux at Tanglewood Saturday evening, Aug. 2. Christian [illegible] Monitor

---

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK CITY
JUL 19 1952

IN THE COUNTRY

Berkshire Festival—The Boston Symphony—Saturday, July 19, at 8:15: Charles Münch conducting, with Lucas Foss, piano. . . . ¶ Sunday, July 20, at 3: Charles Münch conducting. . . . ¶ Thursday, July 24, at 8:15: Charles Münch conducting. . . . ¶ Saturday, July 26, at 8:15: Pierre Monteux conducting. . . . ¶ Sunday, July 27, at 3: Charles Münch conducting. (Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The Festival will continue through Sunday, Aug. 10.)

Music Mountain—The Berkshire Quartet in a series of chamber-music concerts. (Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn. Sundays and Friday, July 18, at 4; performances will continue through Sunday, Sept. 7.)

South Mountain—The Juilliard String Quartet. (South Mountain, Pittsfield, Mass. Saturday, July 26, at 4.)

New Haven Pop Concerts—Harry Berman conducting the New Haven Symphony Orchestra, with Sarah Vaughan, blues singer. (Yale Bowl, New Haven. Tuesday, July 22, at 8:15.)

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 14 1952

SOLOISTS who appeared Saturday night in a performance of Lalande's motet "De Profundis" at Tanglewood included Hartford's Betty Lou Allen, second from right. Others are: left to right, Shirley Winston, mezzo-soprano; Sarah Fleming, soprano; Richard Sharretts, bass; Miss Allen, contralto, and John McCollum, tenor. Hugh Ross conducted.

THERE was a weekend of gracious music played with consummate skill and lots of spirit Saturday and Sunday at Tanglewood, outside of Lenox, Mass.

The two programs merit the word gracious because they featured music by Rameau, Couperin, Purcell, Vivaldi and Lalande on Saturday and the last three Mozart symphonies on Sunday.

* * *

THE GRACE of this baroque music comes from the fact that it has nothing to say; it does not attempt to exalt the listener with the great chords of spiritual turbulence.

It was designed to be listened to for the sheer delight of formal and tonal beauty, and it was in this eminently just and proper spirit that Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony succeeded in ma~~king the wee~~kend a shimmering experience.

Saturday's concert opened with two French suites, one by Rameau drawn from his opera "Dardanus," one by Couperin Le Grand titled "Concert in the Theatrical Style."

* * *

BOTH OF these works are made up of short bits of dances, each with its own climax, and exquisite though they are, there are 15 in all. That's quite a large number of short dances, and after a while, the listener tends to get lost.

A pavane and four fantasias including the famous Fantasia On One Note by Purcell were given a warm, sweet reading by Mr. Munch and the orchestra, while the Lalande "De Profundis," conducted by Hugh Ross, proved to be a moving, persuasive work. It was admirably sung by the Berkshire Festival Chorus.

* * *

BETTY LOU ALLEN, the Hartford contralto, was listed as a soloist in this work. She had approximately five or six notes to sing as part of a quintet, hardly enough to bear judgment.

The most impressive work of the weekend, superior even to the Mozart, was Mr. Munch's breathtaking version of Vivaldi's Concerto Grosso in D Minor, the eleventh in the opus known as "L'Estro Harmonico."

This was a volatile, spell-binding conception of a magnificent work. It is music that might have been composed yesterday as far as Mr. Munch and the orchestra were concerned, for they did not reproduce a piece of 18th Century music, they re-created a living, breathing inspiration with crystalline brilliance and style. I doubt if the concerto has ever been played so well.

Well played, too, were the last three symphonies of Mozart—the 39th and 40th and 41st—Sunday afternoon.

It may seem to some that there never could be enough Mozart on any program, but this listener found that perhaps there can be.

* * *

MR. MUNCH and the orchestra, with special commendation going to Richard Burgin and his string section, gave each piece a gleaming tonal surface. They also put great gusto into the stirring Menuetto movements, particularly into the ones in the 39th and 40th.

Unfortunately, the three symphonies are much alike in conception and tone, and it is little wonder that even with familiarity they eventually begin to sound a bit repititious.

Nevertheless, Saturday's huge audience and Sunday's large one seemed to find both programs a source of immeasurable delight. I did too. —E. C.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 14 1952

Tanglewood Concert Offers Mozart's Works

Crowd of 3300 Hears Munch Direct Boston Symphony In Sunday Program

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Tanglewood, Lenox, July 13—One of the best ways to spend a pleasant Sunday afternoon is listening to great music performed by a great orchestra conducted by a sensitive and skilled director.

That appeared to be the opinion of some 3300 other people this afternoon who wended their way to Tanglewood to come under the spell of Mozart, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Charles Munch.

Last night 3200 people made the journey to hear the Boston Symphony players and Mr. Munch in a program of music by Rameau, Couperin, Purcell and Vivaldi, plus a motet for solo voices and chorus by LaLande which was sung by the chorus and soloists under Hugh Ross.

Mozart, more than any composer offers a limitless span of listening pleasure. His consistent beauty o melody and line; his ingenious handling of every phrase and his superb craftsmanship combine to produce works as alive and sparkling to day as the day they were written.

Throws Off Shackles

Yet Mozart had to eke out a living by writing works for all sort of people and occasions. That is, h did until the summer of 1788 whe he threw off the shackles and wrot his three final symphonies, the lovely "E Flat," the impassioned "G Minor" and the towering "Jupitor. Those were the symphonies hear this afternoon.

Mr. Munch and the orchestra wer in fine spirits and the performance of the three works were a shee listening delight. As one thinks upo them, one remembers particularly t gracious beauty of the andante the E Flat symphony; the glitterin light-hearted opening of the G Min symphony, not unlike the overtu to the "Magic Flute," and the san symphony's forthright, incisive meuetto.

The "Symphony in C Major," better known as the "Jupitor" was give a performance worthy of its nan Mr. Munch sensed and communicaed the rugged individualism of t music, its martial quality and hi spirits. One heard, in fact, the perfect wedding of a great orchest playing great music. The performance was on the grand scale, yet recognized every nuance, every deicacy and surprise within the scor Mr. Munch has seldom seemed mo akin to music than he did today a he read these three Mozart symphonies.

Charming Experience

The concert Saturday night was charming experience. There wa much gracious, gentle music by composers who wrote more to entertai than anything else. Rameau, Couperin, Purcell and Vivaldi, giants their day, knew the art of entetaining. LaLande's "De Profundis a motet for chorus and five soloist with orchestra, was conducted Hugh Ross. The performance far as chorus was concerned, we well. The soloists and orchestra we not always together and there wa a feeling that so demanding a wo should have had longer preparatio

The soloists were Sarah Flemin and Shirley Winston, sopranos; Betty Lou Allen, alto; John McCollun tenor and Richard Sharretts, bas Mrs. Sharretts was by far the best the soloists.

The program for Saturday nigh July 19, will open with the Mozar "Litanie," (K.125); the "Concerto i C Major for Piano and Orchestra, by Mozart, with Lukas Foss at th piano; and Schubert's "Mass No. 2 i G Major."

Sunday afternoon, the final conce of the series, will include two Hayd Symphonies, Nos. 99 and 88 and a repetition of the Schubert Mass.

Overflow Audience At Tanglewood

Lenox, July 13—Disregarding th broiling sun, an overflow audience 3300 attended this afternoon's al Mozart program in the theater concert hall at Tanglewood. In contrast to last week end, this afternoon's program outdrew the Saturday night program given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Charles Munch. But 3200 listened to the program of varied works under the clear cool skies of Saturday night. Yet the total attendance for the two week end concerts has now surpassed the 6500 figure.

Unlike last Sunday afternoon, today's overflow crowd braved the brilliant rays of the sun and laid on blankets on the lawn to hale both the delightful music of Mozart and the gentle Berkshire air that periodically blew across Tanglewood from neighboring Stockbridge bowl.

Tomorrow night, an evening of opera scenes will be offered to friends of th. Berkshire Music Center at the theater while on Tuesday evening the program will feature the small choir.

The Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge concerts will continue on Wednesday night with a program of sonatas. Janos Scholz will be featured on the violoncello with Miklos Schwalb at the piano. The departmental orchestra will give a concert in the shed on Friday night. All midweek programs start at 8.15.

Next week end will see the conclusion of these small concerts in the theater concert hall with the main Berkshire Festival scheduled to open in the huge music shed on Thursday night, July 24th.

Next Saturday evening's program will consist of works of Haydn and Schubert.

Crowd of 26,500 at Festival For First Series in the Shed

TANGLEWOOD — Attendance records for the first series of concerts in the Music Shed at Tanglewood were broken over the week end with a crowd of 26,500 turning out for the three programs.

Saturday night's crowd of 10,050 was the largest single concert audience thus far this season. It compared to 8800 on the same night a year ago.

Thursday evening and Sunday afternoon 8250 attended each concert. The total for the first series last year was 25,450.

This morning the Boston Symphony Orchestra management expressed its "satisfaction and apprecition" with the handling of the heavy traffic following the first two evening concerts of the Berkshire Festival.

James A. Brosnahan, orchestra treasurer, stated that with more than 10,000 persons attending Saturday's program, the cars had left the parking lots quickly and with a minimum of waiting. He said that as he stood on the corner of the monument in Lenox center he was impressed by the speed with which West Street, the main route from Tanglewood east and north, was cleared, and the efficient fanning out at the monument by the police.

Mr. Brosnahan attributed the efficient operation to the town of Lenox and the chairman of Selectmen, James H. Pelton, who is ex-officio chief of police, and to the Massachusetts State Police in charge of the traffic on the roads, headed by Captain Arthur T. O'Leary and Lt. Daniel Murphy of the Northampton headquarters for Western Massachusetts.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH
JUL 13 1952

Rubinstein Signed For Tanglewood Concert Series

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASS.—Artur Rubinstein will play the solo in Brahms' Second Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire ~~Festival,~~ Aug. 7. The announcement was made by Charles Munch, conductor, who made known at the same time other changes in the program and the names of additional festival soloists. Brahms' Fourth Symphony was included in the July 31 program following the receipt by the orchestra of the highest award of the Academie du Disque Francais for its recording of the Brahms work.

Margaret Harshaw, soprano, Charles Kullman, tenor, and James Pease, bass, will be soloists for the Wagner program that Pierre Monteux will conduct Aug. 2. Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor part in Berlioz' "Requiem" in the final festival concert, Aug. 10.

Canceling the program listed for Thursday evening, July 31, Mr. Munch will conduct instead Faure's Incidental Music for "Pelleas and Melisande" and Ballade for Piano and Orchestra, Ravel's Piano Concerto and Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
JUL 22 1952

Tanglewood Offers 3 One-Act Operas

Three one-act operas will be given tonight in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood under direction of Boris Goldovsky. They will be "The Incas of Peru" from Rameau's "Indes Galantes," Donizetti's "Don Pasquale" and Jacques Ibert's "Angelique." The program is open to members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, which consists of those who contribute in any amount to the support of the center.

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK CITY
JUL 19 1952

IN THE COUNTRY

Berkshire Festival—The Boston Symphony—Saturday, July 19, at 8:15: Charles Münch conducting, with Lucas Foss, piano. . . . ¶ Sunday, July 20, at 3: Charles Münch conducting. . . . ¶ Thursday, July 24, at 8:15: Charles Münch conducting. . . . ¶ Saturday, July 26, at 8:15: Pierre Monteux conducting. . . . ¶ Sunday, July 27, at 3: Charles Münch conducting. (Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The Festival will continue through Sunday, Aug. 10.)

Music Mountain—The Berkshire Quartet in a series of chamber-music concerts. (Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn. Sundays and Friday, July 18, at 4; performances will continue through Sunday, Sept. 7.)

South Mountain—The Juilliard String Quartet. (South Mountain, Pittsfield, Mass. Saturday, July 26, at 4.)

New Haven Pop Concerts—Harry Berman conducting the New Haven Symphony Orchestra, with Sarah Vaughan, blues singer. (Yale Bowl, New Haven. Tuesday, July 22, at 8:15.)

OTTAWA, CANADA
CITIZEN
JUL 12 1952

Music A

Edited by L

New York Round-Up

Now Need 3, For N.Y. Ph

By Irving Kolodin

NEW YORK — It's not ofte

The 10th year of activity at Tanglewood, Mass., began this week (July 5-12) with more than 400 students from 16 countries enrolled in the Berkshire Music Center. To the general public it is the summer-long concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra that ~~make~~ the green acres that once housed Nathaniel Hawthorne a happy place to be, but the school's the thing for those who supervise the whole activity. Among the new students this year will be Christopher von Dohnanyi, grandson of the composer of the favorite Variations on a Nursery Theme. He's ambitious for a career as a conductor.

Yvonne Leroux

Charles Kullman, tenor, will be one of the soloists for the Wagner program to be conducted by Pierre Monteux at Tanglewood Saturday evening, Aug. 2.

---

decided behind locked doors at the Convention. The pressure way, though, to capture the excitement of the Eisenhower-Taft battle of last week.

IONAL SPOTLIGHT ◆ ◆

By MILTON FRIEDMAN

G. O. P.'s ISRAEL PLANK

—The determination of a few men and a reservoir of good ed in Washington were responsible for the Israel plank which he Republican National Convention. For several days at th appeared as if there might be no such plank at all, or at bes tly-worded one.

he convention opened a feeling prevailed among members o committee that there should be no specific reference to an only a vague statement on aid to the Near East in genera emendous opposition to the Administration's foreign aid pro plank, a member, Sen. Irving M. Ives, of New York, considered the statement undesirable because of its faint and unenthusiastic wording. He demanded a strong statement commending Israel's refugee resettlement program. He was joined by Senator Richard M. Nixon, of California, former Senator Wayland Brooks of Illinois, and sub-committee chairman Sen. Eugene Millikan, Colorado. They considered the plank before the committee as not clearly definitive of Republican sentiment toward Israel and thought it completely inadequate. After a discussion behind closed doors the plank emerged.

It gave Israel a "strong commendation" and pledged the party to "cooperate" to bring economic and social stability to that area. It also said that Republican influence would go behind the efforts for peace between Israel and the Arabs. From a convention which was at first indifferent, or at best lukewarm, this resolution represented a Zionist victory. It was, however, not as strong as the G. O. P. plank of 1948, but ministration be elected. It wa an uphill battle, won by the de termination of a few staunc friends of Israel who utilize the accomplishments of the stat as arguments in favor of the mu tual value of the advancemen of American-Israel friendship.

Developments at Chicago indi cated a strong pro-Zionist senti ment on the part of many Re publican Congressmen and bor testimony to the health of th Zionist Movement. It also prove that the Republican Party i aware of the accomplishments o Israel since its establishment.

The plank which was adopte reads: "The Republican Part has consistently advocated a na tional homeland for the Jewis people since a Republican Con gress declared itself in suppor of that objective 30 years ag In providing a sanctuary fo Jewish people rendered home less by persecution, the State o Israel appeals to our deepest hu manitarian instincts and arouse our strong commendation.

"We shall continue our friend y interest in this constructiv and inspiring undertaking. W shall put our influence at th service of the peace between Is rael and the Arab states and w shall co-operate to bring eco nomic and social stability to tha area."

When
however, that for nerve-tin
Sacre du a shallow and fury then not that is seemed faded in

THE R program own less Sacre."
"The Sec
the evenin and it w bert's me phony in Schuber exaltedly more ma exquisite more tran in such a tious inno could help on the go
Mr. Mo
tra played way and over 12,00

CK ◆ ◆

DS

of requests by my family to recor rious odds and ends which hav se many years and which I hop writes Dr. Benjamin Gordon i ociates, $4.00), a biography i istorian and famous Zionist ha uth in Lithuania to the presen e most interesting reading, an o follow his personal adventures

Music
Studio
Ex
At

The Maine
Clubs will be
New England
the National
Clubs at Tan
August 1.
At this tim entation of late Anne city, and R
the Little R
National Fe
wood.
The prese
by Mrs. Ad
Providence,
National F in the Little be named and the oth
It was whi
national fe

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 14 1952

SOLOISTS who appeared Saturday night in a performance of Lalande's motet "De Profundis" at Tanglewood included Hartford's Betty Lou Allen, second from right. Others are: left to right, Shirley Winston, mezzo-soprano; Sarah Fleming, soprano; Richard Sharretts, bass; Miss Allen, contralto, and John McCollum, tenor. Hugh Ross conducted.

THERE was a weekend of gracious music played with consummate skill and lots of spirit Saturday and Sunday at Tanglewood, outside of Lenox, Mass.

The two programs merit the word gracious because they featured music by Rameau, Couperin, Purcell, Vivaldi and Lalande on Saturday and the last three Mozart symphonies on Sunday.

* * *

THE GRACE of this baroque music comes from the fact that it has nothing to say; it does not attempt to exalt the listener with the great chords of spiritual turbulence.

It was designed to be listened to for the sheer delight of formal and tonal beauty, and it was in this eminently just and proper spirit that Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony succeeded in making the weekend a shimmering experience.

Saturday's concert opened with two French suites, one by Rameau drawn from his opera "Dardanus," one by Couperin Le Grand titled "Concert in the Theatrical Style."

* * *

BOTH OF these works are made up of short bits of dances, each with its own climax, and exquisite though they are, there are 15 in all. That's quite a large number of short dances, and after a while, the listener tends to get lost.

A pavane and four fantasias including the famous Fantasia On One Note by Purcell were given a warm, sweet reading by Mr. Munch and the orchestra, while the Lalande "De Profundis," conducted by Hugh Ross, proved to be a moving, persuasive work. It was admirably sung by the Berkshire Festival Chorus.

* * *

BETTY LOU ALLEN, the Hartford contralto, was listed as a soloist in this work. She had approximately five or six notes to sing as part of a quintet, hardly enough to bear judgment.

The most impressive work of the weekend, superior even to the Mozart, was Mr. Munch's breathtaking version of Vivaldi's Concerto Grosso in D Minor, the eleventh in the opus known as "L'Estro Harmonico."

This was a volatile, spell-binding conception of a magnificent work. It is music that might have been composed yesterday as far as Mr. Munch and the orchestra were concerned, for they did not reproduce a piece of 18th Century music, they re-created a living, breathing inspiration with crystalline brilliance and style. I doubt if the concerto has ever been played so well.

Well played, too, were the last three symphonies of Mozart—the 39th and 40th and 41st—Sunday afternoon.

It may seem to some that there never could be enough Mozart on any program, but this listener found that perhaps there can be.

* * *

MR. MUNCH and the orchestra, with special commendation going to Richard Burgin and his string section, gave each piece a gleaming tonal surface. They also put great gusto into the stirring Menuetto movements, particularly into the ones in the 39th and 40th.

Unfortunately, the three symphonies are much alike in conception and tone, and it is little wonder that even with familiarity they eventually begin to sound a bit repititious.

Nevertheless, Saturday's huge audience and Sunday's large one seemed to find both programs a source of immeasurable delight. I did too.

—E. C.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS

JUL 22 1952

Tanglewood Offers 3 One-Act Operas

Three one-act operas will be given tonight in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood under direction of Boris Goldovsky.

They will be "The Incas of Peru" from Rameau's "Indes Galantes," Donizetti's "Don Pasquale" and Jacques Ibert's "Angelique." The program is open to members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, which consists of those who contribute in any amount to the support of the center.

COLUMBUS, OHIO
DISPATCH

JUL 13 1952

Rubinstein Signed For Tanglewood Concert Series

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASS.—Artur Rubinstein will play the solo in Brahms' Second Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival, Aug. 7. The announcement was made by Charles Munch, conductor, who made known at the same time other changes in the program and the names of additional festival soloists. Brahms' Fourth Symphony was included in the July 31 program following the receipt by the orchestra of the highest award of the Academie du Disque Francais for its recording of the Brahms work.

Margaret Harshaw, soprano, Charles Kullman, tenor, and James Pease, bass, will be soloists for the Wagner program that Pierre Monteux will conduct Aug. 2. Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor part in Berlioz' "Requiem" in the final festival concert, Aug. 10.

Canceling the program listed for Thursday evening, July 31, Mr. Munch will conduct instead Faure's Incidental Music for "Pelleas and Melisande" and Ballade for Piano and Orchestra, Ravel's Piano Concerto and Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

Crowd of 26,500 at Festival For First Series in the Shed

TANGLEWOOD — Attendance records for the first series of concerts in the Music Shed at Tanglewood were broken over the week end with a crowd of 26,500 turning out for the three programs.

Saturday night's crowd of 10,050 was the largest single concert audience thus far this season. It compared to 8800 on the same night a year ago.

Thursday evening and Sunday afternoon 8250 attended each concert. The total for the first series last year was 25,450.

This morning the Boston Symphony Orchestra management expressed its "satisfaction and apprecition" with the handling of the heavy traffic following the first two evening concerts of the Berkshire Festival.

James A. Brosnahan, orchestra treasurer, stated that with more than 10,000 persons attending Saturday's program, the cars had left the parking lots quickly and with a minimum of waiting. He said that as he stood on the corner of the monument in Lenox center he was impressed by the speed with which West Street, the main route from Tanglewood east and north, was cleared, and the efficient fanning out at the monument by the police.

Mr. Brosnahan attributed the efficient operation to the town of Lenox and the chairman of Selectmen, James H. Pelton, who is ex-officio chief of police, and to the Massachusetts State Police in charge of the traffic on the roads, headed by Captain Arthur T. O'Leary and Lt. Daniel Murphy of the Northampton headquarters for Western Massachusetts.

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK CITY

JUL 19 1952

IN THE COUNTRY

Berkshire Festival—The Boston Symphony—Saturday, July 19, at 8:15: Charles Münch conducting, with Lucas Foss, piano. . . . ¶ Sunday, July 20, at 3: Charles Münch conducting. . . . ¶ Thursday, July 24, at 8:15: Charles Münch conducting. . . . ¶ Saturday, July 26, at 8:15: Pierre Monteux conducting. . . . ¶ Sunday, July 27, at 3: Charles Münch conducting. (Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The Festival will continue through Sunday, Aug. 10.)

Music Mountain—The Berkshire Quartet in a series of chamber-music concerts. (Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn. Sundays and Friday, July 18, at 4; performances will continue through Sunday, Sept. 7.)

South Mountain—The Juilliard String Quartet. (South Mountain, Pittsfield, Mass. Saturday, July 26, at 4.)

New Haven Pop Concerts—Harry Berman conducting the New Haven Symphony Orchestra, with Sarah Vaughan, blues singer. (Yale Bowl, New Haven. Tuesday, July 22, at 8:15.)

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 14 1952

Tanglewood Concert Offers Mozart's Works

Crowd of 3300 Hears Munch Direct Boston Symphony In Sunday Program

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Tanglewood, Lenox, July 13—One of the best ways to spend a pleasant Sunday afternoon is listening to great music performed by a great orchestra conducted by a sensitive and skilled director.

That appeared to be the opinion of some 3300 other people this afternoon who wended their way to Tanglewood to come under the spell of Mozart, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Charles Munch.

Last night 3200 people made the journey to hear the Boston Symphony players and Mr. Munch in a program of music by Rameau, Couperin, Purcell and Vivaldi, plus a motet for solo voices and chorus by LaLande which was sung by the chorus and soloists under Hugh Ross.

Mozart, more than any composer, offers a limitless span of listening pleasure. His consistent beauty of melody and line; his ingenious handling of every phrase and his superb craftsmanship combine to produce works as alive and sparkling today as the day they were written.

Throws Off Shackles

Yet Mozart had to eke out a living by writing works for all sorts of people and occasions. That is, he did until the summer of 1788 when he threw off the shackles and wrote his three final symphonies, the lovely "E Flat," the impassioned "G Minor" and the towering "Jupitor." Those were the symphonies heard this afternoon.

Mr. Munch and the orchestra were in fine spirits and the performance of the three works were a sheer listening delight. As one thinks upon them, one remembers particularly the gracious beauty of the andante of the E Flat symphony; the glittering light-hearted opening of the G Minor symphony, not unlike the overture to the "Magic Flute," and the same symphony's forthright, incisive menuetto.

The "Symphony in C Major," better known as the "Jupitor" was given a performance worthy of its name. Mr. Munch sensed and communicated the rugged individualism of the music, its martial quality and high spirits. One heard, in fact, the perfect wedding of a great orchestra playing great music. The performance was on the grand scale, yet recognized every nuance, every delicacy and surprise within the score. Mr. Munch has seldom seemed more akin to music than he did today as he read these three Mozart symphonies.

Charming Experience

The concert Saturday night was a charming experience. There was much gracious, gentle music by composers who wrote more to entertain than anything else. Rameau, Couperin, Purcell and Vivaldi, giants of their day, knew the art of entertaining. LaLande's "De Profundis," a motet for chorus and five soloists with orchestra, was conducted by Hugh Ross. The performance, as far as chorus was concerned, went well. The soloists and orchestra were not always together and there was a feeling that so demanding a work should have had longer preparation.

The soloists were Sarah Fleming and Shirley Winston, sopranos; Betty Lou Allen, alto; John McCollum, tenor and Richard Sharretts, bass. Mrs. Sharretts was by far the best of the soloists.

The program for Saturday night, July 19, will open with the Mozart "Litanie," (K.125); the "Concerto in C Major for Piano and Orchestra," by Mozart, with Lukas Foss at the piano; and Schubert's "Mass No. 2 in G Major."

Sunday afternoon, the final concert of the series, will include two Haydn Symphonies, Nos. 99 and 86, and a repetition of the Schubert Mass.

Overflow Audience At Tanglewood

Lenox, July 13—Disregarding the broiling sun, an overflow audience of 3300 attended this afternoon's all Mozart program in the theater concert hall at Tanglewood. In contrast to last week end, this afternoon's program outdrew the Saturday night program given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Charles Munch. But 3200 listened to the program of varied works under the clear cool skies of Saturday night. Yet the total attendance for the two week end concerts has now surpassed the 6500 figure.

Unlike last Sunday afternoon, today's overflow crowd braved the brilliant rays of the sun and laid on blankets on the lawn to hale both the delightful music of Mozart and the gentle Berkshire air that periodically blew across Tanglewood from neighboring Stockbridge bowl.

Tomorrow night, an evening of opera scenes will be offered to friends of the Berkshire Music Center at the theater while on Tuesday evening the program will feature the small choir.

The Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge concerts will continue on Wednesday night with a program of sonatas. Janos Scholz will be featured on the violoncello with Miklos Schwalb at the piano. The departmental orchestra will give a concert in the shed on Friday night. All midweek programs start at 8.15.

Next week end will see the conclusion of these small concerts in the theater concert hall with the main Berkshire Festival scheduled to open in the huge music shed on Thursday night, July 24th.

Next Saturday evening's program will consist of works of Haydn and Schubert.

OTTAWA, CANADA
CITIZEN

JUL 12 1952

Music A

Edited by L

New York Round-Up

Now Need 3,(For N.Y. Ph

By Irving Kolodin

NEW YORK — It's not often

The 10th year of activity at Tanglewood, Mass., began this week (July 5-12) with more than 400 students from 16 countries enrolled in the Berkshire Music Center. To the general public it is the summer-long concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra that make the green acres that once housed Nathaniel Hawthorne a happy place to be, but the school's the thing for those who supervise the whole activity. Among the new students this year will be Christopher von Dohnanyi, grandson of the composer of the favorite Variations on a Nursery Theme. He's ambitious for a career as a conductor.

Yvonne Leroux July 1952

Charles Kullman, tenor, will be one of the soloists for the Wagner program to be conducted by Pierre Monteux at Tanglewood Saturday evening, Aug. 2. Christian Science Monitor

---

decided behind locked doors at the Convention. The pressure way, though, to capture the excitement of the Eisenhower-Taft battle of last week.

IONAL SPOTLIGHT ◆ ◆

By MILTON FRIEDMAN

G. O. P.'s ISRAEL PLANK

0—The determination of a few men and a reservoir of good ed in Washington were responsible for the Israel plank which he Republican National Convention. For several days at the appeared as if there might be no such plank at all, or at bes tly-worded one.

he convention opened a feeling prevailed among members o committee that there should be no specific reference to any only a vague statement on aid to the Near East in genera emendous opposition to the Administration's foreign aid pro

plank, a member, Sen. Irving M. Ives, of New York, considered the statement undesirable because of its faint and unenthusiastic wording. He demanded a strong statement commending Israel's refugee resettlement program. He was joined by Senator Richard M. Nixon, of California, former Senator Wayland Brooks of Illinois, and sub-committee chairman Sen. Eugene Millikan, Colorado. They considered the plank before the committee as not clearly definitive of Republican sentiment toward Israel and thought it completely inadequate. After a discussion behind closed doors the plank emerged.

It gave Israel a "strong commendation" and pledged the party to "cooperate" to bring economic and social stability to that area. It also said that Republican influence would go behind the efforts for peace between Israel and the Arabs. From a convention which was at first indifferent, or at best lukewarm, this resolution represented a Zionist victory. It was, however, not as strong as the G. O. P. plank of 1948, but ministration be elected. It wa an uphill battle, won by the de termination of a few staunc friends of Israel who utilize the accomplishments of the stat as arguments in favor of the mu tual value of the advancemen of American-Israel friendship.

Developments at Chicago indi cated a strong pro-Zionist senti ment on the part of many Re publican Congressmen and bor testimony to the health of th Zionist Movement. It also prove that the Republican Party i aware of the accomplishments o Israel since its establishment.

The plank which was adopte reads: "The Republican Part has consistently advocated a na tional homeland for the Jewis people since a Republican Con gress declared itself in suppor of that objective 30 years ag In providing a sanctuary fo Jewish people rendered home less by persecution, the State o Israel appeals to our deepest hu manitarian instincts and arouse our strong commendation.

"We shall continue our friend ly interest in this constructiv and inspiring undertaking. W shall put our influence at th service of the peace between Is rael and the Arab states and w shall co-operate to bring eco nomic and social stability to tha area."

CK ◆ ◆

DS

of requests by my family to recor rious odds and ends which hav se many years and which I hop writes Dr. Benjamin Gordon i ociates, $4.00), a biography i istorian and famous Zionist ha outh in Lithuania to the presen e most interesting reading, an o follow his personal adventure

When however that for nerve-ti Sacre du a shallov and fury then not that is seemed faded in

THE R program own less Sacre." "The Se the evenin and it w bert's me phony in Schuber exaltediy more ma exquisite more tran in such a tious inno could help on the go Mr. Mo tra playe way and over 12,00

THE HARTFORD TIMES, FRIDAY, JULY 25, 1952

July 28

Monteux, Munch At Tanglewood

Monteux Conducts Saturday Concert

WAY BACK when Pierre Monteux led the world premiere of Stravinky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," that would be 1913 in Paris, the piece precipitated a major riot as well as a major musical revolution.

Saturday night at Tanglewood that same Pierre Monteux led the Boston Symphony Orchestra through the rugged paces of the Stravinsky masterwork, and there was no riot. Even the revolution itself seemed to have faded a bit.

* * *

AT THAT first performance under the Diaghilev forces and with the Nijinsky ballet, the music brought rotten tomatoes and other native Parisian vegetation cascading down upon the stage. Stravinsky himself left by a lavatory window to wander the streets of Paris, thinking he was a failure.

With the exception of a musically uninstructed couple to my right who gasped and giggled throughout most of the evening, no one seemed bowled over by the biting dissonances and harsh, brutal rhythms.

Mr. Monteux, who must know this piece like the back of his own hand, worked the orchestra up to fine pitch of excitement. Stravinsky orchestrated this work with the sure touch of a virtuoso. It takes a virtuoso orchestra to play it the way the Boston did, too. All these excellences combined Saturday evening to make the performance definitive in sheer excitement and in orchestral lustre.

When all is said and done, however, it must be admitted that for all its brilliance and nerve-tingling inventiveness "Le Sacre du Printemps" is at times a shallow work, all its sound and fury signifying now and then not much at all. Perhaps that is why the revolution it seemed to be has somewhat faded in the course of time.

* * *

THE REST of Mr. Monteux's program was as exciting in its own less imposing way as "Le Sacre." Cimarosa's Overture to "The Secret Marriage" opened the evening in a playful manner, and it was followed by Schubert's mellifluous Seventh Symphony in C Major.

Schubert's handling of his exaltedly lyric material is never more masterful than in this exquisite smphony. Nor is it ever more transparent, but it is done in such an appealing, unpretentious innocence that no listener could help but be swept along on the golden stream.

Mr. Monteux and the orchestra played it in just the right way and left the audience of over 12,000 eminently satisfied

Charles Munch Conducts Sunday

THE program which Charles Munch chose for Sunday afternoon was predominantly French—Franck, Bizet and Ravel. The novelty was contemporary Italian, three song settings by Luigi Dallapiccola.

This was Sunday music, Franck's contribution being the symphonic poem which grew out of his oratorio "The Redemption" and the Dallapiccola choral triptych avowing religious themes. They are, however, widely separated as to intent and accomplishment.

Franck's composition is the ode of a churchman, and artist who in his emotional moments was not above bombast and platitude, but he believed sincerely in the things he voiced. The solemn, dignified young man who was called to the platform to receive the audience's tribute for his "Three Songs in Captivity," plainly believed in his music but its religiosity was essentially topical.

* * *

SCORED for the unusual combination of chorus, two harps, two pianos and percussion battery, these songs were totally lacking in sweetness and euphony. The voices moved slowly across the text almost without rhythm, deriving their buoyancy from the dry glitter of exotic percussive effects. The sole interest lay in this weird play of sounds struck, rather than emitted. Harps and pianos were used the same way. It was objective, non-devotional music; preoccupied and often dull. Many in the audience read their programs or looked about.

This very difficult work was conducted by Hugh Ross who labored over it valiantly. There seemed to be some ensemble trouble in the final pages of the second song.

The Daphnis and Chloe ballet and suites given with the assistance of the Festival chorus made up the second half of the program. This brilliant music has long been a Tanglewood favorite. Koussevitzky was especially fond of the second Suite.

* * *

THE AUDIENCE went into raptures over the Bizet symphony. It is easy to listen to, merry and ingenuous. The light and happy mood is so little varied through four movements that one would prefer to call it a suite rather than a symphony, which by definition calls for a greater emotional range. It is about as Neapolitan as Carmen is Spanish.

—C. E. L.

Music Shed Concerts Open

For seventeen summers the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been journeying to the Berkshires for a festival which has made Tanglewood a crossroads for music's pilgrims from the distant places. This has left its mark upon the hills and upon the towns but it was not until last night that the county commissioners took official notice of the glamorous business.

After Charles Munch had received his initial greeting from the thousands gathered in the Music Shed, two additional figures proceeded to the front of the platform. One of these was Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who introduced the other, Mayor Robert Capeless of Pittsfield. He in turn directed attention to a large parchment on an easel and this he read. Its burden was to acknowledge that the orchestra had just returned from the capitals of Europe where t had received unusual acclaim. The commissioners wished to recognize that this was "the greatest orchestra in the world."

* * *

THE GREATEST orchestra in the world then made an evening of two of the most monumental works in the symphonic treasury — the Eroica of Beethoven and the First of Brahms. This may have been Dr. Munch's way of declaring the classical integrity of his Tanglewood programs for here indeed no eye is batted in the direction of the "pops" titles which everywhere else must sweeten up summertime programs.

Dr. Munch is not one to force drama into such scores as these. The temptations lie in wait on every page of Beethoven's E flat symphony and few are the conductors who can resist them.

The master of the Boston Orchestra is more intent upon a smoothly assembled structure. He is fastidious as to tonal purity and surface lustre. Everything must be precisely articulated and free from ambiguity. Better a transparent tone than a massive one. With this sort of workmanship the drama takes care of itself. There is no rhetoric, nor any need of it. The force of great statements is implicit when treated with the respect by an artist of Munch's stature. His gift for integrating baffling material was best exampled in his superb delineation of the final movement.

CHARLES MUNCH conducted last night's Boston Symphony concert at Tanglewood.

* * *

THIS SAME ability to prodhce a limpid, buoyant stream of sound was even more conspicuous in the Brahms Symphony. Superficially one might say that this is the French manner of interpreting Brahms, but I prefer to think of it as the conscientious way. There is no reason why Brahms should be the grace and urbanity which so beautifully informs his orchestral speech.

I marvel at the great improvement in the Boston Orchestra's wind choir, particularly in the horn section.

C. E. L.

Tanglewood Program:

Saturday—Berkshire Festival Concert, Pierre Monteux conducting, works by Cimarosa, Schubert and Stravinsky, at 8:15 p. m.

Sunday—Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting, works by Franck, Bizet, Dallapiccola, Ravel, at 3 p. m.

PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS

JUL 17 195[illegible]

Music Federation To Dedicate Studio To Late Anne M. Gannett

Exercises To Be Held August 1 At Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The Maine Federation of Music Clubs will be represented at the New England District Meeting of the National Federation of Music Clubs at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. August 1.

At this time there will be presentation of plaques honoring the late Anne M. Gannett of this city, and Robert W. Roberts, at the Little Red House, gift of the National Federation to Tanglewood.

The presentation will be made by Mrs. Ada Holding Miller of Providence, R. I., president of the National Federation. The studio in the Little Red House will thus be named the Gannett Studio, and the other the Roberts Studio. It was while Mrs. Gannett was national federation president that The Little Red House was rebuilt and dedicated by Mrs. Gannett.

Registration for the meeting will be held at 10 a. m. in Sedgewick Hall in the Lenox Library. Reports of offciers and state presidents will be held at 10.30 a. m. at which time Mrs. Edward J. Colgan of Waterville, Maine president, will report. Exercises of dedication will be at 2.30 p. m. and at 3.40 p. m. there will be a concert in the Chamber Music Hall, featuring Claudette Dorel, 1951 Young Artist winner, and Warren Locke, baritone. There will also be selections by a chamber music group from the Berkshire Music Center.

At 8.30 p. m. there will be a concert by the student orchestra in the Music Shed.

Guests are welcomed to the entire program for the day.

Other local women planning to attend are Miss Louise H. Armstrong and Mrs. Arolyn W. Johnson of Portland, and Miss Nellie L. McCann of Gorham.

WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

JUL 14 1952

Mozart Works Offered By Symphony

(Special to The American)

Lenox, Mass., July 14—Three short symphonies of Mozart, the E-flat major, G minor and C major ("Jupiter") were offered by the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in the fourth concert of the 1952 festival season at Tanglewood.

Charles Munch conducted the group, before an audience of 3,300 seated in the rustic Theater-Concert Hall and sprawled on its sunny, green lawns.

The three week ends of "little concert" music, of which this was the second, have become a vital part of this summer musical institution. Preceding the major Berkshire Festival concerts in the big ~~shed, they have~~ branched out from their original Bach-Haydn-Mozart schedule to include works, by other composers, fitted for small orchestration.

Saturday night's program, for instance, included music by Rameau, Couperin, Purcell, Vivaldi and Lalande.

Of yesterday afternoon's works, the opening, the E flat major symphony, was without doubt the most delightful. With its delicate airs for clarinet and strings, reminiscent of the best in Mozart's chamber music repertoire, it was delightful summer listening.

The G minor is not my favorite Mozart. It was brooding, almost oppressively heavy in interpretation. In the spirited "Jupiter," however, Mr. Munch revived both himself and Mozart, working up to this rhythmic symphony's magnificent finale, with an enthusiasm that drew call after call from his audience in appreciation.

The Concert Hall program next Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon will consist of two Haydn symphonies; the Mozart C major piano concert with Lukas Foss as soloist; and choral litanies and Mass by Mozart and Schubert.

F. Z.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUL 20 1952

Practice Studios To Be Dedicated At Music Center

Mrs. Ada Holding Miller, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, will dedicate two practice studios for the Berkshire Music Center on Aug. 1. The ceremony will be the feature of the 11th convention of the New England District of the federation at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The studios will be accepted for the school by George Judd, manthe federation to provide adequate practice studios for the Berkshire Center and presented to the center in the summer of 1948. One studio will be named in honor of the late Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett who initiated the Little Red House project while she was president of the federation. The other will bear the name of Robert W. Roberts, husband of the national board member from Florida, who contributed generously to the enterprise.

The studios will be accepted for the school George Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Thomas [illegible] Perry

---

Tanglewood To Get Studio For Recording

Tanglewood is going to get a studio for making recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The studio will be created from a barn at the rear of the Litte Red House on the road leading to Stockbridge Bowl. The barn will be remodeled and enlarged under the directi[illegible] engineers of Radio Corpora[illegible]merica, for which the BS[illegible]ordings.

In th[illegible]lings have been made [illegible]rious temporary set-ups [illegible] Music Shed and theatre-co[illegible] hall.

Bradley & Gass of Pittsfield are architects for the job; Ernest J. Cramer is the builder.

An addition to the barn will be built to house a stage for the orchestra. Various alterations will be made on the existing structure to provide an acoustically perfect sound chamber.

Storage rooms and other related facilities will be provided and the adjacent practice sheds made an integral part of the studio.

N.Y. July 28 Times

[From Late Editions of Yesterday's TIMES.]

KOUSSEVITZKY GIFT ENRICHES LIBRARY

Conductor's Widow Presents $2,000 and Music Collection to Institution at Lenox

By OLIN DOWNES

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 26—Ceremonies were held today in Sedgwick Hall of the Lenox Library in memory of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, whose seventy-eighth birthday this would have been.

The principal event was the speech of Mme. Olga Koussevitzky, widow of the conductor who was leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center at his death on June 4 of last year.

Mme. Koussevitzky, who was introduced by John H. P. Gould, president of the library, announced a gift of $2,000 and a large collection of music scores, records and books on music to the library by the Koussevitzky Musical Foundation, of which she is president. This "birthday gift" was made in recognition of the great cultural service the Lenox Library has been to its community and the signal aid it has rendered to the purposes and ideals of the Berkshire Music Center.

"This day, July 26, evokes unforgettable and wonderful memories," said Mme. Koussevitzky. "The birthday serenades, the specially composed songs, the surprise performances and the musical jokes of the students of the Berkshire Music Center brightened the birthday of Serge Koussevitzky. This very building, too, holds many long memories.

"It seems right, therefore, that this date should be marked by a gift—a birthday gift—to the Lenox Library which, for more than a decade, gave such understanding support to Dr. Koussevitzky's efforts to create here in the Berkshires not only a great national and international festival of music but also a center of a unique kind of music education.

"The Koussevitzky Music Foundation has chosen this day to express anew the appreciation of its founder for the important part played by the Lenox Library in the life of its community and in the school so dear to his heart. It is our hope that the enlarged collection of music scores, records and books on music will be used to the full by the members of the community and the students alike, bringing music closer to their homes and helping them to make the most of the experience of 'both living and working in music.'

"On July 11, I received a letter from Mr. Gould, president of the Lenox Library Association, accepting our gift. I was touched to read the following words: 'We shall be proud to do what we can to keep alive the spirit and desires of Dr. Koussevitzky.'"

Following Mme. Koussevitzky's words, a quintet consisting of William Kroll, Joseph De Pasquale, Richard Burgin, Eugene Lehner, and Jean Bedetti played the Cabatina from Beethoven's quartet, Opus 130, and the Adagio from Anton Bruckner's quintet for two violins, two violas and 'cello.

Before the meeting in the library, simple but impressive ceremonies were held at Dr. Koussevitzky's grave in the Congregational Church-on-the-Hill, where a group from the chorus of the Berkshire Music Center sang some brief choral passages, and a wreath was placed before the grave.

[42]

THE HARTFORD TIMES, FRIDAY, JULY 25, 1952

July 28

Monteux, Munch At Tanglewood

Monteux Conducts Saturday Concert

WAY BACK when Pierre Monteux led the world premiere of Stravinky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," that would be 1913 in Paris, the piece precipitated a major riot as well as a major musical revolution.

Saturday night at Tanglewood that same Pierre Monteux led the Boston Symphony Orchestra through the rugged paces of the Stravinsky masterwork, and there was no riot. Even the revolution itself seemed to have faded a bit.

* * *

AT THAT first performance under the Diaghilev forces and with the Nijinsky ballet, the music brought rotten tomatoes and other native Parisian vegetation cascading down upon the stage. Stravinsky himself left by a lavatory window to wander the streets of Paris, thinking he was a failure.

With the exception of a musically uninstructed couple to my right who gasped and giggled throughout most of the evening, no one seemed bowled over by the biting dissonances and harsh, brutal rhythms.

Mr. Monteux, who must know this piece like the back of his own hand, worked the orchestra up to fine pitch of excitement. Stravinsky orchestrated this work with the sure touch of a virtuoso. It takes a virtuoso orchestra to play it the way the Boston did, too. All these excellences combined Saturday evening to make the performance definitive in sheer excitement and in orchestral lustre.

When all is said and done, however, it must be admitted that for all its brilliance and nerve-tingling inventiveness "Le Sacre du Printemps" is at times a shallow work, all its sound and fury signifying now and then not much at all. Perhaps that is why the revolution it seemed to be has somewhat faded in the course of time.

* * *

THE REST of Mr. Monteux's program was as exciting in its own less imposing way as "Le Sacre." Cimarosa's Overture to "The Secret Marriage" opened the evening in a playful manner, and it was followed by Schubert's mellifluous Seventh Symphony in C Major.

Schubert's handling of his exaltedly lyric material is never more masterful than in this exquisite smphony. Nor is it ever more transparent, but it is done in such an appealing, unpretentious innocence that no listener could help but be swept along on the golden stream.

Mr. Monteux and the orchestra played it in just the right way and left the audience of over 12,000 eminently satisfied

Charles Munch Conducts Sunday

THE program which Charles Munch chose for Sunday afternoon was predominantly French—Franck, Bizet and Ravel. The novelty was contemporary Italian, three song settings by Luigi Dallapiccola.

This was Sunday music, Franck's contribution being the symphonic poem which grew out of his oratorio "The Redemption" and the Dallapiccola choral triptych avowing religious themes. They are, however, widely separated as to intent and accomplishment.

Franck's composition is the ode of a churchman, and artist who in his emotional moments was not above bombast and platitude, but he believed sincerely in the things he voiced. The solemn, dignified young man who was called to the platform to receive the audience's tribute for his "Three Songs in Captivity," plainly believed in his music but its religiosity was essentially topical.

* * *

SCORED for the unusual combination of chorus, two harps, two pianos and percussion battery, these songs were totally lacking in sweetness and euphony. The voices moved slowly across the text almost without rhythm, deriving their buoyancy from the dry glitter of exotic percussive effects. The sole interest lay in this weird play of sounds struck, rather than emitted. Harps and pianos were used the same way. It was objective, non-devotional music; preoccupied and often dull. Many in the audience read their programs or looked about.

This very difficult work was conducted by Hugh Ross who labored over it valiantly. There seemed to be some ensemble trouble in the final pages of the second song.

The Daphnis and Chloe ballet and suites given with the assistance of the Festival chorus made up the second half of the program. This brilliant music has long been a Tanglewood favorite Koussevitzky was especially fond of the second Suite.

* * *

THE AUDIENCE went into raptures over the Bizet symphony. It is easy to listen to, merry and ingenuous. The light and happy mood is so little varied through four movements that one would prefer to call it a suite rather than a symphony, which by definition calls for a greater emotional range. It is about as Neapolitan as Carmen is Spanish.

—C. E. L.

Music Shed Concerts Open

CHARLES MUNCH conducted last night's Boston Symphony concert at Tanglewood.

Tanglewood Program:

Saturday—Berkshire Festival Concert, Pierre Monteux conducting, works by Cimarosa, Schubert and Stravinsky, at 8:15 p. m.

Sunday—Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting, works by Franck, Bizet, Dallapiccola, Ravel, at 3 p. m.

For seventeen summers the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been journeying to the Berkshires for a festival which has made Tanglewood a crossroads for music's pilgrims from the distant places. This has left its mark upon the hills and upon the towns but it was not until last night that the county commissioners took official notice of the glamorous business.

After Charles Munch had received his initial greeting from the thousands gathered in the Music Shed, two additional figures proceeded to the front of the platform. One of these was Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who introduced the other, Mayor Robert Capeless of Pittsfield. He in turn directed attention to a large parchment on an easel and this he read. Its burden was to acknowledge that the orchestra had just returned from the capitals of Europe where t had received unusual acclaim. The commissioners wished to recognize that this was "the greatest orchestra in the world."

* * *

THE GREATEST orchestra in the world then made an evening of two of the most monumental works in the symphonic treasury — the Eroica of Beethoven and the First of Brahms. This may have been Dr. Munch's way of declaring the classical integrity of his Tanglewood programs for here indeed no eye is batted in the direction of the "pops" titles which everywhere else must sweeten up summertime programs.

Dr. Munch is not one to force drama into such scores as these. The temptations lie in wait on every page of Beethoven's E flat symphony and few are the conductors who can resist them.

The master of the Boston Orchestra is more intent upon a smoothly assembled structure. He is fastidious as to tonal purity and surface lustre. Everything must be precisely articulated and free from ambiguity. Better a transparent tone than a massive one. With this sort of workmanship the drama takes care of itself. There is no rhetoric, nor any need of it. The force of great statements is implicit when treated with the respect by an artist of Munch's stature. His gift for integrating baffling material was best exampled in his superb delineation of the final movement.

* * *

THIS SAME ability to prodhce a limpid, buoyant stream of sound was even more conspicuous in the Brahms Symphony. Superficially one might say that this is the French manner of interpreting Brahms, but I prefer to think of it as the conscientious way. There is no reason why Brahms should be the grace and urbanity which so beautifully informs his orchestral speech.

I marvel at the great improvement in the Boston Orchestra's wind choir, particularly in the horn section.

C. E. L.

PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS

JUL 17 195

Music Federation To Dedicate Studio To Late Anne M. Gannett

Exercises To Be Held August 1 At Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The Maine Federation of Music Clubs will be represented at the New England District Meeting of the National Federation of Music Clubs at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. August 1.

At this time there will be presentation of plaques honoring the late Anne M. Gannett of this city, and Robert W. Roberts, at the Little Red House, gift of the National Federation to Tanglewood.

The presentation will be made by Mrs. Ada Holding Miller of Providence, R. I., president of the National Federation. The studio in the Little Red House will thus be named the Gannett Studio, and the other the Roberts Studio. It was while Mrs. Gannett was national federation president that The Little Red House was rebuilt and dedicated by Mrs. Gannett.

Registration for the meeting will be held at 10 a. m. in Sedgewick Hall in the Lenox Library. Reports of offciers and state presidents will be held at 10.30 a. m. at which time Mrs. Edward J. Colgan of Waterville, Maine president, will report. Exercises of dedication will be at 2.30 p. m. and at 3.40 p. m. there will be a concert in the Chamber Music Hall, featuring Claudette Dorel, 1951 Young Artist winner, and Warren Locke, baritone. There will also be selections by a chamber music group from the Berkshire Music Center.

At 8.30 p. m. there will be a concert by the student orchestra in the Music Shed.

Guests are welcomed to the entire program for the day.

Other local women planning to attend are Miss Louise H. Armstrong and Mrs. Arolyn W. Johnson of Portland, and Miss Nellie L. McCann of Gorham.

WATERBURY, CONN.
AMERICAN

JUL 14 1952

Mozart Works Offered By Symphony

(Special to The American)

Lenox, Mass., July 14—Three short symphonies of Mozart, the E-flat major, G minor and C major ("Jupiter") were offered by the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in the fourth concert of the 1952 festival season at Tanglewood.

Charles Munch conducted the group, before an audience of 3,300 seated in the rustic Theater-Concert Hall and the assessors annual report. Between Jan. 1, 1950, and Jan. 1, 1951, valuation of real estate in the city of Pittsfield increased by approximately $3,000,000. Since the beginning of 1951, new building is largely responsible for another increase in total valuation amounting to $2,500,000.

Thus, valuations are up $5,500,000 on real estate in a two-year period. Assuming that the city's rate of spending had remained constant between 1950 and 1952, increased valuation would have had the effect of lowering the rate by $2 per $1000 valuation. In this respect, at least, progr[illegible] pays. In actuality it is no[illegible] its resulting costs, of[illegible] gains created by a [illegible]ssessed valuation.

*

TO CUT COST[illegible]ing, the housing industry has dispensed with many dwelling spaces regarded as essential a score of years ago. One such space is the cellar, which builders eliminated successfully to produce low-cost housing in many places. However, the cellarless house has not been very popular in the Berkshires. In fact, an abortive proposal to build the Kelly homes on the Allendale tract without basements raised a memorable furor back in 1946.

However, a few local builders

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

JUL 20 1952

Practice Studios To Be Dedicated At Music Center

Mrs. Ada Holding Miller, president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, will dedicate two practice studios for the Berkshire Music Center on Aug. 1. The ceremony will be the feature of the 11th convention of the New England District of the federation at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The studios will be accepted for the school by George Judd, manthe federation to provide adequate practice studios for the Berkshire Center and presented to the center in the summer of 1948. One studio will be named in honor of the late Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett who initiated the Little Red House project while she was president of the federation. The other will bear the name of Robert W. Roberts, husband of the national board member from Florida, who contributed generously to the enterprise.

The studios will be accepted for the school George Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Thomas D. Perry Jr., executive secretary of the Berkshire Music Center. A concert in the Chamber Music Hall on the grounds will follow the dedication. Wooden plaques for the dedication were carved by John Bischoff, a graduate of the Rhode Island School of Design, who will be present at the ceremony.

Preceding the dedication, which will take place in the afternoon, will be morning registration, a business meeting and a musical program by young New England artists, among them Mary Freeman, East Greenwich harpist, as representative from this state.

Mrs. Miller, Miss Gertrude P. Caulfield, president of the Rhode Island Federation of Music Clubs, and Mrs. Anne Mason Francis, immediate past president, will head the local delegation at the convention.

N.Y. July 28 Times

[From Late Editions of Yesterday's TIMES.]

KOUSSEVITZKY GIFT ENRICHES LIBRARY

Conductor's Widow Presents $2,000 and Music Collection to Institution at Lenox

By OLIN DOWNES

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 26—Ceremonies were held today in Sedgwick Hall of the Lenox Library in memory of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, whose seventy-eighth birthday this would have been.

The principal event was the speech of Mme. Olga Koussevitzky, widow of the conductor who was leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center at his death on June 4 of last year.

Mme. Koussevitzky, who was introduced by John H. P. Gould, president of the library, announced a gift of $2,000 and a large collection of music scores, records and books on music to the library by the Koussevitzky Musical Foundation, of which she is president. This "birthday gift" was made in recognition of the great cultural service the Lenox Library has been to its community and the signal aid it has rendered to the purposes and ideals of the Berkshire Music Center.

"This day, July 26, evokes unforgettable and wonderful memories," said Mme. Koussevitzky. "The birthday serenades, the specially composed songs, the surprise performances and the musical jokes of the students of the Berkshire Music Center brightened the birthday of Serge Koussevitzky. This very building, too, holds many long memories.

"It seems right, therefore, that this date should be marked by a gift—a birthday gift—to the Lenox Library which, for more than a decade, gave such understanding support to Dr. Koussevitzky's efforts to create here in the Berkshires not only a great national and international festival of music but also a center of a unique kind of music education.

"The Koussevitzky Music Foundation has chosen this day to express anew the appreciation of its founder for the important part played by the Lenox Library in the life of its community and in the school so dear to his heart. It is our hope that the enlarged collection of music scores, records and books on music will be used to the full by the members of the community and the students alike, bringing music closer to their homes and helping them to make the most of the experience of 'both living and working in music.'

"On July 11, I received a letter from Mr. Gould, president of the Lenox Library Association, accepting our gift. I was touched to read the following words: 'We shall be proud to do what we can to keep alive the spirit and desires of Dr. Koussevitzky.'"

Following Mme. Koussevitzky's words, a quintet consisting of William Kroll, Joseph De Pasquale, Richard Burgin, Eugene Lehner, and Jean Bedetti played the Cabatina from Beethoven's quartet, Opus 130, and the Adagio from Anton Bruckner's quintet for two violins, two violas and 'cello.

Before the meeting in the library, simple but impressive ceremonies were held at Dr. Koussevitzky's grave in the Congregational Church-on-the-Hill, where a group from the chorus of the Berkshire Music Center sang some brief choral passages, and a wreath was placed before the grave.

[42]

'Melting-Pot' Festival Brews Rich Music

SU. JUL 2 1952

U. S., Foreign Students at School in Berkshires Play With Skill of Top Symphony Orchestras

This is the first of two articles. The second will appear Monday.

By WALTER MONFRIED
Of The Journal Staff

Stockbridge, Mass.—They look for all the world like a ragged regiment of youngsters that you could recruit on any high school campus or any Milwaukee playground. They are white children and black, and likewise brown and yellow. They wear blue jeans, khakis, T shirts and sports jackets.

But call them to attention on the stage of the vast circular shed on the Tanglewood estate here. Their fiddles and horns are hoisted easily, naturally into place. Their leader—he may be a fellow student or he may be a teacher—whisks his baton into the downbeat, and out pours the music.

It is a perfectly incredible, flabbergasting accumulation of lovely sound they produce. Here is a motley crew of youngsters giving forth with all the power and richness and cohesive skill of a top flight symphony orchestra—an orchestra such as any big city of the nation would be proud to have. You see it and you hear it, but you still can't quite believe.

220 Green Acres

This Tanglewood, with its 220 green and glistening acres set upon a little lake amid the Berkshire hills of western Massachusetts, represents a uniquely happy marriage of nature and art.

More and more of the nation's tourists are finding their way here each summer, by the tens of thousands. Tanglewood presents welcome images to every sort of caller. The name itself was a coinage of its most famous resident, Nathaniel Hawthorne.

Today it means the foremost musical festival of the western hemisphere, and also an advanced school that draws hundreds of young persons from nearly all 48 states, and many foreign nations. All the acumen and experience gained at Tanglewood will augment the musical resources of hundreds of communities. It is a haven as valuable as it is unique.

French Master Listens

The other day this visitor sat, at a rehearsal, alongside Charles Munch, the celebrated master of French orchestras and the Boston symphony, and his Tanglewood aide, Leonard Bernstein, a free lance conductor and composer and perennial whiz kid of the musical scene. Munch, gray of mane and gentle of mien, furrowed his brows and puffed continually on cigarets as he gazed at the young players stabbing intrepidly through Prokofiev and Beethoven and the "Don Quixote" of Richard Strauss.

"What talent, what assurance, what aplomb," he murmured with a nod, "how beautifully they phrase."

"Right!" agreed Bernstein. "They may look like high school kids, but they play like seasoned professionals, which they will be in a few years. They ought to be good. They're the pick of the entire country, and 20 other countries, too. Yes, there's a place for them in music. That solo cellist there, Bob Sayre of Pittsburgh—he's already had experience with the Cleveland orchestra and next season he goes to the first desk with the San Antonio symphony."

There Celebrities Abound

As a Milwaukeean strolls the Tanglewood groves past the dozens of sheds, little and big, which house the music makers' sessions, he finds himself like one on a busy Hollywood lot — stumbling over celebrities. The stocky, mercurial Bernstein is here and there and everywhere. Zestfully he recalled his guest conducting stint with the Chicago orchestra in Milwaukee a year ago.

"We really shocked 'em with Stravinsky's 'Rite of Springtime,' didn't we?" he exclaimed. After this summer, he plans to give up conducting for some months to concentrate on composing. His recent "Trouble in Haiti," a quasi-jazz opera, won some attention, and he is looking toward another Broadway effort on the order of his "On the Town." The Bernsteins are expecting their first child in late summer.

Prince of Accompanists

A little man with springy step is recognized as Seymour Lipkin, a teacher of conductors who is recalled in Milwaukee as a brilliant touring piano soloist, a winner of the Rachmaninoff prize. "Milwaukee I like for its kind audiences and because my good friend Dr. John Wolmut teaches opera there," he said crisply. "He and I were colleagues at Curtis school in Philadelphia for years."

Striding to keep a lecture date, the stocky Paul Ulanowsky is recognized. A prince of accompanists, he has adorned numerous recitals of the greatest of singers at the Milwaukee Auditorium and the Pabst theater. "I stay here in the Berkshires with my family each summer; I teach here, too—a wonderful arrangement," he explains. "In the fall I will go to Australia, and on the way I will stop off at Santa Barbara and make recordings with Lotte Lehmann." Mme. Lehman and the pianist are a familiar team in many concert halls.

Ross Drills Singers

The slim, bald man who looks like former Prime Minister Attlee, turns out to be Hugh Ross, the noted New York choral master who drills singing groups at Tanglewood. He and his New York chorus joined with conductor Dimitri Mitropoulos and the New York philharmonic recently in a radio version of the startling modern opera, "Wozzeck," which was voted an outstanding event of musical radio history. He refuses to take much credit. "The improvement in young people's voices in the last 10 years has been remarkable," he points out.

In a sizable, open front shed, a familiar Slavic voice is heard from afar. It is found to belong to the baldish, bubbling Boris Goldovsky, an operatic director whose chats in Metropolitan opera intermissions are enjoyed by millions of Saturday radio listeners. He is by trade a professor of opera in Boston and this afternoon he is rehearsing several groups for impending operas, "Figaro," "Aida" and "The Telephone."

He plays the piano fluently as he sings and acts out every role, male and female, high and low, sometimes to an effect that splits his students with laughter.

"Stick Like Glue"

"Give me that top note again," he pleads. To another vocalist: "Stick to the dots like glue," and to a sturdy baritone: "You take all that long line without a breath—how do you do it?" he inquires wonderingly. "You see what can be done if you go about it sensibly and without bellowing."

A strange wartare of clashing sounds is fought out each day over Tanglewood's meadows. In this shed the Goldovsky operas are sung out boldly, blending not unpleasantly with the voices of 50 girls doing madrigals directly behind the "opera house."

From the rustic theater across the field pour forth the opulent tones of the Boston symphony orchestra, rehearsing Mozart to the strident commentaries of conductor Munch himself. A dozen other sheds in the vicinity emit the pounding of pianos, the twittering of sopranos, the blasting of trombones and the sweet scraping of string ensembles. Truly, it is a conservatory on a vast scale, musical and geographical.

Work World Renowned

Its teachers are simply the best procurable. Some dozens of the expert instrumentalists of the Boston orchestra teach their respective specialties to the youngsters. If a youth shows a flair for composing, he can work, side by side, for hours on end, with Aaron Copland, a onetime Brooklyn boy who is generally rated the leading American composer of serious music.

His "Salon Mexico" and "Appalachian Spring" and other music that he has written for movies, operas, ballet and symphony orchestras are world renowned. A tall, gangling person with an ever present smile, Copland remarks that he is composing an ambitious piano work, and that he has a commission to write a television opera, when a suitable libretto turns up.

150,000 at Concerts

Copland is second to Munch as director of the entire Berkshire music center. He has been with it from the start and proudly points out that "no talented student is now prevented from attending the center for lack of tuition money. This year for the first time certain advanced sections of the school are being placed on an all-scholarship basis." Somehow the backers of the great Boston orchestra find means to help the youngsters in the Berkshire precincts, too.

Tanglewood, then, is a twofold enterprise. Its public concerts, which began July 5 and will close Aug. 10, draw some 150,000 hearers a year, due mainly to the magical qualities of the Boston orchestra. Its 400 students, many of high talent, present dozens of concerts and operas open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, who pay a few dollars.

The late Serge Koussevitzky, who won thousands of Milwaukee admirers through his visits with the orchestra in the 1940's, was the chief architect and organizer of this unique project. How it came about will be discussed in another dispatch.

Here are a few of the 400 young persons who take the intensive summer music courses at the celebrated Tanglewood estate, which lies between the small towns of Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. They are from the University of Illinois. At Tanglewood, the Boston symphony orchestra gives public concerts until Aug. 10, and the students of the center give dozens of programs. Several of the nation's most eminent musicians train them.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

JUL 1[illegible] 1952

Rubinstein as Soloist

Special to The News

TANGLEWOOD, Lennox, Mass., July 12.—~~Artur~~ Rubinstein will be soloist in Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 2 in B Flat with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival Aug. 7. Charles Munch will conduct.

Springfield—Repub. July 27

Memory of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Honored at Tanglewood Program

Chamber Music Played at Lenox Library as Birthday Tribute; Gift Presented for Purchase of Books

(Special to The Republican)

Berkshire Hills, July 26—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the late beloved director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which for the past 15 years has staged the annual music festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, had his birthday honored today by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation with the latter arranging a musical program at the Lenox Library. The library also received a check for $2000 to be used to make additions to its collection of books on music, records and scores. Miss Irene M. Poirier, librarian, received a letter this week from Mrs. Koussevitzky, widow of the late director telling her of the action taken by the Foundation board recently when it voted to make the $2000 gift.

For the occasion this afternoon a chamber music program was arranged with members of the faculty at Berkshire Music Center providing the music. The program consisted of Beethoven-Cavatina from Quartet opus 130, presented by William Kroll, Joseph de Pasquale, Richard Burgin, and Jean Bedetti. Bruckner-Adagio from the Quintet for two violins, two violas and cello. The quartet was joined in this presentation by Eugene Lehner. As another feature, movie films of Tanglewood, and the "March of Time" were shown in Sedgwick Hall in the library.

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL 12 1952

MUSIC

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL — Thru Sun, Aug 10—Boston Symphony Orch. At Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Weekend concerts in the Theatre-Concert Hall, thru July 20. Concerts in the Shed begin July 24. Ticket info from Boston Symphony Orch., Inc., Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Lenox 600. Info on accommodations in the Berkshires from Berkshire Hills Conference, Pittsfield, Mass. General adm to grounds $2, on sale the day of each concert. Sat, July 12—8:15. Munch, cond. Rameau, Suite from "Dardanus"; Couperin, Concert dans le gout theatral; Purcell, Fantasia in A for Strings; Vivaldi, Concerto Grosso in D minor, Opus 3, No. 11; Lalande, "De Profundis," for Chorus and Orch (conducted by Hugh Ross). . . . Sun, July 13—3 pm. Munch, cond. Mozart program: Symphony in E-flat, No. 39; Symphony in G minor, No. 40; Symphony in C, "Jupiter," No. 41. . . . Sat, July 19—8:15 pm. Munch cond. Mozart, Litaniae for Chorus and Orch, K. 125 (conducted by Hugh Ross); Mozart, Piano Concerto in C, K. 467 (Lukas Foss, soloist); Schubert, Mass in G.

N.Y. Tribune July 27.

Tanglewood

The Berkshire Festival

* * *

Koussevitzky Tribute

By Arthur Berger

LENOX, Mass., July 25.—The birthday of the late Serge Koussevitzky was observed here this afternoon with a chamber music program at the Lenox Library and a brief ceremony at his grave. Dr. Koussevitzky, founder of both the Berkshire festival and the Berkshire Music Center, which is affiliated with the festival, is buried in the Cemetery-On-The-Hill, which is attached to the Church-On-The-Hill, the handsome white wooden structure that has been standing on the road toward Pittsfield since 1805. At 4 p. m., students of the Berkshire Music Center gathered to place a wreath on his grave and members of the choral department sang the final hymnal portion of "I Behold an House," by Lukas Foss, under the composer's direction.

Half an hour later, the Koussevitzky foundation sponsored an "Hour of Remembrance" in Sedgewick Hall of the library in the center of town. Mrs. Koussevitzky, the conductor's widow, presented a check of $2,000 to the Lenox Library Association on beholf of the Koussevitzky Foundation, as well as some of the minature scores in his collection. This was in expression of Dr. Koussevitzky's gratitude for the co-operation the library gave to students of the Boston Sypmhpony, and William Kroll of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, played excerpts from work of Beethoven and Bruckner, and there was a showing of a Tanglewood film and a "March of Time" based on Tanglewood.

Falling right at the mid-point of the summer session of the Berkshire music center here at Tanglewood, Dr. Koussevitzky's birthday was always an occasion for an observance in the school. There would be a reception on the Tanglewood grounds or at his home overlooking Tanglewood, and some of his young colleagues on the faculty and students would write music to observe the occasion. Last night, the Berkshire music center orchestra, consisting of students in Department One, The orchestra, which is an especially fine one this year, played music by composers "who have a special debt of gratitude to Dr. Koussevitzky." Four of them were Americans, whose music Dr. Koussevitzky zealously promoted, namely, William Schuman, Samuel Barber, Leonard Bernstein and Aaron Copland. The fifth, young Ben-Zion Orgad, is from Israel, whose "Biblical cantata" was represented by two movements.

[43]

'Melting Pot' Festival Brews Rich Music

SU. JUL 2 1952

U. S., Foreign Students at School in Berkshires Play With Skill of Top Symphony Orchestras

This is the first of two articles. The second will appear Monday.

By WALTER MONFRIED
Of The Journal Staff

Stockbridge, Mass.—They look for all the world like a ragged regiment of youngsters that you could recruit on any high school campus or any Milwaukee playground. They are white children and black, and likewise brown and yellow. They wear blue jeans, khakis, T shirts and sports jackets.

But call them to attention on the stage of the vast circular shed on the Tanglewood estate here. Their fiddles and horns are hoisted easily, naturally into place. Their leader—he may be a fellow student or he may be a teacher—whisks his baton into the downbeat, and out pours the music.

It is a perfectly incredible, flabbergasting accumulation of lovely sound they produce. Here is a motley crew of youngsters giving forth with all the power and richness and cohesive skill of a top flight symphony orchestra—an orchestra such as any big city of the nation would be proud to have. You see it and you hear it, but you still can't quite believe.

220 Green Acres

This Tanglewood, with its 220 green and glistening acres set upon a little lake amid the Berkshire hills of western Massachusetts, represents a uniquely happy marriage of nature and art.

More and more of the nation's tourists are finding their way here each summer, by the tens of thousands. Tanglewood presents welcome images to every sort of caller. The name itself was a coinage of its most famous resident, Nathaniel Hawthorne.

Today it means the foremost musical festival of the western hemisphere, and also an advanced school that draws hundreds of young persons from nearly all 48 states, and many foreign nations. All the acumen and experience gained at Tanglewood will augment the musical resources of hundreds of communities. It is a haven as valuable as it is unique.

French Master Listens

The other day this visitor sat, at a rehearsal, alongside Charles Munch, the celebrated master of French orchestras and the Boston symphony, and his Tanglewood aide, Leonard Bernstein, a free lance conductor and composer and perennial whiz kid of the musical scene. Munch, gray of mane and gentle of mien, furrowed his brows and puffed continually on cigarets as he gazed at the young players stabbing intrepidly through Prokofiev and Beethoven and the "Don Quixote" of Richard Strauss.

"What talent, what assurance, what aplomb," he murmured with a nod, "how beautifully they phrase."

"Right!" agreed Bernstein. "They may look like high school kids, but they play like seasoned professionals, which they will be in a few years. They ought to be good. They're the pick of the entire country, and 20 other countries, too. Yes, there's a place for them in music. That solo cellist there, Bob Sayre of Pittsburgh—he's already had experience with the Cleveland orchestra and next season he goes to the first desk with the San Antonio symphony."

There Celebrities Abound

As a Milwaukeean strolls the Tanglewood groves past the dozens of sheds, little and big, which house the music makers' sessions, he finds himself like one on a busy Hollywood lot — stumbling over celebrities. The stocky, mercurial Bernstein is here and there and everywhere. Zestfully he recalled his guest conducting stint with the Chicago orchestra in Milwaukee a year ago.

"We really shocked 'em with Stravinsky's 'Rite of Springtime,' didn't we?" he exclaimed. After this summer, he plans to give up conducting for some months to concentrate on composing. His recent "Trouble in Haiti," a quasi-jazz opera, won some attention, and he is looking toward another Broadway effort on the order of his "On the Town." The Bernsteins are expecting their first child in late summer.

Prince of Accompanists

A little man with springy step is recognized as Seymour Lipkin, a teacher of conductors who is recalled in Milwaukee as a brilliant touring piano soloist, a winner of the Rachmaninoff prize. "Milwaukee I like for its kind audiences and because my good friend Dr. John Wolmut teaches opera there," he said crisply. "He and I were colleagues at Curtis school in Philadelphia for years."

Striding to keep a lecture date, the stocky Paul Ulanowsky is recognized. A prince of accompanists, he has adorned numerous recitals of the greatest of singers at the Milwaukee Auditorium and the Pabst theater. "I stay here in the Berkshires with my family each summer; I teach here, too—a wonderful arrangement," he explains. "In the fall I will go to Australia, and on the way I will stop off at Santa Barbara and make recordings with Lotte Lehmann." Mme. Lehman and the pianist are a familiar team in many concert halls.

Ross Drills Singers

The slim, bald man who looks like former Prime Minister Attlee, turns out to be Hugh Ross, the noted New York choral master who drills singing groups at Tanglewood. He and his New York chorus joined with conductor Dimitri Mitropoulos and the New York philharmonic recently in a radio version of the startling modern opera, "Wozzeck," which was voted an outstanding event of musical radio history. He refuses to take much credit. "The improvement in young people's voices in the last 10 years has been remarkable," he points out.

In a sizable, open front shed, a familiar Slavic voice is heard from afar. It is found to belong to the baldish, bubbling Boris Goldovsky, an operatic director whose chats in Metropolitan opera intermissions are enjoyed by millions of Saturday radio listeners. He is by trade a professor of opera in Boston and this afternoon he is rehearsing several groups for impending operas, "Figaro," "Aida" and "The Telephone."

He plays the piano fluently as he sings and acts out every role, male and female, high and low, sometimes to an effect that splits his students with laughter.

"Stick Like Glue"

"Give me that top note again," he pleads. To another vocalist: "Stick to the dots like glue," and to a sturdy baritone: "You take all that long line without a breath—how do you do it?" he inquires wonderingly. "You see what can be done if you go about it sensibly and without bellowing."

A strange warfare of clashing sounds is fought out each day over Tanglewood's meadows. In this shed the Goldovsky operas are sung out boldly, blending not unpleasantly with the voices of 50 girls doing madrigals directly behind the "opera house."

From the rustic theater across the field pour forth the opulent tones of the Boston symphony orchestra, rehearsing Mozart to the strident commentaries of conductor Munch himself. A dozen other sheds in the vicinity emit the pounding of pianos, the twittering of sopranos, the blasting of trombones and the sweet scraping of string ensembles. Truly, it is a conservatory on a vast scale, musical and geographical.

Work World Renowned

Its teachers are simply the best procurable. Some dozens of the expert instrumentalists of the Boston orchestra teach their respective specialties to the youngsters. If a youth shows a flair for composing, he can work, side by side, for hours on end, with Aaron Copland, a onetime Brooklyn boy who is generally rated the leading American composer of serious music.

His "Salon Mexico" and "Appalachian Spring" and other music that he has written for movies, operas, ballet and symphony orchestras are world renowned. A tall, gangling person with an ever present smile, Copland remarks that he is composing an ambitious piano work, and that he has a commission to write a television opera, when a suitable libretto turns up.

150,000 at Concerts

Copland is second to Munch as director of the entire Berkshire music center. He has been with it from the start and proudly points out that "no talented student is now prevented from attending the center for lack of tuition money. This year for the first time certain advanced sections of the school are being placed on an all-scholarship basis." Somehow the backers of the great Boston orchestra find means to help the youngsters in the Berkshire precincts, too.

Tanglewood, then, is a twofold enterprise. Its public concerts, which began July 5 and will close Aug. 10, draw some 150,000 hearers a year, due mainly to the magical qualities of the Boston orchestra. Its 400 students, many of high talent, present dozens of concerts and operas open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, who pay a few dollars.

The late Serge Koussevitzky, who won thousands of Milwaukee admirers through his visits with the orchestra in the 1940's, was the chief architect and organizer of this unique project. How it came about will be discussed in another dispatch.

Here are a few of the 400 young persons who take the intensive summer music courses at the celebrated Tanglewood estate, which lies between the small towns of Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. They are from the University of Illinois. At Tanglewood, the Boston symphony orchestra gives public concerts until Aug. 10, and the students of the center give dozens of programs. Several of the nation's most eminent musicians train them.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

JUL 1 2 1952

Rubinstein as Soloist

Special to The News

TANGLEWOOD, Lennox, Mass., July 12.—[illegible] Rubinstein will be soloist in Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 2 in B Flat with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival Aug. 7. Charles Munch will conduct.

Springfield-Republic. July 27

Memory of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Honored at Tanglewood Program

Chamber Music Played at Lenox Library as Birthday Tribute; Gift Presented for Purchase of Books

(Special to The Republican)

Berkshire Hills, July 26—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the late beloved director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which for the past 15 years has staged the annual music festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, had his birthday honored today by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation with the latter arranging a musical program at the Lenox Library. The library also received a check for $2000 to be used to make additions to its collection of books on music, records and scores. Miss Irene M. Poirier, librarian, received a letter this week from Mrs. Koussevitzky, widow of the late director telling her of the action taken by the Foundation board recently when it voted to make the $2000 gift.

For the occasion this afternoon a chamber music program was arranged with members of the faculty at Berkshire Music Center providing the music. The program consisted of Beethoven-Cavatina from Quartet opus 130, presented by William Kroll, Joseph de Pasquale, Richard Burgin, and Jean Bedetti. Bruckner-Adagio from the Quintet for two violins, two violas and cello. The quartet was joined in this presentation by Eugene Lehner. As another feature, movie films of Tanglewood, and the "March of Time" were shown in Sedgwick Hall in the library.

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JUL 12 1952

MUSIC

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL — Thru Sun, Aug 10—Boston Symphony Orch. At Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Weekend concerts in the Theatre-Concert Hall, thru July 20. Concerts in the Shed begin July 24. Ticket info from Boston Symphony Orch., Inc., Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Lenox 600. Info on accommodations in the Berkshires from Berkshire Hills Conference, Pittsfield, Mass. General adm to grounds $2, on sale the day of each concert. Sat, July 12—8:15. Munch, cond. Rameau, Suite from "Dardanus"; Couperin, Concert dans le gout theatral; Purcell, Fantasia in A for Strings; Vivaldi, Concerto Grosso in D minor, Opus 3, No. 11; Lalande, "De Profundis," for Chorus and Orch (conducted by Hugh Ross). . . . Sun, July 13—3 pm. Munch, cond. Mozart program: Symphony in E-flat, No. 39; Symphony in G minor, No. 40; Symphony in C, "Jupiter," No. 41. . . . Sat, July 19—8:15 pm. Munch cond. Mozart, Litaniae for Chorus and Orch, K. 125 (conducted by Hugh Ross); Mozart, Piano Concerto in C, K. 467 (Lukas Foss, soloist); Schubert, Mass in G.

N. Y. Tribune July 27.

Tanglewood

The Berkshire Festival

* * *

Koussevitzky Tribute

By Arthur Berger

LENOX, Mass., July 25.—The birthday of the late Serge Koussevitzky was observed here this afternoon with a chamber music program at the Lenox Library and a brief ceremony at his grave. Dr. Koussevitzky, founder of both the Berkshire festival and the Berkshire Music Center, which is affiliated with the festival, is buried in the Cemetery-On-The-Hill, which is attached to the Church-On-The-Hill, the handsome white wooden structure that has been standing on the road toward Pittsfield since 1805. At 4 p. m., students of the Berkshire Music Center gathered to place a wreath on his grave and members of the choral department sang the final hymnal portion of "I Behold an House," by Lukas Foss, under the composer's direction.

Half an hour later, the Koussevitzky foundation sponsored an "Hour of Remembrance" in Sedgewick Hall of the library in the center of town. Mrs. Koussevitzky, the conductor's widow, presented a check of $2,000 to the Lenox Library Association on behalf of the Koussevitzky Foundation, as well as some of the minature scores in his collection. This was in expression of Dr. Koussevitzky's gratitude for the co-operation the library gave to students of the Boston Sypmhpony, and William Kroll of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, played excerpts from work of Beethoven and Bruckner, and there was a showing of a Tanglewood film and a "March of Time" based on Tanglewood.

Falling right at the mid-point of the summer session of the Berkshire music center here at Tanglewood, Dr. Koussevitzky's birthday was always an occasion for an observance in the school. There would be a reception on the Tanglewood grounds or at his home overlooking Tanglewood, and some of his young colleagues on the faculty and students would write music to observe the occasion. Last night, the Berkshire music center orchestra, consisting of students in Department One. The orchestra, which is an especially fine one this year, played music by composers "who have a special debt of gratitude to Dr. Koussevitzky." Four of them were Americans, whose music Dr. Koussevitzky zealously promoted, namely, William Schuman, Samuel Barber, Leonard Bernstein and Aaron Copland. The fifth, young Ben-Zion Orgad, is from Israel, whose "Biblical cantata" was represented by two movements.

M— Monday, July 21, 195

JUL 1952 ★ HOME

Literary Lions' Jungle, That Was Tanglewood

This is the second of two articles on the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

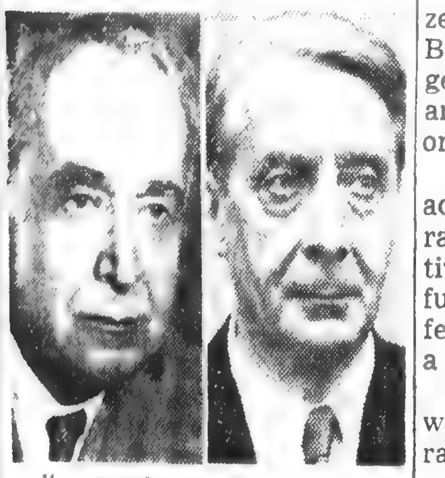
By WALTER MONFRIED
Of The Journal Staff

Stockbridge, Mass. — This surpassingly handsome region of Berkshire hills, little lakes, enormous lawns, symphony concerts, operas, ballets, theater and other arts hardly looks like a jungle. But a century ago it was called "the jungle of literary lions," and the artistic impulse started in that era has never waned.

Nathaniel Hawthorne created the word Tanglewood, which now means a music festival and training center of world renown. Hawthorne himself, a nervous and changeable genius, admitted that he couldn't tell "Yankee Doodle" from "Hail Columbia," but he seems to have inspired the entire large enterprise of today.

In 1848, a presidential election cost him his job in the Salem (Mass.) custom house. So he wrote a book which has achieved some slight acclaim, "The Scarlet Letter." Then, broke and exhausted, he headed for the Berkshires to recuperate, and with his family took residence in a little frame house on Lake Mahkeenac, otherwise known as the Stockbridge Bowl. The house was on the estate now called Tanglewood, which was owned by friends, the well to do William A. Tappan family of Boston. In his two years here he wrote or planned "The House of Seven Gables," "The Wonder Book" and "Tanglewood Tales."

A few miles way, in Pittsfield—



Koussevitsky Munch

the chief city of this region—Herman Melville was working his Arrowhead farm and writing "Moby Dick." The two writers, neither of much renown then, met at a picnic and became fast friends. Melville dedicated "Moby Dick" to Hawthorne.

Henry Wadsworth Longfellow came up to join the circle. In a house on the site of the Pittsfield high school he was married and wrote "The Clock on the Stairs." Oliver Wendell Holmes, sr., the beloved poet, humorist and physician, had ancestral acres hereabouts. In Pittsfield he built a house for $4,000, which now is owned by the family that makes the paper of our paper money. Holmes visited Hawthorne here, and exclaimed: "Is there another man in all America who ever had so great an honor as to have the author of 'The Scarlet Letter' hold his horse?"

Music Came In

Hawthorne could never make up his mind whether he liked Berkshire residence. Sometimes he praised the region mightily. Again he would say: "I detest it! I hate Berkshire with my whole soul and would joyfully see its mountains laid flat." Actually he loved the area and was happy to return to the coast.

Ellen Tappan inherited Tanglewood. After she was married to a musician, Richard Dixey, musical programs began to vie with literary pursuits.

In the early years of this century Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge moved to Pittsfield with her ailing husband, and began to sponsor chamber music concerts which have made her name revered internationally in music circles. At South Mountain, in Pittsfield, the Coolidge Foundation still presents concerts of small string groups and soloists. The Library of Congress now administers her foundation, and the concerts are a part of the annual Berkshire festivals.

Henry Hadley, a noted American composer and conductor, loved the Berkshires and wanted to present outdoor concerts here. He enlisted two energetic Stockbridge women, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith and Mrs. Owen Johnson, and they won enough supporters for the first Berkshire festival—three days in August of 1934. Sixty-five men of the New York philhormonic played programs on a Stockbridge farm, and the next year 85 members of the orchestra, along with a local chorus of 300, appeared in the outdoor festival.

In 1936 Hadley was ill. So the Stockbridge women invited Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston orchestra to carry on, and they played three concerts in August, on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Festival Firmly Rooted

By that time the festival was firmly rooted. In the fall of 1936 the women descendants of the Tappan-Dixey clan, who had followed the Boston orchestra's concerts zealously both in Boston and the Berkshires, decided upon a grand gesture. They gave Tanglewood and its 220 acres to the Boston orchestra.

With this magnificently varied acreage of grove, meadow, woods, ravine and formal garden, the festival sponsors could really plan a future. Conductor Koussevitzky fell in love with the place and built a mansion in near-by Lenox.

The Tanglewood festival of 1937 was played in a tent. A heavy rainstorm tore through the top and nearly submerged the orchestra. "Enough of this tent business," Koussevitzky fumed, and Miss Robinson Smith sagely commented: "As this is going to be a national festival, we need a suitable hall." So they raised $80,000 and hired the late Eliel Saarinen to design it.

Friends of Sibelius

The Finnish born Saarinen, a close friend of the composer Sibelius, lived in Detroit and was widely known in Wisconsin. He designed Milwaukee's projected war memorial, and his sons probably will carry it out. His Tanglewood shed was ready for the summer of 1938. It is a plain, spacious arena with a paneled wood shell behind the stage that provides spectacularly fine acoustics. Not only can 6,000 persons under the roof hear perfectly, but thousands of others scattered on the lawn as far as a block away can catch every tone and shade—and without amplifiers.

"Our Tanglewood should become a great school," the restless Koussevitzky decided around 1940—and so a great school it became.

The Rockefeller Foundation provided grants for two years. Koussevitzky, a man of wealth, set up a foundation to help the work along and other friends of Tanglewood chipped in. Sheds of all sizes sprang up all over the grounds to house classrooms, concerts, rehearsals.

Had 3,000 Students

Koussevitzky directed the whole business until his death a year ago, and Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston orchestra, has taken over. Hawthorne's little red "shanty," as his wife called it, burned down long ago, and the National Federation of Women's Music Clubs has "restored" it. Now it is a studio for pianists

About 3,000 young people, all states and 44 countries, studied at Tanglewood scho its 10 summers. Many of its "a ni" had made uncommon succ and they are still under m age. Among them are:

Leonard Bernstein, comp conductor, who started as a dent and remains as a teache has been a guest conductor ir waukee.

Thor Johnson, a native of consin, conductor of the Ci nati symphony, who will aj in Milwaukee's Washington July 29.

Walter Hendl, conductor o

Dallas symphony, who will be Mil-began her climb to fame here. Tanglewood's own programs will be carried on until Aug. 10.

A word of caution to prospective visitors: The traffic to the Lenox-Stockbridge region has been so heavy that you would do well to send a line of inquiry to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
AMSTERDAM NEWS

JUL 19 1952

Berkshire Festival

In the beautiful rolling green hills surrounding Lenox, Mass., is Tanglewood, the site of the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center, the latter initiated in 1940 by Mr. Serge Koussevitzky and founded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to provide an opportunity for music study in connection with the festival concerts. More than 400 students from 41 states and 16 countries are now at Tanglewood to spend six weeks of concentrated study at the 10th session of the Center. Dr. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, is director of the Center, and there is a distinguished faculty of 36, including Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Luigi Dallapiccola, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross, Richard Burgin, Ingolf Dahl, William Kroll and first chairs of the Boston orchestra.

We are proud that many Negro artists and students have benefited through scholarships and top performances on the festival programs. The first was Dorothy Maynor, and others have folowed, Ellabelle Davis, Carol Brice, Adele Addison, Julia Perry, Kermit Moore, Robert McFerrin, and many students who have played instruments in orchestral concerts, conducted student choral concerts, and in Miss Perry's case, gave a full program of her compositions. Dr. Munch will conduct orchestra concerts in the Music Shed, Sun. afternoon, July 20; Thurs. eve., July 24; Monteux conducting, Sat. eve., July 26; and Munch, Sun., July 26, which includes Dallipiccola's "The Prisoner" with chorus directed by Hugh Ross. Helen Colbert sang one of the leading roles in this opera when it was produced at Juilliard. Howard Swanson's "Short Symphony" will be heard on Thurs. eve. Aug. 7, with Artur Rubinstein, soloist in Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 2, in B flat major. "Tanglewood on Parade" Aug. 1, celebrating the 10th anniversary of the Music Center. Leonard Berstein will conduct the Boston Symphony for the Koussevitzky Memorial Concert, Sat. eve., Aug. 9; and the Berlioz Requiem, with chorus, will close the Festival, Sun. afternoon, Aug. 10. Andrew McKinley, tenor, soloist.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 20 1952

BIRTHDAY PROGRAM AT LENOX LIBRARY

Lenox, July 19—The Koussevitzky Music Foundation will mark Saturday, July 26, the birthday of the late Serge Koussevitzky, by a program at the Lenox Library. The foundation will present a gift of scores, music, recordings and books on music to the Lenox Library, which has co-operated in many ways with the Berkshire Music Center, the school established at Tanglewood by Dr. Koussevitzky.

The gift of the foundation will enlarge the music collection of the library for the use of the Berkshire Music Center students and of the community in which Dr. Koussevitzky lived and carried on so much of his work. The scores and recordings include many of the works on the programs of the festival concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and works being performed by the student orchestra, opera department and chamber music groups.

The program of the birthday remembrance occasion will include chamber music played by members of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center and motion picture films of Tanglewood and the March of Time.

As in previous years, the Koussevitzky Music Foundation has made a grant to the Berkshire Music Center to be used in providing aid to scholarship students.

Festival Program Tomorrow Dedicated to Koussevitzky

Berkshire Eagle 1952

TANGLEWOOD — Music that Serge Koussevitzky loved and often conducted will form the program tomorrow evening of the Berkshire Festival concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Leonard Bernstein conducting. The conductor and two of the three composers represented were his friends. The concert is dedicated to him.

Aaron Copland's Symphony No. 3, completed in September, 1946, was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and is dedicated "To the memory of my dear friend, Natalie Koussevitzky." It was first performed at Symphony Hall, Boston, by Dr. Koussevitzky only three weeks after it was completed, and several times later.

Mr. Copland, who is assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center, as well as head of the composition faculty there, began work upon the score in the summer of 1944 in a small Mexican village. When asked what it means he replied, "I prefer to let the music 'speak for itself.'"

The opening piece by Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach, concerto in D major for strings, was arranged for orchestra by Maximilian Steinberg more than a century after it was written. Dr. Koussevitzky became acquainted with it when he heard it performed by the Society of Ancient Instruments in Paris. It was at his suggestion that Mr. Steinberg made the orchestral arrangement.

A friend and admirer of Jean Sibelius, whom he visited in Finland, conducting in Helsinki, Dr. Koussevitzky conducted his seven symphonies in Boston, repeating the Fifth a number of times. He performed it last in November, 1950, when he returned to Symphony Hall as conductor emeritus of the orchestra he led for 25 years.

Mr. Bernstein, a close friend as well as pupil of Dr. Koussevitzky, succeeded him as teacher of conducting at the Berkshire Music Center. A pianist and composer as well as a conductor, Mr. Bernstein has assisted in directing the production of his "Trouble in Tahiti," the "little opera in seven scenes" that will have the first and second performances of the revised version tonight at 8.15 and 9.45 for the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Tomorrow night's program will be:

Andante from concerto in D major .... C.P.E. Bach
Symphony No. 3 ...... Copland
Symphony No. 5 ...... Sibelius

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 22 1952

Berkshire Center Benefit Set Aug. 1

Program Is Announced for 'Tanglewood on Parade'

The annual "Tanglewood on Parade" program for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will be held at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from 6 to 11 o'clock Frdiay, Aug. 1.

As in previous summers, the first part of the evening will illustrate the center's activities with concerts by a student orchestra, a chorus and a chamber music group; there will also be a performance of Andre Singer's choreographic contata, "Alcottiana." After tn interval for a picnic on the Tanglewood lawn, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert with alumni of of the center as conductors and soloists.

The program includes the last movement of Lukas Foss's "The Prairie" under James Aliferis; Chausson's "Poeme," under Howard Shanet, with Jacob Krachmalnick, the Philadelphia Orchestra's concertmaster, as soloist; Mendelssohn's piano concerto in G minor under Mr. Foss, with Seymour Lipkin as soloist, and the last act of Bizet's "Carmen," with Leonard Bernstein conducting and Mildred Miller, David Lloyd and James Pease as soloists with the Berkshire Festival Chorus.

Waltzing on the lawn will follow. Holders of box and reserved sea tickets will be entitled to attend performance of Pergolesi's opera "Livietta and Tracolo" in the Tanglewood garden at 4 o'clock. Tickets are on sale at the Tanglewoo boxoffice. The Berkshire Mus Center, the school established b the late Serge Koussevitsky in 194 is holding its tenth sessin. Its ac tivities were suspended in the wa time summers from 1943 to 194 and resumed in 1946.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEV

JUL 23 1952

'Tanglewoo On Parade' Scheduled

The Berkshire Music C will stage its "Tanglewood Parade" program on Friday, A 1, marking the 10th anniversary of the expansion of the Berkshire Music Festival into one of the world's greatest music centers.

Beginning at 6 p. m., the program will continue for five hours, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, distinguished alumni, faculty members and groups of the center participating.

James Aliferis will conduct the orchestra and chorus in the last movement of Lukas Foss "The Prairie." Howard Shanet will conduct for Chausson's "Poeme" for Violin and Orchestra, with Jacob Krachmalnick, concertmaster of the Philadelphia Orchestra, as soloist. For Mendelssohn's Piano Concerto in G Minor, Mr. Foss will conduct and Seymour Lipkin, winner of the Rachmaninoff Award, will be the soloist.

The last act of Bizet's "Carman" will follow, with Leonard Bernstein conducting the orchestra and chorus. The soloists will be Mildred Miller, Metropolitan Opera mezzo soprano; David Lloyd, New York City Center Opera tenor, and James Pease, baritone, now of the Hamburg Opera.

There will be a lawn party and picnic supper in connection with the program, with waltzing on the spacious lawns. Before the concert of the main orchestra in the shed, there will be chamber music in the chamber music hall, the chorus will sing on the chorus hall porch and Singer's "Alcottiano" will have its first performance in the Theater-Concert Hall.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 19 1952

Official Welcome For Boston Symphony

Special to The Hartford Times

Tanglewood Lenox, Mass. — When Charles Munch conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time since their triumphal tour of Europe, Berkshire County will give them an official and an unofficial welcome.

The occasion will be the opening of the major Berkshires Festival in the Tanglewood music shed on July 29; when town and county officials will be guests of honor to hear Beethoven's Third ("Eroica") and Brahms' First Symphonies and to witness the presentation of a resolution of welcome and appreciation to the conductor by Mayor Robert T. Capeless of Pittsfield, the nearest city.

The concert will be the first of nine in the shed on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST

JUL 22 1952

New Haven Offers Tanglewood Trips

Music lovers will have a good opportunity to take in the Sunday afternoon concerts at the famous Tanglewood Bowl in the Berkshires by taking advantage of special low round-trip fares arranged by the New Haven RR. The road is selling round trip rail and bus transportation to Tanglewood and a general admission ticket for the concert at only $6.90 including taxes. A limited number of tickets are available and are on sale at Grand Central Terminal only.

Many people who attend the Berkshire Festival regularly make a feature of picnicking on the lawns surrounding the music shed, obtaining milk, coffee and ice cream on the grounds. Light snacks also are available, or there is time for dinner in Pittsfield before boarding the return train to New York.

327.

[44]

M— Monday, July 21, 195

JUL 1952 HOME

Literary Lions' Jungle, That Was Tanglewood

This is the second of two articles on the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

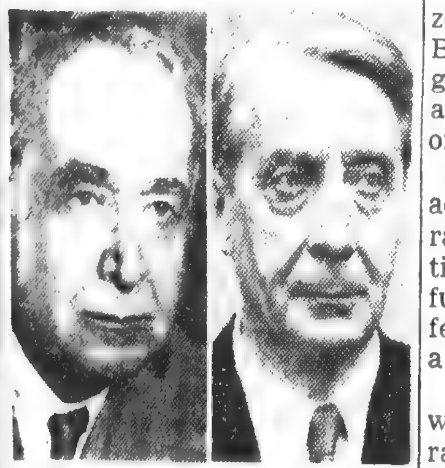
By WALTER MONFRIED
Of The Journal Staff

Stockbridge, Mass. — This surprisingly handsome region of Berkshire hills, little lakes, enormous lawns, symphony concerts, operas, ballets, theater and other arts hardly looks like a jungle. But a century ago it was called "the jungle of literary lions," and the artistic impulse started in that era has never waned.

Nathaniel Hawthorne created the word Tanglewood, which now means a music festival and training center of world renown. Hawthorne himself, a nervous and changeable genius, admitted that he couldn't tell "Yankee Doodle" from "Hail Columbia," but he seems to have inspired the entire large enterprise of today.

In 1848, a presidential election cost him his job in the Salem (Mass.) custom house. So he wrote a book which has achieved some slight acclaim, "The Scarlet Letter." Then, broke and exhausted, he headed for the Berkshires to recuperate, and with his family took residence in a little frame house on Lake Mahkeenac, otherwise known as the Stockbridge Bowl. The house was on the estate now called Tanglewood, which was owned by friends, the well to do William A. Tappan family of Boston. In his two years here he wrote or planned "The House of Seven Gables," "The Wonder Book" and "Tanglewood Tales."

A few miles way, in Pittsfield—the chief city of this region—Herman Melville was working his Arrowhead farm and writing "Moby Dick." The two writers, neither of much renown then, met at a picnic and became fast friends. Melville dedicated "Moby Dick" to Hawthorne.



Koussevitsky Munch

Henry Wadsworth Longfellow came up to join the circle. In a house on the site of the Pittsfield high school he was married and wrote "The Clock on the Stairs." Oliver Wendell Holmes, sr., the beloved poet, humorist and physician had ancestral acres hereabouts. In Pittsfield he built a house for $4,000, which now is owned by the family that makes the paper of our paper money. Holmes visited Hawthorne here, and exclaimed: "Is there another man in all America who ever had so great an honor as to have the author of 'The Scarlet Letter' hold his horse?"

Music Came In

Hawthorne could never make up his mind whether he liked Berkshire residence. Sometimes he praised the region mightily. Again he would say: "I detest it! I hate Berkshire with my whole soul and would joyfully see its mountains laid flat." Actually he loved the sea and was happy to return to the coast.

[illegible] Tappan inherited Tanglewood. After she was married to a musician, Richard Dixey, musical programs began to vie with literary pursuits.

In the early years of this century Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge moved to Pittsfield with her ailing husband, and began to sponsor chamber music concerts which have made her name revered internationally in music circles. At South Mountain, in Pittsfield, the Coolidge Foundation still presents concerts of small string groups and soloists. The Library of Congress now administers her foundation, and the concerts are a part of the annual Berkshire festivals.

Henry Hadley, a noted American composer and conductor, loved the Berkshires and wanted to present outdoor concerts here. He enlisted two energetic Stockbridge women, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith and Mrs. Owen Johnson, and they won enough supporters for the first Berkshire festival—three days in August of 1934. Sixty-five men of the New York philhormonic played programs on a Stockbridge farm, and the next year 85 members of the orchestra, along with a local chorus of 300, appeared in the outdoor festival.

In 1936 Hadley was ill. So the Stockbridge women invited Serge Koussevitzky and his Boston orchestra to carry on, and they played three concerts in August, on the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson.

Festival Firmly Rooted

By that time the festival was firmly rooted. In the fall of 1936 the women descendants of the Tappan-Dixey clan, who had followed the Boston orchestra's concerts zealously both in Boston and the Berkshires, decided upon a grand gesture. They gave Tanglewood and its 220 acres to the Boston orchestra.

With this magnificently varied acreage of grove, meadow, woods, ravine and formal garden, the festival sponsors could really plan a future. Conductor Koussevitzky fell in love with the place and built a mansion in near-by Lenox.

The Tanglewood festival of 1937 was played in a tent. A heavy rainstorm tore through the top and nearly submerged the orchestra. "Enough of this tent business," Koussevitzky fumed, and Miss Robinson Smith sagely commented: "As this is going to be a national festival, we need a suitable hall." So they raised $80,000 and hired the late Eliel Saarinen to design it.

Friends of Sibelius

The Finnish born Saarinen, a close friend of the composer Sibelius, lived in Detroit and was widely known in Wisconsin. He designed Milwaukee's projected war memorial, and his sons probably will carry it out. His Tanglewood shed was ready for the summer of 1938. It is a plain, spacious arena with a paneled wood shell behind the stage that provides spectacularly fine acoustics. Not only can 6,000 persons under the roof hear perfectly, but thousands of others scattered on the lawn as far as a block away can catch every tone and shade—and without amplifiers.

"Our Tanglewood should become a great school," the restless Koussevitzky decided around 1940—and so a great school it became.

The Rockefeller Foundation provided grants for two years. Koussevitzky, a man of wealth, set up a foundation to help the work along and other friends of Tanglewood chipped in. Sheds of all sizes sprang up all over the grounds to house classrooms, concerts, rehearsals.

Had 3,000 Students

Koussevitzky directed the whole business until his death a year ago, and Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston orchestra, has taken over. Hawthorne's little red "shanty," as his wife called it, burned down long ago, and the National Federation of Women's Music Clubs has "restored" it. Now it is a studio for pianists.

About 3,000 young people, from all states and 44 countries, have studied at Tanglewood school in its 10 summers. Many of its "alumni" had made uncommon successes and they are still under middle age. Among them are:

Leonard Bernstein, composer-conductor, who started as a student and remains as a teacher. He has been a guest conductor in Milwaukee.

Thor Johnson, a native of Wisconsin, conductor of the Cincinnati symphony, who will appear in Milwaukee's Washington park July 29.

Walter Hendl, conductor of the Dallas symphony, who will be Milwaukee's guest conductor Aug. 5.

Lorin Maazel, "boy wonder" conductor, who appeared in Milwaukee as a child and who will appear in the Milwaukee Civic Concert association series next season.

Robert Shaw, celebrated leader of choruses.

Eleazar de Carvalho, famed Brazilian maestro, who has guest conducted in Milwaukee.

Robert Whitney, leader of the fast rising Louisville symphony.

Many Opera Singers

David, Poleri, eminent young opera tenor.

Some 20 members of the Metropolitian and New York Center opera companies are from Tanglewood.

And there are assistant conductors and leaders of university orchestras and choruses by the hundreds who have learned much of their craft here.

The dream of Koussevitzy and his stanch women aides has been realized: The Tanglewood sector is a national center of the arts. In near-by Lee, Mass., Ted Shawn leads his annual Jacob's Pillow dance festival, in which famous dancers will be appearing until Aug. 30.

Mrs. Coolidge's top flight chamber ensembles will be playing at Pittsfield July 26, Aug. 17, 24, 31 and Sept. 7.

The Stockbridge summer theater boasts that Katharine Hepburn began her climb to fame here. Tanglewood's own programs will be carried on until Aug. 10.

A word of caution to prospective visitors: The traffic to the Lenox-Stockbridge region has been so heavy that you would do well to send a line of inquiry to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
AMSTERDAM NEWS
JUL 19 1952

Berkshire Festival

In the beautiful rolling green hills surrounding Lenox, Mass., is Tanglewood, the site of the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center, the latter initiated in 1940 by Mr. Serge Koussevitsky and founded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to provide an opportunity for music study in connection with the festival concerts. More than 400 students from 41 states and 16 countries are now at Tanglewood to spend six weeks of concentrated study at the 10th session of the Center. Dr. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony, is director of the Center, and there is a distinguished faculty of 36, including Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Luigi Dallapiccola, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross, Richard Burgin, Ingolf Dahl, William Kroll and first chairs of the Boston orchestra.

We are proud that many Negro artists and students have benefited through scholarships and top performances on the festival programs. The first was Dorothy Maynor, and others have folowed, Ellabelle Davis, Carol Brice, Adele Addison, Julia Perry, Kermit Moore, Robert McFerrin, and many students who have played instruments in orchestral concerts, conducted student choral concerts, and in Miss Perry's case, gave a full program of her compositions. Dr. Munch will conduct orchestra concerts in the Music Shed, Sun. afternoon, July 20; Thurs. eve., July 24; Monteux conducting, Sat. eve., July 26; and Munch, Sun., July 26, which includes Dallipiccola's "The Prisoner" with chorus directed by Hugh Ross. Helen Colbert sang one of the leading roles in this opera when it was produced at Juilliard. Howard Swanson's "Short Symphony" will be heard on Thurs. eve. Aug. 7, with Artur Rubinstein, soloist in Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 2, in B flat major. "Tanglewood on Parade" Aug. 1, celebrating the 10th anniversary of the Music Center. Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Boston Symphony for the Koussevitzsky Memorial Concert, Sat. eve., Aug. 9; and the Berlioz Requiem, with chorus, will close the Festival, Sun. afternoon, Aug. 10. Andrew McKinley, tenor, soloist.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
JUL 20 1952

BIRTHDAY PROGRAM AT LENOX LIBRARY

Lenox, July 19—The Koussevitzky Music Foundation will mark Saturday, July 26, the birthday of the late Serge Koussevitzky, by a program at the Lenox Library. The foundation will present a gift of scores, music, recordings and books on music to the Lenox Library, which has co-operated in many ways with the Berkshire Music Center, the school established at Tanglewood by Dr. Koussevitzky.

The gift of the foundation will enlarge the music collection of the library for the use of the Berkshire Music Center students and of the community in which Dr. Koussevitzky lived and carried on so much of his work. The scores and recordings include many of the works on the programs of the festival concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and works being performed by the student orchestra, opera department and chamber music groups.

The program of the birthday remembrance occasion will include chamber music played by members of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center and motion picture films of Tanglewood and the March of Time.

As in previous years, the Koussevitzky Music Foundation has made a grant to the Berkshire Music Center to be used in providing aid to scholarship students.

By Robert C. Ruark

NEW YORK—Been noticing lately that a lot of producers of consumer goods have been offering the extra added attraction in order to spur sales—like, say, the special ice tray for six bits instead of three bucks, the pint of free orange sherbet with the gallon of ice cream.

It's the happiest and healthiest sign I've seen on the horizon since the Japs quit. It proves that the customer—the man with the dollar bill in his little hand—is beginning to get some polite attention again, and the Good Lord knows it's about time.

The past 10 years may mean a lot of things to a lot of people, but what I believe to be the broadest memory will capsule the fact that the customer was a bum. There were shortages, contrived and actual, and out of the scarcity grew a contempt for the consumer, which was sweeping and bitter.

* * * *

THE MAN WITH the wilted buck had to compete for nearly everything, from hotel space to airplane seats to automobiles to cigarettes to whisky to you name it. When the short supply evaporated and things bounced back to a semi-normalcy, the old habit of contempt remained. The customer had been a timid pleader for so long. His shoulders were bowed from abuse and he was sprained in the wrist from overtipping.

But the pendulum is swinging. The supply has caught up with the demand, in most commodities and Joe Buyer is getting some of his old spunk back. I smile every time I pass one particular empty building in my neighborhood. The greedy owners

5W

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 19 1952

Official Welcome For Boston Symphony

Special to The Hartford Times

Tanglewood Lenox, Mass. — When Charles Munch conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time since their triumphal tour of Europe, Berkshire County will give them an official and an unofficial welcome.

The occasion will be the opening of the major Berkshires Festival in the Tanglewood music shed on July 29; when town and county officials will be guests of honor to hear Beethoven's Third ("Eroica") and Brahms' First Symphonies and to witness the presentation of a resolution of welcome and appreciation to the conductor by Mayor Robert T. Capeless of Pittsfield, the nearest city.

The concert will be the first of nine in the shed on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 22 1952

Berkshire Center Benefit Set Aug. 1

Program Is Announced for 'Tanglewood on Parade'

The annual "Tanglewood on Parade" program for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center will be held at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from 6 to 11 o'clock Frdiay, Aug. 1.

As in previous summers, the first part of the evening will illustrate the center's activities with concerts by a student orchestra, a chorus and a chamber music group; there will also be a performance of Andre Singer's choreographic contata, "Alcottiana." After tn interval for a picnic on the Tanglewood lawn, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert with alumni of of the center as conductors and soloists.

The program includes the last movement of Lukas Foss's "The Prairie" under James Aliferis; Chausson's "Poeme," under Howard Shanet, with Jacob Krachmalnick, the Philadelphia Orchestra's concertmaster, as soloist; Mendelssohn's piano concerto in G minor under Mr. Foss, with Seymour Lipkin as soloist, and the last act of Bizet's "Carmen," with Leonard Bernstein conducting and Mildred Miller, David Lloyd and James Pease as soloists with the Berkshire Festival Chorus.

Waltzing on the lawn will follow. Holders of box and reserved seat tickets will be entitled to attend a performance of Pergolesi's opera "Livietta and Tracolo" in the Tanglewood garden at 4 o'clock. Tickets are on sale at the Tanglewood boxoffice. The Berkshire Music Center, the school established by the late Serge Koussevitsky in 1940 is holding its tenth sessin. Its activities were suspended in the wartime summers from 1943 to 1945 and resumed in 1946.

ALBANY, N. Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
JUL 23 1952

'Tanglewood On Parade' Scheduled

The Berkshire Music Center will stage its "Tanglewood on Parade" program on Friday, Aug 1, marking the 10th anniversary of the expansion of the Berkshire Music Festival into one of the world's greatest music centers.

Beginning at 6 p. m., the program will continue for five hours, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, distinguished alumni, faculty members and groups of the center participating.

James Aliferis will conduct the orchestra and chorus in the last movement of Lukas Foss "The Prairie." Howard Shanet will conduct for Chausson's "Poeme" for Violin and Orchestra, with Jacob Krachmalnick, concertmaster of the Philadelphia Orchestra, as soloist. For Mendelssohn's Piano Concerto in G Minor, Mr. Foss will conduct and Seymour Lipkin, winner of the Rachmaninoff Award, will be the soloist.

The last act of Bizet's "Carman" will follow, with Leonard Bernstein conducting the orchestra and chorus. The soloists will be Mildred Miller, Metropolitan Opera mezzo soprano; David Lloyd, New York City Center Opera tenor, and James Pease, baritone, now of the Hamburg Opera.

There will be a lawn party and picnic supper in connection with the program, with waltzing on the spacious lawns. Before the concert of the main orchestra in the shed, there will be chamber music in the chamber music hall, the chorus will sing on the chorus hall porch and Singer's "Alcottiano" will have its first performance in the Theater-Concert Hall.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST
JUL 22 1952

New Haven Offers Tanglewood Trips

Music lovers will have a good opportunity to take in the Sunday afternoon concerts at the famous Tanglewood Bowl in the Berkshires by taking advantage of special low round-trip fares arranged by the New Haven RR. The road is selling round trip rail and bus transportation to Tanglewood and a general admission ticket for the concert at only $6.90 including taxes. A limited number of tickets are available and are on sale at Grand Central Terminal only.

Many people who attend the Berkshire Festival regularly make a feature of picnicking on the lawns surrounding the music shed, obtaining milk, coffee and ice cream on the grounds. Light snacks also are available, or there is time for dinner in Pittsfield before boarding the return train to New York.

[44]

N.Y. Staat

N. Y. STAAT

Aus der Musikwelt

Von FRED LOW

Monteux dirigiert in Tanglewood

(Sonderbericht für die "New Yorker Staats-Zeitung und Herold")

LENOX, 28. Juli. — Pierre Monteux dirigierte das Boston Symphonie-Orchester im Samstag-Abendkonzert in Tanglewood; er hatte drei Werke aus verschiedenen Jahrhunderten für sein Programm gewählt, Cimarosas Ouvertüre zu "Die heimliche Ehe", Schuberts siebente Symphonie (C-Dur) und Stravinskys "Le Sacre du Printemps".

Monteux erwies sich als Meister aller drei Stilarten; jede Nuance der graziösen Musik Cimarosas kam zum Vorschein, die Melodien heben sich transparent von den Verzierungen der Begleitung ab und die delikaten Legatofiguren der Geigen waren von den Bostoner Musikern prächtig gespielt. Dieselbe Klarheit und Transparenz traten auch in der Wiedergabe der Schubert-Symphonie hervor; wir haben dieses Werk, das als die "große" Symphonie des Komponisten betrachtet wird, schon lange nicht so hervorragend gehört.

Das Hornthema des ersten Satzes, das den Reigen der Melodien eröffnet, wird durch die Kontraste besonders effektvoll, und die Streicherpassagen, das Staccato der Oboen und Fagotte, die Steigerung bis zum Fortissimo-Schluß des Satzes sind in der Interpretation des Dirigenten von unvergleichlicher Wirkung. Montreux erreichte im Andante con moto, dessen Hauptthema von der Oboe wunderschön gebracht wurde, und im rhythmisch ausgezeichnet vorgetragenen Scherzo die Höhepunkte; er versteht auch die etwas lang ausgesponnenen Phrasen des Finale durch ein beschwingteres Tempo und kluge Nuancierung hervorragend zu gestalten. Der überaus herzliche Beifall nach der Symphonie zeigte dem Dirigenten und seinen Musikern die Anerkennung des Publikums für die ausgezeichnete Leistung.

Mit Stravinskys "Le Sacre du Printemps" kam der Abend zum grandiosen Abschluß; man kennt die Vorgeschichte dieses Werkes, das von Monteux bei der Erstaufführung in Paris vor 39 Jahren geleitet wurde. Der historisch gewordene Theaterskandal der Premiere und die Erfolgsserie der folgenden Jahre haben immer wieder Monteux als Dirigenten des Stravinsky-Ballettes gesehen. Er hat auch anläßlich der Europareise der Bostoner "Le Sacre du Printemps" in Paris am 8. Mai aufgeführt und gemeinsam mit dem anwesenden Komponisten begeisterte Ovationen erhalten.

Das Publikum der Berkshire-Musikfeste bereitete dem Dirigenten ebenfalls enthusiastische Kundgebungen. Die Wiedergabe ist in jeder Beziehung beispielgebend; Rhythmik und Dynamik werden der Komposition bis in die kleinsten Details gerecht und der Aufbau des Werkes, die Durchführung und die prächtige Steigerung zeigen den Meisterdirigenten, der sich von jeher für Stravinsky eingesetzt und sehr wesentlich zum Verständnis seiner Werke beigetragen hat.

Sonntagskonzert unter Munchs Leitung

Charles Munch leitete das Nachmittagskonzert am Sonntag in César Francks symphonischem Stück aus "Redemption", der C-Dur Symphonie von Bizet und den "Daphine et Chloe" Suiten von Ravel. Hugh Ross dirigierte ein Ensemble der Bostoner und den Festival Chorus in "Three Songs of Captivity" von Luigi Dallapiccola, der Lehrer der Kompositionsklassen des Berkshire Music Center ist. Das Werk ist für gemischten Chor, zwei Harfen, zwei Klaviere und Schlagwerk im Zwölftonsystem geschrieben; der Komponist wendet aber diese Technik frei an und findet seinen eigenen originellen Stil. Die Themen zeigen Reichtum der Erfindung und die Komposition erweist das große Können des italienischen Musikers. Dallapiccola konnte sich für den Beifall des Publikums, der auch der ausgezeichneten Wiedergabe galt, persönlich bedanken.

Gedenkfeier für Koussevitzky

Eine eindrucksvolle Gedenkfeier in der Sedgwick Hall der Lenox Library erinnerte an den verstorbenen Dirigenten und Begründer des Berkshire Music Center. Die Witwe Koussevitzkys, die von John P. Gould, Präsident der Library, begrüßt wurde, übergab dem Institut eine Spende von dem Institut eine Spende von $2000 sowie eine große Sammlung von Musikwerken und Schallplatten aus der "Koussevitzky Musik-Stiftung" in Anerkennung der großen kulturellen Dienste der Lenox Library. Der 26. Juli war der Geburtstag des Dirigenten, und Frau Koussevitzky hat diesen Tag als das geeignetste Datum angesehen, um ihre großzügige Spende anzukündigen. Vor der Feier in der Library vereinten sich die Freunde und Verehrer Koussevitzkys in einer kurzen aber eindrucksvollen Kundgebung am Grabe des Musikers, in der Congregational Church on the Hill, bei der der Chor des Berkshire Music Center mitwirkte und ein Kranz am Grabe niedergelegt wurde.

CE MONITOR, BOSTON, SATURDAY, JULY 26, 1952 Art—Music—Theater

—Boston Symphony Concerts at Tanglewood

Munch Offers Programs of Chamber Works

By Jules Wolffers

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Memories of Serge Koussevitzky, who founded the Berkshire Music Center 10 years ago, were evoked by his successor, Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the opening exercises of the Tanglewood school.

Calling on the students who come from most of the states and many foreign countries to follow in Koussevitzky's footsteps, Mr. Munch urged that they carry on the responsibility of expressing the inner life of their respective nations.

With Mr. Munch on the podium, more than 3,800 persons were present for the opening concert July 5. Twelve hundred filled the Theater-Concert Hall; the remainder sat outside on the beautiful grounds.

It was his consideration for this outside audience that probably prompted Mr. Munch to present Bach's finely-grained and intimate "Musical Offering" in an orchestral version. This blowing up of the erudite music produced some strange effects, the beautiful violin-flute sonata, in particular, emerging as a full-blown concerto grosso of the period.

But if the realization of the opening work was open to question, there was little but praise for the remainder of the all-Bach list. The conductor provided an excellent accompaniment for the splendid if not altogether evenly-matched playing of Ruth Posselt and Richard Burgin in the Concerto for Two Violins and Orchestra. The closing Suite No. 3 in D major was strikingly projected.

The second program the following day was absorbing from start to finish. Together with the Handel Concerto Grosso for String Orchestra, Op. 6, No. 4, and the Bach Cantata No. 140, Mr. Munch programmed two rarities—Symphony in C major by Karl Ditters von Dittersdorf, and the Symphony No. 3 by C. P. E. Bach.

While Dittersdorf is little more than a name to most musicians, this worthy contemporary of Mozart was an eminent figure in his day. It was interesting to hear the bright, perky, and bustling, if not significant, little work as an example of better-than-average composition of the period.

Bach's most eminent son was a musician of rare talent whose products greatly influenced Haydn and Mozart. His Symphony proved to be an effective piece of musical craftsmanship.

Hugh Ross Conducts

Hugh Ross made his first Festival appearance on this program, conducting the Berkshire Festival Chorus through a devoted and spirited reading of the J. S. Bach masterpiece. Among the soloists, Sarah Fleming sang her soprano sections with an affecting and searching quality. Mac Morgan, baritone, and John McCollum, tenor, brought a blend of affirmation, reverence, and expressiveness to their contributions.

Mr. Munch turned the attention of his audience to early French music the following week. The conductor interprets this music with entire felicity as was shown by his deft handling of the sparkling Rameau suite from the opera, "Dardanus," and by the authenticity of the entertaining "Concert in the Theatrical Style" by François Couperin. Particularly noteworthy was the fine ensemble of the orchestra in the tricky ornaments which add so much charm to French music of the period.

Greatly to the delight of the listeners outside the hall, the conductor used a full orchestration of the Vivaldi Concerto Grosso, Op. 3, No. 2, adding winds to the original string parts. The concert was well-rounded out with five of Purcell's remarkable Fantasias for Strings.

For those who had been missing their Mozart, Mr. Munch made ample amends the following day by programming the three last Mozart symphonies for the fourth program. These received the energetic treatment the French conductor usually brings to the Viennese master.

Early Mozart Opus

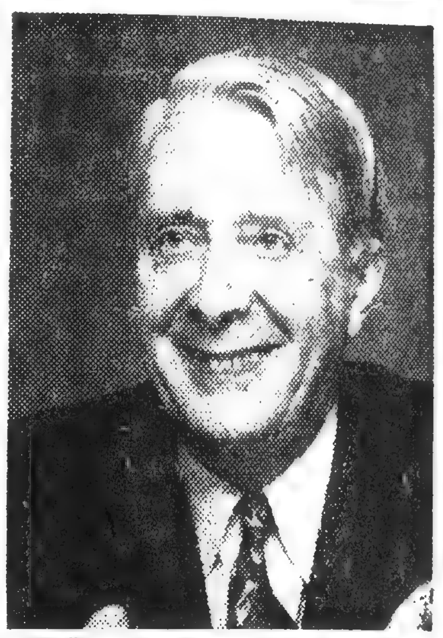
The fifth program was the high point of the series and one of the most satisfying concerts in the memory of this reviewer. Hugh Ross opened with a splendid reading of a youthful Mozart opus, "Litaniae de venerabile altaris sacramento" (K. 125) with the Festival Chorus singing splendidly, and soloists Sarah-Mae Endich, soprano, Jacqueline Langée, contralto, John McCollum, tenor, and Bernard Green, bass, all effective in their roles.

Best single performance honors of the series must go to Lukas Foss, who turned in a definitive interpretation as soloist in the unsurpassed Mozart Concerto in C major, for Piano and Orchestra (K. 467). Greatly aided by Mr. Munch's sympathetic accompaniment, the pianist invested the arabesque figures and limpid melodies with every aspect of charm, fancy, and imagination.

Like a blade of the finest Damascus steel, Mr. Foss combined keenness, strength, and the utmost flexibility for a rendition which brought him an ovation from the enthralled audience.

For final work on this program, Mr. Munch inspired the Festival Chorus and his players to new levels of achievement in a telling and communicative traversal of the Schubert Mass No. 2 in G major. In a second appearance the same evening, Miss Endich sang the soprano solos gloriously, and Lloyd Oostenbrug, tenor, together with Mac Morgan, added the last satisfactory touch to a memorable performance.

The Haydn Symphonies Nos. 86 and 99, together with a repetition of the Schubert Mass, brought this interesting and worth-while first half of the festival to a close.



John Brook

Charles Munch, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is shown here in three new candid portraits by John Brook of Boston. Mr. Munch now is conducting the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass.

MORE THAN 10,000 ATTEND CONCERT AT TANGLEWOOD

All-Wagner Program Is Presented by Boston Symphony Orchestra

By VICTOR PRAHL

Lenox, Aug. 2—The all-Wagner program the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Pierre Monteux at Tanglewood tonight enlisted the services of three young American singers, Margaret Harshaw, soprano, Howard Vandenburg, tenor, and James Pease, bass.

Singing Excels

Mr. Pease, opening with "Wotan's Farewell" from "Die Walkure" sang this noble excerpt with a fulness and breadth of tone that we had not associated with his singing previously. As the aria progressed he achieved more poise and became more convincing. He has the physique and the voice for the part and should eventually develop into a fine Wotan. Pierre Monteux conducted this as well as the magic fire music which followed with his usual comprehension and minimum of effort.

Howard Vandenburg would hardly classify as a helden-tenor but he sang Siegfried's music from the 3d act of "Siegfried" with assurance, poise, a tone that carried well in the big shed and in excellent German. It was a polished performance.

The surprise of the evening, however, was Margaret Harshaw who has been singing contralto roles at the Met for some years and has suddenly burst forth as a full-fledged Wagnerian soprano. Her singing of Brunnhilde's music from the 3d act of "Siegfried" was thrilling in vibrant brilliance. There was not a trace of the old contralto quality. In fact it was the high voice that was so secure and impressive. She obviously has made the Wagnerian manner and tradition hers and should prove a valuable addition to the shrinking

Continued On Page 6

MORE THAN 10,000

Continued From Page 1

Wagnerian contingent. She gave a stunning performance. There was thunderous and prolonged applause after the singing of this famous excerpt. If her final "Immolation Scene" from "Gutterdammerung" equals this the demonstration will probably be repeated.

The second half included as well "Siegfried's Rhine Journey" and the "Death of Siegfried" from the same opera. Tonight's audience ran about 10,000.

AMSTERDAM, N. Y.
RECORDER
JUL 22 1952

NOTED MUSICIANS—Leonard Bernstein (left), guest conductor; Charles Munch (center), permanent conductor, and Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, admiring Mr. Burgin's priceless "Strad" at Tanglewood. Series A will open the concerts in the Big Shed Thursday night, with succeeding concerts Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

[45]

July, 1952

anglewood O
s Munch L
amber Orch

By CECIL SMITH

EVER was the weat perfect in the Berksh than over the weeken mer's first concerts at
d. The sky was clear daytime the sun was b unbearably hot; and in a moon that was al e upon the spacious gro inated the distant vie kbridge Bowl. On Ju night, a record tended—record, that cert of a season in ncert Hall—and the rst program on July 2,500 more. The aud was a mixture of ha s, tourists, and studen kshire Music Center, and ed from emi-formal k s and T-shirts or less.
the students have hi on of going barefoot, a fess that the wonder ost tempted some of us to follow their exam
n the opening night th being at Tanglewood, efoot or in shoes, consid
ed the pleasure of he
ic. With a group of ton Symphony players nch delivered an all-Bac was poorly conceived a cuted. I do not know earsal was allowed, but not enough. Bach's ering, in the arrang radous, is not very goo at best. The tubby, nated performance it n Mr. Munch and his e to prove that this e nuity, an affair of t rest to those who stu
ctions on the printed d the test of public pe trio sonata toward the teen movements is, of eption to the rule, for i ed with performance n here, however, the b
the music were damage
-grained solo lines were ass of instruments. M rpretation of the wor ward — sometimes plo sometimes a trifle sacc a few spots Stokowsk mpt to force a climax.
n general, Mr. Munch's Bach's music was roma
-fashioned way, by whi
he never allowed stru erations to dissuade him ying devices designed to music. Slow move ded to transform in odic continuities that ha ect of Mahler than of t lay within the early-tury philosophy of musi
n. Fast movements s ly and got livelier. Mr.
red to be holding the pe ether more by will pow arrangement with the the over-all effect o g's playing was unc provisatory.
There were, of course, moments, especially in to for Two Violins,

HARTFORD, CONN
TIMES
JUL 12 1952

IN McCOLLUM will or solo in Lalande's "De dis" Motet tonight in ood theater with me
Boston Symphony Or Berkshire Festival C ducted by Hugh Ross.

wood

Munch, director of Symphony Orches-in three new
by John Brook
Mr. Munch now is Berkshire Music
Tanglewood, near

July, 1952

Musical America

Copyright 1952 by The Musical America Corporation

Tanglewood Opens As Munch Leads Chamber Orchestra

By Cecil Smith

N [illegible] Berkshire [illegible] July [illegible] the [illegible] audience [illegible] Lasure [illegible] whether [illegible] dly ex- [illegible] ring the [illegible] rty-odd [illegible] Charles [illegible] program [illegible] roughly [illegible] which [illegible] patently [illegible] Bach's Musical [illegible] by [illegible] to listen [illegible] The tubby, poorly co- [illegible] performance [illegible] received [illegible] Munch and his men did [illegible] that this exercise of [illegible] affair of the highest [illegible] those who study its ab- [illegible] printed page, can [illegible] of public performance. [illegible] sonata toward the end of the [illegible] movements is, of course, an [illegible] the rule, for it was con- [illegible] performance in mind [illegible] however, the best values [illegible] were damaged when its [illegible] solo lines were allotted to [illegible] instruments. Mr. Munch's [illegible] of the work I found [illegible] sometimes plodding and [illegible] a trifle saccharine, and [illegible] Stokowskian in its [illegible] a climax [illegible] Mr. Munch's approach [illegible] was romantic in an [illegible] way, by which I mean [illegible] allowed structural con- [illegible] dissuade him from em- [illegible] designed to personalize [illegible] Slow movement he [illegible] transform into rubato [illegible] unities that had more the [illegible] Mahler than of anything [illegible] in the early-eighteenth- [illegible] ply of musical expres- [illegible] movements started out [illegible] livelier, Mr. Munch ap- [illegible] lding the performances [illegible] will power [illegible] by [illegible] with the orchestra [illegible] effect of [illegible] Violin [illegible]

Will Plouffe

At the end of the opening Tanglewood concert, Charles Munch, conductor of Boston Symphony, shakes the hand of the concertmaster, Richard Burgin

Tanglewood

(Continued from page 3)

Richard Burgin's feeling for style compensated for his failure to measure up to Ruth Posselt's playing in technical address and tonal warmth. The familiar Third Suite in D major in which the pompous, starchy close of the initial French overture was softened into something akin to the last pages of Das Lied von der Erde and the leaden-paced Air passed over nearly every bar-line with a retardation and a thumping ictus, closed a series of performances that was not worthy of the reputation of Tanglewood.

The following afternoon the orchestra mended its ways. The program was a token of Mr. Munch's breadth of interest, for he departed from the beaten track to present three extremely beautiful and rarely performed eighteenth-century works — Handel's Concerto Grosso in A minor, Op. 6, No. 4; Dittersdorf's Symphony in C major; and Carl Philipp Emmanuel Bach's Third Symphony. After the intermission Hugh Ross conducted Bach's Cantata No. 140, Wachet auf, ruft uns die Stimme, with the collaboration of a portion of the Berkshire Festival Chorus and Sarah Fleming, soprano; John McCollum, tenor; and Mac Morgan, baritone.

Perhaps both the orchestra and Mr. Munch needed to get away from the conventional Bach-Haydn-Mozart gambit, for the freshness and alertness of their approach toward the less familiar works in the first half of this program indicated that everyone was applying both mind and heart to the task at hand. Mr. Munch was no less subjective, and to my mind peculiar, in his distortion of form and flouting of the commonly accepted psychological attitudes toward the music of the baroque and classical periods; but his interpretations at least seemed to be going along as planned, and he took great pains to let us apprehend the rhythmical and phraseological non-conformism of the ebullient Dittersdorf symphony and the profound harmonic explorations of the magnificently spontaneous C.P.E. Bach work. Mr. Ross's performance of the cantata was in every way solid and musicianly, although the end result was adversely affected by a serious shortage of soprano tone. The soloists handled their assignments with honorable musicianship, if without flair.

The activities of the Berkshire Music Center also began over the weekend. On the evening of July 4, Mr. Munch conducted the Franck Symphony in the initial concert by the Orchestra of Department I; Robert Mandell conducted Haydn's Symphony No. 88, in G major; and Lorin Maazel conducted two movements of Hindemith's Mathis der Maler. On the morning of July 6, a chamber-music concert by members of the same department offered Mozart's Piano Quartet in G minor, K. 478; Piston's Third Quartet; and Schumann's Piano Quintet.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JOHN McCOLLUM will sing tenor solo in Lalande's "De Profundis" Motet tonight in Tanglewood theater with members of Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Festival Chorus, conducted by Hugh Ross.

Mozart 'Titus' for Tanglewood

"Titus," the opera which Mozart wrote in the last year of his life and the only "opera seria" of his maturer years, is announced by Boris Goldovsky as the major production of the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood this summer. "Titus" (La Clemenza di Tito) will then have what will probably be its first complete production in America.

There will be two performances on Aug. 4 and 5 at Tanglewood to which Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be invited. The score of "Titus," parts of which will be brought from Europe, consist of an overture and 25 numbers in three acts.

The score is entirely by Mozart except for certain recitative passages in which he was helped by Süssmayer. There are to be no cuts in this production, although the text, which is being translated into English by Mr. Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell, has been slightly revised.

A feature of the production will be a new scenic plan in which an elaborate mechanism for projection of slides, the invention of Paul Planer, will be used. Planer's invention has been used in the larger opera houses in Europe with conspicuous success. It permits spectacle effects in such scenes as the burning and destruction of a palace in this opera. The scenery is being designed by Charles Elson.

Like all student performances at Tanglewood, one full-length work ("Titus") and several "evenings of opera" in the last weeks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school will be open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center whose contributions help to support the school.

On the Esplanade

Overture to "The Magic Flute" . Mozart
Symphony in D major, No. 35 ("Haffner") .... Mozart
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" .... Saint-Saëns
"Tales from the Vienna Woods," Waltzes .... Strauss
The Lost Chord .... Sullivan
Solo Trumpet: Armando Ghitalla
Overture Solennelle, 1812 . Tchaikovsky
Willis Page conducting

Pittsfield, Massachusetts, Thursday, July 31, 195

Younger Operatic Group at Music Center To Make Debut in Tanglewood on Parade

Zirner 'Team' Innovators in Costumes, Sets

Ludwig and Laura Zirner, heads of the Tanglewood Opera Associates, a Berkshire Music Center division for younger operatic hopefuls, talk over in the garden plans for tomorrow's public debut of the group in the Tanglewood on Parade program.

The Opera Associates, a division of the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center, will stage the production of "Alcottiana" by Andre Singer for Tanglewood on Parade tomorrow at 6 PM in the Tanglewood theatre. It will be the first performance anywhere of the work whose scene is laid in Concord in the last century and whose plot is based on actual conversations of boys at Bronson Alcott's school, recorded at the time.

Headed by a husband and wife team, the Tanglewood Opera Associates work hard at the various phases of opera production, though they appear only in their own presentations, with one or two exceptions. They use unit sets and costumes designed by Laura Zirner, whose husband, Ludwig, heads the opera workshop of the University of Illinois, which he founded three years ago. Many of the costumes have been loaned by the Illinois workshop not only for the associates' productions, but for some of the performances by the main department students. In the first evening of opera scenes this season all costumes were from the workshop. Scenery and costumes simplifying production, are attracting much attention from other producers.

Born in Vienna

Mr. and Mrs. Zirner are natives of Vienna. Trained as a pianist, Mr. Zirner, an American citizen, studied at Tanglewood as a violist in 1946, when he was discharged from the United States Army Mrs. Zirner, a designer, taught at the Institute of Design in Chicago for four years, before joining the opera department of Illinois University as a designer.

The unit set, used many times this season, was designed by her and built by Harry Porter of the Tanglewood staff. The costumes are basic units revamped slightly for each production to indicate period and character. Mrs. Zirner was invited to demonstrate them in March before 3000 delegates to the National Music Educators' Conference in Philadelphia.

The Opera Associates, younger and with less training than the students in the main department, have a total program of their own, with their own coaches and stage directors. They study the roles, and each associate sings every one. The students were chosen at auditions held throughout the United States from singers with potential talent for opera who are not yet ready for it because they have not had the necessary training and experience.

Tomorrow's program will be their second production; the first was a demonstration and unannounced.

12—The Berkshire Evening Eagle, Tuesday, July 29, 1952 ★ ★

Tanglewood Parade Plans Are Completed for Friday

TANGLEWOOD — Thomas D. Perry Jr., executive secretary of the Berkshire Music Center, today announced the complete plans for Tanglewood on Parade program to be given here Friday for the benefit of the Music Center.

For reserved seats and box-holders two humorous one-act operas will be given in the formal garden at 4 PM; "Livietta and Tracollo" by Giovanni Pergolesi and "Angelique" by Jacques Ibert, who came to Tanglewood from Paris in 1950 to teach composition at the school.

Simultaneous school performances at 6 PM will be preceded by "Fanfare for Bima," at 5.45, when Boris Goldovsky will welcome the audience. The opera in the theatre, staged by the Tanglewood Opera Associates, will be the first performance of "Alcottiana" by Andre Singer. It is based on actual conversations of students recorded in the middle of the last century by Bronson Alcott at his school in Concord.

The symphony orchestra of the school will play in the Shed and the chamber music group will play classics and works composed by students in the chamber music hall.

BSO Concert at 8.15

At 7 there will be a choral concert on the porch of the main house, with opportunity for picnicking on the lawn until the evening concert at 8.15 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Tanglewood alumni, with prominent alumni as soloists.

As in other years, the evening will end with the drawing of door prizes and waltzing on the lawn.

The dozen prizes, donated by friends of the school, will include an RCA Victor TV set, Shelley model, 17-inch table model, an RCA table model radio, an original lithograph by Ture Bengtz, albums of recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and dinners at five local inns.

Tickets are on sale at the box office, Tanglewood. Seats for the evening concert will be reserved in the front section. Holders of general admission tickets on sale now may sit in the unreserved section if they arrive in time.

[46]

wood director of phony Orches-in three new

y John Brook Munch now is rkshire Music glewood, near

July, 1952

Musical Americ

Copyright 1952 by The Musical America Corporation

Tanglewood Opens As Munch Leads Chamber Orchestra

By Cecil Smith

NEVER was the weather more perfect in the Berkshire Hills than on the weekend of the summer's first concerts at Tanglewood. The sky was clear; during the daytime the sun was bright but not unbearably hot; and in the evening a moon that was almost full shone upon the spacious grounds and illuminated the distant view of the Stockbridge Bowl. On July 5, the opening night, a record crowd of [illegible] attended—a record, that is, for the first concert of a season in the Theatre-Concert Hall—and the Sunday matinee program on July 6 brought out 2,500 more. The audience, as usual, was a mixture of habitual patrons, tourists, and students at the Berkshire Music Center, and the dress ranged from semi-formal kit to blue jeans and T-shirts or less. This summer the students have hit on the notion of going barefoot, and I must confess that the wonderful lawns almost tempted some of us staid oldsters to follow their example.

On the opening night the pleasure of being at Tanglewood, whether barefoot or in shoes, considerably exceeded the pleasure of hearing the music. With a group of thirty-odd Boston Symphony players, Charles Munch delivered an all-Bach program that was poorly conceived and roughly executed. I do not know how much rehearsal was allowed, but it patently was not enough. Bach's Musical Offering, in the arrangement by Oubradous, is not very good to listen to at best. The tubby, poorly coordinated performance it received from Mr. Munch and his men did little to prove that this exercise of ingenuity, an affair of the highest interest to those who study its abstractions on the printed page, can stand the test of public performance. The trio sonata toward the end of the thirteen movements is, of course, an exception to the rule, for it was conceived with performance in mind. Even here, however, the best values of the music were damaged when its fine-grained solo lines were allotted to a mass of instruments. Mr. Munch's interpretation of the work I found wayward — sometimes plodding and dry, sometimes a trifle saccharine, and in a few spots Stokowskian in its attempt to force a climax.

In general, Mr. Munch's approach to Bach's music was romantic in an old-fashioned way, by which I mean that he never allowed structural considerations to dissuade him from employing devices designed to personalize the music. Slow movements he tended to transform into rubato melodic continuities that had more the effect of Mahler than of anything that lay within the early-eighteenth-century philosophy of musical expression. Fast movements started out lively and got livelier. Mr. Munch appeared to be holding the performances together more by will power than by prearrangement with the orchestra, and the over-all effect of the evening's playing was uncomfortably improvisatory.

There were, of course, many pleasing moments, especially in the Concerto for Two Violins, in which

Will Plouffe

At the end of the opening Tanglewood concert, Charles Munch, conductor of Boston Symphony, shakes the hand of the concertmaster, Richard Burgin

Tanglewood

(Continued from page 3)

Richard Burgin's feeling for style compensated for his failure to measure up to Ruth Posselt's playing in technical address and tonal warmth. The familiar Third Suite in D major in which the pompous, starchy close of the initial French overture was softened into something akin to the last pages of Das Lied von der Erde and the leaden-paced Air passed over nearly every bar-line with a retardation and a thumping ictus, closed a series of performances that was not worthy of the reputation of Tanglewood.

The following afternoon the orchestra mended its ways. The program was a token of Mr. Munch's breadth of interest, for he departed from the beaten track to present three extremely beautiful and rarely performed eighteenth-century works — Handel's Concerto Grosso in A minor, Op. 6, No. 4; Dittersdorf's Symphony in C major; and Carl Philipp Emmanuel Bach's Third Symphony. After the intermission Hugh Ross conducted Bach's Cantata No. 140, Wachet auf, ruft uns die Stimme, with the collaboration of a portion of the Berkshire Festival Chorus and Sarah Fleming, soprano; John McCollum, tenor; and Mac Morgan, baritone.

Perhaps both the orchestra and Mr. Munch needed to get away from the conventional Bach-Haydn-Mozart gambit, for the freshness and alertness of their approach toward the less familiar works in the first half of this program indicated that everyone was applying both mind and heart to the task at hand. Mr. Munch was no less subjective, and to my mind peculiar, in his distortion of form and flouting of the commonly accepted psychological attitudes toward the music of the baroque and classical periods; but his interpretations at least seemed to be going along as planned, and he took great pains to let us apprehend the rhythmical and phraseological non-conformism of the ebullient Dittersdorf symphony and the profound harmonic explorations of the magnificently spontaneous C.P.E. Bach work. Mr. Ross's performance of the cantata was in every way solid and musicianly, although the end result was adversely affected by a serious shortage of soprano tone. The soloists handled their assignments with honorable musicianship, if without flair.

The activities of the Berkshire Music Center also began over the weekend. On the evening of July 4, Mr. Munch conducted the Franck Symphony in the initial concert by the Orchestra of Department I; Robert Mandell conducted Haydn's Symphony No. 88, in G major; and Lorin Maazel conducted two movements of Hindemith's Mathis der Maler. On the morning of July 6, a chamber-music concert by members of the same department offered Mozart's Piano Quartet in G minor, K. 478; Piston's Third Quartet; and Schumann's Piano Quintet.

Christian Science Monitor July 16 52

Mozart 'Titus' for Tanglewood

"Titus," the opera which Mozart wrote in the last year of his life and the only "opera seria" of his maturer years, is announced by Boris Goldovsky as the major production of the Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood this summer. "Titus" (La Clemenza di Tito) will then have what will probably be its first complete production in America.

There will be two performances on Aug. 4 and 5 at Tanglewood to which Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will be invited. The score of "Titus," parts of which will be brought from Europe, consist of an overture and 25 numbers in three acts.

The score is entirely by Mozart except for certain recitative passages in which he was helped by Süssmayer. There are to be no cuts in this production, although the text, which is being translated into English by Mr. Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell, has been slightly revised.

A feature of the production will be a new scenic plan in which an elaborate mechanism for projection of slides, the invention of Paul Planer, will be used. Planer's invention has been used in the larger opera houses in Europe with conspicuous success. It permits spectacle effects in such scenes as the burning and destruction of a palace in this opera. The scenery is being designed by Charles Elson.

Like all student performances at Tanglewood, one full-length work ("Titus") and several "evenings of opera" in the last weeks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school will be open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center whose contributions help to support the school.

On the Esplanade

Overture to "The Magic Flute" . . . Mozart
Symphony in D major, No. 35 ("Haffner") . . . Mozart
Bacchanale from "Samson and Delilah" . . . Saint-Saëns
"Tales from the Vienna Woods;" Waltzes . . . Strauss
The Lost Chord . . . Sullivan
Solo Trumpet: Armando Ghitalla
Overture Solennelle, 1812 . . . Tchaikovsky
Willis Page conducting

Pittsfield, Massachusetts, Thursday, July 31, 195

Younger Operatic Group at Music Center To Make Debut in Tanglewood on Parade

Zirner 'Team' Innovators in Costumes, Sets

The Opera Associates, a division of the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center, will stage the production of "Alcottiana" by Andre Singer for Tanglewood on Parade tomorrow at 6 PM in the Tanglewood theatre. It will be the first performance anywhere of the work whose scene is laid in Concord in the last century and whose plot is based on actual conversations of boys at Bronson Alcott's school, recorded at the time.

Headed by a husband and wife team, the Tanglewood Opera Associates work hard at the various phases of opera production, though they appear only in their own presentations, with one or two exceptions. They use unit sets and costumes designed by Laura Zirner, whose husband, Ludwig, heads the opera workshop of the University of Illinois, which he founded three years ago. Many of the costumes have been loaned by the Illinois workshop not only for the associates' productions, but for some of the performances by the main department students. In the first evening of opera scenes this season all costumes were from the workshop. Scenery and costumes, simplifying production, are attracting much attention from other producers.

Born in Vienna

Mr. and Mrs. Zirner are natives of Vienna. Trained as a pianist, Mr. Zirner, an American citizen, studied at Tanglewood as a violist in 1946, when he was discharged from the United States Army. Mrs. Zirner, a designer, taught at the Institute of Design in Chicago for four years, before joining the opera department of Illinois University as a designer.

The unit set, used many times this season, was designed by her and built by Harry Porter of the Tanglewood staff. The costumes are basic units revamped slightly for each production to indicate period and character. Mrs. Zirner was invited to demonstrate them in March before 3000 delegates to the National Music Educators' Conference in Philadelphia.

The Opera Associates, younger and with less training than the students in the main department, have a total program of their own, with their own coaches and stage directors. They study the roles, and each associate sings every one. The students were chosen at auditions held throughout the United States from singers with potential talent for opera who are not yet ready for it because they have not had the necessary training and experience.

Tomorrow's program will be their second production; the first was a demonstration and unannounced.

Ludwig and Laura Zirner, heads of the Tanglewood Opera Associates, a Berkshire Music Center division for younger operatic hopefuls, talk over in the garden plans for tomorrow's public debut of the group in the Tanglewood on Parade program.

12—The Berkshire Evening Eagle, Tuesday, July 29, 1952 ★★

Tanglewood Parade Plans Are Completed for Friday

TANGLEWOOD — Thomas D. Perry Jr., executive secretary of the Berkshire Music Center, today announced the complete plans for Tanglewood on Parade program to be given here Friday for the benefit of the Music Center.

For reserved seats and box-holders two humorous one-act operas will be given in the formal garden at 4 PM; "Livietta and Tracollo" by Giovanni Pergolesi and "Angelique" by Jacques Ibert, who came to Tanglewood from Paris in 1950 to teach composition at the school.

Simultaneous school performances at 6 PM will be preceded by "Fanfare for Bima," at 5.45, when Boris Goldovsky will welcome the audience. The opera in the theatre, staged by the Tanglewood Opera Associates, will be the first performance of "Alcottiana" by Andre Singer. It is based on actual conversations of students recorded in the middle of the last century by Bronson Alcott at his school in Concord.

The symphony orchestra of the school will play in the Shed and the chamber music group will play classics and works composed by students in the chamber music hall.

BSO Concert at 8.15

At 7 there will be a choral concert on the porch of the main house, with opportunity for picnicking on the lawn until the evening concert at 8.15 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Tanglewood alumni, with prominent alumni as soloists.

As in other years, the evening will end with the drawing of door prizes and waltzing on the lawn.

The dozen prizes, donated by friends of the school, will include an RCA Victor TV set, Shelley model, 17-inch table model, an RCA table model radio, an original lithograph by Ture Bengtz, albums of recordings by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and dinners at five local inns.

Tickets are on sale at the box office, Tanglewood. Seats for the evening concert will be reserved in the front section. Holders of general admission tickets on sale now may sit in the unreserved section if they arrive in time.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 12 1952

JOHN McCOLLUM will sing tenor solo in Lalande's "De Profundis" Motet tonight in Tanglewood theater with members of Boston Symphony Orchestra and Berkshire Festival Chorus, conducted by Hugh Ross.

[46]

Christian Science Monitor

IAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON, SATURDAY, JULY 26, 1952

—Tanglewood Prospects-

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
JUL 21 1952

Choral Music, Symphonies At Tanglewood

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

CHORAL art in the United States is all but non-existent. Group singing has taken its place. Anybody who wants to sing is permitted to join in the music-making, and that is a praiseworthy, social practice which no one would want to change. But the singers have all the fun, and listening to the proceedings on most concert stages and choir lofts has become a work of supererogation.

But the choral classics are works of art, not singing games, and when performed with talent and conscience, the result is inspiring and exalting.

Look to the festival—festival in its definitive sense when no cost in time or talent is spared in order to recreate a great work in its total proportions.

At Tanglewood Music Center are gathered each Summer from every corner of the United States some 400 young musicians who are carefully selected for their gifts, intelligence and earnestness. The singers among them—and in this instance the singers must be musicians — are unsparingly rehearsed. No time is wasted learning by rote, coaching in voice management or breathing. These things are taken for granted. All effort is focused upon interpretation, polish and ensemble.

Hugh Ross, directing the Berkshire Festival Chorus and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, showed the effect of this regimen on Mozart's E flat Litany ("for the Sacrament of the Holy Altar") Saturday night in the Theater-Concert Hall; and Charles Munch, working with the same materials, disclosed Schubert's Mass No. 2 in G major. These two choral masterpieces were separated by Mozart's C major piano Concerto (K 467) played by Lukas Foss, who drew a stormy and prolonged ovation from a packed hall and from the overflow thousands who spilled out over the lawns round about.

* * *

SOME COMPARISON between the methods of the two conductors and their results is inevitable. Mr. Ross is a choral leader par excellence. His thought is constantly upon the delivery of vocal tone, and the manner of its delivery is the preoccupation of all his conducting effort. He is not concerned about the beat; that is left to the concert master. So proficient a one as Richard Burgin, manages very handily but in the absence of a strong unified command, ensemble is bound to suffer somewhat even in such an intelligent flock as he was shepherding.

Mr. Ross had few dynamic degrees between very loud and very soft. Attacks were often explosive, and in the Viaticum he produced some sforzandos which were unvocal but enchanting in effect.

The Mozart Lithany was memorable for its brilliant concluding fugue, for the clarity of its melodic patterns and counterpoint, its youthful tension and, in particular, for the luster of the Miserere sung by Tenor John McCollum. The warmth of his voice, its remarkable breath control and aristocratic phrasing were definite Mozart singing.

Basso Bernard Green, Jacqueline Langee, contralto, and Sara Mae Endich, soprano, completed the solo quartet for the Litany; Miss Endich, Lloyd Oostenbrug, tenor, and Mac Morgan, bass, formed the trio in Schubert's Mass. To Miss Endich fell the major solo assignments, which she exploited as artistic opportunities rather than obligations to be met.

* * *

THE SCHUBERT MASS was far more etherealized, more devotional than that of Mozart. That it was nicer in detail, more fastidious may be ascribed to the magisterial baton of Mr. Munch. He beat time, assuming that his singers didn't need cues any more than his accustomed symphonists. In this he was right, and the general orderliness and finesse proved him so.

But the matter went even further. There was a gratifying religiosity about his interpretation which was unmistakable, the attenuated but exquisite Agnus Dei concluding the evening's music-making like a benediction.

Space does not permit extended remarks upon Mr. Foss' Mozart playing. He is deft, facile, efficient. He inclines toward velocity. His Mozart is in miniature and it crackles rather than sparkles. I wish he had been as much concerned over tonal depth as Mr. McCollum was in his singing of the Miserere.

Sunday Concert

The two Haydn symphonies which Mr. Munch programed Sunday afternoon both had heart; and in each case—the D major, No. 86 and the E flat, No. 99—the pulse was strongest in the slow movement. This healthy expressiveness which concerned itself with sentiment rather than design foreshadowed Beethoven and, listening to its prophecy, you began to think that young Beethoven's impatience to be free of his master arose less because there was so little for him to learn than because there yet remained so much.

Anyway, Munch makes robust business of Haydn. The minuets especially so. Odd that these pieces which the composer wrote as menial bond retainer within the walls of one of the most august palaces in Europe should so vividly reflect the rhythms of the village dancing green rather than the elegant steps of the dynastic ballroom. But merry or spruce, his unquenchable music need not have been foreign to either.

I think that I shall never hear again such horn and wood wind playing as occurred in the final moments of the E flat Symphony. Such grace and delicacy are impossible for bassoon, oboe and flute, to say nothing of the horn, but since it did happen there is no word for it except fabulous.

The Schubert Mass was repeated Sunday afternoon.

Four Concerts Planned For Coming Week

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard in four major programs next week for the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood. Charles Munch, director of both the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Music Center, will conduct two of these concerts. Pierre Monteux and Leonard Bernstein will participate in the other two.

The Thursday night concert in the Shed, to be conducted by Mr. Munch, will consist of two Fauré compositions — the Incidental Music to "Pelléas et Mélisande" and Ballade for Piano and Orchestra; Ravel's Piano Concerto, and the Brahms Fourth Symphony. Nicole Henriot will be the piano soloist.

On Friday afternoon and evening the Berkshire Music Center will celebrate its tenth anniversary by means of the annual "Tanglewood on Parade," which includes demonstrations by all departments. These programs are presented for the benefit of the Music Center. Noted Tanglewood alumni will appear on the evening concert by the Boston Symphony, including Leonard Bernstein, Lukas Foss, Jacob Krachmalnick, Howard Shanet, Seymour Lipkin, Mildred Miller, David Lloyd, and James Pease. The program will conclude with a concert performance of the last act from Bizet's "Carmen."

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Saturday night concert (Aug. 2) in the Shed. His Wagner program will include the Prelude and Love-Death from "Tristan und Isolde," Wotan's Farewell and Fire Music from "Die Walküre," the Final Scene from "Siegfried," and the Immolation Scene from "Götterdämmerung." The soloist will be Margaret Harshaw, soprano, Charles Kullman, tenor, and James Pease, bass.

The Sunday afternoon program on Aug. 3 to be conducted by Mr. Munch, will consist of Beethoven's Eighth Symphony, Debussy's "Iberia," and Honegger's "Danse des Morts."

AKRON, OHIO
BEACON JOURNAL
JUN 29 1952

Music

Ba
Co

By OSCAR SMITH

MORE THAN 400 students from 41 states and 16 countries arrive in Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this weekend for six weeks of study at the 10th session of the Berkshire Music Center.

For the opening exercises this afternoon Charles Munch, the director, will come from France where he remained after his tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The distinguished faculty of 36 includes Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Luigi Dallapiccola, Boris Goldovsky, Hugh Ross, Richard Burgin, Ingolf Dahl, William Kroll and first chair musicians of the Boston Symphony.

Seven students will come from Canada; five from Israel; two each from Mexico and Argentina and one from Brazil, Chile, Turkey, Italy, France, Egypt, South Africa, Hong Kong, New Zealand, Honolulu, England and Germany.

The students range in age from 15 to 58, but the majority are from 18 to 25.

The 75 per cent in the regular six-week course are highly talented. Competition was keen for the tuition scholarships awarded for the first time automatically to those who will play in the orchestra and chamber music groups or lead in the choral or opera departments.

Nearly all are profesisonal or pre-professional, excepting in the Tanglewood Study Group where lawyers, teachers, stenographers and housewives whose avocation is music will spend their vacations.

Registration list of the study group will remain open for the convenience of those who wish to enroll for two or four weeks.

HOUSTON, TEXAS
CHRONICLE
JUL 20 1952

Koussevitzky Birthday To Be Marked

Lenox, Mass., July 19.—The Koussevitsky Music Foundation next Saturday will mark the birthday of the late Serge Koussevitzky with a program at the Lenox Library here. At that time the foundation will present a gift of scores, music, recordings and books on music to the Lenox Library, which has co-operated in many ways with the Berkshire Music Center, the school established at Tanglewood by Doctor Koussevitzky.

The gift of the foundation will enlarge the music collection of the library for the use of the Berkshire Music Center students and of the community in which Doctor Koussevitzky lived and carried on so much of his work.

The scores and recordings include many of the works on the programs of the festival concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and works being performed by the student orchestra, opera department and chamber music groups.

ENCE MONITOR, BOSTON, THURSDAY, JULY 24, 1952

Tanglewood Anniversary

Alumni to Be Featured At Annual Celebration

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood is 10 years old. On Friday evening, Aug. 1, at 6 o'clock, this summer music school of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will hold a gala celebration in honor of its milestone and its accomplishments.

This celebration is the annual "Tanglewood on Parade," presented each summer for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. This year, however, certain extra-special events will place the program in the "unusual" category.

* * *

Distinguished alumni of the Center are to appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Lukas Foss — composer, conductor, and pianist—will be represented by the last movement of his cantata, "The Prairie" for chorus and orchestra. This work will be conducted by James Aliferis.

Jacob Krachmalnick, concertmaster of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will be the soloist in Chausson's "Poeme" for Violin and Orchestra, Howard Shanet conducting. Mr. Foss will then take the podium to conduct Mendelssohn's Piano Concerto in G minor. Seymour Lipkin, winner of the Rachmaninov Award, will be the soloist.

After the intermission the last act of Bizet's "Carmen" will be presented in concert under the direction of Leonard Bernstein. The soloists will be Mildred Miller, mezzo-soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company; David Lloyd, tenor of the New York City Center Opera Company; and James Pease, baritone, now of the Hamburg Opera.

* * *

The preconcert activities, commencing at 6 o'clock, will include demonstrations by the various departments of the school—orchestra, chorus, chamber music, and opera. After the concert a garden party will be held that includes waltzing on the lawn.

For the holders of box and reserved seat tickets a special performance of Pergolesi's opera "Livietta and Tracollo" will be staged in the garden at 4 o'clock.

Serge Koussevitzky founded the Berkshire Music Center in 1940. The six-week sessions have been held annually with the exception of three wartime years (1943-44-45). During these 10 sessions 2,8[illegible] students have attended the school, many of them on scholarships. This year scholarship awards were automatic to those who play in the orchestra, sing leading roles or study composition. These students have come from every state; 199 of them have come from 41 countries.

In 21 major symphony orchestras are 120 former Tanglewood students, including players and conductors. Charles Munch, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has also succeeded Serge Koussevitzky as director of the Berkshire Music Center.

Tickets to "Tanglewood on Parade" may be purchased at the gate.

Berkshire Festival--

The Major Berkshire Festival Begins Thursday in Music Shed

The major portion of the Berkshire Festival will begin Thursday evening in the Music Shed at Tanglewood in Lenox. This concert will be the first in which Charles Munch has conducted the full numbers of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since they returned from their triumphal tour of Europe. Accordingly there will be appropriate festivities on the part of Berkshire County officials. Mayor Robert T. Capeless of Pittsfield will present to Mr. Munch a resolution of welcome and appreciation.

This concert will bring the "Eroica" Symphony of Beethoven and the First Symphony of Brahms.

The series of concerts in the Theatre—Concert Hall by small orchestra will be concluded this afternoon at 3, when Mr. Munch will conduct two symphonies of Haydn, No. 99 in E-flat, and No. 86, in D major, and the little Mass in G major by Schubert.

At the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's Summer school concerts will take place almost every day. Aaron Copland will conduct the student orchestra Friday evening in excerpts from his ballet, "Billy the Kid," and Hugh Ross will lead orchestra and chorus in Orgad's "Cantata." Lorin Maazel will conduct Barber's Violin Concerto.

Under Boris Goldovsky, the opera department will stage an evening of one-act operas Tuesday, the choral department will present a song recital Tuesday afternoon at 4:30, and Wednesday the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation, in the Library of Congress, will offer the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble. Chamber music will be played Sunday mornings at 10 and composers' forums will be held Sunday evenings at 8:15.

To all school events Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited. They may join by contributing to the support of the school.

The detailed programs for the remainder of the first week-end of concerts in the Music Shed are as follows:

Saturday at 8:15, Pierre Monteux conducting. Cimarosa, Overture to "The Secret Marriage"; Schubert, Symphony No. 7, in C major; Stravinsky, "The Rite of Spring."

Sunday, July 27, at 3, Charles Munch conducting. Franck, Symphonic Piece from "Redemption"; Bizet, Symphony in C major; Luigi Dallapiccola, "Three Prisoners' Songs" (chorus conducted by Hugh Ross); Ravel, "Daphnis and Chloe" Suites Nos. 1 and 2 (with chorus).

WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
JUL 18 1952

Tenth Season of the Berkshire Festival

NOW IN ITS tenth season, the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood is one of the most interesting and important developments in our contemporary world of music. Tanglewood is located in the beautiful Berkshire Hills between Stockbridge and Lenox in the western part of the state.

In the Berkshire Festival Concerts, four series of programs are offered during July and August by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch. The Berkshire Music Center, with departments for composition, conducting, opera and chamber music, has study programs from June 30 to Aug. 10.

On the first three weekends of this month, a series of six concerts on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons are being presented in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra directed by Mr. Munch.

Three series of concerts in the Music Shed will begin on July 24. In each weekend series a concert will be given on Thursday and Saturday evenings, and concert series begin on July 24, July 31 and August 7. Pierre Monteux will be the guest conductor on July 26 and Aug. 2. On the evening of Saturday, Aug. 9, Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Koussevitzky Memorial Concert.

Worcester members of the Berkshire Festival audiences will be particularly interested in the all-Wagner concert program on Saturday evening, Aug. 2, when the soloists will include Margaret Harshaw, Metropolitan Opera soprano. We shall hear Miss Harshaw in Worcester this Fall as the star of the "Artist's Night" program of the Worcester Music Festival.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES
JUL 20 1952

Berkshire
Officials
Orches

Special to The TANGLEW
19—When C ducts the chestra
their tri Berksh
an off comp
Th
of
in the Thursd county to (Eroic
"First
the of welcom
the eve
T. Capel nearest ch
The conce
nine in the Saturday
noons. Pie
the baton day program stein for Au
Mr. Mon
the Boston O
1924. was Boston the toured with include in h
Saturday
Rite of Spri ducted in Par thusiastic aud
he was booed
premiere in th

NEW HERA

Tanglew
Reaches

By

The first half of the Festival at Tanglew
Mass., closes this after Charles Munch will chamber orchestra
Symphony musicians
Haydn and Schubert.
then moves from T
Theater-Concert Hall t
Music Shed, where t
the nine concerts of th
Boston Symphony wi
Thursday night. Mr. conduct on Thursday
Sunday afternoon; P teux, in his Berkshire conduct Saturday nigh Five (using the term fo after 1880) will be rep
the regular festival p Monteux, who introdu sky's "Le Sacre du both to Paris and to will conduct it on Sat
Hugh Ross will co
Dallapiccola's "Three Songs," for chorus and next Sunday. Mr. Dal teaching composition wood for a second summer. Mr. Munch w Arthur Honegger's
Morts," also for orch chorus, on Sunday afte
3. Two works by Am composers are schedule Swanson's "Short S
which won the New Y Critics' Circle's latest award, for Thursday
7, and Aaron Copla symphony for Saturd
Aug. 9.

Closing Festiv

Mr. Munch's program day night, July 31, works of Gabriel Fauré
with Brahms's fourth Nicole Henriot will be in Fauré's Ballade a piano concerto. Mr. M concert, a Wagner progr
with Margaret Harsha Kullman and James soloists. On Aug. 3, M will preface the Hone with Beethoven's "Egm ture and eighth symp Debussy's "Iberia." In gram for Thursday, Au mann's "Spring" symp cedes the Swanson
Artur Rubinstein will soloist in Brahm's sec concerto. The concert under Leonard Bernste cated to the memory Koussevitzky. Besides th gram, it will includ
dante by C. P. E. Bach fifth symphony of Sib festival closes with Tanglewood performan
Berlioz Requiem Sund
noon, Aug. 10, under M
The orchestra will also h rehearsals on the next t urday mornings for the its pension fund.

The Berkshire Music schedule for the coming cludes chamber music s morning; a student sco at 4:30 and one act oper on Tuesday; a concer
Berkshire Woodwind
Wednesday evening and orchestra concert Friday

The annual "Tangle Parade" program, with [47]

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 20 1952

Tanglewood Music Season Reaches Intensive Stage

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

The first half of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., closes this afternoon, when Charles Munch will conduct a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony musicians in works of Haydn and Schubert. The festival then moves from Tanglewood's Theater-Concert Hall to the large Music Shed, where the first of the nine concerts of the complete Boston Symphony will be held Thursday night. Mr. Munch will conduct on that date and next Sunday afternoon; Pierre Monteux, in his Berkshire debut, will conduct Saturday night.

Five contemporary composers (using the term for those born after 1880) will be represented in the regular festival programs. Mr. Monteux, who introduced Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" both to Paris and to New York, will conduct it on Saturday, and Hugh Ross will conduct Luigi Dallapiccola's "Three Prisoners' Songs," for chorus and orchestra, next Sunday. Mr. Dallapiccola is teaching composition at Tanglewood for a second consecutive summer. Mr. Munch will conduct Arthur Honegger's "Danse des Morts," also for orchestra and chorus, on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 3. Two works by American-born composers are scheduled: Howard Swanson's "Short Symphony," which won the New York Music Critics' Circle's latest orchestral award, for Thursday night, Aug. 7, and Aaron Copland's third symphony for Saturday night, Aug. 9.

Closing Fortnight

Mr. Munch's program for Thursday night, July 31, opens with works of Gabriel Fauré and closes with Brahms's fourth symphony; Nicole Henriot will be the soloist in Fauré's Ballade and Ravel's piano concerto. Mr. Monteux will conduct a Wagner program Aug. 2, with Margaret Harshaw, Charles Kullman and James Pease as soloists. On Aug. 3, Mr. Munch will preface the Honegger work with Beethoven's "Egmont" overture and eighth symphony and Debussy's "Iberia." In his program for Thursday, Aug. 7, Schumann's "Spring" symphony precedes the Swanson work, and Artur Rubinstein will be the soloist in Brahm's second piano concerto. The concert of Aug. 9, under Leonard Bernstein, is dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky. Besides the Copland symphony, it will include an andante by C. P. E. Bach and the fifth symphony of Sibelius. The festival closes with the first Tanglewood performance of the Berlioz Requiem Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10, under Mr. Munch. The orchestra will also hold public rehearsals on the next three Saturday mornings for the benefit of its pension fund.

The Berkshire Music Center's schedule for the coming week includes chamber music at 10 this morning; a student song recital at 4:30 and one act operas at 8:15 on Tuesday; a concert by the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble Wednesday evening and a student orchestra concert Friday evening.

The annual "Tanglewood on Parade" program, with demonstrations by the Center's departments and a concert by the Boston Symphony, will be held Friday afternoon and evening, Aug. 1. As its annual production of an unfamiliar work, the Center's opera department will stage Mozart's "La Clemenza di Tito" for the first time in this country Monday and Tuesday nights, Aug. 4 and 5. Details for a special concert Friday night, Aug. 8, are not yet announced. Tickets for the festival concerts and "Tanglewood on Parade" are on public sale; the Center's programs are open to contributing members of its Society of Friends.

This is the fifteenth regular Berkshire Festival, the thirteenth to be given by the Boston Symphony and the twelfth at Tanglewood

---

Eagle Aug 1

BSO Roster

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

As a trustee of the Boston Symphony who has some association with the newspaper business, I want to tell you how impressed and delighted I am with your double truck of July 22 giving a complete roster of the Boston Symphony players.

To my knowledge this has never been done before and I know how much checking and fussing it must have required to keep cuts and data straight. At any rate, the over-all result is a great contribution to those who wish to know more about the individual players. If it were possible to take this type and make it up into a booklet for distribution, I know there would be many who in all probability would be willing to pay for it.

This is one of the nicest pieces of neighborly co-operation I have ever seen and I tip my hat herewith.

FRANCIS W. HATCH.
1220 Statler Office Building,
Boston 16.

Boston Sunday Herald July

Symphony to Start Series Of Berkshire Shed Concerts

When Charles Munch conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time since their triumphal tour of Europe, Berkshire County will give them an official and an unofficial welcome. The occasion will be the opening of the major Berkshire Festival in the Tanglewood music shed Thursday evening (July 29), when town and county officials will be guests of honor to hear Beethoven's Third ("Eroica") and Brahms' First Symphony and to witness the presentation of a resolution of welcome and appreciation to the conductor by Mayor Robert T. Capeless of Pittsfield, the nearest city.

The concert will be the first of nine in the shed on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons. Pierre Monteux will take the baton for the first two Saturday programs and Leonard Bernstein for Aug. 9. Mr. Monteux, who conducted the Boston Orchestra from 1919 to 1924, was guest conductor in Boston the past two seasons and toured with them in Europe, will include in his first program next Saturday Igor Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring," which he conducted in Paris in May for an enthusiastic audience 39 years after he was booed from the hall on its premiere in the same hall.

On Sunday's (July 27) program are "Three Prisoners' Songs" by Luigi Dallapiccola, who for the second season has come to teach composition at Tanglewood from his home in Florence, Italy.

The series of Festival concerts in the theatre ends this week-end with concerts by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Munch conducting.

At the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school concerts will take place almost every day. Aaron Copland will conduct the student orchestra Friday evening (July 25) in excerpts from his ballet "Billy the Kid" and Hugh Ross will lead orchestra and chorus in Orgad's "Cantata." Lorin Maazel will conduct Barber's Violin Concerto.

Under Boris Goldovsky the opera department will stage an evening of one-act operas Tuesday, the choral department will present a song recital Tuesday afternoon at 4.30 and Wednesday the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress will offer the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble. Chamber music will be played Sunday mornings at 10 and composers' forums will be held Sunday evenings at 8:15.

SERIES A

Thursday evening

Beethoven ..Symphony No. 3 ("Eroica")
Brahms ..Symphony No. 1 in C minor

Saturday evening
(Conducted by Pierre Monteux)

Cimarosa Overture, "The Secret Marriage"
Schubert ..Symphony No. 7, in C major
Stravinsky ......"The Rite of Spring"

Sunday afternoon, July 7

Franck Symphonic Piece, "Redemption"
Bizet ....Symphony in C major
Dallapiccola ....."Three Prisoners' Songs"
Ravel "Daphnis and Chloe," Suites 1 and 2 (with chorus)

SERIES B

Thursday evening, July 31

Faure ..Incidental Music for "Pelleas and Melisande"
Faure ....Ballade for Piano and orchestra
Ravel ....Piano Concerto
Brahms ....Symphony No. 4, in E minor
Soloist: Nicole Henriot

Saturday evening, Aug. 2
(Conducted by Pierre Monteux)

Wagner Prelude and Love-death from "Tristan and Isolde"
Wagner ....Finale, "Die Walkuere"
Wagner ....Final Scene, "Siegfried"
Wagner Final Scene, .."Goterdaemerung"
(Soloists to be announced)

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 3

Beethoven ......Overture to "Egmont"
Beethoven ....Symphony No. 8
Debussy ...."Iberia"
Honegger .."Danse des Mortes" (with chorus)

SERIES C

Thursday evening, Aug. 7

Schumann ..Symphony No. 1 ("Spring")
Swanson ....Short Symphony
Tchaikovsky ....Symphony No. 4

Saturday evening, Aug. 9
The Koussevitzky Memorial Concert
Conducted by Leonard Bernstein

C.P.E. Bach ..Andante from Concerto in D major
Copland ....Symphony No. 3
Sibelius ....Symphony No. 5

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10

Berlioz ....Requiem (with chorus)

Eagle July [illegible]

ALUMNA 'PARADER': Among the successful graduates of the Berkshire Music Center who will participate in tomorrow night's Tanglewood Parade program is Mildred Miller, now of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

UTICA, N. Y.
OBSERVER-DISPATCH

JUL 13 1952

Tanglewood's 9 Concerts Open July 24

The first of this season's series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the huge shed at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., will take place Thursday evening, July 24.

Thereafter, the concerts will take place each Thursday and Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, through Sunday, Aug. 9.

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct six of the concerts. Pierre Monteux, former music director of the San Francisco Symphony, will conduct two, and Leonard Bernstein will conduct one.

One of the highlights of this year's series will be an all-Wagner program to be conducted Thursday evening, July 31, by Monteux. Soloists will be Margaret Harshaw, soprano; Charles Kullman, tenor, and James Pease, bass.

Artur Rubinstein will be the soloist at the Aug. 7 concert. He will play Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 2 in B flat major. On July 31, Pianist Nicole Henriot will be heard in Faure's Ballade for Piano and Orchestra, and in Ravel's Piano Concerto.

Andrew McKinley, tenor, will be soloist with the chorus in a presentation of Berlioz' Requiem at the closing concert on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10. The chorus, conducted by Hugh Ross, also will be heard Sunday afternoon, July 27, in Three Prisoners' Songs by Dallapiccola, and Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe Suites 1 and 2.

Today and next Saturday evening and next Sunday afternoon there will be programs in the smaller Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood by members of the Boston Symphony under Mr. Munch's direction.

The advance sale of tickets for seats in the shed is handled by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., at Tanglewood. Admissions to the grounds outside the shed are sold the day of the concert.

The program of shed concerts:

Thursday Night, July 24
Beethoven Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"
Brahms Symphony No. 1, in C Minor

Saturday Night, July 26
Conducted By Pierre Monteux
Cimarosa Overture, "The Secret Mari
Cimarosa
Overture, "The Secret Marriage"
Schubert Symphony No. 7 in C Major
Stravinsky "The Rite of Spring"

Sunday Afternoon, July 27
Franck
Symphonic Piece from "Redemption"
Bizet Symphony in C Major
Dallapiccola
"Three Prisoners' Songs" (with Chorus)
(Conducted by Hugh Ross)
Ravel
"Daphnis and Chloe," Suites 1 and 2 (with Chorus)

Thursday Night, July 31
Faure Incidental Music for "Pelleas et Melisande" Faure Ballade for Piano and Orch.
Ravel Piano Concerto
Brahms Symphony No. 4, in E Minor
Soloist: Nicole Henriot

Saturday Night, Aug. 2
Conducted by Pierre Monteux
Wagner Prelude and Love-death "Tristan and Isolde"
Wagner Waton's Farewell and Fire Music, "Die Walkure"
Wagner Final Scene, "Siegfried"
Wagner Immolation Scene "Gotterdammerung"
Soloists: Margaret Harshaw, Soprano,
Charles Kullman, Tenor
James Pease, Bass

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 3
Beethoven Overture to "Egmont"
Beethoven Symphony No. 8
Debussy "Iberia"
Honegger "Danse des Morts" (with Chorus)

Thursday Night, Aug. 7
Schumann Symphony No. 1 ("Spring")
Swanson Short Symphony
Brahms Piano Concerto No. 2 In B Flat Major
Soloist: Artur Rubinstein

Saturday Night, Aug. 9
The Koussevitzky Memorial Concert
Conducted by Leonard Bernstein
C. P. E. Bach
Andante from Concerto in D Major
Copland Symphony No. 3
Sibelius Symphony No. 5

Sunday Afternoon, Aug. 10
Berlioz Requiem (with Chorus)
Soloist: Andrew McKinley, Tenor

---

952. August 4 N.Y.T.

WORK BY HONEGGER IS PLAYED AT LENOX

Throng at Tanglewood Hears Munch Conduct Bostonians in 'La Danse des Morts'

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3—The second week-end of the main phase of the Berkshire Music Festival came to an end this afternoon, with the radiant summer weather bringing out huge crowds. Charles Munch conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of Beethoven, Debussy and Honegger.

Arthur Honegger's "La Danse des Morts" for baritone, soprano, contralto, narrator, chorus and orchestra was the unfamiliar work on today's program. The soloists were Richard Sharretts, Irene Jordan and Betty Lou Allen, with Arnold Moss as the narrator. The Berkshire Festival Chorus, prepared by Hugh Ross, provided the choral ensemble.

The Honegger work, completed in 1938, has not been performed hitherto by the Boston Symphony and is new to this listener. It combines a slashing, almost violent, dramatic quality with a hushed and soaring tenderness. Under Mr. Munch's direction, it had a performance of sustained brilliance.

Honegger has been attracted to biblical themes from his beginnings as a composer. Compared with his early works in this vein. "La Danse des Morts" is tighter, more drastic in its contrasts and more tellingly scored. Striking effects are realized with limited elements of the large apparatus used in the score and then with a call upon everyone.

Driving, Pounding Rhythm

Consider two examples. The second section, also titled "La Danse des Morts," is hair-raising in its impact. It is as if a Michelangelo in tone had riven the earth. Chorus and orchestra are required to sing at the full and to maintain a driving, pounding rhythm. Then at the end, Affirman, the solo's soprano, in high pianissimo tones, soars over the muted orchestra with a rare and touching purity. Miss Jordan, by the way, sang this passage with beauty of tone.

Mr. Munch was the organizing force behind this powerful interpretation, but he got yeoman service from the orchestra, chorus and all the soloists. Mr. Moss read well, though in one place the poor man had to contend with the thunder of a fortissimo ensemble.

Mr. Munch's reading of Debussy's "Iberia" also was one of his fine efforts. He understands the spirit of this music, and he evoked its exotic atmosphere by capturing its subtle colors and rhythms.

As for his conception of Beethoven's "Egmont" overture and Beethoven's Eighth, it was roughhewn, not particularly balanced in tone or in pacing. But Beethoven responds well to ruggedness.

Last night's Wagner program was conducted by Pierre Monteux with notable clarity and propulsion. His ideas of tempo have balance and proportion; they are not so broad that they induce boredom, and they are not so fast that the music loses its majectic curve. His handling of "Siegfried's Rhine Journey" was a case in point. It had remarkable vigor and it was projected with the grand line.

Three Americans Soloists

The soloists were three young American singers, and they all distinguished themselves. James Pease appeared in Wotan's Farewell from "Die Walkuere," and he used his big bass-baritone with control and variety.

Margaret Harshaw of the Metropolitan Opera, who recently made the jump from the contralto to the dramatic soprano repertoire, appeared in the final duet from "Siegfried" and in the Immolation Scene from "Goetterdaemmerung." Her partner in the "Siegfried" excerpt was Howard Vandenburg.

Miss Harshaw reinforced the impression she made at the Metropolitan last season when she sang the "Goetterdaemmerung" Bruennhilde. Her voice rang out, clear and true. Her singing had temperament, and even though she wore an evening gown and stood in front of an orchestra she conveyed the emotions of a living stage.

Mr. Vandenburg, who was a baritone until he recently became a tenor, proved to be a Wagnerian singer of greatp romise. His voice is still a bit light, but it had an agreeable lyric quality not unbecoming for Siegfried.

He sang with style and musicianship, indicating that with more experience he should qualify for these difficult major roles in any operat house. Actually he is going to Munich for a year's work, which is just what the musical doctors would order.

It may be that Europe is not producing its usual quota of new Wagnerian singers, but it looks as if the American school of young artists is prepared to take over the burden.

[48]

INFORMATION OBSCURED

Mostly About Music

Berkshire Festival Will Close With Berlioz' Furious 'Requiem'

By JULIAN SEAMAN
Blade Staff Writer

HECTOR BERLIOZ' "Grand Mass for the Dead," a furious masterpiece termed a "Requiem," will close the present Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Festival Chorus in the Shed. Andrew McKinely, tenor, will be the soloist.

The Berlioz Requiem, infrequently performed nowadays because of its ample requirements, has had a history of intrigue, frustration and, on at least one occasion, apparent sabotage. Albert E. Weir's note on Berlioz remarks: "His two great ritual works, Te Deum and Requiem, are, for sheer savagery and the suggestion of blood-curdling rities, unsurpassed. The music is scarcely human, much less Christian."

* * *

THE REQUIEM has the pale distinction of having been commissioned twice—first to celebrate the seventh anniversary of the Revolution of July 28, 1830; again, to honor the memory of General Damremont, who commanded victorious French forces in the taking of Constantine, Algeria and was killed in the assault. Here is the troubled tale:

The first commission came after long and jealous opposition, but the ministerial decree was signed by the end of March, 1837. He had been preparing for just this chance. From the Mass of 1825, he had saved and worked over the Resurrexit; "in Italy, under the impact of St. Peter's, he had gathered ideas for a Judgement Day Oratorio," says Jacques Barzun.

"At first," writes Berlioz, "my brains boiled over. I was dizzy. Today the eruption has been regulated. The lava has made its bed and God willing everything will go well."

This Requiem had to be contrived at breathless speed and actually was finished in three months. He also found time in this interval of 12 weeks to review concerts for the Revue Musicale and to write an article for an encyclopedia.

By May portions of the score were being copied "but the Ministry" writes Barzun, "which had not scrupled to delay for its own red tape, was now worried about rehearsals and begging for speed. But dint of exertion, Berlioz finished the last page by June 29. This left him less than a month in which to have the parts completed and proofread, and to rehearse a chorus and orchestra of 400.

* * *

"THE VOICES were going smoothly when without warning and indeed without notifying Berlioz, the 'bureaus' countermanded the entire ceremony. 'Ten thousand plagues on their heads!' wrote Berlioz. 'The devil must be in it . . . The scoundrels choose to stop me now! It's outrageous!' "

Berlioz raged and swore, spurned half-hearted efforts of bureaucrats to "indemnify" him, even to the Legion of Honor and a government appointment. Performance, performance, performance! That was all he wanted. So he started a campaign, relentless and defiant, that finally brought him victory.

"On Oct. 23, 1837," Barzun recalls in his monumental biography "the news of the taking of Constantine, in Algeria, was relayed by (visual) telegraph from the south of France and with it the intelligence that General Damremont, commanding, had been killed in the assault. The government would specially honor his memory, since the feat of arms lent needful prestige to the regime.

"At once the unpolitical but impolitic Berlioz asked Dumas to put in a word in his favor with the Duke of Orleans, to whom Dumas was secretary. The ceremony was soon set for December; a few more letters were exhanged, Berlioz had a cordial interview with General Bernard, the minister of war, and he finally received the second commission for his one Requiem."

All of artistic Paris heard the dress rehearsal at the Invalides, Dec. 4. An amateur musician wrote in his journal: "The music was beautiful and strange; wild, convulsed and dolorous . . ." The service took place next day, "before the royal family, the diplomatic corps and all the fashion, power and frivolity of Paris."

The incident of apparent sabotage has been recounted variously, and no two recollections seem to agree. Says Elizabeth C. Moore, in "An Almanac for Music-Lovers":

* * *

"THE EXTENT to which a conductor may make or mar a composition is illustrated in a story from Berlioz' autobiography, in which he laments what Habeneck did to his Requiem. There had long been bad blood between the two men, and when Habeneck insisted upon conducting the first performance of the Requiem, it was over Berlioz' protsets; and the composer stood at Habeneck's side throughout to keep an eye on things.

"This was just as well, as it turned out, for at the most critical point of the Tuba Mirum, when, as Berlioz writes, 'the tempo slows and the wind instruments break in with their terrible flourish—at just the one bar indeed where careful conducting is absolutely indispensable,' Habeneck put down his baton, quietly took out his snuffbox and proceded to take a leisurely pinch of snuff. Berlioz instantly sprang forward and conducted the rest of the piece—and never forgave Habeneck for the deliberately spiteful attempt to ruin it."

And this was the same Habeneck who resurrected Schubert's C major symphony and discovered the "Unfinished."

Barzun, perhaps more exact and meticulous than Mrs. Moore, who seems to have repeated a twice-told tale, gives this account:

"Habeneck, who had been forced on Berlioz by the opposition, conducted more than 300 musicians grouped left and right in the transept. During the first number, Requiem and Kyrie, things went well in spite of the usual mistakes by nervous performers. Habeneck thereupon relaxed so fully that he nearly spoiled the effect of the fanfare in the ensuing Tuba Mirum by faliing to cue the small brass ensembles at the four corners of the orchestra. According to his habit, after setting the tempo, he laid down his baton preparatory to taking a pinch of snuff—as Berlioz tells in his Memoirs—and the composer himself had to give the signal. The rest proceeded without a hitch.

"Whether the audience was bored or moved or bewildered by Berlioz' music, it is impossible to say, since there could be no applause, but the critics were with few exceptions favorable. Nothing like the Requiem had ever been heard by human ears, and the impression of sustained power could not be gainsaid . . . The Requiem had been an artistic success. No one in Paris who was capable of exercising judgment could doubt that this new music was something to reckon with. The leaders of the Romantic generation never forgot it and, 35 years later, after Berlioz' death, Liszt was still pondering the powerful, inscrutable score. Berlioz himself said, two years before his death, that if all his works were to be ordered burned, he would ask grace for the Requiem."

iety . . . Leonard Bernstein will conduct his latest one-act opera, "Trouble in Tahiti," at Tanglewood Aug. 8.

Music As It Is Heard At Tan

PART of an audience, sitting in camp chairs, on benches, or stretched out on the grass, bask in a hot afternoon sun, the while Mozart, Beethoven or Brahms speak soothingly from the "little" Shed, wher play for everyone to wood, near Lenox.

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
JUL 20 1952

Symphony to Start Series Of Berkshire Shed Concerts

When Charles Munch conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time since their triumphal tour of Europe, Berkshire County will give them an official and an unofficial welcome. The occasion will be the opening of the major Berkshire Festival in the Tanglewood music shed Thursday evening (July 29), when town and county officials will be guests of honor to hear Beethoven's Third ("Eroica") and Brahms' First Symphony and to witness the presentation of a resolution of welcome and appreciation to the conductor by Mayor Robert T. Capeless of Pittsfield, the nearest city.

The concert will be the first of nine in the shed on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons. Pierre Monteux will take the baton for the first two Saturday programs and Leonard Bernstein for Aug. 9. Mr. Monteux, who conducted the Boston Orchestra from 1919 to 1924, was guest conductor in Boston the past two seasons and toured with them in Europe, will include in his first program next Saturday Igor Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring," which he conducted in Paris in May for an enthusiastic audience 39 years after he was booed from the hall on its premiere in the same hall.

On Sunday's (July 27) program are "Three Prisoners' Songs" by Luigi Dallapiccola, who for the second season has come to teach composition at Tanglewood from his home in Florence, Italy.

The series of Festival concerts in the theatre ends this week-end with concerts by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Munch conducting.

At the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school concerts will take place almost every day. Aaron Copland will conduct the student orchestra Friday evening (July 25) in excerpts from his ballet "Billy the Kid" and Hugh Ross will lead orchestra and chorus in Orgad's "Cantata." Lorin Maazel will conduct Barber's Violin Concerto.

Under Boris Goldovsky the opera department will stage an evening of one-act operas Tuesday, the choral department will present a song recital Tuesday afternoon at 4.30 and Wednesday the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress will offer the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble. Chamber music will be played Sunday mornings at 10 and composers' forums will be held Sunday evenings at 8:15.

SERIES A
Thursday evening
Beethoven	Symphony No. 3 ("Eroica")
Brahms	Symphony No. 1 in C minor
Saturday evening (Conducted by Pierre Monteux)
Cimarosa	Overture, "The Secret Marriage"
Schubert	Symphony No. 7, in C major
Stravinsky	"The Rite of Spring"
Sunday afternoon, July 27
Franck	Symphonic Piece, "Redemption"
Bizet	Symphony in C major
Dallapiccola	"Three Prisoners' Songs"
Ravel	"Daphnis and Chloe," Suites 1 and 2 (with chorus)
SERIES B
Thursday evening, July 31
Faure	Incidental Music for "Pelleas and Melisande"
Faure	Ballade for Piano and orchestra
Ravel	Piano Concerto
Brahms	Symphony No. 4, in E minor
Soloist: Nicole Henriot
Saturday evening, Aug. 2 (Conducted by Pierre Monteux)
Wagner	Prelude and Love-death from "Tristan and Isolde"
Wagner	Finale, "Die Walkuere"
Wagner	Final Scene, "Siegfried"
Wagner	Final Scene, "Goterdaemerung" (Soloists to be announced)
Sunday afternoon, Aug. 3
Beethoven	Overture to "Egmont"
Beethoven	Symphony No. 8
Debussy	"Iberia"
Honegger	"Danse des Mortes" (with chorus)
SERIES C
Thursday evening, Aug. 7
Schumann	Symphony No. 1 ("Spring")
Swanson	Short Symphony
Tchaikovsky	Symphony No. 4
Saturday evening, Aug. 9 The Koussevitzky Memorial Concert Conducted by Leonard Bernstein
C.P.E. Bach	Andante from Concerto in D major
Copland	Symphony No. 3
Sibelius	Symphony No.
Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10
Berlioz	Requiem (with chorus)

Music Center Closes Sunday With 3812 Alumni Listed

TANGLEWOOD—The Berkshire Music Center will close its 10th session Sunday with 3812 alumni. They have come to the summer school of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood from every state of the union and 44 different countries. The total number from foreign countries is 199.

In 21 major United States symphony orchestras there are 120 players and three conductors, who have studied at Tanglewood. The Cleveland orchestra leads with 15 players, Indianapolis is second with 11 and the Boston and San Antonio Orchestras are tied for third with 10. The conductors are in Cincinnati, Louisville, Ky., and Dallas, Texas. Toronto, Canada has three players and the National Gallery in Washington has four players and the conductor.

Among 24 conductors in major and minor orchestras are: Leonard Bernstein, free lance; Thor Johnson, Cincinnati; Walter Handl, Dallas; Eleazar deCarvalho, Rio de Janeiro; Lukas Foss, free lance; Robert Zeller, Sadler's Wells Ballet, Herman Herz, Duluth; Alexander Leslie, Springfield; Hans Gruher, Vancouver; Howard Shanet, Huntington, W.Va., Wolfgang Stressemann, Toledo, Ohio.

Among prominent singers are six with the Metropolitan Opera Company, 17 with the New York City Center Opera, Adele Addison, Nancey Trickey, William Horne and Janice Moudry, who are free lance singers, and Mario Lanza, with MGM. Listed in the prominent alumni are choral directors, instrumentalists and composers.

The school has had each season a guest teacher of composition, usually from Europe, including Arthur Honegger, Darius Milhaud and Jacques Ibert, Frenchmen, Luigi Dallapiccola of Italy, and Paul Hindesmith and Samuel Barber, Americans.

Each year the opera department has staged an opera distinguished for its performance, with four American premieres. It is believed that Mozart's "Titus," this season's production, is also a first.

Sunday Std'd Times
July 27 '52

Major Festival Is UnderaWy At Tanglewood

Special to The Standard-Times

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, July 26—With an official welcome for the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Charles Munch, its conductor, by Berkshire County Thursday night at their opening concert in the big shed, Tanglewood began its major Berkshire Festival. The concerts will continue through Aug., 10, with programs every Thursday and Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

Pierre Monteux arrived in Lenox Tuesday from Paris, to take the baton for the first two Saturday night concerts as the first guest conductor not trained by the late Serge Koussevitzky. As Boston Symphony leader from 1919 to 1924, and as guest conductor last season and on the European tour, Mr. Monteux is well acquainted with the orchestra. One of the highlights of Saturdays program this weekend is Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring," for which he was booed when he introduced it in Paris 39 years ago and cheered when he repeated it with the Boston Symphony last May in the same hall. His second concert Aug. 2 will be all-Wagner, with Margaret Harshaw, Howard Vandenburg and James Pease as soloists.

On tomorrow's program will be "Three Songs in Captivity" by Luigi Dallapiccola, who will be in the audience. He has come from Italy for the second season to teach composition at the Berkshire Music Center. The piano soloists will be Ralph Berkowitz, dean of the school, and Lukas Foss, pianist, conductor and composer who is teaching at the Center. Hugh Ross will conduct with the chorus.

[49]

---

rtets and small orchestra is everywhere in Tangle

Second

thusiastic Fe es Ovation

Nicole Henriot Ac
At Tanglewood—B
Draws Praise for

JAY C. ROSENFELD

LEWOOD—Nicole Henriot, soloist in the first Boston Orchestra concert of this and middle week end of the shire Festival series in the hed last night, scored a success. She played Faure's or piano and orchestra, and Ravel piano concerto. selection makes too severe on a soloist pianistically musicianship and evident esire to give the music its erspective endeared her to audience (6500) and they her enthusiastically.

le Young Lady

a very personable young wore a rather wide black nd her slim waist to sepillowy yellow skirt from ous white blouse, (or was them together) and t with short, swift steps. e ballade is a beautiful Indeed, the opening ornumber on the program, , the incidental music for nd Melisande" is in the ure of writing. Soft and tender and, for this me of the most undeeglected music in the All the more thanks, to Charles Munch for on the programs and for playing it so beautinever allowed the orrise above a certain level nd it was indeed a pleasen to long stretches of y and harmonic vagaries e crash and vehemence ally-expressed heaving el concerto was first years ago by Miss Hener, Marguerite Long, composer directing n the Salle Pleyel el, as is often the sers, was not an onductor and the ja ich he used to such not take on too mu his premier baton. l man and quiet,

INFOR[illegible]TION OBSCURED

d At Tang ood

the "little" Shed, where quartets and small orchestras play for everyone to h ic is everywhere in Tanglewood, near Lenox, Ma

Plouffe

'A GENUINE SUCCESS': Nicole Henriot, featured soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Tanglewood Shed concert last night not only won an ovation from the large audience, but Charles Munch, right, BSO conductor, and the musicians at left joined in praising her performance.

---

nthusiastic Festival Audience ives Ovation to Piano Soloist

Nicole Henriot Acclaimed by 6500 At Tanglewood—Brahms Fourth Symphony Draws Praise for BSO, Munch

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

ANGLEWOOD—Nicole Henriot, ured soloist in the first Boston phony Orchestra concert of this nd and middle week end of the Berkshire Festival series in the t Shed last night, scored a genuine success. She played Faure's ballade for piano and orchestra, and the Ravel piano concerto. Neither selection makes too severe demands on a soloist pianistically but her musicianship and evident sincere desire to give the music its proper perspective endeared her to the large audience (6500) and they recalled her enthusiastically.

Personable Young Lady

She is a very personable young lady. She wore a rather wide black belt around her slim waist to separate a billowy yellow skirt from a diaphanous white blouse, (or was it to keep them together) and tripped out with short, swift steps. The Faure ballade is a beautiful love song. Indeed, the opening orchestral number on the program, also Faure, the incidental music for "Pelleas and Melisande" is in the same nature of writing. Soft and gentle and tender and, for this writer, some of the most undeservedly neglected music in the repertory. All the more thanks, therefore, to Charles Munch for placing it on the programs and doubly so for playing it so beautifully. He never allowed the orchestra to rise above a certain level of sound and it was indeed a pleasure to listen to long stretches of pure melody and harmonic vagaries without the crash and vehemence of musically-expressed heaving emotions.

The Ravel concerto was first played 20 years ago by Miss Henriot's teacher, Marguerite Long, with the composer directing the orchestra in the Salle Pleyel at Paris. Ravel, as is often the case with composers, was not an outstanding conductor and the jazz rhythms which he used to such advantage did not take on too much under his premier baton. He was a small man and quiet, and did not enter into the spirit of the music which his own pen had written. Last night Miss Henriot caught it perfectly, with wit and animation and delicacy, maybe a little bit too much of this latter attribute, for she made our gross jazz a bit Gallic, no fault, however.

Speyer Shares Ovation

The beautiful English horn solo was outstandingly performed by Louis Speyer and Miss Henriot, on one of her several recalls, gallantly stepped back and took Mr. Speyer's hand to ask him to share the applause.

The inevitable photographers were in their regular stations when it came time for her to bow and the first time they exploded their flashes they apparently caught her unaware, for she definitely winced with surprise and made a delightful deprecating gesture asking them to desist, which, of course, they didn't.

After intermission Munch played the Brahms fourth symphony. He gave it a grandeur and breadth to raise it far above ordinary pedestrian readings. The main distinction of the performance was a pace faithfully following the composer's own indication: "Allegro, but not too much so." Usually the first movement is made to step on so swiftly that its whole character is missed. Munch gave it mature ardor by playing it with deliberation and intensity.

Monumental Performance

The orchestra played with glowing tone for him and achieved both tremendous climaxes of sound and, on the other end of the gamut, great effects in dramatic pauses and rhetorical silences. One such effect was carried a bit to extremes, we thought, in the last movement in the variation just before the stentorian brass repeats its opening announcement. Here he deminished the orchestra's tone to a vanishing point and retarded their progress to a momentary standstill, but it was a big performance monumental and one that grip you. Mr. Munch and the o tra received an ovation.

Tanglewood

TODAY

Tanglewood on Parade, annual benefit for for the Berkshire Music Center.

PM
4.00 Opera in the formal garden for reserved and box seat holders.
5.45 Fanfare, followed at 6 by simultaneous performances by four school departments.
8.30 Concert by Boston Symphony Orchestra.
Leonard Bernstein and other alumni conducting.
Drawing of door prizes.
Dancing on the lawn.

TOMORROW

AM
10.00 Public rehearsal of Boston Symphony Orchestra, benefit of Pension Fund.
PM
*4.00 Composers' forum.
8.15 Berkshire Festival Concert by Boston Symphony Orchestra.
Pierre Monteux, conducting.
*Friends of Berkshire Music Center invited.

More Soloists Are Named For 'Carmen'

Bernstein Will Conduct BSO in Shed Tonight

TANGLEWOOD — Additional soloists were announced today for the last act of "Carmen," in which Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight in the concert of Tanglewood on Parade.

With David Lloyd as Don Jose, James Pease as Escamillo, Mildred Miller as Carmen, Francis Barnard will sing the role of Zuniga, Margo Stagliano of Frasquita and Jacqueline Bazinet that of Mercedes. Like all those who are donating their talent, they are former students at the Berkshire Music Center, for which the benefit is held.

Lloyd on TV Shows

Mr. Lloyd, a native of Fort Washington, N.Y., studied at the Curtis Institute and at Tanglewood in the summers from 1947 through 1951. He now sings with the New York City Center Opera and appears on the concert and television stage. He sang the title role in the first American performance of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Grimes," at the Berkshire Music Center, and has appeared in it many times since.

Mrs. Bazinet, described as a dramatic coloratura soprano, is from New Bedford. A graduate of the New England Conservatory, she studied at Tanglewood several seasons. She coaches voice and sings in opera and concert in the winter season.

A native of Cleveland, Mr. Barnard studied at George Washington University, the Juilliard and Cincinnati Conservatories. He is spending his fourth season at Tanglewood. He is currently associate professor of voice at Illinois Wesleyan University.

Margo Stagliano, a student in 1951, is the wife of James Stagliano, principal French horn player of the Boston Orchestra.

12 Door Prizes

The 12 door prizes, which include an RCA Victor Shelley model TV set, installed, will be drawn immediately after the concert by Mrs. Owen Johnson, one of the founders of the Berkshire Festival.

Members of the school faculty will play for dancing on the lawn.

Soloists in All-Wagner Program Tomorrow

James Pease
Bass

Margaret Harshaw
Soprano

Howard Vandenburg
Tenor

TANGLEWOOD—Margaret Harshaw, soprano, Howard Vandenburg, tenor, and James Pease, bass, will be the soloists in the all-Wagner program of the Berkshire Festival tomorrow night with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux conducting. It will be the second and last concert that Mr. Monteux will conduct at Tanglewood this season.

Made Met Debut in 1942

Miss Harshaw began her career at Robin Hood Dell, Philadelphia, where she appeared in summer opera productions, while she was studying with William vonWymetal of the Curtis Institute. She also studied with Madame Schoen-Renee at the Juilliard School of Music on scholarship. Since her debut with the Metropolitan Opera Company in 1942 she has sung in various parts of the world. Extending her voice from contralto to soprano, she returned to the Metropolitan in 1951. There she has sung such parts as Senta in "The Flying Dutchman," Brunhilde in "Gotterdammerung," Kundry in "Parsifal" and Isolde.

Mr. Vandenburg, who is a native of Buffalo, began his career as a baritone, but has recently developed his voice in the tenor range. As one of the leading baritones of the Philadelphia Opera Company he sang major roles in 300 performances. As a "heoric-dramatic tenor" he now sings oratorio, German, French and Itailian opera and a concert repertoire. He has sung over radio and television. He was soloist at the Bach Festival and has recently returned from three cross-country concert tours. He sang the final scene from "Siegfried," in which he will appear tomorrow night, at the Cincinnati Music Festival last year.

Air Force Veteran

Mr. Pease, who sang earlier in the Festival, made his professional debut with the Philadelphia Opera Company in 1941. His career was interrupted by three years of service in the Army Air Force. He has sung at Tanglewood and on many other occasions with the Boston orchestra. His first appearance at Tanglewood was as a student at the Berkshire Music Center in one of the leading parts of the first American production of "Peter Grimes." He has been a leading singer in the productions of the New York City Center Opera, and now has a contract with the Hamburg Opera.

Tickets are on sale at the box office at Tanglewood and at England Brothers. General admission for listening from the lawn will be sold before the concert.

The Program

The program follows:

Wotan's Farewell and Fire Music from Die Walkure, Act 3 .... Wagner
Siegfried, Act 3, Scene 2 .... Wagner
Excerpts from Gotterdammerung.. Wagner

[50]

Monteux Triumphs at Festival In Tanglewood Debut

Stravinsky's 'Rite of Spring' High Light of Saturday Night Concert—Munch Shares Ovation With Flautist, Georges Laurent

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

TANGLEWOOD—Charles Munch shared the podium at Tanglewood over the week end with Pierre Monteux, a former conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the decade before Serge Koussevitzky. Munch gave the baton to Monteux for the Saturday evening concert while he presided yesterday afternoon himself.

Monteux's program included the most controversial composition of the present century and the one in which he has had the most direct and intimate contact, the "Rite of Spring" of Igor Stravinsky. At its initial performance in 1913 in Paris, Monteux was the conductor and he was again the conductor last May in the same concert hall when the Boston orchestra, on its first European tour, played it, again with the composer in the audience.

At Saturday night's performance there were two men of the Boston orchestra who were in the orchestra at the Theatre des Champs Elysees in 1913 at the first playing: Louis Speyer, English horn, and Henri Girard, double bass. The man who played the famous opening solo for the bassoon, Abdon Laus, later came to the Boston orchestra, but is now retired.

"Le Sacre" is no less a strange piece of music today than it was 39 years ago. Many hearing it for the first time may well have asked themselves if this is not some huge hoax. There are no tunes nor rhythms nor metre like, let's say, the Schubert symphony, the seventh, which Monteux had placed on his program preceding the Stravinsky. In fact, the reason for some of the admiration a conductor and the performers always win on a "Sacre" performance is its actual accomplishment without a catastrophy.

Nothing 'Pretty' About It

It is brutal and savage; there is nothing 'pretty' about it, and Montuex's triumph was in his self- discipline and control. His manner of conducting is to indicate whatever he pleases to convey to his musicians by gestures with his arms and hands. The body remains practically static. He relies on rehearsals for his effects and has, apparently, no last minute notions nor flashes. "Let's play as agreed" we would assume is his attitube. Thus his progress through the complications of varied metrical changes is methodical. He is a gyroscope in a melee and cyclone of notes and tone.

We remember well overhearing Stravinsky some years ago, protesting to a performer for attempting, Stravinsky claimed, to put inflections into his music. That was neither indicated nor desirable. It was not included in the performance Saturday night and one may rely on the authenticity of Monteux's performance. The music was originally written for ballet and it was so played at the very first performance. The theme, in brief, is the sacrifice of a tribe's fairest maiden by dancing to complete exhaustion as a hostage to spring.

The wind instruments and the percussion have a more important share of the proceedings than the strings. "Le Sacre's" position in music is probably very much like some of the paintings on display currently in various galleries or possibly the literature of James Joyce or Gertrude Stein. It becomes clearer on acquaintance but it is sadistic in its impact, yet we can not detect anything downright vulgar in it as we think we can of certain other examples of even later vintage and incomparably more saccharine flavor we can summon up.

A personal acquaintance who was at the original premier told of that performance. She recalled how Saint-Saens, the venerable patriach of French music, sitting beside her, kept asking "Vous aimez ca, vous aimez ca?" (You like that?). And it would seem very easy to imagine that many a one at Saturday's concert asked his neighbor the same question. The question would seem to be to ask ourselves if the possibilities of simple tunes and harmonies within the octave have been exhausted by the countless composers of whom Bach and Beethoven and Mozart, or as Saturday night, Cimarosa and Schubert, are the arch exhausters, and that anyone choosing to write today must seek new fields and other paths.

Mr. Munch brought the violas back to his right hand where Mr. Monteux had placed the second violins. He chose a work of the same epoch for his major offering of yesterday afternoon: Ravel's orchestral suites, both the first and second series from "Daphnis and Chloe." Also written with ballet in mind, they were performed for the first time within a year preceding "Le Sacre" also under the baton of Monteux.

Historians and sociologists can see in clear perspective the change nay, even the revolution, in taste and manners that takes place in comparatively short spans. There is certainly very little protest today to the sweeping and delirious swirls of Ravel. Indeed, audiences seek it out and record owners put it on their turntables for the thrill it invariably provides. It is the type of frenzied and violently contrasting music in which Mr. Munch excells and the reaction of the huge audience was exactly as might have been predicted.

Praises Musicians

The orchestra itself has never acquitted itself better of these really rugged tests than it has in these first three programs. The vagaries of a succession of conductors have found them alive and alert with instantaneous response. The solo wind instruments or the sections themselves — as the trumpets in the Stravinsky, the oboe in the Bizet symphony and the strings in the same vivacious work — have proved themselves brilliant virtuosi.

One of the most touching incidents of the afternoon was Mr. Munch's generous sharing of the applause in the Ravel with veteran flautist Georges Laurent who played his assignments most beautifully and who will retire at the end of this Tanglewood season after 33 years of distinctive service to the orchestra. Munch used the chorus of the Berkshire Music Center, a factor which is usually omitted, but which yesterday added incalculable depth to the performance. Ravel has used the voices as instrumental lines and given them no words. The build-up in the first series was magnificent and in the second, where they augment the orchestral instruments, the effect is awesome.

Hugh Ross conducted the chorus in Dallapiccola's "Three Songs in Captivity" in which the accompaniment is played by two harps, percussion and two pianos, played by Ralph Berkowitz and Lukas Foss. Mr. Ross handled the chorus with vivid inpiration and blended their tone with the rare combination of accompaniment with great skill. The "Prayer of Mary Stuart" was deeply penitent in spirit and effective in its portrayal of the background the composer had developed. The remaining two were less easily oriented on the first hearing but the audience was very happy to show the composer their appreciation as he was summoned to the stage by Mr. Ross.

The concert began with the symphonic piece from Cesar Franck's "Redemption" and the symphony of 17-year-old Bizet, played with headlong speed and vivacity. The oboe solo in the adagio was beautifully played by Ralph Gomberg although the entire orchestra gave the whole symphony a remarkable glitter.

Plouffe

SUCCESSFUL DEBUT: Pierre Monteux, who made his first appearance at Tanglewood Saturday night as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was recalled to the platform several times by the huge audience following the performance of Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring," which he first conducted 39 years ago.

Eagle-July 31 City Edition

Full Program Is Announced For Tanglewood on Parade

Programs were announced today for the simultaneous performances by the various departments of the Berkshire Music Center tomorrow at 6 PM, when Tanglewood will be on parade for the benefit of the school.

In the Music Shed the school orchestra will play Haydn's symphony in G major, Robert Mandell conducting; Beethoven's concerto in D major, Serge Blanc, soloist, Elyakum Shapira conducting; and Benjamin Britten's "The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra," Lorin Maazel conducting, with David Lloyd as narrator.

In the chamber music hall will be heard Passacaglia (Handel-Halvorsen); sonata for flute and piano (Yehosaua Lakner, a student); "As Vesta was Descending" (Weelkes) and "Le Chant des Oiseaux" (Janequin) both by the madrigal group; theme and elaborations (Leonard Rosenman); sextet (Bridge).

In the theatre, the scenic cantata, "Alcottiana" by Andre Singer, will be staged by Boris Goldovsky, assisted by Ludwig Zirner, accompanied by Andre Singer, with Charles Lawrie as musical assistant. The large cast will be in costumes designed by Laura Zirner, loaned by the University of Illinois Opera Workshop. Mrs Zirner designed the unit sets also.

In the barn the Tanglewood Study Group under Ingolf Dahl, professor of the University of Southern California, will conduct a program including "Stabat Mater" (Caldara); "Two Catches" (Purcell); "De Plus en Plus" (Binchois); "Lamento" (J. C Bach); "Concerto Grosso in B-flat (Handel) and two chorales (J. S. Bach).

At 7 the chorus will sing on the porch of the main house the following: "Valle Profonda" (Lassus), Roger Bailey conducting; "Revecy Venir" (Lejeune) Peggy Smith conducting; "Silver Swan" (Gibbons) William Hazard, conducting; "Ecoo Momorar" (Monteverdi), Moshe Buchholz conducting; "Five Flower Songs" (Britten), Douglas Harding conducting; Brahms "Motet"; "Three Folk Songs" (Copland).

The concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will follow at 8.15. The special performance of Pergolesi's "Livietta e Tracolla" and scenes from Ibert's "Angelique" will be held in the formal garden at 4 for reserved seat and box-holders. The refreshment tent will be open for sandwiches and beverages for those who picnic on the lawn. The evening will close with the drawing of 12 door prizes, including an RCA Victor TV set, table model, and dancing on the lawn.

All seats in the front section are reserved. The rear section will be for those with general admission tickets to the capacity of the Shed

---

This Clipping From

PHOENIX, ARIZ.
ARIZ. REPUBLIC

JUL 20 1952

Rubenstein Will Perform

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 19—Arthur Rubinstein will play the solo in Brahms's "Second Piano Concerto" with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Festival Aug. 7. The announcement was made by Charles Munch, conductor, who made known at the same time other changes in the program and the names of additional soloists.

Brahms's Fourth Symphony was included in the July 31 program following the receipt by the orchestra of the highest award of the Academie du Disque Francais for its recording of the Brahms work.

Margaret Harshaw, soprano; Charles Kullman, tenor; and James Pease, bass, will be soloists for the Wagner program that Pierre Monteux will conduct Aug. 2. Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor part in Berlioz's "Requiem" in the final festival concert Aug. 10.

Cancelling the program listed for Thursday evening, July 31, Munch will conduct instead Faure's Incidental Music for "Pelleas and Melisande" and "Ballade for Piano and Orchestra," "Ravel's "Piano Concerto" and Brahms's Fourth Symphony.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 18

Concerts Listed At Tanglewood July 19-July 27

Lenox, July 17—Programs of the concerts in the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood Saturday, July 19, through Sunday, July 27, are scheduled as follows:—

Saturday, July 19

8.15 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting.
Mozart—Litaniae for Chorus and Orch. (K. 125) conducted by Hugh Ross
—Piano Concerto in C major, (K. 467) solo by Lukas Foss
Schubert—Mass in G major

Sunday, July 20

*10 a. m. Chamber Music at Berkshire Music Center.
3 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting
Haydn Symphony No. 99 in E-flat
-Symphony No. 86 in D major
Schubert -Mass in G major
*8.15 p. m. Composer's Forum.

Tuesday, July 22

*4.30 p. m. Song Recital by Berkshire Music Center students
*8.15 p. m. Evening of one-act operas

Wednesday, July 23

*8.15 p. m. Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble, gift of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress

Thursday, July 24

8.15 Opening Concert of Berkshire Festival in the shed Charles Munch conducting.
("Welcome Home" to the Orchestra by Berkshire County")
Beethoven...Symphony No. 3, "Eroica"
Brahms...Symphony No. 1, in C minor
Presentation of citation of welcome and appreciation from Berkshire County to Charles Munch by Mayor Robert T. Capeless of Pittsfield

Friday, July 25

*8.15 p m. Symphony concert by the student orchestra, Aaron Copland conducting his own composition, from "Billy the Kid" and Hugh Ross conducting [illegible]gad's Cantata for Chorus and Orchestra.

Saturday, July 26

10 a. m. Public rehearsal by Boston Symphony Orchestra (Benefit, Pension Fund)
8.15 p. m. Berkshire Festival concert, Pierre Monteux conducting.
Cimarosa--Overture, "The Secret Marriage"
Schubert—Symphony No. 7, in C major
Stravinsky "The Rite of Spring"

Sunday, July 27

*10 a. m. Chamber Music at Berkshire Music Center.
3 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert Charles Munch conducting.
Franck...Symphonic Piece from "Redemption"
Bizet...Symphony in C major
Dallapiccola..."Three Prisoners' Songs" (with chorus conducted by Hugh Ross)
Ravel..."Daphnis and Chloe," Suites 1 and 2 (with chorus)
*8.15 p. m. Composers' Forum

*Open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center whose contributions help to support the school.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST
JUL 27 1952

YMCA to Sponsor Trip to Tanglewood

The YWCA will sponsor another one of its summer bus trips on next Sunday. The destination will be the Berkshire Music Festival, at Tanglewood~~, Lenox, Mass., one of~~ the outstanding summer attractions in the New England area.

The program, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, follows: "Overture to Egmont" by Beethoven; "Symphony No. 8" by Beethoven, "Iberia" by Debussey and "Danse des Morts" (with chorus) by Honegger.

The bus will leave the YWCA, 263 Golden Hill street, at 9:30 a.m. and will return in the early evening. Those making the trip are requested to bring box lunches. General admission tickets will be bought.

For reservations, contact the "YW" as soon as possible because of limited reservations.

SYMPHONY HAILED AT FESTIVAL

Plaque Is Presented to Mark Return of Orchestra

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

PITTSFIELD, July 24 — The opening concert of the current Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this evening was not merely one more festival opening, it was a very special occasion.

FIRST TIME

Tonight for the first time since its tour of Europe last May, the Boston Symphony Orchestra played together as a whole. Many of the men, but not all, took part in the June Pops. There was then a division of forces with some of the players functioning in the Esplanade concerts and some participating in the preliminary small orchestra concerts of the festival.

To mark this event Mayor Robert T. Capeless, of Pittsfield made a public presentation to the orchestra, through its conductor, Charles Munch, of a plaque upon which are inscribed these words: "Welcome home to Tanglewood. The people of Berkshire county salute the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the occasion of its first concert after its triumphant tour of Europe. As friends and neighbors we shared with delight, though at a distance, the unparalleled adulation which greeted this peerless band of musicians in its first tour abroad.

Marked With Pride

"In the spring of 1952 we marked with pride that this orchestra was a chosen democratic instrument to sound the note of freedom in an embattled continenent. We rejoice that this great ensemble returns to us at Tanglewood to enrich our lives and to glorify, in its majestic fashion, our beautiful Berkshire Hills."

This document, which bears the signatures of J. Joseph McCabe, John Henderson and John F. Shea, commissioners of Berkshire county, was read to the assembled audience of over 8000 people by Mayor Capeless, who had been introduced by Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In a short and graceful speech Mr. Cabot pointed out that the Boston Symphony now belongs to Berkshire county quite as much as it does to Boston itself, and he closed by saying that nowhere else in the world could be found such a combination of beautiful scenery and great music.

This ceremony accomplished, Messrs. Cabot, Capeless and Munch retired, and after a few moments the conductor returned to lead the orchestra through the first number on the program, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony. The only other piece, which came after intermission, was the First Symphony of Brahms. Now both Beethoven and Brahms are, first of all, symphonists. With them, orchestration was not a primary concern. There will be other times in the three weeks to come when the tone of the orchestra will be more resplendent than it was permitted to be last evening. What we did hear was orchestral playing in which every member of the orchestra participated to his fullest extent. Mr. Munch's approach to Beethoven is highly individual. He does not by any means let the composer speak for himself, but, according to his lights, helps him at every turn with careful molding of phrase and adjustment of dynamics.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 24

To Play at Tanglewood

Boston Symphony to Give First of Its Nine Concerts Tonight

LENOX, Mass., July 23.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, will give the first of its nine Berkshire Festival concerts in the Music Shed at Tanglewood at 8:15 tomorrow night, playing two symphonies, the third of Beethoven and the first of Brahms. A resolution of welcome and appreciation will be presented to Mr. Munch by Mayor Robert T. Capeless of Pittsfield on behalf of communities in this region.

Pierre Monteux will conduct the second concert of this series Saturday night, and Mr. Munch the third on Sunday afternoon. There will also be a public rehearsal by the orchestra at 10 a. m. Saturday for the benefit of its pension fund.

The Berkshire Music Center's student orchestra will give a concert Friday night in the Music Shed, where Aaron Copland will conduct music from his "Billy the Kid" and Hugh Ross will conduct Orgad's cantata for chorus and orchestra.

---

400 Attend Tribute to Koussevitzky

Late Conductor's Wife Announces $2000 Gift To Lenox Library

LENOX — Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, widow of the late conductor, was principal speaker Saturday at a simple ceremony at the Lenox Library commemorating his birthday. About 400 people attended.

Introduced by John H. P. Gould, president of the library, she announced the gift of $2000 from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation to the library in recognition of the institution's "cultural service to its community and the signal aid it has rendered to the purposes and ideals of the Berkshire Music Center.

"The Lenox Library," she said, "for more than a decade gave understanding support to Dr. Koussevitzky's efforts to create here in the Berkshires not only a great national and international festival of music but also a center of a unique kind of music education.

"It is our hope that the enlarged collection of music scores, records and books on music will be used to the full by the members of the community and students alike."

Following Mrs. Koussevitzky's talk, two movements from Beethoven and Bruckner were played by William Kroll, Richard Burgin, Joseph de Pasquale, Eugene Lehner and Jean Bedetti, members of the faculty at the Berkshire Music Center and collaborators with the late conductor.

A "March of Time" film and a State Department film showing the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Tanglewood were shown. Tea was served in the garden of the library.

[illegible] – July 28, 1952

Composer, Conductor on Stage at Tanglewood

Plouffe

Luigi Dallapiccola applauds Hugh Ross for his conducting of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Music Center chorus in the former's "Three Prisoners' Songs" yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood. Ralph Berkowitz (standing), pianist, and (seated) Bernard Zighera, first harpist, were two of the soloists.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
JUL 20 1952

Tanglewood Concerts

With the last of the chamber orchestra programs in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood this afternoon, the stage is set for the opening later in the week of the annual series of nine appearances of the full Boston Symphony Orchestra in the spacious Music Shed. The next three Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons will be devoted to the world's great music, performed by an organization that has long been regarded by many as the most polished in America and which, on its recent first visit to England and the continent, was acclaimed in superlative terms.

Charles Munch, regular conductor since the death of Serge Koussevitzky, will lead most of the Music Shed concerts, with Pierre Monteux, former conductor, and Leonard Bernstein on the podium in the others. The festival chorus, directed by Hugh Ross, will be heard on several occasions, while one of the high points of the entire Tanglewood season will be the appearance on Aug. 7 of Artur Rubinstein as soloist in Brahms' second piano concerto.

Modern music, and master works of the past—by Wagner and Beethoven, Tchaikowsky, Sibelius and Debussy—will be presented on these comprehensive programs. Those concluding today in the smaller hall have been made up of lesser and often austere compositions; for the first time composers other than Bach and Mozart were included—Handel, Schubert, Vivaldi. All this is musical fare of the finest sort, available by and large, with the student facilities and the setting, nowhere else.

It is close to 20 years now since these outdoor concerts in the hilly stillness of the Berkshires began on a small scale. It is 15 years since that memorable occasion when the orchestra competed in "The Ride of the Valkyrie" against the flashings and crashings of a thunderstorm outside the big tent. Ten years ago this summer the main concerts had to be called off because of the war but, in the years since being resumed, they have achieved new heights. Western Massachusetts residents need hardly be reminded that there exists in their midst a thriving summertime music center without parallel in the western hemisphere.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 25 1952

Tanglewood

The Berkshire Festival

* * *

By Arthur Berger

The Bostonians

LENOX, Mass., July 24.—The Berkshire Festival entered its major phase here this evening with more than its usual atmosphere of festivity, for this was the first appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in full body since its successful spring tour abroad. Berkshire County rose to the occasion of welcoming the orchestra back to Tanglewood with a variety of official features, the most notable of which was the presentation by Pittsfield's mayor, Robert T. Capeless of a certificate expressing the pride of the Berkshire region in the "unparalleled adulation" that greeted the musical emissaries in Europe.

The mayor was introduced by Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the orchestra, just before the start of the program of Beethoven and Brahms under the direction of Charles Munch. The scroll was the handiwork of people of towns and cities in the general neighborhood of the Tanglewood Estate. The paper was made by Crane & Co., of Dalton; the leather for the frame was tanned by the Widen Tanning Company, of North Adams; the Eaton Paper Company, of Pittsfield, takes credit for illuminating the script, and Duilio Boldrini, of Lenox, carved the frame.

The mayor, in presenting the scroll, said that when Berkshire County had the news of the orchestra's reception abroad it felt it wanted to give the Bostonian's a reception too. Berkshire, he wanted it known, felt that the Boston Symphony belong to it as well as to Boston. This feeling, he made it understood, had existed for some time, though this was the first time it was officially expressed.

A representation of some twenty-five officials from the county's thirty-two towns was in the audience, which also included two of the three Berkshire county commissioners who voted the official welcome. They were J. Joseph McCabe and John F. Shea. The third commissioner was John Henderson, and the names of all three were ascribed to the certificate. Charles Munch accepted the framed scroll with words of appreciation.

Mr. Cabot read from the platform congratulatory telegrams from Senator Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts and Congressman John W. Heselton of the first district in Massachusetts where Tanglewood is situated. Senator Saltonstall extended his "welcome home greetings" to the orchestra and its musical director, Charles Munch, and described the orchestra as "for many years one of Massachusetts' and one of America's greatest institutions, bring pleasure and inspiration to all our people." Congressman Heselton regretted that congressional appointments made it impossible for him to be at Tanglewood tonight. "I am sure," he wrote, "that the people of the ifrst district were proud of you all throughout your recent European tour and that you made a very real contribution to our country internationally."

The atmosphere of festivity was pointed up for those who entered Tanglewood's main gate by the arch of evergreen and geraniums prepared by volunteers from Lenox and Pittsfield. The weather could scarcely have been more congenial for outdoor listening than it was this evening, with clear skies and fresh breezes wafting the listeners in the shed and the usual additional auditors sprawled on the lawns behind it.

The change to cool fresh weather had arrived very much with a flourish last night, during a concert in the theater concert hall by the Berkshire Woodwinde Ensemble in a chamber music series sponsored by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation. The storm broke loose during the last part of the program, while the men were playing Poulenc's sextet. Against serious competition from the patter of rain on the wooden roof, the ensemble valiantly continued to the end, while some of the listeners had to shift positions from one place to another to avoid a few leaks in the ceiling. The contemporary program included, besides the Poulenc, works of Irving Fine, Arthur Berger. Roussel and DeBussy.

The present season is the Berkshire Festival's fifteenth. While it started in 1934 under different auspices than the present, the project was shelved during the war. The Boston group held forth here for the first time in 1936. In the following year it moved to the Tanglewood estate, the gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks. In 1938 the shed was built and this is thus the fifteenth summer of the existence of the hugh fan-shaped construction that is acoustically reinforced and seats 6,000. This summer, too, the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's school here at Tanglewood, will hold its tenth session, the anniversary will be marked at the annual Tanglewood on parade, Friday, Aug. 1.

Mr. Munch opened the series in the shed with a standard program including Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony and the Brahms first symphony. The earlier concerts in this summer's Berkshire Festival had been given by a reduced orchestra drawn from the Boston Symphony. And this ensemble performed in the theater concert hall.

Tonight's attendance of 8,200 exceeded that of last year's opening concert by 1,500.

[50]

SYMPHONY HAILED AT FESTIVAL

Plaque Is Presented to Mark Return of Orchestra

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

PITTSFIELD, July 24 — The opening concert of the current Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this evening was not merely one more festival opening, it was a very special occasion.

FIRST TIME

Tonight for the first time since its tour of Europe last May, the Boston Symphony Orchestra played together as a whole. Many of the men, but not all, took part in the June Pops. There was then a division of forces with some of the players functioning in the Esplanade concerts and some participating in the preliminary small orchestra concerts of the festival.

To mark this event Mayor Robert T. Capeless, of Pittsfield made a public presentation to the orchestra, through its conductor, Charles Munch, of a plaque upon which are inscribed these words: "Welcome home to Tanglewood. The people of Berkshire county salute the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the occasion of its first concert after its triumphant tour of Europe. As friends and neighbors we shared with delight, though at a distance, the unparalleled adulation which greeted this peerless band of musicians in its first tour abroad.

Marked With Pride

"In the spring of 1952 we marked with pride that this orchestra was a chosen democratic instrument to sound the note of freedom in an embattled continent. We rejoice that this great ensemble returns to us at Tanglewood to enrich our lives and to glorify, in its majestic fashion, our beautiful Berkshire Hills."

This document, which bears the signatures of J. Joseph McCabe, John Henderson and John F. Shea, commissioners of Berkshire county, was read to the assembled audience of over 8000 people by Mayor Capeless, who had been introduced by Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In a short and graceful speech Mr. Cabot pointed out that the Boston Symphony now belongs to Berkshire county quite as much as it does to Boston itself, and he closed by saying that nowhere else in the world could be found such a combination of beautiful scenery and great music.

This ceremony accomplished, Messrs. Cabot, Capeless and Munch retired, and after a few moments the conductor returned to lead the orchestra through the first number on the program, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony. The only other piece, which came after intermission, was the First Symphony of Brahms. Now both Beethoven and Brahms are, first of all, symphonists. With them, orchestration was not a primary concern. There will be other times in the three weeks to come when the tone of the orchestra will be more resplendent than it was permitted to be last evening. What we did hear was orchestral playing in which every member of the orchestra participated to his fullest extent. Mr. Munch's approach to Beethoven is highly individual. He does not by any means let the composer speak for himself, but, according to his lights, helps him at every turn with careful molding of phrase and adjustment of dynamics.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 24 '52

To Play at Tanglewood

Boston Symphony to Give First of Its Nine Concerts Tonight

LENOX, Mass., July 23.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, will give the first of its nine Berkshire Festival concerts in the Music Shed at Tanglewood at 8:15 tomorrow night, playing two symphonies, the third of Beethoven and the first of Brahms. A resolution of welcome and appreciation will be presented to Mr. Munch by Mayor Robert T. Capeless of Pittsfield on behalf of communities in this region.

Pierre Monteux will conduct the second concert of this series Saturday night, and Mr. Munch the third on Sunday afternoon. There will also be a public rehearsal by the orchestra at 10 a. m. Saturday for the benefit of its pension fund.

The Berkshire Music Center's student orchestra will give a concert Friday night in the Music Shed, where Aaron Copland will conduct music from his "Billy the Kid" and Hugh Ross will conduct Orgad's cantata for chorus and orchestra.

---

400 Attend Tribute to Koussevitzky

Late Conductor's Wife Announces $2000 Gift To Lenox Library

LENOX — Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, widow of the late conductor, was principal speaker Saturday at a simple ceremony at the Lenox Library commemorating his birthday. About 400 people attended.

Introduced by John H. P. Gould, president of the library, she announced the gift of $2000 from the Koussevitzky Music Foundation to the library in recognition of the institution's "cultural service to its community and the signal aid it has rendered to the purposes and ideals of the Berkshire Music Center.

"The Lenox Library," she said, "for more than a decade gave understanding support to Dr. Koussevitzky's efforts to create here in the Berkshires not only a great national and international festival of music but also a center of a unique kind of music education.

"It is our hope that the enlarged collection of music scores, records and books on music will be used to the full by the members of the community and students alike."

Following Mrs. Koussevitzky's talk, two movements from Beethoven and Bruckner were played by William Kroll, Richard Burgin, Joseph de Pasquale, Eugene Lehner and Jean Bedetti, members of the faculty at the Berkshire Music Center and collaborators with the late conductor.

A "March of Time" film and a State Department film showing the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Tanglewood were shown. Tea was served in the garden of the library.

Eagle July 28, 1952

Composer, Conductor on Stage at Tanglewood

Plouffe

Luigi Dallapiccola applauds Hugh Ross for his conducting of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Music Center chorus in the former's "Three Prisoners' Songs" yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood. Ralph Berkowitz (standing), pianist, and (seated) Bernard Zighera, first harpist, were two of the soloists.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 20 1952

Tanglewood Concerts

With the last of the chamber orchestra programs in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood this afternoon, the stage is set for the opening later in the week of the annual series of nine appearances of the full Boston Symphony Orchestra in the spacious Music Shed. The next three Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons will be devoted to the world's great music, performed by an organization that has long been regarded by many as the most polished in America and which, on its recent first visit to England and the continent, was acclaimed in superlative terms.

Charles Munch, regular conductor since the death of Serge Koussevitzky, will lead most of the Music Shed concerts, with Pierre Monteux, former conductor, and Leonard Bernstein on the podium in the others. The festival chorus, directed by Hugh Ross, will be heard on several occasions, while one of the high points of the entire Tanglewood season will be the appearance on Aug. 7 of Artur Rubinstein as soloist in Brahms' second piano concerto.

Modern music, and master works of the past—by Wagner and Beethoven, Tchaikowsky, Sibelius and Debussy—will be presented on these comprehensive programs. Those concluding today in the smaller hall have been made up of lesser and often austere compositions; for the first time composers other than Bach and Mozart were included—Handel, Schubert, Vivaldi. All this is musical fare of the finest sort, available by and large, with the student facilities and the setting, nowhere else.

It is close to 20 years now since these outdoor concerts in the hilly stillness of the Berkshires began on a small scale. It is 15 years since that memorable occasion when the orchestra competed in "The Ride of the Valkyrie" against the flashings and crashings of a thunderstorm outside the big tent. Ten years ago this summer the main concerts had to be called off because of the war but, in the years since being resumed, they have achieved new heights. Western Massachusetts residents need hardly be reminded that there exists in their midst a thriving summertime music center without parallel in the western hemisphere.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 25 1952

Tanglewood
The Berkshire Festival

* * *

By Arthur Berger

The Bostonians

LENOX, Mass., July 24.—The Berkshire Festival entered its major phase here this evening with more than its usual atmosphere of festivity, for this was the first appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in full body since its successful spring tour abroad. Berkshire County rose to the occasion of welcoming the orchestra back to Tanglewood with a variety of official features, the most notable of which was the presentation by Pittsfield's mayor, Robert T. Capeless of a certificate expressing the pride of the Berkshire region in the "unparalleled adulation" that greeted the musical emissaries in Europe.

The mayor was introduced by Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the orchestra, just before the start of the program of Beethoven and Brahms under the direction of Charles Munch. The scroll was the handiwork of people of towns and cities in the general neighborhood of the Tanglewood Estate. The paper was made by Crane & Co., of Dalton; the leather for the frame was tanned by the Widen Tanning Company, of North Adams; the Eaton Paper Company, of Pittsfield, takes credit for illuminating the script, and Duilio Boldrini, of Lenox, carved the frame.

The mayor, in presenting the scroll, said that when Berkshire County had the news of the orchestra's reception abroad it felt it wanted to give the Bostonian's a reception too. Berkshire, he wanted it known, felt that the Boston Symphony belong to it as well as to Boston. This feeling, he made it understood, had existed for some time, though this was the first time it was officially expressed.

A representation of some twenty-five officials from the county's thirty-two towns was in the audience, which also included two of the three Berkshire county commissioners who voted the official welcome. They were J. Joseph McCabe and John F. Shea. The third commissioner was John Henderson, and the names of all three were ascribed to the certificate. Charles Munch accepted the framed scroll with words of appreciation.

Mr. Cabot read from the platform congratulatory telegrams from Senator Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts and Congressman John W. Heselton of the first district in Massachusetts where Tanglewood is situated. Senator Saltonstall extended his "welcome home greetings" to the orchestra and its musical director, Charles Munch, and described the orchestra as "for many years one of Massachusetts' and one of America's greatest institutions, bring pleasure and inspiration to all our people." Congressman Heselton regretted that congressional appointments made it impossible for him to be at Tanglewood tonight. "I am sure," he wrote, "that the people of the ifrst district were proud of you all throughout your recent European tour and that you made a very real contribution to our country internationally."

The atmosphere of festivity was pointed up for those who entered Tanglewood's main gate by the arch of evergreen and geraniums prepared by volunteers from Lenox and Pittsfield. The weather could scarcely have been more congenial for outdoor listening than it was this evening, with clear skies and fresh breezes wafting the listeners in the shed and the usual additional auditors sprawled on the lawns behind it.

The change to cool fresh weather had arrived very much with a flourish last night, during a concert in the theater concert hall by the Berkshire Woodwinde Ensemble in a chamber music series sponsored by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation. The storm broke loose during the last part of the program, while the men were playing Poulenc's sextet. Against serious competition from the patter of rain on the wooden roof, the ensemble valiantly continued to the end, while some of the listeners had to shift positions from one place to another to avoid a few leaks in the ceiling. The contemporary program included, besides the Poulenc, works of Irving Fine, Arthur Berger, Roussel and DeBussy.

The present season is the Berkshire Festival's fifteenth. While it started in 1934 under different auspices than the present, the project was shelved during the war. The Boston group held forth here for the first time in 1936. In the following year it moved to the Tanglewood estate, the gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks. In 1938 the shed was built and this is thus the fifteenth summer of the existence of the hugh fan-shaped construction that is acoustically reinforced and seats 6,000. This summer, too, the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's school here at Tanglewood, will hold its tenth session, the anniversary will be marked at the annual Tanglewood on parade, Friday, Aug. 1.

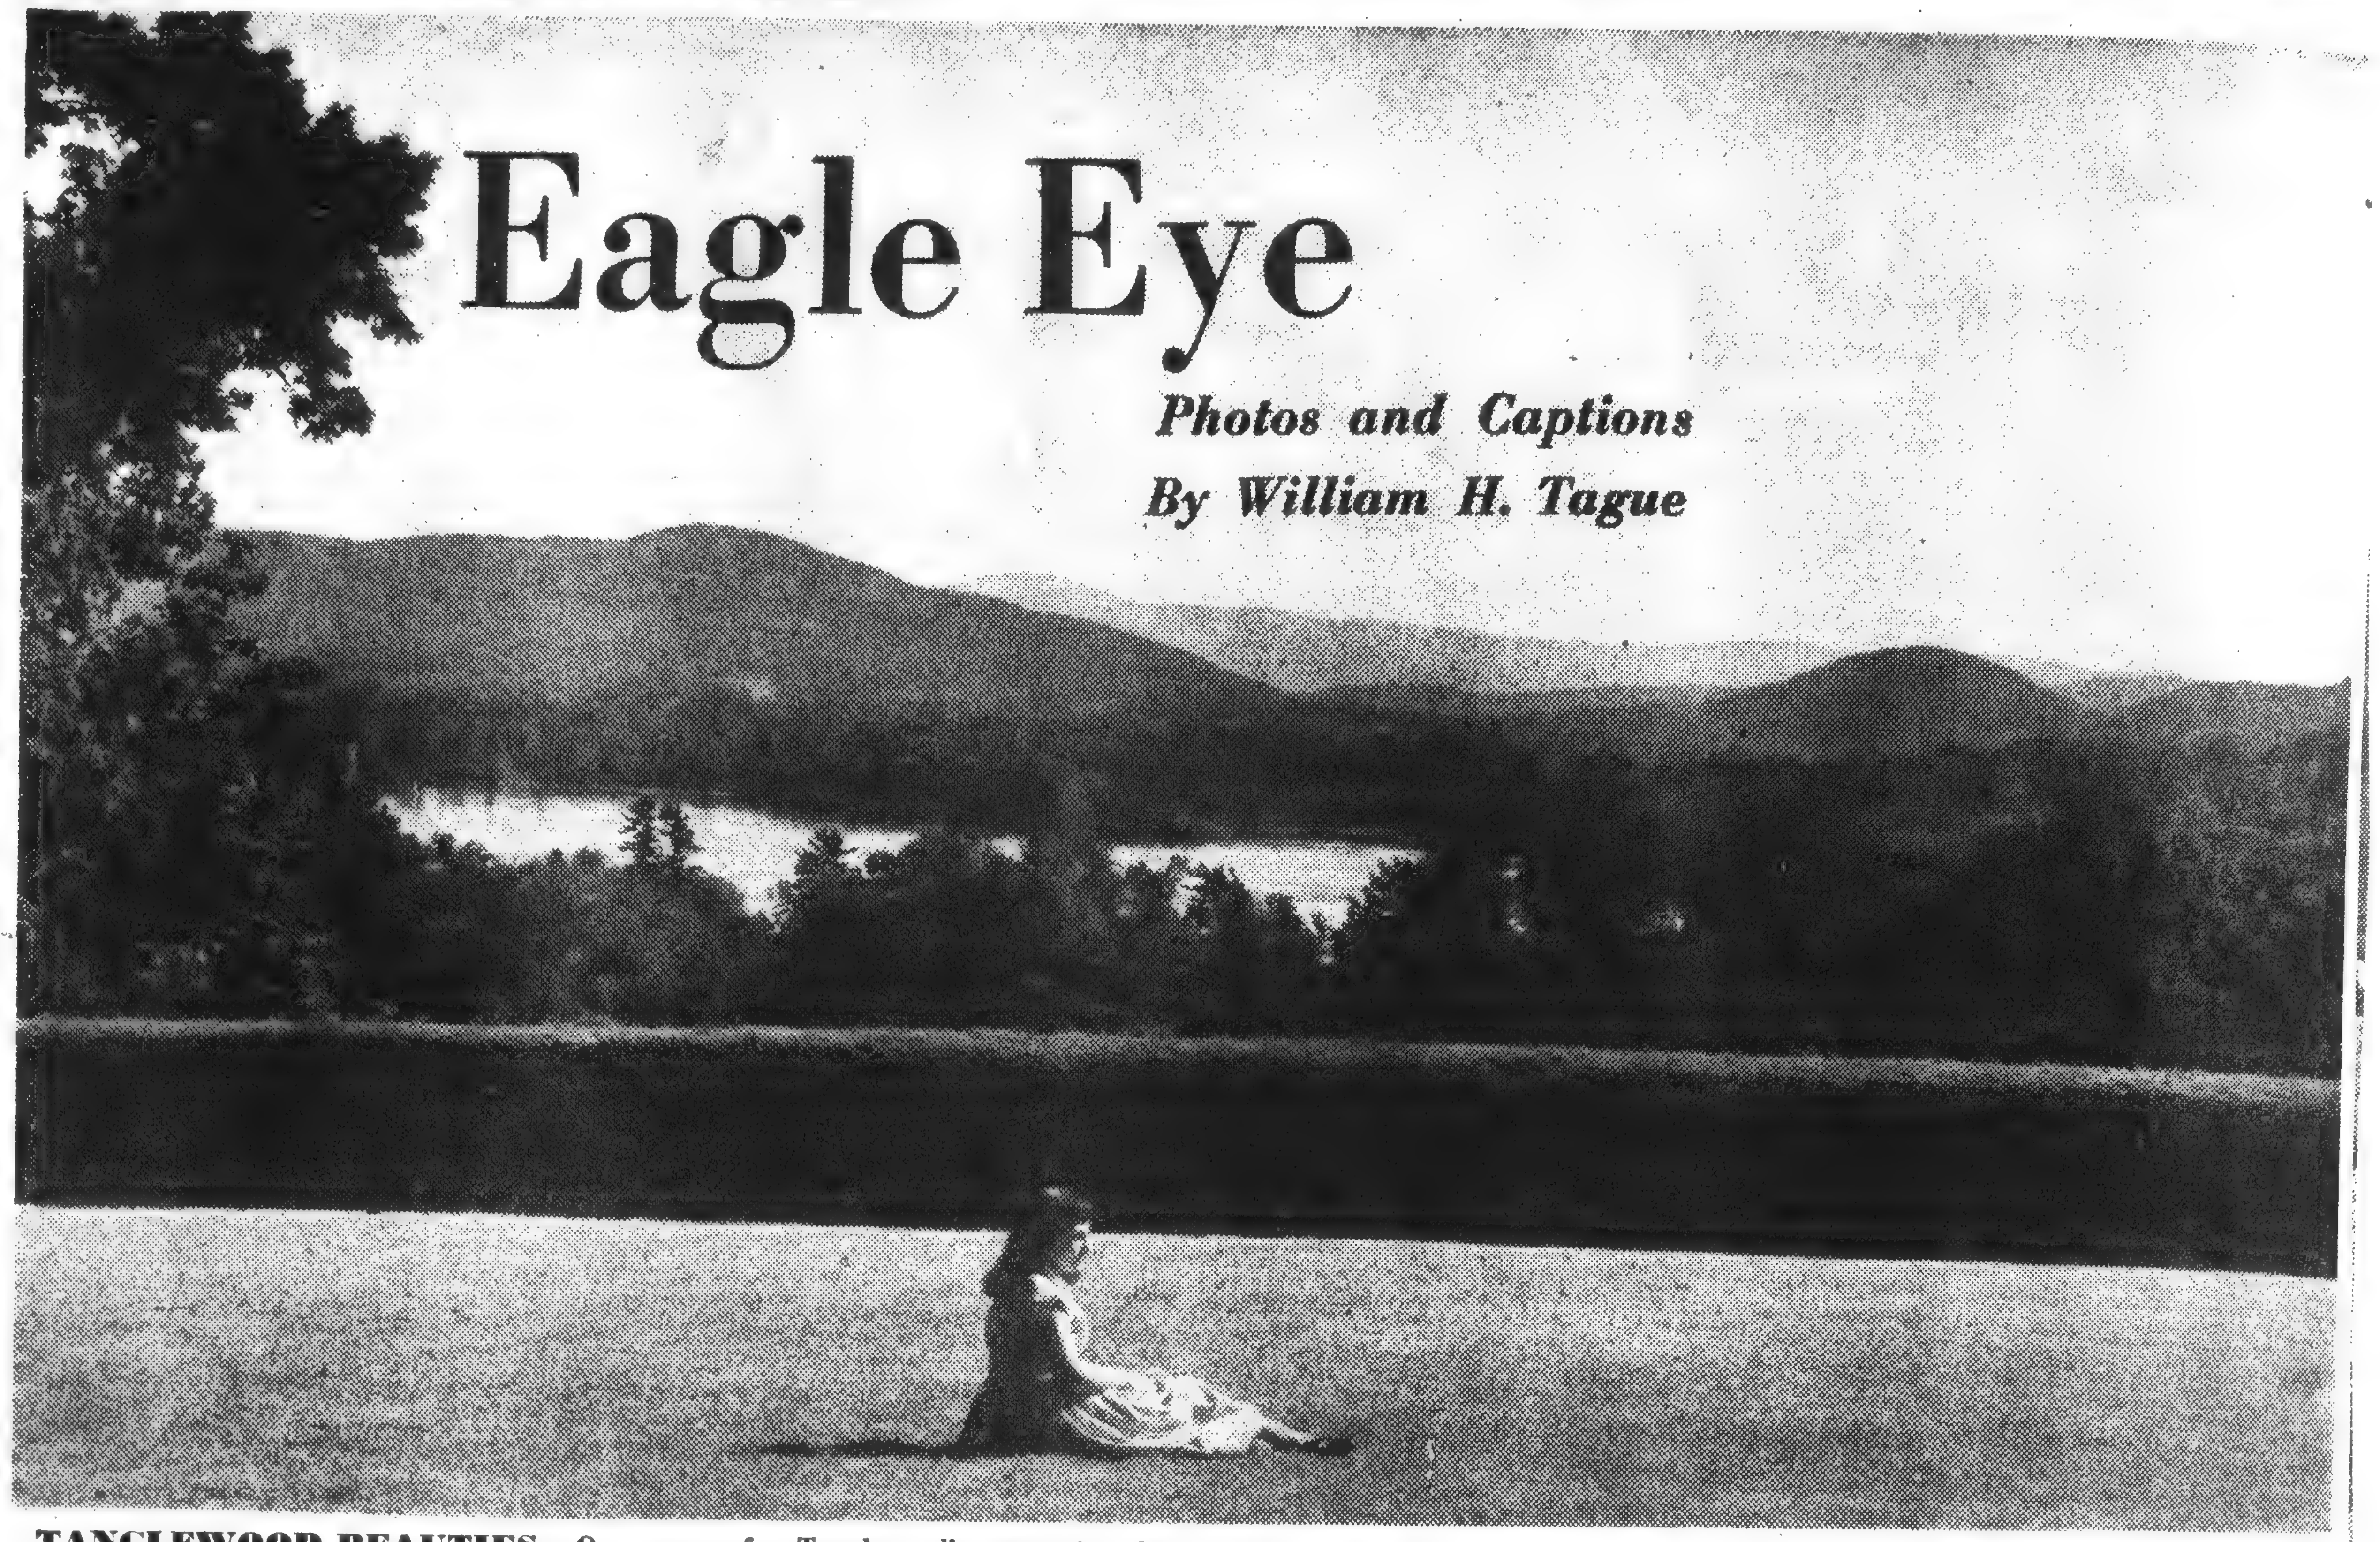
Mr. Munch opened the series in the shed with a standard program including Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony and the Brahms first symphony. The earlier concerts in this summer's Berkshire Festival had been given by a reduced orchestra drawn from the Boston Symphony. And this ensemble performed in the theater concert hall.

Tonight's attendance of 8,200 exceeded that of last year's opening concert by 1,500.

Eagle Eye

Photos and Captions

By William H. Tague



TANGLEWOOD BEAUTIES: One reason for Tanglewood's reputation for scenic charm is the view above looking south to Stockbridge Bowl and the hills beyond. Equally pleasing is music student Jayne Bradshaw, 23, below, learning her lessons among empty rows of seats in the Music Shed. She was chosen "Miss Rhode Island" and will compete in Miss America contest this fall at Atlantic City.

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASS.

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

by the

BOSTON SYMPHONY

ORCHESTRA

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

TONIGHT at 8.15

Charles Munch Conducting

Soloist, Nicole Henriot, Piano

Saturday, August 2, at 8.15

Pierre Monteux Conducting

All-Wagner Program

Soloists: Margaret Harshaw, soprano; Howard Vandenburg, tenor; James Pease, bass.

Sunday, August 3, at 3

Charles Munch, Conducting

CLOSING CONCERTS, Aug. 7, 9, 10

Reserved Seats at Tanglewood—Lenox 600

Admission $2

Public Rehearsal Saturday Morning, Aug. 2, at 10—Adm. $1

TOMORROW (Friday, Aug. 1)

"TANGLEWOOD ON PARADE"

10th Anniversary Celebration

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

With distinguished Tanglewood Alumni as conductors and soloists

Lawn Party—Picnic Supper

Door Prizes—Waltzing on the Lawn

TICKETS NOW

Box Seats $5—Front Sections (All Seats Reserved) $4

Unreserved Section $2.50

All holders of reserved seats are invited to two one-act operas in the garden at 4 o'clock. Events from 6 to 11 PM.

This Clipping From

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

NEWS

JUL 26 1952

★ Mildred Norton

Koussevitzky Foundation

The Koussevitzky Music Foundation today marks the birthday of the late Serge Koussevitsky, by a program at the Lenox Library, in Lenox, Mass. The Foundation will present a gift of scores, music, recordings and books on music to the library, which has cooperated in many ways with the Berkshire Music Center, the school established at Tanglewood by Dr. Koussevitzky.

The gift of the Foundation will enlarge the music collection of the library for the use of the Berkshire Music Center students and of the community in which Dr. Koussevitzky lived and carried on so much of his work. The scores and recordings include many of the works on the programs of the festival concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and works being performed by the student orchestra, opera department and chamber music groups.

* * *

Tomorrow evening the Burkank Symphony Orchestra presents its second summer "pops" concert of

---

CUE

NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL 26 1952

MUSIC

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL — Thru Sun, Aug 10—Boston Symphony Orch. At Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Ticket info from Boston Symphony Orch., Inc., Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Lenox 600. Info on accommodations in the Berkshires from Berkshire Hills Conference, Pittsfield, Mass. General adm to grounds $2, on sale the day of each concert. Sat, July 26 —8:15. Monteux cond Cimarosa, Overture, "The Secret Marriage"; Schubert, Symphony No. 7 in C; Stravinsky, "The Rites of Spring". . . . Sun, July 27 3 pm. Munch cond. Franck, Symphonic Piece from "Redemption"; Bizet, Symphony in C; Dallapiccola, "Three Prisoners' Songs" (with chorus cond. by Hugh Ross); Ravel, "Daphnis and Chloe", Suites 1 and 2 (with chorus). . . . Thurs, July 31 —8:15. Munch cond. Nicole Henriot, soloist Faure, Incidental Music for "Pelleas and Melisande"; Faure, Ballade for Piano and Orchestra; Ravel, Piano Concerto; Brahms, Symphony No. 4 in E minor. . . . Fri, Aug 1 Tanglewood on Parade program, celebrating the 10th anniversary of the Berkshire Music Center. . . . Sat, Aug 2 8 15 Pierre Monteux, cond. Margaret Harshaw, Charles Kullman, James Pease, soloists Wagner program: Prelude and Love Death, "Tristan und Isolde"; Wotan's Farewell and Fire Music, "Die Walkure"; Final Scene, "Siegfried"; Immolation Scene, "Gotterdammerung". . . . Sun, Aug 3 3 pm. Munch cond. Beethoven, Overture to "Egmont"; Beethoven, Symphony No. 8; Debussy, "Iberia"; Honegger, "Danse des Morts" (with chorus).

NEW YORKER

NEW YORK CITY

JUL 26 195

IN THE COUNTRY

Berkshire Festival—The Bost
Thursday, July 2.. at 8:15:
conducting; no soloist Satur
8:15: Pierre Monteux condu
Sunday, July 27, at 3. Cha ducting; no soloist Thursd
8:15: Charles Münch conduct
Henriot, piano. Saturday,
Pierre Monteux conducting Harshaw, soprano Charles K and James Pease, bass. Sund
3: Charles Munch conducting ¶ Friday, Aug. 1, at 6: The wood on Parade" program, cert by the Boston Sympho Leonard Bernstein, Lukas F a lawn party, a picnic sup waltzing on the lawn, and the various student depart benefit of the Berkshire Mu ¶ Monday and Tuesday, Aug.
Boris Goldovsky directing Moza presented, in English, by the Department. For information which are very scarce and must at least a week in advance, addres shire Music Center. (Tanglewo
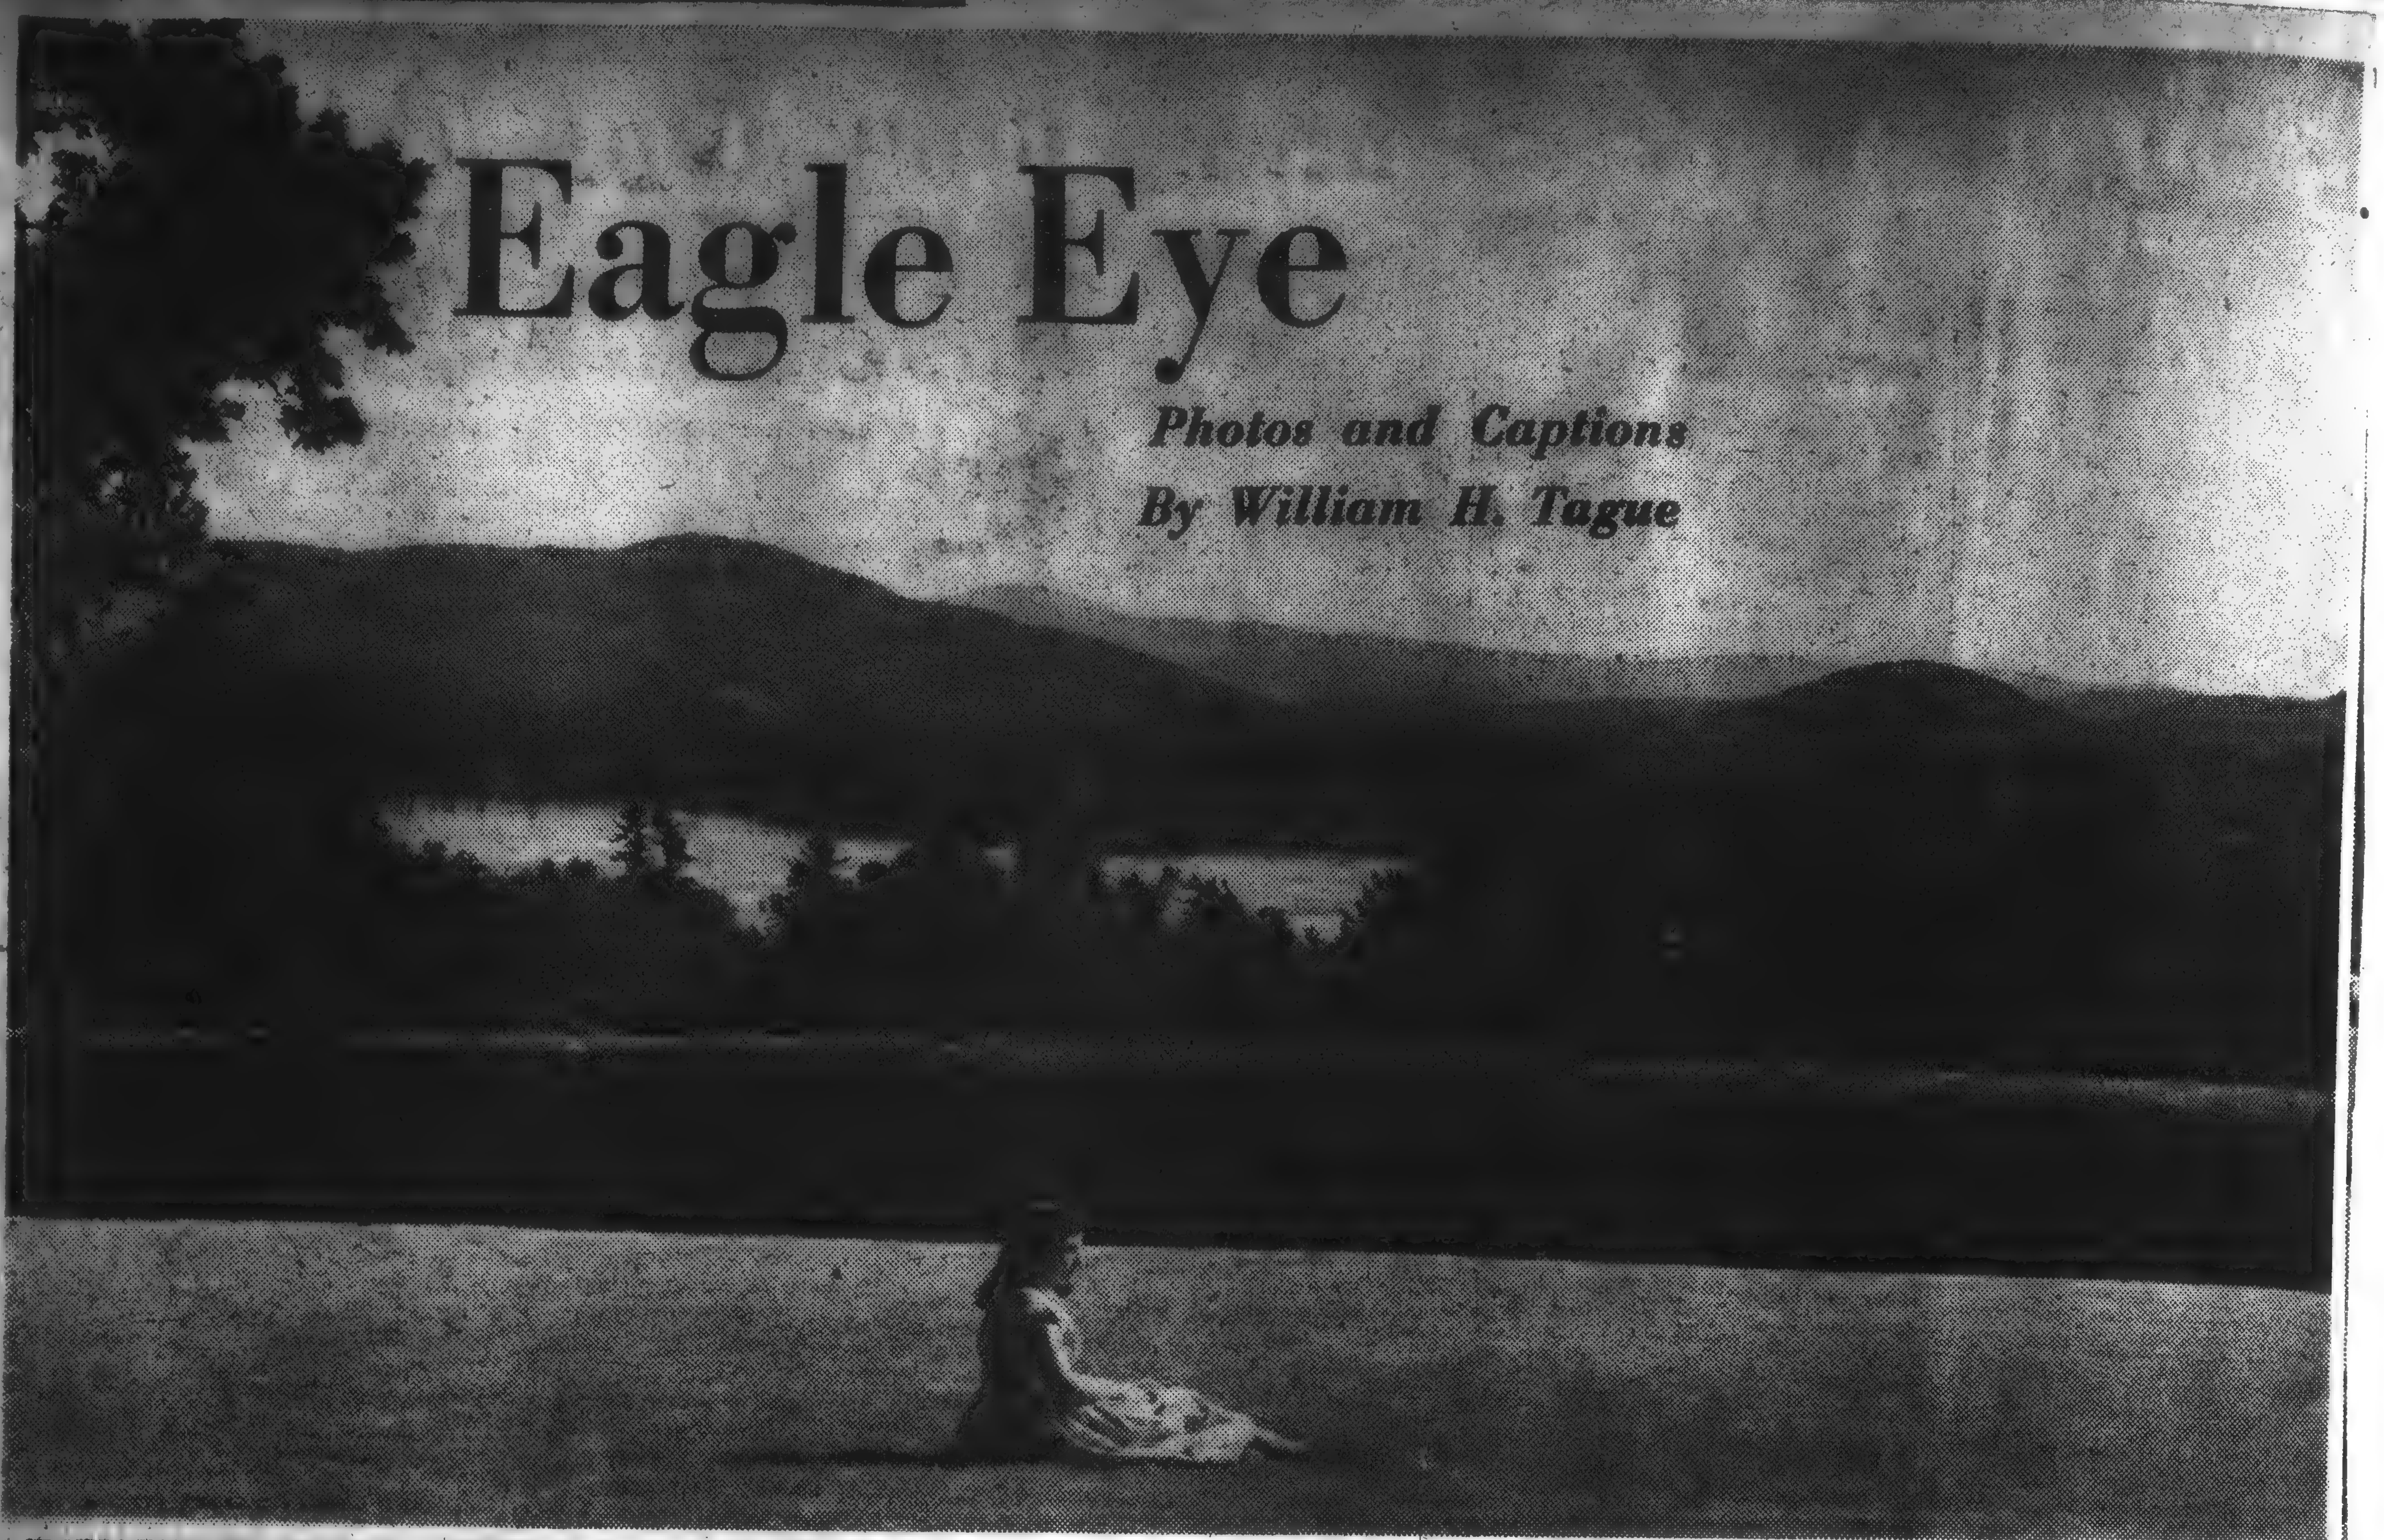
Mass. The Festival will contin
Sunday, Aug. 10.)

Eagle Eye

Photos and Captions

By William H. Tague



TANGLEWOOD BEAUTIES: One reason for Tanglewood's reputation for scenic charm is the view above looking south to Stockbridge Bowl and the hills beyond. Equally pleasing is music student Jayne Bradshaw, 23, below, learning her lessons among empty rows of seats in the Music Shed. She was chosen "Miss Rhode Island" and will compete in Miss America contest this fall at Atlantic City.

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASS.

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

by the

BOSTON SYMPHONY

ORCHESTRA

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

TONIGHT at 8.15

Charles Munch Conducting

Soloist, Nicole Henriot, Piano

Saturday, August 2, at 8.15

Pierre Monteux Conducting

All-Wagner Program

Soloists: Margaret Harshaw, soprano; Howard Vandenburg, tenor; James Pease, bass.

Sunday, August 3, at 3

Charles Munch, Conducting

CLOSING CONCERTS, Aug. 7, 9, 10

Reserved Seats at Tanglewood—Lenox 600

Admission $2

Public Rehearsal Saturday Morning, Aug. 2, at 10—Adm. $1

TOMORROW (Friday, Aug. 1)

"TANGLEWOOD ON PARADE"

10th Anniversary Celebration

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

With distinguished Tanglewood Alumni as conductors and soloists

Lawn Party—Picnic Supper

Door Prizes—Waltzing on the Lawn

TICKETS NOW

Box Seats $5—Front Sections (All Seats Reserved) $4

Unreserved Section $2.50

All holders of reserved seats are invited to two one-act operas in the garden at 4 o'clock. Events from 6 to 11 PM.

This Clipping From

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

NEWS

JUL 26 1952

★ Mildred Norton

Koussevitzky Foundation

The Koussevitzky Music Foundation today marks the birthday of the late Serge Koussevitsky, by a program at the Lenox Library, in Lenox, Mass. The Foundation will present a gift of scores, music, recordings and books on music to the library, which has cooperated in many ways with the Berkshire Music Center, the school established at Tanglewood by Dr. Koussevitzky.

The gift of the Foundation will enlarge the music collection of the library for the use of the Berkshire Music Center students and of the community in which Dr. Koussevitzky lived and carried on so much of his work. The scores and recordings include many of the works on the programs of the festival concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and works being performed by the student orchestra, opera department and chamber music groups.

* * *

Tomorrow evening the Burkank Symphony Orchestra presents its second summer "pops" concert of

[53]

CUE

NEW YORK, N. Y.

JUL 26 1952

MUSIC

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL — Thru Sun, Aug 10—Boston Symphony Orch. At Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Ticket info from Boston Symphony Orch., Inc., Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Lenox 600. Info on accommodations in the Berkshires from Berkshire Hills Conference, Pittsfield, Mass. General adm to grounds $2, on sale the day of each concert. Sat, July 26—8:15. Monteux cond. Cimarosa, Overture, "The Secret Marriage"; Schubert, Symphony No. 7 in C; Stravinsky, "The Rites of Spring". . . . Sun, July 27—3 pm. Munch cond. Franck, Symphonic Piece from "Redemption"; Bizet, Symphony in C; Dallapiccola, "Three Prisoners' Songs" (with chorus cond. by Hugh Ross); Ravel, "Daphnis and Chloe", Suites 1 and 2 (with chorus). . . . Thurs, July 31—8:15. Munch cond. Nicole Henriot, soloist. Faure, Incidental Music for "Pelleas and Melisande"; Faure, Ballade for Piano and Orchestra; Ravel, Piano Concerto; Brahms, Symphony No. 4 in E minor. . . . Fri, Aug 1—Tanglewood on Parade program, celebrating the 10th anniversary of the Berkshire Music Center. . . . Sat, Aug 2—8:15. Pierre Monteux, cond. Margaret Harshaw, Charles Kullman, James Pease, soloists. Wagner program: Prelude and Love Death, "Tristan und Isolde"; Wotan's Farewell and Fire Music, "Die Walküre"; Final Scene, "Siegfried"; Immolation Scene, "Götterdämmerung". . . . Sun, Aug 3—3 pm. Munch cond. Beethoven, Overture to "Egmont"; Beethoven, Symphony No. 8; Debussy, "Iberia"; Honegger, "Danse des Morts" (with chorus).

NEW YORKER

NEW YORK CITY

JUL 26 1952

IN THE COUNTRY

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL—The Boston Symphony—Thursday, July 24, at 8:15: Charles Munch conducting; no soloist. Saturday, July 26, at 8:15: Pierre Monteux conducting; no soloist. Sunday, July 27, at 3: Charles Münch conducting; no soloist. Thursday, July 31, at 8:15: Charles Münch conducting, with Nicole Henriot, piano. Saturday, Aug. 2, at 8:15: Pierre Monteux conducting, with Margaret Harshaw, soprano; Charles Kullman, tenor; and James Pease, bass. Sunday, Aug. 3, at 3: Charles Münch conducting; no soloist. . . . ¶ Friday, Aug. 1, at 6: The annual Tanglewood on Parade" program, including a concert by the Boston Symphony (conducted by Leonard Bernstein, Lukas Foss, and others), a lawn party, a picnic supper, door prizes, waltzing on the lawn, and performances by the various student departments. For the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. . . . ¶ Monday and Tuesday, Aug. 4-5, at 8:15: Boris Goldovsky directing Mozart's "Titus," presented, in English, by the school's Opera Department. For information about tickets, which are very scarce and must be procured at least a week in advance, address the Berkshire Music Center. (Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The Festival will continue through Sunday, Aug. 10.)

Center Students Form Band For Scholarship Party

With no musical activities scheduled at Tanglewood last night, the students of the Berkshire Music Center gave a party at Wheatleigh, the men's dormitory. The purpose of the party, which had a small admission charge, was to raise money that would help out a student with his rooming and boarding expenses next year. The money collected will be given to a scholarship student who needs it in order to live near Tanglewood during the school session next summer.

About 250 students and faculty members came to dance to the music of their own making. Harold Faberman, one of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's percussion players, played the drums; Bill Tesson, who is joining the orchestra for next Sunday's concert, played the trombone; while Bob Fleming of Ashland, Ky., added the trumpet part; Bob Barker of Lockport, New York played the clarinet and Phil Essa of Chicago played the string bass. Many others joined the band from time to time, including several pianists. Among the faculty members who attended were Thomas Perry, executive secretary of the center, Lukas Foss, Hugh Ross, Howard Shanet, Ingolf Dahl and Boris Goldovsky.

The hit of the evening was supplied by the opera associates, the younger and less-experienced students in the opera department, who sang a song of their own composing to Mr. Goldovsky. A gentle take-off on some of Mr. Goldovsky's coaching techniques, it was written by Abby Beierfield of Louisville, Ky., and Mrs. Rosalind Laskin of Duluth, Min.; and was staged by Anita Mendez of Santiago, Chile and Rosalind Burzinski of Hewlett, N.Y.

---

ttsfield, Massachusetts, Saturday, August 2, 1952.

Plouffe

THANK YOU VERY MUCH: Seymour Lipkin and Lukas Foss show their appreciation for the tremendous ovation that greeted their performance last night at Tanglewood of Mendelssohn's "Piano Concerto in G Minor." Mr. Lipkin, who played the concerto, and Mr. Foss, who conducted, are alumni of the Music Center.

Plouffe

DEAR DEPARTED FRIEND: Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinetist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, sadly contemplates the stuffed remains of a manx shearwater which he caught and banded on the Island of Skokholm, off Wales. Mr. Mazzeo, a first-rate amateur ornithologist, brought two of the birds back from Europe. This one died, but the other, upon its release at Boston Airport, flew back to its island home 3000 miles across the sea. Mr. Mazzeo, who is here for the summer with the BSO, spends most of his free time at the Pleasant Valley Sanctuary in Lenox.

Eagle Aug. 2

1000 Members of Various Groups Week-End Visitors to Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD — More than 1000 members of various groups, including many persons from other countries, are visiting Tanglewood this week-end. The largest group, 100 members of the United Nations secretariat, are making their third annual visit to the Berkshires, arranged by the Workshop for World Understanding.

The secretariat members will attend the Berkshire Festival concerts tonight and tomorrow and will picnic at Tanglewood tomorrow, when the Pittsfield Junior League will furnish the meal, the League of Women Voters will serve it and the Tanglewood cafeteria will supply beverages.

For the second week end, 56 foreign students at M.I.T. summer school will hear the concerts. Other groups attending the concerts tomorrow are 50 from Columbia University, 55 from Bard College, 37 from the University of Bridgeport, 20 from the U.S. Veterans' Hospital at Northampton, and a number from the New York Society for Friendly Relations among Foreign Students.

Next week end there will be 16 NATO journalists and 45 students from Bennington College. Thirty-six different students of the Harvard Summer School of Arts, Education and Science visited on three previous week ends.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
JUL 20 1952

TANGLEWOOD ALUMNI WILL RETURN FRIDAY

Parade of Illustrious Conductors to Persent Special Program

Tanglewood will be on parade Friday, Aug. 1 . . . To celebrate its 10th season and to help the Berkshire Music Center for whose benefit the event is held each year, some of its most illustrious alumni will return to appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the evening consert.

At 6 p. m., as in previous benefits, the school will be on view, with a symphony concert in the shed, the chorus on the porch and chamber music in its own hall. "Alcottiano" by Singer will be given its first performance in the theater. After time for a picnic on the lawn, James Aliferis will conduct the last movement of Lukas Foss' "The Prairie," Howard Shanet will conduct Chausson's "Poeme" with Jacob Krachmalnick, concertmaster of the Philadelphia Orchestra as soloist, and Mr. Foss will conduct Mendelssohn's Piano Concerto in G minor with Seymour Lipkin, winner of the Rachmaninoff Award, as soloist. In the second half Leonard Bernstein will take the podium for the last act of "Carmen" with the Festival Chorus and Mildred Miller, mezzo-soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company; David Lloyd, tenor of the New York City Center Opera Company and James Pease, baritone with the Hamburg Opera. The program will close with waltzing on the lawn.

For the holders of box and reserved seat tickets a special performance of Pergolesi's opera, "Livietta and Tracolo" will be staged in the garden at 4 p. m.

In its 10 sessions, interrupted by the war, 3812 students have attended the school, where many have held scholarships. This year awards are automatic for those who play in the orchestra, sing leading roles or study composition. They have come from every state and 199 from 44 countries. In 21 major symphony orchestras are 120 former Tanglewood students, including players and conductors. The Cleveland Orchestra leads with 15. Many outstanding singers, choral conductors and composers have studied there. Charles Munch conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is director, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky, its founder.

Tickets are on sale at Tanglewood or through the committee, of which Mrs. Koussevitzky is chairman.

Volume 61—No. 64 Eagle - august 2 Pittsfield, Massachusetts, S

Plouffe

ALUMNI ON PARADE: "Tanglewood on Parade" last night featured five alumni of the Berkshire Music Center as soloists in the performance in the Shed of the last act from Bizet's "Carmen." Acknowledging the ovation from the crowd are, left to right, Mildred Miller, as Carmen; Margo Stagliano, Frasquita; David Lloyd, Don José; James Pease, Escamillo; and Francis Barnard, Zuniga. Applauding members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Festival Chorus are in the background. (Stories on Page 9.)

The Musical Scene

Tanglewood: School Thrives in Shadow Of Festival; Dallapiccola Work

By ARTHUR BERGER

A typical informal scene on the Tanglewood grounds, when they are closed to the large public that swarms the Berkshires Festival, is likely to have as its chief characters a student composer and one or more students of a musical instrument. All are enrolled in the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's summer school. The composer has a manuscript under his arm. It might be a work just completed in the classes of Aaron Copland, Luigi Dallapiccola or Lukas Foss. More likely it dates from some time prior to the six-weeks session. The student composer may have decided, and quite judiciously, to concentrate on absorbing the influences around him and receiving construotive criticism and creative methods from his mentors. He may have a work in progress. But whether he concludes it in the course of the brief session is not a burning issue.

The composer in this little scene is trying to lure the performer into one of the available rooms of the school on the attractive Tanglewood estate to have the score read. It may be scheduled for one of the weekly Composers Forums and the student in the creative department is trying to convince his fellow from the instrumental department to prepare the work for one of those occasions. Or he may simply want to get an idea for himself or his friends how the symbols he has set down on paper translate into concrete sound.

The young instrumentalist has every minute of his day apportioned. There are rehearsals of the school orchestra and the orchestra of the opera department, chamber music sessions, and lessons on the instrument of his choice. Then there is his practicing to do. Where to find time for this extra chore? Find time he does, however. And he does so with a comradely spirit infinitely exhilarating to an onlooker. For the budding composer the advantages are beyond measure. He not only may hear his first efforts, but at the forums he may sit in an audience and see how they come over. After the performance he may get the jibes or praise, as the case may be, of the students and visitors in the forum discussion.

Clouds of Uncertainty Lift

This remarkable set-up at Tanglewood, one of the many precious features of the Berkshire Music Center, existed under an uncertain cloud when this writer made the trek up to Lenox, Mass., last summer. The session had opened less than a month after the death of its founder and director, Serge Koussevitzky. A successor had not been appointed, and in co-operation with the assistant director, Mr. Copland, a faculty board was temporarily in charge of its operation. In these columns last August, Virgil Thomson observed, "This writer makes no prediction as to who will direct the school next year, whether there will be a school at all, or what changes of policy may be adopted regarding it." It is thus heartening for me to bring back the news from my visit last week that the clouds of uncertainty have dissipated themselves.

Charles Munch, now the director, indicated in his talk at the opening exercises of this, its tenth, session that his heart is with the school. He is understandably absorbed in consolidating his relatively new position as director of the festival, and the school is not "his baby," as its founder had often reminded us it had always been to him. But Mr. Munch has given his official sanction. Koussevitzky's widow continues her active personal interest, and through the Koussevitzky Foundation, she has provided additional facilities for students in the Lenox Library, which is the recipient of a $2,000 grant and a portion of the late Boston Symphony conductor's personal library. The Foundation has also established a scholarship fund.

Within the school Koussevitzky's ideal is respected even to the extent of a constant renewal that he should certainly have endorsed. The innovations include a successful Study Group for amateurs under Ingolf Dahl's supervision and an orchestra assembled on the basis of auditions for scholarships, comparable to auditions held by professional orchestras. This orchestra of scholarship students is an uncommonly good one which gives weekly concerts under the direction of Leonard Bernstein and his conducting students.

When the Berkshire Festival enters its intensive phase, the school naturally finds itself overshadowed. It is thus gratifying when it participates in the festival either through its chorus or its faculty. Behind-the-scenes contact with a venture of such magnitude is invaluable to budding musicians. An instance of such contact was afforded ten days ago in anticipation of last Sunday's performance of Dallapiccola's "Songs of Captivity." A lecture by the composer supplied students with a special pipe-line to the sources of its inspiration.

Dallapiccola Discusses His Music

The Italian visitor to the Berkshire Music Center faculty is often asked to account for his preoccupation with captivity and prisoners. His most familiar work besides "Songs of Captivity" is his opera, "The Prisoner." An American journalist, he said, once went so far as to ask him if he had ever been in prison. But his obsession, it seems, is not this realistic in origin. Raised in the Austrian-dominated peninsula of Isteria by a pro-Italian family, he was imbued early with the sentiment of an oppressed minority. Also, when he was six a woman in Isteria received a six-year sentence for killing her husband, and this term deeply impressed him, for it was the duration of his whole life up to that point. With an unusual capacity for analogy and association, he linked his early experience with a chain of events in his lifetime ranging from the Dreyfus case to fascist persecution of Jews who were imprisoned for no reason at all. Powerless to raise his voice against such persecution in 1938, he adopted the subterfuge of setting three Latin texts by famous prisoners who died for noble ideals that conflicted with the status quo. Namely, Mary Stuart, Boethius and Savonarola.

In his triptych for chorus and small percussion orchestra, Dallapiccola exploited some serial twelve-tone devices without embracing the Schoenbergian style or principle rigorously. He indicated this aspect of his work at the close of his talk, but only briefly. For, he said, "we (namely, music students and teachers) tend to get too specialized in our thinking," and ignore the human element motivating art. Above all, his choral set stands as a work of protest in his mind, and belongs to a series of such contemporary works that include the more recent "Ode to Napoleon" and "Survivor From Warsaw," both by Schoenberg.

Another faculty member, Mr. Copland, the assistant director, will be represented on next Saturday's festival program, and by that time, no doubt, Tanglewood students will have a direct channel into the inner workings of yet another composer's mind in the creative process.

Berkshire Festival

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Today, 3, Charles Munch conducting. Overture to "Egmont" Symphony No. 8, Beethoven; "Iberia," Debussy; "Danse des Morts" (with Chorus), Honegger.

Monday and Tuesday, 8:15. Mozart's opera "Clemenza di Tito" ("Titus"). (Seats no longer available.)

Thursday, 8:15, Charles Munch conducting; soloist, Artur Rubinstein, pianist. Symphony No. 1 ("Spring"), Schumann; Short Symphony, Swanson; Piano Concerto No. 2 in B flat, Brahms.

Friday, 8:15 and 9:45, Bernstein's opera "Trouble in Tahiti." (Applications for tickets must be made in advance.)

Saturday, 2:30, Symphony Concert by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra. At 4:30, Concert by the small choir. At 8:15, Leonard Bernstein conducting. Andante from Concerto in D Major, C. P. E. Bach; Symphony No. 3, Copland; Symphony No. 5, Sibelius. (Koussevitzky Memorial Concert.)

Sunday, Aug. 10, 3, Charles Munch conducting; soloist, Andrew McKinley, tenor. Berlioz's Requiem (with chorus).

A Day at the Berkshire Festival

An aerial photograph of crowds entering the shed or picking a cool spot on the grass at Tanglewood to hear an afternoon concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra

Bernstein Discusses Plans

Ralph Norman

Leonard Bernstein, director of the School of Creative Arts at Brandeis University, will conduct a four-day music festival on the Waltham campus June 12-15.

Leonard Bernstein, addressing more than 100 members of the Friends of the School of Music at Brandeis University yesterday afternoon in the Hotel Somerset, outlined the features of the Brandeis Festival of Creative Arts, to be held on the Waltham campus under his direction from June 12 through June 15.

The noted composer and conductor pointed out that "this is a moment of inquiry for the whole world, a moment when civilization looks at itself appraisingly, seeking a key to the future."

"In this spirit," he said, "we shall examine the creative arts during our four-day festival—examine them by performance, by asking questions, by the answers we receive. We cannot pretend to wisdom. But through performance we can provoke thought and free discussion. Through discussing we can learn. Through learning we can rediscover our culture and ourselves."

* * *

Mr. Bernstein's one-act opera, "Trouble in Tahiti," will have its world première at the festival. This half-hour work, he explained, has its roots in popular music—that is, it is derived from the atmosphere of popular songs and progresses into the atmosphere of serious music. It is an experiment in simplicity.

The opera will be scored (Mr. Bernstein has not yet completed the orchestration) for 21 wind instruments and a string quartet. The theme of "Trouble in Tahiti" deals with marital difficulties, he said, "but I can't describe the plot to you because there is no plot."

The opera is presently being rehearsed in New York City and will be produced with a professional cast.

Other features of the Brandeis Festival will include the world première of Marc Blitzstein's translation and adaptation of Kurt Weill's "Threepenny Opera," presented in concert version. Composed in the late 1920's in jazz idiom, the work is considered by Mr. Bernstein to be one of the masterpieces of the 20th century. The leading role will be sung by Mrs. Kurt Weill, who created the role in the first German production.

Another première at the festival will be the presentation of Pierre Schaeffer's "Symphonie pour un homme seul," an example of "musique concrète." This is an investigation of the possibilities of artificially combining sounds as they exist in nature and in our industrial civilization.

Mr. Bernstein explained that "musique concrète" can exist only on a tape recording. Various sounds, noises, musical tones, plus certain trick effects like a human laugh run backwards, are combined by the composer in a composition. M. Schaeffer's project has received financial support from the Radiodiffusion Française and is expected to stir lively discussion when heard at the Brandeis Festival.

When asked if he thought that "musique concrète" would have some lasting value or be just a novelty, Mr. Bernstein answered that he prefered to reserve his judgment until after it was heard. The "Symphonie pour un homme seul" will be presented in a shortened version (the original four-movement work runs some 40 minutes, longer than most audiences, Mr. Bernstein believes, would be able to stand!). It will be choreographed by Merce Cunningham.

* * *

The festival will include a discussion of "The Present State of Creative Arts." Mr. Bernstein will be the moderator. The speakers will be Abram L. Sachar, president of Brandeis; Ludwig Lewisohn, Brandeis professor of comparative literature; James Johnson Sweeney, art critic; Hens Heinsheimer, symphonic and operatic director of G. Shirmer, Inc., and John Mehegan of the Juilliard School of Music.

A jazz symposium will revolve around the present crisis in jazz, brought about by the so-called progressive tendencies. The participants will be Mr. Bernstein, John Mehegan, Lenny Tristano and his jazz group, George Simons and Barry Ulanov of Metronome Magazine, Leonard Feather of Downbeat Magazine, George Wein of the Storyville Club in Boston, and Nat Hentoff, jazz commentator of WMEX in Boston.

The Brandeis festival will also feature the first choreographed performance of Stravinsky's "Les Noces," which, in addition to the dancers, will present four vocal soloists, four pianists, and the Arthur Fiedler Chorus. The chorus is being prepared under the direction of Russell Stanger, conductor of the Harvard-Radcliffe Orchestra.

The majority of the events will be held in the newly constructed Ullman Amphitheater, named for the donor, Adolph Ullman of Boston.

H. R.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 26 1952

Berkshires Plan Big Welcome For Munch and Boston Symphony

'Welcome Home Day' On Thursday Will Include Reception and Presentation of Plaque

[illegible] Boston [illegible] when the [illegible] festival at T[illegible] The orchestra will [illegible] since [illegible] Europe [illegible] reception for the [illegible] appreciation for [illegible] the orchestra has [illegible] of people [illegible] Berkshires since it began [illegible] years ago. Through[illegible] day will be known [illegible] Home Day." A plaque [illegible] to Director Munch [illegible] of the opening [illegible] civic and indus[illegible] worked to make [illegible] heart-warming [illegible] musicians.

[illegible] concert Director [illegible] Beethoven Symphony [illegible] "Eroica" and Brahms, [illegible] The Saturday concert [illegible] 26th will feature Pierre Monteux as conductor, and the program will [illegible] of Cimarosa Overture, "The Secret Marriage"; Schubert Symphony No. 9 in C major; Stravinsky, "The Rite of Spring." Sunday, July 27, the program will [illegible] Franck Symphonic Piece [illegible] "The Redemption"; Bizet Symphony [illegible] Dallapiccola, Chorus, "Savon[illegible]" Ravel, "Daphins and Chloe," suite [illegible] 2 (with chorus).

[illegible] for the third annual outdoor [illegible] dance for benefit of Berkshire Industrial Farm, Canaan, N. Y., were outlined this week at a tea held at the Farm's guest house. About 25 chairmen from Berkshire County and Columbia County, New York, will head the various committees assisting in the program. Berkshire County chairman named were Mrs. [illegible] Bernard Shea of Sheffield, Mrs. Clifford S. Chapin of Great Barrington, Mrs. Leland Briggs of Lenox, Mrs. George Perkins of Lee, Mrs. Thomas S. Morse of Richmond, Mrs. Robert Crane of Pittsfield, Mrs. Winthrop Murray Crane, 3d, of Dalton, and Mrs. Robert Debevois of North Berkshire.

A large greensward beside the gymnasium at the Farm is being prepared for the dance. All proceeds of the affair will go to the work of Berkshire Farm, which for 66 years has been training underprivileged boys to become useful American citizens.

Southern Berkshire Historical Association with headquarters in Great Barrington, celebrated the first anniversary of its founding this past week, with a general meeting and election of officers. Members elected the following: Horace A. Turner of Great Barrington, president, succeeding Miss Elsie M. Huntley; Miss Ruth Miles, vice-president, succeeding David Allan Hunter of South Egremont; Mrs. Laura W. Lawrence, secretary-treasurer, succeeding Mrs. Barbara Kop. Miss Miles was also appointed chairman of the program committee. The board of directors, comprised of a member from each member towns, was re-elected.

The Great Barrington Kennel Club, of which Mrs. Darwin S. Morse of Richmond is president, is making plans for its annual all-breed bench show to be held Sunday, Aug. 24, on the grounds of the Barn Club, Great Barrington. Premium lists and entry blanks may be secured for the club or from the Foley Dog Show organization in Philadelphia, Pa., which will again have charge of arrangements. The Kennel Club shares its proceeds of the affair with Fairview Hospital Auxiliary of Great Barrington. The auxiliary receives a percentage of the [illegible] sold, plus 50 per cent of the net profit from the show.

The event coming up this year will be the 10th annual, and already the Berkshire affair has come to be recognized as one of the largest dog shows in the East. It has replaced the [illegible] widely-known dog show that was held annually in Lenox. Many prizes are to be awarded at the show when merchants, club members and individuals making contributions for this purpose. The best in show award will be a sterling silver trophy which will be awarded by Mrs. [illegible] L. Jarvis. The president's [illegible] to be given by Mrs. Morse [illegible] a Kensington ware pitcher [illegible] tumblers. This will be given [illegible] American [illegible] dog in the [illegible] Special prize [illegible] groups and [illegible] of the [illegible] as follows: sporting group, [illegible] by Dr. and [illegible] Carroll; hound group, Kensington ware trophy by Berkshire [illegible] Great Barrington; [illegible] group, sterling silver trophy, by Dr. and Mrs. William Bangs[illegible]; [illegible] Kensington trophy, by [illegible] non-sporting group, sterling silver trophy, by Dr. and Mrs. Percie J. Roberts.

Among those from Springfield district who have horses entered at the Lakeville horse show, being held at Holley Hill Farm, Salisbury, Conn., this week end, are Mr. and Mrs. J. Loring Brooks, Jr., of Wilbraham, and Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Skibinski of Northampton.

Berkshire County Chapter will supply volunteer Red Cross first aid workers for each of the 10 concerts at Tanglewood beginning Thursday. The Chapter will provide seven members at each concert. They will be assigned to booths in various parts of the music shed and grounds. Warren V. Sears of Pittsfield will be in charge of the first aid workers, and Mrs. Sears of the first aid station.

The eighth annual art exhibit by the Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington will open next Saturday, July 26 at Berkshire Inn, Great Barrington, with a tea and reception at 3 for the artists. The show will continue through until Aug. 9.

Berkshire Briefs

Guests of Rev. and Mrs. William Crane of Morning Face, Richmond, are Mrs. John Runkle of Cambridge and Miss Margaret Fish of Brookline.

John W. Mole of Tulsa, Okla., has been visiting his mother, Mrs. George A. Mole in Lenox.

Gardner S. Morse of Pittsfield, gave an illustrated talk following a buffet supper Thursday night at Lenox Club, on "South America."

Recent arrivals at Lenox Club are Robert R. Hitt of Washington, D. C., Mrs. Edwin G. Merrill of New York City, and Berword Hill, N. Y., James B. Satterthwait of Groton, and Mr. Richard De Wolfe Brixley of New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank G. Brinster of Ridgewood, N. J., are to move into their new home soon on Stockbridge Street, Lenox, recently purchased from Paul McMahon.

Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Swan of Mount Vernon, N. Y., entertained recently for Mrs. Swan's father, W. C. Pells, at a dinner at Berkshire Inn, Great Barrington, the occasion being Mr. Pells' 77th birthday. Guests included Miss Frances Drury of New York and Great Barrington, and the Misses Mary and Elizabeth Leith of South Egremont, formerly of Mount Vernon.

Summer guests at the Inn include Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Hobby of New York and Mrs. Alice B. Thursby and Miss Lucy Harding. Mrs. Thursby is a sister of the late Arthur Brisbane, well-known newspaper columnist. She has been a guest at the Inn for many seasons.

Staatszeitung July 28

Berkshire Musikfest

Die Konzerte des vollständigen Boston Symphonie-Orchesters unter Leitung Charles Muench haben Donnerstag mit einer Veranstaltung in der Freilufthalle in Tanglewood begonnen und werden bis 10. August fortgesetzt. Der Bürgermeister von Pittsfield begrüßte das Ensemble und beglückwünschte die Musiker zu ihrem außerordentlichen Erfolg auf ihrer Europareise; er überreichte dem Dirigenten ein Anerkennungsschreiben der Berkshire County, in welchem die großen Verdienste um die Musik und die kulturelle Mission des Ensembles hervorgehoben wurden.

Als Dirigenten der kommenden Konzerte der Boston Symphonie werden Charles Munch und Pierre Monteux tätig sein; beide haben auch das Orchester in den Konzerten der europäischen Tournee dirigiert. Charles Munch hatte für das Konzert Donnerstag abend Beethovens Eroica Symphonie und die C-Moll-Symphonie von Brahms gewählt; er wird am 31. Juli Werke von Brahms, Fauré und Ravel zum Vortrag bringen, Nicole Henriot ist die mitwirkende Solistin. Pierre Monteux leitet das Ensemble-Konzert Samstag, 2. August, in einem Wagner-Programm; mitwirkend Margaret Harshaw (Sopran), Howard Vandenberg (Tenor) und James Pease (Baß), und Charles Munch dirigiert Sonntag, 3. August, Beethovens Achte Symphonie, Debussys "Iberia" und Honeggers "Danse des morts" (mit Chor). Konzerte des Studentenorchesters, der Kammermusik und Chorgruppen- und Solisten-Veranstaltungen ergänzen das Programm der kommenden Woche.

TANGLEWOOD PILGRIMAGE

63

Tanglewood, now in its fifteenth season, is a lusty youth. As someone said not long ago, "You couldn't stop if you wanted to." Its school, the Berkshire Music Center, celebrated its tenth birthdate last Friday with a festival within a festival. When you consider the enormous prestige of both, audiences and students flocking to them from all over the globe, this growth in a decade and a half is too astounding to be treated casually. Is it possible that we may be living at one and the same time in a contracting economy and an expanding culture? If so, it would not be the first instance in world history when the sovereign alchemist transmuted life's leaden metal into gold. "It must be admitted that there is a degree of instability which is inconsistent with civilization. But, on the whole, the great ages have been unstable ages." No one suggests that Periclean Athens lived serenely indifferent to the beleaguering barbarian darkness, or that Augustan Rome was exempt from gnawing anxiety, or that the England of Queen Elizabeth was exactly at ease in Zion; yet they were three of the most brilliant periods in the history of Western man.

*
* *

In a time when so much has gone wrong, it is a corrective to look at something which has come right. The advance of music in America during the past thirty years is a major fact in our national development. It takes strange turns. Back in the 1920's there was cause to fear that radio would exterminate the phonograph record. That alleged assassin turned out to be a nursemaid. In 1951, it is estimated, one hundred and ninety million records were sold in the United States, and of these from twenty to thirty million records were of classical music. Radio broadcasts had whetted the taste.

Again, "The dollar-hungry countries of Europe are setting up music festivals by the dozen, not to give American tourists the music they would not hear at home, but to make sure they do not stay at home because of the lack of music in Europe. These festivals are designed as competition for Tanglewood," in the first place, though after that for the others which are springing up across the continent, from Castle Hill in Ipswich, within sight and sound of the Atlantic Ocean, to Aspen in the Rockies of Colorado, and on to the Pacific Coast.

Here we arrive at Gresham's Law. Vernacularly stated it is, "Bad money drives out good." More precisely, "The worst form of currency in circulation regulates the value of the whole currency, and drives all other forms of currency out of circulation." But that is in money. Money is one world; music is another. In the arts, where we move from coinage that can be touched and handled to that other which ". . . the world's coarse thumb

"And finger failed to plumb . . ."

is it possible that Gresham's Law may be reversed? Does not the better drive out the worse?

*
* *

Much, it is true, that has been happening in the arts is cause for disquiet. Artists are the most sensitive of plants. If their tendrils shrivel, if poets, like the sheeted dead, do squeak and gibber; if sculptors model figures with arthritic distortions; if painters daub canvases with neurotic introspections (which is flattering them, at that); if composers seem to lose the gift of melody, we have, on the other hand, a people young, buoyant, energetic, self-reliant, resourceful, and eager, who are avid of good music, of learning in every variety of school, and, when told their theatre has been killed by the film, proceed to act pieces from the whole repertory of drama on Summer evenings in hay barns. Gresham's Law? No, Nature's. The spirit is unquenchable. If something dies, something else is being born.

Tanglewood is a good place to watch this process. Its prodigious vitality is the immediate point to grasp. A great orchestra superbly led, extraordinary sagacity in its management, a splendor of landscape setting, the devotion of its friends, the delight of its myriads of passionate pilgrims, the providential thundersquall which drowned the orchestra out of a circus tent into the now-famous Shed—these may explain a good deal, but it is doubtful if they account for the whole prodigy of its fifteen-year growth. For that we must look farther back and deeper down.

Underneath is a powerful historic current. We came here from Europe in a span of three centuries: one, to get set; two, to start, and three, to go One, the 17th, to gain a foothold on the Atlantic seaboard; two, the 18th, to shake our chains to earth like dew and rise an independent nation, and three, the 19th, to stride across the continent. That done, we look around us. In the transoceanic and transcontinental voyages many a precious heirloom of our ancestral heritage in the arts, the graces, and the amenities of life had had to be tossed overboard to lighten ship and prairie schooner. Now we want them back. Here is the meaning of two of the major social phenomena in the United States since 1920—the enormous demand for education at every level, and the eagerness for two of the most vivid arts, the performing arts of music and drama. All this, too, continuing in the 1950's despite an economic collapse in the 1930's and a second world war in the 1940's.

The continent of North America is the one place on earth where European man still has a chance to create another civilization on the grand scale.

*
* *

Gresham's Law in reverse, let good money drive out bad, only be sure that the money is in coinage of a higher realm. In the realm of bread and butter, our 20th-century cupboards may—as compared with the 19th—be somewhat bare; but those who remember the teeming cupboards in the closing decade of the 19th, or decades (for the 19th century ended not in 1900, but on August 4, 1914, the start of the first world war), will also remember many a time when they would gladly have exchanged that pie and cake, that Guernsey cream and strawberry jam, for a cheese sandwich and such fare as is to be had at Tanglewood. "Give us the luxuries and we can do without the necessities"—at least, give us bread of the spirit, and bread of the body tastes quite well enough without butter and jam.

This year's programs at Tanglewood, meanwhile, seem especially gorgeous. Mr. Charles Munch has brought into them an expansion of repertory which unlocks more of that vast treasure house of music commonly heard in Europe, but too much neglected in America owing to almost vain repetition of overplayed favorites; all this, too, amid a Summer idyll of blue-hazed Berkshire Hills, sparkling lake, heavens navigated by flotillas of white cloud, and, in a sudden rhetorical pause of the orchestra rehearsing in the Shed on an intense instant of morning stillness, the song of a wood thrush fluting from the nearby forest. Do even the birds feel the competition?

And specially from every shire's ende
Of Christendom to Tanglewood they wende
The holy blissful music for to seeke
That holpen them their heartes' strength to eke.

Geoffrey Chaucer did not write that? He would have, had he made the pilgrimage to Tanglewood.

UNCLE DUDLEY.

Plouffe

STUDIOS DEDICATED: Dr. Lewis Perry, trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, speaks for the school at the dedication of the studios in the replica of Nathaniel Hawthorne's Little Red House yesterday. The ceremony took place at a meeting of the New England District of the National Federation of Music Clubs. Other members of the group (left to right) are: Mrs. Roger Chilton Williams of Portland, Me., daughter of the late Mrs. Anne M. Gannett, former federation president, to whom the studio is dedicated for her work as chairman of the Little Red House committee; Mrs. Ada Holding Miller of Providence, federation president, who made the dedicatory address; and Mrs. Robert W. Roberts, national board member from Florida, who helped to finance the building, and to whose memory the second studio was dedicated.

Hawthorne's Little Red House Scene of Meeting of Donors

LENOX—"The Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center are a source of pride to all New England," is the sentiment expressed in a resolution passed at the meeting of the New England District of the National Federation of Music Clubs yesterday. One hundred members met in the morning in Sedgwick Hall here and later at Tanglewood for lunch, a concert and dedicatory ceremonies at the replica of Hawthorne's Little Red House, which the Federation built.

'Radiating Center of Music'

Mrs. Ada Holding Miller of Providence, national president, dedicating one of the two studios of the Red House to the late Mrs. Anne M. Gannett of Portland and the other to the late Robert W. Roberts, stated that it was appropriate that "the former home of one of America's best-loved novelists should become not only a memorial to him, but a haven for youthful talent from all over the world."

"Truly," she said, "the prediction [illegible] dedication of the house in July, 1948, has today come true. 'Tanglewood has become a shrine, a place of pilgrimage, a radiating center [illegible]

Of Mrs. Gannett she said: "She was president of the federation for six years, our war-time president. Through her vision, her determination to complete the building of the Little Red House, despite almost insurmountable obstacles, the project became a triumphant." Mrs. Miller paid tribute to Mr. Roberts as "a true friend of the federation, a patron of the arts."

Two dedicatory plaques in the studios are hand-carved by John Bischoff of Syracuse.

In closing Mrs. Miller said, "May these studios be filled with the music created by the youth of the Berkshire Music Center. May we who are present this day rededicate ourselves to their high ideals through which this project had its inception. May we resolve to become not only music-loving people but music-living people, with living music in our hearts that we may go forth singing."

Honor Guests

Guests of honor were Mrs. Roberts, national board member from Florida; Mrs. Roger C. Williams of Portland, Me., daughter of Mrs. Gannett; Mrs. R. H. Bodwell of Pine Orchard, Conn., Mrs. Gannett's sister, [illegible]

Mozart's 'Titus' To Be Given Next Week

Performance Slated Monday, Tuesday At Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD—The performance of Mozart's "Titus" ("La Clemenza Di Tito"), to be given by Berkshire Music Center students Monday and Tuesday evenings may well be the first production of this great master work to be given in the United States. The opera was commissioned to be performed at the coronation of Joseph II as King of Bohemia. The original text by Metastasio was revised for Mozart by Mazzola.

In the last year of his life Mozart was busy composing "The Magic Flute" when his work was interrupted by [illegible] "Titus" was composed, rehearsed and performed within a space of six weeks. Mozart, ill and under considerable pressure, [illegible]

Text in English

For the Tanglewood production, the text of the opera has been [illegible] lish by Boris Goldovsky, director, and Sarah Caldwell, stage manager, of the Tanglewood opera department staff. Spoken dialogue will be substituted for the Secco recitatives. Mozart's music has been left intact and in its original order. The only change occurs when Chorus No. 15 is performed as a part of the last scene.

The opera is concerned with a conspiracy against the life and [illegible]

Crowd of 6000 Turns Out To See Tanglewood Parade

Berkshire Music Center Students Perform in All Departments—Shed Concert Highlights 10th Annual Program

By MILTON R. BASS

Berkshire County's annual musical clambake — "Tanglewood on Parade" — drew more than 6000 people yesterday afternoon and evening for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center. The program had double significance this year as it also celebrated the 10th anniversary of the Center.

The main concert in the shed did not start until 8.30, but there were things popping all over the Tanglewood grounds from 4 o'clock on. At this time reserved seat and boxholders saw two humorous one-act operas in the formal garden. The sun at this time proved a little too much for the piano accompianist in the garden, and it was necessary to protect him with a big black umbrella before the show could go on.

C eras Galore

The main body of the audience started to drift into the grounds shortly after 5.30 and the busiest activity of the day then took place. It seemed that each person was equipped with a camera and unlimited amounts of film because picture groups were scattered all over the lawn and grounds. People were snapping shots from every conceivable spot and angle.

This occupation was interrupted by the "Fanfare for Bima," performed by six students at 5.45. Boris Goldovsky then welcomed the audience from a stand in front of the shed and outlined the choices for the evening. Patrons had four programs to choose from and several hundred took advantage of each type of music available.

The student orchestra gave a concert of Haydn, Beethoven and Britten under student conductors in the shed while the opera department premiered a performance of Andre Singer's "Alcottiana" in the Theatre Shed. At the same time the Tanglewood Study Group performed eight selections in the Red Barn, and Department I gave concerts of chamber music, choral music and compositions.

Hearty Eaters

Many of those present did not bother with the musical offerings but settled right down on the grass and dug into their picnic offerings. They were joined at 7 o'clock by those who had attended the concerts and all ate their suppers while listening to a concert by members of the chorus of Department II who sang from the Main House porch. Noticeable among the picknickers were the several camp groups present, some from Connecticut and New York states, but most, hordes of youngsters clustered around their counselors while food boxes were passed out (cream cheese and jelly sandwiches being the most commonly seen [illegible] land, one of the directors [illegible] Center gave a short talk in which he outlined the history of the [illegible] Music Center and the program for the evening.

Mr. Copland told how the Center was a dream of the late Dr. Serge Koussevitsky who had visualized it as a place where students from all over the world might come and learn. "The Center is the only one connected with a music festival," said Mr. Copland and some of its alumni are now famous throughout the country." He cited the cases of former students who had [illegible] their achievement with a long burst of applause.

Last night's program featured distinguished alumni of the Music Center rather than any one personality and each member demonstrated amply why he has become distinguished.

James Aliferis conducted Lukas Foss's "The Prairie," Howard Shanet conducted "Poeme" by Chausson, with Jacob Krachmalnick as soloist, and Lukas Foss conducted Mendelssohn's "Piano Concerto in G Minor," with Seymour Lipkin as soloist. All were well received, but Mr. Lipkin received a tremendous ovation which extended well into the intermission.

Cold Evening

The temperature had dropped with the sun and very few braved the lawn for the final half of the program, most crowding into the shed to hear Leonard Bernstein conduct the last act from Bizet's "Carmen."

Soloists for the opera were David Lloyd, James Pease, Francis Barnard, Mildred Miller, Margo Stagliano and Jacqueline Bazinet. They were backed by the Berkshire Festival Chorus which had sung in the first part of the program.

Mr. Bernstein conducted in his usual fiery manner and he, the soloists, the musicians and the chorus received an ovation at the end of the performance. (For further details see the review by Jay C. Rosenfeld.)

The drawing for the 12 door prizes took place immediately after the concert and this was followed by waltzing on the lawn by the main house. Frigid conditions held this down to a minimum.

Student Events

TANGLEWOOD—The last Composers' Forum, a weekly event at the Berkshire Music Center, will be held this afternoon instead of Sunday evening as in previous weeks.

The Chamber Music Group will play tomorrow morning at 10 a piano quintet by Shostakovich, the DeBussy Quartet in G minor and "Music for Brass" by Ingold Dahl, who will conduct the number himself.

Monday afternoon at 4.30 the orchestra, choral and opera departments will give a song recital, including three songs by Weigel; "Poemes Arabes" by Aubert, songs by Schubert and Beethoven, five songs by Ravel and "On the Island" by Britten.

Plouffe

LUCKY WINNERS: Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Mengers of Cynwyd, Pa., show how they feel about winning this 17-inch, table-model television set, first prize of the 12 awarded at last night's drawing after the Tanglewood concert. Mrs. Owen Johnson of Stockbridge, third from left, drew the tickets, while Mrs. Alexander Hoppin of Lenox, a member of the Tanglewood Parade Committee looks on.

Prize Winners At Parade

TANGLEWOOD — Door prizes and winners for Tanglewood on Parade last night follow: RCA Victor television set, installed, Mrs. Eleanor S. Mengers, Cynwyd, Penn.; RCA Victor table model radio set, Mrs. Fred Lohman, Richmond, Ind.; original lithograph by Ture Bengtz, Mrs. Edward Brylawski, Philadelphia, Pa.; hand-painted stole, French style, by Anna de Leuchtenberg, L. Floyd Smith, Syracuse, N.Y.; Serge Koussevitzky Memorial Album, P. L. Gramm Tuckahoe, N.Y.; French recordings by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mrs. Nanette Hirsch, New York City; two albums by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, Eva Lichtenfeld, Rochester, N.Y.

Dinners: The Pyrenees, Margaret Hender, Canaan, Conn.; Elm Court, Miriam L. Diecter, Brighton; Red Lion Inn, Celia Green, Malden; Curtis Hotel, Mrs. Ernest Sarason, Syracuse, N.Y.; Blantyre, M. de Coppet, New York City.

Ten dollars of merchandise at Yezzi's, Pittsfield, Kurt Moses, New York City; pair of tickets for Malden Bridge Playhouse, Archie Cohen, New York City.

Alumni of Tanglewood School Stage 'Greatest Show on Earth'

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

"Tanglewood on Parade" is "the greatest musical show on earth" which culminates, after many side show performances, with a gala concert in the evening in the big Shed. Last night the program had an especial glamour because of the brilliance of the conductors and soloists who took part, all alumni of the Berkshire Music Center, the school which is so important a part of the entire venture.

Aaron Copland, director of the school, in his few remarks preceding the program, pointed out that the concert about to be played was evidence, if any were needed, of the calibre and scope of the school, the cherished enterprise of the late Serge Koussevitzky.

James Aliferis, the first conductor of the evening led the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the chorus of the Berkshire Music Center, some 200 strong, in the last movement of "The Prarie", the secular cantata by Lukas Foss, also of the school's alumni. The cantata is based on Carl Sandburg's "Cornhuskers." The particular section sung last night is [illegible] the spirit of the work is illustrated by the oft repeated phrase "I speak of new cities and new people."

Violin Soloist

[illegible] "Poeme," with [illegible] conducting. Then Foss [illegible] certs in [illegible] the following part of the program was the final of Bizet's "Carmen" performed in concert style with Leonard Bernstein conducting and Mildred Miller as Carmen, David Lloyd, Don Jose, James Pease, Escamillo, and Margo Stagliano as Frasquita, Francis Barnard as Zuniga and Jacqueline Bazinet as Mercedes, and the Berkshire Center chorus.

[illegible] varied in spirit and [illegible] ever it could be done, cylinder number two in a Chrysler motor that it is its turn to fire. But on a Parade night everything goes. In this one it went well, too. In one case a soloist is cramped by an inconsiderate conductor; in another, Foss raises his soloist to Olympian heights.

The principal characters in the opera sang beautifully. Miss Stagliano had only a minor allotment, and James Pease also had too short an opportunity for the pleasure his art bestows on all his listeners, while Miss Miller and David Lloyd put dramatic fervor and vocal opulence of remarkable degree into their roles. Bernstein gave them every opportunity to be heard and every freedom they wished.

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

JUL 1[illegible]

Students Play Vibrantly At Lenox Concert

[illegible] played by students of the Berkshire Center. In the afternoon the small orchestra played the last three symphonies of Mozart, and in the evening an orchestra of students displayed compositions of various of the student composers at the center.

Orchestra Sized To Needs

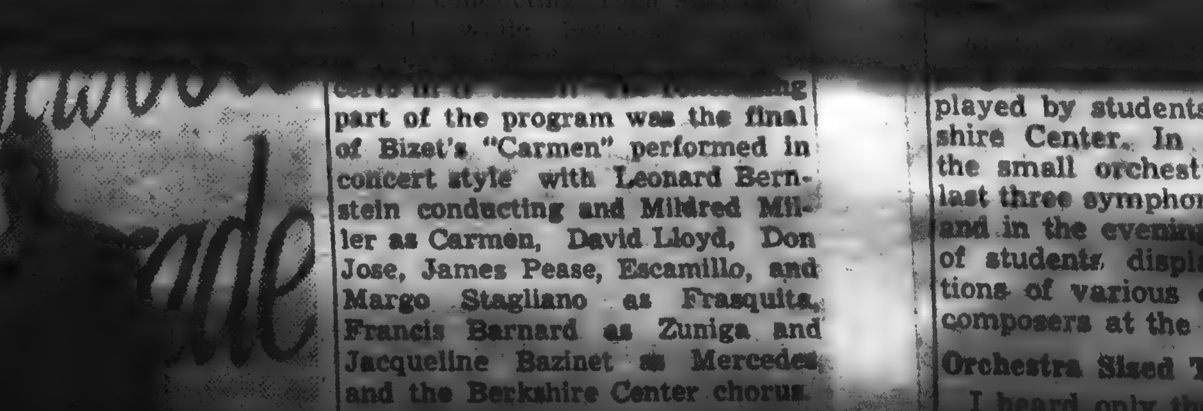
I heard only the morning and [illegible]

Honegger's Work on Program Festival Concert Tomorrow

TANGLEWOOD — The composer of the music to be played in the second half of the Berkshire Festival concert tomorrow afternoon, Arthur Honegger, spent six months in Lenox in 1947. A week after he arrived from France to teach composition at the Berkshire Music Center he suffered a heart attack, and was advised to rest for six months, which he did.

He was visited there by his friend, Charles Munch, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in his work tomorrow.

His composition, "La Danse des Morts" was first performed in Basel, Switzerland in 1940, and nine years later by the Orchestra of Fort Wayne, Ind., Igor Buketoff conducting. It is set to a text of Paul Claudel, who it is said was [illegible]



... a former home of ... of America's best-loved novelists should become not only a memorial to him, but a haven for youthful talent from all over the world."

"Truly," she said, "the prediction made by Dr. Koussevitzky on the dedication of the house in July 1948, has today come true. Tanglewood has become a shrine, a place of pilgrimage, a radiating center of music, a flame with a creative spirit!'" but music-living people ... ing music in our hearts that we may go forth singing."

Honor Guests

Guests of honor were Mrs. Roberts, national board member from Florida; Mrs. Roger C. Williams of Portland, Me., daughter of Mrs. Gannett; Mrs. R. H. Bodwell of Pine Orchard, Conn., Mrs. Gannett's sister; present and past state presidents and members of the national board.

... The original text by Metastasio was revised for Mozart by Mazzola.

In the last year of his life Mozart was busy composing "The Magic Flute" when his work was interrupted by the commission for "Titus." "Titus" was composed, rehearsed and performed within a space of six weeks. Mozart, ill and under considerable pressure, took with him his favorite student, Sussmayer, to help him. To Susswhile listening to a concert by members of the chorus of Department II who sang from the Main House porch. Noticeable among the picknickers were the several camp groups present, some from Connecticut and New York states, but most from surrounding areas. These hordes of youngsters clustered around their counselors while food boxes were passed out (cream cheese and jelly sandwiches being the most commonly seen piéce de resistance) and peaches were distributed:

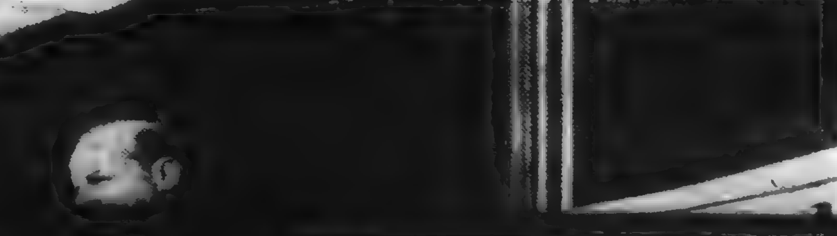
... will give a song ... cluding three songs by [illegible]; "[illegible]" by Schubert, songs by Schubert and Beethoven, five songs by Ravel and "On the Island" by Britten.

Ten dollars of merchandise at Yezzi's, Pittsfield, Kurt Moses, New York City; pair of tickets for Malden Bridge Playhouse, Archie Cohen, New York City.



the Berkshire Music Center, some 200 strong, in the last movement of "The Prairie", the secular cantata by Lukas Foss, also of the school's alumni. The cantata is based on Carl Sandburg's "Cornhuskers." The particular section sung last night is entitled "Tomorrow" and the spirit of the work is illustrated by the oft repeated phrase "I speak of new cities and new people."

Violin Soloist

Jacob Krachmalnick, now con-

JUL 18 1952

Students Play Vibrantly At Lenox Concert

By FREDERICK J. KOUNTZ

LENOX, Mass., July 17—...

Boston Orchestra's Berkshire Festival ...

At 10 in the morning was a program of chamber music played by students of the Berkshire Center. In the afternoon the small orchestra played the three symphonies of Mozart and in the evening an orchestra of students displayed compositions of various of the student composers at the center.

Orchestra Sized To Needs

I heard only the morning and afternoon concerts. To hear three symphonies of Mozart at any time is a privilege and an extraordinary pleasure. To hear these last symphonies with an orchestra sized to fit the needs of the music, played by instrumentalists of skill and long experience in orchestral playing and intimate association with music is an intellectual and musical joy that one is not frequently allowed.

The morning program included the Mozart Sextet in F major, which is subtitled "The Village Musicians" and enlists the services of a string quartet and two French horns, the String Quartet in G by Lukas Foss, and Dvorak's Quintet in A major for piano and string quartet.

Students Play Brightly

The students played brightly, with generally pleasant intonation, with a strong and infectious rhythmic sense; and in large measure they impressed one that they had been drilled not only in the performance of the music, but as well that they had been intelligently guided into a substantial understanding of the music they played.

The Lukas Foss Quartet is the kind of work that should be played by young people. It is young itself, quick and glittering, rhythmically exciting, and not overburdened with depth of content.

Performance Unfettered

And these young people almost danced into the piece. Their playing was fresh and vibrant and completely unfettered. To see and hear them almost revel in the jazz-like third movement was a wonderful experience.

It may be that in the Berkshire Center attendance at these concerts is obligatory for many of the students. Be that as it may, it was quite an exciting experience to see almost 800 people in the audience which filled the small hall and considerable of the grounds about Shanet conducting. Then Foss conducted ... Lipkin played the Mendelssohn piano concerto in G minor. The concluding part of the program was the ... of Bizet's "Carmen" performed in concert style with Leonard Bernstein conducting and Mildred Miller as Carmen, David Lloyd, Don Jose, James Pease, Escamillo, and Margo Stagliano as Frasquita, Francis Barnard as Zuniga and Jacqueline Bazinet as Mercedes, and the Berkshire Center chorus.

The program varied in spirit and efficiency due to several factors as is inevitable when a succession of individuals follow one another in a series of compositions. But any faults, if there were any, were on the side of an excess of zeal, rather from any suspicion of apathy.

The poise of Krachmalnick and the keyboard command of Lipkin were astounding. Krachmalnick's tone and facility are superb; Lipkin's was very thrilling.

Some of the conductors were not aware that it is no more necessary, in the general course of events, to signal, at least so conspicuously for a Boston Symphony Orchestra section or principal that this is his entrance, than it is to inform, how-

---

At Festival Concert Tomorrow

TANGLEWOOD — The composer of the music to be played in the second half of the Berkshire Festival concert tomorrow afternoon, Arthur Honegger, spent six months in Lenox in 1947. A week after he arrived from France to teach composition at the Berkshire Music Center he suffered a heart attack, and was advised to rest for six months, which he did. He was visited there by his friend, Charles Munch, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in his work tomorrow.

His composition, "La Danse des Morts" was first performed in Basel, Switzerland in 1940, and nine years later by the Orchestra of Fort Wayne, Ind., Igor Buketoff conducting. It is set to a text of Paul Claudel, who it is said was impressed by the famous woodcuts of Hans Holbein the Younger.

Soloists Listed

Soloists will be Irene Jordan, soprano; Betty Lou Allen, contralto; and Richard Sharretts, all enrolled as students at the Berkshire Music Center, who will sing with the Festival Chorus, prepared by Hugh Ross. Arnold Moss, the narrator, who has long been associated with the Theatre Guild and has appeared elsewhere in Shakespearean and other productions, was narrator with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Honegger's "Jeanne d'Arc au Bucher." A native of New York City, he received his early theatrical training at Eve LeGallienne's Civic Repertory Theatre. He has appeared on Broadway in "The Fifth Column," "Journey to Jerusalem," "Flight to the West," "The Land is Bright," "Twelfth Night" and "King Lear." Heard frequently on the radio, he was music commentator for the broadcasts of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, and he has appeared on television with "Studio One" and "Suspense." He recently played with Rita Hayworth in "Salome, Dance of the Seven Veils."

For the first half of the program, Mr. Munch has chosen Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont" and Symphony No. 8, and Dubussy's "Iberia" ("Images" for Orchestra, No. 2.).

The Overture was composed in 1810 and performed first at a production of Goethe's play by Hartl in Vienna. The Eighth Symphony was completed two years later, having its first performance in 1814, also in Vienna.

Claude Debussy completed "Iberia," one of three "Images" in 1910. It was performed at a Colonne concert in Paris in the same year. It was originally planned for two pianos, but was finally written for an orchestra.

Tickets are on sale at the box office and England Brothers. General admission for listening from the lawn will be sold before the concert.

For the Tanglewood production, the text of the opera has been revised and translated into English by Boris Goldovsky, director, and Sarah Caldwell, stage manager, of the Tanglewood opera department staff. Spoken dialogue will be substituted for the Secco recitatives. Mozart's music has been left intact and in its original order. The only change occurs when Chorus No. 15 is performed as a part of the last scene.

The opera is concerned with a conspiracy against the life and throne of the Roman emperor, "Titus." The scenery for this production was designed by Charles Elson and makes use of a new light-projection machine designed by Paul Planner. It makes possible a number of unusual scenic effects, the most remarkable of which is probably the burning of Rome, which climaxes the end of the first act.

Cast Announced

The costumes are designed by Leo Witsen. The production will be staged and conducted by Mr. Goldvosky. The cast will include: Titus, Monday night, Charles Matheson; Tuesday, Lloyd Oostenbrug; Vitella, Monday, Irene Jordan; Tuesday, Jacqueline Bazinet; Servillia, Monday, Sarah Fleming; Tuesday, Arlene Stone; Sectus, Shirley Winston; Annius, Jacqueline Langee; Publius, Richard Sharretts. The spoken roles of Lentulus and Caius Marius which have been added in this version will be portrayed by Arthur Schoep and Robert Mesrobian.

So keen is the interest in the production that three weeks in advance all seats were reserved by Friends of the Berkshire Music Center who were invited to the production as to all school performances.

Center gave a short talk in which he outlined the history of the Berkshire Music Center and the program for the evening.

Mr. Copland told how the Center was a dream of the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky who had visualized it as a place where students from all over the world might come and learn. "The Center is the only one connected with a music festival," said Mr. Copland and some of its alumni are now famous throughout the country." He cited the cases of former students who had now joined various symphonic groups and then asked those members of the Boston Symphony who were once students at the Center to stand. The crowd acknowledged

Tanglewood on Parade

Plouffe

WE BID YOU WELCOME: Boris Goldovsky, director of the Opera Department, greets the visitors to Tanglewood on Parade, and outlines the various programs available to the audience.

Plouffe

COMPOSER AND CAST: André Singer, composer of the one-act opera, "Alcottiana," which was given its first performance yesterday by the Tanglewood Opera Associates, discusses the work with the singers who performed it. From left to right, Leah G. Crohn of Detroit, Martha Flowers of Winston-Salem, N.C.; David Rae Smith of Asheville, N.C.; Marcelle Hammond of Westerly, R.I.; Mr. Singer; and Boris Goldovsky, director of the Music Center's opera department, who supervised the work.

Tanglewood

THE WEEK AT TANGLEWOOD

TODAY

PM
*4.00 Composer's Forum.
8.15 Berkshire Festival Concert.
Pierre Monteux conducting.
Woton's Farewell and Fire Music, from Die Walkure .... Wagner
James Pease, soloist.
Finale scene from Siegfried.
Excerpts from Gotterdammerung.
Siegfried's Rhine Journey.
Siegfried's Death.
Immolation Scene.
Soloists: Margaret Harshaw, soprano. Howard Vandenburg, tenor.

SUNDAY

AM
*10.00—Chamber Music.
PM
3.00 Berkshire Festival Concert.
Charles Munch, conducting.
Overture to Egmont, Symphony No. 8 .... Beethoven
Iberia .... Debussy
Danse des Morts (with chorus). Honegger

MONDAY

*4.30 Song Recital.
8.15 Opera, Titus .... Mozart

TUESDAY

8.15 Opera, Titus .... Mozart

THURSDAY

8.15 Berkshire Festival Concert.
Charles Munch conducting.
Symphony No. 1, Spring, Schumann
Short Symphony .... Swanson
Piano Concerto No. 2 in B-flat, Brahms
Soloist, Arur Rubinstein.

FRIDAY

*8.15 Opera, Trouble in Tahihti, Bernstein
(Two performances.)
9.45 Application for tickets must be made in advance.

SATURDAY

10.00 Boston Symphony Orchestra Public Rehearsal (benefit, pension fund).
*2.30 Symphony Concert by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra.
*4.30 Concert by the small choir.
8.15 Berkshire Festival Concert.
Leonard Bernstein, conducting
The Koussevitzky Memorial Concert.
Andante, from Concerto in D major .... C. P. E. Bach
Symphony No. 3 .... Copland
Symphony No. 5 .... Sibelius

SUNDAY

*10.00 Chamber Music.
3.00 Berkshire Festival Concert.
Charles Munch, conducting.
Requiem (with chorus) ... Berlioz
Soloist, Andrew McKinley, tenor.

* Open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.
 Seats no longer available.

PAGE 13

Final Weekend Program Listed At Tanglewood

Special to The Standard-Times

TANGLEWOOD, Aug. 2—The final weekend of the Berkshire Festival, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, will open next Thursday with Schumann's "Symphony No. 1" ("Spring"), Swanson's "Short Symphony" and Brahms' "Second Piano Concerto," in which Artur Rubinstein will make his first appearance at tanglewood in the solo part.

Leonard Bernstein, successor to the late Serge Koussevitsky as teacher of conducting and his pupil at the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's Summer school, will occupy the podium for the Koussevitzky memorial concert Saturday night. The program will be C.P.E. Bach's "Andante" from "Concerto in D Major," Aaron Copland's "Third Symphony and Sibelius' "Fifth Symphony," one of Dr. Koussevitzky's favorites. Mr. Munch will close the Festival next Sunday afternoon with the Berlioz "Requiem," in which Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor solo.

For the current weekend, Pierre Monteux will take the baton for the second time at Tanglewood to conduct an all-Wagner program Saturday night. Mr. Munch has chosen for Sunday afternoon Bethoven's Overture to "Egmont" and "Eighth Symphony," Debussy's "Iberia" and the "Danse des Morts" by his friend, Arthur Honegger. In the last, the Festival chorus, prepared by Hugh Ross, will sing, with Richard Sharretts, baritone; Irene Jordan, soprano; Betty Lou Allen, contralto, and Arnold Moss, narrator.

A few changes have been made in next week's Berkshire Music Center calendar. "Trouble in Tahiti," which Leonard Bernstein, the composer, describes as "a little opera in seven scenes," will be given two performances next Friday at 8:15 and 9:45 p. m. The symphony concert by the school orchestra, originally scheduled for Friday night, will be given Saturday at 2:30, led by student conductors and Thor Johnson, Cincinnati Orchestra leader, and a former Tanglewood student. At 4:30 the small choir will sing. The schedule otherwise remains as announced.

This Clipping From
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
JUL 25 1952

Testimony to Orchestra

Berkshire County Pays Tribute to Boston Unit

Lenox, Mass.—(AP)—Berkshire County last night presented a framed testimony to the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the [illegible]ing of the 15th Tanglewood Festival season.

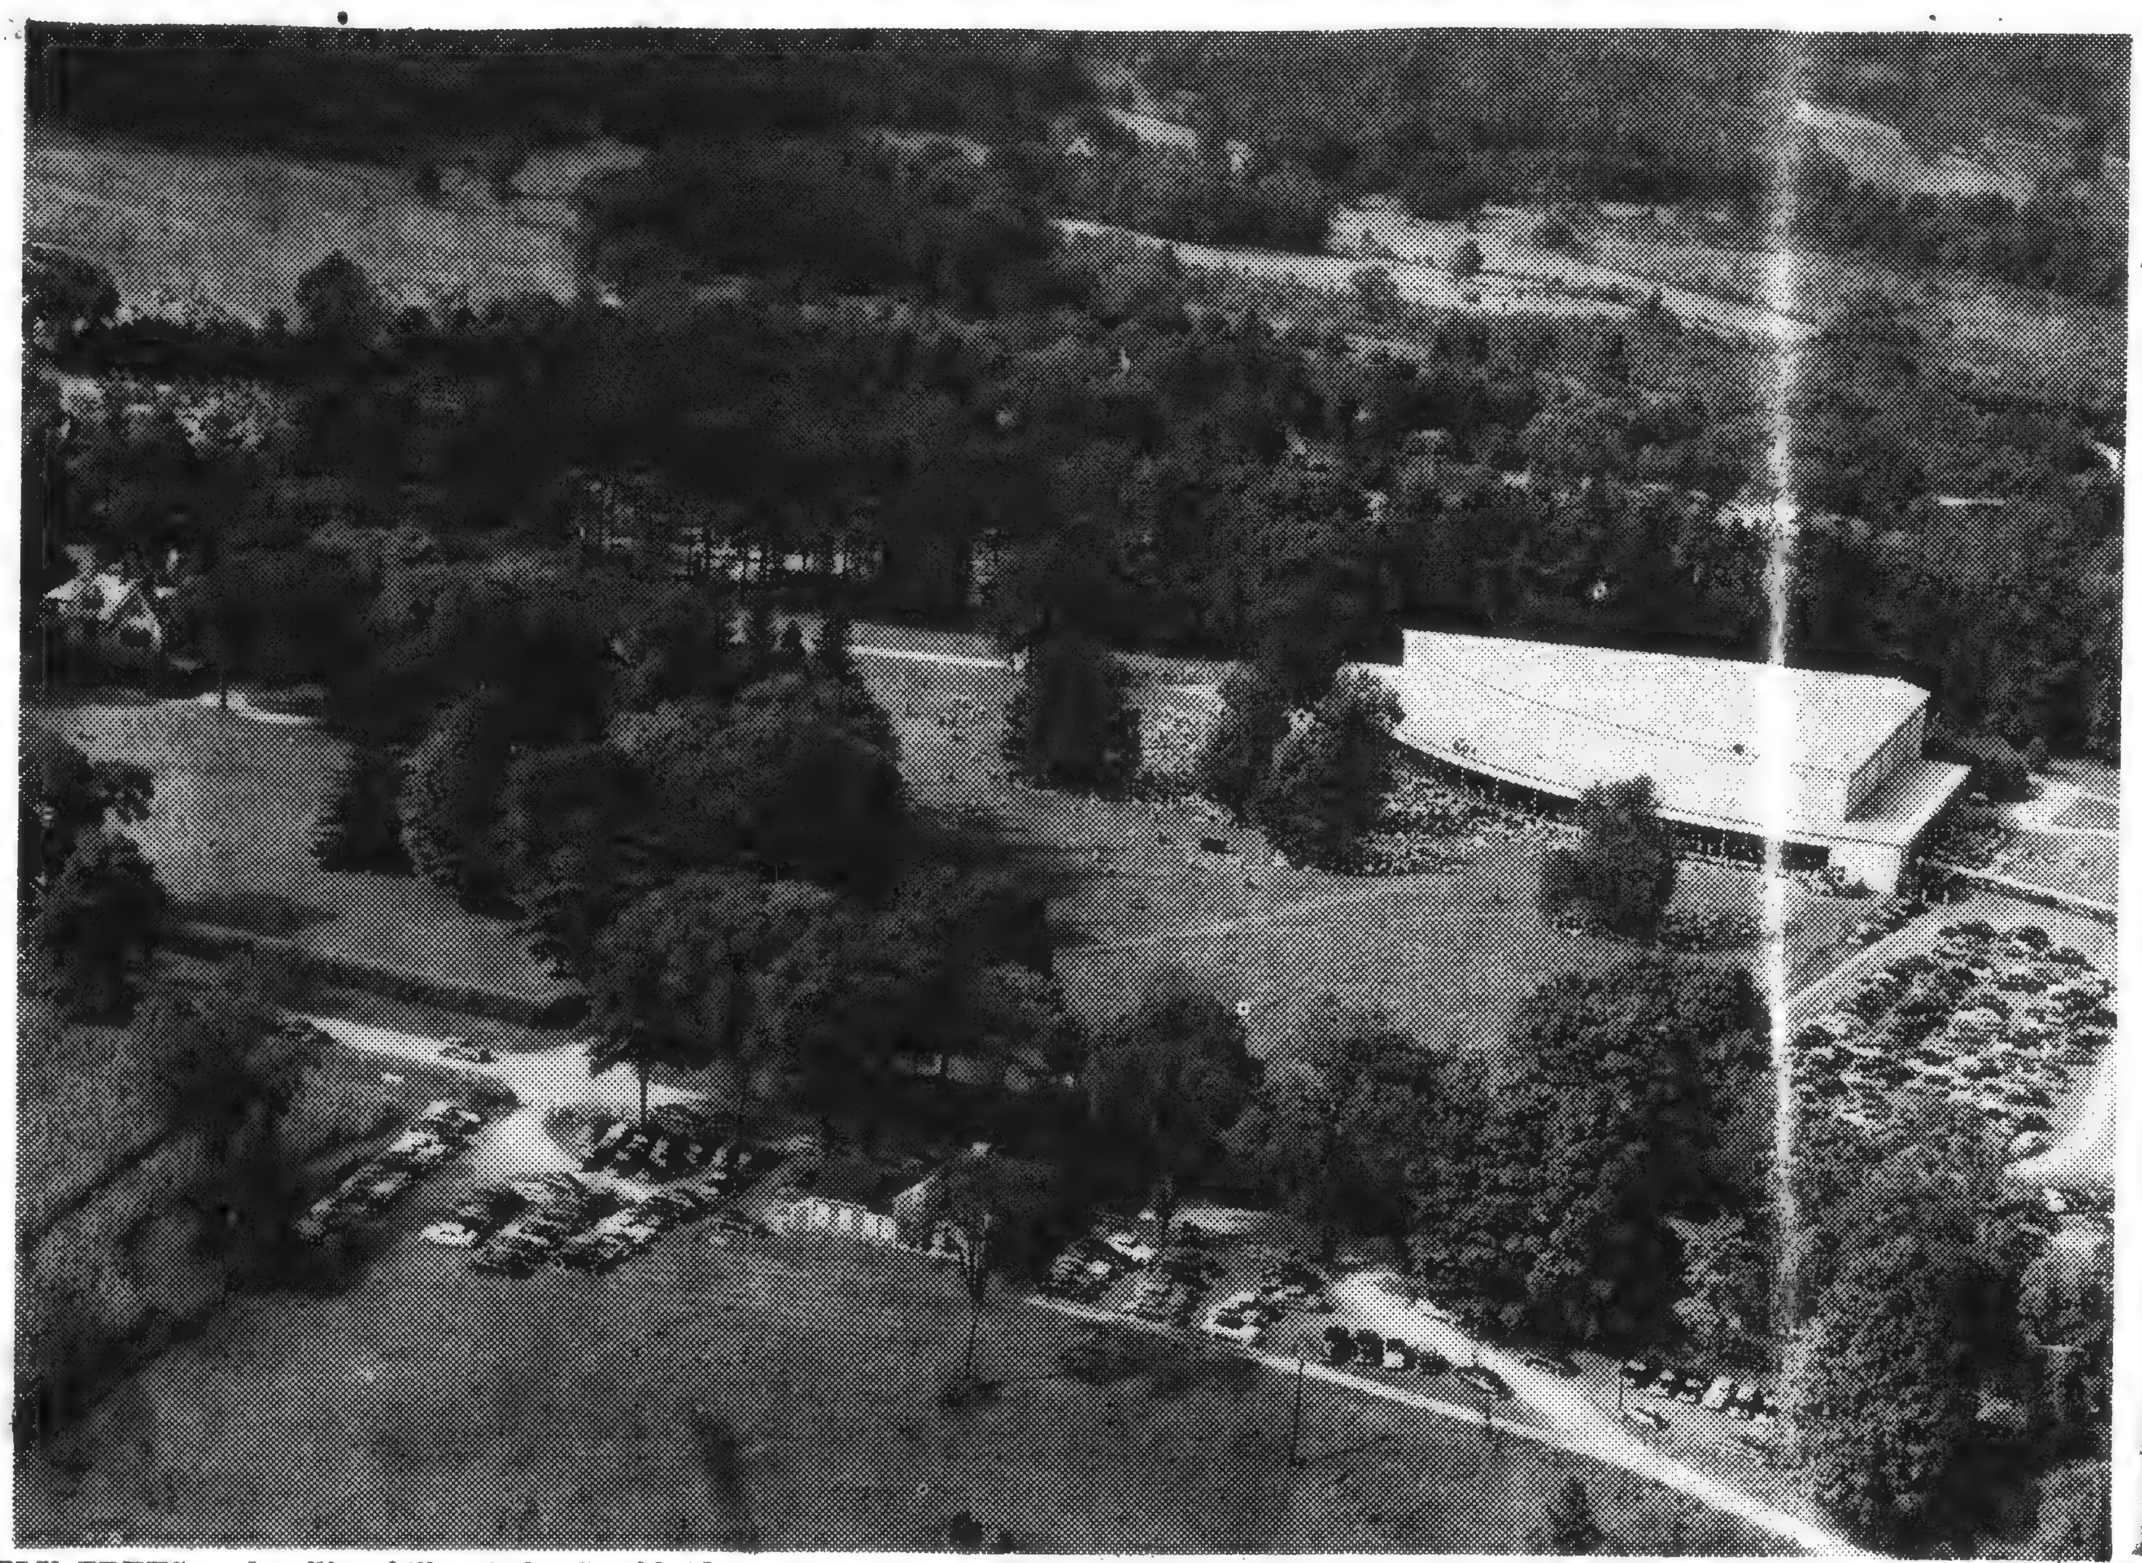
Pittsfield Mayor Robert T. Capeless presented the testimony to conductor Charles Munch before 8250 first nighters, 1150 more than attended the opening performance last year.

"Berkshire as well as Boston claims the world's greatest orchestra as its own," Capeless said, "though it has not before expressed its appreciation officially."

The festival will continue every Thursday and Saturday night and Sunday afternoon through Aug. 10.

IN. RMA ION OBSCURED

TANGLEWOOD IS MARKING ITS 15 H AN



STATELY TREES and rolling hills of the Stockbridge Bowl in the Berkshires frame the wedge-shaped Shed at Tanglewood, 200-acre estate that is the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its unique school, the Berkshire Music Center.

OVERFLOW AUDIENCES, relaxed [illegible] able, surround the [illegible] Theater-Concert [illegible] orchestral concerts and CHARLES MUNCH, perched on a high stool, leads his shirt-sleeved Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians in a rehearsal for a major Shed concert.

MADELYN ROBB, 15 Buckingham St., Waterbury, a piano student at the Berkshire Music Center, chats with Aaron [illegible] composer, who is assistant director of the center. Miss Robb is well known as a concert pianist in this area.

[illegible] ROSS, Aaron Copland, and [illegible] the Berkshire Music Center, [illegible] is assistant director and [illegible] Symphony Orchestra and the

Berkshire Music Festival At Lenox, Mass., Offers Pleasant Summer Entertainment For Many From Far And Near; It Started In Mid-30s

By FLORENCE ZUCKERBRAUN

Music al fresco has become an increasingly important part of American summer living, as symphony orchestras and their audiences discover the cool comforts of concerts under the stars.

There are the Yale Bowl concerts in New Haven; Boston's Esplanade; Philadelphia's Robin Hood Dell; Washington's Water Gate. Most famous of all, however, are the Berkshire Music Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its summer home, Tanglewood, at Lenox, Mass.

The festival, which this year marks its 15th anniversary, attracts thousands of listeners, some of whom travel thousands of miles for the pleasure of hearing the musical perfection for which the Boston Symphony Orchestra is reknowned.

A walk through the acres of parking area outside Tanglewood's main gate provides a quick geography lesson: Quebec, New York, Connecticut, Texas, Hawaii. Listeners come in the dusty khaki shorts of bicycle hostelers, the jewel-colored saris of India, the airy summer cottons of hot-weather America.

Attendance at last season's concert series topped 126,000, with the record for a single concert set by the 14 800 persons at one of last year's Saturday night programs.

Hundreds of Connecticut music lovers take advantage of Tanglewood's nearness — this tree-studded oasis of soul-satisfying sound is only 70 miles from Waterbury.

Started In 1934

The Berkshire Music Festival actually had its inception in 1934, when 65 members of the New York Philharmonic Symphony Society gave a series of three concerts in a wooden shell on the Dan Hanna estate in Stockbridge.

The idea grew, and in 1936, the late Dr. [illegible] Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra were invited for a three-concert series at the estate of Mrs. Margaret Emerson, also in Stockbridge. Attendance by then reached 15,000.

The magnificent 200-acre estate of Tanglewood was presented to the BSO in 1936 by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan. In 1938, the vast, open-sided shed, seating 6,000, was erected from plans drawn up by the Finnish architect, Eliel Saarinen.

Acoustically near-perfect, the shed obtains resonance through its wooden roof and a sound-reflector at its curved back. A full audience — which the summer concerts almost always attract — improves acoustics so the faintest [illegible] is carried to the farthest seats [illegible] unadorned stage.

With open colonnades providing no barrier to the sound of the music, the programs are also heard by thousands of listeners who stretch out under the stars on blankets, in deck chairs, or on the green carpet of Tanglewood's lawns.

Major festival concerts which opened last Thursday night, are given Thursday and Saturday night and Sunday afternoons, over a three week period. Charles Munch, who succeeded Dr. Koussevitsky a conductor of the orchestra, directs most of them. Before the 19 2 series ends, Aug. 10, there will also be concerts with Pierre Monteux and a justly-famous young Tanglewood alumnus, Leonard Bernstein, conducting.

Hold Preliminary Concerts

The festival programs, which grow in scope every year, have been broadened to include three preliminary week ends, just finished, of "little concert" music.

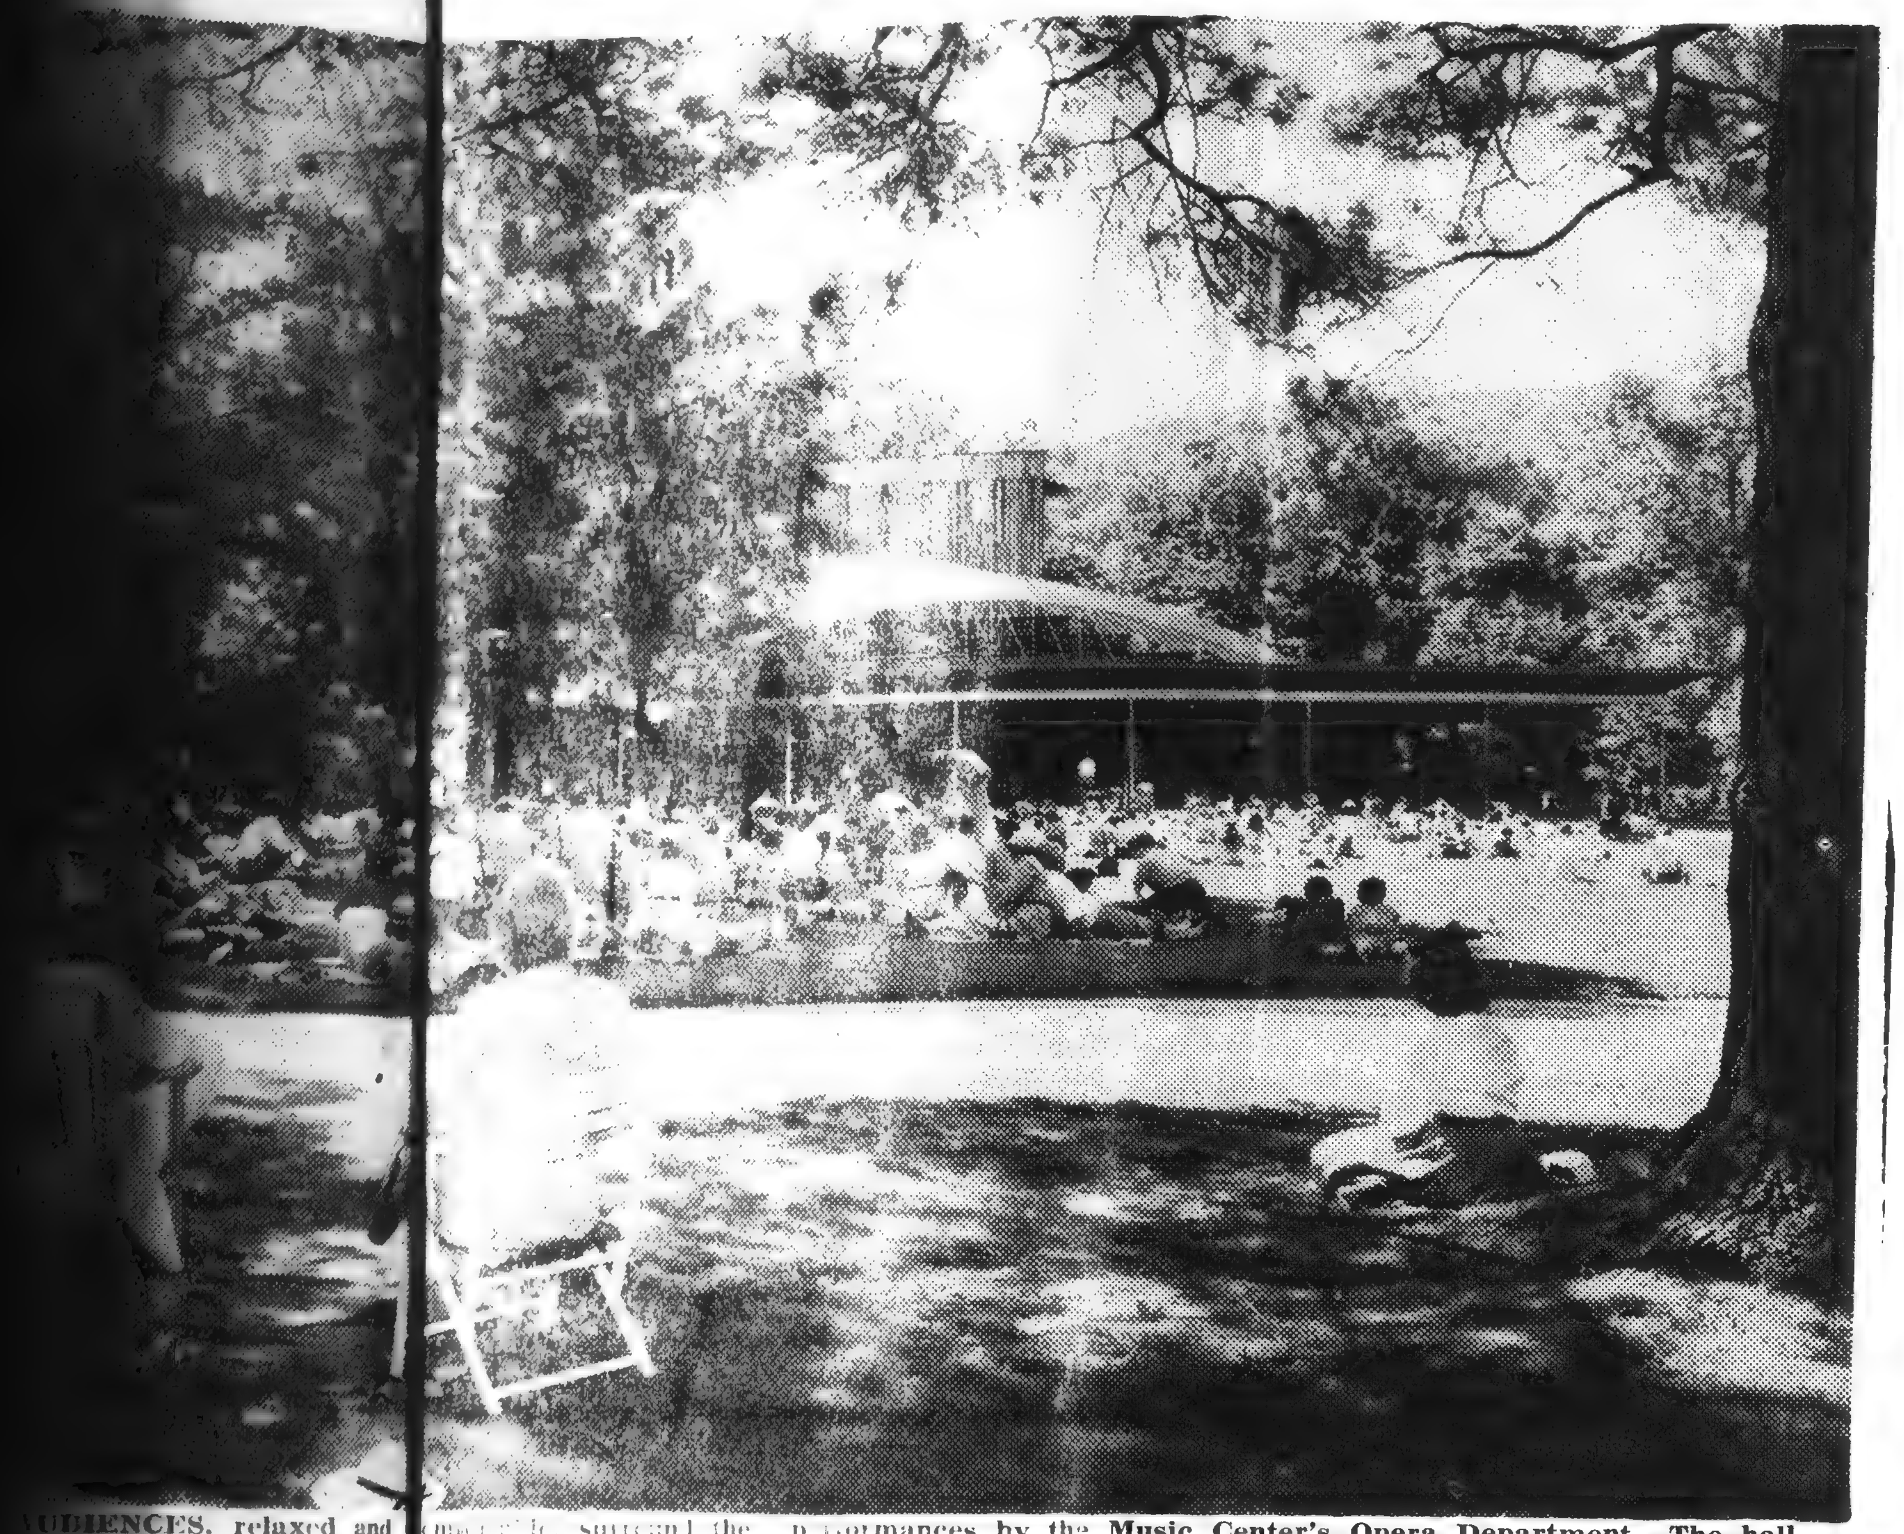
These offer programs of chamber music, choral work (usually directed by Hugh Ross) and music for small orchestral groups, in the [illegible]200-seat Theater-Concert Hall erected at the opposite tnd of the Tanglewood grounds from the shed in 1942.

Further supplementing the festival concerts are the programs and recitals of the Berkshire Music Center, an advanced school for student and professional musicians founded at Tanglewood by Dr. Koussevitsky in 1940.

The school, itself a guarantee of the perpetuation of good music in the United States, this year has enrollment of [illegible]00 students from 41 states and 16 foreign countries. Its faculty includes such great names of contemporary music as Aaron Copeland, in composition: Boris Goldovsky, in opera, Mr. Ross and Mr. Bernstein. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, top men in all instrumental fields, instruct student orchestra pupils.

[59]

ITS 15TH ANNIVERSARY



UDIENCES, relaxed and comfortable, surround the -Concert Hall, used for small orchestral concerts and performances by the Music Center's Opera Department. The hall itself seats 1,260, but concerts there usually attract more than twice hat number.

ry, a piano student Copland, [illegible]
Miss Robb is well

HUGH ROSS, Aaron Copland, and Charles Munch talk after the opening ceremonies of the 10th season of the Berkshire Music Center. Ross heads the department of choral singing and conducting; Copland is assistant director and teacher of composition at the school, and Munch is conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the director of the Music Center.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 20 1952

'DeProfundis' Fine Work For Chorus and Soloists

Three Celebrated Mozart Symphonies Heard in Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood; Juilliard Quartet Opens Summer Series at South Mountain

By VICTOR PRAHL

Perfect weather has smiled on the first two week ends of concerts at Tanglewood, bringing forth some record audiences. A sunny day with cool breezes helped create a delightful setting for Sunday's all-Mozart program.

Charles Munch chose three of Mozart's greatest symphonies, the E-flat, the G-minor and the "Jupiter." These splendid masterpieces certainly bear repetition but we have had them at nearly every festival for 10 years now, and a change to some of the lesser-known beautiful symphonies would have been welcome.

Then, too, we cannot forget Dr. Koussevitzky's more expansive manner [illegible] these famous works. However, Mr. Munch brings a freshness, vitality and a consistency of conception to them, and he gave an especial lyrical beauty to all the slow movements.

"De Profundis"

Lalande's motet, "De Profundis," sung at Saturday night's concert under the direction of Hugh Ross, proved to be a work of interest with lovely sustained choruses and short, florid airs for the soloists. We must mention the beautifully produced mezzo-soprano of Shirley Winston and the fine, authoritative bass of Richard Sharretts, among the new soloists.

With the Tanglewood calendar filling with more important musical events as the season progresses it becomes more difficult to make a choice but those who plan ahead will probably want to mark this year's "Tanglewood on Parade" which occurs on Friday, Aug. 1. The concert for this occasion promises to be extra-glamorous in that it will include the last act of Bizet's "Carmen" done in the big shed with Mildred Miller in the title role, David Lloyd as Don Jose and James Pease as Escamillo.

Other alumni who will take part in the concert include Jacob Krachmalnick, concertmaster of the Philadelphia orchestra, Leonard Bernstein, Lukas Foss, Howard Shanet, and Seymour Lipkin, pianist. Miss Miller now a member of the Met, had a fine success in Carmen at the Lewison Stadium a short time ago, Mr. Lloyd is a member of the City Center Opera, and Mr. Pease has signed up with the Hamburg Opera.

Juilliard String Quartet

The Juilliard Quartet, Robert Mann and Robert Koff, violins, Raphael Hillyer, viola, and Arthur Winograd, cello, who opened the series of summer concerts at South Mountain, Pittsfield, on Saturday, are four highly skilled young players, products of the Juilliard School, who through steady association and intensive training have become one of our very first quartets. Their performance of the Beethoven Quartet in E flat, op, 74 especially in its more dramatic portions, was really a musical revelation.

Equally fine was their projection of the illusive beauties of the Debussy Quartet and the elegance of style with which they imbued the opening Mozart in D Major (K. 575). A youthful verve and passion, a refined and sensitive musicality and a perfect balance are all theirs. Their program for next Saturday at 4, in the same setting, will include the Haydn Quartet in D major, Op. 50, No. 6, "The Frog," the Quartet Op. 3 by Alban Berg and "Death and the Maiden" by Schubert.

New England Group Of Music Clubs To Meet At "Tanglewood," Lenox, Mass., Friday

The 11th annual convention of the New England District of the National Federation of Music Clubs will take place Friday, in "Tanglewood," Lenox, Mass.

The program will open with registration at 10 A. M. in Sedgwick Hall in the Lenox Library. The business session, including reports by officers and state presidents, will take place from 10:30 to 11:30 A. M.

Thomas Hall Phillips, Jr., will address the group from 11:45 to 12:30 and his topic will be, "Grass Roots Opera." A cafeteria luncheon will be served on the grounds of "Tanglewood" at 1 P. M.

The afternoon program will open at 2:30 P. M. with a dedication by the national president, Mrs. Ada Holding Miller, at the Little Red House of the Anne M. Gannett studio and the Robert W. Roberts studio. A concert will take place in Chamber Music Hall at 3:30 P. M., featuring Claudette Sorel, Young Artists piano winner in 1951, and Warren Locke, baritone. A Chamber Music group from the Berkshire Music Center will also entertain.

A concert in the Music Shed at 8:30 P. M., presented by the Student Orchestra of the Berkshire Music Center, will close the program.

Final reservations for the luncheon should be made with Mrs. Frederick R. Fish, 555 Round Hill road, Fairfield, today. Those wishing information on hotel and guest house accommodations may contact the Berkshire Hills Conference, Pittsfield, Mass.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 19 1952

MAJOR FESTIVAL AT TANGLEWOOD OPENS THURSDAY

Berkshire County Plans Welcome for Munch, Boston Symphony

Tanglewood, July 18—When Charles Munch conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time since its triumphal tour of Europe, Berkshire County will give the orchestra an official and an unofficial welcome. The occasion will be the opening of the major Berkshire Festival in the Tanglewood music shed Thursday evening when town and county officials will be guests of honor to hear Beethoven's Third and Brahms' First Symphonies and to witness the presentation of a resolution of welcome and appreciation to the conductor by Mayor Robert T. Capeless of Pittsfield.

First of Nine Concerts

The concert will be the first of nine in the shed on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons. Pierre Monteux will take the baton for the first two Saturday programs and Leonard Bernstein for Aug. 9. Mr. Monteux, who conducted the Boston Orchestra from 1919 to 1924, was guest conductor in Boston the past two seasons and toured with them in Europe. He will include in his first program next Saturday Igor Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring," which he conducted in Paris in May for an enthusiastic audience 39 years after he was booed from the hall on its premiere in the same hall.

On the program for Sunday, July 27, are "Three Prisoners' Songs," by Luigi Dallapiccola, who for the second season has come to teach composition at Tanglewood from his home in Florence, Italy.

The series of Festival concerts in the theater ends this week end with concerts by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Munch conducting. Lukas Foss will play the solo in Mozart's Piano Concert in C major Saturday night, July 19, and Hugh Ross will conduct the Litaniae for Chorus and Orchestra.

At the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school, concerts will take place almost every day. Aaron Copland will conduct the student orchestra Friday evening, July 25, in excerpts from his ballet. "Billy the Kid" and Hugh Ross will lead orchestra and chorus in Orgad's "Cantata." Lorin Maazel will conduct Barber's Violin Concerto.

Under Boris Goldovsky the opera department will stage an evening of one-act operas Tuesday, the choral department will present a song recital Tuesday afternoon at 4 and Wednesday the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress will offer the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble. Chamber music will be played Sunday mornings at 10 and composers' forums will be held Sunday evenings at 8.15.

To all school events Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited. They may join by contributing to the support of the school. Program and ticket information on Festival concerts will be mailed on request. General admission for listening from the lawn will be on sale before each concert, for which seats in the hall may be reserved in advance.

U 3, 1952

Wagner Program at Lenox Acclaimed by Large Audience

By DONALD H. WHITE

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Aug. 2—Tonight was the all-Wagner evening at the Berkshire Music Festival, long and eagerly awaited by the thousands of music-lovers attending these superb Boston Symphony concerts. Conducted by Pierre Monteux, long the director of the San Francisco Symphony, the program included Wotan's farewell from "Die Walkure," the final scene from "Siegfried" and excerpts from "Die Gotterdammerung." Soloists were James Pease, New York City Center baritone; Margaret Harshaw of the Metropolitan Opera, and Howard Vandenburg, Philadelphia Opera tenor making his first appearance at Tanglewood, following the canceling of his engagement by Met tenor Charles Kullman.

Opening with the grandiose measures of Wotan's farewell to the erring Brunnhilde, Monteux lead a stirring performance of the Magic Fire music, following Mr. Pease's well-phrased "Leb 'Wohl du Kuhnes, Herrliches Kind." Pease, a young man, performed this tremendously taxing music in a capable manner. He grows vocally and histrionically from year to year, resulting in his recent engagement by the Hamburg Opera, Germany.

The tremendous tonal waves which emanate from this score are even more gigantic given the well-nigh perfect acoustics of the music shed here at Tanglewood. There are times when even the most heroic voice can be drowned. Monteux, with his usual impeccable taste, commendably supported Pease's not altogether heroic tones. This is a voice, however, that will be reckoned with in the next few years. Wagnerian baritones are all too rare specimens for this not to be a present fact.

The entrance of Margaret Harshaw, regal in deep blue, heralded the presentation of the final scene from "Siegried." Here Monteux reigned supreme in his inspired reading of the fortissimo, hugely-orchestrated sequence of Siegfried's mountain ascent. When the time came at last for Brunnhilde's awakening by her hero, we were well prepared for vocal grandeurs.

Howard Vandenburg did not display a remarkable heldentenor but rather one that is yet in a formative state. A tenor voice like Mr. Vandenburg's is more akin to the Italian operatic repertoire. However, he sang with a certain personal warmth that some of the historic voices have not always shown. In his scene with Mme. Harshaw, he was quite acceptable.

But the Brunnhilde here was the greatest vocal news of the evening. Possessor of a glorious, soaring dramatic soprano, she easily encompasses the most taxing phrases with which Wagerian scores abound. Until last season, Harshaw was a contralto, with a full repertoire. Then, in a wholly unusual feat of vocal change, she increased her range and began what promises to be one of the foremost soprano careers of the coming decade. The voice is round, warm, greatly expansive and full of deep fervor of a true dramatic soprano.

When her "Heil Dir, Sonne" pealed forth, the firm, controlled tones caused a thrill of expectation. Later, in the duet, the high voice showed compelling power. Mme. Harshaw is now a remarkable and talented artist.

After the wonderful Rhine journey and Siegfried's death scene, we had another opportunity to assess this soprano at her finest. The scene is a wonder of tone and elevated histronic mood.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-AMERICAN
JUL 27 1952

Alumni Return to 'Tanglewood' for Parade on Aug. 1

TO CELEBRATE the tenth season and to aid Berkshire Music Center, some of the noted alumni will return to "Tanglewood," Lenox, Mass., this week to appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday night in concert. As in previous benefits, "Tanglewood on Parade" also will include the School on View, a Chorus concert on the Porch and Chamber Music in its own hall. There will be time for a picnic on the lawn, and, for the holders of box and reserved seats, a special performance of Pergolesi's opera "Livietta and Tracolo" in the garden. In the concert in The Shed, there will be symphonic music and the final act of Bizet's "Carmen."

MRS. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, widow of the Founder of Berkshire Music Center, and a committee, have charge of the sale of tickets for "Tanglewood on Parade." In its ten sessions, interrupted by World War II, 3,812 students have attended the Berkshire Music School, where many have had scholarships. This year's awards are automatic for those playing in the Orchestra, singing leading roles or studying composition. They are in "Tanglewood" from every state; 44 countries also are represented by 199 students. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is director of the Music Center, succeeding the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Music Center founder and for years conductor of the Boston Symphony. There are 120 former Tanglewood students, including players and conductors, in 21 major symphony orchestras, the Cleveland Orchestra leading with 15. Outstanding singers, choral conductors and composers have studied in Tanglewood.

* * *

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION
JUL 20 1952

Music Notes:

Symphony Concerts at Tanglewood

BY EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

The Berkshire Music Festival at "Tanglewood" in the Berkshires will get into high gear, Thursday night with the opening of the big shed.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch will inaugurate Series A with the playing of the "Eroica" Symphony by Beethoven (No.3) and the Symphony, No. 1 by Brahms.

The Saturday night concert will be conducted by Pierre Monteux and the orchestra will offer the Overture to "The Secret Marriage" by Cimarosa; Cchubert's "Symphony, No. 7" and Stravinsky's controversial "The Rite of Spring." Sunday afternoon's concert will include Cesar Frank's Symphonic Piece from "Redemption," Bizet's Symphony in C major; "Three Prisoners' Songs" by orchestra and chorus, conducted by Hugh Ross and Ravel's colorful "Daphnis and Chloe" by Ravel with chorus. Evening concerts start promptly at 8:15 and Sundays, at 3 o'clock.

* * *

The Seagle Colony Opera Guild will open its 11th season Friday evening, July 25 with a performance of Pucinni's opera, "La Boheme sung in English at 8:45 p. m. The initial performance is sponsored by the Schroon Lake Association with Mrs. Louis Mayersohn, of Albany; Mrs. Robert Misch, and Mr. and Mrs. Max Keppler of New York and Mrs. Stephen Early of Schroon Lake in charge of the benefit.

Deborah Alden, and Frank Green, artist pupils of John Seagle, director of the Colony will sing the roles of "Mimi" and "Rudolph," respectively. Miss Alden appeared on a recent broadcast with James Melton from Texas and was a member of the Grass Roots Opera Compaiy, last winter at Raleigh, N. C. Mr. Green was a member of the "Kiss Me Kate" compaiy and the St. Petersburg Light Opera Company in Florida.

The opera performances this summer will be held at the Schroon Lake High school auditorium. John Seagle is general manager; Nathan Price, well known New York accompanist, Musical Director, and Tom Phillips will be in charge of the dramatic coaching and stage production. Members of the chorus will be students of the Seagle Colony.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
World-Telegram & The Sun
Circ. D. 555,017
JUL 25 1952

Music

Bostonians Play At Tanglewood

By ROBERT BAGAR,

LENOX, Mass., July 25.—The big part, that is to say, the symphonic part of the Berkshire Music Festival began last night in the Tanglewood Shed before a crowd of more than 8000. This was a substantial gain over last year's opening night attendance. Preceding the musical program, which was conducted by Charles Munch, there was a ceromony of appreciation from Berkshire County in honor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's "triumphant tour of Europe." The speakers were Henry B. Capot, president of the orchestra's board of trustees, and Robert Capeless, Mayor of Pittsfield.

Only two works comprised the program last evening, but they were two especially great ones from the treasury of the nineteenth century, the Beethoven "Eroica" and the Brahms First Symphonies.

Conductor Critized.

There is no need to dwell on the magnificent playing done by this famous band. All too well we have come to learn that rarely, if ever, does it play in a manner anything but magnificent. So it is not with the gifted and remarkably responsive Bostonians that one take issue, but rather with the conductor, Mr. Munch, who, strangely seemed to be in a most driving mood.

Less of that driving was to be observed in the performance of the "Eroica" than in the Brahms. In the latter the batonist, reading from score, yet introduced us to sudden bursts of speed that ran long and loud, and to sudden bursts into irrelevant lethargies between.

Some Stunning Effects.

And in spite of that he obtained some perfectly stunning effects, such as melody that sang its graceful song and dramatic moments that brought excitement. For all these enjoyments, though, one found a serious lack in the rendering of the Brahms—continuity and that is something in this particular work.

What special refinements there were in the playing of the Beethoven had mostly to do with line and continuity just the opposite of the other, you see. I must mention that the audience received the inaugural concert in the Shed with a great deal of joy.

BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE
JUL 25 1952

Boston Symphony Honored at Lenox Festival Opening

By CYRUS DURGIN

LENOX, July 24—Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra received a cordial official welcome from authorities of Berkshire County, as the main portion of the Berkshire Festival opened here tonight in the music shed at Tanglewood.

This was the first time that the full numbers of the Boston Symphony had gathered for a public concert since they ended their first European tour in the Royal Festival Hall in London last May 26.

Evereything combind to make this occasion pleasant—even the weather. The day was clear and warm, but with a lively breeze, and the evning was really cool. Accordingly one of the largest Berkshire Fstival opening night audiences attended. The box office count was more than 8000 persons, who sat in the huge music shed and spread out upon the lawn before it.

Mayor Makes Presentation

Before Charles Munch and the orchestra embarked upon the program of two symphonies—Beethoven's "Eroica" and the C Minor of Brahms—the conductor appeared at stage front with Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's board of trustees, and Mayor Robert T. Capeless of the adjoining city of Pittsfield, the Berkshire County seat.

Mr. Cabot introduced Mayor Capeless, who said, in part that Berkshire County, when its inhabitants heard of the wonderful reception given the orchestra in Europe, decided it, too, wanted to extend as cordial a reception to the returning musicians, for, he said, Berkshire County feels that the Boston Symphony belongs to it as well as to its home city.

Mayor Capless then presented a framed certificate, signed by County Commissioners J. Joseph McCabe, John Henderson and John F. Shea, which reads as follows:

"The people of Berkshire County salute the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the occasion of its first concert after its triumphant tour of Europe.

"As friends and neighbors we shared with delight, though at a distance. The unparalleled adulation which greeted this peerless band of musicians in its first tour abroad, in the Spring of 1952.

"We marked with pride that this orchestra was a chosen democratic instrument to sound the notes of freedom in an embattled continent. We rejoice that this great ensemble returns to us at Tanglewood to enrich our lives and to glorify, in its majestic fashion, our beautiful Berkshire Hills."

"World's Greatest"

"It is my good privilege, added Mayor Capeless, "to present this certificate to Mr. Charles Munch, and through him, to the members of the greatest orchestra in the world."

The certificate was made in Berkshire County by Berkshire artisans and designers. Further Berkshire tribute came from a group of Lenox and Pittsfield florists who erected over the main entrance gate to Tanglewood, an arch of evergreens and pink geraniums.

Congratulatory telegrams were received from United States Senator Leverett Saltonstall and Congressman John W. Heselton of the Massachusetts First Congressional District.

The welcoming ceremonies over, Mr. Munch and the orchestra addressed themselves to the resounding glories of the "Eroica" symphony. This classic masterpiece he read with his usual over-mastering intensity, although the pace of the first movement seemed a little more moderate than the conductor might have taken it at other times.

The opening program of familiar eBethoven and Brahms, though containing nothing "newsy" in a conventional sense, was nonetheless the sort of music which, I suspect, eFstival audiences prefer at a season's opening.

The words "season's opening" are reasonably correct, too, for although there have been the customary and preliminary three weekends of small orchestra concerts in the theatre-concert hall, a festival does not really "begin" until the main series is opened in the music shed. Novelties, such as they are this Summer will come later.

As always, the audience tonight was noisily cordial in its applause for Mr. Munch and the Boston Symphony. They know perfectly well when they are hearing a very very, good thing.

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
POST

Tanglewood Concerts Aired on WGBH-FM

The sixth concert of the chamber orchestra of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood was broadcast over WGBH last night. It was the first time that a Tanglewood performance of members of the Boston Symphony has been broadcast full-length anywhere since 1937. Under the direction of Charles Muench in the Theatre-Concert Hall, the chamber orchestra played two Haydn symphonies—the 86th, in D Major, and the 99th in E-Flat Major; and the Schubert Mass No. 2, in G Major, assisted by a choir from the Berkshire Festival Chorus. The WGBH policy of silence during intermission was followed. Just before the beginning of the second half of the concert, Hugh Ross, head of the choral department at the Berkshire Music Centre, spoke on the Schubert mass.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
JUL 25 1952

Music

Bostonians Play At Tanglewood

By ROBERT BAGAR,

LENOX, Mass., July 25.—The big part, that is to say, the symphonic part of the Berkshire Music Festival began last night in the Tanglewood Shed before a crowd of more than 8000. This was a substantial gain over last year's opening night attendance. Preceding the musical program, which was conducted by Charles Munch, there was a ceromony of appreciation from Berkshire County in honor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's "triumphant tour of Europe." The speakers were Henry B. Capot, president of the orchestra's board of trustees, and Robert Capeless, Mayor of Pittsfield.

Only two works comprised the program last evening, but they were two especially great ones from the treasury of the nineteenth century, the Beethoven "Eroica" and the Brahms First Symphonies.

Conductor Critized.

There is no need to dwell on the magnificent playing done by this famous band. All too well we have come to learn that rarely, if ever, does it play in a manner anything but magnificent. So it is not with the gifted and remarkably responsive Bostonians that one take issue, but rather with the conductor, Mr. Munch, who, strangely seemed to be in a most driving mood.

Less of that driving was to be observed in the performance of the "Eroica" than in the Brahms. In the latter the batonist, reading from score, yet introduced us to sudden bursts of speed that ran long and loud, and to sudden bursts into irrelevant lethargies between.

Some Stunning Effects.

And in spite of that he obtained some perfectly stunning effects, such as melody that sang its graceful song and dramatic moments that brought excitement. For all these enjoyments, though, one found a serious lack in the rendering of the Brahms—continuity and that is something in this particular work.

What special refinements there were in the playing of the Beethoven had mostly to do with line and continuity just the opposite of the other, you see. I must mention that the audience received the inaugural concert in the Shed with a great deal of joy.

Screen star Alexis Smith co-stars with Victor Jory in "Private Lives" Monday at the Norwich (Conn.) Summer Theater for one week.

[61]

8—The Berkshire Evening Eagle, Tuesday, Aug. 5, 1952

The Lively Arts

By Milton R. Bass

LEONARD BERNSTEIN and Felicia Montealegre decided [illegible] a couple last August, and [illegible] has been doing pretty [illegible]. [illegible] most tangible result is [illegible] end of this month, but [illegible] Montealegre intends to [illegible] while Mr. Bernstein [illegible] wings. Both [illegible] the news, however. [illegible] a boy, he will be [illegible]; if he turns out [illegible] girl, she will be named [illegible] Niki or [illegible] something else. "We [illegible] haven't decided yet." (This [illegible] first a scoop as they [illegible] business, and New York papers will please copy.)

* * *

MISS MONTEALEGRE is as [illegible] to you as your television [illegible] because she has been [illegible] and beaten up in [illegible] a hundred shows on various networks. Mr. Bernstein [illegible] I know because he was a [illegible] at Camp Onota in 1937. [illegible] done a few things since [illegible] but, from a local angle, [illegible] must be considered the pinnacle of his career.

On his way down, of course, he has become famous as a [illegible], a conductor and a composer. It is as a composer that [illegible] holds his greatest ambitions, and his latest work, the opera "Trouble in Tahiti," will be performed at Tanglewood on Friday.

The opera was premiered at the Brandeis music festival in [illegible] but Mr. Bernstein has made many revisions since then. "I was pressed for time," he said, "and the production was unfinished. There have been many [illegible] revisions and a whole new ending. Both endings were very sad but the first was framed in hysteria while the present, or 'B' version, ends in resignation." NBC plans to do a TV production of it in the fall, and Mr. Bernstein said it may be revised again before that. It is advisable to buy a score card for each production of the opera that you attend.

* * *

THE BERNSTEINS are spending the summer at the Carter farm in Lee. Mr. Bernstein has been running around like crazy with his conducting classes at Tanglewood, his conducting assignments and his preparation for "Tahiti." Mrs. Bernstein has been quietly sitting and gestating.

The couple first met at a party in New York in 1947 and were introduced by Claudio Arrau, [illegible] who appeared at Tanglewood last year. The usual lightning struck and they were engaged six months later. This lasted for a few months and was terminated by mutual agreement. They saw each other "casually" for the next three years and then decided all of a sudden to cut all this fooling around and get married. "Engagements are a horrible thing," said Mrs. Bernstein, "so we just got married."

It would be nice to report that everything runs 100 per cent smoothly in their marriage, but that is just not the case. Some pretty hard feelings are aroused by the running chess games in which the pair engage. Fortunes vary with the phases of the moon, said Mr. Bernstein, and the little woman is in a winning streak right now because "Jupiter is passing into the fourth house or something."

* * *

CHESS IS NOT the only passion that the Bernsteins have in common. There is, of course, music. Miss Montealegre being an accomplished pianist before she became an actress. There is also the theatre, horseback riding, reading and bullfighting. Both are real aficionados and took in many fights on their honeymoon in Mexico.

Miss Montealegre helps her [illegible] in his work more than [illegible] has had opportunity to help her. She solved a very ticklish problem in one of the settings for the "Tahiti" set at Tanglewood, and sings duos, in her "childish basso" as he puts it, for his operatic compositions.

She intends to return to television work in the fall when the baby is able to look out for itself and they are settled in their New York apartment. The Bernsteins don't like to watch television, don't own a television set and "don't intend to buy one." Mr. Bernstein has appeared on "Who Said That?" a couple of times, but the experience was frightful in each case. "They ran a kinescope of Toscanini conducting and cut out the sound track," said Mr. Bernstein. Then they asked me to identify the number."

"Did you?" asked a fascinated bystander.

"Of course not," scornfully replied Mr. Bernstein. "Toscanini was beating three. There are millions of numbers in which you beat three. "Ridiculous!"

* * *

AT THIS POINT a young dachshund named Henry took over the interview. Henry is a wonderful dog, a lovable dog, a fine dog, but he has one bad habit. He is rather indifferent to the sanitary facilities offered and uses the Bernstein lawn indiscriminately, without fear or favor.

Consequently, it is necessary to warn the unwary traveler who attempts to cross from the driveway to the chairs on the lawn. Talk was continually being interrupted while Mr. Bernstein leaped to his feet to bellow a frenzied warning to the guests who dropped in every few minutes.

Prize for the afternoon went to Seymour Lipkin, pianist, faculty member at Tanglewood and close friend of the Bernsteins, who upon being warned, performed the most fantastic ballet dance ever seen this side of Jacob's Pillow and then came a cropper just before he reached safe haven.

* * *

MR. BERNSTEIN said he intends to devote most of his future career to composing operas and music for the theatre. His only commitment for the coming year is a one-day-a-week stint at Brandeis University where he is director of the School of Creative Arts. "Just a plain old bourgeois next year," smugly smiled Mr. Bernstein as he stretched luxuriously. "No conducting, no concerts, no nothing." Mr. Bernstein is in a much better financial position today than when he didn't have any work some years ago so there is no occasion for alarm.

The vibrancy, vitality and personality of this couple can only be described by e equals mc squared. They sit you down and revolve around you in Kaleidoscopic patterns as telephones ring, Mr. Bernstein's secretary for the last nine years, Miss Helen Coates scoots in with papers, guests drop in, telegrams arrive and time slips by before you notice it. Despite all this, they have time to make you at home and make you feel they mean it. "Good-bye," they called, as the car pulled out. "Drop in again."

* * *

MIGHT just do that. First thing they do in the Bernstein family is thrust an ice-cold bottle of beer into your grimy little paw. That's manners.

BERNSTEINS AND FRIEND: Henry the dachshund shows how he feels about Mrs. Leonard Bernstein while the master of the house tactfully looks aside. (See "Lively Arts" at left.)

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE

JUL 20 1952

Koussevitzky Scores to Lenox Library

NEW YORK CITY — The Koussevitsky Music Foundation will mark Saturday, July 26, birthday of the late Serge Koussevitzky. by a program at the Lenox library, Lenox, Mass. At that time, the foundation will present a gift of scores, music, recordings and books on music to the Lenox library, which has co-operated in many ways with the Berkshire Music Center, the school established at Tanglewood by Dr. Koussevitzky.

The gift of the foundation will enlarge the music collection of the library for the use of the Berkshire Music Center students and of the community. The scores and recordings include many works on programs of festival concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra and works being performed by the student orchestra, opera department and chamber music groups. The birthday program will include chamber music played by members of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center.

As in previous years, the Koussevitzky Music foundation has made a grant to the Berkshire Music Center to aid scholarship students.

Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN

JUL 26 1952

Tanglewood Hears Monteux

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., July 26.—One of the nice things to look forward to, here at Tanglewood, is the appearance of Pierre Monteux as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony. He is scheduled to perform tonight and next Saturday evening.

There are some interesting curiosae connected with his association here. First, he is the one guest batonist, so far, not trained by the late Serge Koussevitzky—Leonard Bernstein and Eleazar de Carvalho being the two who are. Second, this orchestra is not new to him.

He was the regular leader of these most proper of all proper Bostonians between 1919 and 1924, and he also guested with the band during last season and on its recently concluded European tour.

Activity Everywhere.

There is more to the thing—tonight Mr. Monteux conducts the Stravinsky "Rite of Spring," a little item that was roundly booed when he introduced it in Paris 39 years ago.

I saw Mr. Monteux the other evening, at the opening concert of the symphonic season. Small, round and bustling, he drew considerable attention — unwittingly, of course—when he got up during the intermission to go visit with Charles Munch backstage.

Activity, activity, all over the place at Tanglewood. Students everywhere. Famous musicians everywhere. Groups of visitors just stand around and stare.

A Typical Day.

The students carry instruments, back and forth from practice sessions. One little woman, sitting comfortably under a tree, had her head sunk deep into a volume entitled "Structural Hearing." In another part of the grounds a group of students was laughing over comic books one was showing.

To give you an idea of what goes on here during a typical weekend, here is a sketchy schedule:

First, there is the public rehearsal this morning of the Boston Symphony. Admission is charged, the money going to the orchestra's pension fund.

Along about 1 p.m., there is an informal concert by the Tanglewood Study Group. At 8:15 tonight, of course, the second concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, with Mr. Monteux on the podium—Cimarosa Overture to "The Secret Marriage," Schubert Seventh Symphony, and the Stravinsky "Rite of Spring."

All Friends Invited.

Tomorrow morning, rather early, chamber music. At 3 p.m. there is the third Boston Symphony concert of the present series, with Mr. Munch conducting. Topping the day is the Composers' Forum at 8:15 p.m.

All who are Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to the various functions at the school (the shed concerts by the Boston, however, are all subscription events).

The place is pretty thoroughly organized by now. This is evident in the lack of uncertainty, the lack of guesswork in almost everything —from inculcating higher musical principles into young men and women, to the polished workings of the principal attractions, the concerts of the Boston Symphony itself.

And grand opera, you can be sure, isn't neglected here. Boris Goldovsky is tutoring young singers in the art.

BOSTON, MASS.
ADVERTISER

JUL 27 1952

Anniversary At Tanglewood

Series B of the Concerts in the Shed at the Berkshire Music Festival will start on Thursday night of this week, with Nicole Henriot as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. On Friday evening, "Tanglewood on Parade" will celebarte the 10th anniversary of the Berkshire Festival at Lenox.

On Saturday evening, Pierre Monteux will conduct an all-Wagner program, with Margaret Harshaw, Charles Kullman and James Pease as soloists. The concert on Sunday afternoon will consist of works of Beethoven, Debussy and Honegger.

TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD

'UL 6 1952

Chamber Music Series At Berkshire Center

Sponsored by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge foundation in the Library of Congress, four concerts of chamber music will be presented at the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Wednesday evenings in July.

The series will open on July 9 with a recital by the Bel Arte Trio, a string trio consisting of Ruth Posselt, Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes. The three musicians are members of the Berkshire Music center faculty.

On July 16 there will be a sonata recital by Janos Scholz, cello, and Miklos Schwalb, piano.

On July 23 the Berkshire woodwind ensemble will be held under the direction of Louis Speyer.

The final concert will be given by the Fine Arts quartet of the American Broadcasting Co. on July 30.

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD

JUL 25 1952

Symphony Honored At Tanglewood

LENOX, July 24 (AP)—Berkshire County tonight presented a framed testimony to the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the opening of the 15th Tanglewood festival season.

Pittsfield Mayor Robert T. Capeless presented the testimonial to Conductor Charles Munch before 8250 first nighters, 1150 more than attended the opening performance last year.

"Berkshire as well as Boston claims the world's greatest orchestra as its own," Capeless said, "though it has not before expressed its appreciation officially."

The festival will continue every Thursday and Saturday night and Sunday afternoon through Aug. 10.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST (Bx.-Home Ed.)

JUL 29 1952

Conducts

Bronx musician Barry Volkman, 21, 1065 Jerome Av., has been selected to conduct a program of Benjamin Britten's music at the Berkshire Music Festival at Lenox, Mass., this Friday night. He is a graduate of the College of Manhattan School of Music.

8—The Berkshire Evening Eagle, Tuesday, Aug. 5, 1952

The Lively Arts

By Milton R. Bass

LEONARD BERNSTEIN and Felicia Montealegre decided to do a double last August, and the act has been doing pretty well. Its most tangible result is due at the end of this month, but Miss Montealegre intends to deliver it solo, while Mr. Bernstein waits in the wings. Both will take the bows, however.

If he is a boy, he will be named Leonard; if he turns out to be a girl, she will be named Deborah or Nicci or Niki or Nikki or something else. "We really haven't decided yet." (This is a real first, a scoop as they say in the business, and New York papers will please copy.)

* * *

MISS MONTEALEGRE is as familiar to you as your television screen because she has been shot, stabbed and beaten up in nearly a hundred shows on various networks. Mr. Bernstein you all know because he was a counselor at Camp Onota in 1937. He's done a few things since then, but, from a local angle, this must be considered the pinnacle of his career.

On his way down, of course, he has become famous as a pianist, a conductor and a composer. It is as a composer that he holds his greatest ambitions, and his latest work, the opera "Trouble in Tahiti," will be performed at Tanglewood on Friday.

The opera was premiered at the Brandeis music festival in June, but Mr. Bernstein has made many revisions since then. "I was pressed for time," he said, "and the production was unfinished. There have been many lyric revisions and a whole new ending. Both endings were very sad, but the first was framed in hysteria while the present, or 'B' version, ends in resignation." NBC plans to do a TV production of it in the fall, and Mr. Bernstein said it may be revised again before that. It is advisable to buy a score card for each production of the opera that you attend.

* * *

THE BERNSTEINS are spending the summer at the Carter farm in Lee. Mr. Bernstein has been running around like crazy with his conducting classes at Tanglewood, his conducting assignments and his preparation for "Tahiti." Mrs. Bernstein has been quietly sitting and gestating.

The couple first met at a party in New York in 1947 and were introduced by Claudio Arrau, pianist who appeared at Tanglewood last year. The usual lightning struck and they were engaged six months later. This lasted for a few months and was terminated by mutual agreement. They saw each other "casually" for the next three years and then decided all of a sudden to cut all this fooling around and get married. "Engagements are a horrible thing," said Mrs. Bernstein; "so we just got married."

It would be nice to report that everything runs 100 per cent smoothly in their marriage, but that is just not the case. Some pretty hard feelings are aroused by the running chess games in which the pair engage. Fortunes vary with the phases of the moon, said Mr. Bernstein, and the little woman is in a winning streak right now because "Jupiter is passing into the fourth house or something."

* * *

CHESS IS NOT the only passion that the Bernsteins have in common. There is, of course, music, Miss Montealegre being an accomplished pianist before she became an actress. There is also the theatre, horseback riding, reading and bullfighting. Both are real aficionados and took in many fights on their honeymoon in Mexico.

Miss Montealegre helps her husband in his work more than he has had opportunity to help her. She solved a very ticklish problem in one of the settings for the "Tahiti" set at Tanglewood, and sings duos, in her "childish basso" as he puts it, for his operatic compositions.

She intends to return to television work in the fall when the baby is able to look out for itself and they are settled in their New York apartment. The Bernsteins don't like to watch television, don't own a television set and "don't intend to buy one." Mr. Bernstein has appeared on "Who Said That?" a couple of times, but the experience was frightful in each case. "They ran a kinescope of Toscanini conducting and cut out the sound track," said Mr. Bernstein. Then they asked me to identify the number."

"Did you?" asked a fascinated bystander.

"Of course not," scornfully replied Mr. Bernstein. "Toscanini was beating three. There are millions of numbers in which you beat three. "Ridiculous!"

* * *

AT THIS POINT a young dachshund named Henry took over the interview. Henry is a wonderful dog, a lovable dog, a fine dog, but he has one bad habit. He is rather indifferent to the sanitary facilities offered and uses the Bernstein lawn indiscriminately, without fear or favor.

Consequently, it is necessary to warn the unwary traveler who attempts to cross from the driveway to the chairs on the lawn. Talk was continually being interrupted while Mr. Bernstein leaped to his feet to bellow a frenzied warning to the guests who dropped in every few minutes.

Prize for the afternoon went to Seymour Lipkin, pianist, faculty member at Tanglewood and close friend of the Bernsteins, who upon being warned, performed the most fantastic ballet dance ever seen this side of Jacob's Pillow and then came a cropper just before he reached safe haven.

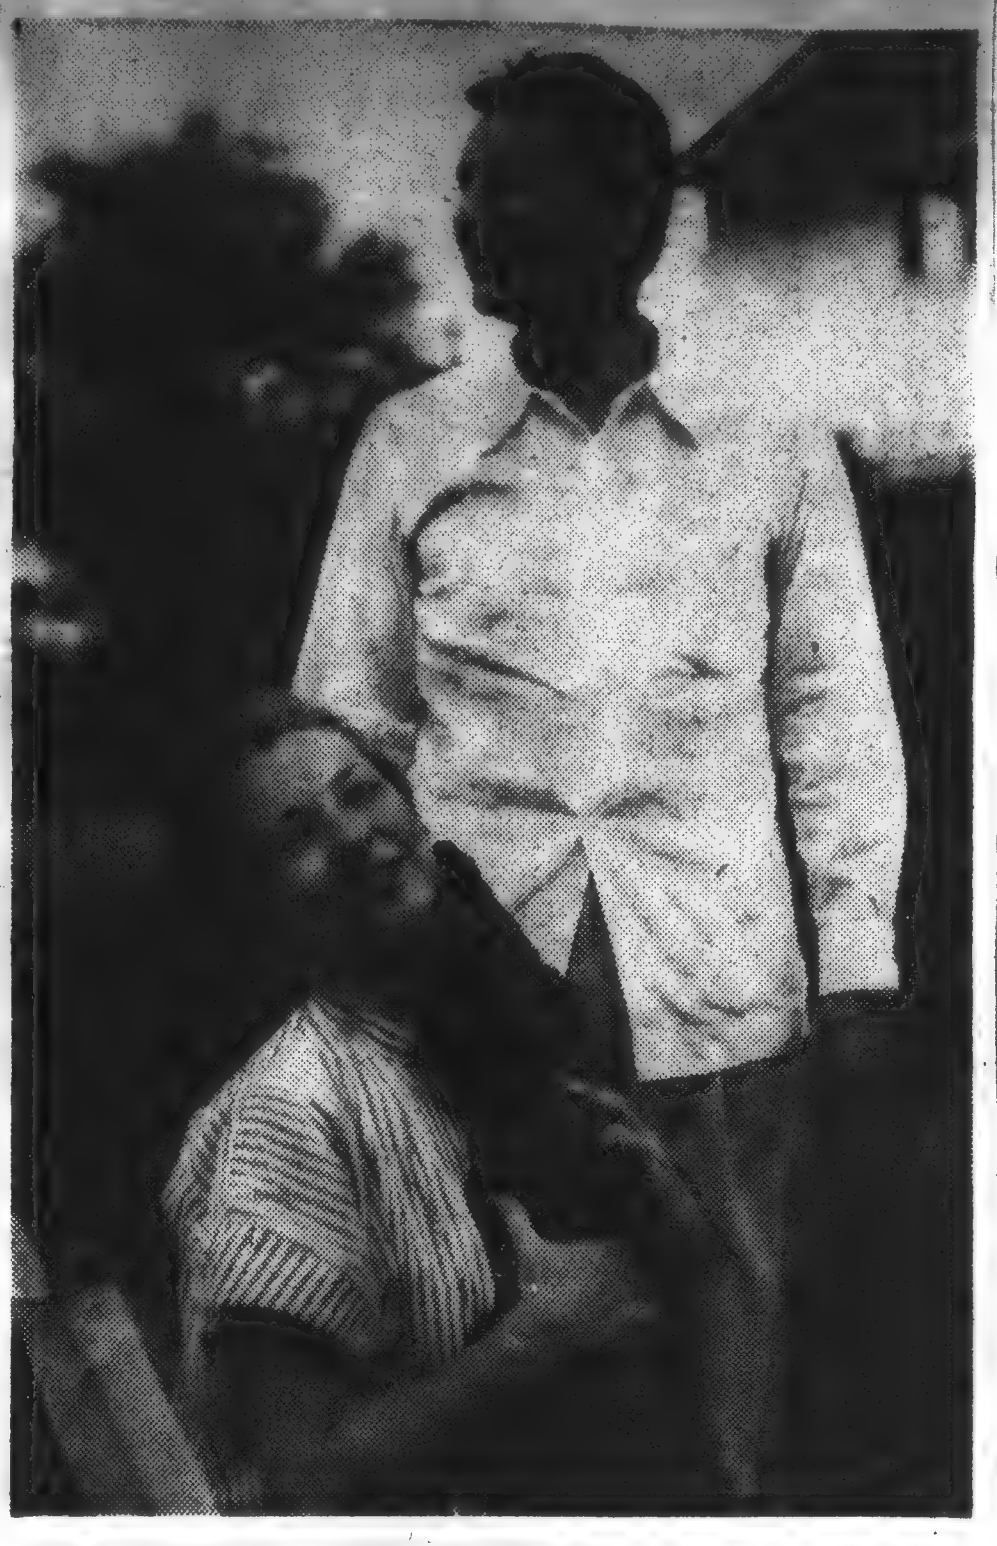
* * *

MR. BERNSTEIN said he intends to devote most of his future career to composing operas and music for the theatre. His only commitment for the coming year is a one-day-a-week stint at Brandeis University where he is director of the School of Creative Arts. "Just a plain old bourgeois next year," smugly smiled Mr. Bernstein as he stretched luxuriously. "No conducting, no concerts, no nothing." Mr. Bernstein is in a much better financial position today than when he didn't have any work some years ago so there is no occasion for alarm.

The vibrancy, vitality and personality of this couple can only be described by e equals mc squared. They sit you down and revolve around you in Kaleidoscopic patterns as telephones ring, Mr. Bernstein's secretary for the last nine years, Miss Helen Coates scoots in with papers, guests drop in, telegrams arrive and time slips by before you notice it. Despite all this, they have time to make you at home and make you feel they mean it. "Good-bye," they called, as the car pulled out. "Drop in again."

* * *

MIGHT just do that. First thing they do in the Bernstein family is thrust an ice-cold bottle of beer into your grimy little paw. That's manners.



BERNSTEINS AND FRIEND: Henry the dachshund shows how he feels about Mrs. Leonard Bernstein while the master of the house tactfully looks aside. (See "Lively Arts" at left.)

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
JUL 20 1952

Koussevitzky Scores to Lenox Library

NEW YORK CITY — The Koussevitsky Music Foundation will mark Saturday, July 26, birthday of the late Serge Koussevitzky, by a program at the Lenox library, Lenox, Mass. At that time, the foundation will present a gift of scores, music, recordings and books on music to the Lenox library, which has co-operated in many ways with the Berkshire Music Center, the school established at Tanglewood by Dr. Koussevitzky.

The gift of the foundation will enlarge the music collection of the library for the use of the Berkshire Music Center students and of the community. The scores and recordings include many works on programs of festival concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra and works being performed by the student orchestra, opera department and chamber music groups. The birthday program will include chamber music played by members of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center.

As in previous years, the Koussevitzky Music foundation has made a grant to the Berkshire Music Center to aid scholarship students.

■

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
JUL 26 1952

Tanglewood Hears Monteux

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., July 26.—One of the nice things to look forward to, here at Tanglewood, is the appearance of Pierre Monteux as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony. He is scheduled to perform tonight and next Saturday evening.

There are some interesting curiosae connected with his association here. First, he is the one guest batonist, so far, not trained by the late Serge Koussevitzky—Leonard Bernstein and Eleazar de Carvalho being the two who are. Second, this orchestra is not new to him.

He was the regular leader of these most proper of all proper Bostonians between 1919 and 1924, and he also guested with the band during last season and on its recently concluded European tour.

Activity Everywhere.

There is more to the thing—tonight Mr. Monteux conducts the Stravinsky "Rite of Spring," a little item that was roundly booed when he introduced it in Paris 39 years ago.

I saw Mr. Monteux the other evening, at the opening concert of the symphonic season. Small, round and bustling, he drew considerable attention — unwittingly, of course—when he got up during the intermission to go visit with Charles Munch backstage.

Activity, activity, all over the place at Tanglewood. Students everywhere. Famous musicians everywhere. Groups of visitors just stand around and stare.

A Typical Day.

The students carry instruments, back and forth from practice sessions. One little woman, sitting comfortably under a tree, had her head sunk deep into a volume entitled "Structural Hearing." In another part of the grounds a group of students was laughing over comic books one was showing.

To give you an idea of what goes on here during a typical weekend, here is a sketchy schedule:

First, there is the public rehearsal this morning of the Boston Symphony. Admission is charged, the money going to the orchestra's pension fund.

Along about 1 p.m., there is an informal concert by the Tanglewood Study Group. At 8:15 tonight, of course, the second concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, with Mr. Monteux on the podium—Cimarosa Overture to "The Secret Marriage," Schubert Seventh Symphony, and the Stravinsky "Rite of Spring."

All Friends Invited.

Tomorrow morning, rather early, chamber music. At 3 p.m. there is the third Boston Symphony concert of the present series, with Mr Munch conducting. Topping the day is the Composers' Forum at 8:15 p.m.

All who are Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to the various functions at the school (the shed concerts by the Boston, however, are all subscription events).

The place is pretty thoroughly organized by now. This is evident in the lack of uncertainty, the lack of guesswork in almost everything—from inculcating higher musical principles into young men and women, to the polished workings of the principal attractions, the concerts of the Boston Symphony itself.

And grand opera, you can be sure, isn't neglected here. Boris Goldovsky is tutoring young singers in the art.

BOSTON, MASS.
ADVERTISER
JUL 27 1952

Anniversary At Tanglewood

Series B of the Concerts in the Shed at the Berkshire Music Festival will start on Thursday night of this week, with Nicole Henriot as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. On Friday evening, "Tanglewood on Parade" will celebarte the 10th anniversary of the Berkshire Festival at Lenox.

On Saturday evening, Pierre Monteux will conduct an all-Wagner program, with Margaret Harshaw, Charles Kullman and James Pease as soloists. The concert on Sunday afternoon will consist of works of Beethoven, Debussy and Honegger.

TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD
JUL 6 1952

Chamber Music Series At Berkshire Center

Sponsored by the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge foundation in the Library of Congress, four concerts of chamber music will be presented at the Berkshire Music center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., on Wednesday evenings in July.

The series will open on July 9 with a recital by the Bel Arte Trio, a string trio consisting of Ruth Posselt, Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes. The three musicians are members of the Berkshire Music center faculty.

On July 16 there will be a sonata recital by Janos Scholz, cello, and Miklos Schwalb, piano.

On July 23 the Berkshire woodwind ensemble will be held under the direction of Louis Speyer.

The final concert will be given by the Fine Arts quartet of the American Broadcasting Co. on July 30.

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
JUL 25 1952

Symphony Honored At Tanglewood

LENOX, July 24 (AP)—Berkshire County tonight presented a framed testimony to the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the opening of the 15th Tanglewood festival season.

Pittsfield Mayor Robert T. Capeless presented the testimonial to Conductor Charles Munch before 8250 first nighters, 1150 more than attended the opening performance last year.

"Berkshire as well as Boston claims the world's greatest orchestra as its own," Capeless said, "though it has not before expressed its appreciation officially."

The festival will continue every Thursday and Saturday night and Sunday afternoon through Aug. 10.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST (Bx.-Home Ed.)
JUL 29 1952

Conducts

Bronx musician Barry Volkman, 21, 1665 Jerome Av., has been selected to conduct a program of Benjamin Britten's music at the Berkshire Music Festival at Lenox, Mass., this Friday night. He is a graduate of the College of Manhattan School of Music.

[62]

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES
JUL 24 1952

Dedication And Influence

By FREDERICK J. KOUNTZ

ONE OF THE wonders of travel for me has always been the amazing intermixture of interests that one comes upon among people of varying ways of life, nationalities, places of residence, and general habits.

On our trip this year we struck a colossal example. When we thought that it was about time to abandon Canada and get back int ur own country, we reentered at the northern tip of Lake Champlain and moved by slow degrees down into Vermont. In time we arrived in Woodstock where, for much too short a time, we were able to visit our oldest and closest neighbors, when they lived in Toledo, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Canaday. It so happened that there was in the vicinity the time another Canad y, Mr. Ward, a man who has had considerable to do with most phases of the development and manufacture of the renowned jeep. It was an extraordinary pleasure to see at close range the Ward Canaday house, which is a little north of Woodstock, and which is a magnificent restoration of an old tavern erected in its original form somewhere between 1750 and 1800.

* * *

THERE was time to talk about many things in addition to the house, jeeps included. But two weeks, especially when they are vacation weeks, pass quickly. And, unfortunately, the dates of the Berkshire Festival concerts had not been set with a view to our sole convenience. We dropped gently down into Massachusetts and on to Lenox where we heard the Saturday and Sunday concerts.

It was a stroke of sheer good fortune that we drove back up into Vermont again to hear a recital played by Rudolf Serkin and Hermann Busch. We had not planned the move in advance; indeed we were not sure even of the day of the recital that there was time enough for us to hear any of it. But hear it we did, all of it, and probably never was such a fast drive so richly rewarded.

I talked to Mr. Serkin generally and at some length after the recital. And it was then that the colossal example came to light. It seems that one of Mr. Serkin's most prized possessions is a jeep which was presented to him by the Philadelphia Orchestra. When he is not concerned with the active study and practice of music he is a Vermont farmer. And the jeep, he suggested, was a tremendous aid in his farming. Ward Canaday and Rudolf Serkin are in many respects as different as night and day. It is of course not impossible or unexpected that men of much widely differing personalities, interests, and backgrounds should have a common denominator somewhere along the line. But that it should be the jeep is the last thing that I, at least, would ever expect. And that the particular jeep should be by courtesy of the Philadelphia Orchestra, which one would scarcely associate in any manner with the automotive industry, is even more involved.

Such strange likes among unlikes one encounters, if one so desires, in almost any trip. And more of Rudolf Serkin shortly.

When we were entering the hall at the Saturday night ~~Berkshire Festival~~ concert we were hailed by a soft voice that we could not place. It came, we discovered, from Madame Koussevitzky whom neither my wife nor I had seen in several years. There was little time to talk before the beginning of the concert but at her suggestion we promised to call upon her at her home the following morning.

In the review which I wrote of the concert I spoke of the magnificent group of players that comprised the chamber orchestra which is active during the first three weeks of the concerts. Because I intended to speak of it at a later date, I did not in the review indicate that this potentially superb small orchestra was frequently an harassed group because of the manner of conducting which was visited upon it. As often as not it appeared to be playing in a direction that was entirely opposed to its own opinion of the music and the way it should be played. As a result there was over all an air of unneeded urgency, an absence of ease and serenity, conditions which, a few years ago, were never apparent in these concerts.

But we heard on Sunday morning a concert of chamber music played by students which was a wonderful revelation of the enlarging musical stature of the young people who come for a summer's study.

* * *

WE COULD recall the first summer of the school; the handsome youngsters who seemed more concerned with a holiday than with the study of music. And we could remember, too that Koussevitzky's unvarying desires and intense efforts were in the direction of making the resources of the school available to all young musicians whether they were able to pay the tuition or not.

We drove to "Seranak," their house which Madame Koussevitzky has kept exactly as it was when her husband was alive. And we talked to her of the growth of the school. She told us that this year all of the students of composition and the orchestral instruments are the recipients of scholarships; that in the forseeable future it will be possible to award scholarships to all the students in the school entirely on the basis of competence and seriousness of purpose. And one was aware as she talked of a dedication in her to carry on in the spirit of her husband's wishes. Indeed one could not escape the impression that among all these seriously inclined young people there was a spirit of dedication to music, exactly what Koussevitzky had worked relentlessly to obtain.

* * *

BEFORE we took our leave of her Madame Koussevitzky drove with us to the grave of her husband. It was remarkably like the man; no marker, only a wooden bench and a row of white lilies; and above it a towering oak, simple in its lines but immense in its power and sweep. So was the man whose grave it shades; simple in his tastes but relentless and powerful in his desire to make music not the entertainment of the privileged but the art and the comfort and consolation of all regardless of the extent of their material holdings. And one was certain that, though Koussevitzky will not again conduct the Boston Orchestra, though this school which was really the crowning work of his life will not again be blessed with his ministrations of love, it will be decades before his guiding spirit, his total dedication become merely matters of memory. Koussevitzky, the man, is no more. But his unflagging spirit still lives and guides the school which was uniquely his. Very few musicians have presented a greater gift to the art of music.

I do not know that Rudolf Serkin has in mind the founding of a permanent music school of his own at Marlboro, Vermont. As things stand presently his is the guidance of the summer concerts the proceeds of which are entirely devoted to scholarships ~~in the~~ existing school.

But there is too about Mr. Serkin this spirit of dedication. He is a simple, humble man. And only rarely does one experience the like of his powers of expression through music or anything which even faintly touches the extent of his immersion in the art to which he had dedicated his life.

It was in all a deeply moving and, in a particular manner, a comforting kind of day. The art of music of course we shall have always with us. But one wonders on occasion if it is possible that it can escape some permanent disfiguration considering the endless cuttings and maimings to which so many bloated mediocrities subject it. But in the presence of real dedication such fears are dissolved. It is not only the art that will live but, in the person of these dedicated spirits, its expression as well.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
JUL 25 1952

Tribute to Orchestra

Pittsfield Mayor Claims Boston Symphony for Berkshire

Lenox, Mass.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra has a framed testimonial from Berkshire county claiming "the world's greatest orchestra as its own."

Pittsfield Mayor Robert T. Capeless presented the testimonial to conductor Charles Munch before 8250 persons last night at the opening of the 15th Tanglewood festival season.

"Berkshire as well as Boston claims the world's greatest orchestra as its own though it has not before expressed its appreciation officially," Capeless said.

The festival will continue every Thursday and Saturday night and Sunday afternoon through Aug. 10.

14—The Berkshire Evening Eagle, Thursday, Aug. 7, 1952

The Lively Arts

By Milton R. Bass

THERE IS NO DOUBT that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is the most famous symphony orchestra in the world; that it has the longest season, 47 weeks; that it has the biggest budget, $1,500,000; and that it is absolutely the best there is in its field. There is no doubt about any of these things. And there is no doubt that the gentleman who manages the orchestra and all its activities is quite a person in his own right.

George Judd took a job in 1914 as secretary to Henry Lee Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony. In 1915 he moved over as secretary to the manager of the orchestra and in 1918 he became assistant manager. He held this post until 1936 when he took over the whole shebang, and it is under his management that the orchestra has seen its most glorious days.

* * *

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY is unique among orchestras of its type. Besides its exceptionally long season and large budget, it is the only orchestra in the world that runs a music festival like Tanglewood and the only one that conducts a school. Its personnel, whose salaries range from $5000 to $15,000 a year for the regular orchestra work alone, enjoy the highest prestige in the field and are much sought after as teachers and for concert work. Only 20 per cent of the orchestra get the minimum salary and this is supplemented by earnings from recordings, broadcasts and overtime, all of which are over and above the work in the regular contract.

George E. Judd

Mr. Judd runs this large corporation, a corporation that shifts its scene of operations with the winds. He has to supervise the work of his large staff, herd the more than 100 musicians around on the tours and see that they are kept happy, worry about one million and one details and at the same time give the impression that everything is under control.

* * *

ON TOP of his regular orchestra duties, Mr. Judd has to concern himself with the students who come to Tanglewood each year in quest of learning and opportunity. It is obvious from the way in which he conducts a visitor around the grounds and through the classrooms of Tanglewood that Mr. Judd is vitally interested in these young musicians, their facilities and opportunities while at Tanglewood and their futures when they leave at the end of the session. The proof of this is in the number of students who have moved up to chairs in the greatest symphony orchestra in the world.

"How does it feel to be responsible for 100 temperamental musicians?" Mr. Judd was asked. "To move them around in this country, and on a European tour, and see that all their little desires are satisfied?"

"It all depends on what you mean by temperamental," said Mr. Judd. "There is a difference between temperament and temperamental. I feel that if anybody is going to be interesting at a concert for two hours, he is not going to be uninteresting for the other 22 hours that go to make up the day."

* * *

"IT IS MY business to have circumstances the way an artist wants it so that he can do his work best. If you accept that view, 90 per cent of what you call temperament goes out the window."

Mr. Judd's first time out of Boston with an artist was in 1915 when he came to Pittsfield with Paderewski for a concert. "He wasn't the easiest person in the world to get along with in the first place," Mr. Judd commented mildly. "And then the train was late and we had to wait on the freezing platform for much too long a time. The hall wasn't dark enough for him and a dozen other things occurred that almost blew up the whole affair. But Paderewski was finally satisfied and the concert went off without a hitch. If he wanted things in a certain way and felt he could play best only when things were that way," concluded Mr. Judd, "then that's the way they had to be."

"And the concert was well worth it," he added.

* * *

WHEN YOU SIT and listen to the incomparable music played by the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood, or take in the programs by the students and marvel at the music they can produce in their few weeks of rehearsal together, you can thank Mr. Judd for a good deal of the pleasure.

These people are looked after in a way that guarantees they will be in a mood to do their best work. Even the 10 per cent who are temperamental, rather than having plain old temperament, seem to be quite content in their bucolic retreat. At least they play that way.

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
JUL [illegible]

Brahms Music At Tanglewood

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 25—As the Berkshire Festival expanded into its symphonic weekends, the full Boston Symphony assembled last night for the first time since its European tour.

The occasion called forth a special welcome from officials of Berkshire County. The concert drew an audience of 8,250 people. The weather was perfect.

In token of appreciation of the B. S. O.'s contribution to community life in the Berkshires each Summer, Mayor Robert T. Capeless of Pittsfield presented Charles Munch, musical director of the orchestra, a testimonial on behalf of the county. A product of the county, the framed certificate represented the work of local artists, designers, and firms.

Only two numbers comprised the program, albeit two of the great masterpieces of orchestral literature: Beethoven's "Eroica" and Brahms' First Symphony. It was a curious combination, one to put conductor and orchestra on the spot. The performances revealed the strength of both as well as a problem or two.

The power of Beethoven shone through the energy and dramatic tension of Munch's conducting. Some erratic changes of tempo—hurried passages here and lingering phrases there — without apparent justification robbed the performance of a sense of completeness. Nor did the orchestra play with all the polish it might have had.

The Brahms fared better, perhaps by reason of sonorities and the Bostonians' virtuosity in creating them. What Munch asked of them, they performed wonderfully. His impulsive jumping of tempo and his striving for accent, however, threw the performance as a whole out of balance no matter how effective the sound.

It could be that Munch is coming to rely too much on effect for effect's sake. Driving the orchestra suggests that tendency. He appears to be swept away by the surge of the music rather than to hold true to its course.

The results can raise the blood-pressure, but they subordinate the music to the effectiveness of performance. There was plenty of the latter last night.

This Clipping From
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

[illegible]

6,000 Hail Opening At Tanglewood

Munch Opens Music Symphony Series With Beethoven And Brahm

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., [illegible] (Special) You just have [illegible] to those things.

Last night it was hotter than a [illegible] swamp. Tonight, in Tanglewood, it was so cool that people were wondering what ever became of that old buffalo robe [illegible] used to keep in the [illegible].

That's New England weather for you: change, change, change:

Tonight, too, Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened the major concert series at the Berkshire Music Festival. They played Beethoven's Third and Brahms's First Symphonies. And that's New England music for you — the same yesterday, today and tomorrow.

Yet there was no lack of customers here this evening, as the [illegible]teenth Tanglewood season got under way. Six thousand people [illegible] up from $6.50 to $2.50 each to sit in Elie Saarinen's big music shed, and 2,200 more paid $2 per, for the privilege of lying on the lawn and hugging the good earth, or their neighbor.

Orchestra Re-Balanced

Mr. Munch and the orchestra made a solid, able evening of it, without turning off anything especially striking. Mr. Munch has now completed re-balancing and re-integrating the orchestra. To the late great doctor, every instrument every choir was a separate element, to exploit the music and the performance bar by bar. Mr. Munch regards the orchestra as an entity, and he makes music to match. It is lucid and all of a piece, but it seldom reaches the kind of musical or performance virtuosity that was the special product of Serge Koussevitzky's flairing genius.

Mr. Munch's approach to the "Eroica" Symphony did not seem to have any special point of view or style, other than that it bordered the lyrical more often than the dramatic. There were some well grown, well harvested crescendi throughout his reading, but they were the emphases of volume rather than emotion. In fact, the conductor presented Beethoven as the well-tempered designer, rather than as the full-hearted inspirer of music.

Brahms High Spot

The Brahms was the higher spot of the evening. It was bright, tender, sensitive as Mr. Munch set it out, and despite the strength of its climaxes, a gently reared and delicately nurtured work. It was not the Olympian business, in rich, thick impasto, which has so often echoed Tanglewood as Dr. Koussevitzky created it. But it was warm and touching, transparent and poetic, a new kind of Brahmsian diet and delight for Tanglewood audiences.

For the most part, the orchestra played with the brilliance that had audiences standing in their seats and punching in their top hats in Europe earlier this summer. In fact, it was the first concert played by the entire corps of musicians since their return. They still excel, however—under Mr Munch's baton—in the big, full speed ahead passages and emotions. They have yet to play with poise in the ultra-slow sections which the conductor likes to tuck in here and throughout a symphony. These always rattle them a little, and they are inclined to break ranks and forge ahead on their own. Yet it was good, satisfying performance, full of zing and zest, and promises a summer of roses and wine here at the Berkshire Music Festival.

On behalf of Berkshire County, Mayor Robert Capeless of Pittsfield welcomed Mr. Munch and the orchestra back to their summer home, and presented them a duly engrossed screed to mark the occasion. T.H.P.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 28 1952

Monteux, Munch Conduct At the Berkshire Festival

Former Draws Long and Enthusiastic Applause for His Handling of Stravinsky's 'Rite of Spring;' Festival Chorus and Orchestra Heard to Excellent Advantage Yesterday Afternoon

By W. HARLEY RUDKIN

Week end audiences at Tanglewood had an opportunity to hear two of the world's noted conductors, with Pierre Monteux on the podium for the Saturday evening concert, and Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony yesterday afternoon.

For many in the large and enthusiastic audience Saturday night, Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring," which closed the program, was the highlight of a distinguished occasion, just as it must have been a personal triumph for Mr. Monteux, who is one individual, at least, who has lived to see the times catch up with his own musical appreciation and versatility.

CHARLES MUNCH

The Stravinsky allegory, conducted at its world premiere in Paris by Mr. Monteux nearly 40 years ago, was then greeted by boos and catcalls, but a new generation of music lovers has grown up since, and the clamor and dissonances which weave their own personal pattern through the music, and sometimes seem to dominate it entirely, no longer fail upon unappreciative ears.

Change of Pace

In marked contrast to the Stravinsky, Mr. Monteux, a meticulous technician, gave a deft and easy reading to the overture from Cimarosa's "Secret Marriage," to open his program, and followed that with the melodic Symphony No. 7 in C Major by Schubert. At the close of the concert, the Paris conductor received an ovation which was certainly his just reward.

Yesterday afternoon marked the closing of the first three concerts in the big shed, with Charles Munch and the orchestra offering a program designed to appeal to every classical taste. It opened with a segment of Caesar Franck's oratorio, "The Redemption," to which the conductor brought all the requisites of devout exultance. Quite in contrast was the second offering, Bizet's Symphony in C Major, written when the composer was very young, and which this reporter does not recall having heard previously.

As is often the case in any youthful work of art, whether it be writing, painting, or composing, there is apt to be a direct reflection of certain definite influences. That is not to say that the early Bizet symphony is a carbon copy of the styles of other composers, but the suggestion is there. Most likely, Mr. Munch brought out all the music had to offer, and the result was definitely pleasing to the crowd which braved the threat of summer storms to fill the big shed, and dot the lawn outside.

Luigi Dallapiccola, who is on the Tanglewood faculty this summer, must have been gratified by the treatment accorded his "Three Prisoners' Songs," with the orchestra combining its talents with the excellent Festival Chorus. These are hardly "songs" in the sense that they follow any direct melodic line, but they have an appeal which we believe would grow upon continued acquaintance.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 24 1952

Special Program Is Scheduled For Berkshire Music Center

N. E. District of National Federation of Music Clubs to Meet Aug. 1 at Lenox

Reminiscent of the July day in 1948 when the Little Red House at Tanglewood, Lenox, was presented to Berkshire Music Center, will be the ce[illegible] on the Music Center grounds on Aug. 1 when the two practice studios in the building are dedicated respectively to the late Anne M. Gannett of Portland, Me., and the late Robert W. Roberts of St. Petersburg, Fla. Mrs. Ada Holding Miller of Providence, R. I., president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, will officiate at the dedication, which is an interlude in an all-day meeting of the New England District of the National Federation of Music Clubs in Lenox, which large delegations from all the New England states will attend. Mrs. Roger C. Williams of Portland and Mrs. Robert W. Roberts will be guests.

Mrs. Gannett is being honored in this way because she was president of the National Federation of Music Clubs when the project of rebuilding the Little Red House, former home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, was initiated, and because she remained Little Red House chairman for the federation until her death in May, 1951. Mr. Roberts, husband of a member of the national board of directors, cleared off the last few thousands of indebtedness on the property. In recognition of these contributions, the two practice studios, providing space for 36 students each, will be marked with handsome plaques bearing these names.

District Session

Mrs. Willis J. Lyman of Stamford, Conn., president of the New England district, is arranging the meeting of which the dedication is a part. The program will open at 10 a. m. in Sedgwick Hall, Lenox Library, with Mrs. Lyman presiding. Mrs. Lyman, Mrs. Frederick R. Fish of Fairfield, Conn., secretary-treasurer of the district, and the six state presidents will report. They are: Mrs. George Graham Hubbard, West Haven, Conn.; Mrs. Edward J. Colgan, Waterville, Me.; Miss Mabel Parkes Friswell, Needham, Norman Leavitt, North Hampton, N. H.; Miss Gertrude P. Caulfield, Providence, R. I., and Mrs. Howard V. Geno, Proctor, Vt.

At 1 p. m., a cafeteria luncheon will be served on Berkshire Music Center grounds, followed at 2.30 by dedication of the studios. At 3.15, a concert will be given at the Red Barn featuring Claudette Sorel, the National Federation of Music Clubs 1951 young artist piano winner; Warren Locke, baritone, a veteran of World War II, who was a protege of Mrs. Gannett, and a chamber music quintet, of which John Cox, violist, of Los Angeles, Cal., who has just been awarded an Anne M. Gannett scholarship, is a member. These scholarships are presented to veterans whose musical careers were interrupted by the war.

Concert Program

Miss Sorel, who has concertized widely and appeared as soloist with many orchestras, will present a Chopin sonata. The quintet, whose members include, in addition to Mr. Cox, Serge Blanc and Joan Szydlowski, violinists, and Gertrude Shaw and Aileen Zurbrugg, 'cellists, will play the Schubert Quintet in C major, Opus 163. Included in Mr. Locke's group will be the premiere performance of a song entitled "My Home," which was written by Peggy Stuart and Joseph Coolidge. This was inspired by Miss Stuart's wartime experience as director of a housing bureau for service men. She is a New Englander by birth, a direct descendant of the Scottish Clan of Stuart, and has composed since she was nine, writing ballets and works for full orchestra as well as songs. Her collaborator, Mr. Coolidge, who wrote the words, is a veteran of World War II and won many decorations, including the Purple Heart, the Bronze Star with V, and the Croix de Guerre with Gold Star.

Mr. Locke has appeared on NBC network, in recital throughout New England, four times at the Gardner Museum, Boston, and as soloist with the Bangor (Me.) Symphony Orchestra.

In honor of the presence of a delegation from the National Federation of Music Clubs in Lenox Aug. 1, the directors of Berkshire Music Festival have scheduled the season's gala "Tanglewood on Parade" for that night. Former students at Tanglewood, including the noted conductor, Leonard Bernstein; Jacob Krahlmalnick, concertmaster of the Philadelphia Orchestra, and Mildred Miller of the Metropolitan Opera Association, will be among the featured guests.

This Clipping From
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

JUL 21 1952

Monteux Ends with Music of His 'Own' Time

BY SEYMOUR RAVEN

Pierre Monteux wound up his 12th Ravinia engagement over the week-end. Each time the conductor came out he was greeted with extra long applause, and as he finished each composition the audience response again was vigorous and lasting.

The two programs Mr. Monteux fashioned for the Chicago Symphony orchestra gravitated toward the years 1900-1910. From these productive years Mr. Monteux yesterday afternoon presented Vaughan Williams' Fantasia on a Theme of Thomas Tallis, Ravel's "Alborada del Gracioso," and Stravinsky's "Firebird" Suite. Saturday night he gave Ravel's two concert suites from "Daphnis et Chloe."

◆

In a sense, this was music from Mr. Monteux's own time—not that the sturdy old conductor isn't of the present also, but because around 1910 he was an active force in the introduction of much important literature. It was Monteux who directed the first "Daphnis et Chloe" in the original, as a ballet under the seal of Diaghilev. He conducted Stravinsky also, if not "Firebird," then "Rite of Spring" and "Petrouchka" in first performances. You can see what is meant by the conductor's "own" time.

There were older influences in these programs, too — Wagner's overture to "The Flying Dutchman" and Berlioz's "Harold in Italy" Saturday and Beethoven's Second Symphony and Wagner's "Rienzi" overture yesterday. The Berlioz was the peak of the two concerts because Milton Preves did a familiarly expert job with the solo viola duets, because the orchestra gave the conductor its crackling best, and finally because the weather permitted top notch playing Saturday night, as yesterday afternoon it did not.

◆

It is Berlioz who still is begging for a grand revival hereabouts. You have to see how new listeners react to the stimulus of Berlioz to sense what excitement could be created by programming of other works than the usual "Harold in Italy," "Fantastic Symphony," and a few others. The Berkshire festival at Tanglewood already is on the move with Berlioz's Requiem, scheduled for Aug. 10. Monteux, by the way, conducts at Tanglewood July 26 and Aug. 2.

Ravinia's stage is probably too small for the Requiem, but remember it is still the "temporary" stage, connected to the permanent pavilion. Shall we do some more building? Shall we have a real festival one of these years, instead of a concert series using the label "festival?" Or how about some more festive enterprise within present physical limitations?

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

JUL 27 1952

Music Notes:

Tanglewood 'Parade' Set For Friday

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

The high point of each season's "Tanglewood" Music Festival is the pageant, "Tanglewood on Parade" which occurs next Friday on the spacious grounds near Lenox, Mass. Every branch of the Music Center will be represented during the program which starts at 6 and continues until 11 p. m.

Friday's program will include the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a movement from Lukas Foss' "The Prairie; Poem" for violin and orchestra with Jacob Krachmalnick, concert master of the Philadelphia Orchestra as soloist; the Mendelssohn Piano Concerto in G-minor, played by Seymour Lipkin and conducted by Lukas Foss; the last act of, "Carmen" by the members of the opera school with the solo roles and acted by Mildred Miller, soprano; David Lloyd, tenor, and James Pease, baritone, with Leonard Bernstein as conductor.

PICNIC SUPPER

In addition, there will be a lawn party, picnic supper, waltzing on the lawn and door prizes. This is one day in the year when music lovers may be a part of the activities which constitute the greatest festival of music in America. Prices range from $2.50 for the unreserved section to $5 for the box seats, on sale at the Tanglewood box office at the entrance to the grounds.

Series B by the Boston Symphony Orchestra begins Thursday night, at 8:15 o'clock, conducted by Charles Munch, and will include works by Faure, Ravel and the Brahms Symphony, No. 4. Saturday night's offering will be an all-Wagner program, with Margaret Harshaw, soprano; Charles Kullman, tenor and James Pease, as bass, conducted by Pierre Monteux.

The Sunday afternoon concert, conducted by Charles Munch will include the "Egmont" Overture and Symphony, No. 8 by Beethoven; Debussy's "Iberia" and Honegger's "Dance of Death" with chorus.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 25 1952

MUNCH LAUNCHES TANGLEWOOD FETE

Conducts Boston Symphony in Berkshire Festival Program —Orchestra Is Honored

By OLIN DOWNES

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., July 24—Returning from its phenomenally successful spring tour of Europe, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conductor, gave the opening concert of its Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival tonight in the Music Shed at Tanglewood.

The occasion had a special glamour and festivity. The orchestra, as the writer can testify, was not less on the qui vive than when it first astonished Paris, under Mr. Munch's baton, on May 6. That, too, was an occasion to remember, when one of the most brilliant audiences of years in the French capital was overwhelmed by the style, technical precision and tonal beauty of the famous band.

In a very different environment, one certainly not less beautiful and conducive to the thrill of great music, the Berkshire audience of 8,250 listened tonight to the same orchestra and the same conductor that had set the tongues of aristic Paris wagging overseas.

Special Scroll Presented

There were special ceremonies of welcome. A triumphal arch of greenery has been designed and placed over the gate of the entrance to the grounds by volunteers of Berkshire County. Before the performances of the orchestra, Mayor Robert T. Capeless of Pittsfield was presented to the audience by Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's board of trustees.

Mayor Capeless tendered Mr. Munch a scroll of welcome, handsomely bound and tooled, signed and sealed by the Berkshire County Commissioners.

It said, in part, that the people of Berkshire County saluted the Boston Symphony after its international triumphs; that "as friends and neighbors, we shared the delight, though at a distance, and the unparalleled adulation which greeted this peerless band of musicians on its first tour abroad"; that "this orchestra was a chosen democratic instrument to sound the notes of freedom in an embattled continent," and that "we rejoice that this great ensemble returns to us at Tanglewood to enrich our lives and to glorify in its majestic fashion our beautiful Berkshire hills."

The signers were J. Joseph McCabe, John Henderson and John F. Shea. The document bore the date of the occasion, "Presented at Tanglewood, July 24, 1952."

The two conductors to be heard here, present and past musical directors of the Boston Symphony, directed the opening concerts of the European tour, which it was invited to make by the Congress of Cultural Freedom as the representative of America in the musical field. Their appearances, exactly as in Paris, will be two nights apart.

This evening Mr. Munch selected for his program simply two great masterpieces, the "Eroica" of Beethoven, and the C Minor Symphony of Brahms. This is a different program than that of the Paris opening.

But Pierre Monteux, on Saturday night, will end his concert with Stravinsky's "Sacre du Printemps," the performance of which, in the Champs-Elysees Theatre, under his baton, created a riot in Paris in 1913; the repetition of which, with the Boston Symphony, in the same theatre, on May 8, was acclaimed as few orchestral performances the writer ever witnessed.

Mr. Monteux could not have brought back with him a more significant work to interpret for the Berkshire audiences than this one. Moreover, the "Sacre" will be one of the highlights of a series of programs that lean heavily to the conservative side.

BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE

JUL 20 1952

Berkshire Festival--

The Major Berkshire Festival Begins Thursday in Music Shed

SUSAN YAGER stars in "The Firefly" which the South Shore usic Circus presents in Cohasset s week.

The major portion of the Berkshire Festival will begin Thursday evening in the Music Shed at Tanglewood in Lenox. This concert will be the first in which Charles Munch has conducted the full numbers of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since they returned from their triumphal tour of Europe. Accordingly there will be appropriate festivities on the part of Berkshire County officials. Mayor Robert T. Capeless of Pittsfield will present to Mr. Munch a resolution of welcome and appreciation.

This concert will bring the "Eroica" Symphony of Beethoven and the First Symphony of Brahms.

The series of concerts in the Theatre—Concert Hall by small orchestra will be concluded this afternoon at 3, when Mr. Munch will conduct two symphonies of Haydn, No. 99 in E-flat, and No. 86, in D major, and the little Mass in G major by Schubert.

At the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's Summer school concerts will take place almost every day. Aaron Copland will conduct the student orchestra Friday evening in excerpts from his ballet, "Billy the Kid," and Hugh Ross will lead orchestra and chorus in Orgad's "Cantata." Lorin Maazel will conduct Barber's Violin Concerto.

Under Boris Goldovsky, the opera department will stage an evening of one-act operas Tuesday, the choral department will present a song recital Tuesday afternoon at 4:30, and Wednesday the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, will offer the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble. Chamber music will be played Sunday mornings at 10 and composers' forums will be held Sunday evenings at 8:15.

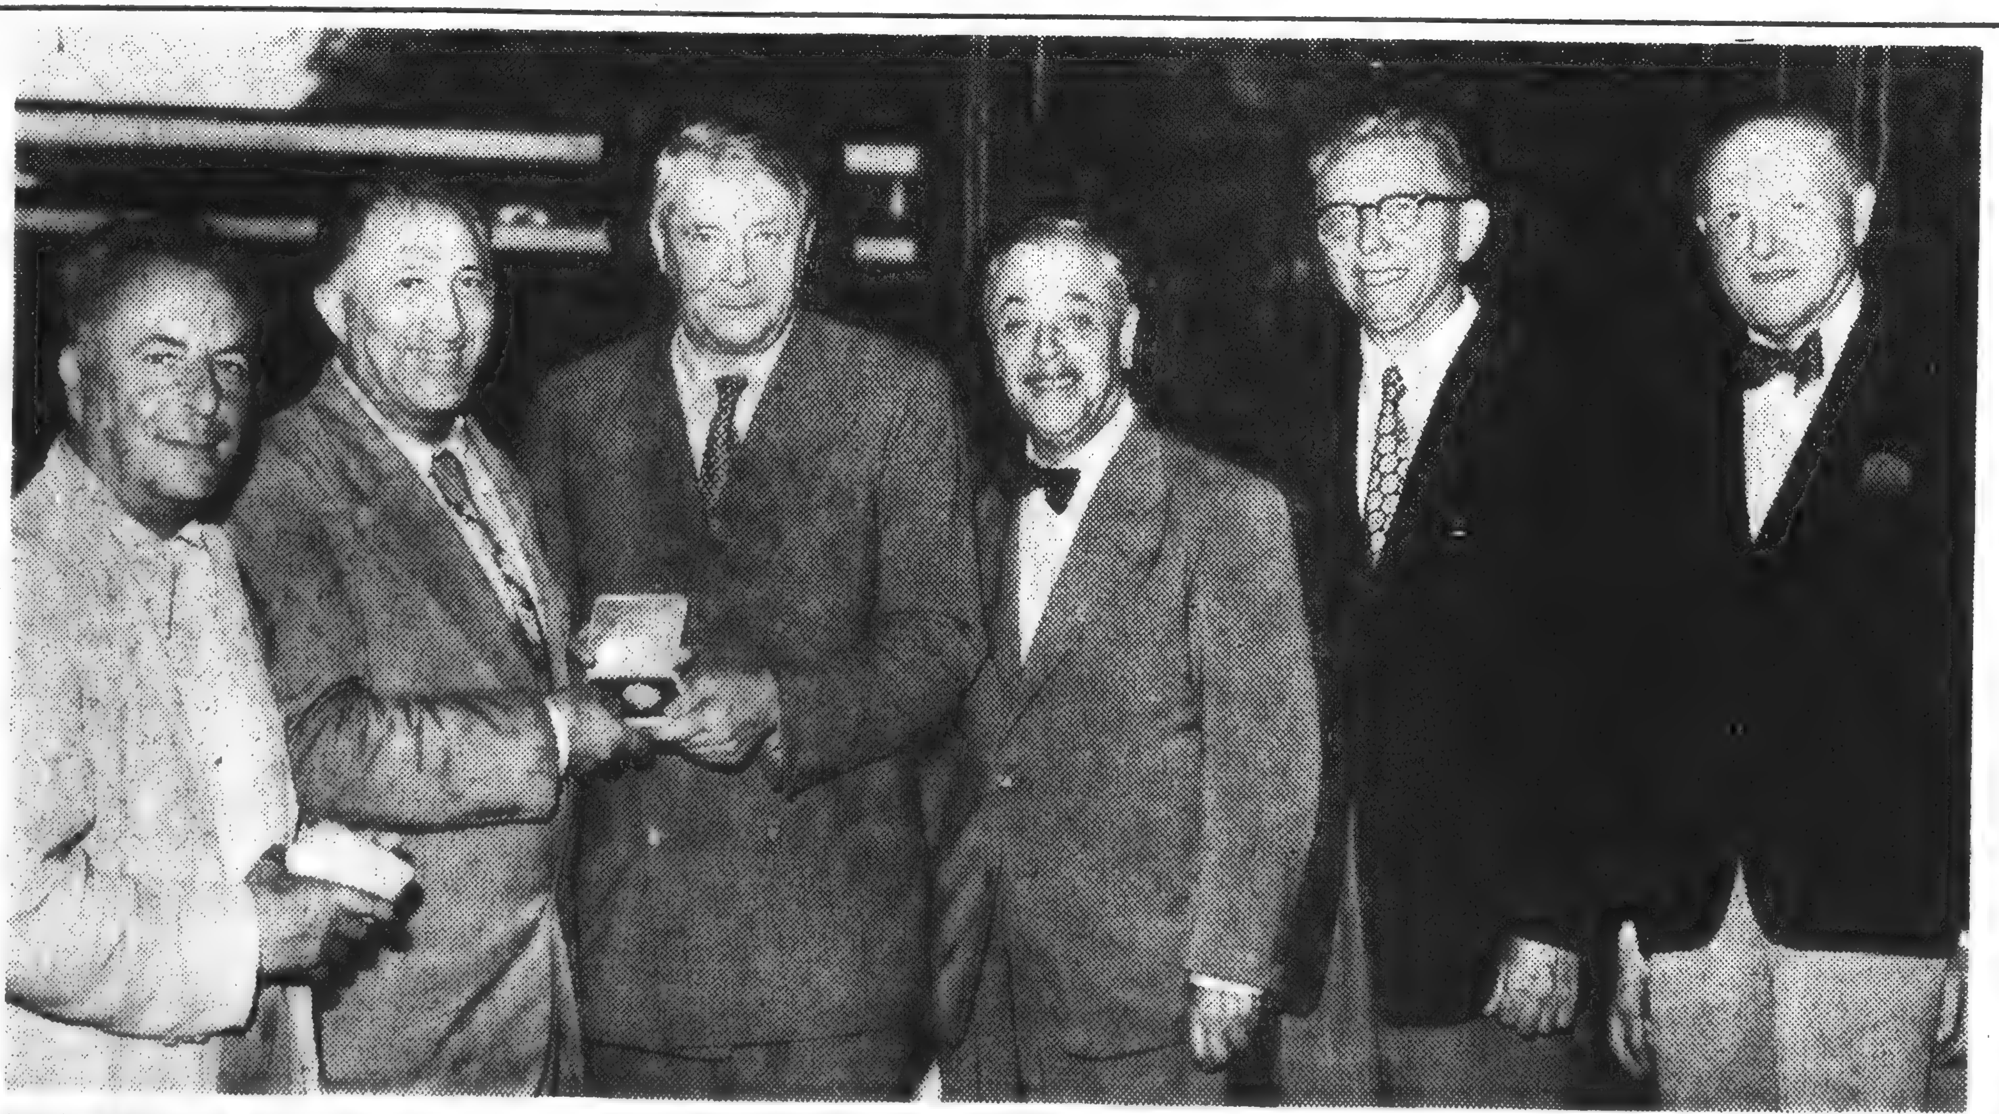
To all school events Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited. They may join by contributing to the support of the school.

The detailed programs for the remainder of the first week-end of concerts in the Music Shed are as follows:

Saturday at 8:15, Pierre Monteux conducting. Cimarosa, Overture to "The Secret Marriage"; Schubert, Symphony No. 7, in C major; Stravinsky, "The Rite of Spring."

Sunday, July 27, at 3, Charles Munch conducting. Franck, Symphonic Piece from "Redemption"; Bizet, Symphony in C major; Luigi Dallapiccola, "Three Prisoners' Songs" (chorus conducted by Hugh Ross); Ravel, "Daphnis and Chloe" Suites Nos. 1 and 2 (with chorus).

Pittsfield, Massachusetts, Thursday, August 7, 1952.



206 YEARS OF SERVICE: Five of the eight retiring BSO players with their conductor at a party given by their colleagues at Tanglewood: Left to right, Lucien Hansotte, Boaz Piller, Charles Munch, Georges Laurent, Max Polster and Gaston Elcus.

Rubinstein Arrives for Festival Debut

Pianist Rehearses Brahms Concerto With Orchestra

Artur Rubinstein, soloist in the Brahms second piano concerto tonight with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, arrived in Lenox last night with Mrs. Rubinstein. The concerto will form the second half of the opening concert of Series C of the Berkshire Festival in the Tanglewood Music Shed.

The orchestra rehearsed with Mr. Rubinstein, who is making his Festival debut, this morning. Tomorrow morning it will rehearse the Berlioz "Requiem," which Mr. Munch has chosen for the final concert of the 1952 Festival Sunday afternoon. The position of the four brass bands that will play in the Berlioz will be tried out.

In tonight's audience will be Mr. and Mrs. Irving L. Lyons of Louisiana. Mrs. Lyons, who with her husband is staying at the Village Inn, Lenox, for the Festival, recalls hearing her father tell of riding on Brahms' back. Her father, Ernst Rivalier von Meysenbug, was a member of a family of semi-royalty in Detmold, Germany, one of four sons of a "hofmarschall" of the reigning prince. Brahms had been hired by the family to play at their court two winters, spending two Christmases with them. He liked especially, she says, to play on her grandmother's "Wiener" grand piano. Her grandmother entertained also Liszt, Joachim and Clara Schumann.

Tonight's program will be:

Symphony No. 1 in B flat major, Schumann
Short Symphony .... Swanson
Concerto for Pianoforte No. 2, in B-flat major .... Brahms

Tickets are on sale at Tanglewood for seats in the Shed and general admission for listening from the lawn.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

MUSIC SHED SERIES OF NINE CONCERTS STARTS THURSDAY

Pittsfield Mayor to Greet Conductor Munch At Lenox

[illegible], July 19 — When [illegible] the Boston Symphony Orchestra [illegible] the first time [illegible] of Europe [illegible] will give them an [illegible] welcome [illegible] season [illegible] opening [illegible] Berkshire Festival in the Tanglewood music shed. The [illegible] will be guests of [illegible] Beethoven's third [illegible] Brahms' first symphonies and [illegible] witness the presentation of a resolution of welcome and appreciation [illegible] Mayor Robert T. [illegible] of Pittsfield, the nearest [illegible]

First of Series

The concert will be the first of nine in the shed on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons. Pierre Monteux will take the baton for the first two Saturday programs and Leonard Bernstein for Aug. 9. Monteux, who conducted the Boston Orchestra from 1919 to 1924 was guest conductor in Boston the past two seasons and toured with them in Europe, will include in his first program next Saturday Igor Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring," which he conducted in Paris in May for an enthusiastic audience 39 years after he was booed from the hall on its premiere in the same hall.

On the Sunday, July 27, program are "Three Prisoners' Songs" by Luigi Dallapiccola, who for the second season has come to teach composition at Tanglewood from his home in Florence, Italy. The series of festival concerts in the theater ends this weekend.

At the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school, concerts will take place almost every day. Aaron Copland will conduct the student orchestra Friday evening in excerpts from his ballet "Billy the Kid" and Hugh Ross will lead orchestra and chorus in Orzad's "Cantata." Lorin Maazel will conduct Barber's violin concerto.

Under Boris Goldovsky the opera department will stage an evening of one-act operas Tuesday, the choral department will present a song recital Tuesday afternoon at 4 and Wednesday the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation of the Library of Congress will offer the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble. Chamber music will be played Sunday mornings at 11 and composers' forums will be held Sunday evenings at 8.15.

NEWARK, N. J.
STAR-LEDGER

JUL 20 1952

Symphony and ballet, operetta too, available

In the rolling Berkshire hills at Tanglewood, Mass., on Thursday evening Charles Munch will take up his baton in front of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first program of the season in the famous outdoor shed. Boston Symphony programs will be given in the shed every Thursday and Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon through Aug. 10. Weekenders and other vacationers may also enjoy concerts by the highly advanced students at the music center and have the opportunity of listening to rehearsals, sitting in on composer's forums, and meeting musicians informally.

Tanglewood, sandwiched between Lenox and Stockbridge, is about 150 miles from the metropolitan area. Grounds are open to the public three hours before a concert, and many who listen to the music from the lawn come equipped with blankets, pillows and picnic baskets. Buffet lunches and dinners may also be bought inside the gate. The grounds alone, with their lovely formal gardens and cultivated orchards, are worth exploring.

For the first program in the shed Munch has selected Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 and Brahms' Symphony No. 1. Munch will conduct all Thursday evening and Sunday afternoon programs and Pierre Monteux will conduct Saturday evening programs. Tickets range from $2.50 to $6.50. Dress at Tanglewood is strictly informal—blue jeans, plaid shirts and peasant blouses.

* * *

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

Monteux to Conduct Music Program at Tanglewood

Pierre Monteux, conductor of the Boston Symphony from 1919 to 1924 will make his first appearance with the orchestra at Tanglewood, near Lenox in the Berkshire, Saturday evening. It will be the second program in the major Berkshire Festival series, which opens tonight under Charles Munch in the big Shed. The concerts will continue through Aug. 10 with programs every Thursday and Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon.

* * *

TONIGHT there will be an official welcome for the orchestra and for Mr. Munch by Berkshire county. The program, starting at 8.15 o'clock, will include the Beethoven "Symphony number 3 'Eroica'" and the Brahms "Symphony number 1 in C minor."

Monteux, who led the Boston orchestra as guest conductor last season and also on its recent European tour, will include Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring" on the Saturday evening program. The "Rite" was booed when introduced in Paris 39 years ago by Monteux but cheered when presented last May in the same hall by the Boston Symphony. The Saturday program will open with the Cimarosa "Overture to The Secret Marriage"; and also include Schubert's "Symphony number 7 in C major." Mr. Monteux also will conduct an all-Wagner program on the evening of Aug 2.

* * *

THIS SUNDAY'S program, at 3 p.m. will be conducted by Mr. Munch and include the Franck, "Symphonic Piece from 'Redemption'"; Bizet, "Symphony in C major"; Dallapiccola, "Three Prisoners' Songs" with choruus conducted by Hugh Ross; and the Ravel "Daphnis and Chloe," suites 1 and 2 with chorus.

~~Sunday Globe~~ - July 27

Annual "Tanglewood on Parade" Next Friday; Festival Programs

Tanglewood will be on parade Friday. To celebrate its 10th season and to help the Berkshire Music Center for whose benefit the event is held each year, some of its most illustrious alumni will return to appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the evening concert.

At 6 o'clock, as in previous benefits, the school will be on view, with a symphony concert in the shed, the chorus on the porch and chamber music in its own hall. "Alcottiano" by Singer will be given its first performance in the theatre. After time for a picnic on the lawn, James Aliferis will conduct the last movement of Lukas Foss' "The Prairie." Howard Shanet will conduct Chausson's "Poeme" with Jacob Krachmalnick, concertmaster of the Philadelphia Orchestra, as soloist, and Mr. Foss will conduct Mendelssohn's Piano Concerto in G minor with Seymour Lipkin, winner of the Rachmaninoff Award, as soloist.

In the second half Leonard Bernstein will take the podium for the last act of "Carmen" with the FestivalChorus and Mildred Miller, mezzo-soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company; David Lloyd, tenor of the New York City Center Opera Company, and James Pease, baritone with the Hamburg Opera. The program will close with waltzing on the lawn.

For the holders of box and reserved seat tickets a special performance of Pergolesi's opera "Livietto and Tracolo" will be staged in the garden at 4 o'clock.

The programs of the Berkshire Festival concerts in the Music

This Clipping From
BOSTON, MASS.
POST

JUL 25 1952

SYMPHONY HAILED AT FESTIVAL

Plaque Is Presented to Mark Return of Orchestra

WARREN STOREY SMITH

PITTSFIELD, July 24 — The opening concert of the current Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood ~~this evening was not~~ merely one more festival opening, it was a very special occasion.

FIRST TIME

Tonight for the first time since its tour of Europe last May, the Boston Symphony Orchestra played together as a whole. Many of the men, but not all, took part in the June Pops. There was then a division of forces with some of the players functioning in the esplanade concerts and some participating in the preliminary small orchestra concerts of the festival.

To mark this event Mayor Robert T. Capeless, of Pittsfield made a public presentation to the orchestra, through its conductor, Charles Munch, of a plaque upon which are inscribed these words: "Welcome home to Tanglewood. The people of Berkshire county salute the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the occasion of its first concert after its triumphant tour of Europe. As friends and neighbors we shared with delight, though at a distance, the unparalleled adulation which greeted this peerless band of musicians in its first tour abroad.

Marked With Pride

"In the spring of 1952 we marked with pride that this orchestra was a chosen democratic instrument to sound the note of freedom in an embattled continent. We rejoice that this great ensemble returns to us at Tanglewood to enrich our lives and to glorify, in its majestic fashion, our beautiful Berkshire Hills."

This document, which bears the signatures of J. Joseph McCabe, John Henderson and John F. Shea, commissioners of Berkshire county, was read to the assembled audience of over 8000 people by Mayor Capeless, who had been introduced by Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In a short and graceful speech Mr. Cabot pointed out that the Boston Symphony now belongs to Berkshire county quite as much as it does to Boston itself, and he closed by saying that nowhere else in the world could be found such a combination of beautiful scenery and great music.

This ceremony accomplished, Messrs. Cabot, Capeless and Munch retired, and after a few moments the conductor returned to lead the orchestra through the first number on the program, Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony. The only other piece, which came after intermission, was the First Symphony of Brahms. Now both Beethoven and Brahms are, first of all, symphonists. With them, orchestration was not a primary concern. There will be other times in the three weeks to come when the tone of the orchestra will be more resplendant than it was permitted to be last evening. What we did hear was orchestral playing in which every member of the orchestra participated to his fullest extent. Mr. Munch's approach to Beethoven is highly individual. He does not by any means let the composer speak for himself, but, according to his lights, helps him at every turn with careful molding of phrase and adjustment of dynamics.

PRESENT OPERA OF MOZART

Tanglewood Staging Warmly Hailed by Audience

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

What were in all probability the first American performances of Mozart's final opera, "La Clemenza di Tito," were given by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood last night and the night before. The orchestra of the Center and the choral departments assisted and Boris Goldovsky again assumed the roles of producer, stage manager and conductor.

SERIOUS OPERA

Like the first American performance of "Idomeneo," Mozart's only other "serious" opera of any importance, this production was a feather in Tanglewood's cap and in Mr. Goldovsky's. "Titus," as it was called in these performances, sung in English, succeeded "Idomeneo" by 10 years, but instead of being a stronger work, as we might expect, it is a much weaker one. The reasons are not far to seek. "Titus" was a commissioned job for the coronation of Austria's Leopold II at Prague, as king of Bohemia. Mozart was given a month for the task and completed it in 18 days with some help from his pupil, Suessmayer, who wrote most of the harpischord-accompanied "dry" recitatives, replaced in Mr. Goldovsky's version by spoken dialogue. Mozart's health was not too good and he was engaged in the far more congenial occupation of completing "The Magic Flute," which folledw "Titus" to the stage less than a month later. Besides, by 1791, the species of musico-dramatic entertainment know as "opera seria" had become completely outmoded. Mozart's heart was not in the task, and the music, while polished and finshed, is at times almost perfunctory. There are some musical high spots and of these I will have more to say next Sunday.

Scenic Splendor

Aside from its relative lack of truly inspired music, "Titus" had Mr. Goldovsky at a disadvantage. The opera, which has not yet lost favor in Germany, calls for great voices, and there is opportunity for pomp and scenic splendor, things that the resources of Tanglewood do not permit. The use of lantern slides made possible a few fairly impressive stage pictures, one of them the burning of Rome at the end of Act I. There often should have been more people on the stage and the action had a certain intimate quality which comported ill with this somewhat fictionalized tale of the Roman emperor whose clemency knew no bounds.

Some of the principal parts were sung by different singers last evening. In Monday's performance Lloyd Oostenbrug was Titus, and not quite imperial enough for even so kindhearted an emperor. Irene Jordan gave a credible account of the plotting Vitellia, and Shirley Winston did very well as her co-conspirator, Sextus. Since Mozart designed this part and that of Sextus' friend, Annius, for sopranos, Mr. Goldovsky did the proper thing in giving them to Miss Winston and Jacqueline Langee, though there was a lack of illusion, especially in the case of the palpably feminine Annius. Richard Sharretts furnished a dignified Publius. Except for a few faults of intonation the orchestra did well but more might have been made of the choral portion. The audience, which filled the theatre-concert hall to overflowing, was exceedingly enthusiastic. The English translation and slight revision of the text was the work of Mr. Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell.

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

JUL 16 1952

Real Artistry Found In Music At Berkshire

By FREDERICK J. KOUNTZ

The Berkshire Festival, which is now in the second decade of a useful existence, is in reality the summer concert season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The idea of the festival took root more than 15 years ago in the same general location near Lenox, Mass. It was then purely a local venture administered by folk from the region roundabout.

In due time came Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. A summer music school was created. New grounds were acquired. The concert series was enlarged and re-enlarged over the years.

400 Students At Center

As of this summer, there are more than 400 students in the Berkshire Music Center. They are taught by some 40 musicians in the arts of composition, chamber music, orchestral playing and all the phases of the choral medium. They should also, one suspects, be in a position to obtain a thorough grounding in musicianship. For, by and large, the members of the Boston Orchestra, who are their teachers for the most part, are thoroughly grounded musicians.

The concerts presently in progress are called the "Theater-Concert Hall Series." They are the first public concerts by Boston Orchestra personnel in the lush Tanglewood surroundings during the summer season. The orchestra employed in these concerts is one of chamber proportions. And the audience is generally considerably smaller than that which throngs from all over the country to the later concerts with full orchestra.

Munch, Ross Conduct

As of today, there have been played three of the six chamber orchestra concerts. I heard the third of them Saturday night. The conductors were Charles Munch, the permanent music director of the Boston Orchestra, and Hugh Ross, the director of choral activities in the Berkshire Music Center.

The program was given entirely to music of the 17th and 18th centuries; the Suite from Rameau's "Dardanus," Francis Couperin's, "La Grand," so-called, Concert dans le Gout Theatral, No. 8, three Fantasies for Strings by Henry Purcell, Vivaldi's Concert, Opus 3, No. 11, all of which were conducted by Mr. Munch, and Michel LaLande's Motet, "De Profundis," which was conducted by Mr. Ross, and required the services of chorus and five vocal soloists.

For all these works the orchestra ranged in number of players from 45 to 60 in round figures. And, if one were of a mind to seek out a virtuose chamber orchestra, this group would provide a rewarding end of the search. It is indeed a magnificent group of players.

Purcell Music Tops

It was quite fitting that such players should be concerned with a program of music that was by turns precise, graceful, vigorous, intense, but always, and all of it, created with the skill, the integrity, and the musicianship of real artistry.

The finest fusion of content and performance was produced in the Purcell music. The pieces themselves are superbly wrought, tight, melodically rich, magnificently vigorous, and extraordinarily expressive. And the execution matched the content.

In the LaLande Motet, there appeared a bass voice in the person of Richard Sharretts, presumably a student at the Berkshire Center, which was as rich and as artistically used as any I have heard in many seasons. He reminded one pointedly of Alexander Kipnis in his prime.

Within the hall and in the surrounding grounds there was an audience of some 4,000.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 24 1952

PIERRE MONTEUX AT TANGLEWOOD

Visiting Conductor On Podium Saturday Night

Major concerts under the direction of Pierre Monteux, guest conductor, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a choral concert, forum discussion on music composers, public rehearsals of the orchestra and special performances for box and reserved seat holders are on the program at Tangelwood for next week.

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Berkshire Festival Concert program on Saturday night of this week, and on Saturday evening, Aug. 2. The midweek concert on Thursday will be directed by Charles Munch, permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Tenth Celebration

Tenth celebration of "Tanglewood on Parade" will be observed Friday, Aug. 1 and the evening concert will be conducted by former Tanglewood students.

The complete schedule of events from Saturday through Sunday, Aug. 3, follows:

Saturday, July 26

10 a. m. Boston Symphony Orchestra Public Rehearsal (Benefit, Pension Fund)

1 p. m. Informal concert by Tanglewood Study Group

8.15 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Pierre Monteux conducting
Overture, "The Secret Marriage" .Cimarosa
Symphony No. 7, in C major ....Schubert
"The Rite of Spring" ....Stravinsky

Sunday, July 27

10 a. m. Chamber Music

3 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting
Symphonic Piece from "Redemption ....Franck
Symphony in C major ....Bizet
"Three Prisoners' Songs" .....Dallapiccola
(with chorus, conducted by Hugh Ross)
"Daphnis and Chloe" ....Ravel
Suites 1 and 2
(with chorus)

8.15 p. m. Composers' Forum

Wednesday, July 30

8.15 p. m. Fine Arts Quartet, gift of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress

Thursday, July 31

8.15 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting Incidental Music for
"Pelleas et Melisande" ...... Faure
Ballade for Piano and Orchestra ..Faure
Piano Concerto ....Ravel
(Nicole Henroit, soloist)
Symphony No. 4, in E minor ....Brahms

Friday, Aug. 1

Tenth celebration of Berkshire Music Center
"TANGLEWOOD ON PARADE"

4 p. m. Special Performance for box and reserved seat holders, Pergolesi's opera, "Livietta e Tracolla" and Raymond Wilding-White's "The Tub"

6 p. m. Fanfare, followed by simultaneous chamber music, symphony orchestra and Singer's opera, "Alcottiana"

7 p. m. Choral concert on the porch of main house and time for a picnic on the lawn

8.15 p. m. Concert by Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by former Tanglewood students
The Prairie (last movement) ....Foss
James Aliferis conducting
"Poeme" ....Chausson
Howard Shanet conducting
Soloist, Jacob Krachmalnick (Concertmaster of the Philadelphia Orchestra)
Piano Concerto in G minor ..Mendelssohn
Lukas Foss conducting
Soloist: Seymour Lipkin (Winner of the Rachmaninoff Award)
Carmen (last act) ....Bizet
Leonard Bernstein conducting
Soloists: Mildred Miller (Metropolitan Opera Company)
David Lloyd (New York City Center Opera)
James Pease (Hamburg Opera)
Berkshire Festival Chorus
Lawn party, door prizes, waltzing on the lawn

Saturday, Aug. 2

10 a. m. Public rehearsal of Boston Symphony Orchestra (Benefit, Pension Fund)

4 p. m. Composers' Forum

8.15 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Pierre Monteux conducting
Prelude and Love-death
"Tristan und Isolde" .... Wagner
Wotan's Farewell and Fire Music
"Die Walkure" .... Wagner
Final Scene "Siegfried" .... Wagner
Immolation Scene "Gotterdammerung"
.... Wagner
Soloists: Margaret Harshaw, Howard Vandenberg, James Pease

Sunday, Aug. 3

10 a. m. Chamber Music

3 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting
Overture to "Egmont" .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 8 ....Beethoven
"Iberia" ....Debussy
"Danse des Morts" ....Honegger
(with chorus)

From George L. Geiger
Managing Editor

THE STANDARD

In Tanglewood Opera Role

—Will Plouffe Photo

Jacqueline Bazinet of New Bedford, right, confronts the traitor Sextus (Shirley Winston) as she sings the role of Vitellia in a scene from Mozart's opera "Titus" at Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 24 1952

Plays at Tanglewood Next Week

Artur Rubinstein, world-famous pianist, will be the guest soloist at Tanglewood next Thursday evening. He will play the Brahms Concerto No. 2 for piano and orchestra, with the Boston Symphony, under the direction of Charles Munch.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

Gala Atmosphere Of Berkshire Festival Runs High This Year

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS
Buffalo Evening News Music Critic

LENOX, Mass., July 28—Except for last Summer when the benevolent figure of Serge Koussevitzky, who died in June 1951, was missing, the atmosphere at the Berkshire Music Festivals always has partaken of a certain gala quality and tempo.

The incomparable beauty of Tanglewood and the surrounding Berkshire region, the unusual spell of beautiful music played excitingly in such a rare setting, as much as the caliber of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the personality of Koussevitzky, have made the festival truly one of this continent's unique music events.

Charles Munch, Koussevitzky's successor, is a man of equal personal magnetism and individuality in his approach to music and the gala atmosphere that prevails at these festivals has run especially high during the opening series of major concerts the past week-end.

Officials Are Guests

It was the first time Mr. Munch conducted the Boston Symphony since their triumphal tour together in Europe earlier this Summer.

Town and county officials were guests of honor, heard superlative performances of Beethoven's Third ("Eroica") and Brahms's First Symphonies and witnessed the presentation of a resolution of welcome and appreciation to the conductor by Mayor Robert T. Capeless of Pittsfield.

Pierre Monteux, one of our soundest and most selfless musicians and conductors, took the baton for Saturday evening's concert.

The program included Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring," a score Mr. Monteux conducted in Paris in May for an enthusiastic audience in the very same hall from which he had been booed 39 years before when he led its premiere there.

The plump little Frenchman conducted the Stravinsky, a Cimarosa overture ("The Secret Marriage") and Schubert's Seventh Symphony with the recreative power and very utter simplicity of manner and demeanor that are part and parcel of his personality.

Gives Arresting Score

Sunday afternoon's concert included an arresting score by Luigi Dallapiccola, distinguished Italian composer, a member of the composition department of the Berkshire Music Center this Summer.

Titled "Songs in Captivity," and composed for mixed voices, two harps, two pianos and percussion, their subjects are the Prayer of Mary Stuart, Invocation of Boethius and the Farewell of Girolamo Savonarola."

The texts have been set with extraordinary power of emotional suggestion and pictorial atmosphere. The score was presented very effectively by the Berkshire Festival Chorus, Lucas Foss and Ralph Berkowitz, pianists, and the orchestra. Hugh Ross conducted.

The chorus also assisted in a performance of both suites of Ravel's ballet, "Daphnis et Chloe," that was at once distinguished and surcharged with drama. Mr. Munch conducted the Ravel and also Franck's symphonic piece from "Redemption" and Bizet's enchanting "C Major Symphony."

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 25 1952

Children to Visit Tanglewood Saturday

Children enrolled in the Summer Music Center at William Hall High School will visit Tanglewood Music Center at Lenox, Mass., Saturday.

The youngsters will see the Boston Symphony Orchestra rehearse with Dr. Charles Munch conducting.

The group will leave by car from Hall High at 8:15 a. m. and return by 3 p. m. Additional cars are needed to transport children and parents interested in driving are asked to call Frank H. Groff, head of the Summer Music Center faculty and director of music in West Hartford schools.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
BOSTON, MASS.
TRAVELER
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

JUL 25 1952

Berkshire County Hails New Tanglewood Festival

Lenox, Mass., July 25—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra has a framed testimony from Berkshire County claiming "the world's greatest orchestra as its own."

Pittsfield Mayor Robert T. Capeless presented the testimony to conductor Charles Munch before 8,250 persons last night at the opening of the 15th Tanglewood festival season.

The festival will continue every Thursday and Saturday night and Sunday afternoon through August 10.

---

as its own though it has not ore expressed its appreciation icially, Capeless said.

The festival will continue every Thursday and Saturday night and Sunday afternoon through Aug. 10.

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

JUL 16 1952

Real Artistry Found In Music At Berkshire

By FREDERICK J. KOUNTZ

The Berkshire Festival, which is now in the second decade of a useful existence, is in reality the summer concert season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

The idea of the festival took root more than 15 years ago in the same general location near Lenox, Mass. It was then purely a local venture administered by folk from the region roundabout.

In due time came Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. A summer music school was created. New grounds were acquired. The concert series was enlarged and re-enlarged over the years.

400 Students At Center

As of this summer, there are more than 400 students in the Berkshire Music Center. They are taught by some 40 musicians in the arts of composition, chamber music, orchestral playing and all the phases of the choral medium. They should also, one suspects, be in a position to obtain a thorough grounding in musicianship. For, by and large, the members of the Boston Orchestra, who are their teachers for the most part, are thoroughly grounded musicians.

The concerts presently in progress are called the "Theater-Concert Hall Series." They are the first public concerts by Boston Orchestra personnel in the lush Tanglewood surroundings during the summer season. The orchestra employed in these concerts is one of chamber proportions. And the audience is generally considerably smaller than that which throngs from all over the country to the later concerts with full orchestra.

Munch, Ross Conduct

As of today, there have been played three of the six chamber orchestra concerts. I heard the third of them Saturday night. The conductors were Charles Munch, the permanent music director of the Boston Orchestra, and Hugh Ross, the director of choral activities in the Berkshire Music Center.

The program was given entirely to music of the 17th and 18th centuries; the Suite from Rameau's "Dardanus," Francis Couperin's, "La Grand," so-called, Concert dans le Gout Theatral, No. 8, three Fantasies for Strings by Henry Purcell, Vivaldi's Concert, Opus 3, No. 11, all of which were conducted by Mr. Munch, and Michel LaLande's Motet, "De Profundis," which was conducted by Mr. Ross, and required the services of chorus and five vocal soloists.

For all these works the orchestra ranged in number of players from 45 to 60 in round figures. And, if one were of a mind to seek out a virtuose chamber orchestra, this group would provide a rewarding end of the search. It is indeed a magnificent group of players.

Purcell Music Tops

It was quite fitting that such players should be concerned with a program of music that was by turns precise, graceful, vigorous, intense, but always, and all of it, created with the skill, the integrity, and the musicianship of real artistry.

The finest fusion of content and performance was produced in the Purcell music. The pieces themselves are superbly wrought, tight, melodically rich, magnificently vigorous, and extraordinarily expressive. And the execution matched the content.

In the LaLande Motet, there appeared a bass voice in the person of Richard Sharretts, presumably a student at the Berkshire Center, which was as rich and as artistically used as any I have heard in many seasons. He reminded one pointedly of Alexander Kipnis in his prime.

Within the hall and in the surrounding grounds there was an audience of some 4,000.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 24 1952

PIERRE MONTEUX AT TANGLEWOOD

Visiting Conductor On Podium Saturday Night

Major concerts under the direction of Pierre Monteux, guest conductor, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a choral ~~concert, forum~~ discussion on music composers, public rehearsals of the orchestra and special performances for box and reserved seat holders are on the program at Tangelwood for next week.

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Berkshire Festival Concert program on Saturday night of this week, and on Saturday evening, Aug. 2. The midweek concert on Thursday will be directed by Charles Munch, permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Tenth Celebration

Tenth celebration of "Tanglewood on Parade" will be observed Friday, Aug. 1 and the evening concert will be conducted by former Tanglewood students.

The complete schedule of events from Saturday through Sunday, Aug. 3, follows:

Saturday, July 26

10 a. m. Boston Symphony Orchestra Public Rehearsal (Benefit, Pension Fund)

1 p. m. Informal concert by Tanglewood Study Group

8.15 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Pierre Monteux conducting

Overture, "The Secret Marriage" .Cimarosa
Symphony No. 7, in C major ....Schubert
"The Rite of Spring" ....Stravinsky

Sunday, July 27

10 a. m. Chamber Music

3 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting

Symphonic Piece from "Redemption ....Franck
Symphony in C major ....Bizet
"Three Prisoners' Songs" .....Dallapiccola
(with chorus, conducted by Hugh Ross)
"Daphnis and Chloe" ....Ravel
Suites 1 and 2
(with chorus)

8.15 p. m. Composers' Forum

Wednesday, July 30

8.15 p. m. Fine Arts Quartet, gift of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress

Thursday, July 31

8.15 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting.

Incidental Music for
"Pelleas et Melisande" ...... Faure
Ballade for Piano and Orchestra ..Faure
Piano Concerto ....Ravel
(Nicole Henroit, soloist)
Symphony No. 4, in E minor ....Brahms

Friday, Aug. 1

Tenth celebration of Berkshire Music Center "TANGLEWOOD ON PARADE"

4 p. m. Special Performance for box and reserved seat holders, Pergolesi's opera, "Livietta e Tracolla" and Raymond Wilding-White's "The Tub"

6 p. m. Fanfare, followed by simultaneous chamber music, symphony orchestra and Singer's opera, "Alcottiana"

7 p. m. Choral concert on the porch of main house and time for a picnic on the lawn

8.15 p. m. Concert by Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by former Tanglewood students

The Prairie (last movement) ....Foss
James Aliferis conducting
"Poeme" ....Chausson
Howard Shanet conducting
Soloist, Jacob Krachmalnick (Concertmaster of the Philadelphia Orchestra)
Piano Concerto in G minor ..Mendelssohn
Lukas Foss conducting
Soloist: Seymour Lipkin (Winner of the Rachmaninoff Award)
Carmen (last act) ....Bizet
Leonard Bernstein conducting
Soloists: Mildred Miller (Metropolitan Opera Company)
David Lloyd (New York City Center Opera)
James Pease (Hamburg Opera)
Berkshire Festival Chorus

Lawn party, door prizes, waltzing on the lawn

Saturday, Aug. 2

10 a. m. Public rehearsal of Boston Symphony Orchestra (Benefit, Pension Fund)

4 p m. Composers' Forum

8.15 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Pierre Monteux conducting

Prelude and Love-death
"Tristan und Isolde" .... Wagner
Wotan's Farewell and Fire Music
"Die Walkure" .... Wagner
Final Scene "Siegfried" .... Wagner
Immolation Scene "Gotterdammerung"
.... Wagner
Soloists: Margaret Harshaw, Howard Vandenberg, James Pease

Sunday, Aug. 3

10 a. m. Chamber Music

3 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting

Overture to "Egmont" .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 8 ....Beethoven
"Iberia" ....Debussy
"Danse des Morts" ....Honegger
(with chorus)

From George L. Geiger
Managing Editor

Aug 7

THE STANDARD

In Tanglewood Opera Role

—Will Plouffe Photo

Jacqueline Bazinet of New Bedford, right, confronts the traitor Sextus (Shirley Winston) as she sings the role of Vitellia in a scene from Mozart's opera "Titus" at Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 24 1952

Plays at Tanglewood Next Week

Artur Rubinstein, world-famous pianist, will be the Tanglewood next Thursday evening. He will play t certo No. 2 for piano and orchestra, with the Boston S the direction of Charles Munch.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

Gala Atmosphere Of Berkshire Festival Runs High This Year

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS
Buffalo Evening News Music Critic

LENOX, Mass., July 28.—Except for last Summer, when the benevolent figure of Serge Koussevitzky, who died in June 1951, was missing, the atmosphere at the Berkshire Music Festivals always has partaken of a certain gala quality and tempo.

The incomparable beauty of Tanglewood and the surrounding Berkshire region, the unusual spell of beautiful music played excitingly in such a rare setting, as much as the caliber of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the personality of Koussevitzky, have made the festival truly one of this continent's unique music events.

Charles Munch, Koussevitzky's successor, is a man of equal personal magnetism and individuality in his approach to music and the gala atmosphere that prevails at these festivals has run especially high during the opening series of major concerts the past week-end.

Officials Are Guests

It was the first time Mr. Munch conducted the Boston Symphony since their triumphal tour together in Europe earlier this Summer.

Town and county officials were guests of honor, heard superlative performances of Beethoven's Third ("Eroica") and Brahms's First Symphonies and witnessed the presentation of a resolution of welcome and appreciation to the conductor by Mayor Robert T. Capeless of Pittsfield.

Pierre Monteux, one of our soundest and most selfless musicians and conductors, took the baton for Saturday evening's concert.

The program included Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring," a score Mr. Monteux conducted in Paris [illegible] May [illegible] an enthusiastic audience in the very same hall from which he had been booed 39 years before when he led its premiere there.

The plump little Frenchman conducted the Stravinsky, a Cimarosa overture "The Secret Marriage" and Schubert's Seventh Symphony with the recreative power and yet utter simplicity of manner and demeanor that are part and parcel of his personality.

Gives Arresting Score

Sunday afternoon's concert [illegible]cluded an arresting score by [illegible] Dallapiccola, [illegible] composer, a member of the [illegible]position department of the Berkshire Music Center this Summer.

Titled "Songs in Captivity," [illegible] composed for mixed voices, [illegible] two harps, two pianos [illegible] percussion. Their subjects are the Prayer of Mary Stuart, In[illegible] of Boethius and the [illegible] of Girolamo Savonarola."

The texts have been set with extraordinary power of emotional suggestion and pictorial atmosphere. The score was presented [illegible]ely by the Berkshire [illegible]rus, Lucas Foss and [illegible]witz, pianists, and [illegible]gh Ross conducted. [illegible]s also assisted in a [illegible] of both suites of R[illegible] "Daphnis et Chloe" [illegible]nce [illegible] [illegible]ith drama Mr. Munch [illegible] Ravel and [illegible] onic piece from [illegible]d Bizet's enchant[illegible] [illegible]mphony."

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 25 1952

Children to Visit Tanglewood Saturday

Children enrolled in the Summer Music Center at William Hall High School will visit Tanglewood Music Center at Lenox, Mass., Saturday.

The youngsters will see the Boston Symphony Orchestra rehearse with Dr. Charles Munch conducting.

The group will leave by car from Hall High at 8:15 a. m. and return by 3 p. m. Additional cars are needed to transport children and parents interested in driving are asked to call Frank H. Groff, head of the Summer Music Center faculty and director of music in West Hartford schools.

JUL 25 1952

Tanglewood Honors Boston Symphony

Lenox, Mass. (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra has a framed testimony from Berkshire County claiming "the world's greatest orchestra as its own."

Pittsfield Mayor Robert T. Capeless presented the testimony to Conductor Charles Munch before 8,250 persons last night at the opening of the 15th Tanglewood festival season.

"Berkshire as well as Boston claims the world's greatest orchestra as its own though it has not before expressed its appreciation officially," Capeless said.

The festival will continue every Thursday and Saturday night and Sunday afternoon through Aug. 10.

Thursday and Saturday night and Sunday afternoon through Aug. 10.

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

JUL 16 1952

Real Artistry Found In Music At Berkshire

By FREDERICK J. KOUNTZ

The Berkshire Festival, which is now in the second decade of a useful existence, is in reality the summer concert season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

The idea of the festival took root more than 15 years ago in the same general location near Lenox, Mass. It was then purely a local venture administered by folk from the region roundabout.

In due time came Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. A summer music school was created. New grounds were acquired. The concert series was enlarged and re-enlarged over the years.

400 Students At Center

As of this summer, there are more than 400 students in the Berkshire Music Center. They are taught by some 40 musicians in the arts of composition, chamber music, orchestral playing and all the phases of the choral medium. They should also, one suspects, be in a position to obtain a thorough grounding in musicianship. For, by and large, the members of the Boston Orchestra, who are their teachers for the most part, are thoroughly grounded musicians.

The concerts presently in progress are called the "Theater-Concert Hall Series." They are the first public concerts by Boston Orchestra personnel in the lush Tanglewood surroundings during the summer season. The orchestra employed in these concerts is one of chamber proportions. And the audience is generally considerably smaller than that which throngs from all over the country to the later concerts with full orchestra.

Munch, Ross Conduct

As of today, there have been played three of the six chamber orchestra concerts. I heard the third of them Saturday night. The conductors were Charles Munch, the permanent music director of the Boston Orchestra, and Hugh Ross, the director of choral activities in the Berkshire Music Center.

The program was given entirely to music of the 17th and 18th centuries; the Suite from Rameau's "Dardanus," Francis Couperin's, "La Grand," so-called, Concert dans le Gout Theatral, No. 8, three Fantasies for Strings by Henry Purcell, Vivaldi's Concert, Opus 3, No. 11, all of which were conducted by Mr. Munch, and Michel LaLande's Motet, "De Profundis," which was conducted by Mr. Ross, and required the services of chorus and five vocal soloists.

For all these works the orchestra ranged in number of players from 45 to 60 in round figures. And, if one were of a mind to seek out a virtuose chamber orchestra, this group would provide a rewarding end of the search. It is indeed a magnificent group of players.

Purcell Music Tops

It was quite fitting that such players should be concerned with a program of music that was by turns precise, graceful, vigorous, intense, but always, and all of it, created with the skill, the integrity, and the musicianship of real artistry.

The finest fusion of content and performance was produced in the Purcell music. The pieces themselves are superbly wrought, tight, melodically rich, magnificently vigorous, and extraordinarily expressive. And the execution matched the content.

In the LaLande Motet, there appeared a bass voice in the person of Richard Sharretts, presumably a student at the Berkshire Center, which was as rich and as artistically used as any I have heard in many seasons. He reminded one pointedly of Alexander Kipnis in his prime.

Within the hall and in the surrounding grounds there was an audience of some 4,000.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 24 1952

PIERRE MONTEUX AT TANGLEWOOD

Visiting Conductor On Podium Saturday Night

Major concerts under the direction of Pierre Monteux, guest conductor, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a choral concert, forum discussion on music composers, public rehearsals of the orchestra and special performances for box and reserved seat holders are on the program at Tangelwood for next week.

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Berkshire Festival Concert program on Saturday night of this week, and on Saturday evening, Aug. 2. The midweek concert on Thursday will be directed by Charles Munch, permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Tenth Celebration

Tenth celebration of "Tanglewood on Parade" will be observed Friday, Aug. 1 and the evening concert will be conducted by former Tanglewood students.

The complete schedule of events from Saturday through Sunday, Aug. 3, follows:

Saturday, July 26

10 a. m. Boston Symphony Orchestra Public Rehearsal (Benefit, Pension Fund)

1 p. m. Informal concert by Tanglewood Study Group

8.15 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Pierre Monteux conducting

Overture, "The Secret Marriage" . Cimarosa
Symphony No. 7, in C major .... Schubert
"The Rite of Spring" .... Stravinsky

Sunday, July 27

10 a. m. Chamber Music

3 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting

Symphonic Piece from "Redemption .... Franck
Symphony in C major .... Bizet
"Three Prisoners' Songs" ..... Dallapiccola
(with chorus, conducted by Hugh Ross)
"Daphnis and Chloe" .... Ravel
Suites 1 and 2
(with chorus)

8.15 p. m. Composers' Forum

Wednesday, July 30

8.15 p. m. Fine Arts Quartet, gift of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress

Thursday, July 31

8.15 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting

Incidental Music for
"Pelleas et Melisande" ...... Faure
Ballade for Piano and Orchestra .. Faure
Piano Concerto .... Ravel
(Nicole Henroit, soloist)
Symphony No. 4, in E minor .... Brahms

Friday, Aug. 1

Tenth celebration of Berkshire Music Center "TANGLEWOOD ON PARADE"

4 p. m. Special Performance for box and reserved seat holders, Pergolesi's opera, "Livietta e Tracolla" and Raymond Wilding-White's "The Tub"

6 p. m. Fanfare, followed by simultaneous chamber music, symphony orchestra and Singer's opera, "Alcottiana"

7 p. m. Choral concert on the porch of main house and time for a picnic on the lawn

8.15 p. m. Concert by Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by former Tanglewood students

The Prairie (last movement) .... Foss
James Aliferis conducting
"Poeme" .... Chausson
Howard Shanet conducting
Soloist, Jacob Krachmalnick (Concertmaster of the Philadelphia Orchestra)
Piano Concerto in G minor .. Mendelssohn
Lukas Foss conducting
Soloist: Seymour Lipkin (Winner of the Rachmaninoff Award)
Carmen (last act) .... Bizet
Leonard Bernstein conducting
Soloists: Mildred Miller (Metropolitan Opera Company)
David Lloyd (New York City Center Opera)
James Pease (Hamburg Opera)
Berkshire Festival Chorus

Lawn party, door prizes, waltzing on the lawn

Saturday, Aug. 2

10 a. m. Public rehearsal of Boston Symphony Orchestra (Benefit, Pension Fund)

4 p. m. Composers' Forum

8.15 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Pierre Monteux conducting

Prelude and Love-death
"Tristan und Isolde" .... Wagner
Wotan's Farewell and Fire Music
"Die Walkure" .... Wagner
Final Scene "Siegfried" .... Wagner
Immolation Scene "Gotterdammerung"
.... Wagner
Soloists: Margaret Harshaw, Howard Vandenberg, James Pease

Sunday, Aug. 3

10 a. m. Chamber Music

3 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting

Overture to "Egmont" .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 8 .... Beethoven
"Iberia" .... Debussy
"Danse des Morts" .... Honegger
(with chorus)

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 25 1952

Children to Visit Tanglewood Saturday

Children enrolled in the Summer Music Center at William Hall High School will visit Tanglewood Music Center at Lenox, Mass., Saturday.

The youngsters will see the Boston Symphony Orchestra rehearse with Dr. Charles Munch conducting.

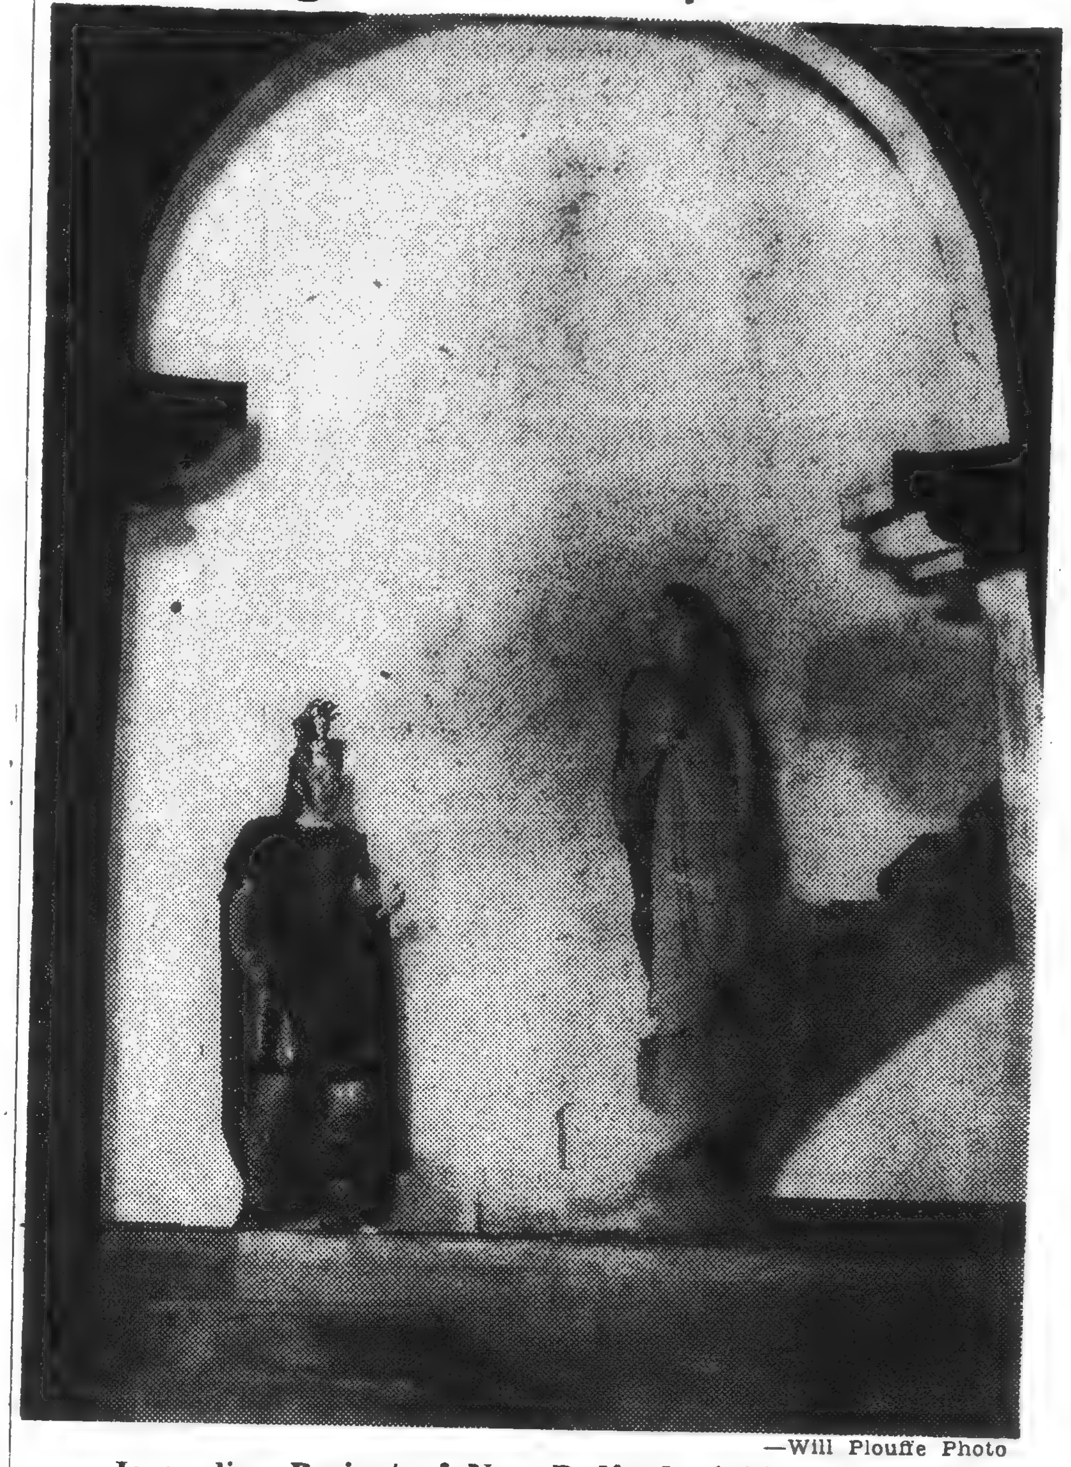
The group will leave by car from Hall High at 8:15 a. m. and return by 3 p. m. Additional cars are needed to transport children and parents interested in driving are asked to call Frank H. Groff, head of the Summer Music Center faculty and director of music in West Hartford schools.

From George L. Geiger
Managing Editor

aug 7

THE STANDARD

In Tanglewood Opera Role



—Will Plouffe Photo

Jacqueline Bazinet of New Bedford, right, confronts the traitor Sextus (Shirley Winston) as she sings the role of Vitellia in a scene from Mozart's opera "Titus" at Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 24 1952

Plays at Tanglewood Next Week

Artur Rubinstein, world-famous pianist, will be th Tanglewood next Thursday evening. He will play certo No. 2 for piano and orchestra, with the Boston
the direction of Charles Munch.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

Gala Atmosphere Of Berkshire Festival Runs High This Year

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS
Buffalo Evening News Music Critic

LENOX, Mass., July 28.—Except for last Summer, when the benevolent figure of Serge Koussevitzky, who died in June 1951, was missing, the atmosphere at the Berkshire Music Festivals always has partaken of a certain gala quality and tempo.

The incomparable beauty of Tanglewood and the surrounding Berkshire region, the unusual spell of beautiful music played excitingly in such a rare setting, as much as the caliber of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the personality of Koussevitzky, have made the festival truly one of this continent's unique music events.

Charles Munch, Koussevitzky's successor, is a man of equal personal magnetism and individuality in his approach to music and the gala atmosphere that prevails at these festivals has run especially high during the opening series of major concerts the past week-end.

Officials Are Guests

It was the first time Mr. Munch conducted the Boston Symphony since their triumphal tour together in Europe earlier this Summer.

Town and county officials were guests of honor, heard superlative performances of Beethoven's Third ("Eroica") and Brahms's First Symphonies and witnessed the presentation of a resolution of welcome and appreciation to the conductor by Mayor Robert T. Capeless of Pittsfield.

Pierre Monteux, one of our soundest and most selfless musicians and conductors, took the baton for Saturday evening's concert.

The program included Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring," a work Mr. Monteux conducted in Paris in May for an enthusiastic audience in the very same hall from which he had been booed 39 years before when he led its premiere there.

The plump little Frenchman conducted the Stravinsky, a Cimarosa overture ("The Secret Marriage") and Schubert's Seventh Symphony with the recreative power and yet utter simplicity of manner and demeanor that are part and parcel of his personality.

Gives Arresting Score

Sunday afternoon's concert included an arresting score by [illegible] Dallapiccola, distinguished Italian composer, a member of the composition department of the Berkshire Music Center this Summer.

Titled "Songs in Captivity," and composed for mixed voices, [illegible] two harps, two pianos and percussion, their subjects are the Prayer of Mary Stuart, Invocation of Boethius and the Farewell of [illegible] Savonarola."

[illegible] xts have been set with ex[illegible] ry power of emotional [illegible] n and pictorial atmos-

[illegible] h drama. Mr. Munch [illegible] Ravel and a [illegible] phonic piece from [illegible] and Bizet's enchanting symphony."

UNION

JUL 25 1952

Berkshire County Honors Symphony Orchestra

Lenox, July 24 (AP)—Berkshire County tonight presented a framed testimony to the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the opening of the 15th Tanglewood festival season.

Pittsfield Mayor Robert T. Capeless presented the testimony to Conductor Charles Munch before 8250 first nighters, 1150 more than attended the opening performance last year.

"Berkshire as well as Boston claims the world's greatest orchestra as its own," Capeless said, "though it has not before expressed its appreciation officially."

Thursday and Saturday night and Sunday afternoon through Aug. 10.

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

JUL 16 1952

Real Artistry Found In Music At Berkshire

By FREDERICK J. KOUNTZ

The Berkshire Festival, which is now in the second decade of a useful existence, is in reality the summer concert season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The idea of the festival took root more than 15 years ago in the same general location near Lenox, Mass. It was then purely a local venture administered by folk from the region roundabout.

In due time came Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. A summer music school was created. New grounds were acquired. The concert series was enlarged and re-enlarged over the years.

400 Students At Center

As of this summer, there are more than 400 students in the Berkshire Music Center. They are taught by some 40 musicians in the arts of composition, chamber music, orchestral playing and all the phases of the choral medium. They should also, one suspects, be in a position to obtain a thorough grounding in musicianship. For, by and large, the members of the Boston Orchestra, who are their teachers for the most part, are thoroughly grounded musicians.

The concerts presently in progress are called the "Theater-Concert Hall Series." They are the first public concerts by Boston Orchestra personnel in the lush Tanglewood surroundings during the summer season. The orchestra employed in these concerts is one of chamber proportions. And the audience is generally considerably smaller than that which throngs from all over the country to the later concerts with full orchestra.

Munch, Ross Conduct

As of today, there have been played three of the six chamber orchestra concerts. I heard the third of them Saturday night. The conductors were Charles Munch, the permanent music director of the Boston Orchestra, and Hugh Ross, the director of choral activities in the Berkshire Music Center.

The program was given entirely to music of the 17th and 18th centuries; the Suite from Rameau's "Dardanus," Francis Couperin's, "La Grand," so-called, Concert dans le Gout Theatral, No. 8, three Fantasies for Strings by Henry Purcell, Vivaldi's Concert, Opus 3, No. 11, all of which were conducted by Mr. Munch, and Michel LaLande's Motet, "De Profundis," which was conducted by Mr. Ross, and required the services of chorus and five vocal soloists.

For all these works the orchestra ranged in number of players from 45 to 60 in round figures. And, if one were of a mind to seek out a virtuose chamber orchestra, this group would provide a rewarding end of the search. It is indeed a magnificent group of players.

Purcell Music Tops

It was quite fitting that such players should be concerned with a program of music that was by turns precise, graceful, vigorous, intense, but always, and all of it, created with the skill, the integrity, and the musicianship of real artistry.

The finest fusion of content and performance was produced in the Purcell music. The pieces themselves are superbly wrought, tight, melodically rich, magnificently vigorous, and extraordinarily expressive. And the execution matched the content.

In the LaLande Motet, there appeared a bass voice in the person of Richard Sharretts, presumably a student at the Berkshire Center, which was as rich and as artistically used as any I have heard in many seasons. He reminded one pointedly of Alexander Kipnis in his prime.

Within the hall and in the surrounding grounds there was an audience of some 4,000.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 24 1952

PIERRE MONTEUX AT TANGLEWOOD

Visiting Conductor On Podium Saturday Night

Major concerts under the direction of Pierre Monteux, guest conductor, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a choral concert, forum discussion on music composers, public rehearsals of the orchestra and special performances for box and reserved seat holders are on the program at Tangelwood for next week.

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Berkshire Festival Concert program on Saturday night of this week, and on Saturday evening, Aug. 2. The midweek concert on Thursday will be directed by Charles Munch, permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Tenth Celebration

Tenth celebration of "Tanglewood on Parade" will be observed Friday, Aug. 1 and the evening concert will be conducted by former Tanglewood students.

The complete schedule of events from Saturday through Sunday, Aug. 3, follows:

Saturday, July 26

10 a. m. Boston Symphony Orchestra Public Rehearsal (Benefit, Pension Fund)
1 p. m. Informal concert by Tanglewood Study Group
8.15 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Pierre Monteux conducting
Overture, "The Secret Marriage" .Cimarosa
Symphony No. 7, in C major ....Schubert
"The Rite of Spring" ....Stravinsky

Sunday, July 27

10 a. m. Chamber Music
3 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting
Symphonic Piece from "Redemption ....Franck
Symphony in C major ....Bizet
"Three Prisoners' Songs" .....Dallapiccola
(with chorus, conducted by Hugh Ross)
"Daphnis and Chloe" ....Ravel
Suites 1 and 2
(with chorus)
8.16 p. m. Composers' Forum

Wednesday, July 30

8.15 p. m. Fine Arts Quartet, gift of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress

Thursday, July 31

8.15 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting Incidental Music for
"Pelleas et Melisande" ...... Faure
Ballade for Piano and Orchestra ..Faure
Piano Concerto ....Ravel
(Nicole Henroit, soloist)
Symphony No. 4, in E minor ....Brahms

Friday, Aug. 1

Tenth celebration of Berkshire Music Center
"TANGLEWOOD ON PARADE"
4 p. m. Special Performance for box and reserved seat holders, Pergolesi's opera, "Livietta e Tracolla" and Raymond Wilding-White's "The Tub"
6 p. m. Fanfare, followed by simultaneous chamber music, symphony orchestra and Singer's opera, "Alcottiana"
7 p. m. Choral concert on the porch of main house and time for a picnic on the lawn
8.15 p. m. Concert by Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by former Tanglewood students
The Prairie (last movement) ....Foss
James Aliferis conducting
"Poeme" ....Chausson
Howard Shanet conducting
Soloist, Jacob Krachmalnick (Concertmaster of the Philadelphia Orchestra)
Piano Concerto in G minor ..Mendelssohn
Lukas Foss conducting
Soloist: Seymour Lipkin (Winner of the Rachmaninoff Award)
Carmen (last act) ....Bizet
Leonard Bernstein conducting
Soloists: Mildred Miller (Metropolitan Opera Company)
David Lloyd (New York City Center Opera)
James Pease (Hamburg Opera)
Berkshire Festival Chorus
Lawn party, door prizes, waltzing on the lawn

Saturday, Aug. 2

10 a. m. Public rehearsal of Boston Symphony Orchestra (Benefit, Pension Fund)
4 p m. Composers' Forum
8.15 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Pierre Monteux conducting
Prelude and Love-death
"Tristan und Isolde" .... Wagner
Wotan's Farewell and Fire Music
"Die Walkure" .... Wagner
Final Scene "Siegfried" .... Wagner
Immolation Scene "Gotterdammerung"
.... Wagner
Soloists: Margaret Harshaw, Howard Vandenberg, James Pease

Sunday, Aug. 3

10 a. m. Chamber Music
3 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting
Overture to "Egmont" .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 8 ....Beethoven
"Iberia" ....Debussy
"Danse des Morts" ....Honegger
(with chorus)

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 25 1952

Children to Visit Tanglewood Saturday

Children enrolled in the Summer Music Center at William Hall High School will visit Tanglewood Music Center at Lenox, Mass., Saturday.

The youngsters will see the Boston Symphony Orchestra rehearse with Dr. Charles Munch conducting.

The group will leave by car from Hall High at 8:15 a. m. and return by 3 p. m. Additional cars are needed to transport children and parents interested in driving are asked to call Frank H. Groff, head of the Summer Music Center faculty and director of music in West Hartford schools.

From George L. Geiger
Managing Editor

THE STANDARD

In Tanglewood Opera Role

—Will Plouffe Photo

Jacqueline Bazinet of New Bedford, right, confronts the traitor Sextus (Shirley Winston) as she sings the role of Vitellia in a scene from Mozart's opera "Titus" at Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 24 1952

Plays at Tanglewood Next Week

Artur Rubinstein, world-famous pianist, will be the Tanglewood next Thursday evening. He will play th certo No. 2 for piano and orchestra, with the Boston S
the direction of Charles Munch.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

Gala Atmosphere Of Berkshire Festival Runs High This Year

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS
Buffalo Evening News Music Critic

LENOX, Mass., July 28—Except for last Summer when the benevolent figure of Serge Koussevitzky, who died in June 1951, was missing, the atmosphere at the Berkshire Music Festivals always has partaken of a certain gala quality and tempo.

The incomparable beauty of Tanglewood and the surrounding Berkshire region, the unusual spell of beautiful music played excitingly in such a rare setting, as much as the caliber of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the personality of Koussevitzky, have made the festival truly one of this continent's unique music events.

Charles Munch, Koussevitzky's successor, is a man of equal personal magnetism and individuality in his approach to music, and the gala atmosphere that prevails at these festivals has run especially high during the opening series of major concerts the past week-end.

Officials Are Guests

It was the first time Mr. Munch conducted the Boston Symphony since their triumphal tour together in Europe earlier this Summer.

Town and county officials were guests of honor, heard superlative performances of Beethoven's Third ("Eroica") and Brahm's First Symphonies and witnessed the presentation of a resolution of welcome and appreciation to the conductor by Mayor Robert T. Capeless of Pittsfield.

Pierre Monteux, one of our soundest and most selfless musicians and conductors, took the baton for Saturday evening's concert.

The program included Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring," a score Mr. Monteux conducted in Paris in May for an enthusiastic audience in the very same hall from which he had been booed 39 years before when he led its premiere there.

The plump little Frenchman conducted the Stravinsky, a Cimarosa overture ("The Secret Marriage") and Schubert's Seventh Symphony with the recreative power and utter simplicity of manner and demeanor that are part and parcel of his personality.

Gives Arresting Score

Sunday afternoon's concert included an arresting score by L[illegible] Dallapiccola, distinguished Italian composer, a member of the composition department of the Berkshire Music Center this Summer.

Titled "Songs in Captivity," and composed for mixed voices [illegible] pianos and [illegible] [illegible]ects are the Pra[illegible] [illegible]art. Invocation [illegible] the "Farewell [illegible] parola."

JUL 25 1952

Symphony Honored At Tanglewood

LENOX, July 24 (AP)—Berkshire County tonight presented a framed testimony to the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the opening of the 15th Tanglewood festival season.

Pittsfield Mayor Robert T. Capeless presented the testimonial to Conductor Charles Munch before 8250 first nighters, 1150 more than attended the opening performance last year.

"Berkshire as well as Boston claims the world's greatest orchestra as its own," Capeless said, "though it has not before expressed its appreciation officially."

The festival will continue every Thursday and Saturday night and Sunday afternoon through Aug. 10.

TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

JUL 16 1952

Real Artistry Found In Music At Berkshire

By FREDERICK J. KOUNTZ

The Berkshire Festival, which is now in the second decade of a useful existence, is in reality the summer concert season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

The idea of the festival took root more than 15 years ago in the same general location near Lenox, Mass. It was then purely a local venture administered by folk from the region roundabout.

In due time came Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. A summer music school was created. New grounds were acquired. The concert series was enlarged and re-enlarged over the years.

400 Students At Center

As of this summer, there are more than 400 students in the Berkshire Music Center. They are taught by some 40 musicians in the arts of composition, chamber music, orchestral playing and all the phases of the choral medium. They should also, one suspects, be in a position to obtain a thorough grounding in musicianship. For, by and large, the members of the Boston Orchestra, who are their teachers for the most part, are thoroughly grounded musicians.

The concerts presently in progress are called the "Theater-Concert Hall Series." They are the first public concerts by Boston Orchestra personnel in the lush Tanglewood surroundings during the summer season. The orchestra employed in these concerts is one of chamber proportions. And the audience is generally considerably smaller than that which throngs from all over the country to the later concerts with full orchestra.

Munch, Ross Conduct

As of today, there have been played three of the six chamber orchestra concerts. I heard the third of them Saturday night. The conductors were Charles Munch, the permanent music director of the Boston Orchestra, and Hugh Ross, the director of choral activities in the Berkshire Music Center.

The program was given entirely to music of the 17th and 18th centuries; the Suite from Rameau's "Dardanus," Francis Couperin's, "La Grand," so-called, Concert dans le Gout Theatral, No. 8, three Fantasies for Strings by Henry Purcell, Vivaldi's Concert, Opus 3, No. 11, all of which were conducted by Mr. Munch, and Michel LaLande's Motet, "De Profundis," which was conducted by Mr. Ross, and required the services of chorus and five vocal soloists.

For all these works the orchestra ranged in number of players from 45 to 60 in round figures. And, if one were of a mind to seek out a virtuose chamber orchestra, this group would provide a rewarding end of the search. It is indeed a magnificent group of players.

Purcell Music Tops

It was quite fitting that such players should be concerned with a program of music that was by turns precise, graceful, vigorous, intense, but always, and all of it, created with the skill, the integrity, and the musicianship of real artistry.

The finest fusion of content and performance was produced in the Purcell music. The pieces themselves are superbly wrought, tight, melodically rich, magnificently vigorous, and extraordinarily expressive. And the execution matched the content.

In the LaLande Motet, there appeared a bass voice in the person of Richard Sharretts, presumably a student at the Berkshire Center, which was as rich and as artistically used as any I have heard in many seasons. He reminded one pointedly of Alexander Kipnis in his prime.

Within the hall and in the surrounding grounds there was an audience of some 4,000.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 24 1952

PIERRE MONTEUX AT TANGLEWOOD

Visiting Conductor On Podium Saturday Night

Major concerts under the direction of Pierre Monteux, guest conductor, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a choral [illegible] discussion on music composers, public rehearsals of the orchestra and special performances for box and reserved seat holders are on the program at Tangelwood for next week.

Pierre Monteux will conduct the Berkshire Festival Concert program on Saturday night of this week, and on Saturday evening, Aug. 2. The midweek concert on Thursday will be directed by Charles Munch, permanent conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Tenth Celebration

Tenth celebration of "Tanglewood on Parade" will be observed Friday, Aug. 1 and the evening concert will be conducted by former Tanglewood students.

The complete schedule of events from Saturday through Sunday, Aug. 3, follows:

Saturday, July 26

10 a. m. Boston Symphony Orchestra Public Rehearsal (Benefit, Pension Fund)
1 p. m. Informal concert by Tanglewood Study Group
8.15 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Pierre Monteux conducting
Overture, "The Secret Marriage" . Cimarosa
Symphony No. 7, in C major .... Schubert
"The Rite of Spring" .... Stravinsky

Sunday, July 27

10 a. m. Chamber Music
3 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting
Symphonic Piece from "Redemption .... Franck
Symphony in C major .... Bizet
"Three Prisoners' Songs" .... Dallapiccola (with chorus, conducted by Hugh Ross)
"Daphnis and Chloe" .... Ravel Suites 1 and 2 (with chorus)
8.15 p. m. Composers' Forum

Wednesday, July 30

8.15 p. m. Fine Arts Quartet, gift of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress

Thursday, July 31

8.15 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting
Incidental Music for "Pelleas et Melisande" ...... Faure
Ballade for Piano and Orchestra .. Faure
Piano Concerto .... Ravel (Nicole Henroit, soloist)
Symphony No. 4, in E minor .... Brahms

Friday, Aug. 1

Tenth celebration of Berkshire Music Center "TANGLEWOOD ON PARADE"
4 p. m. Special Performance for box and reserved seat holders, Pergolesi's opera, "Livietta e Tracolla" and Raymond Wilding-White's "The Tub"
6 p. m. Fanfare, followed by simultaneous chamber music, symphony orchestra and Singer's opera, "Alcottiana"
7 p. m. Choral concert on the porch of main house and time for a picnic on the lawn
8.15 p. m. Concert by Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by former Tanglewood students
The Prairie (last movement) .... Foss
James Aliferis conducting
"Poeme" .... Chausson
Howard Shanet conducting
Soloist, Jacob Krachmalnick (Concertmaster of the Philadelphia Orchestra)
Piano Concerto in G minor .. Mendelssohn
Lukas Foss conducting
Soloist: Seymour Lipkin (Winner of the Rachmaninoff Award)
Carmen (last act) .... Bizet
Leonard Bernstein conducting
Soloists: Mildred Miller (Metropolitan Opera Company)
David Lloyd (New York City Center Opera)
James Pease (Hamburg Opera)
Berkshire Festival Chorus
Lawn party, door prizes, waltzing on the lawn

Saturday, Aug. 2

10 a. m. Public rehearsal of Boston Symphony Orchestra (Benefit, Pension Fund)
4 p. m. Composers' Forum
8.15 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Pierre Monteux conducting Prelude and Love-death "Tristan und Isolde" .... Wagner
Wotan's Farewell and Fire Music "Die Walkure" .... Wagner
Final Scene "Siegfried" .... Wagner
Immolation Scene "Gotterdammerung" .... Wagner
Soloists: Margaret Harshaw, Howard Vandenberg, James Pease

Sunday, Aug. 3

10 a. m. Chamber Music
3 p. m. Berkshire Festival Concert, Charles Munch conducting
Overture to "Egmont" .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 8 .... Beethoven
"Iberia" .... Debussy
"Danse des Morts" .... Honegger (with chorus)

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

JUL 25 1952

Children to Visit Tanglewood Saturday

Children enrolled in the Summer Music Center at William Hall High School will visit Tanglewood Music Center at Lenox, Mass., Saturday.

The youngsters will see the Boston Symphony Orchestra rehearse with Dr. Charles Munch conducting.

The group will leave by car from Hall High at 8:15 a. m. and return by 3 p. m. Additional cars are needed to transport children and parents interested in driving are asked to call Frank H. Groff, head of the Summer Music Center faculty and director of music in West Hartford schools.

From George L. Geiger
Managing Editor

THE STANDARD

In Tanglewood Opera Role

—Will Plouffe Photo

Jacqueline Bazinet of New Bedford, right, confronts the traitor Sextus (Shirley Winston) as she sings the role of Vitellia in a scene from Mozart's opera "Titus" at Tanglewood.

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 24 1952

Plays at Tanglewood Next Week

Artur Rubinstein, world-famous pianist, will be the Tanglewood next Thursday evening. He will play th certo No. 2 for piano and orchestra, with the Boston S the direction of Charles Munch.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

Gala Atmosphere Of Berkshire Festival Runs High This Year

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS
BUFFALO EVENING NEWS Music Critic

LENOX, Mass., July 28 — Except for last Summer, when the benevolent figure of Serge Koussevitzky, who died in June 1951, was missing, the atmosphere at the Berkshire Music Festivals always has partaken of a certain gala quality and tempo.

The incomparable beauty of Tanglewood and the surrounding Berkshire region, the unusual spell of beautiful music played excitingly in such a rare setting, as much as the caliber of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the personality of Koussevitzky, have made the festival truly one of this continent's unique music events.

Charles Munch, Koussevitzky's successor, is a man of equal personal magnetism and individuality in his approach to music and the gala atmosphere that prevails at these festivals has run especially high during the opening series of major concerts the past week end.

Officials Are Guests

It was the first time Mr. Munch conducted the Boston Symphony since their triumphal tour together in Europe earlier this Summer.

Town and county officials were guests of honor, heard superlative performances of Beethoven's Third ("Eroica") and Brahms's First Symphonies and witnessed the presentation of a resolution of welcome and appreciation to the conductor by Mayor Robert T. Capeless of Pittsfield.

Pierre Monteux, one of our soundest and most selfless musicians and conductors, took the baton for Saturday evening's concert.

The program included Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring," a score Mr. Monteux conducted in Paris in May for an enthusiastic audience in the very same hall from which he had been booed 39 years before when he led its premiere there.

The plump little Frenchman conducted the Stravinsky, a Cimarosa overture ("The Secret Marriage") and Schubert's Seventh Symphony with the recreative power and yet utter simplicity of manner and demeanor that are part and parcel of his personality.

Gives Arresting Score

Sunday afternoon's concert included an arresting score by [illegible] Dallapiccola, distinguished [illegible] composer, a member of the [illegible] rtment of the Be[illegible] Center this Summer [illegible] in Captivity" [illegible] mixed voices [illegible] by the Berkshire [illegible] Lucas Foss and [illegible] pianists, and the [illegible] ss conducted [illegible] o assisted in [illegible] th suites of Ra[illegible] hnis et Chloe [illegible] instrumented and [illegible] rama Mr. Munch [illegible] Ravel [illegible] ne piece from [illegible] l Bizet's enchanting [illegible] phony."

GAZETTE

JUL 25 1952

Berkshire Claims Orchestra

LENOX, July 25 (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra has a framed testimony from Berkshire County claiming "the world's greatest orchestra as its own."

Pittsfield Mayor Robert T. Capeless presented the testimony to Conductor Charles Munch before 8250 persons last night at the opening of the 15th Tanglewood festival season.

"Berkshire as well as Boston claims the world's greatest orchestra as its own though it has not before expressed its appreciation officially," Capeless said.

The festival will continue every Thursday and Saturday night and Sunday afternoon through Aug. 10.

The Berkshire Evening Eagle, Tuesday, July 22, 1952

Plouffe

BERKSHIRE WOODWIND ENSEMBLE: Left to right, Harold Meek, James Pappoutakis, Louis Speyer, Pasquale Cardillo and Raymond Allard, who will play tomorrow night at the Berkshire Music Center through the generosity of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress for Friends of Mrs. Coolidge and the Berkshire Music Center.

Coolidge Concert Tomorrow Night At Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD—For their program tomorrow night, under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress, the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble have chosen Berger's Quartet in C major, for flute, oboe, clarinet and bassoon; Divertissement, Op. 6 for Woodwind Quintet (Fine); Rapsodie, for English horn and piano (Debussy) and Sextet, for woodwind quintet and piano (Poulenc).

The concert will be the third of four weekly programs, to which friends of Mrs. Coolidge and Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited.

Members of the ensemble are: James Pappoutakis, flute; Louis Speyer, oboe and English horn; Pasquale Cardillo, clarinet; Raymond Allard, bassoon; Harold Meek, French horn and David Barnett, assisting artist, piano.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 25 1952

8250 Present at Opening Of Tanglewood Season

Dr. Munch Conducts Two Sure-Fire Favorites to Delight Patrons at 15th Annual Festival

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Tanglewood, July 24—Beethoven's Third Symphony, the "Eroica," and Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C Minor were chosen by Dr. Charles Munch to open tonight the series of nine concerts of the Berkshire Music Festival given in the shed during the next three weeks. An estimated 8250 people reacted as was to be expected to the performances of these two sure-fire, favorite symphonies.

Here are two symphonies, each so great in its own right, that each can stand a variety of interpretations without losing, or failing to communicate, their inherent greatness. There have been as many interpretations of these two works as there have been conductors to interpret them. We have ceased to compare the various readings.

Dr. Munch brings to all his readings an intimacy, sensitivity and musicality which makes them intensely personal, whether or not they fully reveal the greatness of a work. So it was tonight. Both the "Eroica" and the Brahams symphony were done in an intensely personal manner but we have heard many interpretations which towered above them.

The orchestra, appearing together for the first time since their triumphs in Europe, was in first class condition, yet they are permitted to get away with technical irregularities, something which has never been the case before. It is a great orchestra, possibly the greatest, but only eternal vigilance will keep it that way.

The "Eroica" is all things to all conductors. The "Marche Funebre" has long been a controversial subject. Dr. Munch appeared to take the words for their face value. He read into it an anguish and dignity which were at times terrifying, in spite of the fact that we have seldom, if ever, heard it played so slowly. The scherzo was a marvel of rhythmic movement and grace, while portions of the finale were downright jocular. We were listening to an intensely individual interpretation by a fine scholar and musician.

Abrupt Changes

The performance of the Brahms symphony was forthright and honest. Dr. Munch often makes dynamic changes so abrupt as to startle one. There were thrilling sonorities and lyric moments which did full justice to the music. There was sheer grandeur in the upward sweep of the momentous opening phrases and deep feeling and expression was given the mediative andante.

There is keen anticipation here over the first appearance of the veteran French conductor Pierre Monteux, who makes his bow before this Berkshire audience Saturday night. He will offer a program which will include the overture to the "Secret Marriage" by Cimarosa; Schubert's "Symphony in C Major No. 7" and Stravinsky's "Rites of Spring." Anyone who has heard Monteux conduct this Stravinsky work will never forget it and Saturday night, with the great Boston Symphony Orchestra at his command, there should be a thrilling, definitive performance of this work. Mr. Monteux was conductor of the Boston orchestra from 1929 to 1934. He became conductor of the San Francisco Symphony orchestra in 1935. Remaining with that orchestra until retirement this year. He shared conducting duties with Dr. Munch during the Boston orchestra's tour of Europe. To have Mr. Monteux at Tanglewood this season is indeed a privilege.

BOSTON, MASS.
TRAVELER
JUL 25 1952

Plaques to Honor Two In Tanglewood Ceremony

LENOX — Two practice studios in the Little red House at Tanglewood will be dedicated to the late Anne M. Gannett of Protland, Me. and the late Robert W. Roberts of St. Petersburg, Fla. at ceremonies on the Berkshire Music Center grounds Aug. 1 at 2':30 P. M.

Mrs. Ada Holding Mliler of Providence, R. I., president of the National Federation of Music Club will officiate at the dedication, highlight of the all-day meeting of the New England District of the federation.

Mrs. Gannett was president of the federation when the project of rebuilding the Little Red House, former home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, was initaiated, and Little Red House chairman until her death last year. Mr. Roberts, husband of a member of the National board of directors, cleared off the last few thousand dollars of indebtedness on the property. In recognition of these contributions the two practice studios, providing space for 36 students each, will be marked with plaques bearing those names.

The dedication ceremony will be followed by a concert at the Red Barn featuring Claudette Sorel, the federation's 1951 Young Artist winof Mrs. Gannett, and a chamber music quintet of which John Cox, violinist, of Los Angeles, winner of an Anne M. Gannett scholarship, is a member.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

Tanglewood Has Auspicious Opening Despite a Less-than-Heroic 'Eroica'

Tanglewood is much the same [illegible] year.

The towering pines rise in their [illegible] over the velvety [illegible] spangle the [illegible] and young couples much in [illegible] the season, that is) stroll [illegible] as evening lowers and the [illegible] arrives for the concert to [illegible]

And so it was last night as the Boston Symphony opened its three weekend series of concerts in the shed.

It was a beautiful evening for a concert—clear, cool and quiet. And it was a beautiful concert—in part.

But Charles Munch couldn't be proud of the Eroica he conducted, an Eroica that was anything but heroic; an Eroica that was shallow; an Eroica that he seemed to choose to make romantic, when it should be solemn and glorious.

Yet because the Boston Symphony is a great symphony and because Mr. Munch is a great conductor, the audience that filled the shed and spread far out on the ground gave an ovation.

But as the people strolled out for the intermission their was none of the enthusiasm that is evident after an audience has heard great playing of great music.

Happily, the second half of the concert was most successful.

CHARLES MUNCH

As if to redeem himself, Mr. Munch conducted the Brahms Symphony No. 1 in the spirit called for by the great work and when the playing was completed the ovation that was given was sincere and deserved.

To Mr. Munch must go both the blame and the praise for the evening, for it was his restraint that ruined the Beethoven, his understanding that made the Brahms.

It was only a few weeks ago that the Boston Symphony returned from a truly triumphant European tour and to mark the occasion the people of Pittsfield and Bershire County last night presented the orchestra a plaque commemorating the event. The presentation was made by Pittsfield's Mayor Capeless in a nice little talk before the concert began.

The season that opened last night gives promise (despite the Eroica) of being most auspicious.

Tomorrow night Pierre Monteux will conduct the orchestra in the Overture to "The Secret Marriage" by Cimarosa, Schubert's Symphony No. 7, and Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring."

Mr. Monteux conducted the Stravinsky in Paris during the orchestra's European tour.

At a concert at 3 p. m. Sunday the program calls for a selection from Cesar Franck's Redemption; Symphony in C by Bizet and, with a chorus conducted by Hugh Ross, "Three Prisoners' Songs" by Dallapiccola and Suites 1 and 2 from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe."

Tomorrow morning there will be the usual public rehearsal by the orchestra.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 25 1952

Tanglewood's Shed Series Features Noted Musicians

Pierre Monteux Conducts 'Rite of Spring' Tomorrow Night; Elaborate Program Arranged for 'Tanglewood on Parade' Next Friday

PIERRE MONTEUX

Lenox, July 25—With an official welcome for the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Charles Munch, its conductor, by Berkshire County last night at their opening concert in the big shed, Tanglewood began its major Berkshire Festival. The concerts will continue through Aug. 10, with programs every Thursday and Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon.

Pierre Monteux arrived in Lenox Tuesday from Paris, to take the baton for the first two Saturday evening concerts as the first guest conductor not trained by the late Serge Koussevitzky. As Boston Sy[illegible]der from 1919 to 1924, and as guest conductor last season and on the European tour, Mr. Monteux is well acquainted with the orchestra. One of the highlights of Saturdays program this week end is Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring," for which he was booed when he introduced it in Paris 39 years ago and cheered when he repeated it with the Boston Symphony last May in the same hall. His second concert Aug. 2 will be all-Wagner, with Margaret Harshaw, Howard Vandenburg and James Pease as soloists.

Sunday Program

On this Sunday's program will be "Three Songs in Captivity" by Luigi Dallapiccola, who will be in the audience. He has come from Italy for the second season to teach composition at the Berkshire Music Center. The piano soloists will be Ralph Berkowitz, dean of the school, and Lukas Foss, pianist, conductor and composer who is teaching at the Center. Hugh Ross will conduct, with the chorus.

For Thursday's program Mr. Munch has chosen Ravel's Piano Concerto, with Nicole Henriot as soloist, a role for which she is famous. It will conclude with Brahms' Fourth Symphony, for which orchestra and conductor recently received the highest award of the Academie du Disque Francais publicly proclaimed in the Paris National Assembly.

The concert Sunday, Aug. 3, will close with the "Danse des Morts" by Arthur Honegger, old friend of the conductor, who made his first visit to Lenox four years ago when illness curtailed the composer's engagement to teach at Tanglewood. It will be the first performance of the piece in the East and the second in America.

The week's events at the school, open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center who contribute to its support, include chamber music, composers' forum and Tanglewood on Parade, the benefit to be held Aug. 1 to celebrate the school's tenth season. The orchestra will hold a public rehearsal each Saturday morning for its pension fund.

Tickets and program information may be obtained by mail addressed to Tanglewood, Lenox.

Events for Week

The complete program for the week starting tomorrow, follows:—

Saturday
10 a. m.
Boston Symphony Orchestra Public Rehearsal (Benefit, Pension Fund)
1 p. m.
Informal concert by Tanglewood Study Group
8.15 p. m.
Berkshire Festival Concert
Pierre Monteux conducting
Overture, "The Secret Marriage" .... Cimarosa
Symphony No. 7, in C major .... Schubert
"The Rite of Spring" .... Stravinsky

Sunday
10 a. m.
Chamber Music
3 p. m.
Berkshire Festival Concert
Charles Munch conducting
Symphonic Piece from "Redemption" .... Franck
Symphony in C major .... Bizet
"Three Prisoners' Songs" ... Dallapiccola
(with chorus, conducted by Hugh Ross)
"Daphnis and Chloe," Suites 1 and 2 .... Ravel
(with chorus)
8.15 p. m.
Composers' Forum

Wednesday
8.15 p. m.
Fine Arts Quartet, gift of Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation in the Library of Congress

Thursday
8.15 p. m.
Berkshire Festival Concert
Charles Munch conducting
Incidental Music for "Pelleas et Melisande" .... Faure
Ballade for Piano and Orchestra
Piano Concerto .... Ravel
(Nicole Henroit, soloist)
Symphony No. 4, in E minor ..... Brahms

Friday
Tenth celebration of Berkshire Music Center
"Tanglewood On Parade"
4 p. m.
Special performance for box and reserved seat holders, Pergolesi's opera, "Livietta e Tracolla" and Raymond Wilding-White's "The Tub."
6 p. m.
Fanfare, followed by simultaneous chamber music, symphony orchestra and Singer's opera, "Alcottiana."
7 p. m.
Choral concert on the porch of main house and time for a picnic on the lawn.
8.15 p. m.
Concert by Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by former Tanglewood students.
The Prairie (last movement) .... Foss
James Aliferis conducting
"Poeme" .... Chausson
Howard Shanet conducting
Soloist, Jacob Krachmalnick (Concertmaster of the Philadelphia Orchestra)
Piano Concerto in G minor .. Mendelssohn
Lukas Foss conducting
Soloist: Seymour Lipkin
(Winner of the Rachmaninoff Award)
Carmen (last act) .... Bizet
Leonard Bernstein conducting
Soloists: Mildred Miller (Metropolitan Opera Company)
David Lloyd (New York City Center Opera)
James Pease (Hamburg Opera)
Berkshire Festival Chorus
Lawn party, door prizes, waltzing on the lawn

Saturday
10 a. m.
Boston Symphony Orchestra Public Rehearsal (Benefit, Pension Fund)
4 p. m.
Composers' Forum
8.15 p. m.
Berkshire Festival Concert
Pierre Monteux conducting
Prelude and Love-death "Tristan und Isolde" .... Wagner
Wotan's Farewell and Fire Music, "Die Walkure"
Final Scene, "Siegfried"
Immolation Scene, "Gotterdammerung"
Soloists: Margaret Harshaw, Howard Vandenberg, James Pease

Sunday
10 a. m.
Chamber Music
3 p. m.
Berkshire Festival Concert
Charles Munch conducting
Overture to "Egmont" Symphony No. 8 .... Beethoven
"Iberia" .... Debussy
"Danse des Morts" .... Honegger
(with chorus)

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 27 1952

ON PARADE

"Tanglewood on Parade" is a many-ringed musical event that is given almost in circus fashion each year to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. This year's "parade" will be on Friday. To celebrate the tenth anniversary of the center, the leading participants will be former students who have made names for themselves since their student days.

Leonard Bernstein, James Aliferis, Howard Shanet and Lukas Foss will conduct the Boston Symphony. Jacob Krachmalnick will be the violin soloist in Chausson's "Poeme" and Mildred Miller, David Lloyd and James Pease will have the leads in the last act of "Carmen."

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUL 26 1952

TANGLEWOOD RECITAL

Lenox, July 26—An unscheduled lecture-recital of Dutch songs will be given at Tanglewood Tuesday afternoon at 4.30 by Arthur Schoep, baritone. A student in stage direction in the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center, Mr. Schoep collected the material for his performance while studying in Holland on a Fulbright grant by the United States Department of State. His piano accompanist will be Felix Wolfes of the faculty of the school. The recital, which will be held in the chamber music hall, will be open to friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 27 1952

'PRISONERS' SONGS' BY DALLAPICCOLA ON PROGRAM TODAY

Tanglewood On Parade' Benefit to Be Presented Thursday

Lenox, July 26—With an offical welcome for the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Charles Munch by Berkshire County Thursday night at their opening concert in the big shed, Tanglewood began its major Berkshire Festival. The concerts will continue through Aug. 10, with programs every Thursday and Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon.

Pierre Monteux has arrived in Lenox from Paris, to take the baton for the first two Saturday evening concerts as the first guest conductor not trained by the late Serge Koussevitzky. As Boston Symphony leader from 1919 to 1924, and as guest conductor last season and on the European tour, Mr. Monteux is well acquainted with the orchestra. His concert Aug. 2 will be all-Wagner, with Margaret Harshaw, Howard Vandenburg and James Pease as soloists.

NICOLE HENRIOT

On tomorrow's program will be "Three Songs in Captivity" by Luigi Dallapiccola, who will be in the audience, having come from Italy for the second season to teach composition at the Berkshire Music Center. The piano soloists will be Ralph Berkowitz, dean of the school, and Lukas Foss, pianist, conductor and composer who is teaching at the Center. Hugh Ross will conduct, with the chorus.

For Thursday's program Mr. Munch has chosen Ravel's piano concerto, with Nicole Henriot as soloist, a role for which she is famous. It will conclude with Brahms' fourth symphony, for which orchestra and conductor recently received the highest award of the Academie du Disque Francais publicly proclaimed in the Paris National Assembly.

The concert Sunday, Aug. 3 will close with the "Danse des Morts" by Arthur Honegger, old friend of the conductor, who made his first visit to Lenox four years ago when illness curtailed the composer's engagement to teach at Tanglewood. It will be the first performance of the piece in the East and the second in America.

The week's events at the school, open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center who contribute to its support, include chamber music, composers' forum and Tanglewood on Parade, the benefit to be held Aug. 1 to celebrate the school's 10th season. The orchestra will hold a public rehearsal each Saturday morning for its pension fund.

Tickets and program information may be obtained by mail addressed to Tanglewood, Lenox.

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD

JUL 26 1952

Tanglewood Concert To Be Broadcast

The sixth concert of the chamber orchestra of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood will be broadcast at 8:25 tonight over Radio Station WGBH.

Directed by Charles Munch, tonight's performance will be the first of four to be heard on successice Saturdays

---

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
FREE PR[illegible]
7/26/52

Tanglewood To Celebrate Its 10th Season

Tanglewood will be [illegible] Friday, Aug. 1 to cele[illegible] season and to help th[illegible] Music Center for whose [illegible] event is held each year. [illegible] its most illustrous alum[illegible] turn to appear with th[illegible] Symphony Orchestra in the evening concert.

At 6 o'clock, as in previous benefits, the school will be on view, with a symphony concert in the shed, the chorus on the porch and chamber music in its own hall. "Alcottiano" by Singer will be given its first performance in the theatre. After time for a picnic on the lawn, James Aliferis will conduct the last movement of Lukas Foss' "The Prairie," Howard Shanet will conduct Chausson's "Poeme" with Jacob Krachmalnick, concertmaster of the Philadelphia Orchestra as soloist, and Mr. Foss will conduct Mendelssohn's Piano Concerto in G minor with Seymour Lipkin, winner of the Rachmaninoff Award, as soloist. In the second half Leonard Bernstein will take the podium for the last act of "Carmen" with the Festival Chorus and Mildred Miller, mezzo-soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company; David Lloyd, tenor of the New York City Center Opera Company and James Pease, baritone with the Hamburg Opera. The program will close with waltzing on the lawn.

For the holders of box and reserved seat tickets a special performance of Pergolesi's opera, "Livietta and Tracolo" will be staged in the garden at 4 o'clock.

In its 10 sessions, interrupted by the war, 3812 students have attended the school, where many have held scholarships. This year awards are automatic for those who play in the orchestra, sing leading roles or study composition. They have come from every state and 199 from 44 countries. In 21 major symphony orchestras are 120 former Tanglewood students, including players and conductors. The Cleveland Orchestra leads with 15. Many outstanding singers, choral conductors and composers have studied there. Charles Munch conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is director, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky, its founder.

Tickets are on sale at Tanglewood or through the committee, of which Mrs. Koussevitzky is chairman.

RALEIGH, N. C.
CAROLINIAN

JUL 2[illegible]

KNOWLES DUO WILL APPEAR

DURHAM, N. C. — Adriana Knowles, mezzo soprano, and P[illegible] Knowles, teno,r will appear [illegible] in North Carolina College's Duke Auditorium Wednesday night, July 23 at 8:15 in a Summer School recital.

Adriana Knowles, who is [illegible] distaff half of the Knowles [illegible] possesses a rich mezzo - sop[illegible] voice of wide range and [illegible] cultivation. When only seven [illegible] its possibilities were so apparent that she was awarded a scholarship to the Berkshire Music Festival where she met Paul Knowles, tenor, who was singing in the premiere in America of Benjamin Britten's opera, "Peter Brim[illegible]" They were married after a hecti[illegible] courtship carried on between [illegible] sons rehersals and public performances.

Mrs. Knowles has sung with such artists as Robert Merrill and Marguerite Piazza, both of the Metropolitan Opera, and has been soloist in many musical performances in Boston and New York.

Paul Knowles won the Metropolitan Opera Auditions of the A[illegible] and has been awarded a Fulbright scholarship for foreign study. He has made an enviable reputation as an oratorio and opera singer and has sung with the Philadelphia Orchestra, Boston Symphony, the Handel and Haydn Oratorio Society and the American Broadcasting Symphony, as well as three Town Hall performan[illegible] with the Little Orchestra Society of New York.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

Two Heroic Symphonies Open Music Shed Series

Boston Symphony Orchestra and Charles Munch Officially Welcomed at Tanglewood; Haydn Symphonies and Schubert Mass Heard in Concert Hall

[illegible]

Beethoven and Brahms

[illegible] variations of the finale.

[illegible] the Brahms was [illegible] Brahms took [illegible] seriously and had the courage to wait until he was [illegible] secure and had something to say before he trod where others had [illegible]. The result was one of the great expressions of all time in [illegible] is how it sounded [illegible] concert. Mr. Munch and his men gave it an eloquent unfoldment [illegible] a finely balanced performance in [illegible] its monumental proportions and majestic breadth. The audience [illegible] that it had heard [illegible] authoritatively performed, [illegible] orchestra and its conductor [illegible] reception.

Concert Hall Final

[illegible]

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 27 1952

The Musical Scene

A Slander That Ruined a Concert Tour; Study Group Studying Hard

By JAY S. HARRISON

It is a commonplace that the spawn of idle chatter is Mischief. But damage done verbally is often cast aside, as though the spoken word itself is open to question. Another matter entirely, however, is the printed statement, for an untruth in type manages, at least, to look somewhat authentic.

A recent demonstration of the insidious qualities lurking behind the printed lie points to the far-famed pianist Claudio Arrau. Mr. Arrau, having returned to the States from abroad, began preparations for a trip to South America, and here his purpose was twofold: to visit his ninety-two-year-old mother, Senora Lucrezia Arrau, in Santiago, Chile, and to play concerts in that city and Lima, Peru. For a while all went well—and then the blow fell.

To his amazement, District No. 3 of the Immigration and Naturalization Service refused to issue Mr. Arrau the re-entry permit needed by the pianist for his return to the United States after his South American voyage, and for this reason both trip and concert tour were immediately canceled. An investigation headed by the staff of the service, it became known, was under way to determine what connection, if any, Mr. Arrau had with certain South American organizations of questionable background. During this time the artist himself was unaware of the investigation or, at any rate, what it was that was being investigated. And then the hidden facts came to light.

Last February, a newspaper in Caracas, Venezuela, the "Tribuna Popular," known as a Communist-influenced periodical, printed a story which purported to quote Mr. Arrau as having said that he sorely regretted to leave Venezuela before performing a projected recital for the benefit of a leading Peace Committee. And it was this notice that had started the proceedings culminating in the retracted re-entry permit.

Straightway Mr. Arrau discovered the problem he proved beyond the thread of a doubt that (1) he did not appear in Caracas until one month following the announcement's publication, and (2) he had not been to Caracas for two years prior to its troublesome appearance. However, the brief article had come into the hands of the vigilant immigration service and, as such, an inquiry was made necessary.

The result of the inquiry, after the incontestable proofs were brought into the open, was a quick return to Mr. Arrau of his re-entry permit, together with the promise that at any time in the future a similar license would be granted the pianist at one day's notice. But it was too late. The mischief had already been done and the concerts canceled. Again a flagrant lie had caught up innocents in a web spun by the guilty.

* * *

Sturdy Study Group: The search for unfamiliar compositions is an unceasing one. The pianist who rifles through a thousand off-the-beaten-track pages to find a single acceptable sonata, the violinist whose fingers grow calloused in the playing of countless scores—these are familiar figures on the musical scene. And yet, for a city dweller, access to a work that may lighten and brighten the stark and standard Bach-Beethoven-Brahms recital diet is not hard to come by. Libraries are readily available for consultation and musicological nuggets covered with the dust of oblivion have a way of dropping from conservatory shelves into the unsuspecting arms of academicians. Then, too, composers, classically said to congregate in large towns, are never averse to answering the inquiries of artists bent on enlivening their repertoire.

But what of the suburbanite musician or the performer to whose home no highways lead? His potential resources are, to say the least, few and dreary. This is doubly the case with serious amateurs, music educators and others interested in community music, for these alone do not fall heir to the network of channels which distribute to the needy new new and new old music found or produced in our time.

A major step in the direction of alleviating this artistic bottleneck has been brought about by the foundation of the Tanglewood Study Group, a department of the Berkshire Music Center. Under the guidance of Ingolf Dahl, a member of the music staff of the University of California, a group of students including among others a doctor, a lawyer, an insurance broker, an army officer and an accountant is now dedicating from two to six weeks of its time to perusing and performing music of another day whose proper message and practice shall then return with the classmates to their own community. Thus one discovers that this summer the Study Group will try its hand at the music of Elizabethan England and Rennaisance Italy, together with glees and catches put together in the time of Charles II's merry reign. There will also be scenes from early Italian comic opera and chamber cantatas composed by contemporary composers especially for Mr. Dahl's participating members. In all, the curriculum represents a heady brew and one of ample substance. It speaks of careful preparation and trumpets well its future.

* * *

Incidentals: The duo-pianists Arthur Gold and Robert Fizdale, performing this afternoon at 5:30 on NBC-TV's "Television Recital Hall," have scheduled the premiere of Samuel Barber's new suite, "Souvenirs." The composer is also orchestrating the work for its presentation as a ballet to be choreographed by George Balanchine and danced by his New York City Ballet Company. . . . After resisting all offers for forty years, the eighty-five-year-old Jean Sibelius has finally permitted his music to be used in a motion picture. Excerpts from the great Finn's fourth, fifth and seventh symphonies are to become part of the background for a film, "The Answer," now being made in Finland by the director Viljo Lampela. . . . Owing to a highly successful audience response the Cincinnati Summer Opera Association is extending its season of opera at the Cincinnati Zoo by one week, during which time Robert Merrill and Salvatore Baccaloni will be heard in Rossini's "Barber of Seville." . . . The world premiere of Hamilton Forrest's new opera, "Don Fortuno," took place last Wednesday at the National Music Camp in Interlochen, Mich. Forrest, it will be remembered, rose to fame overnight when his first opera, "Camille," was performed in this country and abroad by the renowned soprano Mary Garden.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 27 1952

TANGLEWOOD GUEST

Pierre Monteux, who will conduct his second Saturday night program in the Music Shed at the Berkshire Festival this week.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 27 195

Memory of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Honored at Tanglewood Program

Chamber Music Played at Lenox Library as Birthday Tribute; Gift Presented for Purchase of Books

(Special to The Republican)

Berkshire Hills, July 26—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the late beloved director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which for the past 15 years has staged the annual music festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, had his birthday honored today by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation with the latter arranging a musical program at the Lenox Library. The library also received a check for $2000 to be used to make additions to its collection of books on music, records and scores. Miss Irene M. Poirier, librarian, received a letter this week from Mrs. Koussevitzky, widow of the late director telling her of the action taken by the Foundation board recently when it voted to make the $2000 gift.

For the occasion this afternoon a chamber music program was arranged with members of the faculty at Berkshire Music Center providing the music. The program consisted of Beethoven-Cavatina from Quartet opus 130, presented by William Kroll, Joseph de Pasquale, Richard Burgin, and Jean Bedetti. Bruckner-Adagio from the Quintet for two violins, two violas and cello. The quartet was joined in this presentation by Eugene Lehner. As another feature, movie films of Tanglewood, and the "March of Time" were shown in Sedgwick Hall in the library.

Antique Shows

Antique shows, which have come into prominence during the last several years in the Berkshires, will feature three in the area with two of them currently underway and continuing until Aug. 9. The Berkshire Hills show will be in Lenox Town Hall, and the Pittsfield antique show will be held in Masonic Temple building in that city.

The third show will be the one sponsored by Old Parish Church in Sheffield, the oldest town in the county. It will be the fourth annual event this year, and will be held for three days in the church parlors, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Aug. 14-16. The show will be open daily from 10 a. m., until 9 p. m., except on Saturday, the closing day, when it will close at 6. The Sheffield affair in its brief history has become recognized as the outstanding show of its kind in the extreme Southern Berkshire area. The committee in charge of the exhibit will also serve lunch and tea during the three-day showing.

Berkshire residents and visitors alike will have the opportunity this coming week to attend a program by Mr. and Mrs. Carveth Wells, noted lecturers and explorers, to be given at Berkshire Playhouse Stockbridge, Thursday and Friday afternoons at 2.30. They will show a movie film, "Through the Malay Jungle," an fashion show of native dress, and finally their mynah bird, "Raffles" who speaks, sings and whistles. The program is for benefit of the Stockbridge Youth Center. Mr. and Mrs. Wells are guests of Mrs. Lyman Beecher Stowe at Glendale. Tickets for the affair may be purchased at the Playhouse or at Benjamin's pharmacy, Stockbridge.

Athenaeum Exhibits

An interesting exhibition of early American bottles and flasks from the collection of Edward A. Brewer of Pittsfield and Ashley Falls, and Robert G. Newman, librarian at the Berkshire Anthenaeum, is on display in the main reading room at the Anthenaeum. The exhibit will continue until Labor Day.

The Brewer collection will represent only a small portion of the large variety of bottles and flasks he has acquired for many years. Besides the bottles and flasks Mr. Brewer has many other items of early American history, and his house in Ashley Falls is one of the oldest in the county and probably one of the most interesting of private homes anywhere, from a historical point of view.

The Newman collection is an interesting one, and features bitters bottles used by 19th century teetotalers, who would look with disdain on liquors but who would take "bitters" usually of high-alcoholic brew, slightly flavored with another agent to disguise the strong alcoholic contents of the bottle—and which they claimed were taken solely for medicinal purposes. Also in the collection in an oil painting of early American bottles done by Rosetta G. Newman, Pittsfield artist, and mother of Mr. Newman, librarian at the Anthenaeum.

The Berkshire Playhouse, with the co-operation of Berkshire Art Center, Canaan, N. Y., will exhibit the works of a group of artists from the Berkshire area, beginning Monday and continuing until Aug. 9. The display will be in the lounge of the Playhouse. Those whose work will be on exhibit will include Herman Bischoff, John Carroll, Joseph Gleason and Leon Soderston of Old Chatham, N. Y.; E. Arnold Clark of Great Barrington, Homer Gunn and Harry Lane, the latter director of the Berkshire Art Center, of West Stockbridge; Mrsh. Helen Hansen of Alford, Charles Harsany of Stephentown, N. Y., Stuart Henry of Pittsfield, Edward Gustave Jacobsson of Canaan, N. Y., Mrs. June Kimball of Lanesboro, and George Picken of Tyringham.

Mrs. C. Torno Speyer, who is spending the summer at Mahkeenac Heights, Lenox, is exhibiting her paintings at the Carry-All, near Tanglewood. Mrs. Speyer has had exhibitions at Jordan Marsh Co., and Symphony Hall in Boston, and her works have received high praise from art critics. She has also exhibited paintings at the Brookline library and has been a member of the Brookline Art Association for the past several years. Her exhibit at the Carry-All may be viewed daily from 10.30 a. m. to 6 p. m.

[70]

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 27 1952

Two Heroic Symphonies Open Music Shed Series

Boston Symphony Orchestra and Charles Munch Officially Welcomed at Tanglewood; Haydn Symphonies and Schubert Mass Heard in Concert Hall

By VICTOR PRAHL

[illegible]

[illegible] orchestra an appreciative plaque.

Beethoven and Brahms

For this concert [illegible] two of the [illegible] symphonic literature, Beethoven's "Eroica" and Brahms' First," and it [illegible] great [illegible] festival performances in which one felt both conductor and performers were on their mettle [illegible] seemed to hear new beauties in these familiar works.

Charles Munch has already made himself known in previous interpretations of these two masterpieces and space does not allow a detailed analysis of his lofty conceptions but we must mention the serene beauty with which the simple opening theme of the "Eroica" soared forth, the dramatic clarity in the exposition of the development section, the sustained beauty of the magnificent funeral march, the terrific climax created in the scherzo, and the glorious, transcendent feeling felt in the marvelous variations of the finale.

In performance the Brahms was equally impressive. Brahms took the symphonic form seriously and had the courage to wait until he was completely secure and had something to say before he trod where others had rushed. The result was one of the great expressions of all time in this form, and that is how it sounded in this concert. Mr. Munch and his men gave it an eloquent unfoldment in a finely balanced performance in keeping with its monumental proportions and majestic breadth. The audience, realizing that it had heard great music, superlatively performed, gave the orchestra and its conductor a rapturous reception.

Concert Hall Final

We must not forget the last concert in the small shed last Sunday afternoon at which the members of the orchestra gave such delightful performances of two Haydn Symphonies the E flat, No. 99 and the D major No. 86. We have mentioned before the apparent sympathy Mr. Munch has for this type of music. Light, gay, lilting and so direct in the simplicity of their melodic statement, these two works created moments of true musical enchantment.

Although a youthful work, one heard the true voice of Franz Schubert in the six numbers from his Mass No. 2 in G major. The solos passages were handled in a professional manner by Sara Mae Endlich, soprano, Lloyd Ostenbrug, tenor, and Mac Morgan, bass. Once again Hugh Ross is to be congratulated on his worthy accomplishment with the chorus at the center this summer.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

JUL 27 1952

The Musical Scene

A Slander That Ruined a Concert Tour; Study Group Studying Hard

By JAY S. HARRISON

It is a commonplace that the spawn of idle chatter is Mischief. But damage done verbally is often cast aside, as though the spoken word itself is open to question. Another matter entirely, however, is the printed statement, for an untruth in type manages, at least, to look somewhat authentic.

A recent demonstration of the insidious qualities lurking behind the printed lie points to the far-famed pianist Claudio Arrau. Mr. Arrau, having returned to the States from abroad, began preparations for a trip to South America, and here his purpose was twofold: to visit his ninety-two-year-old mother, Senora Lucrezia Arrau, in Santiago, Chile, and to play concerts in that city and Lima, Peru. For a while all went well—and then the blow fell.

To his amazement, District No. 3 of the Immigration and Naturalization Service refused to issue Mr. Arrau the re-entry permit needed by the pianist for his return to the United States after his South American voyage, and for this reason both trip and concert tour were immediately canceled. An investigation headed by the staff of the service, it became known, was under way to determine what connection, if any, Mr. Arrau had with certain South American organizations of questionable background. During this time the artist himself was unaware of the investigation or, at any rate, what it was that was being investigated. And then the hidden facts came to light.

Last February, a newspaper in Caracas, Venezuela, the "Tribuna Popular," known as a Communist-influenced periodical, printed a story which purported to quote Mr. Arrau as having said that he sorely regretted to leave Venezuela before performing a projected recital for the benefit of a leading Peace Committee. And it was this notice that had started the proceedings culminating in the retracted re-entry permit.

Straightway Mr. Arrau discovered the problem he proved beyond the thread of a doubt that (1) he did not appear in Caracas until one month following the announcement's publication, and (2) he had not been to Caracas for two years prior to its troublesome appearance. However, the brief article had come into the hands of the vigilant immigration service and, as such, an inquiry was made necessary.

The result of the inquiry, after the incontestable proofs were brought into the open, was a quick return to Mr. Arrau of his re-entry permit, together with the promise that at any time in the future a similar license would be granted the pianist at one day's notice. But it was too late. The mischief had already been done and the concerts canceled. Again a flagrant lie had caught up innocents in a web spun by the guilty.

* * *

Sturdy Study Group: The search for unfamiliar compositions is an unceasing one. The pianist who rifles through a thousand off-the-beaten-track pages to find a single acceptable sonata, the violinist whose fingers grow calloused in the playing of countless scores—these are familiar figures on the musical scene. And yet, for a city dweller, access to a work that may lighten and brighten the stark and standard Bach-Beethoven-Brahms recital diet is not hard to come by. Libraries are readily available for consultation and musicological nuggets covered with the dust of oblivion have a way of dropping from conservatory shelves into the unsuspecting arms of academicians. Then, too, composers, classically said to congregate in large towns, are never averse to answering the inquiries of artists bent on enlivening their repertoire.

But what of the suburbanite musician or the performer to whose home no highways lead? His potential resources are, to say the least, few and dreary. This is doubly the case with serious amateurs, music educators and others interested in community music, for these alone do not fall heir to the network of channels which distribute to the needy new new and new old music found or produced in our time.

A major step in the direction of alleviating this artistic bottleneck has been brought about by the foundation of the Tanglewood Study Group, a department of the Berkshire Music Center. Under the guidance of Ingolf Dahl, a member of the music staff of the University of California, a group of students including among others a doctor, a lawyer, an insurance broker, an army officer and an accountant is now dedicating from two to six weeks of its time to perusing and performing music of another day whose proper message and practice shall then return with the classmates to their own community. Thus one discovers that this summer the Study Group will try its hand at the music of Elizabethan England and Renaissance Italy, together with glees and catches put together in the time of Charles II's merry reign. There will also be scenes from early Italian comic opera and chamber cantatas composed by contemporary composers especially for Mr. Dahl's participating members. In all, the curriculum represents a heady brew and one of ample substance. It speaks of careful preparation and trumpets well its future.

* * *

Incidentals: The duo-pianists Arthur Gold and Robert Fizdale, performing this afternoon at 5:30 on NBC-TV's "Television Recital Hall," have scheduled the premiere of Samuel Barber's new suite, "Souvenirs." The composer is also orchestrating the work for its presentation as a ballet to be choreographed by George Balanchine and danced by his New York City Ballet Company. . . . After resisting all offers for forty years, the eighty-five-year-old Jean Sibelius has finally permitted his music to be used in a motion picture. Excerpts from the great Finn's fourth, fifth and seventh symphonies are to become part of the background for a film, "The Answer," now being made in Finland by the director Viljo Lampela. . . . Owing to a highly successful audience response the Cincinnati Summer Opera Association is extending its season of opera at the Cincinnati Zoo by one week, during which time Robert Merrill and Salvatore Baccaloni will be heard in Rossini's "Barber of Seville." . . . The world premiere of Hamilton Forrest's new opera, "Don Fortuno," took place last Wednesday at the National Music Camp in Interlochen, Mich. Forrest, it will be remembered, rose to fame overnight when his first opera, "Camille," was performed in this country and abroad by the renowned soprano Mary Garden.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

JUL 27 1952

TANGLEWOOD GUEST

Pierre Monteux, who will conduct his second Saturday night program in the Music Shed at the Berkshire Festival this week.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

JUL 27 1952

Memory of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Honored at Tanglewood Program

Chamber Music Played at Lenox Library as Birthday Tribute; Gift Presented for Purchase of Books

(Special to The Republican)

Berkshire Hills, July 26—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the late beloved director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which for the past 15 years has staged the annual music festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, had his birthday honored today by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation with the latter arranging a musical program at the Lenox Library. The library also received a check for $2000 to be used to make additions to its collection of books on music, records and scores. Miss Irene M. Poirier, librarian, received a letter this week from Mrs. Koussevitzky, widow of the late director telling her of the action taken by the Foundation board recently when it voted to make the $2000 gift.

For the occasion this afternoon a chamber music program was arranged with members of the faculty at Berkshire Music Center providing the music. The program consisted of Beethoven-Cavatina from Quartet opus 130, presented by William Kroll, Joseph de Pasquale, Richard Burgin, and Jean Bedetti. Bruckner-Adagio from the Quintet for two violins, two violas and cello. The quartet was joined in this presentation by Eugene Lehner. As another feature, movie films of Tanglewood, and the "March of Time" were shown in Sedgwick Hall in the library.

Antique Shows

Antique shows, which have come into prominence during the last several years in the Berkshires, will feature three in the area with two of them currently underway and continuing until Aug. 9. The Berkshire Hills show will be in Lenox Town Hall, and the Pittsfield antique show will be held in Masonic Temple building in that city.

The third show will be the one sponsored by Old Parish Church in Sheffield, the oldest town in the county. It will be the fourth annual event this year, and will be held for three days in the church parlors, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Aug. 14-16. The show will be open daily from 10 a. m., until 9 p. m., except on Saturday, the closing day, when it will close at 6. The Sheffield affair in its brief history has become recognized as the outstanding show of its kind in the extreme Southern Berkshire area. The committee in charge of the exhibit will also serve lunch and tea during the three-day showing.

Berkshire residents and visitors alike will have the opportunity this coming week to attend a program by Mr. and Mrs. Carveth Wells, noted lecturers and explorers, to be given at Berkshire Playhouse Stockbridge, Thursday and Friday afternoons at 2.30. They will show a movie film, "Through the Malay Jungle," an fashion show of native dress, and finally their mynah bird, "Raffles" who speaks, sings and whistles. The program is for benefit of the Stockbridge Youth Center. Mr. and Mrs. Wells are guests of Mrs. Lyman Beecher Stowe at Glendale. Tickets for the affair may be purchased at the Playhouse or at Benjamin's pharmacy, Stockbridge.

Athenaeum Exhibits

An interesting exhibition of early American bottles and flasks from the collection of Edward A. Brewer of Pittsfield and Ashley Falls, and Robert G. Newman, librarian at the Berkshire Anthenaeum, is on display in the main reading room at the Anthenaeum. The exhibit will continue until Labor Day.

The Brewer collection will represent only a small portion of the large variety of bottles and flasks he has acquired for many years. Besides the bottles and flasks Mr. Brewer has many other items of early American history, and his house in Ashley Falls is one of the oldest in the county and probably one of the most interesting of private homes anywhere, from a historical point of view.

The Newman collection is an interesting one, and features bitters bottles used by 19th century teetotalers, who would look with disdain on liquors but who would take "bitters" usually of high-alcoholic brew, slightly flavored with another agent to disguise the strong alcoholic contents of the bottle—and which they claimed were taken solely for medicinal purposes. Also in the collection in an oil painting of early American bottles done by Rosetta G. Newman, Pittsfield artist, and mother of Mr. Newman, librarian at the Anthenaeum.

The Berkshire Playhouse, with the co-operation of Berkshire Art Center, Canaan, N. Y., will exhibit the works of a group of artists from the Berkshire area, beginning Monday and continuing until Aug. 9. The display will be in the lounge of the Playhouse. Those whose work will be on exhibit will include Herman Bischoff, John Carroll, Joseph Gleason and Leon Soderston of Old Chatham, N. Y.; E. Arnold Clark of Great Barrington, Homer Gunn and Harry Lane, the latter director of the Berkshire Art Center, of West Stockbridge; Mrsh. Helen Hansen of Alford, Charles Harsany of Stephentown, N. Y., Stuart Henry of Pittsfield, Edward Gustave Jacobson of Canaan, N. Y., Mrs. June Kimball of Lanesboro, and George Picken of Tyringham.

Mrs. C. Torno Speyer, who is spending the summer at Mahkeenac Heights, Lenox, is exhibiting her paintings at the Carry-All, near Tanglewood. Mrs. Speyer has had exhibitions at Jordan Marsh Co., and Symphony Hall in Boston, and her works have received high praise from art critics. She has also exhibited paintings at the Brookline library and has been a member of the Brookline Art Association for the past several years. Her exhibit at the Carry-All may be viewed daily from 10.30 a. m. to 6 p. m.

UTICA, N. Y.
OBSERVER-DISPATCH
JUL 27 1952

STUDENTS AT TANGLEWOOD—Robert Renton, 1436 Herkimer Rd., who is studying orchestra conducting, and Miss Jerre Gibson, Cosby Manor Rd., who plays violin in the Tanglewood Study Group, relax between classes on the lawn of the big music center near Lenox, Mass. First of Sunday afternoon concerts by the Boston Symphony is scheduled there today. The orchestra will be heard in other concerts on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons through Aug. 10.

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
JUL 27 1952

TOLEDO BLADE: SU

Mostly About Music

Berkshire Festival Will Close With Berlioz' Furious 'Requiem'

By JULIAN SEAMAN
Blade Staff Writer

HECTOR BERLIOZ' "Grand Mass for the Dead," a furious masterpiece termed a "Requiem," will close the present Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Festival Chorus in the Shed. Andrew McKinely, tenor, will be the soloist.

The Berlioz Requiem, infrequently performed nowadays because of its ample requirements, has had a history of intrigue, frustration and, on at least one occasion, apparent sabotage. Albert E. Weir's note on Berlioz remarks: "His two great ritual works, Te Deum and Requiem, are, for sheer savagery and the suggestion of blood-curdling rities, unsurpassed. The music is scarcely human, much less Christian."

* * *

THE REQUIEM has the pale distinction of having been commissioned twice—first to celebrate the seventh anniversary of the Revolution of July 28, 1830; again, to honor the memory of General Damremont, who commanded victorious French forces in the taking of Constantine, Algeria and was killed in the assault. Here is the troubled tale:

The first commission came after long and jealous opposition, but the ministerial decree was signed by the end of March, 1837. He had been preparing for just this chance. From the Mass of 1825, he had saved and worked over the Resurrexit; "in Italy, under the impact of St. Peter's, he had gathered ideas for a Judgement Day Oratorio," says Jacques Barzun.

"At first," writes Berlioz, "my brains boiled over. I was dizzy. Today the eruption has been regulated. The lava has made its bed and God willing everything will go well."

This Requiem had to be contrived at breathless speed and actually was finished in three months. He also found time in this interval of 12 weeks to review concerts for the Revue Musicale and to write an article for an encyclopedia.

By May portions of the score were being copied "but the Ministry," writes Barzun, "which had not scrupled to delay for its own red tape, was now worried about rehearsals and begging for speed. But dint of exertion, Berlioz finished the last page by June 29. This left him less than a month in which to have the parts completed and proofread, and to rehearse a chorus and orchestra of 400.

* * *

"THE VOICES were going smoothly when without warning and indeed without notifying Berlioz, the 'bureaus' countermanded the entire ceremony. 'Ten thousand plagues on their heads!' wrote Berlioz. 'The devil must be in it . . . The scoundrels choose to stop me now! It's outrageous!' "

Berlioz raged and swore, spurned half-hearted efforts of bureaucrats to "indemnify" him, even to the Legion of Honor and a government appointment. Performance, performance, performance! That was all he wanted. So he started a campaign, relentless and defiant, that finally brought him victory.

"On Oct. 23, 1837," Barzun recalls in his monumental biography "the news of the taking of Constantine, in Algeria, was relayed by (visual) telegraph from the south of France and with it the intelligence that General Damremont, commanding, had been killed in the assault. The government would specially honor his memory, since the feat of arms lent needful prestige to the regime.

"At once the unpolitical but impolitic Berlioz asked Dumas to put in a word in his favor with the Duke of Orleans, to whom Dumas was secretary. The ceremony was soon set for December; a few more letters were exhanged, Berlioz had a cordial interview with General Bernard, the minister of war, and he finally received the second commission for his one Requiem."

All of artistic Paris heard the dress rehearsal at the Invalides, Dec. 4. An amateur musician wrote in his journal: "The music was beautiful and strange; wild, convulsed and dolorous . . ." The service took place next day, "before the royal family, the diplomatic corps and all the fashion, power and frivolity of Paris."

The incident of apparent sabotage has been recounted variously, and no two recollections seem to agree. Says Elizabeth C. Moore, in "An Almanac for Music-Lovers":

* * *

"THE EXTENT to which a conductor may make or mar a composition is illustrated in a story from Berlioz' autobiography, in which he laments what Habeneck did to his Requiem. There had long been bad blood between the two men, and when Habeneck insisted upon conducting the first performance of the Requiem, it was over Berlioz' protsets; and the composer stood at Habeneck's side throughout to keep an eye on things.

"This was just as well, as it turned out, for at the most critical point of the Tuba Mirum when, as Berlioz writes, 'the tempo slows and the wind instruments break in with their terrible flourish—at just the one bar indeed where careful conducting is absolutely indispensable.' Habeneck put down his baton, quietly took out his snuffbox and proceded to take a leisurely pinch of snuff. Berlioz instantly sprang forward and conducted the rest of the piece—and never forgave Habeneck for the deliberately spiteful attempt to ruin it."

And this was the same Habeneck who resurrected Schubert's C major symphony and discovered the "Unfinished."

Barzun, perhaps more exact and meticulous than Mrs. Moore, who seems to have repeated a twice-told tale, gives this account:

"Habeneck, who had been forced on Berlioz by the opposition, conducted more than [illegible] musicians [illegible] in the transept. During the first number, Requiem and Kyrie things went well in spite of the usual mistakes [illegible] former. Habeneck [illegible] relaxed so [illegible] spoiled the effect [illegible] in the ensuing [illegible] failing to cue [illegible] ensembles at the [illegible] the orchestra. According to his habit, after [illegible] he laid down his baton [illegible] tory to taking a pinch of snuff [illegible] as Berlioz tells in his Memoirs [illegible] and the composer [illegible] give the sig[illegible] ceeded without [illegible]

"Whether the [illegible] bored or moved [illegible] by Berlioz' music, [illegible] sible to say, since there [illegible] be no applause, but the [illegible] were with few exceptions fav[illegible] able. Nothing like the Requiem had ever been heard by human ears, and the impression of sustained power could not be gainsaid . . . The Requiem had been an artistic success. No one in Paris who was capable of exercising judgment could doubt that this new music was something to reckon with. The leaders of the Romantic generation

---

ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER PRESS
JUL 27 1952

U. Of M.'s James Aliferis Has Big Role At Berkshire Center

By JOHN H. HARVEY

WE STAY-AT-HOMES enduring the summer heat, the humidity and the Minnesota thunderstorms in our accustomed haunts often lose touch with present and former Twin Cities musicians who range far and wide this time of year.

News of them occasionally filters back, though, and we catch glimpses of their activities.

Here are a few reports which have come to this corner:

James Aliferis, the University of Minnesota's talented choral director, will participate Aug. 1 in a tenth anniversary celebration of the Berkshire Music center, Lenox, Mass. He will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra and the music center's chorus in a movement from Lukas Foss's "The Prairie."

Harvey

On that same program will be a presentation of the last act of Bizet's "Carmen" under Leonard Bernstein's direction. In the principal roles will be Mildred Miller and David Lloyd, who appeared in the same roles in the St. Paul Civic Opera presentation of that opera several years ago.

* * *

SAMUEL FLOR, member of the Macalester college music faculty and of the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra, recently gave a violin recital at the summer session of St. Michael's college, Winooski Park, Vt., where his former teacher, Dr. Richard Stoehr, Viennese composer and musicologist, was professor until his recent retirement. He also will concertize in Colombia this summer.

Emilie Pray, pianist and Macalester faculty member, having spent a month in France and Belgium, now is in London about to begin study with Gina Bachauer, noted pianist.

Anton Winkler, Minneapolis Symphony orchestra flutist and member of the Hamline university faculty, will spend August in Hancock, Maine, studying conducting with Pierre Monteux.

Thomas Nee, former Hamline staff member, is back home in Albert Lea after a year's study in Vienna on a Fulbright scholarship. His teachers in conducting in Vienna were Hans Swarowsky and Hermann Scherchen.

Robert Erickson, composer and member of the St. Catherine college music faculty who has been on leave of absence for a year's work in New York City on a Ford Foundation fellowship, is spending July and August at Yaddo, famed colony for artists and composers at Saratoga Springs, N. Y. Both he and his wife, Lenore Erickson, painter, were lucky enough to be invited to Yaddo for the same time.

* * *

LEO KOPP AND RAY CUTTING, conductor and assistant conductor respectively of the St. Paul Civic Opera association, are working together in the North Shore Playhouse, an organization outside Chicago producing operetta and musical comedy.

Joseph Wagner, conductor of the St. Paul Pop concerts four seasons ago, has been re-engaged for the third season of eight months by the National Symphony orchestra of Costa Rica. He is the first native-born conductor from the United States to become permanent director of a Latin American orchestra.

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
JUL 27 1952

Programs This Week At Berkshire Festival

The third and final concert in Series A of the shed concert of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will take place this afternoon. Series B will start Thursday evening and will continue through Sunday, Aug. 3. Nicole Henriot will be soloist at the Saturday evening concert which will be conducted by Pierre Monteux:

The programs for the remaining concerts are as follows:

This afternoon:

Franck	Symphonic Piece, "Redemption"
Bizet	Symphony in C major
Dallapiccola	"Three Prisoners' Songs"
Ravel	"Daphnis and Chloe," Suited 1, 2 (with chorus)
SERIES B
Thursday evening
Faure	Incidental Music for "Pelleas and Melisande"
Faure	Ballade for Piano and orchestra
Ravel	Piano Concerto
Brahms	Symphony No. 4 in E minor
Solist: Nicole Henriot
Saturday evening (Conducted by Pierre Monteux)
Wagner	Prelude and Love-death from "Tristan and Isolde"
Wagner	Finale, "Die Walkuere"
Wagner	Final Scene, "Siegfried"
Wagner	Final Scene "Goterdaemerung"
Sunday afternoon, Aug. 3
Beethoven	Overture to "Egmont"
Beethoven	Symphony No. 8
Debussy	"Iberia"
Honegger	"Danse des Mortes" (with chorus)
SERIES C
Thursday evening, Aug. 7
Schumann	Symphony No. 1 ("Spring")
Swanson	Short Symphony
Tchaikovsky	Symphony No. 4
Saturday evening, Aug. 9 The Koussevitsky Memorial Concert Conducted by Leonard Bernstein
C.P.E. Bach	Andante from Concerto in D major
Copland	Symphony No. 3
Sibelius	Symphony No. 5
Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10
Berlioz	Requiem (with chorus)

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
JUL 27 1952

STUDIOS AT LENOX TO BE DEDICATED

Reminiscent of the July day in 1948 when the Little Red House at Tanglewood, Lenox, was presented to the Berkshire Music Center, will be the ceremonies on the Music Center grounds Friday when the two practice studios in the building are dedicated respectively to the late Anne M. Gannett of Portland, Me., and the late Robert W. Roberts of St. Petersburg, Fla.

Mrs. Ada Holding Miller of Providence, R. I., who is president of the National Federation of Music Clubs, will officiate at the dedication, which is an interlude in an all-day meeting of the New England District of the National Federation of Music Clubs at Lenox, which large delegations from all the New England states will attend. Mrs. Roger C. Williams of Portland and Mrs. Robert W. Roberts will be guests.

Mrs. Gannett is being honored in this way because she was president of the National Federation of Music Clubs when the project of rebuilding the Little Red House, former home of Nathaniel Hawthorne, was initiated, and because she remained Little Red House chairman for the Federation until her death in May, 1951. Mr. Roberts, husband of a member of the National Board of Directors, cleared off the last few thousand dollars of indebtedness on the property.

In recognition of these contributions the two practice studios, providing space for 36 students each, will be marked with handsome plaques bearing these names. Mrs. Willis J. Lyman of Stamford, Conn., president of the New England district, is arranging the meeting of which the dedication is a part.

---

year
Liszt
erful, him-his were ould
'

Music
the com-harp
New ough
and orchestra, Ray Green, with a rhapsody based on Appalachian folk tunes, and Walter Hendl with a concertino for harp and orchestra." They will be introduced next season . . . My friend Herbert F. Peyser, once of the New York Telegram and foreign music editor of the New York Times, now program annotator for the Philharmonic, has written a biographical booklet on Richard Strauss, to be scattered among radio members of the Philharmonic-Symphony Society . . . Leonard Bernstein will conduct his latest one-act opera, "Trouble in Tahiti," at Tanglewood Aug. 8.

MIL[illegible]
SENTINEL
[illegible]

CONDUCTOR—Thor Johnson, guest conductor of the "Music Under the Stars" Symphony Orchestra Tuesday night, keeps well stocked with batons. They break easily, he said.

Sentinel photo.

Maestro Here Lauds Gains Of Symphony

BY EDWARD P. HALLINE

Thor Johnson, born in Wisconsin Rapids, and now one of the ing young American conductors, is outspoken about the ked improvement in the sic Under the Stars" Symphony Orchestra in a year's time.

Johnson, regular conductor of Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, was a guest conductor at hington Park last summer he directs the orchestra n Tuesday night.

got to Milwaukee in time ear the program last Tuesday r another guest, Assistant ductor George Schick of the ago Symphony. And he aly has rehearsed the orches-

EW SPIRIT'

was greatly impressed by the they have improved," he at the Pfister Hotel Sunday. y worked very hard when I here a year ago, but this I notice a new spirit, an t de corps. It isn't just the people who have been added. it in the whole orchestra." d, added Johnson, it's too that after the final summer ert these musicians "dis." Said Johnson:

ertainly the state of Wisconhould have one major proonal symphony orchestra. state of Texas has half , I believe. The orchestra have here could easily be into a permanent symphony stra.

ED TO SOUTH

nson is really more of a Carolinian than a Badger, se his father, a minister, d to that Southern state Wisconsin Rapids when was about 4. His grandfa- a Great Lakes skipper, came to Green Bay from Norway hen moved to Sturgeon Bay. nson's own bent for music from his mother, a pianist, he opportunity was provided orth Carolina's fine school program.

DUCTS AT CHICAGO

nson, much in demand as a conductor during the offmonths, conducts at Grant in Chicago late this week, ng Chicago Composer Vit- Rieti's two piano concerto— greatest contemporary work t sort," he said.

n he goes to the Tangle- Festival, established by the erge Koussevitsky, to direct oston Symphony Orchestra nother great contemporary Bela Bartok's Concerto for stra, a stunning piece of which Chicago Symphony nces heard last season.

UTICA, N. Y.
OBSERVER-DISPATCH
JUL 27 1952

STUDENTS AT TANGLEWOOD—Robert Renton, 1436 Herkimer Rd., who is studying orchestra conducting, and Miss Jerre Gibson, Cosby Manor Rd., who plays violin in the Tanglewood Study Group, relax between classes on the lawn of the big music center near Lenox, Mass. First of Sunday afternoon concerts by the Boston Symphony is scheduled there today. The orchestra will be heard in other concerts on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons through Aug. 10.

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
JUL 27 1952

Mostly About Music

TOLEDO BLADE: SU

Berkshire Festival Will Close With Berlioz' Furious 'Requiem'

By JULIAN SEAMAN
Blade Staff Writer

HECTOR BERLIOZ' "Grand Mass for the Dead," a furious masterpiece termed a "Requiem," will close the present Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Festival Chorus in the Shed. Andrew McKinely, tenor, will be the soloist.

The Berlioz Requiem, infrequently performed nowadays because of its ample requirements, has had a history of intrigue, frustration and, on at least one occasion, apparent sabotage. Albert E. Weir's note on Berlioz remarks: "His two great ritual works, Te Deum and Requiem, are, for sheer savagery and the suggestion of blood-curdling rities, unsurpassed. The music is scarcely human, much less Christian."

* * *

THE REQUIEM has the pale distinction of having been commissioned twice—first to celebrate the seventh anniversary of the Revolution of July 28, 1830; again, to honor the memory of General Damremont, who commanded victorious French forces in the taking of C tine, Algeria and was k the assault. Here is th bled tale:

The first commission after long and jealous tion, but the ministerial was signed by the end of 1837. He had been prepar just this chance. From th of 1825, he had save worked over the Resurre Italy, under the impact Peter's, he had gathere for a Judgement Day Oratorio," says Jacques Barzun.

"At first," writes Berlioz, "my brains boiled over. I was dizzy. Today the eruption has been regulated. The lava has made its bed and God willing everything will go well."

This Requiem had to be contrived at breathless speed and actually was finished in three months. He also found time in this interval of 12 weeks to review concerts for the Revue Musicale and to write an article for an encyclopedia.

By May portions of the score were being copied "but the Ministry," writes Barzun, "which had not scrupled to delay for its own red tape, was now worried about rehearsals and begging for speed. But dint of exertion, Berlioz finished the last page by June 29. This left him less than a month in which to have the parts completed and proofread, and to rehearse a chorus and orchestra of 400.

* * *

"THE VOICES were going smoothly when without warning and indeed without notifying Berlioz, the 'bureaus' countermanded the entire ceremony.

their devil drels It's wore, ts of him, and Per- per- he cam fiant, that finally brought him victory.

"On Oct. 23, 1837," Barzun recalls in his monumental biography "the news of the taking of Constantine, in Algeria, was relayed by (visual) telegraph from the south of France and with it the intelligence that General Damremont, commanding had been killed in the assault. The government would specially honor his memory, since the feat of arms lent needful prestige to the regime.

"At once the unpolitical but impolitic Berlioz asked Dumas to put in a word in his favor with the Duke of Orleans, to whom Dumas was secretary. The ceremony was soon set for December; a few more letters were exhanged, Berlioz had a cordial interview with General Bernard, the minister of war, and he finally received the second commission for his one Requiem."

All of artistic Paris heard the dress rehearsal at the Invalides, Dec. 4. An amateur musician wrote in his journal: "The music was beautiful and strange; wild, convulsed and dolorous . . ." The service took place next day "before the royal family, the diplomatic corps and all the fashion, power and frivolity of Paris."

The incident of apparent sabotage has been recounted variously, and no two recollections seem to agree. Says Elizabeth C. Moore, in "An Almanac for Music-Lovers":

* * *

"THE EXTENT to which a conductor may make or mar a composition is illustrated in a story from Berlioz' autobiography, in which he laments wha Habeneck did to his Requiem There had long been bad bloo between the two men, and whe Habeneck insisted upon conducting the first performance o the Requiem, it was over Berlioz' protsets; and the compose stood at Habeneck's side throughout to keep an eye on things.

"This was just as well, as i turned out, for at the most critical point of the Tuba Mirum when, as Berlioz writes, 'the tempo slows and the wind instruments break in with their terrible flourish—at just the one bar indeed where careful conducting is absolutely indispensable,' Habeneck put down his baton, quietly took out his snuffbox and proceded to take a leisurely pinch of snuff. Berlioz instantly sprang forward and conducted the rest of the piece—and never forgave Habeneck for the deliberately spiteful attempt to ruin it."

And this was the same Habeneck who resurrected Schubert's C major symphony and discovered the "Unfinished."

Barzun, perhaps more exact and meticulous than Mrs. Moore, who seems to have repeated a twice-told tale, gives this account:

"Habeneck, who had been forced on Berli by the oppos tion, conducted more than 300 musicians [illegible] in the transept. During the first number, Requ and K things went [illegible] usual mistakes by nervous performers. Hab [illegible] relaxed [illegible] spoiled the eff [illegible] in the ensuing [illegible] failing to [illegible] ensembles at [illegible] the orchestra. [illegible] habit, after set [illegible] he laid down his baton preparatory to taking a pinch of snuff— as Berlioz tells in his Mem and the composer hims [illegible] give the [illegible] ceeded without [illegible]

"Whether [illegible] bored or moved [illegible] by Berlioz' music, [illegible] sible to say, since there [illegible] be no applause, but the c [illegible] were with few exceptions f able. Nothing like the Requ had ever been heard by human ears, and the impression of sustained power could not be gainsaid . . . The Requiem had been an artistic success. No one in Paris who was capable of exercising judgment could doubt that this new music was something to reckon with. The leaders of the Romantic generation never forgot it and, 35 year later, after Berlioz' death, Liszt was still pondering the powerful, inscrutable score. Berlioz himself said, two years before his death, that if all his works were to be ordered burned, he would ask grace for the Requiem."

RANDOM LINES: The Music Performance Trust Fund of the Recording Industry has commissioned three works for harp —Ernst Krenek, says the New York Times, "has come through with a concerto for harp and orchestra, Ray Green, with a rhapsody based on Appalachian folk tunes, and Walter Hendl with a concertino for harp and orchestra." They will be introduced next season . . . My friend Herbert F. Peyser, once of the New York Telegram and foreign music editor of the New York Times, now program annotator for the Philharmonic, has written a biographical booklet on Richard Strauss, to be scattered among radio members of the Philharmonic-Symphony Society . . . Leonard Bernstein will conduct his latest one-act opera, "Trouble in Tahiti," at Tanglewood Aug. 8.

of Home Ownership

In a world of constant change, a home of your own is your strongest safeguard against the uncertainties of the future. It is at once Shelter, Stability, Security.

Come war, depression or other calamity, a home of your own will still provide a full measure of comfort, satisfaction, even happiness. Nothing else you can buy serves so well, gives so much value, lasts so long.

So speed the day when you can say: "I own my own home". See us now, without obligation, for plans, ideas, and helpful suggestions.

UR ONLY REAL SECU

ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER PRESS
JUL 27 1952

U. Of M.'s James Aliferis Has Big Role At Berkshire Center

By JOHN H. HARVEY

WE STAY-AT-HOMES enduring the summer heat, the humidity and the Minnesota thunderstorms in our accustomed haunts often lose touch with present and former Twin Cities musicians who range far and wide this time of year.

News of them occasionally filters back, though, and we catch glimpses of their activities.

Here are a few reports which have come to this corner:

Harvey

James Aliferis, the University of Minnesota's talented choral director, will participate Aug. 1 in a tenth anniversary celebration of the Berkshire Music center, Lenox, Mass. He will conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra and the music center's chorus in a movement from Lukas Foss's "The Prairie."

On that same program will be a presentation of the last act of Bizet's "Carmen" under Leonard Bernstein's direction. In the principal roles will be Mildred Miller and David Lloyd, who appeared in the same roles in the St. Paul Civic Opera presentation of that opera several years ago.

* * *

SAMUEL FLOR, member of the Macalester college music faculty and of the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra, recently gave a violin recital at the summer session of St. Michael's college, Winooski Park, Vt., where his former teacher, Dr. Richard Stoehr, Viennese composer and musicologist, was professor until his recent retirement. He also will concertize in Colombia this summer.

Emilie Pray, pianist and Macalester faculty member, having spent a month in France and Belgium, now is in London about to begin study with Gina Bachauer, noted pianist.

Anton Winkler, Minneapolis Symphony orchestra flutist and member of the Hamline university faculty, will spend August in Hancock, Maine, studying conducting with Pierre Monteux.

Thomas Nee, former Hamline staff member, is back home in Albert Lea after a year's study in Vienna on a Fulbright scholarship. His teachers in conducting in Vienna were Hans Swarowsky and Hermann Scherchen.

Robert Erickson, composer and member of the St. Catherine college music faculty who has been on leave of absence for a year's work in New York City on a Ford Foundation fellowship, is spending July and August at Yaddo, famed colony for artists and composers at Saratoga Springs, N. Y. Both he and his wife, Lenore Erikson, painter, were lucky enough to be invited to Yaddo for the same time.

* * *

LEO KOPP AND RAY CUTTING, conductor and assistant conductor respectively of the St. Paul Civic Opera association, are working together in the North Shore Playhouse, an organization outside Chicago producing operetta and musical comedy.

Joseph Wagner, conductor of the St. Paul Pop concerts four seasons ago, has been re-engaged for the third season of eight months by the National Symphony orchestra of Costa Rica. He is the first native-born conductor from the United States to become permanent director of a Latin American orchestra.

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
JUL 27 1952

Programs This Week At Berkshire Festival

The third and final concert in Series A of the shed concert of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will take place this afternoon. Series B will start Thursday evening and will continue through Sunday, Aug. 3. Nicole Henriot will be soloist at the Saturday evening concert which will be conducted by Pierre Monteux:

The programs for the remaining concerts are as follows:

This afternoon:

Franck Symphonic Piece, "Redemption"
Bizet . . . . Symphony in C major
Dallapiccola . . . . . "Three Prisoners' Songs"
Ravel "Daphnis and Chloe," Suited 1, 2 (with chorus)

SERIES B

Thursday evening
Faure Incidental Music for "Pelleas and Melisande"
Faure Ballade for Piano and orchestra
Ravel Piano Concerto
Brahms Symphony No. 4 in E minor
Solist: Nicole Henriot

Saturday evening
(Conducted by Pierre Monteux)
Wagner Prelude and Love-death from "Tristan and Isolde"
Wagner Finale, "Die Walkuere"
Wagner Final Scene, "Siegfried"
Wagner Final Scene "Goterdaemerung"

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 3
Beethoven Overture to "Egmont"
Beethoven Symphony No. 8
Debussy "Iberia"
Honegger "Danse des Mortes" (with chorus)

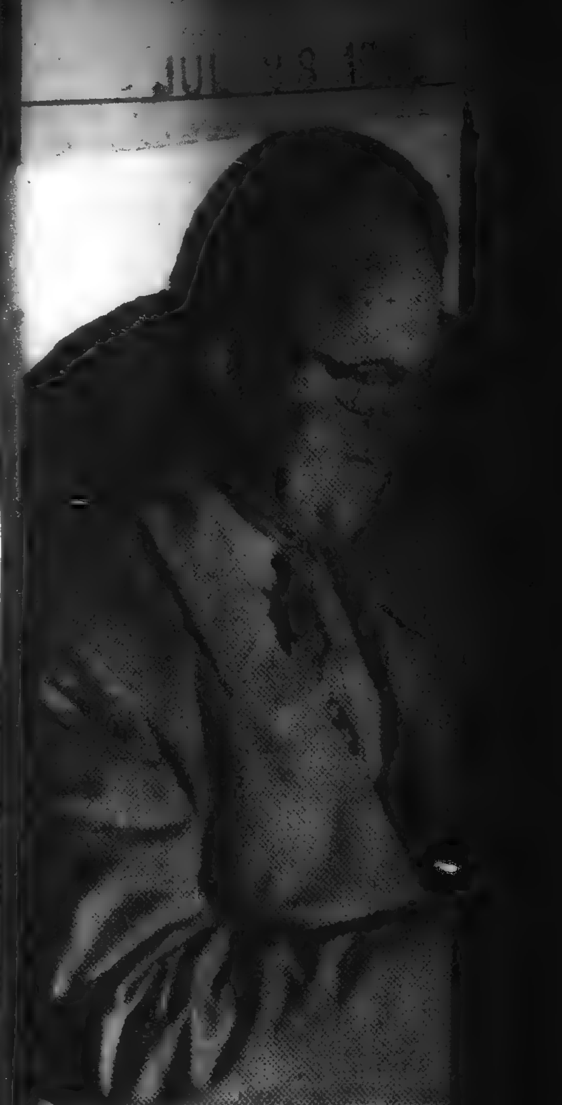
SERIES C

Thursday evening, Aug. 7
Schumann Symphony No. 1 ("Spring")
Swanson Short Symphony
Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 4

Saturday evening, Aug. 9
The Koussevitsky Memorial Concert
Conducted by Leonard Bernstein
C.P.E. Bach Andante from Concerto in D major
Copland Symphony No. 3
Sibelius Symphony No. 5

Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10
Berlioz Requiem (with chorus)

[71]



CONDUCTOR—Thor Johnson, guest conductor of the "Music Under the Stars" Symphony Orchestra Tuesday night, keeps well stocked with batons. They break easily, he said.

Sentinel photo.

Maestro Here Lauds Gains Of Symphony

By EDWARD P. HALLINE

hor Johnson, born in Wiscon- Rapids, and now one of the ing young American conduc- is outspoken about the ked improvement in the sic Under the Stars" Sym- y Orchestra in a year's time.

hnson, regular conductor of Cincinnati Symphony Or- tra, was a guest conductor at hington Park last summer he directs the orchestra Tuesday night.

got to Milwaukee in time ar the program last Tuesday r another guest, Assistant ductor George Schick of the ago Symphony. And he al- y has rehearsed the orches-was greatly impressed by the they have improved," he at the Pfister Hotel Sunday. y worked very hard when I here a year ago, but this I notice a new spirit, an t de corps. It isn't just the people who have been added. it in the whole orchestra."

EW SPIRIT'

d, added Johnson, it's too that after the final summer ert these musicians "dis- ." Said Johnson:

ertainly the state of Wiscon- hould have one major pro- onal symphony orchestra. state of Texas has half n, I believe. The orchestra have here could easily be into a permanent symphony stra.

ED TO SOUTH

nson is really more of n Carolinian than a Badger use his father, a minister, d to that Southern state Wisconsin Rapids when was about 4. His grandfa- a Great Lakes skipper, came to Green Bay from Norway then moved to Sturgeon Bay. nson's own bent for music from his mother, a pianist, he opportunity was provided orth Carolina's fine school program.

DUCTS AT CHICAGO

nson, much in demand as a conductor during the off- n months, conducts at Grant in Chicago late this week, ng Chicago Composer Vit- Rieti's two piano concerto— greatest contemporary work at sort," he said.

en he goes to the Tangle- Festival, established by the Serge Koussevitzky, to direct Boston Symphony Orchestra nother great contemporary , Bela Bartok's Concerto for estra, a stunning piece of c which Chicago Symphony ences heard last season.

DO BLADE: SU

ose
quiem'

lly brought him victory. Oct. 23, 1837," Barzun n his monumental bio- 'the news of the taking antine, in Algeria, was by (visual) telegraph e south of France and ne intelligence that Gen- mremont, commanding, n killed in the assault. ernment would specially is memory, since the rms lent needful prestige gime.

nce the unpolitical but Berlioz asked Dumas a word in his favor with e of Orleans, to whom was secretary. The cere- as soon set for Decem- few more letters were d, Berlioz had a cordial with General Bernard, ster of war, and he ceived the second com- or his one Requiem."

artistic Paris heard the hearsal at the Invalides, An amateur musician his journal: "The music utiful and strange; wild, d and dolorous . . ." ice took place next day. the royal family, the tic corps and all the power and frivolity of cident of apparent sabo- s been recounted vari- nd no two recollections agree. Says Elizabeth e, in "An Almanac for overs":

* * *

EXTENT to which a r may make or mar a tion is illustrated in a rom Berlioz' autobiog- n which he laments wh k did to his Requie ad long been bad blo the two men, and wh k insisted upon conduc first performance uiem, it was over Be tsets; and the compose Habeneck's side through eep an eye on things. was just as well, as out, for at the most crit nt of the Tuba Mirum s Berlioz writes, 'th owa and the wind instru reak in with their terrible —at just the one bar in- ere careful conducting is ly indispensable,' Habe- t down his baton, quietly t his snuffbox and pro- o take a leisurely pinch Berlioz instantly sprang and conducted the rest ece—and never forgave k for the deliberately attempt to ruin it."

this was the same Hab- who resurrected Schu- major symphony and ed the "Unfinished." n, perhaps more exact ulous than Mrs. Moore, ms to have repeated a d tale, gives this aceneck, who had been on Berlioz by the opposi- onducted more than 300 ns grouped left and right ransept. During the first Requiem and Kyrie. went well in spite of the nistakes by nervous per- . Habeneck thereupon so fully that he nearly the effect of the fanfare ensuing Tuba Mirum by to cue the small brass les at the four corners of hestra. According to his after setting the tempo, down his baton prepara- taking a pinch of snuff— ioz tells in his Memoirs— composer himself had to he signal. The rest pro- without a hitch.

ether the audience was or moved or bewildered lioz' music, it is impos- o say, since there could applause, but the critics with few exceptions favor- Nothing like the Requiem er been heard by human nd the impression of sus- power could not be gain- The Requiem had been stic success. No one in who was capable of exer- judgment could doubt new music was some- reckon with. The lead- Romantic generation

---

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
SENTINEL

CONDUCTOR—Thor Johnson, guest conductor of the "Music Under the Stars" Symphony Orchestra Tuesday night, keeps well stocked with batons. They break easily, he said.

Sentinel photo.

Maestro Here Lauds Gains Of Symphony

BY EDWARD P. HALLINE

Thor Johnson, born in Wisconsin Rapids, and now one of the leading young American conductors, is outspoken about the marked improvement in the "Music Under the Stars" Symphony Orchestra in a year's time.

Johnson, regular conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, was a guest conductor at Washington Park last summer and he directs the orchestra again Tuesday night.

He got to Milwaukee in time to hear the program last Tuesday under another guest, Assistant Conductor George Schick of the Chicago Symphony. And he already has rehearsed the orchestra.

'A NEW SPIRIT'

"I was greatly impressed by the way they have improved," he said at the Pfister Hotel Sunday. "They worked very hard when I was here a year ago, but this time I notice a new spirit, an esprit de corps. It isn't just the new people who have been added. I see it in the whole orchestra."

And added Johnson, it's too bad that after the final summer concert these musicians "disperse." Said Johnson

Certainly the state of Wisconsin should have one major professional symphony orchestra. The state of Texas has half a dozen I believe. The orchestra [illegible] have here could easily be [illegible] into a permanent symphony orchestra.

MOVED TO SOUTH

Johnson [illegible] really more of a North [illegible] than a Badger, be[illegible] father, a minister, moved [illegible] Southern state from W[illegible] Rapids when Thor [illegible]. His grandfa[illegible] [illegible] Lakes skipper, came [illegible] Bay from Norway and then [illegible] to Sturgeon Bay. [illegible] bent for music came [illegible] mother, a pianist, an[illegible] was provided by North [illegible] fine school music program.

CONDUCTS AT CHICAGO

Johnson [illegible] much in demand as a guest [illegible] during the off-season [illegible] conducts at Grant Park [illegible] late this week [illegible] Composer Vi[illegible] [illegible] Concerto [illegible] [illegible] work [illegible] [illegible] Tanglewood, established by the late Serge Koussevitzky to direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra [illegible] another great contemporary [illegible] Bela Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, a stunning piece of music which Chicago Symphony audiences heard last season.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
JUL 28 1952

Music

Tanglewood Charmed by New Music

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., July 28.—Some old-new music by Igor Stravinsky Saturday evening and some much newer music by Luigi Dallapiccola yesterday afternoon proved the highlights of the two concerts at Tanglewood which closed the first series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Mr. Dallapiccola is a member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty for the second straight summer. His work is a sort of triptych entitled "Songs in Captivity," which is written for chorus, two harps, two pianos and percussion.

Sung in Latin.

The texts, sung in Latin, are concerned respectively with the "Prayer of Mary Stuart," the "Invocation of Boethius," and the "Farewell of Girolamo Savanarola." The pianists were Lukas Foss and Ralph Berkowitz and the conductor was Hugh Ross, who had prepared the work.

This was not the first performance of the Dallapiccola item, since it was introduced to this country by the International Society for Contemporary Music in 1951 though it dates from 1941.

While it is not a piece for the great outdoors, because of the intimate nature of the score, the rendering was superb. It was a pleasure to listen to voices enunciating the texts clearly, but even a greater one to observe their accurate work in polylinear and dissonant music that is by no means easy.

Graceful and Fresh.

Happily it is music that comes to the ear with grace and freshness. A mood is established in each of the three songs and quite beautifully maintained throughout. The arrangements for the pianos, harps and percussion are imaginative and studded with bright dramatic surprises. All in all, Mr. Dallapiccola has succeeded in communicating interesting ideas through music that is at once individual in quality and most expressive.

The remainder of yesterday's program was conducted by Charles Munch who, much more sensitive than he had been on Thursday evening, brought forward some absorbing and often exciting versions of familiar pieces.

Almost Ethereal.

Especially pleasing was his delicately balanced account of the Bizet Symphony in C. The lightness of the Boston Symphony's strings frequently became something almost ethereal. And the engaging youthful music, through whose tuneful measures one hears the promise of the later Bizet, obtained a performance fascinating for its quiet gayety and unfailing charm.

Mr. Munch's other offerings were the Franck Symphonic Piece from "Redemption," and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe," (both suites) which he was the sympathetic and efficient ministrator.

[72]

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 28 1952

Tanglewood Is Assembly Of World's Musical Gentry

Major Leaders of Art Mingle With Students, Youth; Unity of Appreciation Is Displayed

By A STAFF REPORTER

Tanglewood, July 27—Many roads, passing through the hilly green that is Western Massachusetts, lead to the Berkshire Music Center on a Sunday afternoon like today's.

Tanglewood stands for music, of course—and it brings men and women of music by the hundreds from almost anywhere in the world.

Favorite Picnic Place

But for men, women and children by the thousands who drive to the Berkshire Festival concerts, Tanglewood's spacious lawns and spreading trees form a favorite picnic place during the hours before music time.

Sometimes a stroll makes the center seem many things to many people.

It's a place where the gentry of the musical world comes to talk over and study counterpoint, composition and conducting.

Aaron Copland, Hugh Ross, Charles Munch are major names in music. They're leaders here. And of course the mark and memory of Serge Koussevitzky are strong.

Yet it's a place where, like today during intermission, a little boy and a little girl wanting autographs go up to Lukas Foss, one of America's outstanding young concert pianists, and get a friendly greeting.

"How old are you?" Foss asked as he wrote his name. Then a kindly pat on the head and they were gone.

Tanglewood is a place where lively discussions about musical technics are carried on in French, Italian, Spanish and other languages. Seventeen countries—including Argentina and Israel—are represented among this summer's 400 students. This is the widest geographical distribution ever.

Some Superficial

But the center also is a place where people listen casually and speak what seems to be superficial judgments or comments.

As today when a chorus and accompanists concluded the presentation of "Three Songs in Captivity" by Luigi Dallapiccola:

"Gosh, that was good."

"Gee, they must be exhausted."

Tanglewood is the place of the tidily dressed-in-white men of the Boston Symphony Orchestra sitting alertly on the stage of the Music Shed and of informally clad people reclining and relaxing on blankets thrown down in some shady or sunny spot (according to preference) within earshot of the shed.

It's a place of Bach fugues and ham sandwiches, Beethoven symphonies and orangeade; the excitement of evaluating a new trend in music and the inactivity of a Sunday rest in the country.

Professional and unprofessional, formal and informal, the learned and the untutored.

Tanglewood is many things to many people, perhaps, but the sound of music is above all—a unifying influence.

Tanglewood Notes

The center's reputation for starting on time has been honestly earned, judging by this afternoon. Dr. Munch walked on stage at 15 seconds to three and raised his baton right on the hour.

* * *

Thunder grumbled during the Bizet symphony and the Dallapiccola choral number and a dark cloud let a few raindrops fall during intermission. But the people listening under the sky were not upset.

* * *

As a precaution, however, the benches just outside the shed were slid under the protection of the colonnade. "That's what it's there for," a Tanglewood functionary explained.

* * *

Pierre Monteux, for many years director of the San Francisco Symphony, is here after accompanying the Boston Orchestra on its European tour. He conducted Saturday night's concert and won the admiration of the men backstage.

Red Henry, assistant stage manager, said the words "a sweet old man" are the best description. Monteux doesn't fidget while he is waiting for a concert, he has a friendly nod for people and a sincere "How are you?" Nothing ruffles his good nature.

Rod, by the way, is an American International College graduate (1950).

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 28 1952

Boston Orchestra's Playing Is Admirable

Tanglewood Audience Responds Warmly to Program; Festival Chorus Does Well in Difficult Work

By WILLARD CLARK

Tanglewood, July 27—The first of the three series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the huge shed at Tanglewood ended this afternoon in a blaze of glory, deafening applause and an amazing demonstration that people show what they like. There were 8250 persons on hand in spite of the threatening weather. The total attendance for the three concerts has been 26,550 against 24,400 for the same period last season.

Brass Passages Effective

Charles Munch chose a program of works to which he is particularly akin. The orchestra, marvelous as ever, responded to every demand. The result was admirable. The program opened with the interlude to Caesar Franck's oratorio "Redemption." We find Dr. Munch particularly persuading in those works of high spiritual quality. In the interlude, Franck undertakes to express the "joy of the world in Christ." The exultant brass passages are immeasurably effective. There is a magnificent strength and firmness of belief in the credo.

Bizet's "Symphony in C Major," written when he was 17 years of age, lay unnoticed in the archives of the Paris Conservatoire for nearly 80 years. It has now gone the rounds of the orchestras in this country and Europe and while it is a pleasant musical expression, one which āppealss to an average audience, it says little and might just as well be retired. This personal opinion did not seem shared by the auidence, which waxed enthusiastic over the brisk, Mendelssohn-like finale.

In sharp contrast were the "Three Songs in Captivity" for chorus with two harps, two pianos and percussion. Lukas Foss and Ralph Berkowity were the pianists in this work of the Italian composer Luigi Dallapiccola, who is here for the second season as teacher of composition. The now excellent Berkshire Festival chorus was at its best in these highly demanding songs. The tessitura is cruel, but there are some soaring sopranos, which bids well for the success of the Berlioz "Requiem" which will close the festival. The three songs are entitled, "Prayer of Mary Stuart," "Invocation of Boethius" and "Farewell of Gerolamo Savonarola." In spite of melodic dissonance and strange harmonies, there is a warm and personal feeling in each song.

The composer was on hand to congratulate Dr. Munch and the orchestra and to receive the plaudits of the audience.

Chorus Beautiful

The program concluded with a rich sounding performance of Ravel's "Daphe et Chloe" Suites No. 1 and 2. The chorus again sang the wordless passages allocated to it beautifully. The Boston Symphony players bring to this music a richness of tonal color we have heard from no other orchestra. The climatic "Danse Genegwle" sent the audience into another burst of almost hysterical approbation.

The second series of concerts opens Thursday night when Charles Munch will ofer a program consisting of the incidental music to "Pelleas et Melisande" by Faure; the same composer's "Ballade for piano and Orchestra" and Ravel's "Piano Concerto," with Nicole Herriot as soloist, and Brahm's "Symphony No. 4 in E Minor."

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
JUL 28 1952

Tanglewood Symphony Magnificent

By D. E. RITZ

Pierre Monteux and the Boston Sympathy presented a magnificent performance of Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," Saturday evening at Tanglewood, near Lenox in the Berkshires.

* * *

THE PROGRAM was the second to be given in the Shed and marked Monteux's first appearance on the podium at the Berkshire Festival. It opened with the Cimarosa "Overture to 'The Secret Marriage'" and included the monumental Schubert "Symphony in C major, number 7."

"Le Sacre du Printemps" richly deserves the many adjectives and epithets that have been coined in attempts to describe it but no mater what one thinks, no one has yet heard of anyone being bored by it. The general orchestral hubbub is amazing as is its rich, varied and often bizarre coloring. That it was given a remarkably fine performance Saturday is not surprising. The orchestra had presented it last on May 8 at the Theatre des Champs Elysees in Paris in the May festival of the arts of this century. Monteux conducted the May 8 performance and has long been associated with the Stravinski work, having conducted the premier in 1913 when it was presented in Paris by the Ballet Russe of Sergei Diaghilev.

* * *

ONLY VIRTUOSO players could possibly do justice to the music, if that is how it is catalogued, and we pay our respects to the men of the Boston Symphony. How in a commotion like that is it possible to keep one's place?, where do the percussionists get all the force?, and finally, how does the conductor ever hear anything at all? Tanglewood audience members had much to be grateful for, for there are no sides to the Shed. Be that as it may, we know we'd return to hear it again and to continue to wonder just what it is that is so completely compelling about it.

There was no doubt as to audience reaction. There was not a whisper, not a murmur, just complete concentration and, at the end, one of the wildest demonstrations of approval that even Tanglewood can achieve.

* * *

MONTEUX, whose conducting we have known at intervals over a long period of years, is most amazing. Never an unnecessary movement from the baton, which in his hands assumes the proportions of a magic wand; never an unnecessary flick of a finger; yet he remains completely in control of the situation. Is it possible for the same man to conduct the completely graceful music of Cimarosa and the Schubert work with its beauty of form and phrase in the same program with the dissonance that typifies "Le Sacre?" Monteux did it and with never a change of facial expression. One wonders whether he most appreciates the ovation of present day hearers of "Le Sacre" or does he possibly miss the days when a "scandalous premiere" was possible with a Parisian audience?

O BLADE: SU

ose
uiem'

lly brought him victory.
Oct. 23, 1837," Barzun
n his monumental bio-
'the news of the taking antine, in Algeria, was by (visual) telegraph south of France and e intelligence that Gennremont, commanding, killed in the assault.
rnment would specially s memory, since the rms lent needful prestige gime.
ce the unpolitical but Berlioz asked Dumas a word in his favor with e of Orleans, to whom was secretary. The cere-as soon set for Decem-more letters were Berlioz had a cordial with General Bernard, ter of war, and he eived the second com-his one Requiem."
rtistic Paris heard the earsal at the Invalides,
An amateur musician his journal: "The music
tiful and strange; wild, and dolorous . . ."
a took place next day.
the royal family, the ic corps and all the power and frivolity of cident of apparent sabos been recounted varind no two recollections agree. Says Elizabeth e, in "An Almanac for overs":

* * *

EXTENT to which a r may make or mar a ion is illustrated in a om Berlioz' autobiogwhich he laments w lc did to his Requie nd long been bad blo
the two men, and wh
k insisted upon conduc first performance uiem, it was over Be sets; and the compose Habeneck's side throug eep an eye on things.
was just as well, as ut, for at the most crit t of the Tuba Mirum
s Berlioz writes, 'th ows and the wind instru in with their terrible ot just the one bar in-careful conducting is y indispensable,' Habe-down his baton, quietly his snuffbox and pro-take a leisurely pinch Berlioz instantly sprang nd conducted the rest
e—and never forgave for the deliberately ttempt to ruin it."
was the same Hab-o resurrected Schu-major symphony and he "Unfinished."
perhaps more exact ous than Mrs. Moore, to have repeated a tale, gives this ac-neck, who had been

n Berlioz by the opposi-nducted more than 300 ansept. During the first Requiem and Kyrie, ent well in spite of the istakes by nervous per-Habeneck thereupon so fully that he nearly the effect of the fanfare ensuing Tuba Mirum by to cue the small brass les at the four corners of hestra. According to his after setting the tempo, down his baton preparataking a pinch of snuff—ioz tells in his Memoirs—composer himself had to e signal. The rest pro-without a hitch.
ther the audience was or moved or bewildered ioz' music, it is impos-say, since there could applause, but the critics ith few exceptions favor-Nothing like the Requiem er been heard by human d the impression of suswer could not be gain-
The Requiem had been success. No one in was capable of exergment could doubt ew music was somekon with. The lead-
Romantic generation

MILWAUKEE, WIS.
SENTINEL

1952

CONDUCTOR—Thor Johnson, guest conductor of the "Music Under the Stars" Symphony Orchestra Tuesday night, keeps well stocked with batons. They break easily, he said.

Sentinel photo.

Maestro Here Lauds Gains Of Symphony

BY EDWARD P. HALLINE

Thor Johnson, born in Wisconsin Rapids, and now one of the leading young American conductors, is outspoken about the marked improvement in the "Music Under the Stars" Symphony Orchestra in a year's time.

Johnson, regular conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, was a guest conductor at Washington Park last summer and he directs the orchestra again Tuesday night.

He got to Milwaukee in time to hear the program last Tuesday under another guest, Assistant Conductor George Schick of the Chicago Symphony. And he already has rehearsed the orchestra.

'A NEW SPIRIT'

"I was greatly impressed by the way they have improved," he said at the Pfister Hotel Sunday. "They worked very hard when I was here a year ago, but this time I notice a new spirit, an esprit de corps. It isn't just the new people who have been added. I see it in the whole orchestra."

And, added Johnson, it's too bad that after the final summer concert these musicians "disperse." Said Johnson:

"Certainly the state of Wisconsin should have one major professional symphony orchestra. The state of Texas has half a dozen, I believe. The orchestra you have here could easily be built into a permanent symphony orchestra.

MOVED TO SOUTH

Johnson is really more of a North Carolinian than a Badger, because his father, a minister, moved to that Southern state from Wisconsin Rapids when Thor was about 4. His grandfather a Great Lakes skipper, came first to Green Bay from Norway and then moved to Sturgeon Bay.

Johnson's own bent for music came from his mother, a pianist, and the opportunity was provided by North Carolina's fine school music program.

CONDUCTS AT CHICAGO

Johnson, much in demand as a guest conductor during the off-season months, conducts at Grant Park in Chicago late this week, playing Chicago Composer Vittorio Rieti's two piano concerto. "The greatest contemporary work of its sort," he said.

Then he goes to the Tanglewood Festival established by the late Serge Koussevitzky, to direct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in another great contemporary work, Bela Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, a stunning piece of music which Chicago Symphony audiences heard last season.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN

JUL 28 1952

Music

Tanglewood Charmed by New Music

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., July 28.—Some old-new music by Igor Stravinsky Saturday evening and some much newer music by Luigi Dallapiccola yesterday afternoon proved the highlights of the two concerts at Tanglewood which closed the first series of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

Mr. Dallapiccola is a member of the Berkshire Music Center faculty for the second straight summer. His work is a sort of triptych entitled "Songs in Captivity," which is written for chorus, two harps, two pianos and percussion.

Sung in Latin.

The texts, sung in Latin, are concerned respectively with the "Prayer of Mary Stuart," the "Invocation of Boethius," and the "Farewell of Girolamo Savanarola." The pianists were Lukas Foss and Ralph Berkowitz and the conductor was Hugh Ross, who had prepared the work.

This was not the first performance of the Dallapiccola item, since it was introduced to this country by the International Society for Contemporary Music in 1951 though it dates from 1941.

While it is not a piece for the great outdoors, because of the intimate nature of the score, the rendering was superb. It was a pleasure to listen to voices enunciating the texts clearly, but even a greater one to observe their accurate work in polylinear and dissonant music that is by no means easy.

Graceful and Fresh.

Happily it is music that comes to the ear with grace and freshness. A mood is established in each of the three songs and quite beautifully maintained throughout. The arrangements for the pianos, harps and percussion are imaginative and studded with bright dramatic surprises. All in all, Mr. Dallapiccola has succeeded in communicating interesting ideas through music that is at once individual in quality and most expressive.

The remainder of yesterday's program was conducted by Charles Munch who, much more sensitive than he had been on Thursday evening, brought forward some absorbing and often exciting versions of familiar pieces.

Almost Ethereal.

Especially pleasing was his delicately balanced account of the Bizet Symphony in C. The lightness of the Boston Symphony's strings frequently became something almost ethereal. And the engaging youthful music, through whose tuneful measures one hears the promise of the later Bizet, obtained a performance fascinating for its quiet gayety and unfailing charm.

Mr. Munch's other offerings were the Franck Symphonic Piece from "Redemption," and Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe," (both suites) which he was the sympathetic and efficient ministrator.

[72]

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
JUL 28 1952

Tanglewood Is Assembly Of World's Musical Gentry

Major Leaders of Art Mingle With Students, Youth; Unity of Appreciation Is Displayed

By A STAFF REPORTER

Tanglewood, July 27—Many roads, passing through the hilly green that is Western Massachusetts, lead to the Berkshire Music Center on a Sunday afternoon like today's.

Tanglewood stands for music, of course—and it brings men and women of music by the hundreds from almost anywhere in the world.

Favorite Picnic Place

But for men, women ana children by the thousands who drive to the Berkshire Festival concerts, Tanglewood's spacious lawns and spreading trees form a favorite picnic place during the hours before music time.

Sometimes a stroll makes the center seem many things to many people.

It's a place where the gentry of the musical world comes to talk over and study counterpoint, composition and conducting.

Aaron Copland, Hugh Ross, Charles Munch are major names in music. They're leaders here. And of course the mark and memory of Serge Koussevitzky are strong.

Yet it's a place where, like today during intermission, a little boy and a little girl wanting autographs go up to Lukas Foss, one of America's outstanding young concert pianists, and get a friendly greeting.

"How old are you?" Foss asked as he wrote his name. Then a kindly pat on the head and they were gone.

Tanglewood is a place where lively discussions about musical technics are carried on in French, Italian, Spanish and other languages. Seventeen countries—including Argentina and Israel—are represented among this summer's 400 students. This is the widest geographical distribution ever.

Some Superficial

But the center also is a place where people listen casually and speak what seems to be superficial judgments or comments.

As today when a chorus and accompanists concluded the presentation of "Three Songs in Captivity" by Luigi Dallapiccola:

"Gosh, that was good."

"Gee, they must be exhausted."

Tanglewood is the place of the tidily dressed-in-white men of the Boston Symphony Orchestra sitting alertly on the stage of the Music Shed and of informally clad people reclining and relaxing on blankets thrown down in some shady or sunny spot (according to preference) within earshot of the shed.

It's a place of Bach fugues and ham sandwiches, Beethoven symphonies and orangeade; the excitement of evaluating a new trend in music and the inactivity of a Sunday rest in the country.

Professional and unprofessional, formal and informal, the learned and the untutored.

Tanglewood is many things to many people, perhaps, but the sound of music is above all—a unifying influence.

Tanglewood Notes

The center's reputation for starting on time has been honestly earned, judging by this afternoon. Dr. Munch walked on stage at 15 seconds to three and raised his baton right on the hour.

* * *

Thunder grumbled during the Bizet symphony and the Dallapiccola choral number and a dark cloud let a few raindrops fall during intermission. But the people listening under the sky were not upset.

* * *

As a precaution, however, the benches just outside the shed were slid under the protection of the colonnade. "That's what it's there for," a Tanglewood functionary explained.

* * *

Pierre Monteux, for many years director of the San Francisco Symphony, is here after accompanying the Boston Orchestra on its European tour. He conducted Saturday night's concert and won the admiration of the men backstage.

Red Henry, assistant stage manager, said the words "a sweet old man" are the best description. Monteux doesn't fidget while he is waiting for a concert, he has a friendly nod for people and a sincere "How are you?" Nothing ruffles his good nature.

Rod, by the way, is an American International College graduate (1950).

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

JUL 28 1952

Boston Orchestra's Playing Is Admirable

Tanglewood Audience Responds Warmly to Program; Festival Chorus Does Well in Difficult Work

By WILLARD CLARK

Tanglewood, July 27—The first of the three series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the huge shed at Tanglewood ended this afternoon in a blaze of glory, deafening applause and an amazing demonstration that people show what they like. There were 8250 persons on hand in spite of the threatening weather. The total attendance for the three concerts has been 26,550 against 24,400 for the same period last season.

Brass Passages Effective

Charles Munch chose a program of works to which he is particularly akin. The orchestra, marvelous as ever, responded to every demand. The result was admirable. The program opened with the interlude to Caesar Franck's oratorio "Redemption." We find Dr. Munch particularly persuading in those works of high spiritual quality. In the interlude, Franck undertakes to express the "joy of the world in Christ." The exultant brass passages are immeasurably effective. There is a magnificent strength and firmness of belief in the credo.

Bizet's "Symphony in C Major," written when he was 17 years of age, lay unnoticed in the archives of the Paris Conservatoire for nearly 80 years. It has now gone the rounds of the orchestras in this country and Europe and while it is a pleasant musical expression, one which appealss to an average audience, it says little and might just as well be retired. This personal opinion did not seem shared by the auidence, which waxed enthusiastic over the brisk, Mendelssohn-like finale.

In sharp contrast were the "Three Songs in Captivity" for chorus with two harps, two pianos and percussion. Lukas Foss and Ralph Berkowity were the pianists in this work of the Italian composer Luigi Dallapiccola, who is here for the second season as teacher of composition. The now excellent Berkshire Festival chorus was at its best in these highly demanding songs. The tessitura is cruel, but there are some soaring sopranos, which bids well for the success of the Berlioz "Requiem" which will close the festival. The three songs are entitled, "Prayer of Mary Stuart," "Invocation of Boethius" and "Farewell of Gerolamo Savonarola." In spite of melodic dissonance and strange harmonies, there is a warm and personal feeling in each song.

The composer was on hand to congratulate Dr. Munch and the orchestra and to receive the plaudits of the audience.

Chorus Beautiful

The program concluded with a rich sounding performance of Ravel's "Daphe et Chloe" Suites No. 1 and 2. The chorus again sang the wordless passages allocated to it beautifully. The Boston Symphony players bring to this music a richness of tonal color we have heard from no other orchestra. The climatic "Danse Genegwle" sent the audience into another burst of almost hysterical approbation.

The second series of concerts opens Thursday night when Charles Munch will ofer a program consisting of the incidental music to "Pelleas et Melisande" by Faure; the same composer's "Ballade for piano and Orchestra" and Ravel's "Piano Concerto," with Nicole Herriot as soloist, and Brahm's "Symphony No. 4 in E Minor."

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

JUL 28 1952

Tanglewood Symphony Magnificent

By D. E. RITZ

Pierre Monteux and the Boston Sympathy presented a magnificent performance of Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," Saturday evening at Tanglewood, near Lenox in the Berkshires.

* * *

THE PROGRAM was the second to be given in the Shed and marked Monteux's first appearance on the podium at the Berkshire Festival. It opened with the Cimarosa "Overture to 'The Secret Marriage'" and included the monumental Schubert "Symphony in C major, number 7."

"Le Sacre du Printemps" richly deserves the many adjectives and epithets that have been coined in attempts to describe it but no mater what one thinks, no one has yet heard of anyone being bored by it. The general orchestral hubbub is amazing as is its rich, varied and often bizarre coloring. That it was given a remarkably fine performance Saturday is not surprising. The orchestra had presented it last on May 8 at the Theatre des Champs Elysees in Paris in the May festival of the arts of this century. Monteux conducted the May 8 performance and has long been associated with the Stravinski work, having conducted the premier in 1913 when it was presented in Paris by the Ballet Russe of Sergei Diaghilev.

* * *

ONLY VIRTUOSO players could possibly do justice to the music, if that is how it is catalogued, and we pay our respects to the men of the Boston Symphony. How in a commotion like that is it possible to keep one's place?, where do the percussionists get all the force?, and finally, how does the conductor ever hear anything at all? Tanglewood audience members had much to be grateful for, for there are no sides to the Shed. Be that as it may, we know we'd return to hear it again and to continue to wonder just what it is that is so completely compelling about it.

There was no doubt as to audience reaction. There was not a whisper, not a murmur, just complete concentration and, at the end, one of the wildest demonstrations of approval that even Tanglewood can achieve.

* * *

MONTEUX, whose conducting we have known at intervals over a long period of years, is most amazing. Never an unnecessary movement from the baton, which in his hands assumes the proportions of a magic wand; never an unnecessary flick of a finger; yet he remains completely in control of the situation. Is it possible for the same man to conduct the completely graceful music of Cimarosa and the Schubert work with its beauty of form and phrase in the same program with the dissonance that typifies "Le Sacre?" Monteux did it and with never a change of facial expression. One wonders whether he most appreciates the ovation of present day hearers of "Le Sacre" or does he possibly miss the days when a "scandalous" premiere was possible with a Parisian audience?

This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUL 29 1952

Tanglewood

The Berkshire Festival

* * *

Happy Week End

By Arthur Berger

LENOX, Mass., July 27.—The rewarding first week end of the Berkshire Festival concerts here in the Tanglewood shed has offered, as special points of distinction, Pierre Monteux's astonishingly lucid and perceptive reading of Stravinsky's "Rites of Spring" on Saturday night and a relatively unfamiliar work by Luigi Dallapiccola, "Songs in Captivity," Sunday afternoon.

A few months ago, this same orchestra, The Boston Symphony, under its venerated guest conductor, Mr. Monteux, had been wildly acclaimed by a Paris audience that was making amends for the boos and hisses heaped on the Stravinsky work and the conductor of its premiere, the very same Mr. Monteux, almost forty years earlier in that city.. With the recent occasion fresh in memory and after so compelling a hearing of a powerful work, an imposing segment of Saturday night's 10,000 auditors lingered for a five-minute ovation.

There was scarcely a single lost motion in Mr. Monteux's conducting, and it was his unruffled monitoring that was precisely the needed buffer for the highly charged rhythmic and dynamic content of the score. Under his sagacious guidance, it became altogether clear what the composer meant when he remarked not long ago that he had not been in 1913 the musical revolutionary he had been accused then of being. Saturday night the disciplined mentality of a sober artisan, oriented already in 1913 in a potentially classic direction, was fully respected in a reading that phenomenally controlled almost every complex detail. The Bostonians followed their guest conductor through the labyrinth of the abruptly changing meters with the ease of players beating out a simple waltz.

Dallapiccola, who is here from Italy for his second consecutive season as visiting composer on the faculty of Tanglewood's Berkshire Music Center, wrote his "Songs of Captivity" between 1938 and 1941, when growing racial oppression was the discouraging order of the day all around him. By setting Latin texts of three famous personalities who had been prisoners in their times, he found a covert means of expressing protest that it would have been suicide in his milieu to voice openly. His set of choral pieces embody fragile, obviously suppressed sentiments, indeed, in their lovely quiet and tender frame. It is the protest of a man, overcome by pathos, who dares not raise his voice. Most of the orchestra cleared the stage, leaving two harps, two pianos and a few percussionists to provide a delicately luminous background of sonority for the mixed chorus. But through it all he has remained, and has continued to remain, an intuitive composer of sympathetic human feeling and Italianite temperament. The choral writing is essentially modal and through mildly twelve-tone constructive devices, the traditional "dies irae" sounds its ominous note. Rhymically, the music is a bit unyielding and static. But it is obvious that Dallapiccola is capable of a truly creative experience, that his ear is sensitive and his craftsmanship secure.

Dallapiccola's three poems are from the pens of Mary Stuart Boethius and Savonarola.

Hugh Ross conducted the new work with authority, and his chorus, assembled from students of the Berkshire Music Center, was trained by him to sing with admirable style, tone and accuracy. Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony's musical director, seemed content to let others share the spotlight this week end. For Sunday afternoon he gave Franck's "Redemption" and Bizet's symphony, and he ended the program with both of the suites from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe," with the choral parts. The Ravel, one of the chief pieces in his repertory, brought him a rousing audience response. Mr. Monteux devoted most of the first half of Saturday's program to Schubert's broad symphony in C major, which was cautious, sober and solid at the expense of some of its inherent exuberance. The orchestral timber was clean, and the transitions all well manipulated.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE
JUL 29 1952

Tanglewood Conductors Chat

Charles Munch, Pierre Monteux and Leonard Bernstein, left to right, chat in the conductors' room in the Shed at Tanglewood. The three men are sharing the conducting honors of the Boston Symphony orchestra in this year's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Munch, regular conductor of the orchestra, is conducting the Thursday evening and Sunday afternoon programs; Monteux conducted the first Saturday and will conduct next Saturday evening's program; and Bernstein will conduct a Koussevitzky memorial concert on Aug. 9. The festival will run through Aug. 10.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
JUL 29 1952

— Society —

Berkshire Music Festival Attracts Residents Of Area To Tanglewood

Many area people were among those who were present last weekend for the opening series of the Berkshire Music Festival which is to continue this week at the music shed at Tanglewood between Stockbridge and Lenox, Mass. The first series included concerts by the Boston Symphony last Thursday and on Sunday, with Charles Munch conducting, and last Saturday with Pierre Monteux as conductor.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwin R. Meiss of Ford Road, Woodbridge, and their daughters, Sally and Harriet, and the Misses Patty Vestuti of Mt. Carmel and Gina Terrazas, who is Miss Sally Meiss' roommate in New York City, were among those who attended Sunday's concert. They were guests at the Red Lion in Stockbridge of Mrs. Meiss' aunt, Mrs. Robert Kuhn of Cincinnati, Ohio, who is spending the Summer there.

Mr. and Mrs. Meiss and their daughters spent the first three weeks in July in Wellfleet, Mass., on Cape Cod.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick W. Hilles of 33 Edgehill Terrace and their daughter, Susan, and son, Teddy Jr., attended the first series.

Miss Florence Morrison of 106 Sheffield Avenue was also present at the festival.

Messrs. Thomas and Marshall Osborn, sons of Mr. and Mrs. James M. Osborn of 77 Edgehill Road, who are attending the Norfolk Music School, were also at Tanglewood.

Mr. and Mrs. Robbins Miller of Old Orchard Road, North Haven, and their sons, Barton and Tim, who have a Summer home in Stockbridge, also attended the series.

Mrs. Arthur J. Connolly of 175 Toneneke Drive, North Haven, and Mrs. C. S. Hitchins of 599 Whitney Avenue were weekend festival guests.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

'Tanglewood on Parade' Slated Friday Afternoon

Special to The Hartford Times

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.—Plans are complete for "Tanglewood on Parade," the annual benefit for the Berkshire Music Center, to be held Friday. The celebration this year will mark the tenth session of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Summer school.

Opening at 5:45 with "Fanfare for Bima", according to tradition, and a welcome by Boris Goldovsky, the program will include, in addition to simultaneous performances of the symphony orchestra and chamber music group at 6, the premier of an opera, "Alcottiana" by Andrew Singer, by the Tanglewood Opera Associates. Set in Concord in the last century, the opera is based on actual conversations, recorded at the time, of boys in Bronson Alcott's school.

* * *

MILDRED MILLER, who will sing in the last act of "Carmen" with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Leonard Bernstein, in the evening concert, was at Tanglewood two seasons. A native of Cleveland and graduate of the New England Conservatory, she sang in the New England Opera Company and was invited to the Metropolitan when the manager, Rudolph Bing, heard her sing in Munich.

Jacob Krachmalnick, violin soloist in Chausson's "Poem", was assistant concertmaster of the Cleveland Orchestra before joining the Philadelphia Orchestra was concertmaster. He spent one Summer at Tanglewood.

* * *

HOWARD SHANET, who will conduct the Chausson, is conductor of the Huntington, (W.-Va.) Orchestra. He assisted the late Serge Koussevitzky when he conducted in Israel in 1950, and studied under him at Tanglewood. Seymour Lipkin, soloist for Mendelssohn's Piano Concerto in G minor winner of the Rachmaninoff award, concertizes in the Winter season. He was one of the outstanding piano students at Tanglewood for several seasons.

In addition to the performance of Pergolesi' "Livietta e Tracollo" in the formal garden, Jacques Ibert's "Angelique" will be given at 4 p. m. for holders of reserved seat and box tickets.

All seats in the front section of the shed will be reserved. General admission tickets, on sale now, will entitle the holders to seat in the rear section, to the capacity of the shed. Ticket and program information is available at the box office, Tanglewood

---

NEW YORK,
JOURNAL-AM
AUG 1 - 19

French-Ger

By MILES KASTEN
TANGLEWOOD,
Mass., Aug. 1.—
Munch chose a German program
the second symphon end of the Berkshire last night. For mos
French portion, Nic riot appeared as pi ist. The truly su music of the eveni with the Brahms
Symphony.
An interesting co curred between the faded romanticism o his "Incidental Musi leas et Melisande" an for Piano and Orche

GFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
1 - 1952

shire Music Goes Into

Bernstein to Have Koussevitzky Memo enting New Opera

. 1—The final week end shire Festival, by the phony Orchestra, Charles will open Thurs-Schumann's Symphony ring"), Swanson's Short nd Brahms' Second Pi-
, in which Artur Rubinnake his first appearglewood in the solopart.
Bernstein, successor to erge Koussevitzky as onducting and his pupil

RET MARSHAW

hire Music Center, the ummer school, will ocu for the Koussevitzky ncert next Saturday
rogram will be C. P. E. te from Concerto in D Copland's Third Sym-belius' Fifth, one of Dr.
s favorites. Mr. Munch Festival Sunday after-Berlioz "Requiem," in w McKinley will sing

rrent week end, Pierre take the baton for the at Tanglewood to con-Wagner program Satur-
r. Munch has chosen afternoon Beethoven's
"Egmont" and Eighth Debussy's "Iberia" and s Morts" by his friend, gger. In the last, the us, prepared by Hu

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
JUL 27 1952

ATTENDING BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL at Tanglewood in Lenox are, front row, Mrs. Michael T. Kelleher, Mrs. Edward A. Taft and Miss Lutie Goldstein; second row, Fire Commissioner Kelleher, Mrs. Allen Forbes and Pierre Monteux, and, standing, Mayor Robert T. Capeless of Pittsfield, Edward A. Taft, and Todd Perry.

TIGHT BINDING

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN

-German Program at Tanglewood

[illegible]

the bright, smart modernism of Ravel's piano concerto. The romantic vein ran richly through interpretations of Faure, it encountered difficulties of adjustment in the jazz influence of Ravel.

Miss Henriot is endowed with wonderfully skillful fingers. She plays both fast and clean. When it comes to style and meaning, however, this mechanical mastery does not always prove a means to an end.

The Faure went better than the Ravel, but still it had a matter-of-factness not wholly conducive to the atmosphere of the piece. She missed "the blues" element of the Ravel, coming through best in the final movement her "drive" gave this a certain brilliance.

Munch presented a very human and quite dramatic Brahms. Here again the romantic nature of the music prompted his interpretation. The classic aspect of Brahms became obscured in his personalized treatment of the second movement and the heroic manner in which he approached the third.

All this emotional surge is quite stirring when heightened by the superb playing of the orchestra. Still it raises the question of artistic balance no matter how exciting the drama and the sonorities.

Rain in the late afternoon held down the attendance to 6,850 people. Some music lovers may not have been attracted by the program, for not all the seats in the music shed were occupied.

ARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
UL 30 1952

ewood on
' Slated
Afternoon

The Hartford Times
ood, Lenox, Mass. are complete for od on Parade," benefit for the Music Center, to day. The celebration will mark the tenth he Boston Symphony
Summer school.
t 5:45 with "Fanfare
according to tradi-welcome by Boris
he program will in-ddition to simultanmances of the symestra and chamber o at 8, the premier ra, "Alcottiana" by ger, by the Tangle-Associates. Set in the last century, the ed on actual conver-orded at the time, of nson Alcott's school.

* * *

MILLER, who will last act of "Carmen"
ston Symphony Ornducted by Leonard in the evening con-at Tanglewood two native of Cleveland
te of the New Engrvatory, she sang in ngland, Opera Com-was invited to the
when the manager,
ing, heard her sing

Krachmalnick, violin
Chausson's "Poem".
nt concertmaster of nd Orchestra before Philadelphia Orches-certmaster. He spent
r at Tanglewood.

* * *

SHANET, who will Chausson, is con-the Huntington, (W.- tra. He assisted the oussevitzky when he in Israel in 1950, and der him at Tanglemour Lipkin, soloist
lssohn's Piano Con-minor winner of the award, concer-Winter season. He he outstanding piano
Tanglewood for sev-on to the perform-ergolesi' "Livietta e

the formal garden.
rt's "Angelique" will
p. m. for holders of
and box tickets.
in the front section
d will be reserved.
mission tickets, on ll entitle the holders the rear section, to of the shed. Ticket am information is the box office

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 1 - 1952

rkshire Music Festival Goes Into Its Final Week

ard Bernstein to Have Prominent Part, Conducting Koussevitzky Memorial Concert the 9th, and Presenting New Opera the 8th

r Aug. 1—The final week end
Berkshire Festival, by the Symphony Orchestra, Charles conducting, will open Thurs
ith Schumann's Symphony ("Spring"), Swanson's Short ony and Brahms' Second Pi ncerto, in which Artur Rubin-will make his first appear-t Tanglewood in the solopart.
ard Bernstein, successor to te Serge Koussevitzky as of conducting and his pupil

ARGARET HARSHAW

Berkshire Music Cente[illegible]
's summer school [illegible] podium for the Ko[illegible] concert next Satu[illegible]
he program will be [illegible]
Andante [illegible]
Aaron Copland's [illegible] nd Sib[illegible]'s Fifth [illegible]
[illegible]
the Festival Sunday [illegible]
th the Berlioz "Requiem" [illegible]
Andrew McKinley will sing
r solo.

he current week end, Pierre will take the baton for the time at Tanglewood to conan-Wagner program Satu[illegible] ht. Mr. Munch has chosen day afternoon Beethoven's to 'Egmont' and Eighth ny, Debussy's "Iberia" and nse des Morts" by his friend
Honegger. In the last [illegible]

Ross, will sing, with Richard Sharretts, baritone; Irene Jordan, soprano; Betty Lou Allen, contralto; and Arnold Moss, narrator.

"Trouble in Tahiti"

A few changes have been made in next week's Berkshire Music Center calendar. "Trouble in Tahiti," which Leonard Bernstein, the composer, describes as "a little opera in seven scenes," will be given two performances next Friday—at 8.15 and 9.45. The symphony concert by the school orchestra, originally scheduled for Friday night, will be given Saturday at 2.30, led by student conductors and Thor Johnson, Cincinnati Orchestra leader, and a former Tanglewood student. At 4.30 the small choir will sing. The schedule otherwise remains as announced, with the theater filled three weeks in advance for the performances of Mozart's "Titus" Monday and Tuesday nights, by Friends of the Berkshire Music Center who donated early to its support.

Program and ticket information will be mailed on request to Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. General admission for listening from the lawn is on sale the days of the concerts. The complete program follows:—

Saturday
4 p. m.
Composer's Forum
8.15 p. m.
Berkshire Festival Concert
Pierre Monteux conducting [illegible] Farewell and Fire Music from "Die Walkure"........ Wagner
James Pease, soloist
[illegible] Scene from "Siegfried"
[illegible] from "Gotterdammerung"
Siegfried's Rhine Journey
Siegfried's Death
Immolation Scene
Soloists: Margaret Harshaw, soprano
Howard Vandenburg, tenor
Sunday
10 a. m.
Chamber Music
3 p. m.
Berkshire Festival Concert
Charles Munch conducting
Overture to "Egmont" .... Beethoven
Symphony No. 8 .... Beethoven
[illegible] .... Debussy
"Danse des Morts" .... Honegger
(with chorus)
Monday
4.30 p. m.
Song Recital
8.15 p. m.
Opera
"Titus" .... Mozart
Tuesday
8.15 p. m.
Opera
"Titus" .... Mozart
Thursday
8.15 p. m.
Berkshire Festival Concert
Charles Munch conducting
Symphony No. 1 ("Spring") .... Schumann
[illegible] Symphony .... Swanson
Piano Concerto No. 2 in B-flat .... Brahms
Soloist: Artur Rubinstein
Friday
8.15 and 9.45 p. m.
Opera
"Trouble in Tahiti" .... Bernstein
(two performances)
(Applications for tickets must be made in advance)
Saturday
10 a. m.
Boston Symphony Orchestra
Public Rehearsal
(Benefit, Pension Fund)
2.30 p. m.
Symphony Concert
Berkshire Music Center Orchestra
4.30 p. m.
Concert by the small choir
8.15 p. m.
Berkshire Festival Concert
Leonard Bernstein conducting
(The Koussevitzky Memorial Concert)
[illegible] from Concerto in D major .... C. P. E. Bach
Symphony No. [illegible] .... Copeland
Symphony No. 5 .... Sibelius
Sunday
10 a. m.
Chamber Music
3 p. m.
Berkshire Festival Concert
Charles Munch conducting
Requiem (with Chorus) .... Berlioz
Soloist: Andrew McKinley, tenor

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
JUL 31 1952

Annual 'Parade' Scheduled Friday At Tanglewood

The annual program of the Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood-on-Parade, will be held Friday afternoon and evening, at Lenox, Mass.

The event will be for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center, now in its tenth year. During that time, more than 3,800 students have attended the school, of which Charles Munch is director, and where members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra instruct.

The program will begin at 4 o'clock, with a special performance of Pergolesi's opera, "Livietta e Tracolla," and Raymond Winding-White's "The Tub," for box and reserved seat holders.

At 6 o'clock, there will be simultaneous performances by the school's departments of chamber music, orchestral playing and opera.

Seven o'clock will bring a choral concert on the porch of the main house, and time for picknicking.

At 8 o'clock, the Boston Symphony will be conducted by former Tanglewood students, in a series of symphonic, concerto and operatic works.

PAGE 12

But, Oh, the Traffic—

Fine Place For Music

By HENRY BUTLER
Times Staff Writer

LENOX, Mass., July 30—Tanglewood becomes Tanglefender as soon as a concert is over.

The otherwise incomparable spot for hearing music has one of the worst parking-congestion problems I ever have seen.

Nothing short of a major project in engineering, including some highway widening and re-routing, is likely to open the present bottlenecks.

Meanwhile, bumpers clank, fenders scratch and tempers clash in the mass exodus of cars.

I had an impression tempers were made more edgy than usual by Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring," which concluded the program. The great essay in modern music makes strenuous demands on listeners, and possibly even frays some nerves.

Pierre Monteux, who conducted, had conducted the 1913 world premiere of the Stravinsky "Sacre du printemps" in Paris. He also had introduced the composition to this country with the Boston Symphony in 1924.

Hisses Turn to Cheers

Last May he had a second chance to conduct the "Sacre" in Paris with the Boston orchestra, winning an ovation in place of the hisses accorded the 1913 premiere.

His triumph here drew one of the biggest receptions I've yet seen a conductor get. I lost count of curtain calls. There must have been about 10, and the bravos kept getting louder. The square-shouldered, stocky little man with a walrus mustaché half concealing a benign Gallic smile looked pleased.

He had earned the ovation. He had earned it, as he would be first to admit, with superb assistance from the Boston Symphony. Greatly augmented in all the noisier departments of wind instruments and percussion, the orchestra handled the immense technical difficulties of Stravinsky's score as if they were not much more trouble than Sousa. (I hasten to add they are, including some wild off-beat, cross-rhythm stuff, shot through with dissonant brass blasts, that makes the noblest effort of Stan Kenton sound like the seventh grade band from Tanktown).

Now in his mid-70s, Mr. Monteux puts many a younger conductor to shame with his memory and his skill. Using no score, he described in gesture a clear pattern of the shifting meters and fiendish syncopation Stravinsky wrote.

Also on the program were the "Secret Marriage" Overture of Cimarosa, a kind of blended, but not aged in the woodwinds, version of Mozart's style, and Schubert's C major Symphony, No. 7.

The Schubert Symphony, starting with beautiful bell-like tones from the Boston horn section (if possible, it's better than ever), was a good prelude to the Stravinsky.

But maybe Mr. Monteux chose the Schubert because it does get long-winded enough to make even a conservative crave some rugged modern music.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-JOURNAL
JUL 31 1952

Mozart's Opera 'Titus' Aug. 4-5 In 'Tanglewood'

INFORMATIVE letters from "Tanglewood," Lenox, Mass., tell of the Mozart opera "Titus" to be given by Berkshire Music Center students Aug. 4-5, performances which well may be the first production of this master work in the United States. The opera was commissioned to be performed at the coronation of Joseph II as King of Bohemia in the 18th century. In the last year of his life, Mozart was busy composing "The Magic Flute" when that work was interrupted by the commission for "Titus." Within a space of six weeks, "Titus" was composed, rehearsed and performed. Mozart's favorite student, Sussmayer, helped the master who was ill and under considerable pressure.

FOR THE FORTHCOMING production in "Tanglewood," Boris Goldoosky and Sarah Caldwell have revised and translated the text of the opera. Spoken dialogue will be substituted for certain recitatives, but the Mozart music is left intact. Leo Van Witzen designed costumes; Goldoosky will stage and conduct the opera. The cast will include Charles Matheson, Lloyd Oostenbrug, Irene Jordan, Jacqueline Bazinet, Sarah Fleming, Arlene Stone, Shirley Winston, Jacqueline Langee and Richard Sharretts. Spoken roles added to this 1952 version will be portrayed by Arthur Schoep and Robert Mesrobian.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
AUG 1 - 1952

Music

French Works Heard at Tanglewood

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1.—Rain during the day and the threat of rain in the evening held down the attendance at the beginning of the second series of Tanglewood Shed concerts yesterday. There was compensation in the fact, however, that the evening was really cool, and, as it turned out, just the kind to while away listening to the music of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Charles Munch.

Music of France occupied three-quarters of the program this trip. There was the incidental music written by Gabriel Faure for Maeterlinck's drama "Pelleas et Melisande"; then, again Faure, the ballade for piano and orchestra, in F sharp major, Op. 19; following that the Ravel piano concerto, and the Brahms Fourth Symphony to close.

Good, Clean Playing.

Anyway you look at it, a nice piece of programming. The homage to Faure with his two scheduled works is a deserved one. For this composer gets far from enough performances on the symphonic circuit.

Soloist of the evening was the young French pianist Nicole Henriot who is no stranger to American audiences. She was heard in the Faure Ballade and in the Ravel concerto. There was some good, clean playing in both pieces, Miss Henriot being the kind of artist whose especial forte is to do just that.

World of Challenge.

Whether she captured fully the spirit of the Ravel, I can't say. Certainly its fascinating surprises (even in this day), its typical lyricism, its compelling rhythms and colors offer the interpreter a whole world of challenge and opportunity. I did feel, however, that the jazzy part of the presto, its last movement, lacked the vitality, the true feeling of jazz. Ravel, if you ask me, surely felt it. It is not the good fortune of all his interpreters to do so, which is not to say that Miss Henriot failed to approach that particular section with at least—shall we say—an academic idea of it.

Insofar as the orchestral contribution is concerned, one could find no flaw in the musicians' faithful account of their part. And I thought that Mr. Munch, though a bit stern in the same presto, did get close to the spirit of the music.

Charming Suite.

Virtually everybody knows that DeBussy composed an opera called "Pelleas et Melisande." But not everybody knows, strange as it seems, that Faure wrote music incidental to the play, and that it was performed (together with the drama) four years before the DeBussy masterpiece.

This suite of Faure's based on that incidental music is quite charming, quite in the mood of the Maeterlinck work, I should say. (There is a section in the suite which was added later, and that is the Sicilienne. Yet in every respect it matches the others in mood and style.)

The Brahms Fourth, about whose tempos last night one could get controversial, had the benefit of extraordinary refinement in the playing and a wealth of expressiveness. It is remarkable how much expressiveness Mr. Munch can get out of the piece, considering the rather slow progress of his tempos. All I can say to that is—it's his version, if he were not a fine musician, he could not make the work come off as interestingly as it does.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 1 - 1952

MUSIC CENTER PLANS TO GIVE MOZART'S 'TITUS'

Berkshire Presentation of Great Work Scheduled For Aug. 4, 5

Pittsfield, July 31—The Tanglewood performance of Mozart's Titus ("La Clemenza di Tito"), to be given by Berkshire Music Center students next Monday and Tuesday, may well be the first production of this great master work to be given in the United States. The opera was commissioned to be performed at the coronation of Joseph II as King of Bohemia. The original text by Metastasio was revised for Mozart by Mazzola.

In the last year of his life Mozart was busy composing "The Magic Flute" when his work was interrupted by the commission for Titus. Titus was composed, rehearsed and performed within a space of six weeks. Mozart, ill and under considerable pressure, took with him his favorite student, Sussmayer, to help him. To Sussmayer the Secco recitatives are credited.

For the Tanglewood production the text of the opera has been revised and translated into English by Boris Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell. Spoken dialogue will be substituted for the Secco recitatives. Mozart's music has been left intact and in its original order. The only change occurs when Chorus No. 15 is performed as a part of the last scene.

The opera is concerned with a conspiracy against the life and throne of the Roman emperor, Titus. The scenery for this production was designed by Charles Elson and makes use of a new light projection machine designed by Paul Planner. It makes possible a number of unusual scenic effects, the most remarkable of which is probably the burning of Rome which climaxes the end of the first act.

The costumes are designed by Leo Van Witsen. The production will be staged and conducted by Mr. Goldovsky. The cast will include: Titus, Monday night, Charles Matheson; Tuesday, Lloyd Oostenbrug; Vitella, Monday, Irene Jordan; Tuesday, Jacqueline Bazinet; Servillia, Monday, Sarah Fleming; Tuesday, Arlene Stone; Sectus, Shirley Winston; Annius, Jacqueline Langee; Publius, Richard Sharretts. The spoken roles of Lentulus and Caius Marius which have been added in this version will be portrayed by Arthur Schoep and Robert Mesrobian.

So keen is the interest in the production that three weeks in advance all seats were reserved by Friends of the Berkshire Music Center who were invited to the production as to all school performances.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN

AUG 2 - 1952

Mozart's Opera Nears Premier

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., Saturday, Aug. 2. Surrounded by many orchestral activities and, in some instances, excitements, with symphonies and chamber concerts and instruction and what-not going on all about him, Boris Goldovsky has been working industriously at Tanglewood on his production of Mozart's "La Clemenza di Tito." This was Mozart's last opera to be composed (it is said that he finished it in eighteen days), though not the last to be produced, that particular destiny befalling "The Magic Flute," its immediate predecessor.

"La Clemenza di Tito," which in Mr. Goldovsky's and Sarah Caldwell's English version goes by the title "Titus," was expressly written for the coronation of Leopold II as King of Bohemia, at Prague, Sept. 6, 1791.

When Mozart received the commission from Prague, a city that had never failed to treat him well, he looked about for a suitable libretto. In order to get something that would be in keeping with the regal ceremonies, he hit upon Metastasio's "La Clemenza di Tito," a book that had already obtained more than the musical setting. Further, the libretto underwent editing by Caterino Mazzola.

Of all the reports that I have examined, concerning this libretto, I find none that seems genuinely favorable to it. At least, all agree as to its dated type, which Eric Blom describes as "stiff, lifeless . . . Italian opera seria."

Blom goes on to say that Mozart was not "interested in the commission" [apart from its financial return], nor, one fancies, in Roman history, and Metastasio's frigid libretto made no appeal to him, whether he considered Mazzola's altered version an improvement or not.

"His craftsmanship functions beautifully as ever; the manufacture of concerted numbers is wonderful, but it is a masterpiece in cold marble, not in the living flesh and blood he knew so well how to set in action on the stage."

To complete an opera and rehearse it in 18 days is hardly common practice. (Some other sources say that the period was six weeks—even so, a fantastically brief time.) But we must remember that here there was a Mozart with great genius, in this his last year of life, still flowing from every pore.

Whatever the merits of the libretto employed by Mozart, the joint offering of Mr. Goldovsky and Miss Caldwell—one speaks from experience—is not likely to perpetuate dullness or lifelessness. All the "dry" recitatives will be replaced by spoken dialogue, which is good, indeed.

Mr. Goldovsky assures us that Mozart's music has been left intact and in its original order, excepting one minor change—when chorus No. 15, is made a part of the last scene.

The opera, which will obtain its American premiere on Monday evening—and be repeated on the following night—has to do with the Roman Emperor Titus and a conspiracy against his life and throne. The scenery was designed by Charles Kelson. A new light projection machine by Paul Planner is capable of all kinds of scenic effects—not excluding the burning of Rome at the end of the first act.

Leo Witsen designed the costumes. Mr. Goldovsky has staged and will conduct the production, which is a student project of the Bershire Music Center.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 1 - 1952

Tanglewood

The Berkshire Festival

* * *

Tanglewood's Second Week

LENOX, Mass., July 31. — A threatening leaden sky, coming in the wake of vigorous afternoon thunder showers, looked down upon Tanglewood-in-the-Berkshires last night as the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch, began the second week of its major orchestral series in the festival ground's capacious shed.

For the event, Mr. Munch had chosen a well balanced program from French and German masters. The evening began with Gabriel Faure's incidental music for Maurice Maeterlinck's play "Pelleas et Melisande" and continued with the same composer's Balade for Piano and Orchestra in F sharp major, Op. 19, with the French pianist Nicole Henriot as soloist. Miss Henriot then returned to the stage for a performance of Maurice Ravel's Piano Concerto in G major.

This was followed after the intermission, by Johannes Brahms' Symphony No. 4, in E minor, Op. 98, the same work which, in a Victor recording by Mr. Munch and his orchestra, has recently been honored with the highest award of the Academie du Disque Francais.

Tomorrow's program features the festival's "Tanglewood on Parade," a seven-hour panorama of Tanglewood's student and professional skills. During the course of the day, the following events are scheduled to take place: A presentation of two one-act operas, "Livietta and Tracollo" by Pergolesi, and "Angelique" by Jacques Ibert, and a concert of music by Foss, Chausson, Mendelssohn and Bizet with the conductors James Aliferis, Howard Shanet, Lukas Foss and Leonard Bernstein apportioning the directing honors between them. Also promised is waltzing on the lawn, door prizes and a picnic supper. In short, general revelry is the order of the hour.

J. S. H.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 2 1952

TANGLEWOOD'S ANNIVERSARY IS NOTABLE DAY

Opera Premiere, Famous Personalities Make Program Exhilarating

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Tanglewood, Aug. 1—What a day. In the memory of the many "Tanglewood On Parade" celebrations, we remember no more beautiful day. This is the 10th anniversary of the Berkshire Music Center and it was appropriate that many former students who had made good should be invited back to take part in this very special celebration. In addition, there was the world premiere of "Alcottiana," a [illegible] cantata by Andre Singer, and what may be a first performance in this country of an opera buffa by Pergolesi, "Livietta and Tracollo" as well as a portion of Jacques Ibert's opera "Angelique."

Festive Evening

The evening concert brought forth many of Tanglewood's famous personalities. D[illegible] Aaron Copland was on hand to welcome guests and Lukas Foss appeared [illegible] as composer and conductor. Seymour Lipkin, pianist, was present to give a superb performance of Mendelssohn's "Piano Concerto in G Minor" under the direction of Lukas Foss, while Leonard Bernstein appeared in a new role, that of operatic conductor of the final act of "Carmen" with Mildred Miller, David Lloyd and James Pease, as principal soloists, all veterans of the music center.

First things first. The Pergolesi and Ibert operas, both broad comedies with rather [illegible] plots, were sung in the garden against what Boris Goldovsky called the most beautiful backdrop in the world, the famed Stockbridge bowl.

The orchestral concert was an exciting affair. Mr. Copland noted that the center has 404 students representing some 16 countries. Lukas Foss, one of the finest of the younger group of musicians, was introduced as a composer when the last movement of "The Prairie" was sung by the [illegible] under the direction of James Aliferis, a center alumnus. The work was written by Mr. Foss when he was [illegible] years of age and completed when he was 19. It was based on [illegible] berg's poem and the music [illegible] text expertly. The medium [illegible] but Mr. Foss has written [illegible] the voice and although much of the tessitura is high, the [illegible] came through well. Mr. Aliferis conducted easily and revealed himself as an experienced choral conductor. He prepares the chorus for the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra [illegible] tions.

Chausson's "Poeme" [illegible] orchestra was [illegible] Krachmalnick, con[illegible] Philadelphia Symphony [illegible] and only partisan [illegible] was not a [illegible] "Poeme" is one of the [illegible] works in the [illegible] warmth and sen[illegible] over. These chara[illegible] st had a[illegible] beautifully [illegible] orchestra under [illegible] and Shanet a [illegible] exquisite collaboration.

The first portion of the [illegible] ended in a blaze of [illegible] as Seymour Lipkin and Lukas Foss [illegible] bravura performance of Mendelssohn's "Piano Concerto in G Minor." Here was good [illegible] written to exploit the [illegible] and to entertain [illegible]

It was [illegible] and make-shift [illegible] Mr. Goldovsky [illegible] operas a[illegible] held over him [illegible] operas were s[illegible] simplicity, cos[illegible] But, as is usual [illegible] ductions, the [illegible] and enunciation [illegible] guage superb. [illegible] the Pergolesi opera [illegible] ing. The Ibert [illegible] declamatory [illegible] might [illegible] way through the [illegible]

While the [illegible] one part [illegible] music on [illegible] theater [illegible] cantata [illegible] tions w[illegible] of the [illegible] the 1830's [illegible] Alcott in Bo[illegible] sented the [illegible] cott in charge [illegible] affair rather un[illegible] ticipants were me[illegible] associates, a [illegible] enced singers than those [illegible] department.

Except for the [illegible] ence of David Rae Smith [illegible] Mr. Alcott, the singers [illegible] too good, and there [illegible] sical experience [illegible] citing action and [illegible] tion put many a passage [illegible] Singer's score sounded [illegible] ficult and the young singers [illegible] excellent musicianship [illegible] their way through it.

Tonight both aims were aptly accomplished. Mr. Lipkin is a superb pianist, and Mr. Foss revealed himself as a talented conductor.

We have seen Leonard Bernstein in many musical mediums, in all of which he has proven magnificent. Tonight as conductor of the final act of "Carmen" he conquered again. We have seldom heard the Bizet score so fully revealed. The chorus was in great form and sang the familiar choruses with great elan. Miss Miller, Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Pease were in excellent voice and their tones filled the huge shed. It was an exciting and brilliant performance and a fitting close to a day which had had its full of excitement and musical adventure.

We were told that 6000 people were on hand today. That was not enough, but it is possible that the change of date to Aug. 1, and the fact that no "great" names were listed caused the relatively small audience. Anyway, it was a great day.

MORNING UNIO

AUG 1 -

ICOLE HENRI SHARES HONO AT TANGLEW

anist Featured as B ymphony Presents F Compo

By WILLARD M. CLA

anglewood, July nch and petite golde ole Henriot shared hon t with the Boston Sy hestra in a program de music of Faure, Rav hms. It was in the Fau " and the Ravel "Conc no and Orchestra" that nch musicians stirred th to rapturous applaus in perfect accord and ned to performances of rank.

Faure Neglected

he program opened with ve performance of Faur al music to Masterlinc et Melisande." This m tten four years before te his opera. Faure and have been too long y recently have his s begun to come into the incidental music " are his only large wo all frequently. The lleas et Milisande" ngth and melodic co n the music Debuss ely as is that music. r. Munch is justly fa erpretation of this m h the superb Boston chestra to respond to nd the result was a pe st we have ever hear sic.

The "Ballade" for piano estra, by Faure, was fir piano. A subsequent angement has served original. This is quie tive music, for the utiful as to melody ythmically.

Only seldom does it degree of forcefulness ot and Dr. Munch kept ll within its relat mework. She plays chnique, absolute assur tyle and she has rhythm ano phrases complete ood of the ballade.

Buoyant Concer

Quite a different stor uoyant, uninhibited, c avel. This is a virtuos ll concerned and it w irtuoso performance. T pening movement, night be called "symp hythms, went off with nd brilliance that th ould not restrain its he close. In the second cantabile, almost a pianist has everything h or most of the time. revealed a wide dynamic oloration, and feeling fo c line. The final mo brilliant in the extreme pianist was off the stool than on it, and she pla ceptional brilliance and which never failed to the orchestra. The enti ance was one of those one hears rarely.

I have just heard portioned and cogent pe the fourth symphony We are told that this which Dr. Munch has p fection and he and the phony Orchestra receiv ward from the French industry for a recordin Munch seldom dramati The music usually flo speaking for itself, th derful second moveme with a listening experie ish. Listening to this one wondered just wh nese people wanted or Johannes Brahms for an incomparable streng to finish, as well as a lodic beauty and supe ship.

"Tanglewood on Par ing the 10th annivers Berkshire Music Center tomorrow and a huge pected to be on han and view the many activities. There will the garden at 4 p. m. scenes from several theater-shed, and the cert will bring forth ties as Yukas Foss, co delssohn's "Piano Minor" with Seymour ist; Lukas Foss as c the finale of "The Pr for chorus and orche and Leonard Bernst the final scene of turing Mildred Mil James Pease, bariton Lloyd, tenor.

The audience was only 6850, due of co variable weather Berksh

---

-The Berkshire Evening Eagle, Saturday, Aug. 2, 1952

Boris Goldovsky Is Narrator For Records

Boris Goldovsky, whose national reputation as an opera authority has been doubly confirmed in this neighborhood because of his position for many years as head of the opera department in the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, this week appears in a new role and one for which he is incomparably well-fitted, as narrator on records for the newly formed recording company called Boston Records. The company plans to issue what they call "Companions to Opera" for the more popular works now being played in various opera houses and their first issue is devoted to Bizet's "Carmen."

Goldovsky's informative and witty interpretive narrative is as crisp and clear as when he talks preceding the operas he produces at Tanglewood. He also does the piano playing on the disc, a long-playing double-sider, and this matches his narration in all its character. The singing is on the level a man like Goldovsky would demand and in the capable hands, or voices, of Eunice Alberts, contralto, as Carmen; David Lloyd, tenor, as Don Jose; Margo Stagliano, soprano, as Micaela, and Paul Tibbetts, baritone, as Escamillo.

The main arias are expertly and vividly put forth, and the story is held together by Goldovsky's excellently chosen bridges. This is a new project and one that will acquaint opera lovers with the essence of the music and of the story as quickly and in as attractive a manner as can be thought of at this minute.

—J.C.R.

NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

3rd

AUG 2 1952

Tanglewood's 10th Annual Parade Draws 6,000 Music-Lovers

The 10th annual "Tanglewood on Parade" celebration, for the benefit of the Berkshire Music center, drew 6,000 music-lovers yesterday, with a program that ranged from opera to choral singing being presented.

The long program began at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, when two operas, Pergolesi's "Livietta and Trascollo," and "Angelique" by Ibert, were presented in the garden, directed by Boris Goldovsky. At the same time, Berkshire Music center students gave examples of choral singing and the world premiere of the opera, "Alcottian," was given in the theater shed.

The evening concert found Leonard Bernstein conducting the Boston Symphony orchestra in the final act of Bizet's "Carmen," with Mildred Miller, David Lloyd, and James Pease as soloists. Also heard were Mendelssohn's "Piano Concerto in G Minor, "The Prairie," by Lukas Foss, and Chausson's 'Poeme."

MONTREAL, CANADA
GAZETTE

AUG 2 - 1952

Tanglewood to Offer Rare Mozart Opera

The Tanglewood performance of Mozart's Titus (La Clemenza di Tito), to be given by Berkshire Music Centre students on Aug. 4 and 5 may be the first production of the work to be given in the United States. The opera was commissioned to be performed at the coronation of Joseph II as King of Bohemia. The original text by Metastasio was revised for Mozart by Massola.

In the last year of his life Mozart was busy composing The Magic Flute when his work was interrupted by the commission for Titus. Titus was composed, rehearsed and performed within a space of six weeks. Mozart, ill and under considerable pressure, took with him his favorite student, Sussmayer, to help him. To Sussmayer the recitatives are credited.

For the Tanglewood production the text of the opera has been revised and translated into English by Boris Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell. Spoken dialogue will be substitued for the recitatives. Mozart's music has been left intact and in its original order. The only change occurs when a chorus is performed as a part of the last scene.

MASS.
UNION
1952

LEWOOD'S IVERSARY IS NOTABLE DAY

Premiere, Famous nalities Make Pro- am Exhilarating

WILLARD M. CLARK

wood, Aug. 1—What a day. mory of the many "Tangle Parade" celebrations, w no more beautiful day. he 10th anniversary of the Music Center and it was ~~that~~ many former stu- had made good should back to take part in this al celebration. In addition, the world premiere of a," a scenic cantata by nger, and what may be a formance in this country pera buffa by Pergolesi, and Trascollo" as well as a of Jacques Ibert's opera ne.

Festive Evening

evening concert brought al of Tanglewood's famous ties. Director Aaron Cop- on hand to welcome the d Lukas Foss appeared both ser and conductor. Seymour ianist, was present to give performance of Mendels- Piano Concerto in G Minor" direction of Lukas Foss, onard Bernstein, appeared role, that of operatic con- the final act of "Carmen," dred Miller, David Lloyd Pease, as principal solo- eterans of the music cenings first. The Pergolesi and ras, both broad comedies, er ridiculous plots, were the garden, against what ldovsky called the most backdrop in the world, the ckbridge bowl.

hestra concert was an ex- r. Mr. Copland noted that has 404 students repre- ome 16 countries. Lukas of the finest of the young- of musicians was first in- s a composer, when the ment of "The Prairie" was he chorus under the di- James Aliferis, also a mnus. The work was writ- . Foss when he was 17 e and completed when he was based on Carl Sand- n and the music fits the ly. The medium is modern, oss has written well for nd although much of the high, the words came ll. Mr. Aliferis conducted revealed what an ex- horal conductor he is. He e chorus for the Minneap- hony Orchestra produc-

's "Poeme" for violin and was played by Jacob ck, concertmaster of the Symphony Orchestra, participant tonight who center alumnus. The one of the most effective e repertory and demands and sensitivity to put it characteristics the violin- enty. His tone was full, controlled, and the or- er the direction of How- a center alumnus, gave llaboration.

portion of the concert laze of glory as Seymour Lukas Foss put over a rformance of Mendels- o Concerto in G Minor." ood old fashioned music exploit the instrument- ain.

in the sun, very hot. ift hats were the rule. ky, accompanying both piano, had an umbrella to shade his eyes. The staged with the greatest stumes were negligible. ral with Goldovsky pro- action was excellent on of the English lan- . Musically we found opera the most reward- t opera was filled with passages and it took musicians to find their the intricate score.

was choral singing on the grounds, chamber ther, we went to the to hear the singer from actual conversa- down during a session progressive school of rated by A. Bronson ton. The scene repre- ool room with Mr. Al- . We found the entire uninteresting. The par- members of the opera group of less expert- han those of the opera

e fine voice and pres- Rae Smith, who sang other voices were not here was lack of mu- , but again, the ex- nd clear cut enunc a passage across. [illegible] unded extremely dif- ing singers revealed [illegible] ship in finding

---

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG [illegible] 1952

NICOLE HENRIOT SHARES HONORS AT TANGLEWOOD

Pianist Featured as Boston Symphony Presents French Composers

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Tanglewood, July 31—Charles Munch and petite golden-haired Nicole Henriot shared honors tonight with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program devoted to the music of Faure, Ravel and Brahms. It was in the Faure "Ballade" and the Ravel "Concerto for Piano and Orchestra" that the two French musicians stirred their audience to rapturous applause. They were in perfect accord and thus one listened to performances of the very first rank.

Faure Neglected

The program opened with a superlative performance of Faure's incidental music to Maeterlinck's "Pelleas et Melisande." This music was written four years before Debussy wrote his opera. Faure and his music have been too long neglected. Only recently have his exquisite songs begun to come into their own and the incidental music and "Ballade" are his only large works heard at all frequently. The music to "Pelleas et Millsande" has more strength and melodic consistency than the music Debussy wrote, lovely as is that music.

Dr. Munch is justly famed for his [illegible] of this music and [illegible] Boston Symphony [illegible] to every de- [illegible] was a performance [illegible] have ever heard of this music.

The "Ballade" for piano and orchestra [illegible] Faure, was first written [illegible] A subsequent orchestral [illegible] has served to enrich [illegible] This is quiet, contem- [illegible] for the most part, [illegible] to melody and restful [illegible]

[illegible] does it declaim with [illegible] forcefulness. Miss Henriot [illegible] Dr. Munch kept the music within its relatively small [illegible]. She plays with sure technique, absolute assurance as to [illegible] and she has rhythm. The opening phrases completely set the mood of the ballade.

Buoyant Concerto

Quite a different story was the buoyant uninhibited, concerto of Ravel. This is a virtuoso piece for all concerned and it was given a virtuoso performance. The brilliant opening movement, with what might be called "symphonic jazz" rhythms, went off with such dash and brilliance that the audience could not restrain its applause at the close. In the second movement, a cantabile, almost a lullaby, the pianist has everything her own way for most of the time. Miss Henriot revealed a wide dynamic range, fine coloration, and feeling for the melodic line. The final movement was brilliant in the extreme. The little pianist was off the stool, more often than on it, and she played with exceptional brilliance and with a tone which never failed to cut through the orchestra. The entire performance was one of those kind which one hears rarely.

We have just heard a freely-proportioned and cogent performance of the fourth symphony of Brahms. We are told that this is a work for which Dr. Munch has particular affection and he and the Boston Symphony Orchestra received high reviews from the French phonograph industry for a recording of it. Mr. Munch seldom dramatizes a work. The music usually flows naturally, speaking for itself, thus the wonderful second movement andante with a listening experience to cherish. Listening to this performance, one wondered just what the Viennese people wanted or expected for Johannes Brahms for surely it has an incomparable strength from start to finish, as well as a deal of melodic beauty and superb craftsmanship.

"Tanglewood on Parade" celebrating the 10th anniversary of the Berkshire Music Center will be held tomorrow and a huge crowd is expected to be on hand to listen [illegible] view the many department [illegible] vities. There will be opera i [illegible] garden at 4 p. m. There will b [illegible] from several operas in the theater-shed and the evening con [illegible] will bring forth such celebri [illegible] as Yukas Foss, conducting Mendelssohn's "Piano concerto in G Minor" with Seymour Lipkin, soloist; Lukas Foss as composer, when the finale of "The Prairie," a work for chorus and orchestra, is given; and Leonard Bernstein conduction the final scene of "Carmen," featuring Mildred Miller, contralto; James Pease, baritone and David Lloyd, tenor.

The audience was small tonight, only 6850, due of course, to extremely variable weather today through- [illegible] Berkshires and Hampden

---

Federation Members Attend Concert

Lenox, July 31—Heavy skies following the late afternoon storm kept the audience at Tanglewood down to 6500 tonight as the second series of the main Berkshire Music Festival Concerts opened in the shed with Charles Munch conducting the French-German program which included works of Faure, Ravel, and Brahms. An interested member of the throng of concert-goers was the noted conductor Pierre Monteux who will lead the Boston Symphony in Saturday night's concert which will be an exclusive Wagner program.

Also in attendance tonight were members of the New England District of the National Federation of Music Clubs. Heading this delegation were Miss Mabel Parkes Friswell, president of the Massachusetts unit; Mrs. William Lyman, head of the New England district; and Mrs. Ada Holding Miller, president of the national federation. Tomorrow this organization will have its 11th annual convention here in Lenox and in the afternoon dedicate the restored little red house where Hawthorne once wrote during his visits to Tanglewood of old. The house will be formally accepted from the federation by the Berkshire Music Center.

Following the dedication exercises the women will join with the faculty and student body of the center in opening the annual Tanglewood-on-parade program which will have such distinguished alumni as Lukas Foss, Jacob Krachmalnick, Howard Shanet, Seymour Lipkin, Mildred Miller, David Lloyd, James Pease and Leonard Bernstein.

BOSTON, MASS.
Christian Science Monitor

AUG 2 - 1952

Will Plouffe

Three first-chair men of the ~~Boston Symphony~~ Orchestra have a chat with their conductor, Charles Munch, during the intermission of a rehearsal at Tanglewood in the Massachusetts Berkshires. They are, from the left, James Stagliano, French horn; Mr. Munch: Georges Laurent, flute, and Roger Voisin, trumpet. The Berkshire Music Festival will continue through Aug. 10.

Nicole Henriot, French pianist, is a featured soloist with the Boston Symphony at the Tanglewood concerts this week.

Minot Beale

Pierre Monteux is making his first appearance this summer at Tanglewood as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MONTREAL, CANADA
STAR

AUG 2 - 1952

Tanglewood Study Group

Special to The Star and N. Y. Herald Tribune

THE search for unfamiliar compositions is an unceasing one. The pianist who rifles through a thousand off - the - beaten - track pages to find a single acceptable sonata, the violinist whose fingers grow calloused in the playing of countless scores—these are familiar figures on the musical scene. And yet, for a city dweller, access to a work that may lighten and brighten the stark and standard Bach - Beethoven - Brahms recital diet is not hard to come by. Libraries are readily available for consultation and musicological nuggets covered with the dust of oblivion have a way of dropping from conservatory shelves into the unsuspecting arms of academicians. Then, too, composers, classically said to congregate in large towns, are never averse to answering the inquiries of artists bent on enlivening their repertoire.

But what of the suburbanite musician or the performer to whose home no highways lead? His potential resources are, to say the least, few and dreary. This is doubly the case with serious amateurs, music educators and others interested in community music, for these alone do not fall heir to the network of channels which distribute to the needy new and old music found or produced in our time.

A MAJOR step in the direction of alleviating this artistic bottleneck has been bought about by the foundation of the Tanglewood Study Group, a department of the Berkshire Music Center. Under the ~~guidance~~ of Ingoll Dahl, a member of the music staff of the University of California, a group of students including among others a doctor, a lawyer, an insurance broker, an army officer and an accountant is now dedicating from two to six weeks of its time to perusing and performing music of another day whose proper message and practice shall then return with the classmates to their own community. Thus one discovers that this summer the Study Group will try its hand at the music of Elizabethan England and Rennaissance Italy, together with glees and catches put together in the time of Charles II's merry reign. There will also be scenes from early Italian comic opéra and chamber cantatas composed by contemporary composers especially for Mr. Dahl's participating members. In all, the curriculum represents a heady brew and one of ample substance. It speaks of careful preparation and trumpets well its future.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 2 - 1952

Tanglewood

The Berkshire Festival

* * *

Tenth Birthday

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1.—The Berkshire Music Center is having a tenth birthday party, called "Tanglewood on Parade." The entire staff and student body of Tanglewood is on the alert to provide whatever species of musical entertainment its audience requires.

At 4 this afternoon, in the property's formal gardens, two one-act operas were presented, Pergolesi's "Livietta and Tracollo" and Jacques Ibert's "Angelique." At six, normally the hour of rest and refreshment, no less than four departments of the Tanglewood Music School unfolded their talents.

In the Theater-Concert Hall the school's opera department mounted Andre Singer's scenic cantata "Alcottiana," based on a work by Bronson Alcott, father of Louisa Mae, of "Little Women" fame. Simultaneously, the conducting, chamber and choral departments unleashed a barrage of works played in a variety of locales. And the Tanglewood Study Group, not to be outdone, offered, in the barn, splendors of its own.

Last night's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch, featured the remarkable talents of Nicole Henriot in performances of Faure's "Ballade" and Ravel's Piano Concerto in G major. Also represented on the program was the incidental music from Faure's "Pelleas and Melisande" and Brahms' Fourth Symphony. Rumor has it that the past few weeks have not seen the Boston orchestra in its top form, but last night its playing was that of an ensemble deserving of the praise bestowed upon it during its recent European tour. The opening Fauré, the "Pelleas" suite, was suave, rich and as moving as the prayer of a child. As music devoted to tenderness, Mr. Munch provided, in his reading, a cotton-soft rendition whose poignancy was in no measure disturbed by untoward rhythmic grimaces and melodic sobs, and in the suite's "Spinning Song" what a supple treadle the orchestra and its leader pressed.

As Miss Henroit began her "Ballade" it was obvious that the evening was to be hers and hers alone. The work is really no more than an extended solo, with an orchestra called upon to preen itself at climactic moments. It is idyllic, improvisitory and a shade precious and over-long, but Miss Henriot's tonal grace and technical prowess enabled her to embroider a musical sampler of no little color and wisdom. At every dynamic level the piano rang clearly, and the work's endless figurations were sent forth as though played on a string of crystal bells. In Miss Henriot's hands, the "Ballade" became an essay in the delicate; and that, one surmises, is what it is meant to be.

In view of what had gone before, it is sad to report that the Ravel concerto, for all its perfection of performance, somehow missed its mark. It is a busy, breezy piece and both soloist and conductor seemed rather cheerless in their approach to music whose laughter—though not Jovian—is certainly a major ingredient in its success. Sober and unsmiling was this Ravel—and its clicking, clapping, moaning orchestral effects fell hollow on the ears. Miss Henroit herself played all the notes and played them right at that, but the tongue-in-cheek drollerie of the concerto was nowhere to be found.

Mr. Munch's Brahms' Fourth is recorded and well known. It is a plump and vigorous interpretation, observant of the better Brahmsian amenities. It sings when it should, roars when the music demands, and though its eccentricities are many, they only serve to indicate that the conductor is the master of the orthodox and no servant of tradition.

J. S. H.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

AUG 3 - 1952

Music Notes:

Symphony in Final Program On Weekend

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

The final week-end of the Berkshire Festival, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, will open Thursday with Schumann's Symphony No. 1 "Spring", Swanson's Short Symphony and Brahms' Second Piano Concerto, in which Artur Rubinstein will make his first appearance at Tanglewood in the solo part.

Leonard Bernstein, successor to the late Serge Koussevitzky as teacher of conducting and his pupil at the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school, will occupy the podium for the Koussevitzky memorial concert Saturday night. The program will be C. P. E. Bach's Andante from Concerto in D major, Aaron Copland's Third Symphony and Sibelius' Fifth, one of Dr. Kouseevitzky's favorites. Mr. Munch will close the festival Sunday afternoon with the Berlioz "Requiem," in which Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor solo.

TODAY'S PROGRAM

Mr. Munch has chosen for this afternoon, Beethoven's Overture to "Egmont" and "Eighth" Symphony; Debussy's "Iberia" and the "Danse des Morts" by Arthur Honegger. In the latter, the festival chorus, prepared by Hugh Ross, will sing, with Richard Sharretts, baritone; Irene Jordan, soprano; Betty Lou Allen, contralto, and Arnold Moss, narrator.

A few changes have been made in next week's Berkshire Music Center calendar. "Trouble in Tahiti," which Leonard Bernstein, the composer, describes as "a little opera in seven scenes," will be given two performances Friday (August 8) at 8:15 and 9:45. The symphony concert by the school orchestra, originally scheduled for Friday night, will be given Saturday at 2:30 led by student conductors and Thor Johnson, Cincinnati orchestra leader, and a former Tanglewood student. At [illegible]:30 the small concert will sing.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 2 - 1952

TANGLEWOOD PUTS ITSELF ON DISPLAY

Annual 'Parade' at Berkshire Festival Features Programs by All Forces of the Center

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1—The Berkshire Music Center, an integral part of the Berkshire festival development, is in its tenth year this summer, and the annual "Tanglewood on Parade," which is a long, informal show put on by and for the forces of the center, had the character of a retrospect today.

Like the "Tanglewood on Parade" of seasons gone by, it was as varied as a four-ring circus, and it lasted longer. From about 4 P. M. until close to midnight there was music going on somewhere on the grandly rolling acres of Tanglewood, lovely estate high in the Berkshire Hills. Most of it was made by students or alumni of the Berkshire Music Center, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra adding its sumptuous services.

Perhaps for an hour or so between 7:30 and 8:30 P. M. the voices and instruments fell silent, and Tanglewood became a vast picnic ground. The hundreds of students at the center, the members of the Boston Symphony, and the thousands of the audience sat and lolled on the lawn and ate their suppers. The picnic parties were gay, and the spirit of Tanglewood was gay today.

Young People Show Wares

Underneath the gaiety there was the high purpose that invests the manifold activities here. For the young people who come to spend six weeks of concentrated work in their chosen field, whether it be composition, orchestral playing, choral singing, opera, staging or whatnot, were intent on showing the public what they had accomplished in the first five weeks of their residence.

To judge by what went on today, they had acomplished a great deal. Let us take each element of the program to show the scope not only of "Tanglewood on Parade" but of Tanglewood and the Berkshire Music Center.

At about 4 P. M. the opera department led off with performances in the formal garden. There, under a hot, blue sky, its young people produced Pergolesi's little opera, "Livietta and Tracollo," and scenes from Jacques Ibert's "Angelique." It was so warm in the sun that some in the audience raised parasols for protection, and the pianist used an umbrella to keep the rays out of his eyes. But the performances had life and pace.

At 5:45 P. M., on time as announced, there was a fanfare by a choir of brasses. Boris Goldovsky, head of the Berkshire Center's opera department, mounted a rostrum and welcomed the gathering audience, inviting it to choose whatever phase of music pleased it and tell it of all that would be going on in the next hour or so.

No one person, of course, could catch up with more than a fragment of each event presented by the proud representatives of the Berkshire Music Center.

Chamber Music Offered

In the Chamber Music Hall—a fancy name for a charming, converted barn—the departments of chamber music, choral music and composition collaborated on a varied program that included pieces by Yehoshua Lakner, a young man from Israel, and Leonard Rosenman, both studying here this summer.

In the recently enlarged barn—this barn, if you please, wears no pretentious name, though its facilities are good for rehearsals and performances—the members of the Tanglewood study group played and sang music by Caldara, Purcell, Binchois, J. C. Bach, Handel and J. S. Bach.

The study group is made up of sixty men and women—most of them young—who have no aspirations to professional careers in music but who spend anywhere from two to six weeks enrolled as students here, working passionately at it. In an age when people are content to let a few professionals make their music for them, their work was worthy of special respect.

After the other groups had gone to their well-earned picnic suppers, the choral department massed on the porch of the main house, the very house where Nathaniel Hawthorne's hosts had lived more than a century ago, and sang a long program of old and new music.

Orchestra Donates Services

Then at 8:30 P. M., just as if no music had yet been heard, the principal concert of the day took place in the music shed. Here the orchestra was the Boston Symphony, donating its services like everyone else today for the benefit of the center's scholarship fund. The conductors and soloists were all alumni of the center, and the distinction of this group as well as the calibre of its performances was the measure of the services that this institution had performed since it was founded by the late Serge Koussevitzky.

James Aliferis conducted the last movement of "The Prairie," a work for chorus and orchestra by Lukas Foss, one of Tanglewood's brightest young products, with the center chorus helping out with the choral sections.

Howard Shanet directed Chausson's "Poeme," with Jacob Krach-Malnick, now concertmaster of the Philadelphia Orchestra, as the violin soloist.

Mr. Foss was the conductor for the Mendelssohn G Minor Piano Concerto in which Seymour Lipkin, gifted winner of the Rachmaninoff prize of some years ago, was the soloist.

Finally, there was a performance of the last act of "Carmen," conducted by Leonard Bernstein, probably the most eminent Tanglewood alumnus. His singers were Mildred Miller, now of the Metropolitan; David Lloyd, James Pease, Francis Barnard, Margo Stagliano and Nacqueline Bazinet. Again the center's festival chorus chipped in.

And to end the evening on a cheerful note, there was dancing on the lawn, with music provided by the center's forces and with the waltzing supplied by anyone in the center or audience young enough in body and spirit to take a turn on the green.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN

AUG 2 - 1952

Gala Celebration at Tanglewood

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 2.—Ten sessions of the Berkshire Music Center turned the annual "Tanglewood on Parade" into a gala celebration yesterday.

It culminated in an unusual program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in which the conductors, soloists, and one composer were all alumni of the Music Center. The event attracted a crowd of 6,000.

Four exhibition concerts held simultaneously opened the "parade." the opera department presented Andre Singer's provocative scenic cantata "Alcottiana," staged by Boris Goldovsky. The orchestra department and the Tanglewood study group each offered an hour-long program. The chamber music, choral music, and composition departments combined for the fourth event.

Later during the picnic hour on the lawn the chorus gave its concert. As a prelude to this "musical circus" Pergolesi's "Livietta and Tracollo" and Ibert's "Angelique," on act operas somewhat abridged, were given in the formal gardens in the late afternoon.

The B. S. O.'s concert opened with the lost movement of Lukas Foss' "The Prairie" conducted by James Aliferis. Jacob Krachmalnick, now concertmaster of the Philadelphia Orchestra, was the violin soloist in Chausson's "Poeme" conducted by Howard Shanet.

Seymour Lipkin played the Mendelssohn Piano Concerto in G Minor with Foss conducting. The program closed with the last act of Bizet's "Carmen" conducted by Leonard Bernstein.

The principals were Mildred Miller, who had sung Carmen earlier this Summer at Lewisohn Stadium, David Lloyd (Don Jose), James Pease (Escamillo), and Francis Barnard (Zuniga).

Aaron Copland welcomed the audience, paying tribute to the late Serge Koussevitzky for his vision in founding the Music Center in 1940. He pointed out that the idea of combining a school with a music festival was still unique and that the benefits derived from having practical experience in conjunction with practicing musicians uncalculable.

In its 10 sessions interrupted by the war, the Berkshire Music Center has schooled over 3,800 students. They have come from every state in this country and 44 other countries. A large number now occupy prominent places in the musical life of the country.

HARTFORD, CONN..
COURANT

AUG 2 - 1952

'Tanglewood-On-Parade' Given To Benefit School

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass., Aug. 1 (Special)—In the midst of golden weather, the Berkshire Music Center offered the public its annual student grab-bag, "Tanglewood-On-Parade."

The event, a benefit, as always marked the tenth year of the center's school, which has been attended by more than 3,800 pupils and has tided over as teachers a large number of Boston Symphony Orchestra players, during summer's otherwise slim pickings.

The program had more simultaneous events than the Olympics at Helsinki. It opened at 4 o'clock with two performances by the opera department, especially for holders of box seats and reserved tickets, and it ended up nearly at midnight, with waltzing on the lawn under a copper moon, unquote.

Sandwich Fare

In between, there was a fanfare for brass, followed by a welcome to the picnic-packing, camera-lugging public, given by Boris Goldovsky, opera department head; at 6:30 short symphonic works by the student orchestra in the big shed; more opera in the concert hall; chamber music by and for its devotees; a choral program to take the place of Muzak while you ate; and the main fandango at 8:30 o'clock, with the usual assortment of speeches summing up the past and prphesying the future, followed by a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for which the assorted conductors and soloists were all alumni of the Berkshire Music Center.

Not being of a snoopy nature, this reporter doesn't know where you went, but he spent much of his time listening to operas, all three of them. There were Pergolesi's "Livietta E Tracollo," Ibert's "Angelique," or what Mr. Goldovsky called the best three quarters of it, and "Alcottiana," by Andre Singer.

All were excellently performed. The Pergolesi was the usual pert and pretty polyphony, full of the old eighteenth century theater nonsense. The Ibert was wonderful fooling about a wife for sale, a little skimpy on the music side but delightful satire what there was of it, and long on theater. The cast was tremendously good at singing and acting, among them Betty Lou Allen of Hartford and Paris, this department's candidate for the gal most likely to succeed by talent and charm.

New Work Introduced

The performances were in the fomal garden of Tanglewood, with a handsome view toward the skipping Berkshire Hills in all directions. The afternoon sun blazed down, making the experience a little like ordeal by fire for cast and audience. The latter made themselves paper bonnets out of the programs, and looked like some strange cult come to worship music, which in part they were. Mr. Goldovsky like an Eastern potentate, sat beneath an umbrella held by some willing slave, while he played the piano scores for both performances. Privilege, that's what it was.

Naturally enough, the ubiquitous Mr. Goldovsky turned up again for the premiere of "Alcottiana." In introducing the new work, he pointed out that its libretto is based on actual conversations of boys attending Bronson Alcott's School in Concord, Mass., a century ago. He said that it would be hard to imagine more unlikely material. This department, recalling a cantata made from Plato's dialogues given once by the friends and enemies of modern music at the Wadsworth Atheneum, and remembering Virgil Thomson's (stop me if I'm wrong) settings for excerpts from the American Mercury, was tempted to demur, but let it pass.

In any event, that's what it was. Mr. Singer's "Scenic Cantata," a kind of compromise between theater and oratorio outwardly, has been exceedingly well put together formally, for all operatic purposes. In musical style, it is temporarily and shyly modern. In spirit, it is tender and deeply sincere, as it discourses on "Appetites and Passions," "Fishing," and "Recovery Through Faith." Its heart and outlook well catch up the feeling of children. Unfortunately, sheerly as music, it is not very imaginative. While "Alcottiana" is charming, one is confronted with the fact that its charms are entirely conventional musically, neat, winsome but hardly striking. The performance again was top rate.

Copeland In New Welcome

Aaron Copland, assistant director and head of the composition department, led off the main event of the evening in the music shed, by welcoming the populace all over again, and recounting the ten years history of the Berkshire music center.

Thereafter there was Lukas Foss' "The Prairie" (last movement, for chorus and orchestra) conducted by James Aliferis, Chausson's Poeme, with Howard Shanet as conductor and Jacob Krachmalnick as [illegible], the Mendelssohn G Minor Concerto, with Seymour Lipkin at the keyboard and Mr. Foss [illegible] the podium; and finally, [illegible] act of "Carmen", [illegible] Leonard Bernstein. Soloists [illegible] Mildred Miller in the title [illegible] David Lloyd as Don Jose, [illegible] Pease as Escamillo, Francis [illegible] and as Zuniga, Margo S[illegible] as Frasquita, and [illegible] Bazinet as Mercedes. The orchestra was [illegible] the [illegible] Symphony [illegible] choral [illegible] were [illegible] Berkshire Festival Chorus.

It is [illegible] to have [illegible] part in [illegible] Center [illegible] showing [illegible] neither [illegible] Mr Lipkin [illegible] performances [illegible] Poeme or the Third M[illegible] Concerto.

Reports of the [illegible] ance were enthusiastic [illegible] reporter [illegible] He was busy with a performance of his own, in the press [illegible] Having never heard the [illegible] of "Carmen", and having little regard for the Bizet work anyhow, he could see no special reason for breaking the precedent at this point.

T. H. P.

RINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

UG 3 - 1952

Smiles at T

Munch (left) and Pierre Wagnerian concert

rkshire ootlights

great season of symphony fast nearing its end at d in Lenox. Last night conductor in the music
Pierre Monteux. This Charles Munch leads the hony Orchestra in the t of the concert, while as prepared his Berk-Chorus for the final ogram which will fear's "La Danse des aritone, soprano, con-r, chorus and orchesrsday night the BSO final series of 1952 un-y pines that overlook
ac. Next Sunday will ing of the Berkshire

• • •

and Tuesday nights
s" will be given by the ic Center in the The-Hall at Tanglewood.
uction the text of the revised and transglish by Boris Goldarah Caldwell. This st time that this mase given in the United pera is concerned with against the life and Roman emperor, Titus.
s or more all seats in ave been reserved by Center.

• • •

tomorrow the Boston
rchestra members will testimonial for seven ans who will retire internationally famous it after next Sunday's rt at Tanglewood. Fol-
, Chairman Pasquale A. clarinetest and a native
ms, will present watch-Laurent, Henry Green-Sternburg, Lucien
ston Elcus, Max Pol-Piller as a mark of the which they have been fellow musicians. An-presentation will also the program.

• • •

t Jacob's Pillow the [illegible] to by Prima Ballerina nilova. She will ap-Slavenska and Fred-
's Continental Theatre
the only ballerina ap-Western World today
ned at the famous Im-School in Leningrad. of this year Alexandra of allegiance to the me an American citik, N. J. At that time

44 other countries. A large ber now occupy prominent in the musical life country.

-On-Parade'
nefit Schoo

Mr. Goldovsky turned up the premiere of "Alcott introducing the new work ed out that its libretto i actual conversations of tending Bronson Alcott's Concord, Mass., a centu said that it would b imagine more unlikely
This department, recall tata made from Plato's given once by the friend mies of modern music a worth Atheneum, and ing Virgil Thomson's ( I'm wrong) settings fo from the American Me tempted to demur, but l
In any event, that's w
Mr. Singer's "Scenic kind of compromise be ter and oratorio outw been exceedingly well formally, for all operati
In musical style, it is and shyly modern. In tender and deeply since courses on "Appetites sions," "Fishing," and Through Faith." Its he look well catch up the children. Unfortunately music, it is not very While "Alcottiana" is one is confronted with its charms are entir tional musically, neat, hardly striking. The again was top rate.
Copeland In New W
Aaron Copland, assi
tor and head of the department, led off the of the evening in the
by welcoming the over again, and rec ten years history of th
music center.
Thereafter there
Foss' "The Prairie" men) for chorus an conducted by Jam
Chausson's Poeme, w
Shanet as conductor
Krachmalnik as vi
the Mendelssohn G
certo with Seymour the keyboard and M
the podium; and fina act of "Carmen",
Leonard Bernstein. Soloists
Mildred Miller in the title
David Lloyd as Don Jose, Pease as Escamillo, Francis ard as Zuniga, Margo Sta
as Frasquita, and Jacq Bazinet as Mercedes. The o tra was of course the Symphony throughout, and choral contributions were b
Berkshire Festival Chorus.
It is regrettable to have port, in view of the fac Center was sampling its wa showing off its alumni, neither Mr. Krachmalnick
Mr. Lipkin gave very mean performances of the Ch
Poeme or the Turgid Mende Concerto.
Reports of the opera pe ance were enthusiastic. To reporter's ear it came but
He was busy with a perfor
of his own in the press
Having never heard the la of "Carmen", and having regard for the Bizet work could see no special breaking the precedent

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 3 - 1952

Smiles at Tanglewood

Charles Munch (left) and Pierre Monteux express pleasure after Wagnerian concert at Tanglewood.

Berkshire Footlights

Another great season of symphony music is fast nearing its end at Tanglewood in Lenox. Last night the guest conductor in the music shed was Pierre Monteux. This afternoon Charles Munch leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Beethoven part of the concert, while Hugh Ross has prepared his Berkshire Festival Chorus for the final part of the program which will feature Honegger's "La Danse des Morts," for baritone, soprano, contralto, narrator, chorus and orchestra. On Thursday night the BSO will begin its final series of 1952 under the stately pines that overlook Lake Mahkeenac. Next Sunday will mark the closing of the Berkshire Festival.

• • •

On Monday and Tuesday nights Mozart's "Titus" will be given by the Berkshire Music Center in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood. For this production the text of the opera has been revised and translated into English by Boris Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell. This will be the first time that this masterwork will be given in the United States. The opera is concerned with a conspiracy against the life and throne of the Roman emperor, Titus. For two weeks or more all seats in the theater have been reserved by Friends of the Center.

• • •

At noontime tomorrow the Boston Symphony Orchestra members will gather for a testimonial for seven fellow musicians who will retire from the internationally famous symphony unit after next Sunday's closing concert at Tanglewood. Following dinner, Chairman Pasquale A. Cardillo, the clarinetest and a native of North Adams, will present watches to Georges Laurent, Henry Greenberg, Simon Sternburg, Lucien Hansotte, Gaston Elcus, Max Polster and Boaz Piller as a mark of the esteem with which they have been held by their fellow musicians. Another surprise presentation will also be included on the program.

• • •

This week at Jacob's Pillow the lovers of the dance will be treated to performances by Prima Ballerina Alexandra Danilova. She will appear with Mia Slavenska and Frederick Franklin's Continental Theatre Ballet. She is the only ballerina appearing in the Western World today who was trained at the famous Imperial Ballet School in Leningrad. On June 18 of this year Alexandra took the oath of allegiance to the flag and became an American citizen at Newark, N. J. At that time the presiding justice of the U. S. District Court stated that this country was privileged to have such a great artist become a citizen and that Russian-born Madame Danilova was a worthy addition to the family of Americans.

• • •

The premiere of Victor Wolfson's new comedy "A Death In The Family" enjoyed a successful showing at the Berkshire Playhouse last week. Reviewers and representatives of MGM were high in praise of the play and the cast. The only suggestion made to improve the comedy was that the last act be shortened a bit. This was the thought of the playwright even before the curtain went up on opening night. However, it was a real struggle to rehearse, cut and put the play together in the six days available for such work in a summer theater. Mr. Wolfson has now returned to his summer home at Wellfleet on Cape Cod where he will make the necessary cuts in the final scene. It is then planned to stage the play once more before it is taken to Broadway in the fall.

• • •

One of Christopher Fry's plays, "The Lady Is Not For Burning," opens at the Berkshire Playhouse this week. The cast will be made up of a group of visiting stars—Walter Abel, Margaret Phillips, Viola Roache, Reynolds Evans, all of whom have enjoyed outstanding careers on Broadway. A poetic comedy, this p and roman

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 3 - 1952

Tanglewood
The Berkshire Festival

* * *

By Jay S. Harrison

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2.—An all-Wagner program, with Pierre Monteux conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was tonight's major attraction at the Tanglewood Festival in the Berkshire Hills. The evening began with Wotan's Farewell and Fire Music from "Die Walkure," sung by the bass James Pease, and continued with the second scene from Act 3 of "Siegfried," sung by Margaret Harshaw, soprano, and Howard Vandenburg, tenor.

The intermission over, Miss Harshaw returned to sing the Immolation Scene from Wagner's "Goetterdaemmerung," and this was preceded by two familiar orchestral excerpts from the same opera, Siegfried's Rhine Journey and the Death of Siegfried.

The final event at last night's panoramic celebration, "Tanglewood on Parade," following a 6 o'clock talent display by the Berkshire Music Center's several student departments, was a concert of music performed by alumni of the Tanglewood school who have quickly traveled the road to fame. The program, introduced by Aaron Copland, who paid tribute to the foresight and organizational skills of the Berkshire Music Center's late founder and director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, listed a movement from Lukas Foss' "The Prairie," conducted by James Aliferis; Chausson's "Poeme," with Jacob Krachmalnick as violinist and Howard Shanet as conductor; the Concerto in G Minor of Mendelssohn, featuring the pianist Seymour Lipkin and Mr. Foss as conductor, and the last act of Bizet's opera "Carmen," with Leonard Bernstein as conductor and Mildred Miller, mezzo-soprano, David Lloyd, tenor, and Mr. Pease as soloists.

At this concert, intensity was the keynote of the hour. Youth must be served, and served it was in an evening of nervous, energetic music-making the likes of which we shall wait long again to hear. Mr. Aliferis, the chorus and Boston Symphony Orchestra provided a tense and brash reading of Mr. Foss' raw, square-jawed "Prairie," and Mr. Krachmalnick's "Poeme," though not always precise in pitch, flickered brightly and soared with the wings of a stratocruiser.

Another example of the supercharged and high-powered was found in the Lipkin-Foss rendition of the Mendelssohn Concerto, though here the streamlining clashed head on with the music's inherent serenity and warmth. Technically, it was a performance to match any other, but its express-train sentiment was far afield of the gentle romanee with which the composer has touched his melodic lines.

The concert was brought to an end by Mr. Bernstein in the unfamiliar characterization of opera conductor, and it is a role which suits him well. Lacking the majestic panoply of a stage production, Bizet's "Carmen" was nonetheless filled with drama and illumined by orchestral high lights that often pass unnoticed in the opera house. And the singing of the principals echoed, in its vast vigor, those elements of the dynamic with which the evening had begun and which had brought it to its close.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 3 - 1952

MORE THAN 10,000 ATTEND CONCERT AT TANGLEWOOD

All-Wagner Program Is Presented by Boston Symphony Orchestra

By VICTOR PRAHL

Lenox, Aug. 2—The all-Wagner program the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Pierre Monteux at Tanglewood tonight enlisted the services of three young American singers, Margaret Harshaw, soprano, Howard Vandenburg, tenor, and James Pease, bass.

Singing Excels

Mr. Pease, opening with "Wotan's Farewell" from "Die Walkure" sang this noble excerpt with a fulness and breadth of tone that we had not associated with his singing previously. As the aria progressed he achieved more poise and became more convincing. He has the physique and the voice for the part and should eventually develop into a fine Wotan. Pierre Monteux conducted this as well as the magic fire music which followed with his usual comprehension and minimum of effort.

Howard Vandenburg would hardly classify as a helden-tenor but he sang Siegfried's music from the 3d act of "Siegfried" with assurance, poise, a tone that carried well in the big shed and in excellent German. It was a polished performance.

The surprise of the evening, however, was Margaret Harshaw who has been singing contralto roles at the Met for some years and has suddenly burst forth as a full-fledged Wagnerian soprano. Her singing of Brunnhilde's music from the 3d act of "Siegfried" was thrilling in vibrant brilliance. There was not a trace of the old contralto quality. In fact it was the high voice that was so secure and impressive. She obviously has made the Wagnerian manner and tradition hers and should prove a valuable addition to the shrinking Wagnerian contingent. She gave a stunning performance. There was thunderous and prolonged applause after the singing of this famous excerpt. If her final "Immolation Scene" from "Gutterdammerung" equals this the demonstration will probably be repeated.

The second half included as well "Siegfried's Rhine Journey" and the "Death of Siegfried" from the same opera. Tonight's audience ran about 10,000.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 3 - 1952

MOZART'S 'TITUS' AT TANGLEWOOD

Lenox, Aug. 2—The Tanglewood performance of Mozart's "Titus" ("La Clemenza di Tito"), to be given by Berkshire Music Center students August 4 and 5 may well be the first production of this master work to be given in the United States. The opera was commissioned to be performed at the coronation of Joseph II as King of Bohemia. The original text by Metastasio was revised for Mozart by Mazzola.

In the last year of his life Mozart was busy composing "The Magic Flute" when his work was interrupted by the commission for Titus. Titus was composed, rehearsed and performed within a space of six weeks. Mozart was ill and under considerable pressure at the time.

For the Tanglewood production the text of the opera has been revised and translated into English by Boris Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell. Spoken dialogue will be substituted for the Secco recitatives. The opera is concerned with a conspiracy against the life and throne of the Roman emperor, Titus.

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE

AUG 3 - 1952
SEC. 2

Mozart 'Tito' To Be Given U.S. Premiere

Special to The Blade

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 2—Performance of Mozart's "La Clemenza di Tito" Monday and Tuesday evenings at the Berkshire Music Festival here probably will be the first in the United States. This opera belongs to the last year of Mozart's life, when he was occupied also with "The Magic Flute." It was commissioned to attend the coronation of Joseph II as King of Bohemia and was performed first in Prague, Sept. 6, 1791.

"Tito" was composed, rehearsed and performed within six weeks. Mozart, ill and harassed, took his favorite student, Sussmayer, to help him. The original text by Metastasio was revised by Mazzola. The text has been revised and translated into English by Boris Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell for the Tanglewood production. Spoken dialogue will be substituted for the recitatives of Sussmayer. The original score has not been disturbed save in the last scene, which has been altered to embrace Chorus No. 15.

A new light projection machine, designed by Paul Planner will be used, making possible the burning of Rome in realistic fashion. Mr. Goldovsky will conduct an alternate cast.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES

AUG 3 - 1952

Stage and Music—
Hypnotic Ravel

By HENRY BUTLER
Times Staff Writer

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2—The Berkshire Festival in nearby Tanglewood has a dreamlike quality no description can convey.

Big crowds, traffic congestion, chow lines at refreshment stands—all the usual accompaniments of summer music here seem unreal.

Even the discomfort of sitting too close to thousands of other perspiring listeners in this record-breaking hot summer air is unimportant. The music alone has meaning.

The huge fan-shaped Shed, successor to the old tent where cloudbursts sometimes used to blitz the Boston Symphony into silence, has rare acoustic properties. From the great stage and shell, the music penetrates far beyond the Shed's borders.

And it's music the like of which you'll hear nowhere else this summer. In an earlier piece, I spoke of Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring," given a tremendous send-off Saturday night by Pierre Monteux and the orchestra.

Sunday afternoon, I heard the most sensational performance imaginable of Ravel's two "Daphnis and Chloe" Suites. Charles Munch (some readers will remember his appearance at Indiana University several seasons ago with the French Orchestre National before he came to the Boston Symphony) conducted.

* * *

MR. MUNCH deliberately emphasized the hypnotic qualities of Ravel's score. Using the often neglected choral part, which was sung by a well trained choir of Tanglewood music students, he built both suites into huge climaxes.

The conclusion of the "Danse Generals" of the second suite reached an intensity I've never heard before. It won an ovation for Mr. Munch, the orchestra and Georges Laurent, first flutist, who had the most important solo passages. Mr. Munch himself joined in applauding Mr. Laurent.

Earlier in the program were the symphonic interlude from Cesar Franck's "Redemption," an excellent performance of Bizet's sprightly and only symphony, written in his youth, and a remarkably interesting new choral work by Luigi Dallapiccola.

The novelty was "Three Songs in Captivity," consisting of imaginary prayers by Mary Stuart, Bothius and Savonarola. The Tanglewood Chorus, ably directed by Hugh Ross, was accompanied by two pianos (Lukas Foss and Ralph Berkowitz), two harps and percussion.

* * *

THAT LAST term sounds innocent enough, but when you have tympani, bass drum, Chinese gongs, xylophone, snare drum, chimes and, believe it or not, vibraharp taking part, you have some extraordinary tonal possibilities. Mr. Dallapiccola missed none of those possibilities in his polytonal, contrapuntal and cross-rhythmic variations on the famous "Dies Irae" theme.

The work has great lugubrious power. As always when I hear something new like this, I wonder how the composer can even begin to imagine beforehand the sound effects he ultimately will attain. Such complete distortion of 19th-century musical patterns strikes me as a superhuman accomplishment.

And though Mr. Dallopiccola's work is much smaller and less forceful, of course, than Stravinsky's "Sacre du printemps," it contains some even more out-of-this-world effects. Marvelous feat, and I'm glad the composer himself was there Sunday for applause.

Add the grounds, the trees, the views, the air, the whole region, like a super-size, really well-watered Brown County, and you have some idea of this Berkshire Festival.

Great stuff, and certainly worth a trip before you die.

[78]

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 3 - 1952

Smiles at Tanglewood

Charles Munch (left) and Pierre Monteux express pleasure after Wagnerian concert at Tanglewood.

Berkshire Footlights

Another great season of symphony music is fast nearing its end at Tanglewood in Lenox. Last night the guest conductor in the music Shed was Pierre Monteux. This afternoon Charles Munch leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Beethoven part of the concert, while Hugh Ross has prepared his Berkshire Festival Chorus for the final part of the program which will feature Honegger's "La Danse des Morts," for baritone, soprano, contralto, narrator, chorus and orchestra. On Thursday night the BSO will begin its final series of 1952 under the stately pines that overlook Lake Mahkeenac. Next Sunday will mark the closing of the Berkshire Festival.

• • •

On Monday and Tuesday nights Mozart's "Titus" will be given by the Berkshire Music Center in the Theater-Concert Hall at Tanglewood. For this production the text of the opera has been revised and translated into English by Boris Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell. This will be the first time that this masterwork will be given in the United States. The opera is concerned with a conspiracy against the life and throne of the Roman emperor, Titus. For two weeks or more all seats in the theater have been reserved by Friends of the Center.

• • •

At noontime tomorrow the Boston Symphony Orchestra members will gather for a testimonial for seven fellow musicians who will retire from the internationally famous symphony unit after next Sunday's closing concert at Tanglewood. Following dinner, Chairman Pasquale A. Cardillo, the clarinetest and a native of North Adams, will present watches to Georges Laurent, Henry Greenberg, Simon Sternburg, Lucien Hansotte, Gaston Elcus, Max Polster and Boaz Piller as a mark of the esteem with which they have been held by their fellow musicians. Another surprise presentation will also be included on the program.

• • •

This week at Jacob's Pillow the lovers of the dance will be treated to performances by Prima Ballerina Alexandra Danilova. She will appear with Mia Slavenska and Frederick Franklin's Continental Theatre Ballet. She is the only ballerina appearing in the Western World today who was trained at the famous Imperial Ballet School in Leningrad. On June 18 of this year Alexandra took the oath of allegiance to the flag and became an American citizen at Newark, N. J. At that time the presiding justice of the U. S. District Court stated that this country was privileged to have such a great artist become a citizen and that Russian-born Madame Danilova was a worthy addition to the family of Americans.

• • •

The premiere of Victor Wolfson's new comedy "A Death In The Family" enjoyed a successful showing at the Berkshire Playhouse last week. Reviewers and representatives of MGM were high in praise of the play and the cast. The only suggestion made to improve the comedy was that the last act be shortened a bit. This was the thought of the playwright even before the curtain went up on opening night. However, it was a real struggle to rehearse, cut and put the play together in the six days available for such work in a summer theater. Mr. Wolfson has now returned to his summer home at Wellfleet on Cape Cod where he will make the necessary cuts in the final scene. It is then planned to stage the play once more before it is taken to Broadway in the fall.

• • •

One of Christopher Fry's plays, "The Lady Is Not For Burning," opens at the Berkshire Playhouse this week. The cast will be made up of a group of visiting stars—Walter Abel, Margaret Phillips, Viola Roache, Reynolds Evans, all of whom have enjoyed outstanding careers on Broadway. A poetic comedy, this play embodies excitement and romance.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 3 - 1952

MORE THAN 10,000 ATTEND CONCERT AT TANGLEWOOD

All-Wagner Program Is Presented by Boston Symphony Orchestra

By VICTOR PRAHL

Lenox, Aug. 2—The all-Wagner program the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Pierre Monteux at Tanglewood tonight enlisted the services of three young American singers, Margaret Harshaw, soprano, Howard Vandenburg, tenor, and James Pease, bass.

Singing Excels

Mr. Pease, opening with "Wotan's Farewell" from "Die Walkure" sang this noble excerpt with a fulness and breadth of tone that we had not associated with his singing previously. As the aria progressed he achieved more poise and became more convincing. He has the physique and the voice for the part and should eventually develop into a fine Wotan. Pierre Monteux conducted this as well as the magic fire music which followed with his usual comprehension and minimum of effort.

Howard Vandenburg would hardly classify as a helden-tenor but he sang Siegfried's music from the 3d act of "Siegfried" with assurance, poise, a tone that carried well in the big shed and in excellent German. It was a polished performance.

The surprise of the evening, however, was Margaret Harshaw who has been singing contralto roles at the Met for some years and has suddenly burst forth as a full-fledged Wagnerian soprano. Her singing of Brunnhilde's music from the 3d act of "Siegfried" was thrilling in vibrant brilliance. There was not a trace of the old contralto quality. In fact it was the high voice that was so secure and impressive. She obviously has made the Wagnerian manner and tradition hers and should prove a valuable addition to the shrinking Wagnerian contingent. She gave a stunning performance. There was thunderous and prolonged applause after the singing of this famous excerpt. If her final "Immolation Scene" from "Gutterdammerung" equals this the demonstration will probably be repeated.

The second half included as well "Siegfried's Rhine Journey" and the "Death of Siegfried" from the same opera. Tonight's audience ran about 10,000.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
AUG 3 - 1952

MOZART'S 'TITUS' AT TANGLEWOOD

Lenox, Aug. 2—The Tanglewood performance of Mozart's "Titus" ("La Clemenza di Tito"), to be given by Berkshire Music Center students ~~August 4 and 5~~ may well be the first production of this master work to be given in the United States. The opera was commissioned to be performed at the coronation of Joseph II as King of Bohemia. The original text by Metastasio was revised for Mozart by Mazzola.

In the last year of his life Mozart was busy composing "The Magic Flute" when his work was interrupted by the commission for Titus. Titus was composed, rehearsed and performed within a space of six weeks. Mozart was ill and under considerable pressure at the time.

For the Tanglewood production the text of the opera has been revised and translated into English by Boris Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell. Spoken dialogue will be substituted for the Secco recitatives. The opera is concerned with a conspiracy against the life and throne of the Roman emperor, Titus.

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
AUG 3 - 1952

SEC. 2

Mozart 'Tito' To Be Given U.S. Premiere

Special to The Blade

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 2—Performance of Mozart's "La Clemenza di Tito" Monday and Tuesday evenings at the Berkshire Music Festival here probably will be the first in the United States. This opera belongs to the last year of Mozart's life, when he was occupied also with "The Magic Flute." It was commissioned to attend the coronation of Joseph II as King of Bohemia and was performed first in Prague, Sept. 6, 1791.

"Tito" was composed, rehearsed and performed within six weeks. Mozart, ill and harassed, took his favorite student, Sussmayer, to help him. The original text by Metastasio was revised by Mazzola. The text has been revised and translated into English by Boris Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell for the Tanglewood production. Spoken dialogue will be substituted for the recitatives of Sussmayer. The original score has not been disturbed save in the last scene, which has been altered to embrace Chorus No. 15.

A new light projection machine, designed by Paul Planner will be used, making possible the burning of Rome in realistic fashion. Mr. Goldovsky will conduct an alternate cast.

---

re Festival

* * *

By Jay S. Harrison

LENOX, Mass., Aug. [illegible]—An all-Wagner program, with Pierre Monteux conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was tonight's major attraction at the Tanglewood Festival in the Berkshire Hills. The evening began with Wotan's Farewell and Fire Music from "Die Walkure," sung by the bass James Pease, and continued with the second scene from Act 3 of "Siegfried," sung by Margaret Harshaw, soprano, and Howard Vandenburg, tenor.

The intermission over, Miss Harshaw returned to sing the Immolation Scene from Wagner's "Goetterdaemmerung," and this was preceded by two familiar orchestral excerpts from the same opera, Siegfried's Rhine Journey and the Death of Siegfried.

The final event at last night's panoramic celebration, "Tanglewood on Parade," following a 6 o'clock talent display by the Berkshire Music Center's several student departments, was a concert of music performed by alumni of the Tanglewood school who have quickly traveled the road to fame. The program, introduced by Aaron Copland, who paid tribute to the foresight and organizational skills of the Berkshire Music Center's late founder and director, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, listed a movement from Lukas Foss' "The Prairie," conducted by James Aliferis; Chausson's "Poeme," with Jacob Krachmalnick as violinist and Howard Shanet as conductor; the Concerto in G Minor of Mendelssohn, featuring the pianist Seymour Lipkin and Mr. Foss as conductor, and the last act of Bizet's opera "Carmen," with Leonard Bernstein as conductor and Mildred Miller, mezzo-soprano, David Lloyd, tenor, and Mr. Pease as soloists.

At this concert, intensity was the keynote of the hour. Youth must be served, and served it was in an evening of nervous, energetic music-making the likes of which we shall wait long again to hear. Mr. Aliferis, the chorus and Boston Symphony Orchestra provided a tense and brash reading of Mr. Foss' raw, square-jawed "Prairie," and Mr. Krachmalnick's "Poeme," though not always precise in pitch, flickered brightly and soared with the wings of a stratocruiser.

Another example of the supercharged and high-powered was found in the Lipkin-Foss rendition of the Mendelssohn Concerto, though here the streamlining clashed head on with the music's inherent serenity and warmth. Technically, it was a performance to match any other, but its express-train sentiment was far afield of the gentle romanee with which the composer has touched his melodic lines.

The concert was brought to an end by Mr. Bernstein in the unfamiliar characterization of opera conductor, and it is a role which suits him well. Lacking the majestic panoply of a stage production, Bizet's "Carmen" was nonetheless filled with drama and illumined by orchestral high lights that often pass unnoticed in the opera house. And the singing of the principals echoed, in its vast vigor, those elements of the dynamic with which the evening had begun and which had brought it to its close.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
TIMES
AUG 3 - 1952

Stage and Music—

Hypnotic Ravel

By HENRY BUTLER
Times Staff Writer

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 2—The Berkshire Festival in nearby Tanglewood has a dreamlike quality no description can convey.

Big crowds, traffic congestion, chow lines at refreshment stands—all the usual accompaniments of summer music here seem unreal.

Even the discomfort of sitting too close to thousands of other perspiring listeners in this record-breaking hot summer air is unimportant. The music alone has meaning.

The huge fan-shaped Shed, successor to the old tent where cloudbursts sometimes used to blitz the Boston Symphony into silence, has rare acoustic properties. From the great stage and shell, the music penetrates far beyond the Shed's borders.

And it's music the like of which you'll hear nowhere else this summer. In an earlier piece, I spoke of Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring," given a tremendous send-off Saturday night by Pierre Monteux and the orchestra.

Sunday afternoon, I heard the most sensational performance imaginable of Ravel's two "Daphnis and Chloe" Suites. Charles Munch (some readers will remember his appearance at Indiana University several seasons ago with the French Orchestre National before he came to the Boston Symphony) conducted.

* * *

MR. MUNCH deliberately emphasized the hypnotic qualities of Ravel's score. Using the often neglected choral part, which was sung by a well trained choir of Tanglewood music students, he built both suites into huge climaxes.

The conclusion of the "Danse Generals" of the second suite reached an intensity I've never heard before. It won an ovation for Mr. Munch, the orchestra and Georges Laurent, first flutist, who had the most important solo passages. Mr. Munch himself joined in applauding Mr. Laurent.

Earlier in the program were the symphonic interlude from Cesar Franck's "Redemption," an excellent performance of Bizet's sprightly and only symphony, written in his youth, and a remarkably interesting new choral work by Luigi Dallapiccola.

The novelty was "Three Songs in Captivity," consisting of imaginary prayers by Mary Stuart, Bothius and Savonarola. The Tanglewood Chorus, ably directed by Hugh Ross, was accompanied by two pianos (Lukas Foss and Ralph Berkowitz), two harps and percussion.

* * *

THAT LAST term sounds innocent enough, but when you have tympani, bass drum, Chinese gongs, xylophone, snare drum, chimes and, believe it or not, vibraharp taking part, you have some extraordinary tonal possibilities. Mr. Dallapiccola missed none of those possibilities in his polytonal, contrapuntal and cross-rhythmic variations on the famous "Dies Irae" theme.

The work has great lugubrious power. As always when I hear something new like this, I wonder how the composer can even begin to imagine beforehand the sound effects he ultimately will attain. Such complete distortion of 19th-century musical patterns strikes me as a superhuman accomplishment.

And though Mr. Dallopiccola's work is much smaller and less forceful, of course, than Stravinsky's "Sacre du printemps," it contains some even more out-of-this-world effects. Marvelous feat, and I'm glad the composer himself was there Sunday for applause.

Add the grounds, the trees, the views, the air, the whole region, like a super-size, really well-watered Brown County, and you have some idea of this Berkshire Festival.

Great stuff, and certainly worth a trip before you die.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD

AUG 3 - 1952

European Music on Air: Another Go at It

By RUDOLPH ELIE

The resumption of this musical piece in the middle of the summer always gives me what is known as pause for the main and simple reason, as Penrod always put it, that there is remarkably little to write about save the various "festivals" of the season.

The principal festival in these parts, of course, is the Berkshire Music Festival now in midstream, but this offers little room for more than passing notice as its programs are inexpressibly routine. Indeed, of the entire program of the main series, only Honegger's "Danse des Morts" arouses any real interest at all for the serious music lover though not, of course, for the tourist. Since it is the tourist with his interest in the conventional repertoire of Brahms, Beethoven, Ravel, Franck, etc., who supports Tanglewood, there is no question of any criticism of this policy; it merely makes the affair of little real importance to the serious musical world at large.

The weekly events at Castle Hill are generally more interesting musically, and Mr. Barlow in his capacity as director of them has by his very winning personality and his faultless musical taste given them authority and charm. The scene of the concerts themselves, in the extraordinarily fine sunken gardens of the Crane estate with its new John Alden Carpenter memorial stage, is of the greatest beauty, and the programs so far have been highly musical. The events at the Plymouth Rock Center of Music and Drama in Duxbury, too, have been interesting and have gone off, according to all reports, exceptionally well considering the youth of this re-organized project. I hope, in due course, to look on both of these nearby musical affairs.

EUROPEAN RADIO

In the meantime, there is one musical matter that might bear a little further discussion, and that is the quality of European broadcasts of classical music. During my recent visit to Europe with the Boston Symphony, I took along a portable radio for the purpose of monitoring European radio in this connection, as I had always assumed that its classical musical programs were far and away ahead of our own. Although I had listened often to European programs in previous trips, gaining what seemed to me the sketchy and, therefore, faulty opinion that these programs weren't much good, the possession of my own radio proved to me beyond a question that they really aren't. I consequently devoted a column to the subject during the series concluded some weeks ago.

There presently arrived a hot letter rushing to the defense of European radio. The author accused me of not having the capacity to recognize artistic integrity if I fell over it I admit having fallen headlong over many instances of artistic integrity, but when it comes to knowing good programming from bad programming, good music from bad, and good musical commentary (if any) from bad, I was brought up in the hard school of listening to the author's own radio station, and am as capable of recognizing lack of taste as any one.

Be that as it may, it was my experience to listen many hours to radio stations from Paris to Berlin and from Amsterdam to Bordeaux, including the U. S. stations serving American GIs of the occupation forces (I do not count these, as they very largely offer the homely chit-chat of American disc jockeys playing, "Cry".)

These programs, as I pointed out at the time, offer talk and music. The talk is more often than not a lecture or a reading by one person on a topic of the most improbable nature, and seldom if ever contemporary in the news sense. Sometimes the talks are conversations between A and B, in which B, the station announcer, merely feeds A, who may be anybody, questions. They are interviews, but interviews entirely lacking in personality or conflict of either opinion or point of view.

It may be argued that our own shows are often cheap and vulgar, and I am first to admit that. But European radio is absolutely the last word in remoteness from the people; there is nothing to help bring the people together, to give them any sense of comradeship, of community of interest, of oneness as a people or a culture. It may also be argued, as my correspondent did argue, that they are too adult to need such radio instruction or inspiration, but any one who has ever observed the appalling disregard of the other fellow's feelings, as represented by French "individualism" and German arrogance to those in inferior station cannot call it adult. On the contrary, despite two catastrophic wars, the European people, as a whole, still have not learned the first syllable of co-operation—and European radio is doing nothing whatever to help.

HUB'S STATIONS BETTER

And the music! As I stated at the time, whole symphony programs are given, and marvelous programs, too. As often as not, however, a whole concert is broadcast without any announcement whatever. The individual numbers are seldom announced, and silence between number may go on for minutes; long enough, indeed, to persuade the listener the station has gone off the air. If the music is recorded music, a symphony movement may be preceded and followed, not by jazz or popular music, but by the European equivalent of hill billy music. Symphonies are chopped off in the middle, good jazz is sandwiched between solos upon the harpsichord, and solos upon the harpsichord are sandwiched between female choruses singing the sentimental pieces for that form by Brahms.

This may be pretty much of a generalization, but it comes pretty close to hitting the mark. I admit exceptions (though I've never happened to hear any), but the willy-nilly musical programming that goes on in Europe — and I except the BBC which, in all its three series is absolutely first class — simply would not be accepted here. Our first all-classical long wave station failed to be sure, but not for reasons of programming. Our present FM wave stations offering daily programs of classical music, namely WGBH, WXHR, WCRB and WBUR, which may be said to aim for the "European" standard, far exceed, in programmatic integrity and advancement of cultural aim, any European radio station I ever heard.

DAYTON, OHIO
NEWS

AUG 3 - 1952

DAYTONIANS AT BERKSHIRE CENTER

Two young Dayton musicians are studying at the Berkshire Music Center (the summer school of the Boston Symphony orchestra) at Tanglewood in Massachusetts this summer. They are Roland Small, bassoonist, 237 W. Norman av., and Myrian Baker, violinist, 37 Pinehurst av. Here they are chatting with Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

AUG 3 - 1952

In the Realm of Music

By Kenne

Berkshire Festival's Titus Is Sold

The final weekend of the Berkshire Festival by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, will open Thursday with Schumann's Symphony No. 1, Swanson's Short Symphony and Brahms' Second Piano Concerto, in which Artur Rubinstein will make his first appearance at Tanglewood in the solo part.

A. Rubinstein

Leonard Bernstein will occupy the podium for the Serge Koussevitzky memorial concert on Saturday night. The program will be C. P. E. Bach's Andante from Concerto in D Major, Aaron Copland's Third Symphony and Sibelius' Fifth, one of Dr. Koussevitzky's favorites. Munch will close the festival next Sunday afternoon with the Berlioz Requiem, in which Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor solo.

A few changes have been made in next week's Berkshire Music Center calendar. Trouble in Tahiti, which Bernstein, the composer, describes as "a little opera in seven scenes," will be given two performances Friday evening. The symphony concert by the school orchestra, originally scheduled for Friday night, will be given Saturday afternoon, led by student conductors and Thor Johnson, Cincinnati orchestra leader, and former Tanglewood student.

The schedule otherwise remains as announced, with the theater sold out three weeks in advance for performances of Mozart's Titus Monday and Tuesday nights.

The Tanglewood performance of this opera may be its first production in the United States. The opera was commissioned to be performed at the coronation of Joseph II as King of Bohemia.

In the last year of his life Mozart was busy composing The Magic Flute when his work was interrupted by the commission for Titus which was composed, rehearsed and performed within six weeks. Mozart, ill and under considerable pressure, was aided by his favorite student, Sussmayer.

For the Tanglewood production, the text of the opera has been revised and translated into English by Boris Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell. Spoken dialogue will be substituted for recitatives. Mozart's music has been left intact and in its original order.

The opera concerns a conspiracy against the life and throne of a Roman emperor. The scenery was designed by Charles Elson and makes use of a new light projection machine designed by Paul Planner. It mak possible a number of unusual sc effects, the most remarkable of which is the burning of Rome, climaxi the first act.

Pops Guests

Marylee Myers, soprano, and H bert Beattie, bass-baritone, will guest soloists at Tuesday's Pop cert at Kleinhans Music Hall, Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra sents An Evening of Rodgers, K and Berlin Music. D'Artega will rect the orchestra in his own arran ments from such operettas as Ann Get Your Gun, Showboat, South P cific, Carousel and Oklahoma.

Miss Myers makes her secon pearance with the Buffalo Orchest having also appeared as guest solo with the Rochester Civic Orchestr and the Minneapolis Symphony. Bea tie's appearance also is a repeat. former member of the Syracuse U versity music department, he has with the New York Philharmo Orchestra.

In addition to solo selections the programmed operettas, they appear in duets from Showbo Roberta.

Park Series

Conductor Jan Wolanek and Buffalo Civic Orchestra will in Schiller Park at 9 o'clock this e ning in another of the city park c certs, Under the Stars. A vari composers are programmed, in ing Offenbach, Kalman, Kreisler and Anderson.

Lillian Bruce, soprano, heard in Romberg's One K Herbert's Romany Life, while Gibson, baritone, will sing Ol River from Showboat and Tramp, Tramp from Naughty M etta.

On Wednesday evening at the starting time, Under the Stars appear in Cazenovia Park. Concerts are followed by an hour of dancing to the music of Louis Pod gorski's orchestra.

MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD

AUG 3 - 1952

Tanglewood Welcome Set

When Charles Munch conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time since its triumphal tour of Europe, Berkshire County, Mass., will give the players both an official and an unofficial welcome.

The occasion will be the opening of the major Berkshire Festival in the Tanglewood music shed Thursday evening, when county officials will be present to hear Beethoven's Third and Brahms' First symphonies and to witness the presentation of a resolution of appreciation to the conductor by the mayor of Pittsfield, the city nearest to Tanglewood.

The concert will be the first of nine in the shed on Thursday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons. Other conductors beside Munch will be Pierre Monteux and Leonard Bernstein.

PRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
[illegible] 1952

Contrasting Piano Styles Played by Nicole Henriot

Subtlety of Faure Ballade and Directness of Ravel Concerto Brought Out by French Pianist at Tanglewood; 'Songs of Captivity' Impressive

By VICTOR PRAHL

Nicole Henriot, [illegible] French pianist, was the soloist with the Boston Symphony [illegible] Charles Munch [illegible] Tanglewood at the Thurs[illegible] Ballade by Gabriel [illegible] concerto by [illegible] Henriot is not [illegible], having appeared [illegible] the Community [illegible] those who [illegible] New York Philharmonic [illegible] her fine performance [illegible]-flat Concerto [illegible]. Her appearance [illegible] was equally successful.

Faure and Ravel

The Faure [illegible] difficult piece, although [illegible] its virtuosity neither [illegible]. However, Miss [illegible] all that illusive [illegible] pervades the music of [illegible] the Ravel was [illegible] external. In [illegible] 20 years ago [illegible] composer experiments with the "blues" in the first movement and with jazz in the last, but it is in the extended cantilena of the slow movement played first by the piano, then by the orchestra with embellishment from the solo instrument, that we found its greatest beauty.

With real tonal depth and a fine sense of lyricism, Miss Henriot, sustained beautifully its poetic mood. After the tricky syncopations of its "Presto" finale, the soloist received a tremendous ovation in which Mr. Munch and the orchestra shared.

The piano numbers were preceded by a superb performance of Faure's incidental music to "Pelleas and Melisande," and the second half was devoted to Brahms's "Fourth." Mr. Munch's fine conception of this work is well known. His performance of it with the Boston Orchestra recently received the highest award of the Academie du Disque Francais publicly proclaimed in the Paris National Assembly. It is to be regretted that the heavy afternoon rain kept many from attending this concert.

"Songs of Captivity"

On a series of programs which have not featured many contemporary works, we must mention as outstanding the three "Songs of Captivity" by Luigi Dallapiccola, teacher of composition at the Berkshire Center of Sunday's concert. Here was music in the ultra-modern and certainly very personal idiom, but so intensely gripping that one reacted immediately to its forcefulness and sincerity of utterance.

After the fine singing of these three settings of poems, "Prayer of Mary Stuart," "Invocation of Boethius" and "The Farewell of Gerolamo Savonarola" by the Berkshire chorus, under the expert direction of Hugh Ross, the composer was called to the stage in a spontaneous outburst of applause by the large audience.

Tanglewood on Parade

The opera scenes, chamber music, choral groups, and orchestra concert programed at Tanglewood on Friday afternoon culminated in an evening concert by the Boston Symphony featuring alumnae students as conductors and soloists.

There was not the usual array of distinguished speakers of previous years but Aaron Copland, teacher of composition at the Center, made a brief introductory address, in which he paid tribute to the late Serge Koussevitzky, his ideals in establishing the school, and spoke of how now after 10 years they can point with pride to such distinguished [illegible].

James [illegible] lead the chorus in the final portion of Lukas Foss' cantata, "The Prairie". With earthy words by Carl Sandburg, this is a work of solid substance, and the chorus delivered it with a full, lusty tone, forceful and moving. Jaco Krachmalnick, concertmaster of th Philadelphia Orchestra, playe Chausson's "Poem", with externa modesty but a warm inner musicality. Under Howard Shanet's viril conducting it became more of a symphonic poem, which is really what i is.

Whatever this soloist lacked i virtuosity was more than made u by Seymour Lipkin, in the Mendels[illegible] Piano concerto in G minor. With Lukas Foss at the baton the turned out a performance that bris[illegible] with the fire and vitality of youth. Mr. Lipkin received the ovation of the season after the final movement.

Last Act of "Carmen"

Chief interest centered in the last act of "Carmen" with Mildred Miller in the title role. But those who expected an opera performance in costume and with decor, were disappointed for it was given merely in concert form. However, as the opera proceeded there were many compensations. First of all there was a chorus the equal of which few opera houses could boast, which sang English that one could understand, then there was the Boston Symphony accompanying and Leonard Bernstein in especially high form conducting.

When Miss Miller sang her opening phrases in the short duet with Escamillo, the chills ran up one's back. Since last heard several years ago her voice has developed into one of great beauty and judging from hearing her in this act we predict that she will undoubtedly become one of the great Carmens of our time. The voice is deep, rich, warm and expressive and one never missed a word.

The enunciation of all the soloists was perfect and this performance was another peg up for opera in English. David Lloyd gave an extra dramatic punch to the role of Don Jose and James Pease was an excellent Escamillo. Singing smaller roles were Francis Barnard (Zuniga), Margo Stagliano (Frascita) and Jacqueline Bazinet (Merc[illegible]). Naturally the audience of about 6000 was tremendously enthusiastic.

GRAND RAPIDS HERALD, SUNDAY, AUGUST 3, 1952 THE

'The Emperor' (GR Boy) and the Military

Left to right in this scene from "Titus" are Sirley Winston, Lloyd Oostenbrug of Grand Rapids, Richard Sharets and Jacqueline Langee. The scene is a conference of Emperor (Oostenbrug) and his military leaders.

BEFORE CRITICAL TANGLEWOOD AUDIENCE

GR Tenor Sings in Titus

By MARGUERITE S. KERNS
The Herald Music Critic

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass.—Lloyd Oostenbrug, 24-year-old tenor, former Grand Rapids boy who began singing at 9, warbling "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain," a la Kate Smith, will sing the title role in Mozart's last opera, "Titus" at the Berkshire Music Center here Tuesday night before an audience more exacting than many strictly professional performances draw.

This is believed to be the first complete performance of this opera in the United States.

Oostenbrug, a native of Iowa with his heart set on a musical career, left home when he was 15 and came to Grand Rapids, where he had relatives. He finished his last two years of high school there, graduating from Central High in 1947. The same spring he won a Schubert Club audition. He studied voice with several Grand Rapids teachers, Mrs. Bertha B. Murphy and others. The canny young Dutchman, instead of rushing off for study in a large center, spent the next two years in a job in a Grand Rapids music store and studied and taught voice on the side. All the while he was seeking an opinion he would regard as authoritative on whether his voice was of operatic caliber.

He got the go-sign after an audition in Minneapolis with Max Rudolph and an interview in Minneapolis with Richard Tucker. The young Grand Rapids singer made the trip there on purpose to get their opinions.

AUDITION CHANCE

Then came a chance to audition with a Curtis Institute (Philadelphia) teacher visiting at Milwaukee. He was first accepted by her as a student, and after three private lessons in Philadelphia awarded a scholarship at Curtis. He graduated there last spring.

In Philadelphia he sang leading roles with the Co-Opera Company, organized by Philadelphia singers, had an appearance with the Philadelphia Symphony and made such a hit with an important German Singing Society there when he filled a solo date as a replacement on short notice, that the Society, which was in the habit of employing outside soloists, employed him for its entire concert series the next season.

Awarded a scholarship to Berkshire Music Center, Oostenbrug tried out for the the leading role in "Titus" and has also sung leading parts this summer in excerpts from several operas in programs earlier this summer. Besides his study at Tanglewood, Oostenbrug is studying in New York with Paul Althouse, and plans to continue work with him next season and also to coach with Rosenek, with whom he has coached at Curtis.

Two weeks ago Oostenbrug sang the tenor solos in Schubert's "Mass in G Major" with Charles Munch, Conductor of the Boston Symphony, conducting. Tuesday night, in red velvet and gold, he'll sing an Emperor's role in "Titus" with Boris Goldovsky conducting.

Oostenbrug married a Grand Rapids girl, the former Marjorie Trumbull, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alva Trumbull of 901 Zeeland Ct. NE. A brother, Verne Oostenbrug of 1341 Ridgeway St., NE. and a sister, Mrs. William Waanders of 1321 Butler St., SE., live in Grand Rapids.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 4 - 1952

WORK BY HONEGGER IS PLAYED AT LENOX

Throng at Tanglewood Hears Munch Conduct Bostonians in 'Danse des Morts'

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3—The second week-end of the main phase of the Berkshire Music Festival came to an end this afternoon, with the radiant summer weather bringing out huge crowds. Charles Munch conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of Beethoven, Debussy and Honegger.

Arthur Honegger's "Danse des Morts" for baritone, soprano, contralto, narrator, chorus and orchestra was the unfamiliar work on today's program. The soloists were Richard Sharretts, Irene Jordan and Betty Lou Allen, with Arnold Moss as the narrator. The Berkshire Festival Chorus, prepared by Hugh Ross, provided the choral ensemble.

The Honegger work, completed in 1938, has not been performed hitherto by the Boston Symphony and is new to this listener. It combines a slashing, almost violent, dramatic quality with a hushed and soaring tenderness. Under Mr. Munch's direction, it had a performance of sustained brilliance.

Honegger has been attracted to biblical themes from his beginnings as a composer. Compared with his early works in this vein, "Danse des Morts" is tighter more drastic in its contrasts and more tellingly scored. Striking effects are realized with limited elements of the large apparatus used in the score and then with a call upon everyone.

Driving, Pounding Rhythm

Consider two examples. The second section, also titled "Danse des Morts," is hair-raising in its impact. It is as if a Michelangelo in tone had riven the earth. Chorus and orchestra are required to sing at the full and to maintain a driving, pounding rhythm. Then at the end, Affirman, the solo soprano, in high pianissimo tones, soars over the muted orchestra with a rare and touching purity. Miss Jordan, by the way, sang this passage with beauty of tone.

Mr. Munch was the organizing force behind this powerful interpretation, but he got yeoman service from the orchestra, chorus and all the soloists. Mr. Moss read well, though in one place the poor man had to contend with the thunder of a fortissimo ensemble.

Mr. Munch's reading of Debussy's "Iberia" also was one of his fine efforts. He understands the spirit of this music, and he evoked its exotic atmosphere by capturing its subtle colors and rhythms.

As for his conception of Beethoven's "Egmont" overture and Beethoven's Eighth, it was rough-hewn, not particularly balanced in tone or in pacing. But Beethoven responds well to ruggedness.

Last night's Wagner program was conducted by Pierre Monteux with notable clarity and propulsion. His ideas of tempo have balance and proportion; they are not so broad that they induce boredom, and they are not so fast that the music loses its majestic curve. His handling of "Siegfried's Rhine Journey" was a case in point. It had remarkable vigor and it was projected with the grand line.

Three Americans Soloists

The soloists were three young American singers, and they all distinguished themselves. James Pease appeared in Wotan's Farewell from "Die Walkuere," and he used his big bass-baritone with control and variety.

Margaret Harshaw of the Metropolitan Opera, who recently made the jump from the contralto to the dramatic soprano repertoire, appeared in the final duet from "Siegfried" and in the Immolation Scene from "Goetterdaemmerung." Her partner in the "Siegfried" excerpt was Howard Vandenburg.

Miss Harshaw reinforced the impression she made at the Metropolitan last season when she sang the "Goetterdaemmerung" Bruennhilde. Her voice rang out, clear and true. Her singing had temperament, and even though she wore an evening gown and stood in front of an orchestra she conveyed the emotions of a living stage.

Mr. Vandenburg, who was a baritone until he recently became a tenor, proved to be a Wagnerian singer of great promise. His voice is still a bit light, but it had an agreeable lyric quality not unbecoming for Siegfried.

He sang with style and musicianship, indicating that with more experience he should qualify for these difficult major roles in any opera house. Actually he is going to Munich for a year's work, which is just what the musical doctors would order.

It may be that Europe is not producing its usual quota of new Wagnerian singers, but it looks as if the American school of young artists is prepared to take over the burden.

BOSTON, MASS.
POST
AUG 3 - 1952

Frowns on Female Symphony Leaders

ierre Monteaux Teaches No Women at Famed School for Professionals

BY JOHN MASON POTTER

HANCOCK, Me., Aug. 2—Most the homes in this tiny seacoast wn have distinguished visitors is month. All but a few have ken in roomers for the next four eks. The roomers have come, t to relax and to enjoy the cool waters of Frenchman's Bay and the quiet sylvan beauty of the inland area, but to spend August learning to do better what they already do very well.

The visitors are of many nationalities, temperaments and backgrounds, but they have one thing in common. They are all musical conductors, or at least men who are professional musicians of note aiming at the maestro's podium, and they are all here to study under the man many consider the greatest living conductor, Pierre Monteaux of this town.

There are 60 of these distinguished visitors who are rooming in the homes of the townspeople here, and the 60 rent most of the spare rooms in the town and surrounding countryside. In fact, they pretty much take over the town during August, as they have for many years.

Pierre Monteaux, world famous conductor, at his home in Hancock, Me., where he runs school for conductors.

His Home Town

They have come to Hancock for four weeks of intensive study under M. Monteaux, former conductor and now associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who holds a school for conductors here in his home town every summer. To it come conductors of leading symphony orchestras of the nation, and instrumentalists eager to pick up the baton.

The school is known the world over, and in previous summers conductors from the great orchestras of Europe have mingled with the American leaders. It is a school that started 20 years ago, and moved across the Atlantic to Maine at the start of World war II, to escape the Nazis sweeping down into M. Monteaux' native France.

The idea of the school was conceived by his wife, the former Doris Hodgkins of Hancock, who was also responsible, in part, for the school coming to her native town. It was she who named the school the Domain School of Conducting when it was set up here in 1940.

"We were living in Paris and one day I happened to see a picture of Liszt surrounded by his students," recalls Mme. Monteaux. "I gazed at the picture and thought how wonderful it must have been for these men to have close contact with the great Liszt, to take their problems to him, and to receive instruction from him. As I thought, it occurred to me that a similar thing would be valuable in the present age."

No Women

So the conductors' school was formed in France, moving from Paris to Provence. It started with 16 students and over the years it has grown slowly and steadily. It has 60 students now, but she says that that number is too many, and that the maestro has hopes of limiting the enrollment to 25 in the future. This is difficult to do, she adds, because of the esteem in which the Domain School is held.

"He teaches no amateurs, and no women," she says. "Only professionals of standing and of promise are taken. This is a professional school. He will not teach women because he does not believe that women should be conductors."

The course is for four weeks, and it is a strenuous four weeks. The students work from 9 until 12:30 in the forenoon, and from 2:30 until 5 in the afternoon. This is in addition to the concerts which the group gives during the school term for the benefit of local charities. More than $41,000 has been procured for charity by means of these concerts, in which noted musicians and conductors, who have reverted back to instrumentalists, perform before audiences of summer people and townspeople.

The classes are held in two buildings, one a schoolhouse sort of structure, and the other the Monteaux summer cottage, which has a wing used as a classroom.

Although he teaches conducting to men already well versed and capable in the subject, he does little conducting himself. The usual procedure is for him to sit in the back row of the orchestra, among the woodwinds, on a small platform. He, like the instrumentalists, faces the conductor.

While the orchestra plays he coaches the conductor from his position. The orchestra is made up of conductors and prospective conductors, all of whom are also instrumentalists.

When the Domain School holds its annual concerts for local charities, the great maestro usually has one of his students do the conducting, although occasionally he has taken over the baton.

Gives Them Prestige

This year's enrollment of 60 students includes many men whose names are so well known in musical circles that they could not study under anyone less than M. Monteaux without suffering a loss of prestige. As it is, the association with the man who resigned this spring from the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra so that he could go on to new accomplishments, gives them prestige.

Among those who will be here Monday when the first classes get under way will be Paul Cienci of the National Symphony Orchestra of Washington, D. C.; Harry Dickson and Willis Page of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, James Robertson, conductor of the Wichita Symphony Orchestra, Harold Mueller of the New Orleans Symphony, Oliver Colbertson of the Seattle Symphony, Dr. Wilbur Crist of Capital University's musical department, and others.

M. Monteaux first came to this section when he was conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1924 and 1925, to vacation at nearby Dark Harbor. He fell in love with this area of Maine and swore that some day he would return and make his home here. He declared that the great beauty of the seashore and of the land ranging inland was a stimulant to the soul and to his sense of beauty.

Two years later he married Doris Hodgkins of Hancock, then in opera in Europe, and they lived on the continent until the outbreak of World war II. He had come to this country to conduct, and when France fell, he was advised to remain outside of France so that he would not become a captive of the Germans, or live under their tyranny.

Settled in Maine

So, the noted maestro and his wife returned to Hancock, where her ancestors once had held a domain of land on the shores of Frenchman's Bay. They bought back some of the land that had once been owned by her grandfather, and set up a permanent residence.

It was well that they did this, for otherwise the noted conductor would probably have met his death in a concentration camp. A brother, Henri, one of France's foremost actors, was caught giving asylum to British aviators who had been downed in raids on Paris. Henri, a sister, nieces and nephews were sent to concentration camps. Seven members of his family died in Dachau and in Buchenwald, and had he been within reach of the Nazis, undoubtedly Pierre would have met the same fate.

Today M. Monteaux, an American citizen and an avid Democrat, is a vigorous, active man, despite his 77 years, and he looks forward to new ventures.

"He cannot rest upon his laurels," says Mme. Pierre proudly. "Laurels are a thing of the past and he does not believe in the past, only in the present and the future. He does not have a single program from the thousands of concerts he had conducted, nor a single clipping of the thousands of newspaper and magazine pieces about him. He says they turn one's eye back to the past, while he wishes to keep his looking to the present and to the future."

Music

Honeg

By ROBERT B
LENOX, Mass., A weekend pair of con Tanglewood closed formance of Honegge
the Dead," a work soprano and contralt orchestra and a na piece with a text by most of it based on t ment. It derives insp
the celebrated wood Switzerland, by Hans younger.
In all there are six work—seven, if th
tion," which follows the Cross" section w is counted. The piec a dialogue, the text from Ezekial, as are the lines entrusted to Arnold Moss, in this
A section entitled Dead" is next, in wh
Irae theme is quit
Then there is a lam
by weeping, "The Lo and the "Hope in the Simplicity R
Honegger, never w originality or bright ination, is musically plicated here as he
In fact, simplicity a his principal concern
there are measure

NEW YORK, N.
HERALD TRIBUN
AUG 4 - 19

Tanglewood
The B

By Jay S. Harr
LENOX, Mass., Au
Boston Symphony Orc er the direction
Munch, this afternoon close its second week n the Tanglewood sh performance of Arthur La Danse Des Morts
or the work include Sharretts, baritone; Ire oprano; Betty Lou ralto, and Arnold Mos
The remainder of th
eld Beethoven's o
Goethe's "Egmont," his
No. 8, in F major and bussy's "Iberia."
Mr. Honegger's Death" is a dramatic he word "dramatic" visedly. Every note measure and phrase co
a whole that is intensel though the work, to th at any rate, is not musical. It is a cont
anxious piece, forever the listener with freak effects and deafening subterranean roars.
of Death" is a great,
fresco of considerable but it lacks the ability other than a brand excitement.
Instrumental High
Based on a text by P the six-movement work easily comprehended iom to which is fastene points, a touch of chro
This simplicity of tech ever, is deceptive, for familiar scaffolding th has set a veritable text strumental high jinks, new device more bizar predecessor. Thus, have been an entity e
stead, as a pot-pourri cial significance. And ev moments when the cho loists are called upon to skill to the ensemble. H placed in their mout and ideas that have turned to cliche. For came to the work see panion piece to the
"Jeanne d'Arc au Buch
tata was a disappointm
Mr. Munch opened h with a lusty Egmont o a frisky and ebullient E phony. This was follo
"Iberia" of spacious round sonority which of precision and syn seemed lacking in suspense. Taken in

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN

AUG 1952

Music

Honegger Work at Tanglewood

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 4.—The weekend pair of concerts here at Tanglewood closed with a performance of Honegger's "Dance of the Dead," a work for baritone, soprano and contralto soloists, an orchestra and a narrator. It is a piece with a text by Paul Claudel, and is based on the Old Testament. It derives inspiration from the celebrated woodcuts in Basle, Switzerland, by Hans Holbein, the younger.

In all there are six parts to the work—seven if the "Affirmation," which follows the "Hope in the Cross" section without pause, is counted. The piece begins with a dialogue, the text being drawn from Ezekial, as are the bulk of the lines entrusted to the narrator, Arnold Moss, in this presentation.

A section entitled "Dance of the Dead" is next, in which the Dies Irae theme is quite prominent. Then there is a lament, followed by weeping, "The Lord's Answer" and the "Hope in the Cross."

Simplicity Reigns.

Honegger, never without either originality or brightness of imagination, is musically not so complicated here as he sometimes is. In fact, simplicity appears to be his principal concern, even though there are measures, sometimes pages, when his masterly counterpoint can scarcely be ignored.

The chorus sing sometimes, they deliver the words in a rhythmic monotone sometimes and sometimes they merely speak. Orchestra and chorus are often employed as a body against the counterpoint of the narrator's lines. All in all, the effects are interesting and, frequently, compelling.

The Honegger work is first-class. It has power and subtlety, and it communicates. Not much more may be asked of any man's composition.

Charles Munch conducted con amore, as you might expect. The performance was brilliant, thanks to superior elements in all departments.

Richard Sharretts, baritone; Irene Jordan, soprano, and Betty Lou Allen, contralto, were at no time wanting in the niceties of artistic projection. Arnold Moss, distinguished man of the theater, delivered his lines of the narrator with much nuance, and in a voice clear and efficiently modulated.

10,000 Attend.

The Berkshire ~~Festival~~ Chorus, prepared by Hugh Ross, acquitted itself with honors, and the orchestra was a joy to hear.

Preceding the Honegger were the Beethoven "Egmont" overture, the same composer's Eighth Symphony, and the DeBussy "Iberia."

On Saturday evening Pierre Montex, guest-conductor for a second time, urged over 10,000 listeners to their rhapsodie noisiest with an all-Wagner concert. Soloists were Margaret Harshaw of the Metropolitan and the young tenor, Howard Vendenberg, an erstwhile baritone.

I have never before heard Miss Harshaw sing so beautifully, so lyrically and with such dramatic emphasis. In the duet from scene II, act III of "Seigfried" and again in her solo, the immolation scene from "Goetterdaemmerung," she was positively superb.

Tenor Sings Well.

Mr. Vandenberg, for his part, sang the lines of the young Siegfried with a remarkable freshness, in an attractive voice equal to the demands, though not, as it sounded to me, the truly "Heldentenor" type. But I must say that this tenor music of the last act duet has not been better sung in recent years.

James Pease, baritone, did a quite enjoyable job with Wotan's farewell from "Die Walkuere." The purely orchestral excerpts—fire music, "Siegfried's Rhine Journey," "Death of Siegfried" were marvelously performed by the Boston Symphony.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 4 - 1952

Tanglewood

The Berkshire Festival

* * *

By Jay S. Harrison

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 3.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Munch, this afternoon brought to a close its second week of concerts in the Tanglewood shed with a performance of Arthur Honegger's "La Danse Des Morts." Soloists for the work included Richard Sharretts, baritone; Irene Jordan, soprano; Betty Lou Allen, contralto, and Arnold Moss, narrator. The remainder of the program held Beethoven's overture to Goethe's "Egmont," his Symphony No. 8, in F major and Claude Debussy's "Iberia."

Mr. Honegger's "Dance of Death" is a dramatic cantata and the word "dramatic" is used advisedly. Every note of it, every measure and phrase contributes to a whole that is intensely dramatic, though the work, to this reviewer at any rate, is not essentially musical. It is a contrived, overanxious piece, forever bombarding the listener with freak orchestral effects and deafening him with subterranean roars. "The Dance of Death" is a great, whirlwind fresco of considerable ingenuity, but it lacks the ability to project other than a brand of specious excitement.

Instrumental High Jinks

Based on a text by Paul Claudel, the six-movement work utilizes an easily comprehended diatonic idiom to which is fastened, at critical points, a touch of chromatic color. This simplicity of technique, however, is deceptive, for onto this familiar scaffolding the composer has set a veritable textbook of instrumental high jinks, with each new device more bizarre than its predecessor. Thus, what might have been an entity emerges, instead, as a pot-pourri of no especial significance. And even in those moments when the chorus and soloists are called upon to lend their skill to the ensemble, Honegger has placed in their mouths phrases and ideas that have long since turned to cliche. For those who came to the work seeing a companion piece to the composer's "Jeanne d'Arc au Buch," the cantata was a disappointment indeed.

Mr. Munch opened his program with a lusty Egmont overture and a frisky and ebullient Eighth Symphony. This was followed by an "Iberia" of spacious tempo and round sonority which, for want of precision and synchronization, seemed lacking in tension and suspense. Taken in all, the concert did not meet the standard which the Boston Symphony Orchestra has set for itself and the world at large.

Saturday night's concert, the last of two conducted at this year's festival by Pierre Monteux, was dedicated exclusively to the music of Richard Wagner. The program listed "Wotan's Farewell and Fire Music" from "die Walkuere," in a performance by the bass James Pease; the second scene from act three of "Siegfried" with Margaret Harshaw, soprano, and Howard Vandenburg, tenor, as soloists, and after the intermission, three excerpts from "Goetterdaemmerung:" "Siegfried's Rhine Journey," "The Death of Siegfried" and the "Immolation Scene" with Margaret Harshaw again returning to the stage as featured singer.

Non-Superhuman Wagner

Mr. Monteux' Wagner — which New York has had several opportunities of observing in the last year—was, as always, sonorous and sturdy. In the conductor's hands the music progresses with a heavy tread, though its texture is not excessively thick nor its content marred by overstatement and hysteria. It is a non-superhuman Wagner, a Wagner whose contrapuntal lines are allowed to breathe and speak freely. For these reasons the composer's thematic elaborations never strike the ear as solid and their recurrence is ever lightened by means of new shadings and varied colors.

Saturday night's soloists acquitted themselves handsomely. Miss Harshaw's opening tones shook the rafters, and the beams were not permitted to cease trembling from that point on. The singer, moreover, is that rare phenomenon, a Wagnerian soprano who is genuinely musical, and, as such, her legato phrases were highly arched and curved to fit whatever sentiment the text was expressing. Her "Immolation Scene," for example, was exalted, vibrant and wholly steeped in the heroine's matter of self-anihilation. Miss Harshaw's was in sum, a thundering Wagner and an all-powerful one.

Both Mr. Vandenburg and Mr. Pease were ably suited to the roles set before them. Mr. Vandenburg, it is true, barked a bit, and, in his top tones, showed signs of strain, but he maintained Siegfried's long line with considerable purity, and the voice of Mr. Pease was massive, assured, resonant. Throughout its range it bespoke all the regal authority which is Wotan's particular blessing.

PORTLAND, ME.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

AUG 3 - 1952

Tanglewood Practice Studio Dedicated To Anne Gannett

By Helen Havener

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 2. — Thoughts of hundreds of people at the Berkshire Music Center ~~Friday~~ turned reminiscently to July 27, 1948, when the Little Red House on the Tanglewood grounds was presented to the Center by the National Federation of Music Clubs. Representatives of the Federation dedicated the two practice studios in the building as memorials, the one to the late Anne M. Gannett, of Cape Elizabeth, Me., president of the Federation when the Little Red House project was started, and the other to the late Robert W. Roberts of St. Petersburg, Fla., a substantial donor to the enterprise.

Mrs. Gannett presented the House to the Center, and the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, originally sought ~~the Federation's~~ cooperation in the enterprise. Until the time of his death, he used one of the studios for his conductorial classes.

Mrs. Ada Holding Miller of Providence, R. I., the present president of the Federation, gave the dedicatory address. Also present were Dr. Lewis Perry of Boston, chairman of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, who was present on the previous occasion to accept for the Center; Mrs. Roger C. Williams, Portland, Mrs. Gannett's daughter, and Mrs. Robert W. Roberts, National board member from Florida, and widow of the man to whom the second studio was dedicated.

Mrs. Miller paid high tribute to both Mr. Roberts and Mrs. Gannett in explaining why the Federation has chosen to dedicate the studios to them. She referred to the former as "a true friend of the National Federation of Music Clubs, a patron of the arts, keenly interested in the welfare of the organization and manifesting this by attending every National convention and board meeting and by many generous contributions to its projects."

Of Mrs. Gannett she said: "She was president of the Federation for six years, our wartime president. Through her vision, her determination to complete the building of the Little Red House despite almost insurmountable obstacles, the project became a triumphant reality. Gentle, gracious, kindly, yet with fixed purpose, here was a woman illumined by God's own light."

In closing her address Mrs. Miller presented to the center two hand-carved tablets executed by John Bischoff of Syracuse, a graduate of the Rhode Island School of Design, one bearing Mr. Roberts' name, the other, to mark the studio used by Dr. Koussevitzky, bearing Mrs. Gannett's.

"May these studios be filled with music created by the youth of the Berkshire Music Center," she said in concluding. May we who are present this day, rededicate ourselves to their high ideals through which this project had its inception. May we resolve to become not only music-loving people but music-living people, with living music in our hearts, that we may go forth singing."

Dedication of the studios came as a feature of the 11th convention of the New England District of the National Federation of Music Clubs, attended by a delegation of approximately 100 from the New England states, and including several State Presidents and National officers.

Mrs. Willis Lyman of Stamford, Conn., New England District President, presided at morning exercises in Sedgwick Hall, Lenox Library. Miss Mabel Parkes Friswell of Needham, president of the Massachusetts Federation of Music Clubs, and Mrs. Robert S. Hoffman, immediate past president welcomed the group. Honor guests presented included Mrs. Robert W. Roberts, National Board member from Florida; Miss Louise H. Armstrong of Portland, National Board member from Maine; Mrs. Phyllia Lations Hanson of Worcester, National Board member from Massachusetts; Mrs. Warren Knox of Albany, National Board member from New York; Miss Gertrude Caulfield of Providence, Rhode Island State President; Mrs. Anne Mason Francis of Woonsocket, past Rhode Island president; Mrs. Dudley Roberts of Glenbrook, past Connecticut State President; Mrs. Edward J. Colgan of Waterville, State President of Maine; Miss Nellie McCann of Gorham, past State President of Maine; Miss Ruth Ferry of New Haven, past National Treasurer; Mrs. Doris Albee Humphrey, State President of New Jersey; and Miss Friswell and Mrs. Hoffman, present and past State Presidents of Massachusetts.

Other Federation talent was featured at a concert following the dedicatory exercises in the afternoon, which was held in the Red Barn. Here Claudette Sorel, National Young Artist piano winner in 1951, played the Chopin B minor Sonata, dedicating the Largo to the late Mrs. Gannett; and Warren Locke, baritone, a protege of the late Mrs. Gannett, sang a group of songs. One of them, My Home, written by Peggy Stuart with the composer at the piano was world premiered and dedicated to Mrs. Gannett. The Berkshire Music Center Quintet presented the Schubert Quintet in C major, Opus 163.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 4 - 1952

Varied Program Pleases Audience at Tanglewood

Beethoven, Debussy Works and Honegger Novelty Are Given Inspired Performance

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Tanglewood, Aug. 3—With 11,000 people attending the concert this beautiful Sunday afternoon, the total audience for the three concerts in Series B of the Berkshire Music Festival totaled 27,925. ~~Saturday~~ night 10,000 people heard the all Wagner concert conducted by Pierre Monteux.

The program this afternoon as arranged and conducted by Charles Munch was one well calculated to please the many temperaments which made up this huge audience. Beethoven was represented by his overture to "Egmont" and his "Symphony No. 8 in F Major." Debussy's colorful, wonderously beautiful "Iberia" was played as only the Boston Symphony players can do it when inspired by so sensitive an interpreter of French music as Charles Munch. The novelty on the program, and novelties have been few this year, was "La Danse Des Morts" by Honegger, for baritone, soprano, contralto, narrator, chorus and orchestra.

The overture to "Egmont" received a deeply probing reading. It was a performance rich in detail, in which the various currents of the play were clearly made known. Beethoven's gay, wholesome eighth symphony was charmingly played, moving with consistent grace from first to last.

Debussy's "Iberia" has had many interpreters, but we have seldom heard a most "Juste" conception of this work as it emerged this afternoon. It is divided into three parts, "In the streets and byways," "The fragrance of the night" and "The morning of a festival day." "Images" is a conveniently noncommital title. It was first written for two pianos, but soon Debussy conceived it in orchestral terms. Into it, he put all his vast wizardry of coloration, picturesque tempi and phraseology as distinct from any other as could be. The Boston players are singularly adept in the performance of French music and today they evoked glorious passages of multi-colored beauties. No wonder that they and Mr. Munch received rounds of applause.

Honnegger's "Dance of Death" has had one performance in this country, that of the Ft. Wayne orchestra in 1949. It is a tremendous score, surely one of the greatest of contemporary scores. Honegger has always been at his best in highly dramatic, descriptive utterance, and in this work, the text of which is taken from the book of Ezekiel, chapter 37, verses 1-14, he has ample opportunity to put to music words of great import. The opening dialogue between narrator and chorus is four square, monumental in tone and rhythmically solid. Arnold Moss proved an admirable narrator.

The second movement, dance of death, uses the revolutionary "Carmagnole" and the death chant dies away with telling effect, reminiscent of Listz's "Totentanz," Richard Sharretts was the admirable baritone soloist in the "Lament" a quiet, sustained movement. The movement titled "Tears" is a plain chant, sung in Latin, and it was affectingly sung by the chorus. The quartet, consisting of Mr. Sharretts, baritone; Irene Jordan, soprano; Betty Lou Allen, contralto and Arnold Moss, narrator, sang with lovely simplicity and admirable enunciation. The final "Affirmation" was a glorious paean of faith.

Audience Response Polite

Mr. Munch brought out in detail the extraordinary grandeur and drama of the work. It is terrifying in its intensity and needs to be heard many times before its greatness is fully revealed. The audience response was, to say the least, polite. It should be given a second hearing before the festival closes.

The Saturday night concert was distinguished by the second appearance of the French composer, Pierre Monteux, and the dramatic soprano, Margaret Harshaw, who was a fine contralto and has now extended her voice so that she now seems the logical successor of Flagstad for Wagnerian roles at the Met. She looks very like the young Flagstad and the voice rings out nobly, without any of the screeching which so often is a prime feature of sopranos attempting the music of Wagner.

The concert opened with Wotan's farewell and the fire music from "Die Walkure" with James Pease as soloist. Mr. Pease is a veteran of the Berkshire center and it has been interesting to watch his vocal and artistic growth. While he may never achieve his greatest success as a Wagnerian singer, the young basso was thoroughly in the mood of the music and his German was excellent.

Singing with Miss Harshaw in the second scene of the third act of "Siegfried" was the tenor Howard Vandenburg. He is not a Helden tenor, but he sang with a complete feeling for style and text. Miss Harshaw was superb as the awakened Brunhilde, singing with a warmth of tone and nicety of nuance which captivated the audience.

Excerpts from "Gotterdammerung" completed the program. One heard Siegfried's Rhine Journey, the death of Siegfried and the immolation scene. Pierre Monteux understands and can communicate the spirit of the Wagnerian dramas. The orchestra played as it has not always played this season, responding to every demand. It was thrilling playing. Miss Harshaw won a veritable ovation following her superb delivery of the immolation music. She sings with tremendous personal impact, a strength of communication which cannot fail to touch each individual listener. She was recalled to the stage at least a half dozen times.

Rubinstein Thursday

Tomorrow night Mozart's "Titus" will be given by the opera department. It will be sung in English and most careful study and planning has gone into its production.

The first concert of the final series of shed concerts will be given Thursday night. Mr. Munch will conduct Schumann's "Spring" symphony and Swanson's "Shorty Symphony." Arthur Rubinstein will be soloist in Brahms' piano concerto No. 2 in B Flat major.

TIGHT BINDING

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
AUG 4 - 1952

Wide Variety of Music Provided at Tanglewood

Singing of Margaret Harshaw, New Wagnerian Soprano, Thrills Saturday Night Audience; Honegger's 'Danse des Morts' Big Feature Yesterday

By W. HARLEY RUDKIN

Picking the best out of as large and varied a musical week end as the Berkshire Music Festival offered Saturday evening and yesterday afternoon would be almost an impossibility, but for those who attended the performances, at least two attainments will stand out. One is the singing of Margaret Harshaw in the all-Wagner program Saturday; the other Honegger's "Danse des Morts," which closed the concert yesterday.

For those who like their Wagner in large and palatable portions, Saturday evening was a delight, not only because of Miss Harshaw's "Brunnhilde," but because of the entire evening, which had Howard Vandenburg, tenor; James Pease, bass, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra again under the inspired baton of Conductor Pierre Monteux.

There can be no question but that a new Wagnerian star has risen on the operatic horizon in Miss Harshaw, and both Mr. Vandenburg and Mr. Pease gave able support to a program which included "Siegfried," "Die Walkure," and, of course, "Gotterdammerung."

With Charles Munch again on the podium, variety was the keynote for yesterday afternoon, in the big Tanglewood shed. There is always a temptation to go off on a long attempt at lyrical prose on these fine Sunday afternoon occasions, for surely they present a kaleidoscopic panorama of people and landscape unique in any experience.

The Big Surprise

The music, however, is the thing, and, after the more or less standard Beethoven overture to "Egmont;" the same composer's 8th symphony and Debussy's always nostalgic "Iberia," the Honegger came as something of a shock. It was like plunging into ice-cold sea water after an hour or so of placid and extremely comfortable sunbathing.

This contemporary score is an allegory, using the orchestra, narrator, and chorus. "Monumental" is a tempting word to try and describe something that is so vast it theatens to defy description, and the Dramatic "Danse des Morts" fits the pattern. With Arnold Moss as a clear, lucid narrater, the music also utilized the talents of Richard Sharretts, baritone; Irene Jordan, soprano, and Betty Lou Allen, contralto.

This is music that would have to be heard several times or full assessment and appreciation. Vitality, cohesiveness, it certainly has, and builds to tremendous climaxes. "Danse des Morts" has its quiet moments, in the "Lament," and "Tears," a Latin chant, but the overall effect is one of electric intensity, and Mr. Munch is both to be congratulated for his performance of the music, and for including it in the Festival program. For sheer drama and suspense, he couldn't have picked a better curtain piece.

The Thursday evening concert, which marks the first of the final three shed programs for this season, will have Mr. Munch conducting Schumann's "Spring" symphony; Swanson's "Short Symphony," and Artur Rubinstein as soloist in Brahms' piano concerto No. 2 in B-flat major.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 4 - 1952

Tanglewood Hears:

Night of Wagner and A Sunday Oratorio

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

WAGNER returned to Tanglewood Saturday night. Adroitly arranged excerpts from three of the Ring operas provided the essential synopsis of the saga from Wotan's affecting leave-taking of his valiant but disobedient daughter on the fire-encircled Valkyrie's rock, her awakening by the shining hero, Siegfried, and their impassioned love duet; Siegfried's picturesque Rhine Journey, his death and finally Brunnhilde's self-sacrifice on the funeral pyre as the twilight of the gods deepened into extinction.

* * *

THIS VERY German music was marshaled in magnificent pageantry by a Frenchman who is first a great artist. His perceptiveness penetrates considerations of temperament as well as nationalism. Besides, Pierre Monteux is no stranger to the Boston Symphony Orchestra since it was his American debut instrument more than a quarter of a century ago.

But the star — one uses the term reluctantly yet of necessity —was a singer: not Basso James Pease who actually sang the tones which most Wotans declaim or ellide; nor Howard Vandenburg whose Siegfried was bright and expressive; but Margaret Harshaw, a thrilling Brunnhilde.

The orchestral splendor which Monteux evoked rose to breathtaking crescendo in the opening scene of the last act of Siegfried. Surely, you felt, no human voice could survive in this sea of sound. Head high and inspired, our Brunnhilde hailed life and the rising sun in an imperial music of her own which compelled the orchestra to subside to its function of accompaniment.

* * *

MISS HARSHAW began her mettlesome interpretation fervently and proceeded from rapture to exaltation. She stood at the end of the immolation scene as though transfigured and even through the extended orchestral peroration the audience had not quite recovered itself and applauded perfunctorily. Then as if they had awakened themselves to the reality of the experience a shouted ovation began and continued till one lost count of the recalls.

To say that orchestral honors were secondary is no disparagement, so great was this vocal triumph. Separately assessed, the Bostonians recreated a Wagner who is unknown to the opera house. The added dimension is symphonic and reaches to the horizon. There is no stage machinery nor chromos to tether the imagination. Monteux gave power without bigness. The gold and sables of the death music was overpowering.

You wonder how musicians live through experiences which so completely spend the mere listener.

BETTY LOU ALLEN of Hartford appeared at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon.

Sunday Concert

ONE OF the most impressive contemporary essays in the oratorio form was introduced at Sunday's Tanglewood concert by Charles Munch. Up to now Honegger's "Dance of the Dead" is reported to have been heard only in Basel and Fort Wayne which proves that nowadays you never can tell where the fresh and new things in music are going to bob up.

Ezekiel's revelation in the valley of the dry bones is the central picture in this six-part work for solo singers, narrator, chorus and orchestra. It is by far the most dramatic one. Its power is such, that several gripping episodes that follow seem anticlimactic. The composer relied for his inspiration rather more upon the sixteenth century woodcuts of Holbein the Younger, in which death as a skeleton haunts living persons of high and low degree, rather than upon the words of the prophet although part vividly but more than once was overwhelmed by the musical forces. Chorus and orchestra were required to deliver in full stentorian power. Of the soloists Richard Sharratts, baritone, had difficult and not very grateful material. Soprano Irene Jordan similarly, but her closing phrases taken with an eerie, wraithlike intonation were haunting ones.

Special interest attaches to Betty Lou Allen, contralto, not only because she is at home in Hartford, but because the Music Center has been relying upon her more and more for important solo parts. Her pleasing and confident singing was characteristic. Her tones added a sweet and conciliatory quality to the starkness of the music's prevailing mood.

Honegger is one of the few moderns who has been able to submerge his technical devices in communicative music. He wears his learning lightly and his skill to good purposes. Motivated by a spiritual concept, his concern is to move his listeners, rather than astonish them with loud sounds or puzzle them with intricate ones.

He truly seems in this startling and apocalyptic work to have clothed the dry bones of oratorio with sinews, flesh and skin. On Sunday this creation received its breath of life from a wise and masterful conductor.

* * *

DR. MUNCH gave Beethoven's Eighth symphony a stature something above that of an agreeable intermezzo between the greater Seventh and Ninth. The longer movements at beginning and end had vigor and muscularity; those in the middle a playful sense of well-being—Schumann in love could have written the minuet.

No "message" here at all because Munch does not deal in ideas but in the arrangement of attractive and intelligible sounds. I would expect him to "interpret" the Eroica but not the Eighth.

Similarly the Images which comprise Debussy's Iberia suite. The ear is appealed to sensuously and Munch is completely satisfied if his sensitive orchestra keeps the sound web clear, the colorings true, the pulse alive. There isn't any more than that to Debussy's orchestra, but that is beauty sufficient.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
AUG 4 - 1952

'The Dance of the Dead' Heard

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 4.—Charles Munch introduced "La Danse des Morts" ("The Dance of the Dead") at the Boston Symphony concert yesterday afternoon. Heard hereabouts for the first time, it made an immediate impression as an unusual work of affirmation and power, though an audience of 11,000 appeared hesitant in accepting it whole-heartedly on first acquaintance.

"The Dance of the Dead" owes its title to the famous woodcuts of Hans Holbein which inspired Paul Claudel to create the text. The work embraces extensive writing for chorus, a baritone solo, incidental solos by a soprano and contralto, narration, and an orchestral part quite graphic in its scoring. Created in 1938 and first performed quite appropriately in Basel, Switzerland, in March, 1940, it has been called a message from man to God.

Taking his text from the Book of Ezekiel and the Book of Job, Claudel first dwells on the prophecy that the bones of the dead shall be raised. Then he lets the hope of salvation emerge into solid affirmation of belief. The work is divided into seven sections.

In setting all this to music, Honegger has seized upon the dramatic, realistic and spiritual undertones of the text, fashioning them with extraordinary skill. His orchestration makes the actual dance something quite macabre. His sensitivity to vocal balances had led him into most effective choral writing. Just the use of the soprano voice at the close of the final section is a stroke of genius. His intense sincerity endows the music with dynamic strength. With it he shows once again how well qualified he is to be France's leading composer.

The performance was sung in English. Devoted to Honegger's music, Munch gave his best in unfolding this work. Assisting were Arnold Moss, narrator; Richard Sharretts, baritone; Irene Jordan, soprano; Betty Lou Allen, contralto, and the Berkshire Festival chorus, all of whom performed with impressive earnestness. Before the Honegger, Munch conducted Beethoven's overture to "Egmont," the Eighth Symphony, and Debussy's "Iberia" somewhat dutifully.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
AUG 4 - 1952

Betty Lou Allen Is Soloist In Concert At Tanglewood

A Hartford girl was soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood, Sunday afternoon.

Betty Lou Allen sang the contralto role in "Danse des morts," by Arthur Honegger, Swiss composer. The work is for orchestra and mixed chorus.

In a special account of the event for The Courant, Willard M. Clark, veteran music critic of the Springfield Union, and well known singer and teacher, said:

"Betty Lou Allen sang with full sweet tones, rich in the lower register, brilliant in the middle. She alone of the soloists enunciated so that her words carried. She was heard in the movement, 'Hope in the Cross'."

Honegger's work is a setting of a text by Paul Claudelm, who wrote it after seeing the famous "Dance of Death" woodcuts by Hans Holbein, The Younger, at Basle, Switzerland.

The text itself stems from the Old Testament, and the Book of Ezekiel, "Remember, Man, that thou art dust . . . that thou art spirit . . . that thou art rock"

Miss Allen, well known in Hartford as a singer, recently returned from Paris where she sang in a revival of the Gertrude Stein-Virgil Thomson opera, "Four Saints in Three Acts" She is at present a scholarship student at the Berkshire Music Center.

Other soloists in the Honegger work Sunday were: Richard Sharretts, baritone, Irene Jordan, soprano, and Arnold Moss, narrator.

BETTY LOU ALLEN

BOSTON, MASS.
MORNING GLOBE
AUG 4 - 1952

'Munch Directs 'Remarkable' Sco 'La Danse Des Morts,' at Tangl

By CYRUS DURGIN

LENOX, Aug 3—A remarkable [illegible] score by Arthur Honegger, "La Danse Des Morts" ("The Dance of the Dead") was given its first performance in the eastern [illegible] the United States by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon.

The work closed the second [illegible] week-end of the Berkshire Festival [illegible] in the music shed at Tanglewood.

Remarkable' Score,
orts,' at Tanglewo

YRUS DURGIN

Beethoven's "Egmont" over
Eighth Symphony, and "Ibe
Debussy completed the pro
Except for a perform
Fort Wayne in 1949, "La D Morts" is unknown to this though it was finished in is a big and imposing sco a text by Paul Claudel b the first to the fourth v
the 37th chapter of Ezek Claudel's original urge the text came when he younger Hans Holbein's w
"The Dance of Death," in Switzerland, during the p tion of Honegger's "Jeanne Au Bucher," for which C also had provided the word
The underlying idea of "La Des Morts" is death and the ised resurrection, as Jehova his people that they shall liv in their own flesh and God. For such a vast conc large forces are appropria Honegger used full with organ and assorted perc mixed chorus; soprano, co and baritone soloists and a ing narrator.

Style is Varied

The musical style is varie the shrieking dissonant ph
the opening to the broad, tune character of the theme carries the words "I know Redeemer liveth. . ."
the most striking—and single movement is the
"The Dance of Death," in
as one "sees" ghostly danc the bridge of the chorus sings the French tionary Carmagnole and fr of the folk tune, "Sur D'Avignon" and the comes roaring out of the Nothing, however uncon
l, that Honegger found his purpose, was mis chorus talks as well as choral line is both di jagged and simple in sonor harmony: there is an eerie ling in high strings and w as the breath of the Lord newly-fleshed dead bone life; woodblock and two re of wood slapped together a important edge to the co sound.
At first hearing, I would n sume to grasp the whole s of "La Danse Des Mort structure this work has sense of fundamental be well as an extensive pallette colors and imaginative effects.
Whether it will prove as either "King David" or D'Arc Au Bucher," only ture can tell us. But th know: the score ought to at Symphony Hall next where the total effect may more imposing, within doo in the semi-open spaces
Music Shed.

Text in English

For this performance, wisely was translated into and the clear enunciation
Berkshire Festival chorus,
as its power and precision,
to the excellent prepara
Hugh Ross. Arnold Moss, mirable actor, took the pa narrator with authority usual clear speech. But a phone (at least as he used not enough to cope with th of the orchestra, and conse numerous stretches of hi were lost.
I think, too, that less and much more volume sui the voice of the prophet of the Lord. Not persua thunderous proclamation is Soprano Irene Jordan,
Betty Lou Allen, and barito
Sharretts all were co though none must much resonance as I, for on be preferred.
While a few people walk for one reason or another a cordial reception for who had conducted with and the performers. Th
, by the way, was one biggest Sunday crowds in wood history: 11,000 perso

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

[illegible] 5 - 1952

Tanglewood Group Gives Mozart Work

'La Clemenza' Strains Mercy in Premier American Performance

[illegible] LENOX, Mass. [illegible] "La Clemenza [illegible] a confused [illegible]

[illegible] of Titus

[illegible] and [illegible] Mozart has put [illegible] most unfortun- [illegible] Berkshire Music [illegible] presented items [illegible] want to per- [illegible] no place to do so [illegible] of our opera fare is [illegible]. Yet the fact re- [illegible] "La Clemenza" was [illegible] purpose [illegible] stage part [illegible] and [illegible] aside [illegible] Mozart was [illegible] during [illegible] composition that [illegible] indubitably filled with "The Magic Flute" and that Leopold II's commission was un- [illegible] mainly because of the composer's bitter need for funds.

Composer Wept

In addition, it was at outset at least a complete failure, and, it is reported Mozart himself wept at the premiere of the opera in [illegible] it went on to suc- [illegible] succeeding century, but [illegible] of romanticism, with its [illegible] on the one hand and [illegible] on the other, must be [illegible] a factor and not nec- [illegible] a healthy one — in this [illegible] in popularity.

[illegible] "grind" among music's [illegible] the "musicologist," "La Clemenza" may be of histori- cal interest. For the opera depart- ment of a school, it may pose tech- nical problems of a limited, spe- cial nature. But in the sheer realm of music, the evidence was against reviving "La Clemenza," and this [illegible] experience redoubled it [illegible].

[illegible] of introducing "La Clemenza" tonight, Boris Goldovsky, director of the opera department, admitted that the opera seria (of which this was Mozart's first ex- ample during the 10 years after [illegible]) was an outmoded form even in 1791, and that the [illegible] of Metastasio was crucial- ly old fashioned. Yet, he said, there is a message in "La Clemenza" [illegible] pertinent even for today, [illegible] people should settle their [illegible] by force or compas- sion.

Has 'East Lynne' Ring

The moral persuasiveness of "La Clemenza" is doubtless enduring. But the form in which it is cast, of opera, is not bettered or made more palatable by this high sentiment. "La Clemenza," as drama, has a [illegible] "East Lynne" ring about [illegible] give or take a toga, and unfor- tunately its foolish nakedness is [illegible] the more exposed by being [illegible] into English. For the cor- [illegible] a king, it might be a [illegible] a test with subtly flat- [illegible] But as the [illegible] opera [illegible] is now all [illegible].

[illegible] form, "La Clemenza" is a ser- [illegible] and set-pieces, mostly [illegible] ensembles. Each must be taken by itself, for they gather [illegible] momentum as a [illegible] larger import. [illegible] pieces, a handful [illegible] musical interest, [illegible] stylish and [illegible] tender. But [illegible] the score of "La [illegible] monotonous and un- [illegible] work of an [illegible] need of money.

[illegible] staged and [illegible] performance to- [illegible] econom- [illegible] touch- [illegible] splashes [illegible] and gold. Pro- [illegible] suggest the [illegible] of Piranesi en- [illegible] Altogether the pro- [illegible] and atmos- [illegible] a sort of "Aida" way. [illegible] standard, the [illegible] make-up better than [illegible].

However one may have felt about the opera itself, the singing in "La Clemenza" tonight was sound and able. The voices were vigorous, warm and commanding. Not all the fancy passages were taken with poise, but the general effectiveness was undeniable, in- dividually and as a whole per- formance. Lloyd Oostenbrug sang the title role, Irene Jordan was Vitellia, Sarah Jane Fleming sang Servilia, Shirley Winston, Sextus, Jacqueline Langee, Annius, Rich- ard Sharretts, Publius, and Arthur Schoep and Robert Mesrobian, Lentulus and Caius.

T. H. P.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN

AUG 5 - 1952

'Titus' Offered By Students

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 5.—Mozart's "La Clemenza di Tito," dubbed "Titus," had its first U. S. performance given by the students of the Berkshire Music Center last night. Most handsomely staged and impressively sung, the production brought to life a work not to be dismissed summarily as of historical value only. It may be more conventional than inspired, but it is unquestionably Mozartean.

This is the opera which interrupted Mozart's composition of "The Magic Flute." Commissioned to be performed at the coronation of Leopold II of Bohemia, "Titus" was written, rehearsed and performed within six weeks. It was not successful, then, and may be old fashioned now because of the casting of women in men's roles; but this performance proved it worthy to be mounted for more than just experimental value.

For the Tanglewood production, Boris Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell translated the text into English most advisedly. They substituted spoken dialogue for recitative, thus giving more weight to the story and enhancing dramatic values. The music was left intact. Because of complex scenic problems, Goldovsky decided to use light projection to provide the visual atmosphere effects necessary. This move is considered the most important experiment of its kind yet conducted in this country.

Mozart's score contains several fine arias. The most notable, perhaps is the one of Sextus condemned as a traitor before the eyes of the Emperor he sought to kill. Some of the duets of the first act and an outstanding trio in the second are highlights. Other numbers dwell on a more ordinary level, but musical interest seldom falters.

The student cast sang better than it acted. The honors went to the women, chiefly to Shirley Winston who distinguished herself as Sextus, and Irene Jordan as the heroine Vitellia. Jacqueline Langee deserved mention as Annius and Richard Sharretts as Publius. Others giving fine support were Sarah Jane Fleming as Servilia and Lloyd Oostenbrug as Titus. Goldovsky both conducted the student orchestra and staged the show. Charles Elson created the settings, Paul Planer worked out the projection, and Leo Van Witsen designed the costumes.

As offered last night "Titus" showed what splendid work the opera department here is doing. Mounting it must be regarded as one of Goldovsky's most important contributions.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 5 - 1952

'TITUS' BY MOZART PRESENTED AT FETE

English Version of Opera Has U. S. Premiere at Tanglewood —Irene Jordan Lauded

By HOWARD TAUBMAN
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 4—A production of a new English version of Mozart's "La Clemenza di Tito," the main effort this season of the Berkshire Music Center's opera department, was presented tonight in Tanglewood's theatre-concert hall. It was Tanglewood's claim that this was the American première of Mozart's opera, and no doubt the claim will stand up.

Whether it does or not, the important thing is that once again Tanglewood has ventured where others cannot afford to tread. This Mozart opera is not easy to put on, and it is certainly not easy to make viable for a modern public. But students and any one else who loves Mozart will be grateful for a chance to make the acquaintance of this work on the stage.

Tonight's production of "Titus," title of the revised and translated version by Boris Goldovsky, head of the Center's opera department, and Sarah Caldwell, was further proof of what the scholars have long contended—that this is fundamentally a weak piece.

And why should it not have been? Mozart wrote it in the last year of his life, already a tired, if not a sick, man. He was much more interested in "The Magic Flute," but here was yet another chance to please the ruling powers and to attain that desired goal—a court appointment of some importance. The story, alas, was hastily selected, and Metastasio's text was in the outworn, classic tradition of opera seria.

Flash of Mozart Genius

Troubled and irked as he must have been by this libretto, he could not bring it to life. But here and there the flashing genius at the sum of its knowledge is revealed once more. There are several concerted numbers that belong with his fine ones, and one or two arias that would grace any of his operas.

Mr. Goldovsky and Miss Caldwell have done the best that they could with the story, but it is trifling, and occasionally it is so simple-minded that even a Hollywood B picture would be ashamed of it. But opera seria was never meant to stand on story. The array of arias and concerted numbers provided its essence, and perhaps it would be best if this opera were done in straight concert form.

The Tanglewood production has its merits, especially its experimentation with projected sets. Using a device designed by Charles Elson, there are projected backdrops that are remarkable for their depth and atmosphere. The system has shortcomings, but these certainly can be ironed out. Opera houses would be well advised to look into the technique; it can be the saving of thousands of dollars.

Like all of Mozart's music, the vocal numbers of "Titus" were written for singers who had techniques hard to come by these days. Surely the most difficult role is that of Vitellia, which demands a dramatic soprano with tones that sink deep into the contralto register. Tanglewood was fortunate to find Irene Jordan to sing the part.

Overcomes Knotty Problems

Miss Jordan, who was at the Metropolitan Opera as a mezzo-soprano, has made the transition to dramatic soprano with considerable aplomb. Her singing had fire and a touch of grandeur tonight. The role itself is not ingratiating; it reminds one of the Queen of the Night and Elvira, but for the singer the problems remain just as knotty. Miss Jordan surmounted them admirably.

Good work and fresh voices were revealed by the other young singers—Lloyd Oostenbrug, Sarah Jane Fleming, Shirley Winston, Jacqueline Langee, Richard Sharretts, Arthur Schoep and Robert Mesrobian. Not every one had a command of the Mozartian style, but standards of a major theatre should not be required here.

Mr. Goldovsky was his own stage director, and he had the assistance of an able staff. The chorus and orchestra were also from the Tanglewood enrollment. The opera department deserves an A for effort.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 5 - 1952

Presentation of 'Titus' Excels at Music Center

Opera Department Passes New Milestone at Tanglewood; Shirley Winston Outstanding

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Tanglewood, Aug. 4—There have been many fine, seldom-heard operas given by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center. We can think of "Peter Grimes," "Albert Herring," "The Turk in Italy" and many others, but tonight's performance of Mozart's "Titus" quite surpassed anything we have [illegible] from the department.

Pledges Effort

As Boris Goldovsky [illegible] tonight the Berkshire Center [illegible] the place and the opportunity for musicians to make the kind of music they wish, and he expressed the fact that probably nowhere else in the world are such opportunities available. And he paid tribute to the founding genius of the center, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, and pledged that every effort would always be made to fulfill his visions.

"Titus" had been translated by Mr. Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell into understandable, singable English and it is to the credit of the entire cast that, whether in dialog or song, the majority of them enunciated with the utmost clarity. Through the use of the G. K. P. projection system, it was possible to endow the stage [illegible] with the air of great spa- [illegible] particularly the throne [illegible] palace and a secret [illegible] chamber. Light projection was responsible for effects never before realized on the theater-shed stage and the result was arresting. The added scenery was well in the period of the opera while the costumes were handsome in color and correct.

Best Performance

While the cast was, on the whole, admirable, the "Sextus" of Shirley Winston was head and shoulders above the other characterizations. Vocally it was superb, visually it was effective and histrionically it was well conceived and directly communicated. Miss Winston has a voice of beautiful quality, wide range and she uses it with telling effect, yet never loses naturalness.

Charles Matheson, who was to sing "Titus," was indisposed and his place was taken by Lloyd Oostenbrug, who will sing the role tomorrow night. Mr. Oostenbrug was dignified, stage wise and competent. His voice was not always equal to the Mozartian demands but for the most part he was able to give credence to the role. Irene Jordan sang the taxing role of Vitellia, daughter of Titus. Miss Jordan has extended a naturally fine, large contralto voice in order to encompass soprano roles. The quality of her soprano is not equal to the quality of her contralto. She has a dramatic temperament and her arias reminiscent of Donna Anna in "Don Giovanni" were forcefully, if not beautifully, sung.

Another fine voice and flair for the stage was noted in the work of Jacqueline Langee who sang the role of "Annius." Miss Langee is also beautiful to look at. Richard Sharetts, who has been busy this season here sang the role of "Publius" with dignity and resonant tones. Sarah Jane Fleming revealed her fine voice and loveliness in the role of "Servilia."

Old Question Posed

The plot of the opera, as worked out by Mr. Goldovsky and Miss Caldwell, deals with the uprising against the Emperor Titus and the burning of Rome. This latter was effectively shown through means of the projector. Fundamentally the story is the old, old question whether evil must always be met with force and violence, or can it be met with compassion and kindness.

"Titus" is a difficult, old-fashioned opera. Indeed, it was old fashioned when produced in 1791 for the opera Seria, made up almost entirely of solos and ensembles, with male sopranos taking many roles, had almost vanished due to the lack of male sopranos.

"Titus" will be played tomorrow night. The performance tonight will most certainly go down in the history of the opera department and of the Berkshire Center as a historic occasion for this was probably the first performance in this country.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 5 - 1952

Tanglewood

The Berkshire Festival

* * *

By Jay S. Harrison

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 4.—The opera department of Tanglewood's Berkshire Music Center tonight presented Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart's "Titus" in what may very well be its first complete American performance. Composed in 1791, the year of Mozart's death, the work, entitled in the original Italian "La Clemenza di Tito," was written on commission for coronation of Joseph II as King of Bohemia and completed in a scant eighteen days.

The libretto of the opera, based on Caterino Mazzola on a text by Pietro Metastasio, concerns itself with a conspiracy against the life and throne of the Roman Emperor Titus. Vitellia, daughter of a king, has convinced the noble Sextus to aid her in a plan to assassinate Titus and set the city afire. Thereupon Rome is burned, though the assassination plot miscarries, and Titus in a rage calls upon his former friend Sextus to account for his deeds. Vitellia, meanwhile, feeling the pangs of remorse, confesses her guilt to Titus in the hope of saving Sextus, and, owing to the clemency of Titus, all is forgiven.

"Titus" was performed in an English-language version prepared by Sarah Caldwell and the conductor of the opera, Boris Goldovsky, who is also head of the Berkshire Music Center's opera department.

All of Mozart's music was left intact and presented in its original order with the exception of the chorus "Ah, Grazie si Rendano," which was transplanted to the final scene. The scenery for the production was designed by Charles Elson and utilized a new light projection machine, constructed by Paul Planner, making possible any number of unusual scenic effects. Costumes were designed by Leo Van Witsen and the work was staged by Boris Goldovsky.

The opera, which was heard in Tanglewood's theater-concert hall, will be repeated tomorrow night. Tonight's cast included Charles Matheson, Irene Jordan, Sarah Fleming, Shirley Winston, Jacqueline Langee and Richard Sharretts.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE

AUG 6 1952

Berkshire Festival Has Many Programs On This Week End

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox—Music will be nearly continuous at Tanglewood this week end. Included in the opening program Thursday night of the final Berkshire Festival series by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, will be the Short Symphony, for which Howard Swanson won the 1951 prize of the New York Music Critics Circle as the best orchestral work performed in that period in the city. On the same program, Artur Rubinstein, famous pianist, will make his first appearance at Tanglewood as soloist in Brahms' Second Piano Concerto. Mr. Swanson will be in the audience.

Leonard Berstein will take the podium Saturday night for a memorial concert to Serge Koussevitzky, his teacher, who conducted the Boston orchestra for 25 years and founded and directed the Berkshire Music Center until his death in June, 1951. The program will include the concerto in D major for stringed instruments by C. P. E. Bach; Symphony No. 5 by Jean Sibelius, Finnish composer whose music he frequently played.

For friends of the Berkshire Music Center, "Trouble in Tahiti" by Leonard Bernstein will have its second and third performances Friday night. Its first was at Brandeis university in the spring. Its music revised and libretto rewritten since its premiere, the opera is a satire on suburban life. A movie titled, "Trouble in Tahiti" proves the turning point in the difficulties of a young couple. The composer describes it as "an experiment in simplicity."

Saturday afternoon at 2.30, Thor Johnson, the first student ever to enroll at the Berkshire Music Center in 1940, now conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony orchestra, will be guest conductor for a part of the final concert by the student orchestra, taking the baton for Bartok's "Concerto for Orcrestra."

At 4.30 Saturday the small choir will sing and Sunday morning at 10 the chamber music group will give its last concert of the season. As usual Saturday morning at 10 the Boston Symphony orchestra rehearsal will be open to the public for the benefit of the pension fund.

Mr. Munch and the orchestra will close the Festival's fifteenth season Sunday afternoon with "The Requiem" of Berlioz, with chorus prepared by Hugh Ross and Andrew McKinley as tenor soloist. Tickets are on sale at the box office for seats in the shed. General admission will be sold before the concerts for listening from the lawn.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

AUG 6 - 1952

Tanglewood Presents First U.S. Production of 'Titus'

By D. E. RITZ

Mozart's "Titus" or "La Clemenza di Tito" was the major offering of the Berkshire Music Center opera department at Tanglewood this season. Boris Goldovsky served as conductor and stage director for the presentations given Monday and last evening with two different casts from the student body. The presentation is considered probably the first production of this work in the United States.

* * *

AFTER HEARING and seeing the Tanglewood performance on Monday one wondered why the opera should remain in the seldom performed category. Its appeal is amazing and the music is of Mozart's best period. Undoubtedly the revision and translation into English by Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell has done much to modernize the text and spoken dialogue has been substituted for the recitatives of the original.

The exceptionally fine scenery was designed by Charles Elson and used a new light projection machine designed by Paul Planner most effectively. Included among the effects were subtle changes in the sky coloring during the scenes and a most realistic fire scene during the burning of Rome, which climaxes the first act.

* * *

STUDENT PERFORMERS on opening night were Lloyd Oostenbrug as Titus Vespasianus, Emperor of Rome; Irene Jordan as the scheming daughter of the emperor Vitellius; Sarah Jane Fleming as Servilia; Shirley Winston as Sextus; Jacqueline Langee as Annius; Richard Sharretts as Publius, senator and advisor of Titus; Arthur Schoep and Robert Mesrobian as conspirators against Titus. A student orchestra furnished the accompaniment.

It is a pleasure to have an opportunity to hear an opera performed without the fanfare of "big names" and to hear young voices with real possibilities give their best to a work of the magnitude of the Mozart opera. Casting was excellent and character portrayals were vividly presented. Oostenbrug, Miss Jordan and Miss Winston were outstanding in their roles.

* * *

IN A BRIEF pre-opening speech Goldovsky referred to the Tanglewood theater and the opera department as one of the few places where musicians can achieve "their heart's desire." He commented that even in Mozart's day male sopranos were no longer available and that even for "Titus'" first performance the roles of Sextus and Annius were sung by women.

But if the opera is "dated" we would suggest that a date can be an [illegible] — after all Stradivari violins are definitely dated but we've not heard of anyone refusing to use one on that account.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 6 - 1952

SEVEN RETIRING MUSICIANS FETED AT TANGLEWOOD

Weather Conditions of 15 Years Ago Are Repeated During Program

Lenox, Aug. 5—History repeated itself at Tanglewood after 15 years this afternoon. And again the momentous occasion was being staged in a tent when the rains came. Seven retiring member of the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra were being toasted by their fellow musicians in the tent-covered cafeteria. No sooner had the orchestra taken its place for the feast when lightning flashed across the skies and thunder echoed over Lake Mahkeenac and amongst the stately pines of Tanglewood.

Once more a conductor of the symphony unit found himself combating the elements, for Dr. Charles Munch was to give the address. On the last memorable occasion the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky led these same musicians in a Wagner concert that successfully battled the elements. It was from that hectic evening underneath a leaking circus tent that grew the project of building the huge music shed, the only one of its kind in the world.

The words of esteem and farewell had hardly fallen on the ears of the guests of honor today when nature added its own applause with tremendous thunder claps that made memories march back to that night in 1937.

But today, as George Judd so ably put it the skies wept too at this farewell party as the torrential downpour continued and came through the tent as if to freshen the salads on the banquet tables.

With rain drops dripping down his broad shoulders, Dr. Munch delivered his address and presented gold watches to the retiring musicians in behalf of the orchestra. Receiving the token of friendship were George Laurent, Henry Greenberg, Simon Sternberg, Lucien Hansoe, Gaston Elcus, Max Polster and Doaz Piller.

Words of praise and appreciation for the years of service rendered by these men were given by Dr. Lewis Perry of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony.

As a surprise feature, Leslie Rogers, the librarian, was presented a watch, too, in recognition of his 40 years of service to the musicians both here and at Symphony Hall in Boston.

Mr. Judd, manager of the orchestratra, suggested that possibly this cloudburst might bring about the start of a fund to erect a permanent dining hall on the grounds. Jokingly, he stated that such a project would be a nice memorial to the orchestra members.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 6 - 1952

Tanglewood

The Berkshire Festival

* * *

By Jay S. Harrison

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 5.—About Mozart's opera "Titus"—which was presented last night by the Berkshire Music Center of Tanglewood—there is general agreement on one point: it is not a successful work. And even in a performance which far exceeded expectations, the opera failed to create the impression usually associated with the compositions of the Salzburg master.

To account for "Titus'" failure through the decades one must look to its models. "Titus" is an opera seria and the opera seria was a form which only the Baroque period was able to take seriously. It is a formal and frigid display piece leaning heavily on opulent costumery, actions of valor and pyrotechnical singing. Provided with these amenities, it is no doubt an entirely legitimate musical spectacle. But without them it falters dramatically, turns bizarre vocally and in general is punctured by its own pompousness. Moreover, one thing is fatal to it—awkwardness of presentation; and since the Tanglewood students, for all their splendid training and noteworthy intentions, are not yet finished singing actors, there were moments last night in which "Titus" fell flat on its face.

The music also is far below Mozart's par, though even below-par Mozart is infinitely superior to run-of-the-mill eighteenth-century musical endeavor. Its vocal lines are charming, gracious and reveal, in the second act trio "Se a volto," remarkable dramatic power. But if one is to compare the work with the composer's "Magic Flute," written in 1791, at the same time as "Titus," the comparison leaves "Titus" far, far behind. The music is simple, gentle, plain and, withal, rather thin in substance. Essentially, it reverts to a style cultivated by Mozart in his earliest years—years which had not yet seen "Figaro," "Don Giovanni," "Cosi fan Tutte" and the host of symphonic works which are music's glory. Thus, appearing, as it did, in the last year of the composer's life, "La Clemenza di Tito" came as a disappointment.

There is yet another weakness in "Titus." The drama, dealing with a vigorous plot to overthrow Rome and kill its emperor, is a tale of deeds darkly told. Through its course there is constant treachery and regal skulduggery along with the flailing of arms and the spouting of noble sentiments. And onto this scene Mozart blithely wanders, unrolling music of such grace and humor that it scarcely provides the proper atmosphere for so grisly a drama. Still—and for this we may give thanks—it is Mozart. And since it is Mozart, it is music.

The presentation, in an English-language version that substituted spoken dialogue for the original secco recitatives, was staged and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. The cast, whose members sang royally, included Lloyd Oostenbrug, Irene Jordan, Sarah Jane Fleming, Shirley Winston, Jacqueline Langee and Richard Sharretts; and if they were not able to hold up a work whose props are nowhere sturdy, all the blame does not rest with them.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

AUG 5 - 1952

Light Projection Distinguishes Revival of Mozart Opera, 'Titus'

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS
BUFFALO EVENING NEWS Music Critic

TANGLEWOOD, Mass., Aug. 5.—The revival of an opera—long considered a museum piece—in a technical production that represents possibly the most important experiment in this country in the use of light projection elicited the enthusiastic approval Monday evening of a capacity audience in the theater-concert hall at the Berkshire Music Center.

The opera was Mozart's "Titus" (La Clemenza di Tito), never before, so far as known, produced in this country. The performers were members of the center's opera department under Boris Goldovsky. Assisting were students in the orchestral and choral departments.

Producers, Designers on Hand

Both in its visual and aural aspects it was an unusual evening. So keen had been the interest in the production that three weeks ago all seats for the initial performance and for the second and final presentation this evening had been reserved.

Attracted by the announcement about the use of light projection, many leading theater producers and designers were present.

Because the opera calls for unusually complex backgrounds, it was decided to use light projection to obtain effects of visual breadth, heighth and depth.

The projectors which were used provided scenic images 44 feet wide and 32 feet high. In addition, much of the scenery on the forepart of the stage was designed to enhance the illusion of great perspective depth.

Music Meets Standards

Charles Elson designed the scenery. The light-projection machine, designed by Paul Planner, made possible several unusual effects, notably the burning of Rome which climaxes the first act.

Musically the performance was worthy of the center's best standards. The soloists, chorus and orchestra collaborated with the smoothness of a professional performance without sacrificing the tension that makes for an engrossing presentation.

Outstanding among the soloists was Lloyd Oostenbrug as Titus. Mr. Oostenbrug, scheduled to sing this evening, was obliged to take the première performance because Charles Matheson had suffered an attack of laryngitis. Irene Jordan was an intense Vitellia, [illegible] Sharretts an excellent [illegible]

Opera Written in 19 Days

The two young women [illegible] Sextus and Annius—Shirley Winston and Jacqueline Langee—distinguished themselves. Both have lovely voices and gave sincerely felt interpretations.

Sarah Jane Fleming's sweet voice was charming for Servilia.

"Titus," commissioned for the crowning of Leopold II as king of Bohemia, was written in 19 days in August 1781, a scant five months before Mozart's death. Mozart, besides being ill, was under pressure to finish "The Magic Flute" and fulfill that other and to him more ominous commission, the Requiem.

The original text by Metastasio was a somewhat stiff and old dramatization of an episode from Roman history concerning a conspiracy against the life and throne of Roman Emperor Titus.

Translation Excellent

The story emphasizes the emperor's magnificent and, as suggested by the Mozart scholar Prof. Edward Dent, "Unfailing and therefore, rather monotonous clemency."

For the Berkshire Center production, Mr. Goldovsky and his assistant, Sarah Caldwell, revised and translated the text into English—an excellent job, by the way, which added materially to the enjoyment of the listeners.

Mr. Goldovsky and Miss Caldwell substituted spoken dialogue for the secco recitatives. This was a master stroke, for it gave life and vitality to a static libretto.

Originality Possible Here

Mozart's music, which [illegible] two great arias, several delightful duets and trios and a magnificent finale to Act 1, was left without change and the arias and ensemble pieces were performed in their original order, with one exception—a chorus from the second act was placed so as to be a part of the final scene.

The originality, freshness and youthful ardor of the performance, together with the excellence of the technical details [illegible] proved conclusively the [illegible] the opening remarks by Mr. Goldovsky:

"Here in the Berkshire [illegible] Center is the [illegible] country, and perhaps [illegible] where special [illegible] in music just bec[illegible] would like to do [illegible] and the joy and [illegible] them."

EW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

AUG 6 - 1952

rely Staged illfully Don

y DONALD H. WHITE
ial Standard-Times Correspond

NOX, Aug. 6 — Moz
"Titus" (La Clemenz
was presented last anglewood, the Berk
Center, in what only the second per ever offered in Americ a translation by Boris ky and Sarah Caldwell
is a version of ancien history as chronicled b sio, court poet to Le
ing of Bohemia, for nation the work was
d in 1791.

e plot is a combinati
y diverse legends and
s concerning a cons
ng the reign of Titus Ve
. Introducing the pe
, Boris Goldovsky, ope
or at Tanglewood, paid
ute to the spirit and
of the late Serge Kous
whose dream the festiva

Difficult to Perform

This is a difficult work n," Mr. Goldovsky note is old-fashioned but sti r us today. The central to resist evil by for ence or by mercy an sion, is an eternal thin

he casting of leading
e more difficult by t
ian use of mezzo-sopr
e Romans and the ex
demands which the rano part makes on retive singer who und

n important inovatio
in this opera of film s to depict such diver
unds as the pillars a the Roman Capitol, a ean catacomb and the
the imperial palace
red by the able stage
Charles Elson, and
e, Paul Planer, the s were considered th
alded experiment in
m yet conducted in
Monday night, when formance of the op
ce, the sequence of uction by fire did me off. It reminds o ficulties Wagner ha st ring cycle perform yreuth in the 1870s.

Improvement No

However, although th
nic scheme that was not realize its ition last night, it w

SPRIN

AUG

EASON
ITS LAS
AT TAN

learly Continu
uled for Wee
Tom

Lenox, Aug. 6
ly continuous week end. Incl program tomorr
Berkshire Festiv
ton Symphony
Munch conducti
Symphony," fo
Swanson won th
New York Music
best orchestral
that period in th
program, Artur
pianist, will ma
ance at Tangle
"Brahms' Seco
Mr. Swanson wi
Leonard Bern
podium Saturda
morial concert
ky, his teacher

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE

AUG 6 1952

Berkshire Festival Has Many Programs On This Week End

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox—Music will be nearly continuous at Tanglewood this week end. Included in the opening program Thursday night of the final Berkshire Festival series by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, will be the Short Symphony, for which Howard Swanson won the 1951 prize of the New York Music Critics Circle as the best orchestral work performed in that period in the city. On the same program, Artur Rubinstein, famous pianist, will make his first appearance at Tanglewood as soloist in Brahms' Second Piano Concerto. Mr. Swanson will be in the audience.

Leonard Berstein will take the podium Saturday night for a memorial concert to Serge Koussevitzky, his teacher, who conducted the Boston orchestra for 25 years and founded and directed the Berkshire Music Center until his death in June, 1951. The program will include the concerto in D major for stringed instruments by C. P. E. Bach; Symphony No. 5 by Jean Sibelius, Finnish composer whose music he frequently played.

For friends of the Berkshire Music Center, "Trouble in Tahiti" by Leonard Bernstein will have its second and third performances Friday night. Its first was at Brandeis university in the spring. Its music revised and libretto rewritten since its premiere, the opera is a satire on suburban life. A movie titled, "Trouble in Tahiti" proves the turning point in the difficulties of a young couple. The composer describes it as "an experiment in simplicity."

Saturday afternoon at 2.30, Thor Johnson, the first student ever to enroll at the Berkshire Music Center in 1940, now conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony orchestra, will be guest conductor for a part of the final concert by the student orchestra, taking the baton for Bartok's "Concerto for Orcrestra."

At 4.30 Saturday the small choir will sing and Sunday morning at 10 the chamber music group will give its last concert of the season. As usual Saturday morning at 10 the Boston Symphony orchestra rehearsal will be open to the public for the benefit of the pension fund.

Mr. Munch and the orchestra will close the Festival's fifteenth season Sunday afternoon with "The Requiem" of Berlioz, with chorus prepared by Hugh Ross and Andrew McKinley as tenor soloist. Tickets are on sale at the box office for seats in the shed. General admission will be sold before the concerts for listening from the lawn.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

AUG 6 - 1952

Tanglewood Presents First U.S. Production of 'Titus'

By D. E. RITZ

Mozart's "Titus" or "La Clemenza di Tito" was the major offering of the Berkshire Music Center opera department at Tanglewood this season. Boris Goldovsky served as conductor and stage director for the presentations given Monday and last evening with two different casts from the student body. The presentation is considered probably the first production of this work in the United States.

* * *

AFTER HEARING and seeing the Tanglewood performance on Monday one wondered why the opera should remain in the seldom performed category. Its appeal is amazing and the music is of Mozart's best period. Undoubtedly the revision and translation into English by Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell has done much to modernize the text and spoken dialogue has been substituted for the recitatives of the original.

The exceptionally fine scenery was designed by Charles Elson and used a new light projection machine designed by Paul Planner most effectively. Included among the effects were subtle changes in the sky coloring during the scenes and a most realistic fire scene during the burning of Rome, which climaxes the first act.

* * *

STUDENT PERFORMERS on opening night were Lloyd Oostenbrug as Titus Vespasianus, Emperor of Rome; Irene Jordan as the scheming daughter of the emperor Vitellius; Sarah Jane Fleming as Servilia; Shirley Winston as Sextus; Jacqueline Langee as Annius; Richard Sharretts as Publius, senator and advisor of Titus; Arthur Schoep and Robert Mesrobian as conspirators against Titus. A student orchestra furnished the accompaniment.

It is a pleasure to have an opportunity to hear an opera performed without the fanfare of "big names" and to hear young voices with real possibilities give their best to a work of the magnitude of the Mozart opera. Casting was excellent and character portrayals were vividly presented. Oostenbrug, Miss Jordan and Miss Winston were outstanding in their roles.

* * *

IN A BRIEF pre-opening speech Goldovsky referred to the Tanglewood theater and the opera department as one of the few places where musicians can achieve "their heart's desire." He commented that even in Mozart's day male sopranos were no longer available and that even for "Titus'" first performance the roles of Sextus and Annius were sung by women.

But if the opera is "dated" we would suggest that a date can be an asset — after all Stradivari violins are definitely dated but we've not heard of anyone refusing to use one on that account.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 6 - 1952

SEVEN RETIRING MUSICIANS FETED AT TANGLEWOOD

Weather Conditions of 15 Years Ago Are Repeated During Program

Lenox, Aug. 5—History repeated itself at Tanglewood after 15 years this afternoon. And again the momentous occasion was being staged in a tent when the rains came. Seven retiring member of the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra were being toasted by their fellow musicians in the tent-covered cafeteria. No sooner had the orchestra taken its place for the feast when lightning flashed across the skies and thunder echoed over Lake Mahkeenac and amongst the stately pines of Tanglewood.

Once more a conductor of the symphony unit found himself combating the elements, for Dr. Charles Munch was to give the address. On the last memorable occasion the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky led these same musicians in a Wagner concert that successfully battled the elements. It was from that hectic evening underneath a leaking circus tent that grew the project of building the huge music shed, the only one of its kind in the world.

The words of esteem and farewell had hardly fallen on the ears of the guests of honor today when nature added its own applause with tremendous thunder claps that made memories march back to that night in 1937.

But today, as George Judd so ably put it the skies wept too at this farewell party as the torrential downpour continued and came through the tent as if to freshen the salads on the banquet tables.

With rain drops dripping down his broad shoulders, Dr. Munch delivered his address and presented gold watches to the retiring musicians in behalf of the orchestra. Receiving the token of friendship were George Laurent, Henry Greenberg, Simon Sternberg, Lucien Hansoe, Gaston Elcus, Max Polster and Doaz Piller.

Words of praise and appreciation for the years of service rendered by these men were given by Dr. Lewis Perry of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony.

As a surprise feature, Leslie Rogers, the librarian, was presented a watch, too, in recognition of his 40 years of service to the musicians both here and at Symphony Hall in Boston.

Mr. Judd, manager of the orchestratra, suggested that possibly this cloudburst might bring about the start of a fund to erect a permanet dining hall on the grounds. Jokingly, he stated that such a project would be a nice memorial to the orchestra members.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 6 - 1952

Tanglewood

The Berkshire Festival

* * *

By Jay S. Harrison

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 5.—About Mozart's opera "Titus"—which was presented last night by the Berkshire Music Center of Tanglewood—there is general agreement on one point: it is not a successful work. And even in a performance which far exceeded expectations, the opera failed to create the impression usually associated with the compositions of the Salzburg master.

To account for "Titus'" failure through the decades one must look to its models. "Titus" is an opera seria and the opera seria was a form which only the Baroque period was able to take seriously. It is a formal and frigid display piece leaning heavily on opulent costumery, actions of valor and pyrotechnical singing. Provided with these amenities, it is no doubt an entirely legitimate musical spectacle. But without them it falters dramatically, turns bizarre vocally and in general is punctured by its own pompousness. Moreover, one thing is fatal to it—awkwardness of presentation; and since the Tanglewood students, for all their splendid training and noteworthy intentions, are not yet finished singing actors, there were moments last night in which "Titus" fell flat on its face.

The music also is far below Mozart's par, though even below-par Mozart is infinitely superior to run-of-the-mill eighteenth-century musical endeavor. Its vocal lines are charming, gracious and reveal, in the second act trio "Se a volto," remarkable dramatic power. But if one is to compare the work with the composer's "Magic Flute," written in 1791, at the same time as "Titus," the comparison leaves "Titus" far, far behind. The music is simple, gentle, plain and, withal, rather thin in substance. Essentially, it reverts to a style cultivated by Mozart in his earliest years—years which had not yet seen "Figaro," "Don Giovanni," "Cosi fan Tutte" and the host of symphonic works which are music's glory. Thus, appearing, as it did, in the last year of the composer's life, "La Clemenza di Tito" came as a disappointment.

There is yet another weakness in "Titus." The drama, dealing with a vigorous plot to overthrow Rome and kill its emperor, is a tale of deeds darkly told. Through its course there is constant treachery and regal skulduggery along with the flailing of arms and the spouting of noble sentiments. And onto this scene Mozart blithely wanders, unrolling music of such grace and humor that it scarcely provides the proper atmosphere for so grisly a drama. Still—and for this we may give thanks—it is Mozart. And since it is Mozart, it is music.

The presentation, in an English-language version that substituted spoken dialogue for the original secco recitatives, was staged and conducted by Boris Goldovsky. The cast, whose members sang royally, included Lloyd Oostenbrug, Irene Jordan, Sarah Jane Fleming, Shirley Winston, Jacqueline Langee and Richard Sharretts; and if they were not able to hold up a work whose props are nowhere sturdy, all the blame does not rest with them.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
NEWS

AUG 5 - 1952

Light Projection Distinguishes Revival of Mozart Opera, 'Titus'

By THEODOLINDA C. BORIS
BUFFALO EVENING NEWS Music Critic

TANGLEWOOD, Mass., Aug. 5.—The revival of an opera—long considered a museum piece—in a technical production that represents possibly the most important experiment in this country in the use of light projection elicited the enthusiastic approval Monday evening of a capacity audience in the theater-concert hall at the Berkshire Music Center.

The opera was Mozart's "Titus" (La Clemenza di Tito), never before, so far as known, produced in this country. The performers were members of the center's opera department under Boris Goldovsky. Assisting were students in the orchestral and choral departments.

Producers, Designers on Hand

Both in its visual and aural aspects it was an unusual evening. So keen had been the interest in the production that three weeks ago all seats for the initial performance and for the second and final presentation this evening had been reserved.

Attracted by the announcement about the use of light projection, many leading theater producers and designers were present.

Because the opera calls for unusually complex backgrounds, it was decided to use light projection to obtain effects of visual breadth, heighth and depth.

The projectors which were used provided scenic images 44 feet wide and 32 feet high. In addition, much of the scenery on the forepart of the stage was designed to enhance the illusion of great perspective depth.

Music Meets Standards

Charles Elson designed the scenery. The light-projection machine, designed by Paul Planner, made possible several unusual effects, notably the burning of Rome which climaxes the first act.

Musically, the performance was worthy of the center's past standards. The soloists, chorus and orchestra collaborated with the smoothness of a professional performance without sacrificing the tension that makes for an engrossing presentation.

Outstanding among the soloists was Lloyd Oostenbrug as Titus. Mr. Oostenbrug, scheduled to sing this evening, was obliged to take the premiere performance because Charles Matheson had suffered an attack of laryngitis. Irene Jordan was an intense Vitellia. Richard Sharretts an excellent Publius.

Opera Written in 19 Days

The two young women who sang Sextus and Annius—Shirley Winston and Jacqueline Langee—distinguished themselves. Both have lovely voices and gave sincerely felt interpretations.

Sarah Jane Fleming's sweet voice was charming for Servilia.

"Titus," commissioned for the crowning of Leopold II as king of Bohemia, was written in 19 days in August 1781, a scant five months before Mozart's death. Mozart, besides being ill, was under pressure to finish "The Magic Flute" and fulfill that other, and to him more ominous commission, the Requiem.

The original text by Metastasio was a somewhat stiff and old dramatization of an episode from Roman history concerning a conspiracy against the life and throne of Roman Emperor Titus.

Translation Excellent

The story emphasizes the emperor's magnificent and, as suggested by the Mozart scholar Prof. Edward Dent, "Unfailing and therefore, rather monotonous clemency."

For the Berkshire Center production, Mr. Goldovsky and his assistant, Sarah Caldwell, revised and translated the text into English—an excellent job, by the way, which added materially to the enjoyment of the listeners.

Mr. Goldovsky and Miss Caldwell substituted spoken dialogue for the secco recitatives. This was another master stroke, for it gave life and vitality to a static libretto.

Originality Possible Here

Mozart's music, which contains two great arias, several delightful duets and trios and a magnificent finale to Act 1, was left without change and the arias and ensemble pieces were performed in their original order, with one exception—a chorus from the second act was placed so as to be a part of the final scene.

The originality, freshness and youthful ardor of the performance together with the excellence of the technical details of production proved conclusively the [illegible] the opening remarks by Mr. Goldovsky:

"Here in the Berkshire Music Center is the one place in this country, and perhaps in the world, where special things can be done in music just because musicians would like to do them for the [illegible] and the joy and the zest of doing them."

EW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

AUG 6 - 1952

rely Staged
illfully Don

y DONALD H. WHITE
al Standard-Times Correspond

NOX, Aug. 6 — Moz
"Titus" (La Clemenz
was presented last
anglewood, the Berk
ic Center, in what only the second per ever offered in Americ a translation by Boris
ky and Sarah Caldwell
is a version of ancien history as chronicled by sio, court poet to Le
ing of Bohemia, for nation the work was
d in 1791.

e plot is a combinati
y diverse legends and
s concerning a cons
g the reign of Titus Ve
. Introducing the pe
, Boris Goldovsky, ope
or at Tanglewood, paid
ute to the spirit and
of the late Serge Kous
whose dream the festiva

Difficult to Perform

This is a difficult work
," Mr. Goldovsky note
is old-fashioned but sti or us today. The central to resist evil by fo
ence or by mercy an sion, is an eternal thing

he casting of leading
e more difficult by t
ian use of mezzo-sopr
e Romans and the ex
y demands which the rano part makes on retive singer who und

n important inovatio
in this opera of film
s to depict such diver
unds as the pillars a he Roman Capitol, a
ean catacomb and the
the imperial palace
red by the able stage
Charles Elson, and
e, Paul Planer, the
s were considered t
alded experiment in
m yet conducted in
Monday night, when rformance of the op
ce, the sequence of uction by fire did ne off. It reminds o fficulties Wagner ha t ring cycle perform
yreuth in the 1870s.

Improvement No

However, although th
enic scheme that was d not realize its uition last night, it w

SPRIN

AUG

SEASON
ITS LAS AT TAN

learly Continu
uled for Wee
Tom

Lenox, Aug. 6
ly continuous week end. Inclu program tomorro
Berkshire Festiv
ton Symphony
Munch conductin
Symphony," fo
Swanson won th
New York Music
best orchestral
that period in th
program, Artur
pianist, will ma
ance at Tangle
"Brahms' Secon
Mr. Swanson wi
Leonard Bern
podium Saturda
morial concert
ky, his teacher

…tinguishes …pera, 'Titus'

…lly, the performance was …f the center's past stan… …e soloists, chorus and or… …collaborated with the …ss of a professional per… …without sacrificing the …hat makes for an engross… …ntation.

…nding among the soloist… …yd Oostenbrug as Titus …enbrug, scheduled to sing …ing, was obliged to take …iere performance because …Matheson had suffered an … laryngitis. Irene Jordan … intense Vitellia, Richard … an excellent Publius.

…ritten in 19 Days

…o young women who sang …nd Annius—Shirley Win… … Jacqueline Langee—dis… …d themselves. Both have …ices and gave sincerely …pretations.

…ane Fleming's sweet voice …ming for Servilia.

…" commissioned for the … of Leopold II as king of … was written in 19 days in …781, a scant five months …ozart's death. Mozart, be… …g ill, was under pressure … "The Magic Flute" and …t other, and to him more …commission, the Requiem. …iginal text by Metastasio …omewhat stiff and cold …tion of an episode from …istory concerning a con… …gainst the life and throne … Emperor Titus.

…on Excellent

…ory emphasizes the em… …magnificent and, as sug… … the Mozart scholar, Prof. … Dent, "Unfailing, and … rather monotonous clem…

… Berkshire Center produc… … Goldovsky and his assist… …h Caldwell, revised and … the text into English— …at job, by the way, which …terially to the enjoyment …teners.

…ldovsky and Miss Caldwell …d spoken dialogue for the …tatives. This was another …roke, for it gave life and …o a static libretto.

…y Possible Here

…'s music, which contains …t arias, several delightful …l trios and a magnificent … Act 1, was left without …nd the arias and ensem… …s were performed in their …order, with one exception …s from the second act was … as to be a part of the …ne.

…riginality, freshness and …ardor of the performance, … with the excellence of …ical details of production, …onclusively the truth of …ing remarks by Mr. Gol…

… in the Berkshire Music …s the one place in this …and perhaps in the world, …ecial things can be done … just because musicians …e to do them for the fun …joy and the zest of doing

---

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

AUG 6 1952

Rarely Staged Mozart Opera Skillfully Done at Tanglewood

By DONALD H. WHITE
Standard-Times Correspondent

[illegible] night … Berkshire … was prob… [illegible]

[illegible] high … [illegible] was

Difficult to Perform

[illegible] It's … [illegible] still time… … central theme, … force, by … com… … eternal …

[illegible] casting of leading roles is … more difficult by the Mo… … of mezzo-sopranos as … Romans and the extraordi… … demands which the leading … part makes on the in… … singer who undertakes …

An important inovation is the … opera of film projec… … to depict such diverse back… grounds as the pillars and dome of the Roman Capitol, a subterranean catacomb and the burning of the imperial palace. Engi… … by the able stage design… … Elson, and his associate Paul Planer, the projections were considered the most heralded experiment in this me… … conducted in America. … night, when the first … of the opera took … sequence of the de… … by fire did not quite … off. It reminds one of the … Wagner had at his … ring cycle performances in Bayreuth in the 1870s.

Improvement Noted

However, although the entire … scheme that was planned … realize its complete … last night, it was a considerable improvement on the first attempt.

Jacqueline Bazinet, taking the leading role of Vitellia, daughter of the late Emperor Vitellius, showed a cogent dramatic sense and vocal tone that was truly fitted to the nobility of a Roman heroine. Her first scene aria praising the empire of Titus was a brilliant performance. Her voice is well suited to these Mozartian parts, written with a high tessitura and the fervor of the greatest French operatic age.

Her crisp, accentuated English diction is proof of a deep feeling for dramatic expression. Of course, all these ingredients for success have been enlarged by her constant dance preparation and performance of a varied repertoire. Miss Bazinet bridges admirably the gap between the dual personalities of Vitellia; one-half of the character is all vanity, conceit, and duplicity while the other is tender and yielding. We heard some phenomenal singing from this performer bearing out the judgment of Rudolf Bing, Metropolitan Opera manager who has predicted that she will become an important American artist on our musical scene.

She exhibits a purposeful calm in the complex ensemble numbers where conflicting emotions are expressed in opera's unique language. Miss Bazinet's voice dominates each trio or quartet in which she appears. We are confident when she returns from Europe after next year's activities there, she will have enlarged her vocal and histrionic technique to proportions which should assure her of an esteemed position in the musical activities of this country.

Singers Praised

Other performers who were outstanding included Shirley Winston, whose fine-voiced Sextus is a rewarding characterization. She has a great deal of difficult, grueling music to sing and she gives a strong, resonant quality to her mezzo-soprano register.

Lloyd Oostenbrug, in the name role, has the figure and facial characteristics of the Romans we see pictured on old coins. His tenor voice, though quite light, is moving in such scenes as his Act 2 aria. Left to himself, the emperor has an opportunity to phrase his warmth of humanity in a masterful aria.

English translation is powerful and quite poetic. It is always difficult to take these obscure, forgotten Italian operas, even when written by Mozart, and give them new life and a rebirth of dramatic import. Goldovsky usually succeeds at this difficult task; the "Titus" performance was living proof that his brilliant, imaginative personality is the guiding force behind the definitive performances that are given here at Tanglewood.

Another fine singer was Jacqueline Langee, as Annius, who plays another of the male parts assigned to a mezzo. She has a strong, warm quality and gave a realistic portrayal of a secondary role which has some fine music, particularly in the duets with Servilia, as sung by Arlene Stone. The bass role of Publius, sung by Richard Sharretts, was a moving, benign characterization which impressed its professionalism upon the ensembles in which he participated.

Costumes Are Brilliant

Leo Van Witsen's costumes are brilliant, colorful, and fully in the style of the Roman period.

Mr. Goldovsky called Mozart the patron saint of Tanglewood during his introductory remarks.

"We are trying to do something to deserve his benevolence," the conductor remarked.

If Mozart could have witnessed this performance, we are sure that he would have smiled his gratitude that there are still some artists and conductors who care enough to resurrect the neglected masterpieces which the great composer scored during the late years of his short life. This opera was worthy of being remembered by Mozart lovers, musicologists and opera followers as the symbol of the eternal trust which great music places in its modern interpretors.

Happy Reunion

– Associated Press Wirephoto

Three-year-old Bobby Mortensen hugs his dog Blackie after the dog returned to his South Bend, Ind., home. Blackie was lost a week ago near Marshall, Mich., more than 10 miles away, while the family was on vacation. Nobody knows how the dog made his way back.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 7 - 1952

Concerts Ending At Tanglewood This Week-End

The fifteenth season of Berkshire Music Festival concerts will conclude at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this week end.

Thursday night at 8:15 o'clock, Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Short Symphony, which won Howard Swanson the New York Music Critics Circle award in 1951; Brahms' Second Piano Concerto, with Arthur Rubenstein making his first appearance at Tanglewood; and Schumann's "Spring" Symphony.

Saturday night at the same hour, Leonard Bernstein will conduct the orchestra in a memorial concert to his teacher, Serge Koussevitzky. The program will include the andante from the Concerto for Strings in D Major, by C. P. E. Bach; Symphony No. 3, by Aaron Copland, friend and associate of the late Dr. Koussevitzky; and the Sibelius Fifth Symphony, a work often performed by Dr. Koussevitzky.

Friends Of The Berkshire Music Center will see Mr. Bernstein's opera, "Trouble In Tahiti," a satire on suburbia, Friday night.

Berlioz's Requiem, with Andrew McKnley as tenor soloist, will conclude the season, Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

AUG 6 - 1952

Irene Jordan wins applause from critics

Birmingham's Irene Jordan has won the high praise of metropolitan critics for her performance last Sunday at the Berkshire Music Festival.

Singing the leading role in Mozart's opera, "Titus," the daughter of Birmingham's Eugene C. Jordan won the following comment of New York Times' Critic Howard Taubman:

"Tanglewood was fortunate to find Irene Jordan to sing the part of Vitellia, which demands a dramatic soprano with tones that sink deep into the contralto register. The role itself is not ingratiating, but Miss Jordan surmounted the knotty problems admirably."

"Miss Jordan, who was at the Metropolitan Opera as a mezzo-soprano, has made the transition to dramatic soprano with considerable aplomb. Her singing had fire and a touch of grandeur."

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

… 6 - 1952

…EASON ENTERS ITS LAST WEEK AT TANGLEWOOD

…early Continuous Music Scheduled for Week End Starting Tomorrow

… Music will be near… … Tanglewood this … in the opening … of the final … by the Boston … Orchestra, Charles … the "Short … Munch Howard … prize of the … Circle as the … performed in … On the same … famous … first appear… … as soloist in … Piano Concerto. … in the audience. … will take the … night for a memorial … Serge Koussevitzky … conducted the Boston Orchestra for 25 years and founded and directed the Berkshire Music Center until his death in June, 1951. The program will include the Concerto in D major for Stringed Instruments by C. P. E. Bach; Symphony No. 3 by Aaron Copland, friend and associate of Dr. Koussevitzky; and Symphony No. 5 by Jean Sibelius, Finnish composer whose music he frequently played.

"Trouble in Tahiti"

For Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, "Trouble in Tahiti" by Leonard Bernstein will have its second and third performances Friday night. Its first was at Brandeis University in the spring. Its music revised and libretto rewritten since its premiere, the opera is a satire on suburban life. A movie titled "Trouble in Tahiti" proves the turning point in the difficulties of a young couple. The composer describes it as "an experiment in simplicity".

Saturday afternoon at 2.30 Thor Johnson, the first student ever to enroll at the Berkshire Music Center in 1940, now conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, will be guest conductor for a part of the final concert by the student orchestra, taking the baton for Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra". The three active students in conducting under Mr. Bernstein, Elyakum Shapira of Israel, Lorin Maazel and Robert Mandell will conduct Brahms' "Tragic Overture", Tschaikowsky's "Romeo and Juliet" and two movements of George Gershwin's Piano Concerto in F respectively.

At 4.30 Saturday the small choir will sing, and Sunday morning at 10 the chamber music group will give their last concert of the season. As usual Saturday morning at 10 the Boston Symphony Orchestra rehearsal will be open to the public for the benefit of the pension fund.

Mr. Munch and the orchestra will close the Festival's 15th season Sunday afternoon with "The Requiem" of Berlioz, with chorus prepared by Hugh Ross and Andrew McKinley as tenor soloist. Tickets are on sale at the box office for seats in the shed. General admission will be sold before the concerts for listening from the lawn.

W YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN

AUG 6 - 1952

Music

A Mozart Premiere Fails to Hit the Mark

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 6.—The opera department of the Berkshire Music Center takes the honors for giving Mozart's last composed opera—"La Clemenza Di Tito"—its American premiere. Given in an English version by Boris Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell which is based on the libretto of Metastasio, the work contained two performances, one on Monday evening, the second last evening.

Both were well attended, he overflow listeners huddled on the outskirts of the Tanglewood Theatre-Concert Hall.

Typical Charm.

The life and the melody of the very idiom of Mozart teem in this opera no less than they do in others. Everywhere, as the student orchestra performed the score, was the typical charm of Mozart. His peculiar invention, his warmth in moments of human tragedy or suffering, and his noble ecstasy in others of joy and jubilation.

The singers here are given no mean opportunities to show their wares. To the contrary, consider first, that two of the principal male roles were written for male sopranos, though—as I understand it—they were not assumed by such even in Mozart's day, but by women. And there is an extremely florid cadenza, so to speak, at the conclusion of an aria by Sextus—one of the two roles referred to, this time Shirley Winston—that would almost put the queen of the night aria from "The Magic Flute" to shame. That it was so very well done by the artist in question is indeed remarkable.

The overture to the opera is itself a gem, beautifully balanced in form and totally expressive. All through, in short, the music is the chief source of pleasure.

Yet, for all the intelligence of the singing by the various young protagonists, the excellence of the costumes and the sets by Leo Van Witsen and Charles Elson, respectively, for all the strong-bodied singing of the chorus, the opera misses fire. Mozart composed it for a special occasion, the coronation, in Prague, of Leopold II as King of Bohemia. Therefore, he could not choose a libretto of slight or comical quality. So he selected this one, which is quite a dud.

The form of opera seria, remembering Gluck, for one, and of which this work is another example, seems to be so congenial to Mozart as did the flighty, mercurial creations that made him a master of masters among opera composers.

Sterling Achievement.

All gratitude is owing to Mr. Goldovsky and his associates for a sterling achievement. And to Lloyd Oostenberg, who sang the name part of Titus, Laurel Leaves for his fine singing. Also to Richard Sharretts, as Publius, the senate adviser of Titus, and to Jacqueline Langee (in a man's role) as Annius.

Nor is the Vitellia rendered by Jacqueline Bazinet to be given less praise than that for the vividness and intensity of her singing.

The story, well, really it doesn't matter. It's about a plot against Titus, emperor of Rome in A. D. The plot fizzles, thanks to the generosity of the ruler and his admission that he, perhaps had merited assassination.

NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
AUG 6 - 1952

Artur Rubinstein to Open Final Tanglewood Series

The 1952 Berkshire Music festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, will approach its climax tomorrow evening when the first concert in the concluding series of three will be given in the music shed by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Rubinstein to Appear

Artur Rubinstein, one of the world's great living pianists, will make his first appearance at Tanglewood when he performs Brahm's Second piano concerto in B flat major with the orchestra, Charles Munch, conducting, as one of the three numbers on tomorrow evening's program. The other offerings are Schumann's First ("Spring") symphony and Howard Swanson's Short symphony for which Mr. Swanson won the 1951 prize of New York Music Critics' circle as the best orchestral work performed that year in the city. Mr. Swanson will be in the audience.

On Saturday evening, the second concert in the final series will be a memorial to Serge Koussevitsky, music director of the Boston orchestra for 25 years, the founder and former director of the Berkshire Music center school at Tanglewood and the conductor who raised the Boston orchestra to its present eminence. Leonard Bernstein, protege of Dr. Koussevitsky, will conduct the program which will include the Third symphony by Aaron Copland, who was Dr. Koussevitzky's assistant at the Music center; Sibelius' Fifth symphony, in recognition of Koussevitzky's attachment to Sibelius' works, and the Andante movement from C. P. E. Bach's D major concerto for stringed instruments.

Final Concert

At the final festival concert Sunday, the orchestra and Music Center chorus under Dr. Munch's direction and with Andrew McKinley, tenor, as soloist, will perform Berlioz' "Requiem."

Meantime, the Music center announced its program of activities for the balance of its season which will end with the close of the festival.

Highlights of these activities will be second and third performances of Mr. Bernstein's opera, "Trouble in Tahiti," on Friday evening. Given its first performance at Brandeis university in the spring, the satire on suburban life has since been revised and rewritten.

Other Events

Saturday afternoon at 2.30 Thor Johnson, the first student ever to enroll at the Berkshire Music center in 1940, now conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony orchestra, will be guest conductor for a part of the final concert by the student orchestra, taking the baton for Bartok's "'Concerto for Orchestra." The three active students in conducting under Mr. Bernstein, Elyakum Shapira of Israel, Lorin Maazel and Robert Mandell, will conduct Brahms' "Tragic Overture," Tschaikowsky's "'Romeo and Juliet" and two movements of George Gershwin's Piano Concerto in F respectively.

At 4.30 Saturday the small choir will sing, and Sunday morning at 10 the chamber music group will give their last concert of the season.

As usual, Saturday morning at 10 the Boston Symphony orchestra rehearsal will be open to the public for the benefit of the pension fund.

The Music center programs are open to members of the Friends of the Music center, composed of those who have contributed in any amount to its fund.

The final week-end of the festival is expected to bring the heaviest business of the season to hotels, inns and rooming houses in the county. Last week-end did not quite equal last year's record but it was necessary to send some accommodation-seekers to Northern Berkshire when all rooms in the Lenox and Pittsfield area were taken.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 7 - 1952

Boston Symphony Begins Tanglewood Final Series

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 6.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, will begin the closing series of the Berkshire Festival at 8:15 tomorrow night in the Music Shed at Tanglewood. The program includes Schumann's "Spring" Symphony; Howard Swanson's "Short Symphony," which won the New York Music Critics' Circle 1951 prize for orchestral music, and Brahms' second piano concerto with Artur Rubinstein as soloist. This will be Mr. Rubinstein's first Tanglewood appearance.

Leonard Bernstein will conduct Saturday night's program, which is in memory of his teacher, the late Serge Koussevitzky, who was the Boston Symphony's conductor from 1924 to 1949. The works to be played are a concerto in D major for strings by C. P. E. Bach, Aaron Copland's third symphony and Sibelius' fifth symphony. The last concert Sunday afternoon will be devoted to Berlioz' "Requiem," in which Andrew McKinley will be the tenor soloist with the orchestra, and a chorus trained by Hugh Ross.

Mr. Bernstein's opera "Trouble in Tahiti," which has been revised since its first performance at the Brandeis University festival in June, will be performed twice for members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood at 8:15 and 9:45 Friday night. The Center's student orchestra will give its last concert of the season Saturday afternoon, with Thor Johnson, of the Cincinnati Symphony; Lorin Maazel, Elyakum Shapira, and Robert Mandell each conducting in turn. A concert by a small choir at 4:30 p. m. Saturday and a chamber music concert Sunday morning completes the Center's 1952 schedule. The Boston Symphony will hold a public rehearsal at 10 a. m. Saturday for the benefit of its pension fund.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
AUG 7 - 1952

Boston Symphony At Tanglewood Tonight

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Aug. 7—The final weekend of the Berkshire Festival, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, will open tonight with Schumann's Symphony No. 1 ("Spring"), Swanson's Short Symphony and Brahms' Second Piano Concerto, in which Artur Rubinstein will make his first appearance at Tanglewood in the solo part.

Leonard Bernstein, successor to the late Serge Koussevitzky as teacher of conducting and his pupil at the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's Summer school, will occupy the podium for the Koussevitzky memorial concert Saturday night. The program will be C. P. E. Bach's Andante from Concerto in D major, Aaron Copland's Third Symphony and Sibelius' Fifth, one of Dr. Koussevitzky's favorites. Mr. Munch will close the Festival Sunday afternoon with the Berlioz "Requiem," in which Andrew McKinley will sing the tenor solo.

A few changes have been made in the Berkshire Music Center calendar.

"Trouble in Tahiti," which Mr. Bernstein, the composer, describes as "a little opera in seven scenes," will be given two performances Friday at 8.15 and 9.45.

The symphony concert by the school orchestra, originally scheduled for Friday night, will be given Saturday at 2.30, led by student conductors and Thor Johnson, Cincinnati Orchestra leader, and a former Tanglewood student. At 4.30 the small choir will sing.

Program and ticket information will be mailed on request to Tanglewood, Lenox. General admission for listening from the lawn is on sale the days of the concerts.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD-JOURNAL
AUG 7 - 1952

TALKING IT OVER

Bernstein's 'Trouble in Tahiti,' Opera Satire, in 'Tanglewood'

By EMMA VAN WORMER

THE SECOND AND THIRD performances of Leonard Bernstein's satire on suburban life, an opera titled "Trouble in Tahiti," will be presented for Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, "Tanglewood," Lenox, Mass., tomorrow night. First performance was in Brandeis University early in the season, Bernstein conducting.

Bernstein

MUSIC OF the Bernstein Opera has been revised and rewritten since its premiere. A movie titled "Trouble in Tahiti" proves the turning point in the difficulties of a young couple. Bernstein describes it as "an experiment in simplicity." On Saturday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock Thor Johnson, first student ever to enroll in Berkshire Music Center in 1940 and now conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, will be guest conductor for a portion of the program in the final concert by the Berkshire Student Orchestra. He will lead Bela Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra." The three active Berkshire students conducting under Leonard Bernstein: Elyakum Shapira of Israel; Lorin Maazel and Robert Mandell respectively will conduct the "Tragi Overture" of Brahms, "Romeo and Juliet" by Tschaikowski, and two movements of George Gershwin's Piano Concerto in F. The usual Saturday morning rehearsal of the Boston Symphony will be open to the public for the benefit of the Orchestra pension fund. Closing 1952 Berkshire Festival event is Sunday afternoon, a performance of the Berlioz Requiem.

* * *

A GROUP of Syracusans dining together recently spoke of the chicken dinners of another generation or so ago—a full course meal at 35 cents in "The Homestead," near the site of the present Central High School. . . Then someone chimed in with the old-time picture of a soup bone and, often, calves liver, included free with every weekly meat order. . . Mention of days of cotton stockings "for every day, lisle stockings for best."

ARTHUR W. STOVER, on an early spring trip south for golf, bought Japanese flowering cherry trees in the Carolinas for the New Jersey gardens of his daughter Mrs. Robert von Sothen (Bette Stover). Stover has just pride in the house housing the various implements he uses in caring for the Stover gardens in Hurlbut rd. The store house is as orderly in arrangement as the figures in reports compiled in the Stover business offices. . . . Discussion on varied and hearty appetites of rabbits in gardens hereabouts—some like old fashioned pink tops; others prefer asters.

ABOUT PEOPLE you know: Soprano Rose Bampton, who sang in Archbold Gymnasium auditorium last spring with the Syracuse Symphony, Wilfred Pelletier conducting, gave a recital recently in the Ojai Festival in California. Her program included lieder by Schubert, Brahms, Wolf and Marx and Schonberg's song cycle "The Book of the Hanging Gardens". . . Della De Cristo, mezzo soprano, is singing regularly with El Puma Opera Company in New York City and in the fall will go on tour singing Maddalena in "Rigoletto" . . . Miss De Cristo began study of operatic roles with Dr. Nicholas Gualillo in Syracuse Conservatory of Music.

AN AUGUST visitor in his home town was Richmond Gale, concert pianist, in Manchester, Vt. for the summer. He is preparing recital programs, to include the Mozart Concerto in G. . . The Columbia Artists Management, Inc. which has American tour direction of Island of Bali Dancers and Gamelian Orchestra, directly from Indonesia starting next month points to the cost of a round trip by air to Bali: $2,500 and two weeks time, while in certain cities the cost of seeing the dances and hearing the music is the price of a ticket.

ARTUR RUBINSTEIN, famed in many lands as a concert pianist, will play the Second Concerto by Brahms for Piano and Orchestra with the Boston Symphony tonight in the Shed in "Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass, Charles Munch conducting. Rubinstein, who has played in Syracuse in recent years, appeared here last winter for Civic Morning Musicals, Inc.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 7 - 1952

Nearly Continuous Music At Tanglewood This Week

Short Symphony and Brahms Second Piano Concerto Scheduled for Tonight

Tanglewood, Lenox, Aug. 6—Music will be nearly continuous at Tanglewood this week end.

Munch Will Conduct

Included in the opening program Thursday night of the final Berkshire Festival series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, will be the Short Symphony, for which Howard Swanson won the 1951 prize of the New York Music Critics Circle as the best orchestral work performed in that period in the city. On the same program, Arthur Rubinstein, famous pianist, will make his first appearance at Tanglewood as soloist in Brahms' Second Piano Concerto. Mr. Swanson will be in the audience.

Leonard Bernstein will take the podium Saturday night for a memorial concert to Serge Koussevitzky, his teacher, who conducted the Boston Orchestra for 25 years and founded and directed the Berkshire Music Center until his death in June 1951. The program will include the Concerto in D major for Stringed Instruments by C. P. E. Bach; Symphony No. 3 by Aaron Copland, friend and associate of Dr. Koussevitzky; and Symphony No. 5 by Jan Sibelius, Finnish composer whose music he frequently played.

"Trouble in Tahiti"

For Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, "Trouble in Tahiti" by Leonard Bernstein will have its second and third performances Friday night. Its first was at Brandeis University in the spring. Its music revised and libretto rewritten since its premiere, the opera is a satire on suburban life. A movie titled "Trouble in Tahiti" proves the turning point in the difficulties of a young couple. The composer describes it as "an experiment in simplicity."

Saturday afternoon at 2:30 Thor Johnson, the first student ever to enroll at the Berkshire Music Center in 1940, now conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, will be guest conductor for a part of the final concert by the student orchestra, taking the baton for Bartok's "Concerto for Orchestra." The three active students in conducting under Mr. Bernstein, Elyakum Shapira of Israel, Lorin Maazel and Robert Mandell will conduct Brahms' "Tragic Overture," Tschaikowsky's "Romeo and Juliet" and two movements of George Gershwin's Piano Concerto in F respectively.

At 4:30 Saturday the small choir will sing, and Sunday morning at 10 the chamber music group will give their last concert of the season. As usual Saturday morning at 10 the Boston Symphony Orchestra rehearsal will be open to the public for the benefit of the pension fund.

Mr. Munch and the orchestra will close the Festival's fifteenth season Sunday afternoon with "The Requiem" of Berlioz, with chorus prepared by Hugh Ross and Andrew McKinley as tenor soloist. Tickets are on sale at the box office for seats in the shed. General admission will be sold before the concerts for listening from the lawn.

Bernstein Revises 'Trouble in Tahiti'

Tanglewood, Lenox, Aug. 6—Leonard Bernstein has [illegible] opera, "Trouble in Tahiti," [illegible] second performance [illegible] given at Tanglewood [illegible] opera department of the Berkshire Music Center.

Mr. Bernstein [illegible] ducting and orchestral [illegible] composed a symphony [illegible] a piano concerto, a Broadway [illegible] and some works in smaller forms. Living in Mexico last winter, he composed his first opera, writing also the libretto. The only [illegible] performance was at the Festival of Creative Arts at Brandeis University, Waltham, June 12, the composer conducting.

Lasting less than an hour in a series of scenes [illegible] work is scored for [illegible] wind instruments and a string [illegible] writing the libretto and revising [illegible] music for the Tanglewood performance the composer has changed the final scene. The story is a satire on surburbia, concerning the trouble of a young married couple, typical suburbanites. A movie entitled "Trouble in Tahiti" brings about the turning point in their difficulties. Production is planned for New York City next season.

NEW YORK, N
TIMES
AUG 8 - 1

RUBINSTEIN S AT BERKSHIR

10,000 Cheer Brahms —Evening Is 'Disti Also by Swanson

By OLIN DOW
Special to THE NEW YORK

LENOX, Mass., Au
of the three performa by the Boston Symph tra at this third Thurs concert of the Berksh was distinguished.

Artur Rubinstein w ist in a memorable in of the Brahms Secon
and received a rousin by an audience of 1 alone would have ma cert worth the jour was a manifestation thority, the feeling an musicianship of a gre
the height of his pow revealed anew every nobility of the concer
a symphonic masterpi

Other features of were equally impressi ent ways. Preceding concerto, Charles Mu performances of the "Spring" Symphony
"Short Symphony" o composer, Howard Sw

The Swanson wor heard in New York Mitropoulos last Dece ceived the prize of th
Music Critics' Circle symphonic novelty o
season.

First Impression

A rehearing of th singularly well-wroug firmed the impressio made at its initial h
the achievement of a evidently worked wit sincerity and conscien
ing. Each of the thre is unified and conce
an idea, and the wor increases this sensati
tion.

The movements are and structurally inte admirable balance of tent. The writing is quality of tonality, b never lost. These thin could be technically of the score and no connote any partic value. But the music its essence, emotion
matic.

The writing is so that it is almost tig years, Mr. Swanson same thing, or ex concepts, with more ibility. Meanwhile, pleasure to see a m
ern-minded, technic plished, with his feet ground and his high pose unmistakable.

Mr. Munch's comm
the "Spring" Symph of rare tenderness, poetical feeling. It of Schumann. It is the spirit of this fa caught with such in standing of the comp

There were some in the performance, ances where the co
to cover up defectiv
Schumann's own
These imperfections, not mar or hide the e
ness and inspiration

It was great music
it emphasized anew sition can have defe nical and even cons acter and yet posses beauty so communica
pelling that the impe ply don't matter.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

RUBINSTEIN SCORES AT BERKSHIRE FETE

[illegible] Brahms Concerto—Evening Is Distinguished Also by Swanson Work

By OLIN DOWNES

[illegible] Symphony Orches- [illegible] Berkshire [illegible]

[illegible] Rubinstein [illegible]

Other [illegible] in differ- ent ways [illegible] the Brahms concerto Charles Munch directed performances of the Schumann "Spring" Symphony and the "Short Symphony" of the Negro composer Howard Swanson.

The Swanson work was first heard in New York under Dimitri Mitropoulos last December. It received the prize of the New York Music Critics' Circle as the best symphonic novelty of the 1950-51 season.

First Impression Confirmed

A rehearing of this brief and singularly well-wrought score confirmed the impression that it had made at its initial hearing. It is the achievement of a musician who evidently worked with the utmost sincerity and conscience in its making. Each of the three movements is unified and concentrated upon an idea, and the work as a whole increases this sensation of unification.

The movements are thematically and structurally interwoven, with admirable balance of form and content. The writing is modern in its quality of tonality, but tonality is never lost. These things, of course, could be technically characteristic of the score and not necessarily connote any particular artistic value. But the music is lyrical in its essence, emotional and dramatic.

The writing is so concentrated that it is almost tight. In later years, Mr. Swanson may say the same thing, or express similar concepts, with more ease and flexibility. Meanwhile, it is a great pleasure to see a musician, modern-minded, technically accomplished, with his feet on the solid ground and his high artistic purpose unmistakable.

Mr. Munch's communication of the "Spring" Symphony was one of rare tenderness, ardor and poetical feeling. It was the voice of Schumann. It is not often that the spirit of this familiar work is caught with such intuitive understanding of the composer's nature.

There were some technical flaws in the performance, some poor balances where the conductor failed to cover up defective spacings of Schumann's own orchestration. These imperfections, however, could not mar or hide the essential rightness and inspiration of the reading.

It was great music-making, and it emphasized anew that a composition can have defects of a technical and even constructive character and yet possess a secret of beauty so communicative and compelling that the imperfections simply don't matter.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN

AUG 8 - 1952

Music

Rubenstein Magic Wins Applause

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 8.—The first appearance ever of Artur Rubinstein at Tanglewood—in a professional capacity, that is—was greeted with an ovation by more than 10,000 listeners in the music shed last night. The evening's program, devised and conducted by Charles Munch, offered three works, the First Symphony of Schumann, the Howard Swanson "Short Symphony" and Brahms' Second Piano Concerto.

Very pleasing, indeed, did this music prove to the throng, and the performance, excepting the Schumann, in part, merited nothing but demonstrative applause.

Mr. Rubinstein, a very well-known figure in Carnegie Hall, was the same very busy, bustling individual. And to say that he met every challenge imposed would be to minimize excessively.

Personality Plus.

The Rubinstein fire and intensity, the bang-bang attack of the rapid and powerful passages, the fleetness and accuracy of technique, these were all too familiar to his partisans. This man is personality plus. Even when there are tacits for the piano he draws complete attention. His face is a picture of concentration, his expressions and gestures remarkable to observe.

If there were faults to find with the rendering of this Brahms masterpiece, they were overwhelmed by the favorable aspects. Yet, for the sake of the report, let it be told that the fantastic Bostonians, the unerring, always precise Bostonians, missed a cue in the last movement.

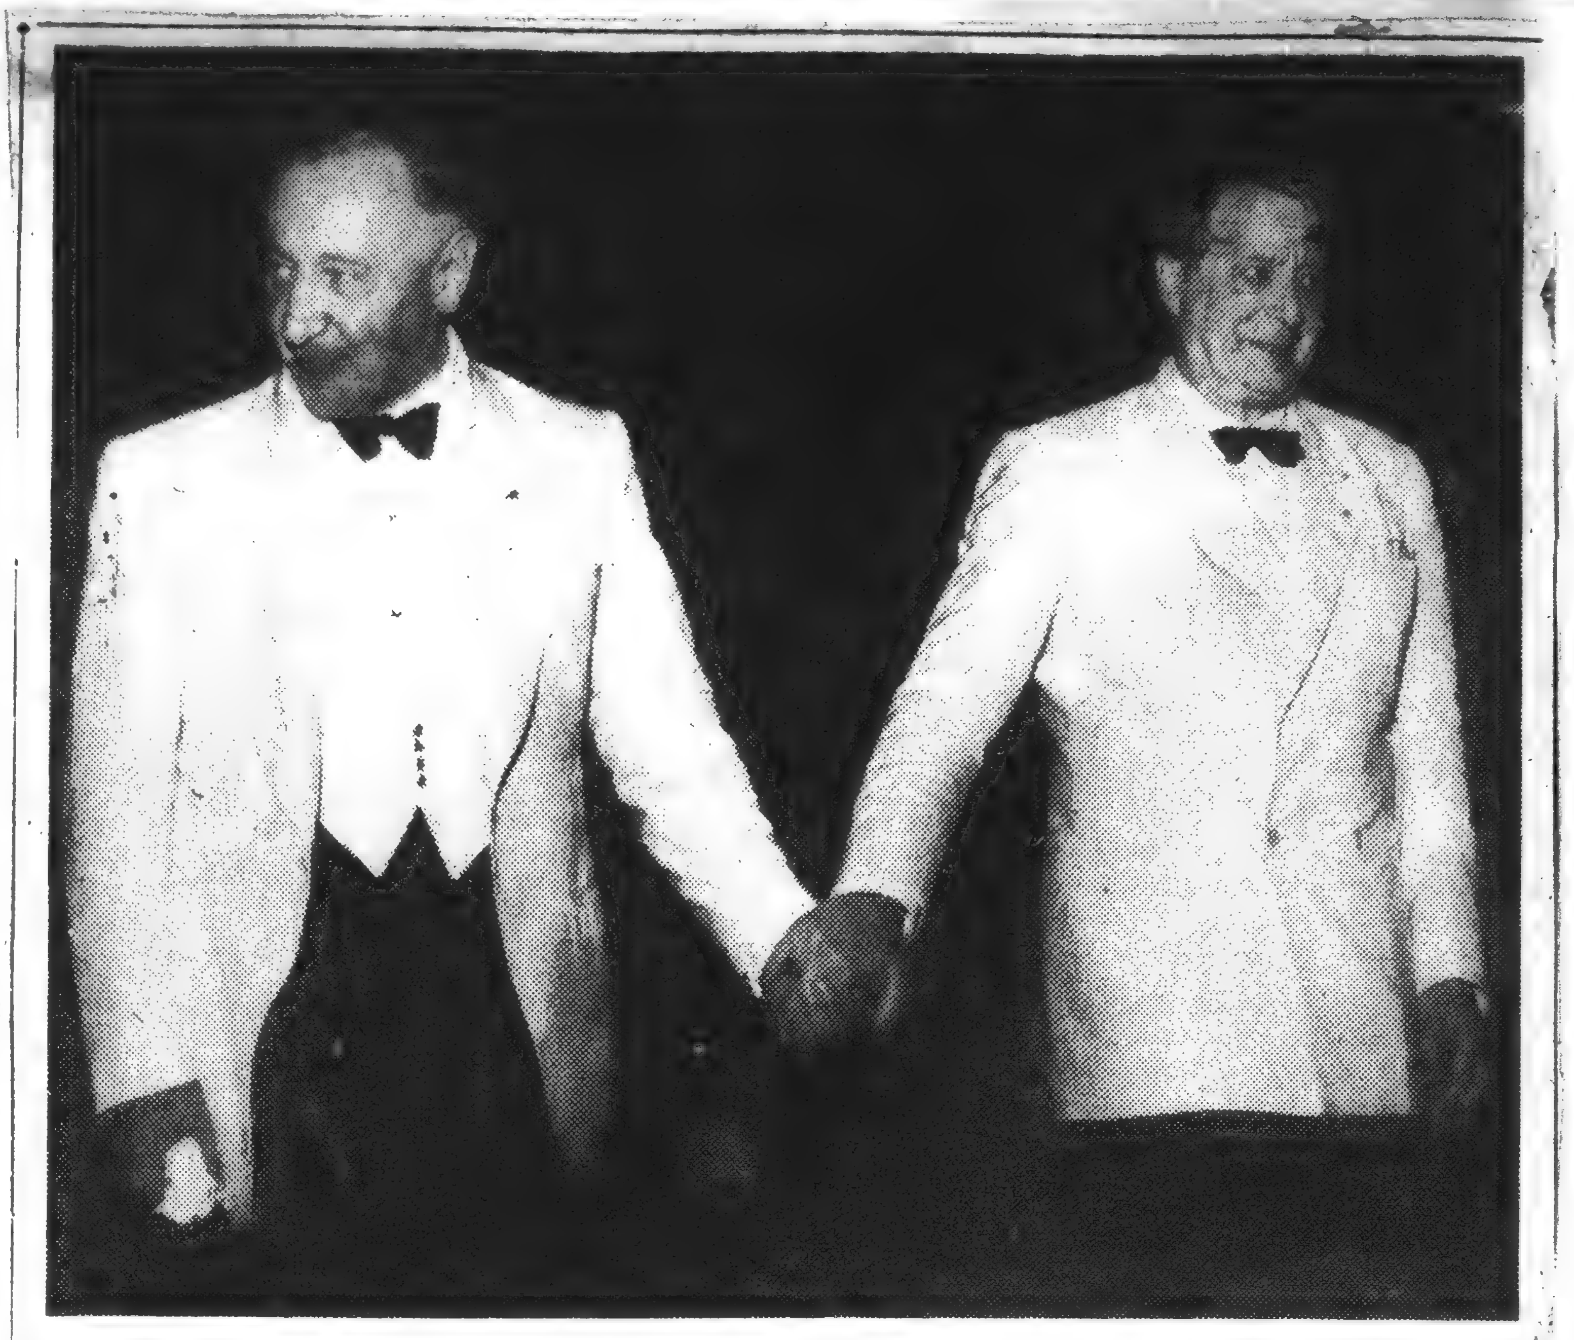
Small thing, eh? That is a relative matter, for even the slightest deviation from the constant perfection is a cause for astonishment. Well, I was astonished when, first, the violins made a weak entrance and, the more so, when the woodwinds, right on top of that, missed a bar or so entirely. The recovery was perfect, though.

Effective Music.

The Howard Symphony, a well-made work, this, a very busy work, no part of which ever seems to be without its quota of multilinear writing. That, as you know, is not necessarily bad. It surely isn't in this case.

Since its premiere by the Philharmonic-Symphony in 1950 this piece has received quite a play, and deservedly. I wouldn't say that it is pretty music that Mr. Swanson wrote, but effective music. The performance was first class.

The opening Schumann First generally went well, although issue could be taken with some of the unnecessary weight dropped down upon it.



Plouffe

ONE OF MANY RECALLS: Artur Rubinstein, piano soloist, left, and Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, acknowledge the ovation from an enthusiastic audience after being recalled to the platform many times last night at Tanglewood following the performance of Brahm's second piano concerto in B-flat major.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 8 - 1952

Artur Rubinstein Delights Large Tanglewood Crowd

10,250 Hear Superb Performance of Brahms Concerto; Koussevitzky Memorial Concert Saturday

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Tanglewood, Aug. 7—As I write, I can hear the applause and bravos of some of the 10,250 people here tonight. This applause is a sincere tribute to the greatness of Johannes Brahms, the artistry of Artur Rubinstein and the brilliance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and genius of ~~Director~~ Charles Munch, all of whom collaborated in a superb performance of Brahms' "Concerto No. 2 in B-Flat Major" for piano and orchestra.

Grand Pianism

People heard pianism in the grand manner and of the great tradition. At his best, and he was at his best tonight, Artur Rubinstein has few equals when it comes to interpretive genius, technical assurance and breadth of concept. All these characteristics were in evidence tonight. There was a grand sweep and breadth to the opening allegro; pure romanticism in the andante and breath-taking sparkle and rhythmic incisiveness in the final allegretto.

Mr. Munch conceived this concerto in the broadest possible terms. He and the pianist were in absolute rapport and the orchestra was on its mettle. Thus it was a performance of a kind which makes Tanglewood and the Berkshire Festival memorable.

The program opened with a delectable performance of one of the loveliest of all symphonies, Robert Schumann's first symphony in B Flat Major. It was unfolded in gracious easy manner, with Mr. Munch quite content to let the music glide along its sweetly effervescent way, the opening andante and allegro became a paen of supreme joy; the larghetto, an almost sublime utterance and the final allegro a reaffirmation of the first.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra had not before played the "Short Symphony" of the Negro composer Howard Swanson, but Mr. Munch chose to program it tonight in the presence of the composer who shared the applause which followed its performance. In a space of approximately 12 minutes, Mr. Swanson has endeavored to encompass the depth, seriousness and intensity in a large symphony. He has been singularly successful, particularly in the more lyric moments, where the melody is in retrospective mood and very personal. It is, of course, written in the modern idiom but there is a refreshing lack of dissonance and the work in its compact, clear form, is one which should be a real addition to the symphonic repertoire.

Surpass Last Year

The audience tonight spread far out onto the lawn. The 10,250 people was something of a record, for last year at the opening of the third series of concerts 8000 were present and the year before that 7800.

The answer to this huge crowd seems clear. A great name was soloist. As much as we like to think that people come to Tanglewood to hear great music, the fact remains that the star is still the greatest attraction, whether we like it or not.

The concert Saturday night will be the annual Koussevitzky Memorial Concert, appropriately, it will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein, Dr. Koussevitzky's favorite pupil as well as one of the shining personalities at Tanglewood. The program will consist of the "Concerto in D Major for stringed instruments" by C. P. E. Bach; Copland's "Symphony No. 3" and the fifth symphony of Jan Sibelius, a work which Dr. Koussevitzky made known to this country.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 8 - 1952

Rubinstein Aids Munch to Dispel Tanglewood Fog

By FRANCIS T. AHEARN
Special to The Hartford Times

Tanglewood, Mass. — The dew and the mist slipped down from the Berkshire hills with clammy chilliness last night but no one noticed it at the Berkshire Festival except at intermission time.

The Boston Symphony, under the baton ~~of Charles~~ Munch, and Arthur Rubinstein, pianist, created an atmosphere of their own. It was an atmosphere of warmth, tenderness, sometimes electric, against which, even for the thousands sprawled across the lawns, the dew and the chill didn't even have a chance.

* * *

MESSRS MUNCH, Rubinstein and the gentlemen of the ensemble had pretty elegant support from Robert Schumann, Howard Swanson and Johannes Brahms.

Schumann's contribution was his B flat Symphony, Swanson's was "Short Symphony," and Brahms' was represented in the B flat piano Concerto. Schumann and Brahms, of course, have long since gone to their eternal plaudits. Mr. Swanson was on hand to take his in person.

ARTUR RUBINSTEIN was soloist last night at Berkshire Music Festival.

It was evident that Munch was putting everything he had into the 12-minute Swanson composition. And if the audience response was not quite as vigorous as it had been for the Schumann, it quickened when Munch beckoned to someone out in the audience. Down the aisle came a tall, smiling Negro. It was a long way down the aisle and a longer one to the sidesteps leading to the stage. The audience had time to stand, crane and applaud. The composer broke into a little jog trot. By the time he reached the stage, he was so evidently proud and happy that the audience splashed him with applause of good cheer and fellowship.

* * *

HOWEVER, it was Mr. Rubinstein's night. When he had done with the Brahms concerto, they cheered and cheered. He came back again and again, with Mr. Munch, and without him. He shook hands with the first cellist and with the concert master. He bowed and bowed. The applause roared on. One had a suspcion that it was an oversized-Bushnell audience trying to squeeze an encore. Mr. Rubinstein would have none of it.

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE

AUG 8 - 1952

TOLEDO BLADE: FRIDAY, AUGUST 8, 1952

Berkshire Festival Concert Filled With Some Solid Music

Charles Munch And Boston Symphony Orchestra Do Not Fail The Public Ear

By JULIAN SEAMAN
Blade Staff Writer

TANGLEWOOD, Mass., Aug. 8 No tonal venture or daring turmoil stirred the first program in the final weekend of the Berkshire Festival concerts here last night. There was solid music of a kind one is likely to encounter almost any winter night in our larger centers of melody; and after all, Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra do not consciously fail the public ear.

Artur Rubinstein, in the Second Brahms Piano Concerto, expressed himself as one might have expected—some of Brahms and a great deal of Rubinstein, against a tonal background cluttered and in need of sponging. For the Brahms orchestration does not take too well to Mr. Munch's brand of hurry and tension.

Mr. Munch began his ministrations with the Schumann "Spring" Symphony (No. 1, B-flat minor, Opus 38), a faintly incongruous month for such an enterprise. Only the larghetto emerged, Lambent and songful, delicately tinted and fraught with a requisite poetry of which Mr. Munch is capable but to which he is seldom inclined nowadays.

Howard Swanson's "Short Symphony," introduced in 1950 by Dimitri Mitropoulos and the Philharmonic Symphony Society of New York and subsequently repeated affectionately by Mr. Ormandy and the Philadelphians, seems to have lost none of its frantic inconsequence since I heard it last.

Mr. Munch gave it a gallic tinge, as Mr. Ormandy had imbued it with the surrealist angles of Hindemith and only Mr. Mitropoulos seemed to have let the composer himself have his say. There isn't much to say, and it is difficult to understand all the furore.

One may gather from the foregoing that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, fresh from its Parisian sojourn, has regained some of its beauteous tone and none of its wonted discipline, flexibility and elan. Perhaps one cannot ascribe this apparent deterioration entirely to Mr. Munch, yet these differences persist and it seems probable that immediate repairs and a new idea are desirable.

BOSTON, MASS.
EVENING GLOBE

AUG 8 - 1952

FINAL MEASURE—Opening of final week of current Berkshire Festival of Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood is also final week for five members of the famed orchestra—they plan to retire. Conductor Charles Munch, third from left, is shown presenting retiring musicians with engraved watches. Left to right: Lucian Hansotte, trombone; Boaz Piller, contrabassoon; Mr. Munch; Georges Laurent, celebrated principal flute; Max Polster, percussion, and Gaston Elcus, violin.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN

AUG 9 - 1952

Tanglewood Proves It's Not All Old Hat

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 9.—Lest the impression get about that only standard works are being given here at Tanglewood, there have been already two distinct novelties—the "Dance of the Dead," by Honegger, and the American premiere of Mozart's opera "La Clemenza di Tito," rendered in English as "Titus," not to omit Luigi Dallapicolla and his "Three Prisoners' Songs," performed on Sunday, July 27.

Further, tomorrow afternoon Charles Munch leads the Boston Symphony, tenor soloist Andrew McKinley, and choral forces in the Berlioz "Requiem," which really can't be called a standard, old as it is. And the Faure Ballade for Piano Orchestra, played on the second Thursday of the symphonic series, is itself a rara avis of the concert hall.

The point is made, by some music lovers—who have not attended these concerts—that the emphasis is on the old hat, the conventional, the sorely tried, shall we say? Refuting that is the reasonable number of unfamiliars scheduled.

Utter Sincerity.

I still remember with much pleasure the Bostonians' performance of the Honegger "Dance of the Dead." The score is excitement unqualified, and the accent is on expression rather than intellectual didoes. The intensity, the utter sincerity of the piece are remarkable. Arthur Honegger not only practices his composer's art but he lives it as well in the delivery of his subject, which in this case was a text by Paul Claudel, mostly derived from the Old Testament and specifically generated by the woodcuts of Hans Holbein, the Younger, which repose in Basel, Switzerland.

Quite often in this composition the music is less important than the delivery of text, which is everything always. And yet the music is an integral part of the whole. That, it would seem, is what the composer elected to do. Had he wished, he might have done just about anything else.

Not entirely unlikely the score, by itself, could prove uninteresting. But there are so many works combining words and music about which that may be said. Anyway, I'm not so certain that Honegger's score, without the vocal parts, would make that small an effect on listeners. It is just too emotional and moving for that.

Rarely in our day do we hear new music that offers something besides beautiful form or the look of a neatly solved problem in aeronautical engineering. There is a human element to consider, despite our sophisticated, pseudo-scientific poses. And in the department of human values, of humility before great majesty, Honegger is a tonal portraitist of extraordinary communication.

Belated U.S. Premier.

About the Mozart "Titus" there is little more to add to first impressions. Mozart in a belated American premiere, is still Mozart; this time, tho ject, recalling and the stilte by Metastasio

Yet the Be ter's Opera I
by Boris Gc proud in the elderly newco translation, fo terial, could attain brilliar most workmar

It has been that this oper it were giver Undoubtedly; better that i alongside of tl of the repert can never tell

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 8 - 1952

Tomorrow's Festival Event Tribute to Late Director

Memorial Concert at Tanglewood to Be Conducted by Leonard Bernstein; Other Koussevitzky Commemorative Programs Planned This Year

Commemorating the 10th anniversary of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and in tribute to its creator, the late Serge Koussevitzky, Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a Memorial Concert at Tanglewood tomorrow evening. Mr. Bernstein will include in the program Aaron Copland's Symphony No. 3, a work commissioned by the Foundation in 1944, completed in 1946, and premiered in the Bartok "Concerto for Orchestra," Burrill Phillip's "Tom Paine" (Overture) and Luigi Dallapiccola's "Tartiniana" (for Violin and Orchestra). Walter Hendl will conduct several works commissioned by the Foundation in the fall concerts of the Dallas Symphony, and Howard Mitchell with the National Symphony of Washington, D. C., will perform the David Diamond "Symphony No. 4." Rafael Kubelik will conduct the Chicago Symphony in performances of Diamond's "Symphony No. 4," Arthur Honneger's "Symphony No. 5," and a new symphony by Roy Harris.

City Edition Berkshire Eagle

1952

Plouffe

COMPOSER AND FRIEND: Howard Swanson, left, New York composer, whose "Short Symphony," was performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood last night, is congratulated on his work by Charles Munch, director of the BSO, as audience of 10,250 music lovers accorded him a hearty reception.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 8 - 1952

Berkshire Festival

Munch Conductor for Boston Symphony Orchestra

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 7.—The closing week end of the Berkshire Festival began tonight in Tanglewood's music shed, where Charles Munch conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in two romantic German works and one modern American one, and Artur Rubinstein made his first Tanglewood appearance as soloist in Brahms' second piano concerto in B flat major. This was also the key of Schumann's first symphony, known as the Spring Symphony, which opened the program.

Howard Swanson's short symphony, which followed the Schumann work, was played for the first time in this festival. It has had quite a few performances in various American cities during the last two seasons, and won the award bestowed by the New York Music Critics Circle last winter for new orchestral music.

Tonight's attendance of 10,250 was a total usually reached here only on Saturdays and Sundays. Mr. Rubinstein's presence was one factor in this mark.

Fair weather today succeeded yesterday's rain, and the audience included a considerable contingent standing or sitting on the lawn before the vast music shed.

Leonard Bernstein's short opera "Trouble in Tahiti," which has undergone some revision since its premier in Waltham last June, will be given twice at Tanglewood tomorrow night. Mr. Bernstein will conduct the semi-final festival concert Saturday night, which is dedicated to the memorial of Serge Koussevitzky, who was so closely associated with the history of music at Tanglewood. F. D. P.

[91]

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE

AUG 8 - 1952

TOLEDO BLADE: FRIDAY, AUGUST 8, 1952

Berkshire Festival Concert Filled With Some Solid Music

Charles Munch And Boston Symphony Orchestra Do Not Fail The Public Ear

By JULIAN SEAMAN
Blade Staff Writer

TANGLEWOOD, Mass., Aug. 8 No tonal venture or daring turmoil stirred the first program in the final weekend of the Berkshire Festival concerts here last night. There was solid music of a kind one is likely to encounter almost any winter night in our larger centers of melody; and after all, Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra do not consciously fail the public ear.

Artur Rubinstein, in the Second Brahms Piano Concerto, expressed himself as one might have expected—some of Brahms and a great deal of Rubinstein, against a tonal background cluttered and in need of sponging. For the Brahms orchestration does not take too well to Mr. Munch's brand of hurry and tension.

Mr. Munch began his ministrations with the Schumann "Spring" Symphony (No. 1, B-flat minor, Opus 38), a faintly incongruous month for such an enterprise. Only the larghetto emerged, Lambent and songful, delicately tinted and fraught with a requisite poetry of which Mr. Munch is capable but to which he is seldom inclined nowadays.

Howard Swanson's "Short Symphony," introduced in 1950 by Dimitri Mitropoulos and the Philharmonic Symphony Society of New York and subsequently repeated affectionately by Mr. Ormandy and the Philadelphians, seems to have lost none of its frantic inconsequence since I heard it last.

Mr. Munch gave it a gallic tinge, as Mr. Ormandy had imbued it with the surrealist angles of Hindemith and only Mr. Mitropoulos seemed to have let the composer himself have his say. There isn't much to say, and it is difficult to understand all the furore.

One may gather from the foregoing that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, fresh from its Parisian sojourn, has regained some of its beauteous tone and none of its wonted discipline, flexibility and elan. Perhaps one cannot ascribe this apparent deterioration entirely to Mr. Munch, yet these differences persist and it seems probable that immediate repairs and a new idea are desirable.

BOSTON, MASS.
EVENING GLOBE

AUG 8 - 1952

FINAL MEASURE—Opening of final week of current Berkshire Festival of Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood is also final week for five members of the famed orchestra—they plan to retire. Conductor Charles Munch, third from left, is shown presenting retiring musicians with engraved watches. Left to right: Lucian Hansotte, trombone; Boaz Piller, contrabassoon; Mr. Munch; Georges Laurent, celebrated principal flute; Max Polster, percussion, and Gaston Elcus, violin.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN

AUG 9 - 1952

Tanglewood Proves It's Not All Old Hat

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 9.—Lest the impression get about that only standard works are being given here at Tanglewood, there have been already two distinct novelties—the "Dance of the Dead," by Honegger, and the American premiere of Mozart's opera "La Clemenza di Tito," rendered in English as "Titus," not to omit Luigi Dallapicolla and his "Three Prisoners' Songs," performed on Sunday, July 27.

Further, tomorrow afternoon Charles Munch leads the Boston Symphony, tenor soloist Andrew McKinley, and choral forces in the Berlioz "Requiem," which really can't be called a standard, old as it is. And the Faure Ballade for Piano Orchestra, played on the second Thursday of the symphonic series, is itself a rara avis of the concert hall.

The point is made, by some music lovers—who have not attended these concerts—that the emphasis is on the old hat, the conventional, the sorely tried, shall we say? Refuting that is the reasonable number of unfamiliars scheduled.

Utter Sincerity.

I still remember with much pleasure the Bostonians' performance of the Honegger "Dance of the Dead." The score is excitement unqualified, and the accent is on expression rather than intellectual didoes. The intensity, the utter sincerity of the piece are remarkable. Arthur Honegger not only practices his composer's art but he lives it as well in the delivery of his subject, which in this case was a text by Paul Claudel, mostly derived from the Old Testament and specifically generated by the woodcuts of Hans Holbein, the Younger, which repose in Basel, Switzerland.

Quite often in this composition the music is less important than the delivery of text, which is everything always. And yet the music is an integral part of the whole. That, it would seem, is what the composer elected to do. Had he wished, he might have done just about anything else.

Not entirely unlikely the score, by itself, could prove uninteresting. But there are so many works combining words and music about which that may be said. Anyway, I'm not so certain that Honegger's score, without the vocal parts, would make that small an effect on listeners. It is just too emotional and moving for that.

Rarely in our day do we hear new music that offers something besides beautiful form or the look of a neatly solved problem in aeronautical engineering. There is a human element to consider, despite our sophisticated, pseudo-scientific poses. And in the department of human values, of humility before great majesty, Honegger is a tonal portraitist of extraordinary communication.

Belated U.S. Premier.

About the Mozart "Titus" there is little more to add to first impressions. Mozart in a belated American premiere, is still Mozart; this time, though, without a subject, recalling the stilted libretto and the stilted lines provided him by Metastasio.

Yet the Berkshire Music Center's Opera Department, headed by Boris Goldovsky, did itself proud in the presentation of this elderly newcomer. The English translation, founded on static material, could not be expected to attain brilliance, though it was most workmanlike.

It has been suggested by some that this opera might be better if it were given in concert form. Undoubtedly; but not so much better that it could move right alongside of the great choral works of the repertory. However, you can never tell.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

AUG 8 - 1952

Tomorrow's Festival Event Tribute to Late Director

Memorial Concert at Tanglewood to Be Conducted by Leonard Bernstein; Other Koussevitzky Commemorative Programs Planned This Year

Commemorating the 10th anniversary of the Koussevitzky Music Foundation and in tribute to its creator, the late Serge Koussevitzky, Leonard Bernstein will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a Memorial Concert at Tanglewood tomorrow evening. Mr. Bernstein will include in the program Aaron Copland's Symphony No. 3, a work commissioned by the Foundation in 1944, completed in 1946, and premiered in that year by Dr. Koussevitzky.

It is fitting that such a Memorial Concert should take place at Tanglewood during the Berkshire Music Festival, and that the names of Leonard Bernstein, Aaron Copland and the Boston Symphony Orchestra should be prominent as participants.

A number of major symphony orchestras here and abroad will pay homage to the memory of Dr. Koussevitzky during the coming season by including in their programs works commissioned by the Foundation. Sir Malcolm Sargent will perform the Bela Bartok "Concerto for Orchestra" on Thursday, the 21st, at the Promenade Concerts in London.

Thor Johnson, conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony, has scheduled for next season Heitor Villa-Lobos' "Madona" (for Orchestra), Nikolai Lopatnikoff's "Concertino" (for Orchestra) and the Bartok "Concerto for Orchestra." Antal Dorati, conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony, has informed the Foundation that his tribute will include performances of the Bartok "Concerto for Orchestra," Burrill Phillip's "Tom Paine" (Overture) and Luigi Dallapiccola's "Tartiniana" (for Violin and Orchestra). Walter Hendl will conduct several works commissioned by the Foundation in the fall concerts of the Dallas Symphony, and Howard Mitchell with the National Symphony of Washington, D. C., will perform the David Diamond "Symphony No. 4." Rafael Kubelik will conduct the Chicago Symphony in performances of Diamond's "Symphony No. 4." Arthur Honneger's "Symphony No. 5" and a new symphony by Roy Harris.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 8 - 1952

Berkshire Festival

Munch Conductor for Boston Symphony Orchestra

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 7.—The closing week end of the Berkshire Festival began tonight in Tanglewood's music shed, where Charles Munch conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in two romantic German works and one modern American one, and Artur Rubinstein made his first Tanglewood appearance as soloist in Brahms' second piano concerto in B flat major. This was also the key of Schumann's first symphony, known as the Spring Symphony, which opened the program.

Howard Swanson's short symphony, which followed the Schumann work, was played for the first time in this festival. It has had quite a few performances in various American cities during the last two seasons, and won the award bestowed by the New York Music Critics Circle last winter for new orchestral music.

Tonight's attendance of 10,250 was a total usually reached here only on Saturdays and Sundays; Mr. Rubinstein's presence was one factor in this mark.

Fair weather today succeeded yesterday's rain, and the audience included a considerable contingent standing or sitting on the lawn before the vast music shed.

Leonard Bernstein's short opera "Trouble in Tahiti," which has undergone some revision since its premier in Waltham last June, will be given twice at Tanglewood tomorrow night. Mr. Bernstein will conduct the semi-final festival concert Saturday night, which is dedicated to the memorial of Serge Koussevitzky, who was so closely associated with the history of music at Tanglewood. F. D. P.

[91]

Stockbridge in 1789. Moving to Lenox in 1828 in a consolidation it became the Berkshire Star and County Republican. After its sale in 1829 it became known as the Berkshire Journal, consolidating in the same year with moved from Pittsfield to Journal and Argus. In 183 to the Massachusetts Eagle was moved to Pittsfield. In shire County Eagle which the weekly became a daily

The Associated Press is entitled exclusively to the use for republication of all news credited to it or not otherwise credited in this newspaper and local news of spontaneous origin published herein.

Subscription rates a week. By mail zones): $13 a year; $3.25 for three month. Single copies

Editorials

Mixed Results in Tennessee

In an election year, and especially in the three months preceding election day, every political happening has interest and significance. The Democratic primary in Tennessee held means that Crump's at an end.

On the other hand, in the gubernatorial

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 9 - 1952

Thor Johnson Leads Student Orchestra

First Pupil At Music Center Back at Tanglewood

[illegible] Music [illegible] tine [illegible] session. He le[illegible] in Bar[illegible] thi[illegible]

[illegible] a letter [illegible] in the [illegible] enroll [illegible] off the press, [illegible] the first students [illegible] under the late [illegible] at Tanglewood. [illegible] of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra.

[illegible] Wisconsin, he grew up [illegible] Winston-Salem, N.C., where he attended the public schools. He received an A.B. degree at the University of North Carolina and a master of music at the University of Michigan. While studying at Ann Arbor he conducted the Grand Rapids Symphony Orchestra for [illegible].

He studied in Europe under Felix Weingartner, Bruno Walter and [illegible] and at Tanglewood for two seasons. He was professor of music at the University of Michigan conducting the Musical Society's annual May festival. During the war he organized the first soldier symphony at Fort Monmouth and taught at the Army School of Music in England. He has guest-conducted the Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago Orchestras.

From 1946 to 1947 he conducted the Juilliard School Orchestra, going to Cincinnati as permanent conductor in 1947. Since the season closed in April he has conducted at the Ann Arbor and Cincinnati May festivals, the Ojai, Cal., festival, the Brevard, N.C., festival and the Schubert festival in Charlottesville, Va. He received last month the award of the year from Phi Mu Alpha convention in Cincinnati. In 1949 he won the Alice Ditson award.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 9 - 1952

Tanglewood

The Berkshire Festival

* * *

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 8.—The season's operatic activities at Tanglewood closed this evening with two performances of Leonard Bernstein's "Trouble in Tahiti" in the Berkshire Music Center's Theater Concert Hall given for contributing friends of the center. Active members of the center's opera department performed scenes from several Italian operas in the afternoon.

Mr. Bernstein's short opera was first performed in the Brandeis University festival at Waltham, Mass; there has been some later revision in both the libretto and the score. The composer is his own librettist for this work, which is his first in this form. The cast included Beverly Wolff and Arthur Schoep, as the contentious wife and husband, and William Harder, Elizabeth Winslow and Joseph Scott as a commenting trio, in this account of suburban marital difficulties. Seymour Lipkin conducted the orchestra of four strings and twenty-one wind instruments.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch was in good form for last night's Berkshire Festival concert in Tanglewood's music shed, where Howard Swanson's "Short Symphony" followed Schumann's Symphony in B flat major. The Swanson work, which won the New York Music Critics' Circle latest award, had not been previously played by the Bostonians, but the performance gave an impression of understanding of its general spirit and expressive nuances, as well as of instrumental finish and clarity of detail.

The style of the work has its individual elements and others, such as constant motion of a certain basic rhythm and thematic figures contributing to it, which are typical of several contemporary American symphonic works. Mr. Swanson also shows lyric inclinations, as in the andante and the intermediate episode in the finale. The first movement, in its short course, is successful in suggesting increasing tension and momentum; this effect is lessened by a somewhat episodic character. The composer was warmly applauded.

Artur Rubinstein, making his Tanglewood debut, received an ovation from the audience after the performance of Brahms' Second Piano Concerto. The interpretation exhibited the pianist's consummate technical ability and his understanding of romantic music such as this; the orchestral playing was well balanced and co-ordinated. But both the soloist and the conductor seemed to realize the expressive resources of this concerto to a varying rather than a constant degree; the piano and the orchestra both provided absorbingly imaginative measures and others in which a listener's attention was less tempted to penetrate beyond external details.

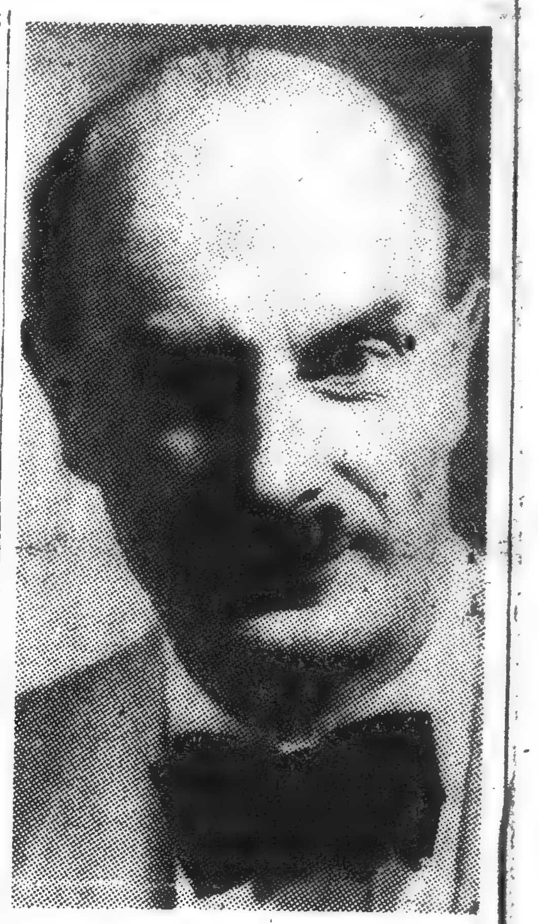
The program books announce that Mr. Munch will again be director, both of the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center, next summer. Details of the 1953 festival are not yet worked out, but it is believed that the number and distribution of the concerts will be as usual, and that Pierre Monteux will again be one of the guest conductors.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 9 - 1952

Four Brass Bands Will Play From Corners of Music Shed

Festival Chorus To Be Joined by Department Leaders at Closing Concert by BSO—Munch Famous for Berlioz Works

TANGLEWOOD — The Berlioz "Requiem," in which Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow afternoon, is seldom heard because of the difficulty of performing it. Famous for his conducting of Berlioz' works, Mr. Munch has chosen it for the final program of the 15th Berkshire Festival.



Hugh Ross

For the occasion the orchestra will be augmented by 27 brasses, who with the regular orchestra brasses will play as brass bands in the four corners of the Shed. The Festival chorus, made up of students who have been prepared under the direction of Hugh Ross to sing in other works conducted by him, Mr. Munch and Pierre Monteux, has also been increased. Included in the 150 singers from every department of the Berkshire Music Center will be members of th faculty. Mr. Ross, Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department, Ingolf Dahl, director of the Tanglewood Study Group and James Aliferis, assistant choral director, their own labors ended, will sing with their students.

The first performance of the "Requiem" in America was at a May music festival in New York in 1881, under the baton of Leopold Damrosch, whose grandchildren and great-grandchildren, who spend their summers in Tyringham, will be in tomorrow's audience. The players are said to have stood up and cheered. No sufficient auditorium was found in down-town New York, so the Seventh Regiment Armory on 67th Street, at that time a "distant location," was engaged.

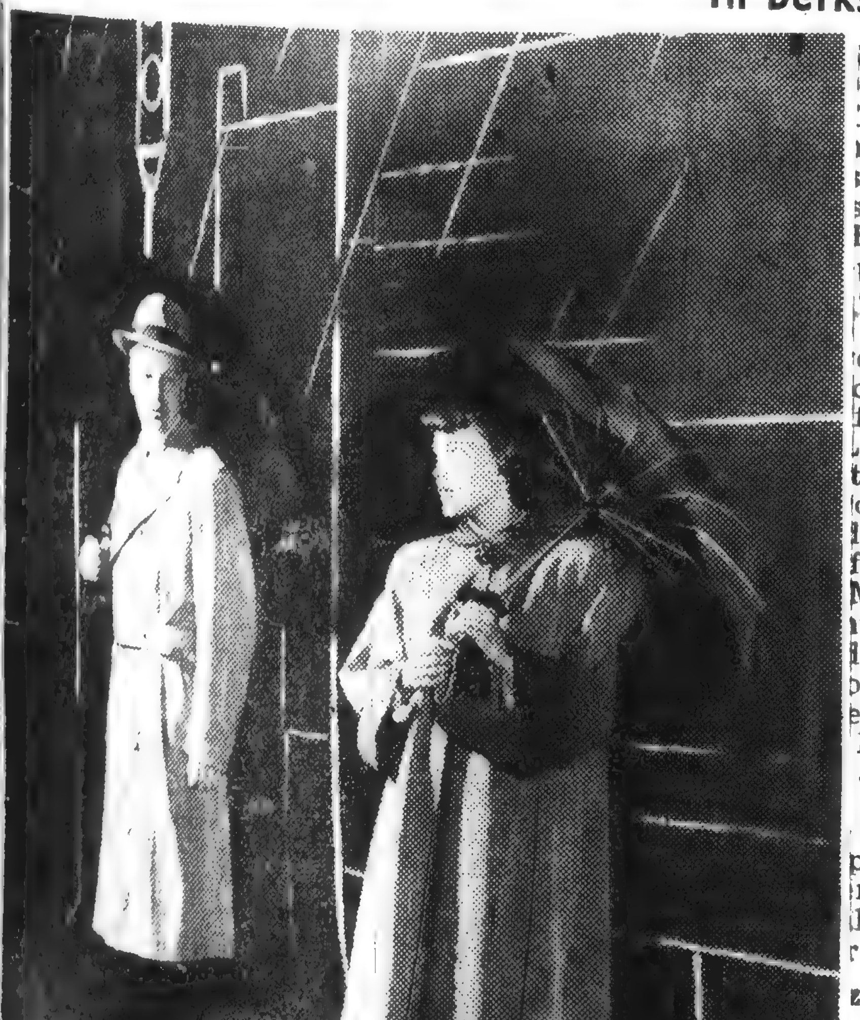
On the 100th anniversary of the first performance in the Chapel of St. Louis at the Invalides in Paris in 1937, Charles Munch repeated it in the same auditorium. He brought it to Boston in April, 1951. It was first intended, according to the composer's account in his memoirs, as a memorial for those who had fallen in the July Revolution of 1830. It was finally dedicated, on its first performance in December, 1837, to the memory of General Damremont, who had been killed in the Algerian campaign.

Tickets are on sale at Tanglewood for seats in the Shed, or for listening from the lawn, for which the colossal work is well suited.

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
AUG 9 - 1952

Two Singers Bring Rewards In Leonard Bernstein Opera

Performances Of Mezzo And Baritone Praised In Berkshire Music Unit's 'Trouble In Tahiti'



TROUBLE IN TAHITI: These two students at the Berkshire Music Center will take part in Leonard Bernstein's short opera, "Trouble in Tahiti," to be performed twice tonight at the Tanglewood theatre for Friends of the Music Center. The first performance is at 8.15, the second at 9.45. At left, Arthur Schoep and at right, Beverly Wolff.

SEAMAN
Staff Writer

D, Mass., Aug. 9 [illegible]iti," called "an [illegible]scenes," and not [illegible] presented here [illegible] Festival Theater [illegible]partment of the [illegible] Center. Leonard [illegible] devised this [illegible] been present [illegible] conduct—having [illegible]fice to Seymour Lipkin, hitherto [illegible] talented young [illegible] on the Rach[illegible], thereby as[illegible] function.

Mr. Bernstein's [illegible]ments has been [illegible], from its origi[illegible] performed twice be[illegible] University. It is rather con[illegible] and, as Boris [illegible] of the depart[illegible] to a rapturous [illegible] pounded of mu[illegible]retta, and what [illegible]lled "European [illegible] that may be.

[illegible]zarre

[illegible]viously derivative, doggedly bizarre and seems to constitute an injudicious marriage of boogie-woogie to German "sprechstimme." This form of inane parlando has been concocted more adroitly by less audacious and more imaginative brains.

And, just to be different—or, perhaps, to emphasize his own limitations — Mr. Bernstein has thought to express himself in 21 wood winds and a string quartet, scarcely an eloquent medium of the gods.

Praise For Singers

This spate of disconnected and dreary sound evoked two rewards, however—the admirable voice and singing of Beverly Wolff, mezzo, and the expert acting and singing of Arthur Schoep, baritone. All trials have their virtues and these, in my dazed opinion, can count as such in the lexicon of experimental opera. Otherwise — Mr. Bernstein has blazed no trails and Puccini, Wagner et al still reign in my benighted brain.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 9 - 1952

Two Violinists Win Heifetz Award

TANGLEWOOD — Three special cash prizes named for their donors were announced today by the Berkshire Music Center the Jascha Heifetz award, the Gregor Piatigorsky award, and the Samuel Wechsler commission.

This year, on the basis of co-operative effort ,talent, and future promise, prizes were awarded to the following: Heifetz award, to two violinists, Serge Blanc of Paris, France, and Elizabeth Walker of Oxford, Ohio; Piatigorsky award to cellist, John Sant Ambrogio of Bloomfield, N.J.; Wechsler commission, to a former student of composition at the Berkshire Music Center, for a short work suitable for study by the Tanglewood Study Group, to Allen Sapp of Boston. Mr. Wechsler is himself a former student at Tanglewood.

All three awards were made at a student orchestra concert at Tanglewood this afternoon, after a full season of activity. The three gifts are grants, in addition to other special scholarships announced earlier this year, and to other forms of financial aid given to deserving students. The Berkshire Music Center is maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in connection with its Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood, and is supported in addition by individual grants for scholarships and the like, and by members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, whose voluntary contributions entitle them to attend the many student concerts during the summer session.

Today's award winners are all well advanced in their musical careers. Mr. Sapp, a student at Tanglewood in 1942, studied with Aaron Copland, and has studied elsewhere with other noted composers. He won the Knight prize for a sonata for violin and piano and the New York Philharmonic Society Competition and has had his music performed in London, Paris, Belgium and Germany. Serge Blanc attended the Conservatoire National de Musique in Paris and has given concerts in Paris, London, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland and Austria. Miss Walker is an assistant professor of music at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio, as well as a member of the Miami University string quartet. Mr. Sant Ambrogio is a student at the Lebanon Valley College in Annville, Pa., and plays in the Harrisburg Symphony.

The prizes were presented by Frederic R. Mann, Philadelphia industrialist and president of the Robin Hood Dell concerts of that city. He is the donor of two scholarships: One for a conducting student in memory of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, and one for a cellist, in honor of Mr. Piatigorsky, who is director of chamber music at the school, on leave of absence for the current session.

Boston [illegible] famed [illegible]wn pre[illegible], trom[illegible]rincipal [illegible]erform the David [illegible]ny No. 4," Rafael [illegible]duct the Chicago [illegible]ormances of Dia[illegible] No. 4," Arthur [illegible]hony No. 5" and [illegible] Roy Harris.

[illegible] seasons, and won the [illegible]towed by the New York [illegible]ics Circle last winter for [illegible]tral music.

[illegible] attendance of 10,250 [illegible] usually reached here [illegible]aturdays and Sundays; [illegible]stein's presence was one [illegible] this mark.

[illegible]ather today succeeded [illegible] rain, and the audience [illegible] considerable contingent [illegible] sitting on the lawn be[illegible] music shed.

[illegible] Bernstein's short opera [illegible] Tahiti," which has [illegible] some revision since its [illegible] Waltham last June, [illegible] twice at Tanglewood [illegible], Mr. Bernstein will [illegible]-final festival con[illegible] night, which is [illegible] memorial of Serge [illegible] who was so closely [illegible] the history of [illegible]wood. F. D. P.

[92]

Boston
famed own pree, tromprincipal erform the David ny No. 4," Rafael duct the Chicago

ormances of Dia-
No. 4," Arthur
hony No. 5" and Roy Harris.

easons, and owed by the Circle last ral music.
attendance usually rea turdays and tein's presenc his mark.
ther today
rain, and th considerable sitting on th
music shed.
ernstein's s Tahiti," ome revisio
Waltham twice at T
Mr. Ber mi-final fe night, memoria who was the
ood. P. D. P.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 9 - 1952

Thor Johnson Leads Student Orchestra

First Pupil At Music Center Back at Tanglewood

[illegible] Berkshire Music [illegible] conductor [illegible] final [illegible] session. He le[illegible] in Bar[illegible] orchestra tha[illegible]

[illegible] a letter [illegible] school in the [illegible] enroll[illegible] off the press, [illegible] one of the first students [illegible] conducting under the late Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood. [illegible] of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra.

Born in Wisconsin, he grew up in Winston-Salem, N.C., where he attended the public schools. He received an A.B. degree at the University of North Carolina and a master of music at the University of Michigan. While studying at Ann Arbor he conducted the Grand Rapids Symphony Orchestra for [illegible] years.

He studied in Europe under Felix Weingartner, Bruno Walter and [illegible] and at Tanglewood for two seasons. He was professor of music at the University of Michigan, conducting the Musical Society's annual May festival. During the war he organized the first soldier symphony at Fort Monmouth, and taught at the Army School of Music in England. He has guest-conducted the Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago Orchestras.

From 1946 to 1947 he conducted the Juilliard School Orchestra, going to Cincinnati as permanent conductor in 1947. Since the season closed in April he has conducted at the Ann Arbor and Cincinnati May festivals, the Ojai, Cal., festival, the Brevard, N.C., festival and the Schubert festival in Charlottesville, Va. He received last month the award of the year from Phi Mu Alpha convention in Cincinnati. In 1949 he won the Alice Ditson award.

---

nuate. How else can the constant identifienhower with Stevenenson's qualifications advantages cannot be he Republican Party

ndowing Eisenhower characteristics. They does not matter who sident since both are n view of the similar-e, Eisenhower should cause change is essen-
o-party system.
n of the qualificacandidates, however,
the similarity is as tive fields

governor.
he has se
Adjustme has heade
the milita retary of war. In sisted the also serve
U.N. Gene
The ide with Stev tempt to Stevenson

Pittsfield

---

nd Outs of Bruss

of THE EAGLE:—

ne Eagle reader can st disheartened man learn the ins and outs, of Brussels sprouts.
edge on Berkshire's
d some in domicile in le dirt in lots of puny, ed pots. I fed and wa-seed and catered to its and then could barely it to see my seedlings

t said 'twould take ten e had more impatient t, in less than half a routlet's outlet reached ach slender stalk bore es, then seemed to balk heaves; for, evening dropped inert, then,
l, it bit the dirt.
illy dilettantes, I dillyith plants; my eye is umb's as green as anyints a screen. I'd ask berg what to try; but probably ly as a pu clent plan pen would Thesmoph would co counseling Crandall ancient Be from his would pin

So plea dell! Tak tell a ha of when the genus why it tak why, with falls so so man shou to be a fl clearly ro
ly flouts;
louts hav
sprouts.
A Becket.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 9 - 1952

Tanglewood

The Berkshire Festival

* * *

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 8.—The season's operatic activities at Tanglewood closed this evening with two performances of Leonard Bernstein's "Trouble in Tahiti" in the Berkshire Music Center's Theater Concert Hall given for contributing friends of the center. Active members of the center's opera department performed scenes from several Italian operas in the afternoon.

Mr. Bernstein's short opera was first performed in the Brandeis University festival at Waltham, Mass; there has been some later revision in both the libretto and the score. The composer is his own librettist for this work, which is his first in this form. The cast included Beverly Wolff and Arthur Schoep, as the contentious wife and husband, and William Harder, Elizabeth Winslow and Joseph Scott as a commenting trio, in this account of suburban marital difficulties. Seymour Lipkin conducted the orchestra of four strings and twenty-one wind instruments.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch was in good form for last night's Berkshire Festival concert in Tanglewood's music shed, where Howard Swanson's "Short Symphony" followed Schumann's Symphony in B flat major. The Swanson work, which won the New York Music Critics' Circle latest award, had not been previously played by the Bostonians, but the performance gave an impression of understanding of its general spirit and expressive nuances, as well as of instrumental finish and clarity of detail.

The style of the work has its individual elements and others, such as constant motion of a certain basic rhythm and thematic figures contributing to it, which are typical of several contemporary American symphonic works. Mr. Swanson also shows lyric inclinations, as in the andante and the intermediate episode in the finale. The first movement, in its short course, is successful in suggesting increasing tension and momentum; this effect is lessened by a somewhat episodic character. The composer was warmly applauded.

Artur Rubinstein, making his Tanglewood debut, received an ovation from the audience after the performance of Brahms' Second Piano Concerto. The interpretation exhibited the pianist's consummate technical ability and his understanding of romantic music such as this; the orchestral playing was well balanced and co-ordinated. But both the soloist and the conductor seemed to realize the expressive resources of this concerto to a varying rather than a constant degree; the piano and the orchestra both provided absorbingly imaginative measures and others in which a listener's attention was less tempted to penetrate beyond external details.

The program books announce that Mr. Munch will again be director, both of the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center, next summer. Details of the 1953 festival are not yet worked out, but it is believed that the number and distribution of the concerts will be as usual, and that Pierre Monteux will again be one of the guest conductors.

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
AUG 9 - 1952

Two Singers Bring Rewards In Leonard Bernstein Opera

Performances Of Mezzo And Baritone Praised In Berkshire Music Unit's 'Trouble In Tahiti'

By JULIAN SEAMAN
Blade Staff Writer

TANGLEWOOD, Mass., Aug. 9 "Trouble in Tahiti," called "an opera in seven scenes," and not much music was presented here last night in the Festival Theater by the opera department of the Berkshire Music Center. Leonard Bernstein, who devised this trifle, may have been present but he did not conduct—having relegated that office to Seymour Lipkin. Mr. Lipkin, hitherto known as a talented young pianist who won the Rachmaninoff award, thereby assumed another function.

This item in Mr. Bernstein's list of accomplishments has been altered, I am told, from its original version, performed twice before at Brandeis University, Waltham, Mass. It is rather consciously clever and, as Boris Goldovsky, head of the department, explained to a rapturous audience, is compounded of musical comedy, operetta, and what Mr. Goldovsky called "European opera," whatever that may be.

Score Called Bizarre

The score is obviously derivative, doggedly bizarre and seems to constitute an injudicious marriage of boogie-woogie to German "sprechstimme." This form of inane parlando has been concocted more adroitly by less audacious and more imaginative brains.

And, just to be different—or, perhaps, to emphasize his own limitations — Mr. Bernstein has thought to express himself in 21 wood winds and a string quartet, scarcely an eloquent medium of the gods.

Praise For Singers

This spate of disconnected and dreary sound evoked two rewards, however—the admirable voice and singing of Beverly Wolff, mezzo, and the expert acting and singing of Arthur Schoep, baritone. All trials have their virtues and these, in my dazed opinion, can count as such in the lexicon of experimental opera. Otherwise — Mr. Bernstein has blazed no trails and Puccini, Wagner et al still reign in my benighted brain.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 9 - 1952

sparrow hawks and

Four Brass Bands Will Play From Corners of Music Shed

Festival Chorus To Be Joined by Department Leaders at Closing Concert by BSO— Munch Famous for Berlioz Works

Hugh Ross

TANGLEWOOD — The Berlioz "Requiem," in which Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow afternoon, is seldom heard because of the difficulty of performing it. Famous for his conducting of Berlioz' works, Mr. Munch has chosen it for the final program of the 15th Berkshire Festival.

For the occasion the orchestra will be augmented by 27 brasses, who with the regular orchestra brasses will play as brass bands in the four corners of the Shed. The Festival chorus, made up of students who have been prepared under the direction of Hugh Ross to sing in other works conducted by him, Mr. Munch and Pierre Monteux, has also been increased. Included in the 150 singers from every department of the Berkshire Music Center will be members of th faculty. Mr. Ross, Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department, Ingolf Dahl, director of the Tanglewood Study Group and James Aliferis, assistant choral director, their own labors ended, will sing with their students.

The first performance of the "Requiem" in America was at a May music festival in New York in 1881, under the baton of Leopold Damrosch, whose grandchildren and great-grandchildren, who spend their summers in Tyringham, will be in tomorrow's audience. The players are said to have stood up and cheered. No sufficient auditorium was found in down-town New York, so the Seventh Regiment Armory on 67th Street, at that time a "distant location," was engaged.

On the 100th anniversary of the first performance in the Chapel of St. Louis at the Invalides in Paris in 1937, Charles Munch repeated it in the same auditorium. He brought it to Boston in April, 1951. It was first intended, according to the composer's account in his memoirs, as a memorial for those who had fallen in the July Revolution of 1830. It was finally dedicated, on its first performance in December, 1837, to the memory of General Damremont, who had been killed in the Algerian campaign.

Tickets are on sale at Tanglewood for seats in the Shed, or for listening from the lawn, for which the colossal work is well suited.

PITTSFIELD, MASS.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE
AUG 9 - 1952

Two Violinists Win Heifetz Award

TANGLEWOOD — Three special cash prizes named for their donors were announced today by the Berkshire Music Center the Jascha Heifetz award, the Gregor Piatigorsky award, and the Samuel Wechsler commission.

This year, on the basis of co-operative effort ,talent, and future promise, prizes were awarded to the following: Heifetz award, to two violinists, Serge Blanc of Paris, France, and Elizabeth Walker of Oxford, Ohio; Piatigorsky award to cellist, John Sant Ambrogio of Bloomfield, N.J.; Wechsler commission, to a former student of composition at the Berkshire Music Center, for a short work suitable for study by the Tanglewood Study Group, to Allen Sapp of Boston. Mr. Wechsler is himself a former student at Tanglewood.

All three awards were made at a student orchestra concert at Tanglewood this afternoon, after a full season of activity. The three gifts are grants, in addition to other special scholarships announced earlier this year, and to other forms of financial aid given to deserving students. The Berkshire Music Center is maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in connection with its Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood, and is supported in addition by individual grants for scholarships and the like, and by members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, whose voluntary contributions entitle them to attend the many student concerts during the summer session.

Today's award winners are all well advanced in their musical careers. Mr. Sapp, a student at Tanglewood in 1942, studied with Aaron Copland, and has studied elsewhere with other noted composers. He won the Knight prize for a sonata for violin and piano and the New York Philharmonic Society Competition and has had his music performed in London, Paris, Belgium and Germany. Serge Blanc attended the Conservatoire National de Musique in Paris and has given concerts in Paris, London, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland and Austria. Miss Walker is an assistant professor of music at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio, as well as a member of the Miami University string quartet. Mr. Sant Ambrogio is a student at the Lebanon Valley College in Annville, Pa., and plays in the Harrisburg Symphony.

The prizes were presented by Frederic R. Mann, Philadelphia industrialist and president of the Robin Hood Dell concerts of that city. He is the donor of two scholarships: One for a conducting student in memory of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, and one for a cellist, in honor of Mr. Piatigorsky, who is director of chamber music at the school, on leave of absence for the current session.

[92]

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 10 1952

Opera Comes Into Its Own In Tanglewood's Last Week

Mozart's 'Titus' and Bernstein's 'Trouble in Tahiti' Staged; Lighting Effects, Modern 'Props,' Beautiful Costumes Also Outstanding

By VICTOR PRAHL

Opera came into its own during the final week of activities at Tanglewood with two performances of Mozart's "Titus" on Monday and Tuesday nights and two of Leonard Bernstein's short opera "Trouble in Tahiti" on Friday night. This was probably the first performance in this country of the Mozart work.

In his introductory remarks Boris Goldovsky warned the audience that it was an old-fashioned work, that it was even such when it was written, but such an apology was hardly necessary for in the excellent translation by himself and Sarah Caldwell, the story was clear, the plot held the interest, and surely as a spectacle this opera has probably never had a more beautiful production anywhere. The latter was aided greatly by the magnificant lighting effects, that of throwing a colorful design on the back drop. This innovation has been used with success for the last few seasons in the productions at Smith College but the more spacious stage at Tanglewood allowed it on a much larger scale. Some of the scenic images were 44 feet high and 32 feet wide. The towering arch reflected at the back in the throne room of the palace was impressive and the scene depicting the burning of Rome highly realistic. These with the skillful use of modern properties front-stage and unusually beautiful costumes resulted in a production that surpassed by far anything we have seen at Tanglewood.

The score with its patterned arias duets and trios is old-fashioned but if not Mozart at his best it contains many melodies of charm and certainly some splendid show pieces. These fell to six gifted young singers who made the most of them. Lolyd Ostenbrug brought dignity of bearing and a fine sense of lyricism to the sympathetic role of the Emperor Titus, Irene Jordan, who we understand has been singing mezzo parts at the Met, articulated well the florid soprano part of Vitellia but where the tessitura was consistently high the voice was forced and became unpleasant in quality. Sarah Jane Fleming lent a youthful sweetness to the role of Servilia and Jacqueline Langee with her firm alto tones did well by the part of Annius. We enjoyed most the fine singing of Shirley Winston as Sextus. Hers is a mezzo-soprano, beautifully produced, tonally even and wide of range. She handled the famous coloratura aria of Sextus with great skill, and she is a good actress. Smaller parts were in the capable hands of Richard Sharretts (Publius), Arthur Schoep (Lentulus) and Robert Mesrobian (Marius).

Boris Goldovsky, who conducted the orchestra in his usual efficient manner, once again has added a major achievement to the opera department of the Berkshire Center.

Rubenstein Delights

At Thursday's concert Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony projected happily the rapturous mood of Robert Schumann's Symphony No. 1, "Spring," the one he wrote during the first year of his marriage to Clara, and has been called one long love song.

Between the two romantic works of the concert, Mr. Munch sandwiched Howard Swanson's "Short Symphony." This work by the gifted young Negro composer was voted the New York Critics' Circle award last season and has already been heard elsewhere. In this 12 minute work he has aimed at "the depth, seriousness, and intensity inherent in a large work." We would say that in this he has been for the most part successful. It was easily listenable at a first hearing and although rather fragmentary it was pleasant following the neat development of the clearcut themes. We could not help thinking of Ravel at the beginning of the slow part for winds.

It was a delight hearing Artur Rubinstein in this setting, for his is the type of playing that can take the large open spaces, and the Brahms Concerto No. 2 in B flat is a work sufficiently grand in proportion to let himself go. It was a performance in the grand manner with

---

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE

AUG 10 1952

Tanglewood Concerts Bring New Era, and Dinner Rush, to Berkshire Hills

By JAY EDGERTON
Minneapolis Tribune Staff Writer

LENOX, MASS.—Tens of thousands of students, music lovers and plain tourists from all over the world stream into this central valley of Massachusetts' Berkshire hills each July and August for the Tanglewood concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The musical events which center at the historic Tappan estate, overlooking the lake called Stockbridge bowl, where Nathaniel Hawthorne once lived and wrote, have converted the old resort town of Lenox into a kind of American Salzburg.

Munch

Twenty years ago this Shangri-la country between the green and rolling folds of the Berkshires — summer abode of Carnegies, Vanderbilts and Westinghouses in the days before income tax—seemed on his last legs socially and culturally. But today a new cultural life, more vigorous and democratic, pumps through the valleys that Emerson, Hawthorne and Melville once loved.

Back a few hundred yards from the Lenox-Stockbridge road is the elegant white home where Edith Wharton, author of "Ethan Frome" and "The Age of Innocence" once entertained the great Henry James.

It is symbolic of the Berkshires' change of social and cultural focus that "The Mount," Mrs. Wharton's sumptuous French-type house with its paved terrace and formal gardens, is now a girls' school in winter, a tourist house in summer.

Grass and weeds now grow on the terrace where James once proclaimed to his hostess that the most beautiful words in the English language were "summer afternoon." There is a forlorn, tired look to the few remnants of Mrs. Wharton's gilt furniture, pictures and tapestries still at "The Mount."

BUT if the old turn-of-the-century glory is gone, a new and more effective vitality has come with the Tanglewood concerts. These have thousands of followers all over the east, and summer weekends bring them pouring into the valley from up and down the Atlantic coast.

Summer life in the area now revolves around the "festival" —meaning not only the big concerts played by the Boston Symphony but also the score of little concerts and chamber music recitals staged by Berkshire students.

The concerts began in a humble way in the summer of 1934, when they were held in a tent. In 1937, the festival went into business in a big way through the gift of the Tanglewood estate to the Boston orchestra.

The late great Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's director, became the moving genius behind Tanglewood and under his leadership both the public concerts and the Tanglewood school for budding musicians became the resounding successes they are today.

On the 210 acres of the estate—velvet lawns and formal gardens shaded by elm, pine and birch—the great "shed" planned by the Finnish architect, Eliel Saarinen, smaller concert halls, a[illegible] ministrative q[illegible] been built.

War inte[illegible] activities, [illegible] are back. [illegible] Koussevitzk[illegible] work has [illegible] expanded [illegible] who suc[illegible] conductor.

Hundreds [illegible] shires to s[illegible] weeks of [illegible] which span[illegible] of July and [illegible] August. Conc[illegible] Thursday a[illegible] and Sunda[illegible] er concerts are [illegible] and it is possib[illegible] kind of music [illegible] June to mi[illegible]

For the "season" [illegible] area is given [illegible] housing and an[illegible] ors, and the B[illegible] nities have done [illegible] job of avoiding [illegible] tion.

IT IS POSSIBL[illegible] very good lunch f[illegible] dinner for $2 [illegible] clean, comfortab[illegible] a night. More ex[illegible] touting "Frenc[illegible] charge $6 to $8 [illegible] ent lunch [illegible] American [illegible] a day. Bu[illegible] ceptions and [illegible] always avoid [illegible]

On concert [illegible] to have a dinn[illegible] otherwise you may [illegible] tle for a bowl of so[illegible] sandwich at the Ta[illegible] freshment tent.

On days of con[illegible] sands drive in from [illegible] New Jersey and C[illegible] and it is all but [illegible] get a decent meal [illegible] have one staked out [illegible]

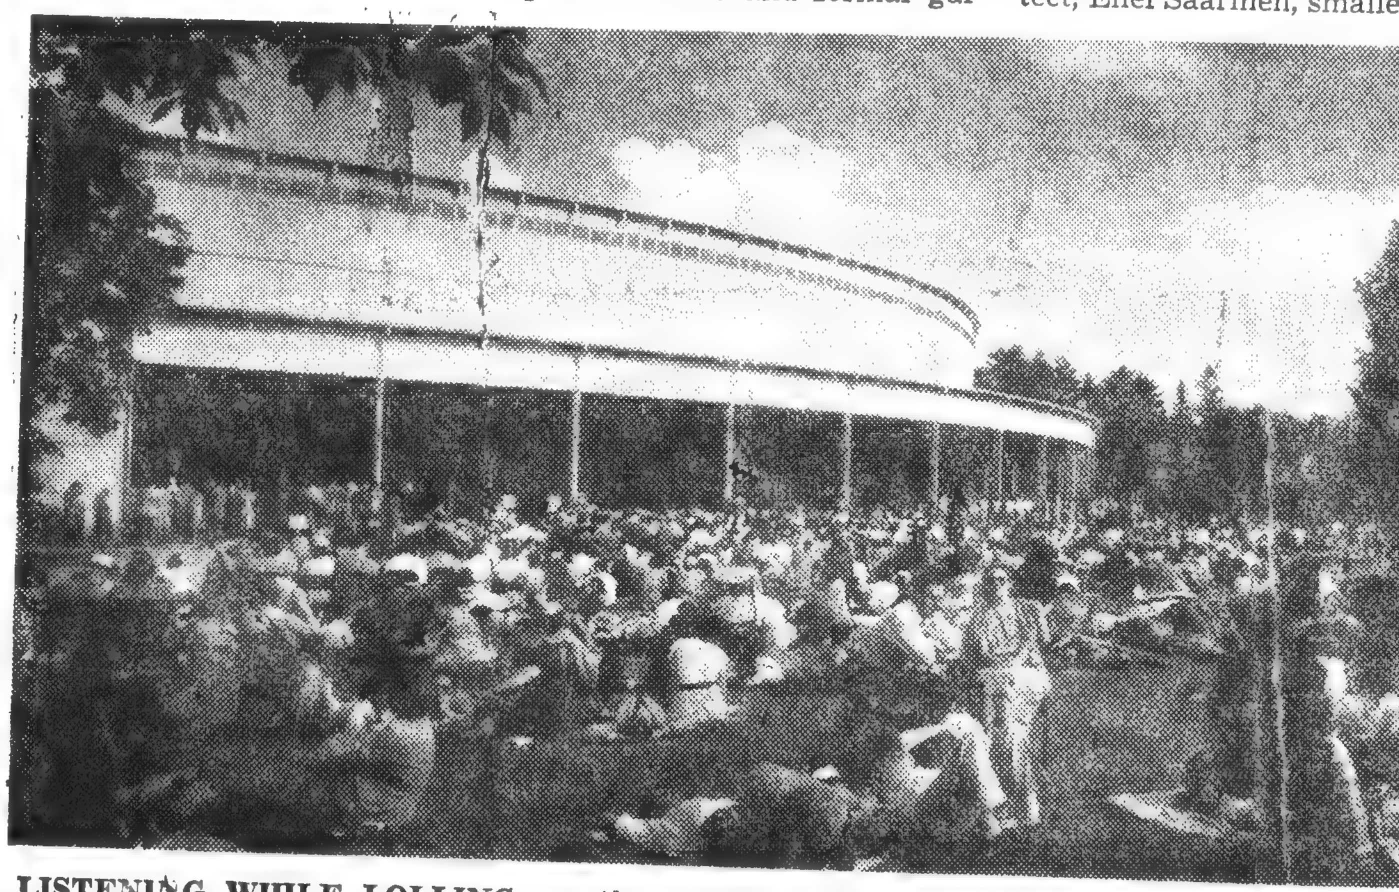
Most people p[illegible] ners and early arriv[illegible] Tanglewood in order to [illegible] traffic jams—alth[illegible] are far worse in repu[illegible] the facts warrant. [illegible] and local police have d[illegible] an efficient job of [illegible] dling that it is poss[illegible] the concert shed af[illegible] number and be at [illegible] table seven miles a[illegible] utes later.

One of the [illegible] of the Tanglew[illegible] their easy info[illegible] dreds loll on [illegible] ing to the music [illegible] the open-sided s[illegible] women come in s[illegible] although it is n[illegible] to see form[illegible]

A CURIOUS [illegible] ton formal[illegible] rule that s[illegible] not be worn on [illegible] grounds wh[illegible] cert. It i[illegible] slacks are all[illegible] time because [illegible] the grass and [illegible] ty dresses. B[illegible] there is no ex[illegible] havior and st[illegible] men at the [illegible] "wrap-around" [illegible] nished free to [illegible] defy dress convent[illegible]

One of the [illegible] lights on the strange [illegible] no concerts" rule is [illegible] enforced by you[illegible] invariably wear [illegible] faded khaki pan[illegible] ets and gum-sole[illegible] are the young [illegible] as ushers and [illegible] the arbiters of [illegible] Tanglewood.

Tanglewood cl[illegible] son Sunday (toda[illegible] lioz' "Requiem," [illegible] Munch. It has be[illegible] of outstanding suc[illegible] orchestra performin[illegible] ly under the directio[illegible] Pierre Monteux an[illegible] Leonard Bernstein. [illegible] Tanglewood fans are [illegible] forward to an even grea[illegible] son next year. Koussev[illegible] great dream of a national [illegible] sic center has come true, [illegible] ally, in the green hills of [illegible] ern Massachusetts. ■



LISTENING WHILE LOLLING on the lawn near Tanglewood's big "concert shed" near Lenox, Mass.—a photograph showing a typical audience for one of the Boston Symphony's afternoon concerts.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST

AUG 10 1952

Music Notes

The final weekend of the Berkshire Festival includes a concert by the student orchestra conducted by Thor Johnson playing the music of Brahms, Bartok, Tschaikowsky and Gershwin, Saturday afternoon. In the evening Leonard Bernstein takes to the podium for the annual Koussevitsky memorial concert featuring the works of Bach, Copland and Sibelius. Charles Munch presides over the last and final offering Sunday afternoon, Berlioz' "The Requiem."

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 10 1952

The Mu

ents at Tangl
With Boston Sy

By JAY

at is Tanglewood? Ask nd they will answer, "T
the Boston Symphony
state on which the Bost ny plays for six weeks August." And this, m
, it is. But it is also mo
"more" involves an on of the fact that Tang alive with music presen rs than the redoubta
It seethes music, breat and offers to the d auditor performan ck neither sophisticat
sh. In short, it provi
s concerts by young m men who are students
ood's Berkshire Mu
the school out of wh
f our grander mus have flowed.

concerts—and what c ey are!—are open to h to contribute to e Music Center, thus m contributors "Friends" of the organization. Th in need (who are frie
, are thereupon tw
They are given to rea
y have helped to supp
ely musical establishm are also tendered a p them to visit the my recitals that dot ood lawns. With per the new patron of y travel, at appoin
one or another of Music Center con hear programs rang ology from works of nce to those so new t
from the page.

eporter, who has rece
from a five-day visit shires, heard, in addit
Boston Symphony Orch
erts, no less than whipped into shape who have done their True, the past week center's annual "Tang Parade," at which t l pulls out all its st ents five student eve y; but the four rema rts were in no way as th Tanglewood's ma
nt display.

osers' forum, a concert music, a song recital a ation of Mozart's li pera "La Clemenza
ese were the events
d each of them offe ce glories not often at student recitals. O osers' forum, listed mu dent creators from T el; Milan, Italy; Baysi
nd; New Rochelle, N
Toronto, Ontario. A eatured songs by We nd Schubert, togeth
s rarely crossed at t usic counters of N
ethoven's "An die fer
Ravel's "Cinq Melod Grecques" and Britte sland."

r five days passed, in shuttle between a nob and a noble school.
edit to either that t mphony Orchestra a ire Music Center sha amping grounds. In e artistic ideals of bo high.

* * *

als: Though it has n ally announced, it seem Maurice Ravel's one-a

TIGHT BINDING

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AU

The Musical Scene

...udents at Tanglewood Share Spotlight With Boston Symphony Orchestra

By JAY S. HARRISON

...question of several listeners-at-... d, of course, is the summer ...a." 'Or else, "It is the name

... "L'Heure Espagnol" will be ...d to the repertoire of the ... York City Opera Company ... fall season, which begins ...the City Center on Sept. 18. The American premiere of ...i Dallapiccola's Concerto for ...no ... Chamber Orchestra ... be ...ven, next Saturday, by ...e N. B.C. Summer Symphony, ...th the composer as soloist and ... orchestra under the direction ... Massimo Freccia. . . . Today ... 3:00, in Tanglewood, Charles ...nch and the Boston Symphony ...chestra presents Berlioz's pro-...ous "Requiem," and the work ... be repeated next Saturday ... at the National Music Camp ...Interlochen, Mich. At that ...mance Maynard Klein, pro-... of choral music at the Uni-... of Minnesota, is to con-... 500 voice Interlochen ...al Choir.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
AUG 10 1952

Tanglewood
The Berkshire Festival

* * *

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 9.—More than seven hours of public musical activity marked the last day but one of the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center's session at Tanglewood this morning, afternoon and evening. Leonard Bernstein, whose opera, "Trouble in Tahiti," was performed last night in the theater concert hall, conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the semi-final festival concert tonight in the music shed, where the orchestra and festival chorus rehearsed in the morning under Charles Munch for tomorrow afternoon's closing performance of the Berlioz "Requiem."

The Center's student orchestra gave its last concert this afternoon in the music shed, with Thor Johnson, conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony; Elyakum Shapira, from Israel; Lorin Maazel and Robert Mandell conducting. Gladys Stein was soloist in part of Gershwin's piano concerto.

Among the prize winners announced at this concert by Frederic R. Mann, president of Philadelphia's Robin Hood Dell Concerts, is Allen Sapp, of Boston, commissioned to write a short work to be performed by the Tanglewood study group. The center's small choir also gave an afternoon concert under the direction of James Aliferis.

The Boston Symphony's evening concert was in memory of Serge Koussevitzky and the program's three works were in one way or another attributed to him.

Maximillian Steinberg's arrangement of the String Concerto in D major attributed to Emanuel Bach only by its slow movement was made at Koussevitzky's suggestion and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation had commissioned Aaron Copland's Third Symphony, which Koussevitzky and the Bostonians had introduced six years ago. The choice of Sibelius' Fifth Symphony for the close reflected Koussevitzky's devotion to the Finnish composer.

Mr. Bernstein was warmly acclaimed after both of last month's performances of "Trouble in Tahiti." The work, which occupies only forty-five minutes, has a cast of five. Beverly Wolff and Arthur Schoep represented the disagreeing wife and husband, and Elizabeth Winslow William Harder and Joseph Scott sang in the trio which commented upon the expressive background and action. Seymour Lipkin conducted and Sarah Caldwell was the stage director.

The opera was first performed at the Brandeis Festival in Waltham, Mass., June 12. Mr. Bernstein has since made some revisions both in his libretto and in his score. Owing to its character, the work was better served by the relatively intimate dimensions of the Tanglewood theater than by its outdoor staging in Waltham. It tells of a husband and wife living in a metropolitan commuting area who bicker at breakfast and, after pursuing separate activities during the day, suspend their bickering to attend a terrible movie which the wife has already seen during the afternoon.

The opera has its touches of satire and also of wistfulness along with a certain sense of sophistication. The text is flexibly and idiomatically set; one of the music's best assets is an ability to suggest and project an expressive situation, both in general atmosphere and detail.

What one missed in the music, however, was a sense of unity along with its necessary variety. The idiom ranged from that of jazz and the Broadway stage to one of a more usual Broadway type; the result, despite the composer's skill in these differing atmospheres, was conglomerate; it told, despite its effectiveness, relatively little of a style primarily associated with Mr. Bernstein. Although the moods of the story were well suggested, some episodes seemed slightly protracted, and the impression at the end was inconclusive. This effect may have been desired, but it was not clear at the close whether or not the work had come to an end.

The two principals gave very commendable characterizations, and Miss Wolff showed a distinct gift for lyric comedy; the trio's singing was well unified, but at times overamplified. The instrumentation for wind and a few strings was effective in its color and sonority.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
0 1952

Hotbed at high altitudes. . . . Aspen, Colo., already a world-famed gathering place for culture seekers, is the native mecca for music makers, music thinkers and ordinary sight-seers. The above aerial shot shows the community sprawled before Independence Pass, with the pivotal Tent in the foreground.

The Musical Digest

By IRVING KOLODIN

A Lofty Hotbed Of Men and Music

ASPEN, Colo., Aug. 9.—If you can imagine a hotbed of anything at an altitude of 7,850 feet, then you can properly describe this idyllic place in the heart of the Colorado peaks as a hotbed of music-making, music-thinking and music-being. The three facets of the matter need to be emphasized, for it is just this diversity that makes Aspen different from the other centers of comparable activity in these broad United States.

Of course, if you don't relish having your bag carried by a Ph.D., or the soup served in the Hotel Jerome dining room by a budding rival to Erica Morini, don't come to Aspen. That introduction serves to put you in the mood of a place where everybody seems to have come for some purpose (above and beyond the call of the beautiful scenery, the light, bracing air or a stimulating swim in the inviting pool.) Hence there is a sense of unanimity and fellowship quite lacking in the average resort.

◆

THOUGHTS about Aspen tend to become inextricably tangled with thoughts about Tanglewood, in the Berkshire Hills, if only for the physical link they share in the family of Finnish architects named Saarinen. Father Eilel built the famous fan-shaped shed in which Serge Koussevitzky began a notable tradition with the Boston Symphony. Son Eero designed the good-looking, functional amphitheater here in Aspen, which is sizable enough to accommodate a symphony orchestra and chorus on its cleverly tiered stage, yet intimate enough to be a perfect setting for the chamber-music performances which predominate in Aspen.

The sloping bowl was scooped out of the earth by bulldozers personally supervised by Dimitri Mitropoulos (who presided at the first festival here in 1949), surfaced with cement and crowned with a gay brown and white tent, which serves equally well to fend off the elements and reflect the sound from the stage.

To one who remembers the tent-phase of Tanglewood Aspen now has the same kind of purposeful informality that prevailed in the Berkshires before it became a tourist's haven, with audiences of ten or twelve thousand in attendance and a commercial pattern to match. The students come and go from their classes in slacks or bobby socks, without the high-pressure competitive sense that pervades the workings of the Tanglewood summer school, where the "pupils" are just a jump away from professional careers.

Such "professors" as Violinist Szymon Goldberg, Pianist Victor Babin or Clarinetist Reginald Kell are equally unostentatious about their work. When they get together for the week-end concerts it need be hardly guaranteed that the music-making would be worth an ocean crossing, not a mere train or auto journey, to hear.

◆

TO GIVE a properly rounded view of Aspen, it should be mentioned that while music is a considerable part of the activity here, it is by no means the only or ing Goethe bicentennial observance in 1949 (to the extent that the eminent philosopher-musician Albert Schweitzer journeyed here from his post in South Africa) has a complementary pattern of activity which is this summer considering the large subject of "Human Freedom."

If this sounds formidable, don't think for a moment that it is in any way stuffy. The fish bite like mad before and after the discussions, there are fine trails for an early morning horseback ride and, if all else fails, there is always the harmony of music to soothe the ruffled spirits.

(Copyright, 1952, the Saturday Review.)

SUNDAY STANDARD-TIMES, NEW BEDFORD, MASS., AUGUST 10, 1952

Awards Given At Tanglewood

3 Special Cash Prize Winners Announced

Special to The Standard-Times

LENOX, Aug. 9—Three special cash prizes, named for their donors, are announced today by the Berkshire Music Center. They include the Jascha Heifetz Award, the Gregor Piatigorsky Award and the Samuel Wechsler Commission.

This year, on the basis of cooperative effort, talent and future promise, these prizes were awarded as follows:

The Heifetz Award . . . to two violinists, Serge Blanc of Paris, France, and Elizabeth Walker of Oxford, Ohio; the Piatigorsky Award to cellist, John Sant Ambrogio of Bloomfield, N. J.; the Wechsler Commission, to a former student of composition at the Berkshire Music Center, for a short work suitable for study by the Tanglewood Study Group, to Allen Sapp of Boston.

All awards were made at a student orchestra concert at Tanglewood this afternoon, after a full season of activity. The three gifts are grants, in addition to other special scholarships announced earlier this year, and to other forms of financial aid given to deserving students.

The Berkshire Music Center is maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in connection with its Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood. It is supported, in addition, by individual grants for scholarships and the like, and by members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. The latter's voluntary contributions entitle them to attend the many student concerts during the Summer session.

Today's award winners are well advanced in their musical careers. Mr. Sapp, a student at Tanglewood in 1942, studied with Aaron Copland and has studied elsewhere with other noted composers. He won the Knight Prize for a "Sonata for Violin and Piano" and the New York Philharmonic Society Competition and has had his music performed in London, Paris, Belgium and Germany.

Mr. Blanc attended the Conservatoire National de Musique in Paris and has given concerts in Paris, London, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland and Austria. Miss Walker is an assistant professor of music at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio, as well as a member of the Miami University String Quartet. Mr. Ambrogio is a student at the Lebanon Valley College in Annville, Pa., and plays in the Harrisburg Symphony.

The prizes were presented by Frederic R. Mann, Philadelphia industrialist and president of the Robin Hood Dell concerts of that city. He is the donor of two scholarships, one for a conducting student in memory of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, and one for a cellist, in honor of Mr. Piatigorsky, who is director of chamber music at the school, on leave of absence for the current session.

NASHVILLE, TENN.
MORNING TENNESSEAN

AUG 10 1952

Berkshire Fete Charms Music Lovers

Happy music lovers relax outside the Music shed at a Tanglewood concert.

This is one in a series of articles on the summer musical scene in New York and other cities by Louis Nicholas, music critic of THE NASHVILLE TENNESSEAN. Nicholas, associate professor of music at Peabody college, is on leave of absence, taking advanced graduate work at Teacher's college, Columbia university.

By LOUIS NICHOLAS
TENNESSEAN Music Critic

LENOX, Mass. — Surely no place in the country presents such a rich and inspiring array of musical delights in the summer as the Berkshire festival.

And the pleasure is far from being entirely aural, for Tanglewood, Lenox and all the surrounding countryside is so beautiful that no more perfect setting for superby musical performances could be imagined.

Summer music festivals in the Berkshires date back to 1934 when Henry Hadley and sixty-five members of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony society gave the first Stockbridge festival. The Boston Symphony and Koussevitzky took over in 1936. From 1937, the concerts were given at Tanglewood, the 210 acre estate given to the Boston Symphony orchestra by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan.

The house on the estate which was built in 1865, and now serves as the Berkshire Music center.

Remarkable Structure

The scene of all the big orchestral programs is the Music shed, a remarkable structure designed by the Finnish architect, Eliel Saarinen. The acoustics of this building which has a capacity of 6037 could scarcely be improved upon. The sound of the music carries so well that hundreds sit on benches outside the shed, and thousands bring blankets and pillows and sit or lie on the grass around the area. A delightful informality prevails.

In addition, there is a Theater-Concert hall seating 1152 which is ideal for opera and concert, and a Chamber Music hall seating 300 which has panels on one side that may be opened to accommodate another 200 or more outside in good weather.

There is a wonderful spirit prevailing in the entire surrounding country as well as at the festival. For the love of music, the joy of making and of hearing it animates everyone.

I reached Tanglewood in time for the chief event of the annual Tanglewood on Parade—the concert by the Boston Symphony with noted alumni of the Berkshire Music center as conductors and soloists. Earlier there had been performances by overy department of the Center.

Lead Chorus, Orchestra

The crowning program of the evening had James Aliferis leading chorus and orchestra in the last movement of Lucas Foss' "The Prairie"; Howard Shanet conducting for Jacob Krachmalnick, the young concertmaster of the Philadelphia orchestra, as he played the Chausson "Poeme"; Lucas Foss, the brilliant pianist of the Boston Symphony and a highly gifted composer, conducting for Seymour Lipkin's masterly performance of Mendelssohn's "Piano Concerto in G minor"; and Leonard Bernstein, the dynamic and exceedingly vital conductor of the last act of "Carmen" with Mildred Miller, David Lloyd and James Pease as the principal singers.

Lloyd and Pease will be remembered in Nashville as the tenor and bass soloists in the Nashville Symphony orchestra performance of Beethoven's "Ninth Symphony" three seasons ago. Lloyd, especially, after a rather colorless start, worked up to a powerful and moving climax.

On Saturday morning I heard the rehearsal of the evening's symphony concert of excerpts from Wagner's "Ring" with Pierre Monteaux as the conductor of performances of great eloquence and breadth. He is an undemonstrative conductor, and sometimes impresses me as being somewhat heavy and stodgy, but he knows the business of conducting as few others do, and at this rehearsal and in the evening concert he led the superb Boston symphony and his soloists in readings notable for sumptuous tone, architectrual grandeur, color and mobility.

Concert Solists

The soloists for this concert were Pease in "Wotan's Farewell" (Die Walkure), Margaret Harshaw and Howard Vandenburg in the final scene of "Siegfried" and Harshaw in "Brunnhilde's Immolation" (Gotterdammerung). Harshaw's transition from contralto to soprano is proceeding with great success, and she is a far more interesting singer than she was as a contralto.

The two-hour chamber music concert in the afternoon brought works of considerable interest by students from Israel, Italy, Canada and this country.

One of the performers on this program was Lorin Maazel, who was a student at the first Cumberland Forest Music festival, and conducted the Sinfonietta at its first concert. Aaron Copland, who will be the guest of Peabody college and the Nashville Symphony orchestra next April, moderated a brief Composers' forum midway in the program.

Critics were specifically excluded from any of the rehearsals of the opera-the first presentation in America of Mozart's "La Clemenza di Tito"—but I was unable to stay over for the performances on Monday and Tuesday evenings, so my friend, Michael Rhodes, a fine young baritone who has been heard in recital at Middle Tennessee State college at Murfreesboro, got special permission from Boris Goldovsky for us to attend the Saturday night rehearsal, a stage run-through without orchestra.

Known to Nashvillians

Goldovsky is best known to Nashvillians through his intermission features of the Metropolitan opera Saturday afternoon broadcasts, but he has also been heard in piano lecture-recital at Ward-Belmont.

He was pianist, conductor, stage manager, translator of the libretto all rolled into one, and yet he never got even slightly ruffled or impatient.

Most of the principals were young professionals of fine ability. For example, there was Irene Jordan, a Birmingham girl who sang at the Metropolitan one season as a mezzo-soprano and has been making the transition to the coloratura stratosphere.

Most of the music of this opera is very fine but is the old-fashioned style of the opera seria. But the costumes for the Tanglewood production are of great beauty, color, and appropriateness, the sets are remarkable for the grandeur and sweep of their classic lines and dimensions; and Mr. Goldovsky's staging has given as much fluidity to the stage pictures at all times as is possible within the stylistic framework of the opera seria.

11,000 Hear Munch

The Sunday afternoon concert brought 11,000 to hear Charles Munch, the [illegible] of the festival and of the Boston Symphony [illegible] a Beethoven-[illegible] program. The attendance Saturday evening had been 10,[illegible].

Munch is a dynamic conductor who conducts many things thrillingly and other things in such a manner as to rouse the ire of many critics. His performance of Debussy's "Iberia" could hardly have been bettered, and Honegger's "Dance of the Dead" was thrilling with its strong contrasts. The "Overture to 'Egmont'" and Beethoven's "Eighth Symphony" were only slightly less satisfactory.

I was delighted to see at the concert [illegible] young [illegible] charmed Nashvillians at her Community [illegible] fall. She [illegible] festival on Thursday [illegible]

LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL

AUG 10 1952

Four Louisvillians Do 'Very Well' at Berkshire Music Center

By EDWARD BARRET, Director, Louisville Philharmonic Chorus

LENOX, Mass. — Tanglewood, the home of the Berkshire Music Center, is as beautiful and wonderful a place as ever. In spite of the death last year of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the founder of the school, there has been no letting down or drop in interest, I found on a visit there this summer. In fact there is, under Charles Munch, an increase in activity. Since I had not been to Tanglewood since 1950 I was very anxious to see and hear what changes were made. Also I wanted to keep an eye on the Louisville students who were so fortunate as to be there this season.

The Louisville Philharmonic Chorus sent two of its members this summer, Richard Dales and Gertrude Anderson. Both were in the small choir under the direction of Hugh Ross and his assistant, for this year, James Aliferis. In addition to their own concerts, the small choir has appeared every week with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. I heard them perform Mozart's "Litaniae de Venerabile Altaris Sacramento" under Ross, Schubert's Mass in G major under Charles Munch and the Dallapiccola "Three Songs In Captivity," again with Ross.

Ross has nothing but praise for both Dales and Anderson and predicts quite a future for both of them. In addition to the small choir appearances with the Boston Symphony, I heard the Festival chorus in Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" suites 1 and 2 with Charles Munch. This performance evoked an ovation. Munch was recalled again and again. The audience of over 10,000 stood and cheered for 10 to 15 minutes.

Another young singer from Louisville is Abbye Beierfield. She studied in the opera department under Boris Goldovsky. Although I was not able to hear her perform, Goldovsky and others told me she was doing very well and had leading roles in several productions.

The Woman's Association of the Louisville Orchestra sent the orchestra's young harpist, Irma Dell Smith. She played in the student orchestra under Leonard Bernstein, and studied with Bernard Zizhera of the Boston Symphony.

[95]

BOSTON, MASS.
POST

AUG [illegible]

Symphony Musicians To Retire

[illegible] Boston Symphony, un- [illegible] Munch's direction [illegible] con- [illegible] Festi- [illegible] long [illegible] They are [illegible] flute; Boaz [illegible] bassoon; [illegible] Han- [illegible] Gaston [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible] ster.

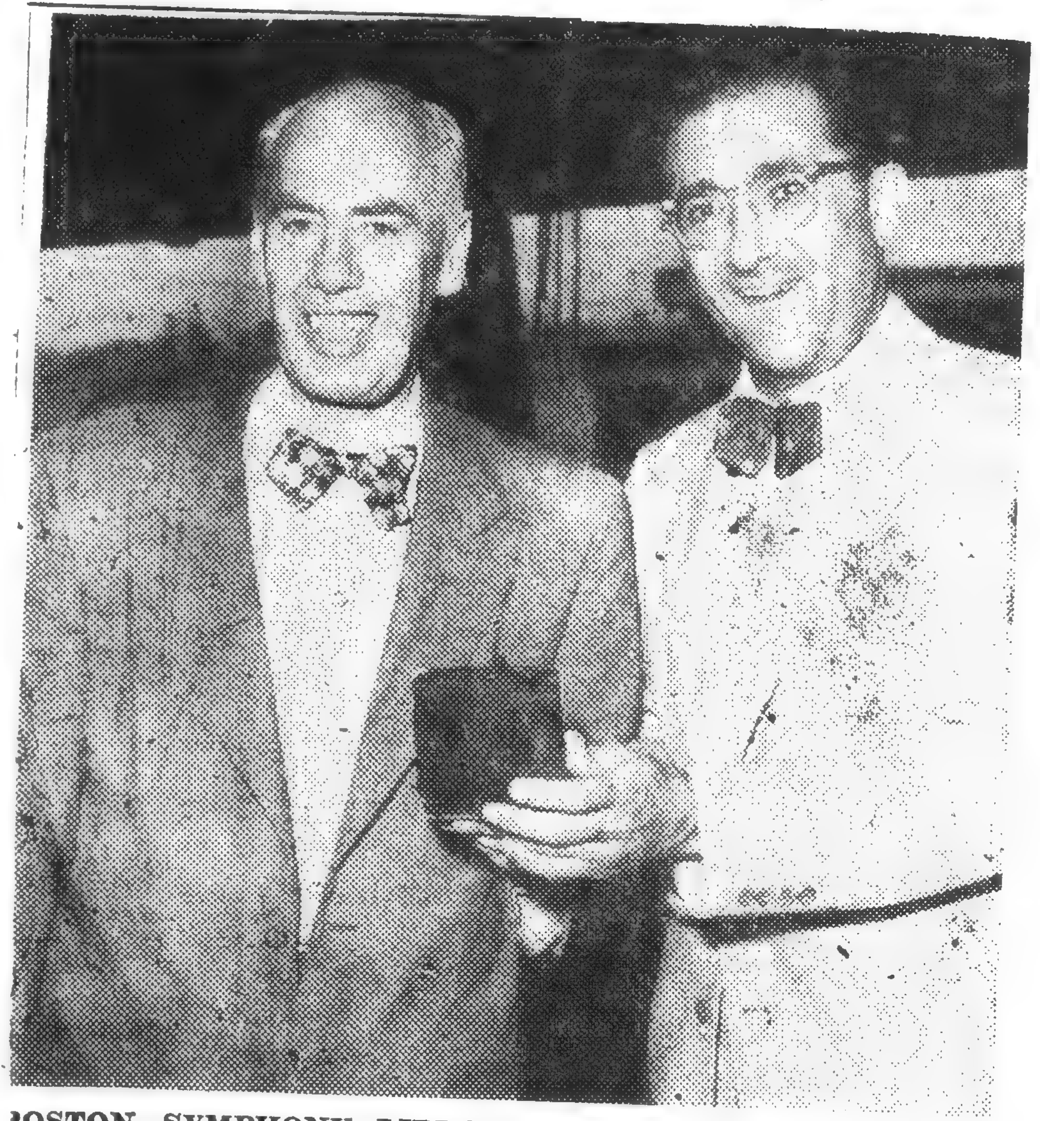
[illegible] members [illegible] watch [illegible] his [illegible] Tanglewood with [illegible] ten- [illegible] at Tanglewood [illegible]

[illegible] group of [illegible] to Mr. Lau- [illegible] the [illegible] been one of [illegible] members. Holland- [illegible] who became a [illegible] the bassoon section two [illegible] has long been the [illegible] and interpreter [illegible] visiting conductors and [illegible] were concerned. Also honored was Leslie Rogers, [illegible] who joined the or- [illegible] 4[illegible] years ago as a member [illegible] section.

Following the completion of the [illegible] season in late April, the Boston Symphony, led by Messrs. M[illegible] and Monteux, will go on a [illegible]-week transcontinental tour [illegible] will take it South to New Orleans and West to San Francisco, where it played in 1915. Under [illegible] direction of Arthur Fiedler, a group calling itself the Boston Pops Orchestra, will make a 10-week tour of the country, starting in January, under the management of Columbia Artists.

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD

AUG 10 1952



BOSTON SYMPHONY LIBRARIAN, Leslie J. Rogers, left, is presented ~~an inscribed~~ watch for 40 years of service with the orchestra.. The presentation is made by Violinist Harry E. Dickson at the Berkshire Festival.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 10 1952

Foreign Students Visit W. Mass.

Forty Fulbright exchange students, enrolled in Yale's American Studies for Foreign Students, were taken on an informal two-day bus trip to their first extensive sight of the United States. After visitin Connecticut points, the students, representing nearly 20 different nations, stopped over at Tanglewoo to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Waiting for the concert to start, the men toured the Tanglewoo grounds or sat on blankets to chat, as shown in upper picture. The lower picture shows the student having their first taste of a traditionally American church supper. They were guests of the First Congregational Church in Lee. The picture are by the Yale News Bureau—Alburtus

---

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN

AUG 10 1952

Miles Kastendieck:

MILES KASTENDIECK

Tanglewood Widens Our Operatic Horizon

IN its 10th season the Berkshire Music Center has more than justified its existence. Its various departments have all experienced the practical advantages of constantly performing and of working together. Most glamorous, of course, is the work of the Opera Department which culminates each year with a major production. The presentation of Mozart's "Titus" last week prompts some summarizing of the last decade of its activity.

Since Boris Goldovsky became head of the department in 1946, the annual productions have become important not only in themselves but also in their contribution to operatic repertory. Work is being done at Tanglewood that is not being done elsewhere in the country in quite the same way. In the process, the operatic horizon in the United States is being widened.

Reclaiming Mozart's 'Titus" is a case in point. Not too successful when performed in 1791, it has received indifferent attention. With a handsome production and astute direction last week, it obviously deserves more than passing interest. An English translation with the use of dialogue in place of recitative and some experimental staging have done wonders for it. They have also shown what wonderful things are being achieved in this opera workshop.

Other "Firsts"

Not that "Titus" is the only distinguished accomplishment. The American premieres of Britten's "Peter Grimes" in 1946, of Mozart's "Idomeneo" in 1947, of Britten's "Albert Herring" in 1949, and Ibert's "Le Roi d'Yvetot in 1950 proved to be contributions of inestimable value.

The Opera Department as now constituted includes over 60 students. The 23 singers in it this year were most carefully selected. Together with 14 auditors, nine student coaches, five student stage directors, 11 students of scenic design and two of costuming, the workshop is keyed for first-class operation. It is no wonder that the production of "Titus" was so fine.

In his extensive operatic activity Goldovsky probably achieves most in his Tanglewood association. The "Titus" production was quite an ambitious undertaking. The young singers did exceptionally well. The staging was excellent as well as unusual. This combination becomes in itself a tribute to 10 years of growth and the vision which stimulated it. What happens in opera in Tanglewood each summer now commands the interest of the entire country.

ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

AUG 10 1952

Music Notes:

Symphony to Present Final Concert Today

By EDGAR S. VANOLINDA

The final concert of the season at Tanglewood by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will take place today at 3 p. m. in the large music shed. The program, conducted by Charles Muench, will be devoted to Berlioz's "Requiem" with the orchestra assisted by the Festival Chorus, prepared by Hugh Ross. This morning, at 10 o'clock, William Kroll and his chamber music group will perform Mozart's "Serenade" No. 12; Stravinsky's "Octet" and a trio by Ravel. The morning programs are open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

* * *

The Catskill Valley Chorus of 55 mixed voices will present its fifth annual summer concert in the Durham Central School, Tuesday evening, Aug. 26, at 8:30 oclock. The chorus is directed by Rolland Heermance of Saugerties, with Mildred L. Rupplein, of Cornwallville, as accompanist.

* * *

The Seagle Colony Opera Guild of Schroon Lake presented its final performance of Pucinni's "La Boheme" in North Creek last Friday evening. Rehearsals have started for Gilbert & Sullivan's "Patience" to be presented August 23.

Tanglewood: Treasure House for Music Lovers

(Donald H. White, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clinton H. White of 72 Chestnut Street, South Dartmouth, has just returned from the Berkshire Music Festival, where he reviewed concert and opera performances for The Standard-Times. He is coaching in opera and voice in New York City, where he plans to give a debut recital at Town Hall during the coming season. The following article covers in retrospect the activities of Tanglewood during Series B. The festival closes this afternoon with a performance of the Berlioz Requiem).

By DONALD H. WHITE

When we last visited the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood three years ago, the Summer festival situation was in eclipse throughout the world. Times are better now, but Tanglewood remains the most unique and wonderful experiment in the combination of a Summer music school with the activities of perhaps the world's greatest symphony orchestra.

White

And it was, as Boris Goldovsky (who conducted the "Carmen" sing here last Winter) told the "Titus" opera audience recently, the vision and prophetic dream of the late Serge Koussevitzky which made the center a working reality.

Though a visitor sees hundreds of tourists and local townspeople strolling happily over the estate, here and there are the small, telltale groups of composition students sitting around some leading American composer or conductor, giving notice that more than festival concerts take place here. There they can be found gathering avidly the technique and procedures which all serious musicians must absorb in great quantities before calling themselves interpretive artists or active composers.

Grave Visited

As is to be expected, the grave of Dr. Koussevitzky nearby is visited by countless pilgrims to the Tanglewood season who stand reverently by the resting place of their former friend or professional colleague. Tanglewood has been called a "home for music, a shrine for musicians." The personal creation of Dr. Koussevitzky, the center represents the hopes and plans of many seasons which he spent guiding its musical destiny.

Series B at Tanglewood was opened by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony with two Faure compositions, the incidental music to "Pelleas et Melisande" and "Ballade for Piano and Orchestra in F Sharp Major."

Later in the program we had our first glimpse of Nicole Henriot, a new French performer who plays with a zestful fervor under Munch's baton. This is a brilliantly talented pianist, though young enough at present to give the impression of a fun-loving personality and broad sense of humor.

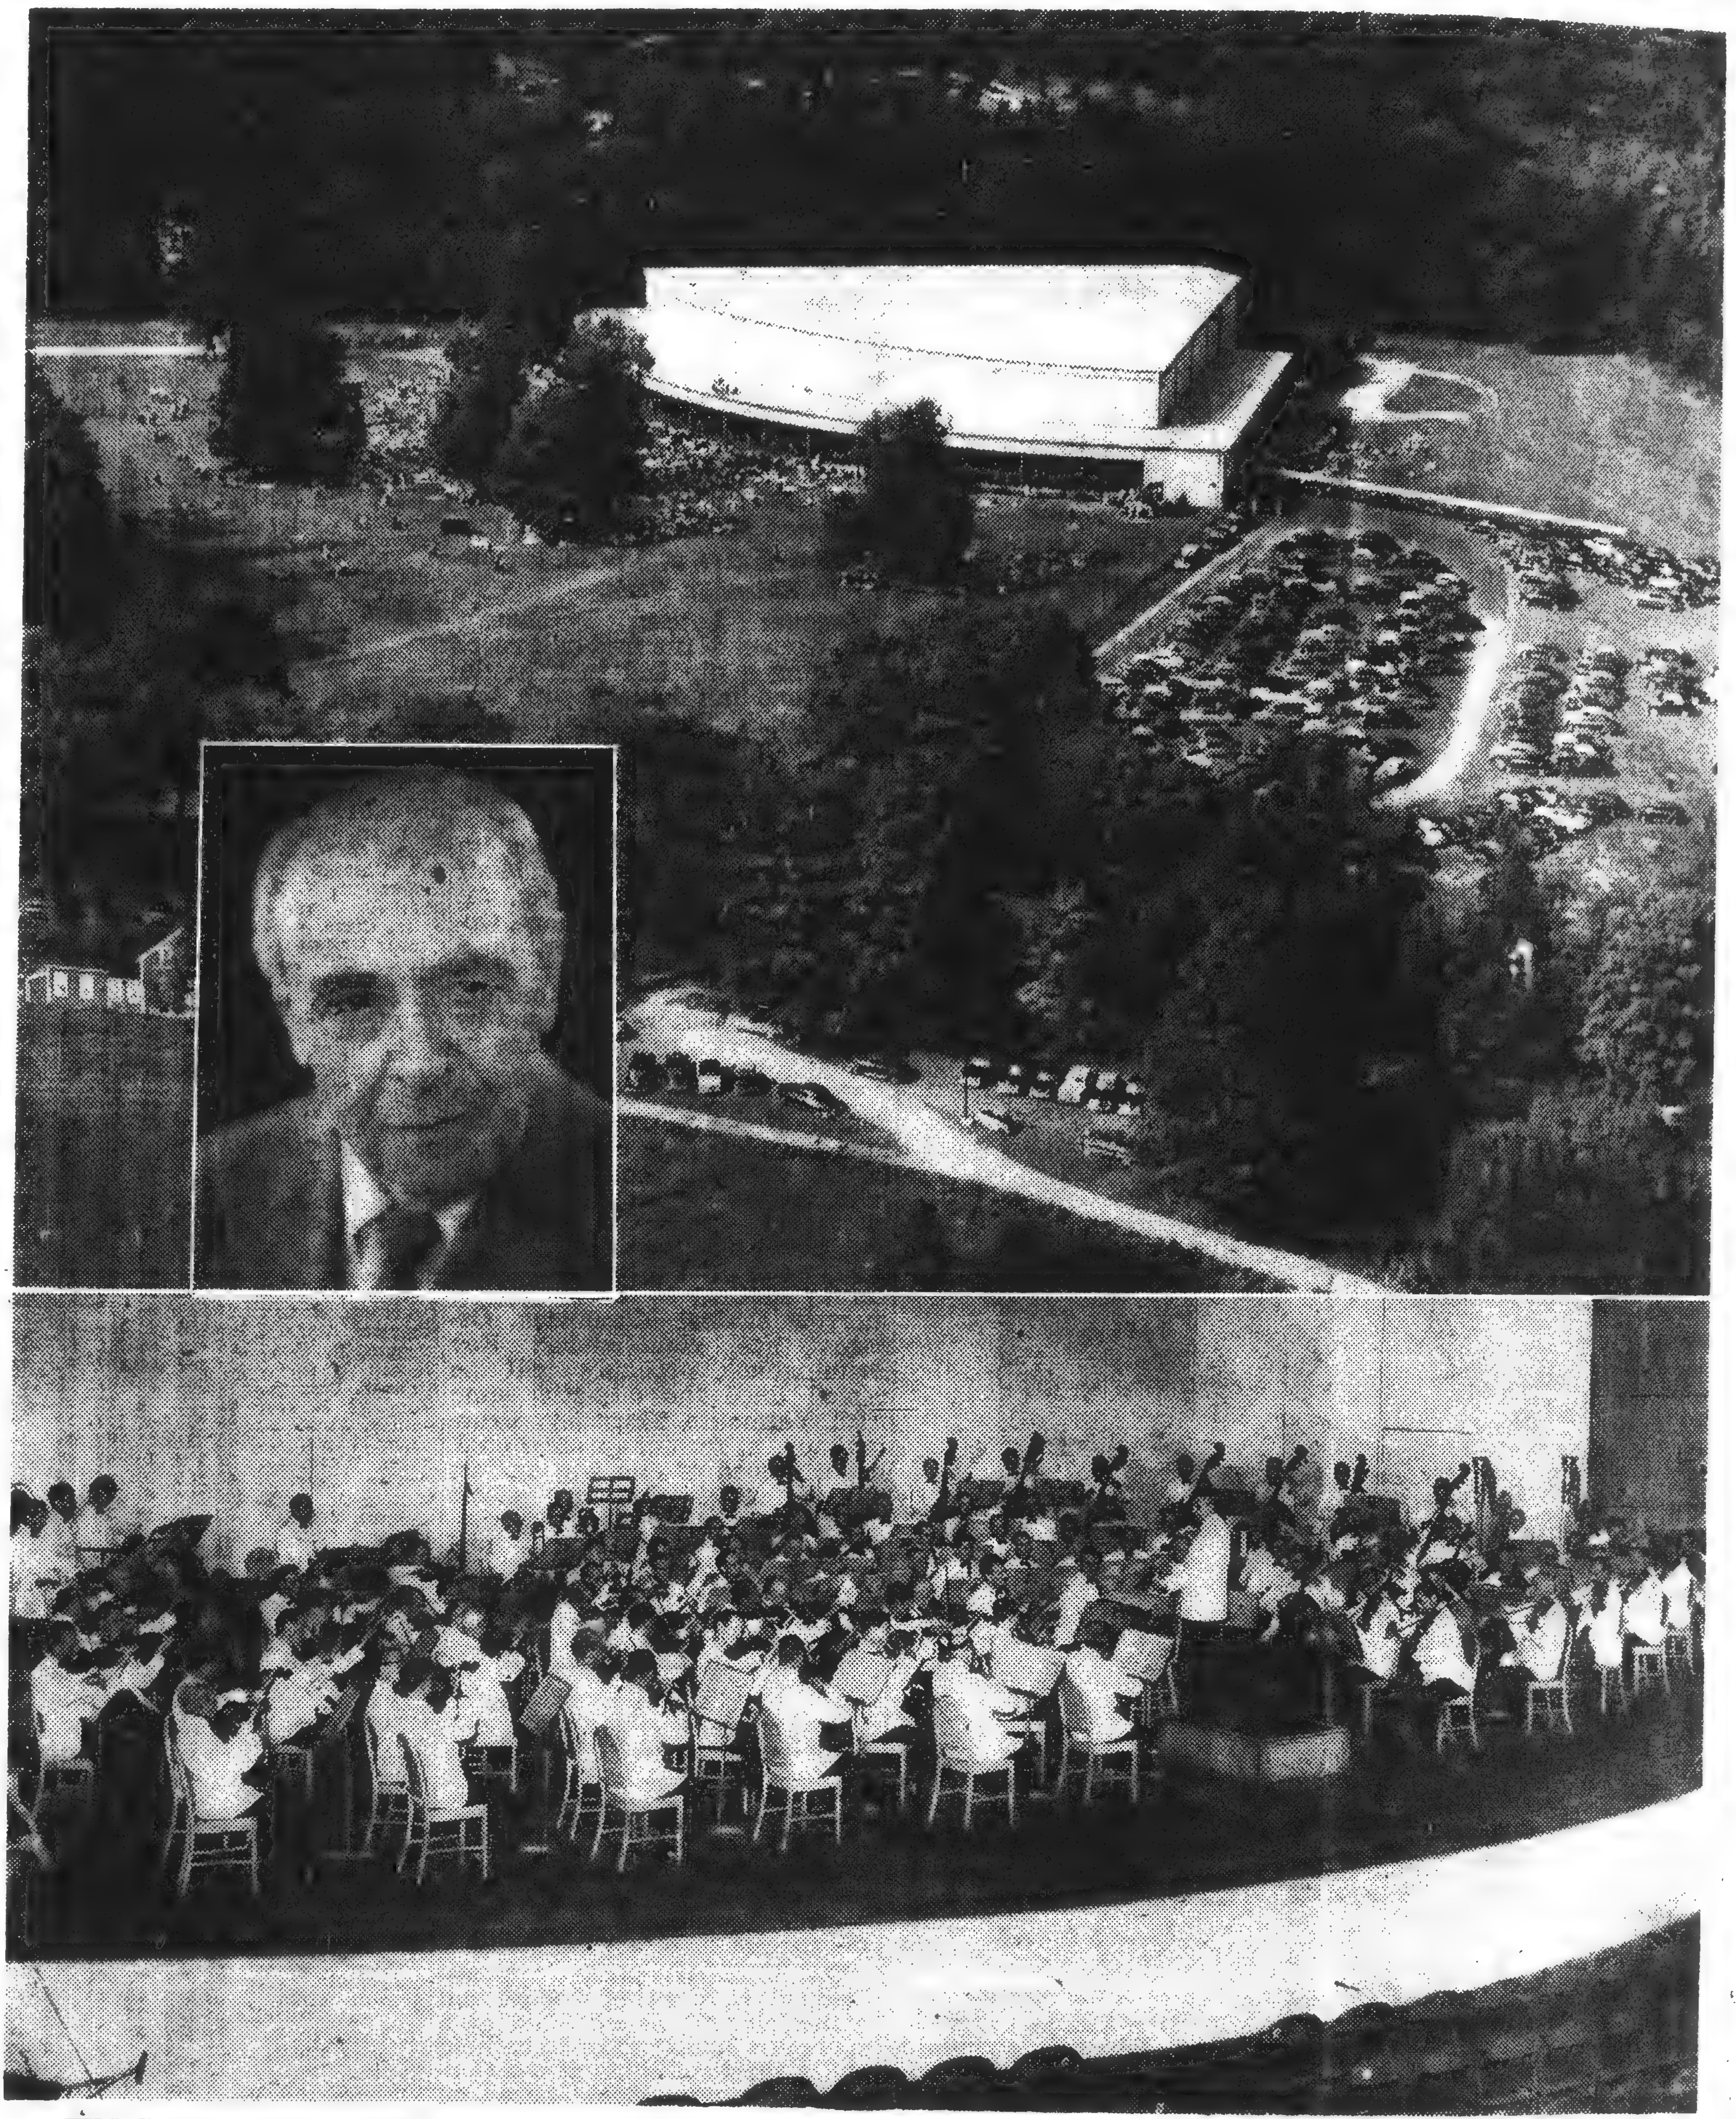
An admirable opportunity for conductorial comparisons was next in store when Dr. Munch led his forces through the robust pages of the Brahms Fourth Symphony. A different interpretation from the Brahms of Koussevitzky but an interesting one, nevertheless. Munch is subdued on the podium, uses little acrobatics and marks a visibly-exact beat.

Not Found

Some of the finest gradations of tonal quality were not to be found during this traversal of one of the war-horses of the symphonic repertoire. Munch's technique must be studied at length before making pronouncements, but we found him to be a steady, comparatively unemotional interpretor who is always in absolute control of his orchestra.

A feature of the Tanglewood Opera Department is the series of one-act operas, both early and modern works, which are presented in the original formal gardens of the Tappan estate. Mr. Goldovsky, genial host for these events, officiates beneath a sun umbrella which is held over the small console piano.

Audiences are members of the Friends Society, a sponsor and contribution department attached to Tanglewood. Only subscribers and those who give donations to the symphony festival are admitted to these garden performances. Mr. Goldovsky lavishes a great deal of time and energy upon them and they always are well worth the small subscription required for attendance.



THE GREAT MUSIC SHED AT TANGLEWOOD and some of the crowd of music lovers surrounding it are at the top in this photo. Lower view shows the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Summer garb while the late Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, former conductor of the symphony and the man who built up Tanglewood, is shown in the inset.

AARON COPLAND, EMINENT AMERICAN composer, conducts a composition class at Tanglewood. Shown, from left to right, are Edward Chudacoff, Munising, Mich.; Halim El-Dabh, Cairo, Egypt; Arno Safran, Flushing, N. Y.; Roger Hollinrake, New Zealand, and Yehoshua Lakner and Ben-Zion Orgad, both of Tel-Aviv, Israel.

—Will Plouffe Photos

THE THREE CONDUCTORS WHO WILL lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood during the 1952 season talk behind scenes in the Music Shed. They are, from left, Charles Munch, Leonard Bernstein and Pierre Monteux.

[97]

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
CHRONICLE
AUG 10 1952

Maestro Monteux Is Holding Court At Massachusetts' Tanglewood

By Alfred Frankenstein

NOT LONG AGO I met a member of the Boston Orchestra who complained that his vacation was too short. If this does not impress you as one of the most astonishing and unprecedented statements you have ever read in a newspaper, it can only mean that you are not familiar with the ways of symphony orchestras.

The gentleman in question was employed for 50 weeks each year, and he had no time to knock around in print shops and add to his collection of lithographs by Daumier. His state of mind was sad, but perhaps not so sad as that of members of the San Francisco Symphony, whose vacations are ten times longer than his.

The Boston Symphony, in other words, is one orchestra that never lets up, is always in mid-season and therefore in mid-season form.

All of this was dazzlingly apparent the other night at Tanglewood when the Boston Symphony played Schubert's C major symphony and Stravinsky's "Sacre du Printemps" under the direction of Pierre Monteux. It was a kind of homecoming and report from Paris, for Monteux and the Bostonians had presented the "Sacre" at the Congress for Cultural Freedom a few weeks earlier at the Champs-Elysees, and there had been nothing but pop concerts in Boston in the interim.

The event at the Champs-Elysees was something of a milestone in the history of the Western world, for Monteux had led the first performance of this work in the same theater 29 years before, to produce one of the most violent riots and some of the most inflammatory critical condemnation ever called forth by a piece of music; in 1952, however, the "Sacre du Printemps" was played in Paris as a monument to cultural achievement under conditions of freedom, and its composer and first interpreter were honored accordingly.

It is worthy of more than passing note that the Tanglewood program made no effort to "explain" this score in terms of the ballet that was danced to it in Paris in 1913. When I first heard it, in Chicago in the 1920's, people thought it was altogether incomprehensible in any other terms; the late Frederick Stock, conductor of the Chicago Symphony, had great cards printed with the title of each separate section, and these were exposed to the view of the audience at the appropriate points in the performance. By now, however, it is apparent that the "Sacre," savage, incantatory and overwhelming as it may be, is a piece of music; that there is a classic style for its interpretation and a coarsened style, that it may be as powerfully modeled as an archaic statue, and that it may be sentimentalized into a troglodytic serenade.

Pianist Sylvia Jenkins will be soloist with the San Francisco Symphony at the "Pops" concert under Arthur Fiedler Tuesday.

That Monteux's interpretation is the classic one goes without saying. Among other things, he is one of the few conductors who really beats it out, who counts its fantastic successions of bars in 5/16, 3/8, 2/4, and so on, exactly as they are written and makes the orchestra play them that way. And with so precise and colossal an instrument as the Boston Symphony at his command (there were 20 first violins on the stage that night, and everything else was in keeping) the results seem as justly modeled as in the most perfectly proportioned of classic symphonies. In a way, one wished Monteux had played Mozart in the first half instead of Schubert in order to drive that point home.

MONTEUX had just finished a series of summer concerts in Chicago, and he had more Tanglewood concerts to come. He said he could report nothing about musical conditions in Europe because he had been completely absorbed in conducting the Boston Symphony on its tour, which included concerts in Italy, Germany and provincial cities of France as well as in Paris. He opens the Boston Symphony season next fall, directs the Philadelphia Orchestra until after the first of the year, and then goes back to Europe for several months. He told me one thing about the San Francisco Symphony that is worth printing here even if it has already been released to the daily papers—that Earl Bernard Murray has been appointed assistant conductor for next season in order to hold things together during our procession of guest directors.

Tanglewood has not changed a great deal during the six years since I was last there. A cafeteria has replaced the hopelessly swamped lunch wagon of yore, and the State police have made a gesture toward expediting one's approach and one's getaway. The music shed at Tanglewood accomodates 6000 people, and 3000 and 4000 more can and do sit on the grass outside the shed on concert nights. What this does to the traffic of Western Massachusetts, Southern Vermont and New Hampshire, Eastern New York and Northern Connecticut can readily be imagined. Next to the Atlantic ocean, the Boston Symphony has become the greatest summer attraction in all of New England. Even the Red Sox—well, anyhow, the Braves—can't match the "Sacre du Printemps."

Staged in Dartmouth

We saw Pergolesi's comedy, "Livietta and Tracolo" performed on a program with Jacques Ibert's "Angeliuqe." Local music-lovers will recall that the latter was offered by the Boston University College of Music Opera department at Dartmouth High School earlier this year in a production staged by Sarah Caldwell, Goldovsky's valued assistant at Tanglewood. Many of the same young singers who appeared then were cast in the al fresco performance in the gardens.

Mr. Goldovsky gave some explanation of the background of these two diverse works, one from the early Comedia del Arte period and the other a score from our own century. M. Ibert has been a resident composer at the festival in past seasons, when his "Le Roi d'Yvetot" was given by Goldovsky's group. "Angelique" was a comic romp as sung by these young, aspiring musicians.

Tanglewood on Parade

BORIS GOLDOVSKY, remembered here for conducting the "Carmen" sing last Winter, welcomes crowds to Tanglewood on Parade.

An unusual opportunity to assess the entire music center came during the activities of Tanglewood on Parade day. Each season, one day in August is set aside for the purpose of presenting a "showcase" sequence of typical performances and departmental innovations. Simultaneously, a great number of musical events takes place all over the sizable area. An opera performance is given in the Theater-Concert Hall; a student orchestra rehearses under several conductors in the Music Shed, and chamber music and forums are offered in other Tanglewood buildings.

Mr. Goldovsky, drafted once again to address the opening audience, noted the 10 years since the Berkshire Music Center came into existence.

"We have had five wonderful weeks thus far this Summer to prepare our music; weeks that are equivalent to many months of training in the conventional conservatory or music school."

Adjourning to the Music Shed for an orchestral concert, we made plans to receive a final report on the opera which was being presented over in the Theater-Concert Hall. This turned out to be a new score by Andre Singer, "Alcottiana," an anthological group of teachings by A. Bronson Alcott, father of Louisa May Alcott, the author of "Little Women." Set in a Boston school in the 1830s, the plot is based on the discussions of the children in Mr. Alcott's clas, inserting much of his own philosophy between the lines. It fills the need for works suitable for performance in secondary schools and colleges and should prove a helpful addition to the limited repertoire of such scores.

Best on the student concert program was Benjamin Britten's "Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra," conducted by Lorin Maazel. As we watched and listened to the fine group revel through this unique work, it was evident Maazel is headed for a promising career as a podium virtuoso. The music is really the best example of appreciation and explanatory material outside of Prokofiev's "Peter and the Wolf."

Scored in Britten's deft orchestration, the "Guide" is a series of variations on a Purcell theme played during the narration of each instrument's participation in the orchestra. David Lloyd, dropping his usual occupation of tenor, was a chatty, personable reader of the accompanying script. After each instrument illustrates its tone and possibilities of performance, they all join in a splendid fugue, written contrapuntally against the original Purcell melody. The "Guide" is highly recommended herewith as required listening for every budding orchestral musician.

The impressive all-Wagner program which was the second Series concert presented the astounding talent of Margaret Harshaw, Metropolitan opera dramatic soprano. Tanglewood audiences have longed for the perfect setting for the naturalistic tone pictures, remarkable orchestral effects and visionary harmonies, and over it all, the short benevolent figure of Pierre Monteux, the conductor, so modest that he completely subjugates his own personal dynamism to that of his soloist and orchestra. It is exceedingly rare to observe a sovereign maestro with such an endearingly retiring nature. But his worth is so well known that it is wisely balanced by his charming reticence.

Stirs Audience

Wagnerian opera always stirs and excites the opera house audience. A capacity attendance of 11,000 gave truth to the belief that Wagner's scores are becoming ever more popular in their common appeal.

Other events than the symphony concerts are absorbing to observe in their own environments. The Voice Department, headed by Ralph Berkowitz, Paul Ulanowsky, the celebrated accompanist and Felix Wolfes of the New England Conservatory of Music, is one of the busiest divisions working at Tanglewood. In order to sample a bit of the talent that is presented, we attended a voice recital in the intimate Chamber Music Hall. Three sopranos, two mezzo sopranos and a tenor gave a varied program of German lieder, modern French songs and a Britten cycle.

The Chamber Music Hall, another of Saarinen's unique designs, features one entirely open side with benches placed under the trees for perambulating music lovers who want to drop in for just a sampling of the current performance. The splendid vista of greenery and mountains which is visible outside makes a voice or chamber music recital a joint experience in appreciation of beauty.

Picture a Sunday afternoon—the Boston Symphony men garbed in their impeccable Summer whites—fine weather and a capacity audience in the huge Music Shed.

The noble opening chords of Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture marked the beginning of the final concert which we attended. Stirring trombones and brass gave a ring to the finale, a capsule of tremendous orchestral potency.

Debussey's "Iberia," its pungent sunshine-filled measures contrasted with the nocturnal magic described so well in the second movement, was calculated to please a Summer audience. Munch, with Gallic enjoyment of its complex score and programmatic detail, gave us a stirring interpretation.

The final piece, Honegger's "Danse des Morts" (Dance of the Dead) was the "piece de resistance" of the afternoon. Inspired by Holbein's woodcuts and words from the Book of Ezekiel, this music was an intense and roaring welter of modern impressionism. When this macabre "ballet in music" begins its great assault upon the psyche of the listener, an orchestral cataclysm is unleashed.

Munch realized all the potentialities of this grueling score, as did the fine chorus of Tanglewood students trained by Hugh Ross. The last section, aided by percussion, tympani and the organ, was a representation of the words, "On this same rock my church shall be established, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

Gained Training

The roll of past students at Tanglewood reads like a "Who's Who" of American musical artists. Many of the permanent conductors of our major philharmonic bodies gained their most important training under the eyes of Dr. Koussevitzky and his distinguished faculty. Of the 404 pupils at the Center this Summer, one-quarter had returned after attending in previous seasons.

Twenty-seven musicians from 16 foreign countries were listed as Berkshire students.

Though Koussevitzky's short, stooped, beloved figure will never again be pointed out by admiring visitors, his principles of leadership and high musical integrity have been continued.

TIGHT BINDING

LOS ANGELES, CAL.
TIMES

AUG 1 7 1952

The SOUNDING BOARD

Clouds Over Tanglewood Clear as Munch Pursues Old Policy

By ALBERT GOLDBERG

The ~~Berkshire~~ Festival at Tanglewood has just finished a crucial second season without its founder and moving spirit, Serge Koussevitzky. Irving Deakin ~~sends the~~ following report on the event:

"The 10th anniversary season of the Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, in Lenox, was distinguished for a number of things other than the exceptional quality of one of the loveliest natural settings imaginable, which seems to grow more idyllic with the passage of time.

"This 10th season opened with a query. It is true that the Boston Symphony Orchestra had just returned from a genuinely triumphant European tour, crowned with laurels for its superior playing under its permanent conductor, Charles Munch, and its conductor of a quarter of a century ago, the now guesting Pierre Monteux. The quality of the playing to be expected could almost be taken for granted.

CLOUD SEEN LAST YEAR

"The query was: What would Tanglewood itself be like? Last season had a rather ominous little cloud hanging over it. It may have been no bigger than a man's hand but it nevertheless was a cloud. Serge Koussevitzky, its founder, had been dead hardly a month. Tanglewood had been his 'baby.'

"Munch's attitude toward Tanglewood was not known. There was an air of uncertainty as to direction and policy and the rumor factory was busy as to the future. The rumors were not all encouraging.

"It is a pleasure to be able to report that those clouds not only have lifted but that the rising barometer indicates that the threatened storm has passed over.

POLICY UNCHANGED

"Briefly, to list the material and spiritual accomplishments: Policy continues unchanged. Munch, in his opening address, set the tone and calmed any fears when he said: 'This is the first time I have had the honor to open a session of the Berkshire Music Center. It is its 10th season and the second to begin, unfortunately, without its founder, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

"'His presence among us is always alive and reminds us of the greatness and beauty of this wonderful creation, which he cherished and loved so deeply. I believe the best thing for us all to do is to endeavor to continue his work, following the path he traced for us.'

"So much for the material-spiritual accomplishment. From the completely material side, attendance records have been broken. The chamber orchestra concerts have attracted from 4000 to 5000 each.

FESTIVAL ATTRACTS

"The festival concerts in the Saarinen-designed shed have brought an average of 9500 to each of nine concerts, culminating in the Berlioz 'Grand Messe des Morts,' with all the colossal orchestral and choral forces demanded by the composer limited only by space and practicability but with all of the musical notation intact.

"It would be quite wrong not to point out that, though the public concerts are of great importance, both artistically and materially, the school of the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's summer school, is of prime importance. The school has a creative life of its own. It participates in the festival through its chorus, orchestra and opera department, under Boris Goldovsky.

"The orchestra is exceptionally good, as was evidenced in the performances of what is believed to be the first American production of one of Mozart's last works, the opera 'La Clemenza di Tito', in an English version by Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell, titled 'Titus'."

'OPERA SERIA'

"An example of 'opera seria,' commissioned to be performed at the coronation of Joseph II as King of Bohemia, it is a product of the last year of Mozart's life.

"A work filled with arias and concerted numbers, many of them Mozart at his finest in the English version it received a performance distinguished for its careful presentation and singing of a high order. Notable was that of Irene Jordan, of the Metropolitan roster, whose singing of one of the longest and most difficult arias in operatic literature was a model of lyric-dramatic delivery.

"For some music lovers there has been a tinge of disappointment in the fact that festival orchestral programmes have offered no premieres of commissioned works this season and have rested, for the most part, a little to the right of center. There were, however, a number of distinguished performances. Among these was Pierre Monteux's definitive reading of Stravinsky's 'Le Sacre du Printemps.' After 40 years, this work remains the most astonishing orchestral achievement of the 20th century.

COMPOSER'S PROTEST

"Charles Munch conducted a performance of the triptych, 'Songs of Captivity,' by Luigi Dallapiccola, this year's composer in residence. A deliberate striving for Palestrinian effects along modern lines, enlisting two harps, two pianos and percussion with chorus, the work sprang from the composer's protest against Fascist persecution of Jews imprisoned without cause.

"Unable to raise his voice against such horrors when he wrote the songs from 1938 to 1941, he camouflaged the urgency of their protest by using Latin texts by three famous prisoners who died for noble causes: Mary Stuart, Boethius and Gerolamo Savonarola.

"Munch also paid tribute to his old friend, Arthur Honegger, with a stirring presentation of his 'Danse des Morts,' the first performance in the East of a work in Honegger's most effective manner, and the second in this country.

TERSE WRITING

"Another first time with the Boston Symphony was its first performance of the New York Music Critics Circle prize-winning orchestral work, Howard Swanson's 'Short Symphony,' a compact, terse piece of writing, and one of depth, seriousness and intensity, which was enthusiastically received despite what seemed to your correspondent a certain lack of familiarity on Munch's part with its rhythmic material.

"One of the greatest demonstrations of public enthusiasm was reserved for Artur Rubinstein, making his first Tanglewood appearance, in a magnificent performance of the Brahms Second Concerto in B-Flat Major. Gramophiles will be interested to know that this performance will soon be available on records.

"Like the little boy who leaves the most delicious food on his plate for the end of the meal, the Boston Symphony players almost deliberately, it would seem, reserved their finest playing for festival's end.

BERNSTEIN TO FORE

"Koussevitzky's protege, Leonard Bernstein, now head of the center's conducting department, took over the Koussevitzky memorial concert.

"C. P. E. Bach's Concerto in D major for stringed instruments was played with loving affection. To this and to Aaron Copland's Third Symphony, commissioned by Koussevitzky in 1946, and finally to the Sibelius Fifth, Bernstein and the orchestra gave their all, with some of the most glorious sound that has assailed your correspondent's ears in many moons of listening.

"For finale came the Berlioz Requiem. Munch has a way with this great work. At his hands it becomes an overwhelming experience. He unifies the work by an extraordinary imaginative grasp, bringing forth a sense of physical vastness, of immense spaces, that is quite independent of the large number of musical resources employed.

"The prolonged, barely breathed amen, after the gigantic pyramids of sound, echoed the feelings of thousands for another Tanglewood festival, with a firm hope that they may endure as long as music itself."

TIME MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.

AUG 18 1952

Tanglewood & Other Woods

Music was as ubiquitous as Muzak at the Tanglewood festival in Lenox, Mass. last week. As the Boston Symphony's 16th summer season came to a close, Pianist Artur Rubinstein and Conductor Charles Munch performed for 10,000 listeners in & around the wall-less Music Shed. Then Leonard Bernstein took the podium to lead a concert and a revised version of his 35-minute-long opera, Trouble in Tahiti (TIME, June 23). At week's end, there were three orchestral programs, one for chorus and one of chamber music. The grand finale: a 280-man performance of Berlioz' massive Requiem.

Before the week was out, 400-odd young musicians of the Berkshire Music Center, which shares the well-clipped lawns of Tanglewood with the festival, had also wound up their six-week summer session—studying composition (with Aaron Copland, Luigi Dallapiccola), conducting (with Bernstein), and performance (with members of the orchestra). Their big show: Mozart's opera, La Clemenza di Tito, resurrected, rendered into English (and renamed Titus), produced and conducted by the New England Opera Company's Director Boris Goldovsky.

• • •

All across the U.S. last week, the midsummer air was resounding more or less tunefully as thousands of other summer music students neared commencement time with a scraping of catgut, tootling of brass and a thumping of piano keys. Among them:

¶ The National Music Camp at Interlochen, Mich., where 1,600 students from eight through college age take lessons on their instruments, play in orchestras, sing in choruses, dance, paint, act and live a rugged life in rustic surroundings.

¶ L'Ecole Monteux, at Hancock, Maine, where 50 young (average age: 30) professionals take a month of intensive podium training at Conductor Pierre Monteux's own school.

¶ Salzedo Harp Colony, in Camden, Maine, where Harpist Carlos Salzedo teaches his technique to 38 men and women in an idyllic setting. Part of the curriculum: costume and deportment so that the performers may properly grace the stage when they play in symphony orchestras.

¶ Composers' Conference and Chamber Music Center at Bennington, Vt., where about 50 composers and instrumentalists gather for two weeks in August to play for each other and the public.

Besides the special summer setups, the year-round institutions were also going full blast: 363 students at the University of Rochester's Eastman School of Music, 400 at Manhattan's Juilliard, 1,300 at the University of Wisconsin's School of Music. Crowed Teacher Lotte Lehmann (in Santa Barbara's Music Academy of the West): "What has Salzburg got that we haven't got?"

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 1 7

TANGLEWOOD IDE

Principles of Berkshire Music
Adhere to Koussevitzky's Stand

By OLIN DOWNES

ONE very important thing seems to have been definitely established by the results of the Berkshire Festival and the coordinated activities of the Berkshire School of Music which ended their 1952 season last week. This is, that the Berkshire Music School, which Serge Koussevitzky founded with such enthusiasm and determination, has now been accepted by the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent institution.

It was not certain last year that this would be the case, or whether it would be that the music school would pass out of existence with the disappearance of the man and the artistic personality whose presence many believed to be essential to its continuance.

For the Berkshire School of Music was very characteristically a Koussevitzky creation. It was no conventional institution and it did not follow at all the traditional ways of music education. It was not a place for diplomas, gradings, degrees, for marks of relative excellence or inferiority in scholarship. It emphasized the training and development of conductors and composers. It did not concern itself with the cultivation of virtuosity of young singers or instrumentalists. Its concern was and is the stimulus and inspiration of young musicians in the vital principles and broader aspects of their art.

Considered Impractical

This objective appeared so impractical as to have the quality of a theory rather than a plan possible of achievement. Koussevitzky, said the wiseacres, was the artist, the virtuoso, the triumphant individualist of unique accomplishments, but no man to organize or direct a course of music education. When he had gone, the edifice he had erected by the power of his imagination, his personal magnetism and own indefatigable labors, would tumble to the ground, and have no further existence. Or so they said.

Exactly the opposite process seems to be taking place. The music school has this season become better integrated and more effective in its workings than ever before. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony and director of the school in one, like his predecessor, has taken a deep and heartfelt interest in the workings of the organization and in the furtherance of its special ideals. But this in itself would not have been enough. Matters of administration and of individual teaching have of course been relegated by him to the experienced members of the faculty, of which Leonard Bernstein in the orchestral department, Boris Goldovsky of the opera school, Aaron Copland in composition, and Hugh Ross as head of the choral division, have been the functioning heads.

But Mr. Munch's supervision could not be of the sort that emanated from the first head and creator of this institution. The school had to work in an organic way of its own or not work at all. It has worked, and admirably coordinated its efforts as never before. What the future will bring, whether there can always be present a faculty of such understanding and collective enthusiasm in its cooperation as the one which has been in control this past summer, remains to be seen. For present purposes the music school has pulled together, as if inspired by an inner dynamism, with an effect which is a most impressive guarantee of its vitality and usefulness for the future.

Substantial Profits

The earnings of the orchestra and the substantial profits which accrue from the concert receipts of the orchestral season at Tanglewood are indispensable to the continuance of the school, as the heads of the different divisions of the orchestra are irreplaceable as members of the Berkshire Music Center's faculty. The value of the center, for prestige and completion of the cultural program of the orchestra, is evident, and is confirmed always more strongly with the passing of each season. Its membership, amounting to 410, was the biggest in its history. The receipts of the school, in spite of an increased number of scholarships, were larger than ever deficits of the school which are inevitable met from the funds of tra. It is therefore cision for the Boston directors, in these days ing costs of every a symphony orchestra

nance, to have decided the music school, with gations and expenses junct of the orchestra
if Koussevitzky's dream were pleased to call
"academy" of music
he worked all his life
nificantly come true
by virtue of the inher power of his concep

Concrete Examples

Three items of the
the closing week of opera exemplified remarks. They were ance of the orchestra
sevitzky Memorial
Aaron Copland's Third that of the Berlioz
the Boston Symphony
chorus of the Berkshire Center at the final the performance by the dio of Leonard Bernstein version of his "Trouble

The Copland Symphony
missioned from him
Koussevitzky
this writer the loftiest ception and the most in its workmanship of that Mr. Copland has produced. Its architecture
ple, grand of line
spirit is serene and the spirit of a man who has found himself

The night after stein's opera was given interesting in its niques of stage presen
the experiments
Bern making
He would never be conventional musical music per se it is not vincing, or altogether style. But we do not symptoms of the score planation of its weakness planation, we think libretto's lack of a matic motivation. A who may live in Scarsdale sachusetts or Illinois mortally bored with each escape being alone they conclusively as
to see a movie that already seen in the
"Trouble in Tahiti."

Artificial Doctrine

There are moments
pathos and relics of
such as the rain
band and wife pass the rain with evasions plain their respective
What caused their
the rift will lead
tion that there may anything that once gether, or that thing but a completely virtually sterile favorable circumstance
tificial a doctrine
composer to say strike home as a tragic or otherwise
ers. This is tantish, unreal.
duce interesting formance was opera school is

The performance of Requiem was a complishment.
Berkshire Center
chestra. Mr. Munch
terly interpreta much too little forces of the music school, which additional instrumen four subsidiary
Berlioz demands
score, combined
vantage. Sixteen
were among the music school
Its chorus of 125
much more than Berlioz asked sal creation. The theless extremely music unforgettable
quence an unforget tation of the combined
both of the orchestra
music school, which bear Koussevitzky's memory of its found

NGFIELD, MASS.
EPUBLICAN

17 1952

oz' 'Requiem' Grandeur a

Assists by Breakin ses Particularly Eff sively Done; Bernste lern Americana

VICTOR PRAHL

y sonorities and tonal associates with the com-
Berlioz came to life in ndeur at Tanglewood on ernoon when Charles
Boston Symphony. The
Festival chorus, three
and Andrew McKinley,
performed this com-
quiem." The elements
emed to join in when
"Hosanna" of the "Sanc-
broke through the pro-
for a few minutes.
erlioz enthusiast or not, ot help being awed by sound released by the sections, two on the ght and one on the left gmented the full chorus
in the "Tuba Mirum."

vid Contrasts

urely choral standpoint, ive was the tremendous which our own sym-
sang at the final sym-
t of the season here,
e subtle in beauty was
of the exquisite "Offers a work of vivid con-
10 sections were beau-
ed and expertly sung.
attitude towards music
nglewood, we observed
who trained the chorus
y with the tenors as Goldovsky, the director department. Andrew
nor, the only soloist,
the high tessitura of
in the Sanctus and de-authority.
ng this moving perforoped that our own symwill continue the work
ready started on this early in the season.

ard Bernstein

week at Tanglewood
three performances of stein's one-act opera Tahiti," a bit of modern out the domestic ups
a young suburban cou-od is set by a TV trio
one side of the stage ground and color music time. There are many ers and arrangers who writing such music
ressed us in Mr. Bern-piece were the several ts.
ng by the young wife
of the psychiatrist was beauty as were the
in modern madrigal
ms to us that in this ft of lyricism lies this rength. Most contem-
sers are afraid to ex-
ves to the extent of able melody. Not only erpts singable but they
e, and seemed to grow
of the action of the aps Mr. Bernstein is compose the American waited for so long.
t is reassuring to learn to devote most of his he coming year to com-
for the theater.

Foundation

ssions of the Kousse-
ation which have enodern orchestra reper-
y have now been going
rs. This 10th anniverebrated at Tanglewood
ld memorial concert at these works were per-ing the coming season
tras both here and y homage to the great
other works published
tion.
hursday night Sir Mal-
will play Bela Bartok's
Orchestra" at the Lonnade concerts. Thor
anglewood alumnus now
e Cincinnati orchestra,
at Tanglewood during ek, will perform Villona" and Lopatnikoff's
as well as the Bartok
tal Dorati and the Minestra will perform Bur-
"Tom Paine" overture
llapiccolo's "Tartiniana" rtok. Other conductors
gnaled their intentions
orks published by the re Walter Hendl (Dal-Ormandy (Philadel-
el Kubelik (Chicago), hel (Washington) and
kowski.

TIGHT BINDING

LOS ANGELES, CAL.
TIMES

AUG 17 1952

The SOUNDING BOARD

Clouds Over Tanglewood Clear as Munch Pursues Old Policy

By ALBERT GOLDBERG

The ~~Berkshire~~ Festival at Tanglewood has just finished a crucial second season without its founder and moving spirit, Serge Koussevitzky. Irving Deakin ~~sends the~~ following report on the event:

"The 10th anniversary season of the Berkshire Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, in Lenox, was distinguished for a number of things other than the exceptional quality of one of the loveliest natural settings imaginable, which seems to grow more idyllic with the passage of time.

"This 10th season opened with a query. It is true that the Boston Symphony Orchestra had just returned from a genuinely triumphant European tour, crowned with laurels for its superior playing under its permanent conductor, Charles Munch, and its conductor of a quarter of a century ago, the now guesting Pierre Monteux. The quality of the playing to be expected could almost be taken for granted.

CLOUD SEEN LAST YEAR

"The query was: What would Tanglewood itself be like? Last season had a rather ominous little cloud hanging over it. It may have been no bigger than a man's hand but it nevertheless was a cloud. Serge Koussevitzky, its founder, had been dead hardly a month. Tanglewood had been his 'baby.'

"Munch's attitude toward Tanglewood was not known. There was an air of uncertainty as to direction and policy and the rumor factory was busy as to the future. The rumors were not all encouraging.

"It is a pleasure to be able to report that those clouds not only have lifted but that the rising barometer indicates that the threatened storm has passed over.

POLICY UNCHANGED

"Briefly, to list the material and spiritual accomplishments: Policy continues unchanged. Munch, in his opening address, set the tone and calmed any fears when he said: 'This is the first time I have had the honor to open a session of the Berkshire Music Center. It is its 10th season and the second to begin, unfortunately, without its founder, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

"'His presence among us is always alive and reminds us of the greatness and beauty of this wonderful creation, which he cherished and loved so deeply. I believe the best thing for us all to do is to endeavor to continue his work, following the path he traced for us.'

"So much for the material-spiritual accomplishment. From the completely material side, attendance records have been broken. The chamber orchestra concerts have attracted from 4000 to 5000 each.

FESTIVAL ATTRACTS

"The festival concerts in the Saarinen-designed shed have brought an average of 9500 to each of nine concerts, culminating in the Berlioz 'Grand Messe des Morts,' with all the colossal orchestral and choral forces demanded by the composer limited only by space and practicability but with all of the musical notation intact.

"It would be quite wrong not to point out that, though the public concerts are of great importance, both artistically and materially, the school of the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's summer school, is of prime importance. The school has a creative life of its own. It participates in the festival through its chorus, orchestra and opera department, under Boris Goldovsky.

"The orchestra is exceptionally good, as was evidenced in the performances of what is believed to be the first American production of one of Mozart's last works, the opera 'La Clemenza di Tito', in an English version by Goldovsky and Sarah Caldwell, titled 'Titus'."

'OPERA SERIA'

"An example of 'opera seria,' commissioned to be performed at the coronation of Joseph II as King of Bohemia, it is a product of the last year of Mozart's life.

"A work filled with arias and concerted numbers, many of them Mozart at his finest, in the English version it received a performance distinguished for its careful presentation and singing of a high order. Notable was that of Irene Jordan, of the Metropolitan roster, whose singing of one of the longest and most difficult arias in operatic literature was a model of lyric-dramatic delivery.

"For some music lovers there has been a tinge of disappointment in the fact that festival orchestral programmes have offered no premieres of commissioned works this season and have rested, for the most part, a little to the right of center. There were, however, a number of distinguished performances. Among these was Pierre Monteux's definitive reading of Stravinsky's 'Le Sacre du Printemps.' After 40 years, this work remains the most astonishing orchestral achievement of the 20th century.

COMPOSER'S PROTEST

"Charles Munch conducted a performance of the triptych, 'Songs of Captivity,' by Luigi Dallapiccola, this year's composer in residence. A deliberate striving for Palestrinian effects along modern lines, enlisting two harps, two pianos and percussion with chorus, the work sprang from the composer's protest against Fascist persecution of Jews imprisoned without cause.

"Unable to raise his voice against such horrors when he wrote the songs from 1938 to 1941, he camouflaged the urgency of their protest by using Latin texts by three famous prisoners who died for noble causes: Mary Stuart, Boethius and Gerolamo Savonarola.

"Munch also paid tribute to his old friend, Arthur Honegger, with a stirring presentation of his 'Danse des Morts,' the first performance in the East of a work in Honegger's most effective manner, and the second in this country.

TERSE WRITING

"Another first time with the Boston Symphony was its first performance of the New York Music Critics Circle prize-winning orchestral work, Howard Swanson's 'Short Symphony,' a compact, terse piece of writing, and one of depth, seriousness and intensity, which was enthusiastically received despite what seemed to your correspondent a certain lack of familiarity on Munch's part with its rhythmic material.

"One of the greatest demonstrations of public enthusiasm was reserved for Artur Rubinstein, making his first Tanglewood appearance, in a magnificent performance of the Brahms Second Concerto in B-Flat Major. Gramophiles will be interested to know that this performance will soon be available on records.

"Like the little boy who leaves the most delicious food on his plate for the end of the meal, the Boston Symphony players almost deliberately, it would seem, reserved their finest playing for festival's end.

BERNSTEIN TO FORE

"Koussevitzky's protege, Leonard Bernstein, now head of the center's conducting department, took over the Koussevitzky memorial concert.

"C. P. E. Bach's Concerto in D major for stringed instruments was played with loving affection. To this and to Aaron Copland's Third Symphony, commissioned by Koussevitzky in 1946, and finally to the Sibelius Fifth, Bernstein and the orchestra gave their all, with some of the most glorious sound that has assailed your correspondent's ears in many moons of listening.

"For finale came the Berlioz Requiem. Munch has a way with this great work. At his hands it becomes an overwhelming experience. He unifies the work by an extraordinary imaginative grasp, bringing forth a sense of physical vastness, of immense spaces, that is quite independent of the large number of musical resources employed.

"The prolonged, barely breathed amen, after the gigantic pyramids of sound, echoed the feelings of thousands for another Tanglewood festival, with a firm hope that they may endure as long as music itself."

TIME MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.

AUG 18 1952

Tanglewood & Other Woods

Music was as ubiquitous as Muzak* at the Tanglewood festival in Lenox, Mass. last week. As the Boston Symphony's 16th summer season came to a close, Pianist Artur Rubinstein and Conductor Charles Munch performed for 10,000 listeners in & around the wall-less Music Shed. Then Leonard Bernstein took the podium to lead a concert and a revised version of his 35-minute-long opera, Trouble in Tahiti (TIME, June 23). At week's end, there were three orchestral programs, one for chorus and one of chamber music. The grand finale: a 280-man performance of Berlioz' massive Requiem.

Before the week was out, 400-odd young musicians of the Berkshire Music Center, which shares the well-clipped lawns of Tanglewood with the festival, had also wound up their six-week summer session—studying composition (with Aaron Copland, Luigi Dallapiccola), conducting (with Bernstein), and performance (with members of the orchestra). Their big show: Mozart's opera, La Clemenza di Tito, resurrected, rendered into English (and renamed Titus), produced and conducted by the New England Opera Company's Director Boris Goldovsky.

• • •

All across the U.S. last week, the midsummer air was resounding more or less tunefully as thousands of other summer music students neared commencement time with a scraping of catgut, tootling of brass and a thumping of piano keys. Among them:

¶ The National Music Camp at Interlochen, Mich., where 1,600 students from eight through college age take lessons on their instruments, play in orchestras, sing in choruses, dance, paint, act and live a rugged life in rustic surroundings.

¶ L'Ecole Monteux, at Hancock, Maine, where 50 young (average age: 30) professionals take a month of intensive podium training at Conductor Pierre Monteux's own school.

¶ Salzedo Harp Colony, in Camden, Maine, where Harpist Carlos Salzedo teaches his technique to 38 men and women in an idyllic setting. Part of the curriculum: costume and deportment so that the performers may properly grace the stage when they play in symphony orchestras.

¶ Composers' Conference and Chamber Music Center at Bennington, Vt., where about 50 composers and instrumentalists gather for two weeks in August to play for each other and the public.

Besides the special summer setups, the year-round institutions were also going full blast: 363 students at the University of Rochester's Eastman School of Music, 400 at Manhattan's Juilliard, 1,300 at the University of Wisconsin's School of Music. Crowed Teacher Lotte Lehmann (in Santa Barbara's Music Academy of the West): "What has Salzburg got that we haven't got?"

14 15

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 17 1952

TANGLEWOOD IDE

Principles of Berkshire Music
Adhere to Koussevitzky's Stan

By OLIN DOWNES

ONE very important thing seems to have been definitely established by the results of the Berkshire Festival and the coordinated activities of the Berkshire School of Music which ended their 1952 season last week. This is, that the Berkshire Music School, which Serge Koussevitzky founded with such enthusiasm and determination, has now been accepted by the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a permanent institution.

It was not certain last year that this would be the case, or whether it would be that the music school would pass out of existence with the disappearance of the man and the artistic personality whose presence many believed to be essential to its continuance.

For the Berkshire School of Music was very characteristically a Koussevitzky creation. It was no conventional institution and it did not follow at all the traditional ways of music education. It was not a place for diplomas, gradings, degrees, for marks of relative excellence or inferiority in scholarship. It emphasized the training and development of conductors and composers. It did not concern itself with the cultivation of virtuosity of young singers or instrumentalists. Its concern was and is the stimulus and inspiration of young musicians in the vital principles and broader aspects of their art.

Considered Impractical

This objective appeared so impractical as to have the quality of a theory rather than a plan possible of achievement. Koussevitzky, said the wiseacres, was the artist, the virtuoso, the triumphant individualist of unique accomplishments, but no man to organize or direct a course of music education. When he had gone, the edifice he had erected by the power of his imagination, his personal magnetism and own indefatigable labors, would tumble to the ground, and have no further existence. Or so they said.

Exactly the opposite process seems to be taking place. The music school has this season become better integrated and more effective in its workings than ever before. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony and director of the school in one, like his predecessor, has taken a deep and heartfelt interest in the workings of the organization and in the furtherance of its special ideals. But this in itself would not have been enough. Matters of administration and of individual teaching have of course been relegated by him to the experienced members of the faculty, of which Leonard Bernstein in the orchestral department, Boris Goldovsky of the opera school, Aaron Copland in composition, and Hugh Ross as head of the choral division, have been the functioning heads.

But Mr. Munch's supervision could not be of the sort that emanated from the first head and creator of this institution. The school had to work in an organic way of its own or not work at all. It has worked, and admirably coordinated its efforts, as never before. What the future will bring, whether there can always be present a faculty of such understanding and collective enthusiasm in its cooperation as the one which has been in control this past summer, remains to be seen. For present purposes the music school has pulled together, as if inspired by an inner dynamism, with an effect which is a most impressive guarantee of its vitality and usefulness for the future.

Substantial Profits

The earnings of the orchestra and the substantial profits which accrue from the concert receipts of the orchestral season at Tanglewood are indispensable to the continuance of the school, as the heads of the different divisions of the orchestra are irreplaceable as members of the Berkshire Music Center's faculty. The value of the center, for prestige and completion of the cultural program of the orchestra, is evident, and is confirmed always more strongly with the passing of each season. Its membership, amounting to 410, was the biggest in its history. The receipts of the school, in spite of an increased number of scholarships, were larger than deficits of the which are met from the tra. It is cision for the directors, in these ing costs of a symphony

nance, to have the music school, gations and junct of the if Koussevitzky's were pleased to
"academy" of music
he worked all his nificantly come true,
by virtue of the power of his Concrete Exampl

Three items of the
the closing week of
opera exemplified remarks. They were
ance of the orchestra
sevitzky Memorial
Aaron Copland's that of the the Boston chorus of the Center at the
the performance by the dio of Leonard version of his "
The Copland
missioned from Koussevitzky
this writer the ception and the
in its workmanship that Mr. Copland produced. Its
ple, grand of line,
spirit is serene and the spirit of a
who has found himself
The night after the stein's opera was interesting in its niques of stage
the new experiments
Bernstein is making
He would never be
conventional musical
music per se it is not vincing, or altogether
style. But we do not symptoms of the planation of its planation, we think,
libretto's lack of a matic motivation. A who may live in sachusetts or Illinois, mortally bored with escape being alone conclusively as
to see a movie that already seen in the
"Trouble in Tahiti."

Artificial Doctri

There are moments
pathos and
such as the rain band and wife the rain with plain their respective
What caused their
the rift will lead
tion that there may anything that once gether, or that thing but a virtually sterile favorable circumstances
tificial a doctrine
composer to say strke home as a tragic or otherwise
ers. This is tantish, unreal. It
duce interesting
formance was another opera school is going
The performance of the Requiem was a complishment. The Berkshire Center
chestra. Mr. Munch
terly interpretation
much too little forces of the
music school, which additional instrument four subsidiary
Berlioz demands
score, combined
vantage. Sixteen
were among the music school not
Its chorus of 125
much more modest than Berlioz asked sal creation. The theless extremely music unforgettable
quence an unforgettable tation of the
both of the orchestra
music school, bear Kouss memory of its 17 oz' 'Requiem'

Grandeur at T

Assists by Breaking T
ses Particularly Effect
sively Done; Bernstein's ern Americana

VICTOR PRAHL

y sonorities and tonal
associates with the com-
Berlioz came to life in ndeur at Tanglewood on ernoon when Charles
Boston Symphony. The
Festival chorus, three
and Andrew McKinley,
performed this com-
quiem." The elements
eemed to join in when
"Hosanna" of the "Sanc-
broke through the pro-
for a few minutes.
erlioz enthusiast or not,
t help being awed by sound released by the sections, two on the ght and one on the left
gmented the full chorus
in the "Tuba Mirum."

vid Contrasts

rely choral standpoint, ve was the tremendous which our own sym-
sang at the final sym-
t of the season here,
e subtle in beauty was
f the exquisite "Offer-a work of vivid con-
10 sections were beau-
ed and expertly sung.
attitude towards music
nglewood, we observed
ho trained the chorus
y with the tenors as Goldovsky, the director department. Andrew
nor, the only soloist,
the high tessitura of
in the Sanctus and de-
authority.
g this moving perfor-
ped that our own sym-
will continue the work
ready started on this early in the season.

ard Bernstein

week at Tanglewood
three performances of nstein's one-act opera ahiti," a bit of modern out the domestic ups
a young suburban cou-d is set by a TV trio
one side of the stage
round and color music time. There are many ers and arrangers who writing such music
ressed us in Mr. Bern-piece were the several
ts.
ng by the young wife
f the psychiatrist was beauty as were the
in modern madrigal
ms to us that in this ft of lyricism lies this rength. Most contem-
sers are afraid to ex-
ves to the extent of able melody. Not only
erpts singable but they
e, and seemed to grow
of the action of the aps Mr. Bernstein is ompose the American e waited for so long.
is reassuring to learn to devote most of his e coming year to com-
for the theater.

Foundation

ssions of the Kousse-
ation which have en-
odern orchestra reper-
y have now been going
rs. This 10th anniver-
ebrated at Tanglewood
ld memorial concert at these works were per-ng the coming season
tras both here and
y homage to the great
other works published ation.
hursday night Sir Mal-
will play Bela Bartok's
Orchestra" at the Lon-
nade concerts. Thor
anglewood alumnus now
e Cincinnati orchestra,
at Tanglewood during k, will perform Villona" and Lopatnikoff's
as well as the Bartok
tal Dorati and the Minestra will perform Bur-
"Tom Paine" overture
llapiccolo's "Tartiniana"
tok. Other conductors
gnaled their intentions
orks published by the
re Walter Hendl (Dal-Ormandy (Philadel-
l Kubelik (Chicago), hel (Washington) and
kowski.

TIGHT BINDING

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

1952

rlioz' 'Requiem' Presented n Grandeur at Tanglewood

Sun Assists by Breaking Through Rain Clouds; Brasses Particularly Effective; 'Lacrymosa' Impressively Done; Bernstein's 'Trouble in Tahiti' Is Modern Americana

By VICTOR [illegible]

N. Y. STAATS-ZEITUNG UND HEROLD, DONNERSTAG, den 14. AUGUST 1952

AUS DER MUSIKWELT

Von FRED LOW

Saisonschluss in Tanglewood

Die Berkshire Musikfeste haben während ihrer 6-wöchigen Dauer insgesamt 119,375 Besucher angelockt, außerdem wohnten mehr als 35,000 Personen der Aufführungen des Berkshire Music Center bei. Im Programm der Konzerte des Boston Symphonie Orchesters waren unter anderm Honeggers "Totentanz", Howard Swansons "Short Symphony" und Luigi Dallapiccolas "Three Prisoners' Songs"; die Komponisten der beiden letztgenannten Werke konnten sich persönlich für den Beifall bedanken. Einer der Höhepunkte des Musikfestes war das von Pierre Monteux geleitete Wagnerkonzert, in welchem Margaret Harshaw Auszüge aus der "Götterdämmerung" und "Siegfried" sang. Nicole Henriot spielte das Klavierkonzert von Ravel und Artur Rubinstein war zum erstenmal Solist in einer Veranstaltung in Tanglewood. Vierhundert Studenten waren im Berkshire Music Center angemeldet; Hugh Ross leitete den Festival Chorus, der in Konzerten des Studentenorchesters und in Aufführungen der Boston Symphonie mitwirkte. Die Opernklassen, von Boris Goldowsky geleitet, brachten eine bemerkenswerte Aufführung von Mozarts Oper "Titus" und Leonard Bernsteins "Trouble in Tahiti." Im Composers Forum hielten Aaron Copland, Luigi Dallapiccola und Lukas Foss Vorträge und Leonard Bernstein dirigierte das Studentenorchester in einigen Werken, während Studenten der Kapellmeisterschule Aufführungen von Cesar Francks Symphonie Richard Strauß' "Don Quixote", Coplands "Billy the Kid" und Bartoks "Concerto" für Orchester leiteten.

Auch das finanzielle Ergebnis war für die Veranstalter befriedigend; die Totaleinnahmen beliefen sich auf 271,000 Dollars; die respektiven Ziffern für 1951 waren 249,000 Dollars, Schulgelder und Pensionsbeträge der Studenten waren 55,850 Dollars gegen 53,758 Dollars im Jahre 1951. Diese Steigerung ist um so bemerkenswerter, da eine große Anzahl Stipendien vergeben waren (236 Schulgelder Stipendien). Ein großer Teil der Stipendien ist an den "Revolving Fund" zurückzahlbar; die hierdurch einlaufenden Beträge kommen anderen Studenten für die kommenden Jahre zugute.

Massimo Freccia leitet NBC Symphonie

Massimo Freccia hat für das Programm des Konzertes der NBC Symphonie, Samstag, den 16. Aug., 6.30 Uhr, im Belasko Theater Beethovens "Egmont"-Ouvertüre und Mozarts Haffner Symphonie gewählt. Luigi Dallapiccola ist Solist in seinem "Concerto für Klavier und Kammerorchester", das zur amerikanischen Erstaufführung kommt.

Musikwettbewerbe

Drei Geldpreise wurden im Jascha-Heifetz-, Gregor-Piatigorski- und Samuel-Wechseler-Wettbewerb begabten Musikern zuerkannt. Im Heifetz-Wettbewerb erhielten zwei Geiger, Serge Blanc (Paris) und Elisabeth Walker (Oxford, Ohio) den Preis, der Cellist John Sant Ambrogio (Bloomfield, N. J.) qualifizierte sich für den Piatikorski-Preis und Allen Sapp (Boston) war Preisträger der "Wechsler Commission", die einem ehemaligen Schüler der Kompositionsklassen des Berkshire Music Center zuzuerkennen ist. Samuel Wechsler war früher ebenfalls Student im Music Center.

Die drei Preise wurden im Rahmen des Orchesterkonzertes, Freitag nachmittags als Schlußfeier der Saison 1952, übergeben; es sind Anerkennungen, die begabten Studenten finanzielle Beihilfe zu ihrem weiteren Studium geben sollen. Der Gewinner des Kompositionswettbewerbes, Allen Sapp, war 1942 Student des Music Center bei Aaron Copland und hat schon vorher den Kniht-Preis für eine Geigensonate (mit Klavier) und den Preis der New Yorker Philharmonie gewonnen. Die beiden Geiger, Serge Blanc (Student des Pariser Konservatoriums) und Elisabeth Walker (Assistant Professor der Miami Universität in Oxford) sind durch ihre künstlerische Tätigkeit bereits bekannt; Serge Blanc hat wiederholt in Konzerten in Paris, London, Belgien, Holland, Schweiz und Österreich solistisch mitgewirkt, Elisabeth Walker ist Mitglied des Miami Universität-Streichquartetts.

Der Cellist John Sant Ambrogio ist Student des Lebanon Valley College in Annville und Mitglied der Harrisburg Symphonie. — Die Preise wurden von Frederic Mann, Industrieller und Präsident der Robin Hood Dell-Konzerte, Philadelphia, überreicht; Frederic Mann ist auch Stifter von zwei Stipendien, das eine für einen Studenten der Kapellmeisterklassen in Gedenken an Serge Koussevitzky, das andere für einen Cellisten zur Ehrung Gregor Piatigorskys, Leiters der Kammermusikklassen des Berkshire Music Center.

HOLLYWOOD, CAL.
CITIZEN-NEWS

AUG 16 1952

Hollywood, Saturday, Aug. 16, 1952

MUSICAL SCORE

Evenings on the Roof launches its 15th season Sept. 15 with a series of 10 concerts, six on the regular season and four special ones, all to be played in West Hollywood Auditorium.

Choice items will include the first American performances of Pierre Boulez's Polyphony X (1951) and two works for wind instruments by Haydn to be performed by the Los Angeles Woodwinds and Brass ensemble, conducted by Robert Craft.

First Los Angeles performances will have the Madrigal Singers and A Cappella Choir from USC performing a Monteverdi madrigal, "Tears of a Lover at the Tomb of the Beloved," and Luigi Dallapiccola's "Songs of Captivity."

The American String Quartet will play Haydn's Opus 76, No. 6, Bartok's Fourth and the Schubert "Death and the Maiden." Beethoven's Trio, Opus 70, No. 2 has been programmed with Frances Mullen, piano, Howard Coif, violin and Michel Penha, cello.

Recital programs will be offered by the New Friends of Old Music; Suzanne Bloch, lute player; and by Marjorie Low, soprano, and Marvin Hayes, bass, winners of the Evenings on the Roof's recent art song competition.

Other interesting prospects include a new translation of Schubert's "Die Schoene Muellerin" song cycle by Shibley Boyes which will be sung by Caryl Porter, contralto, and a series of four concerts, titled "A Schoenberg Retrospective," dedicated to the composer's chamber works. "The Ode to Napoleon," "The Book of the Hanging Gardens," the piano pieces, "Pierrot Lunaire," the second and fourth quartets, the serenade, the suite, opus 29, "Herzgewaechse," and the wind quintet are listed in addition to premiere performances of two cantatas, "The Lover's Wish" and "The New Classicism."

* * *

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, has concluded its 15th Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., and termed it "one of the most successful for the orchestra."

In the six weeks of the Tanglewood season, attendance totalled 119,375, the attendance at student performances averaged higher than in previous years and Thursday evening records were topped twice.

On the financial side, the gross receipts for the 15 concerts totalled $271,000 as against $249,000 for the 1951 season. Tuition and dormitory receipts were $55,850, compared with $53,758 last year. The increase is in spite of a greater number of scholarships. For the first time, 236 tuition scholarships and 22 work scholarships were given talented musicians. Most of the grants are returnable by the recipients to a revolving fund from which other young musicians may benefit in future seasons.

Cash prizes, named for their donors, went to three winners at the Berkshire Music Center. The Jascha Heifetz Award was won by two violinists, Serge Blanc, of Paris, France, and Elizabeth Walker, of Oxford, Ohio; the Gregor Piatigorsky Award went to John Sant Ambrogio, cellist, of Bloomfield, N. J., and the Samuel Wechsler Commission was given to Allen Sapp of Boston, Mass., for a short work suitable for study by the Tanglewood Study Group.

* * *

Plans are under way for a world-wide music festival honoring the Steinway Centennial during the 1953-54 music season. The event will commemorate 100 years since Henry Engelhard Steinway built the first Steinway piano in New York City. [illegible] that time, the firm has been under the direction of five generations of Steinways.

Pianist Josef Hofmann has been named honorary chairman of a special artists committee which is being organized by Edward Johnson, former general manager of the Metropolitan Opera Co. The centennial fete will be highlighted by many outstanding events including tours of famous Steinway artists, various projects in the field of music education, television, film and radio concerts and a special program at Carnegie Hall, New York City.

TIGHT BINDING

RINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

UG 17 1952

rlioz' 'Requiem' Presented n Grandeur at Tanglewood

Sun Assists by Breaking Through Rain Clouds; Brasses Particularly Effective; 'Lacrymosa' Impressively Done; Bernstein's 'Trouble in Tahiti' Is Modern Americana

By VICTOR PRAHL

N. Y. STAATS-ZEITUNG UND HEROLD, DONNERSTAG, den 14. AUGUST 1952

AUS DER MUSIKWELT

Von FRED LOW

Saisonschluss in Tanglewood

Die Berkshire Musikfeste haben während ihrer 6-wöchigen Dauer insgesamt 119,375 Besucher angelockt, außerdem wohnten mehr als 35,000 Personen der Aufführungen des Berkshire Music Center bei. Im Programm der Konzerte des Boston Symphonie Orchesters waren unter anderm Honeggers "Totentanz", Howard Swansons "Short Symphony" und Luigi Dallapiccolas "Three Prisoners' Songs"; die Komponisten der beiden letztgenannten Werke konnten sich persönlich für den Beifall bedanken. Einer der Höhepunkte des Musikfestes war das von Pierre Monteux geleitete Wagnerkonzert, in welchem Margaret Harshaw Auszüge aus der "Götterdämmerung" und "Siegfried" sang. Nicole Henriot spielte das Klavierkonzert von Ravel und Artur Rubinstein war zum erstenmal Solist in einer Veranstaltung in Tanglewood. Vierhundert Studenten waren im Berkshire Music Center angemeldet; Hugh Ross leitete den Festival Chorus, der in Konzerten des Studentenorchesters und in Aufführungen der Boston Symphonie mitwirkte. Die Opernklassen, von Boris Goldowsky geleitet, brachten eine bemerkenswerte Aufführung von Mozarts Oper "Titus" und Leonard Bernsteins "Trouble in Tahiti." Im Composers Forum hielten Aaron Copland, Luigi Dallapiccola und Lukas Foss Vorträge und Leonard Bernstein dirigierte das Studentenorchester in einigen Werken, während Studenten der Kapellmeisterschule Aufführungen von Cesar Francks Symphonie Richard Strauß' "Don Quixote", Coplands "Billy the Kid" und Bartoks "Concerto" für Orchester leiteten.

Auch das finanzielle Ergebnis war für die Veranstalter befriedigend; die Totaleinnahmen beliefen sich auf 271,000 Dollars; die respektiven Ziffern für 1951 waren 249,000 Dollars, Schulgelder und Pensionsbeträge der Studenten waren 55,850 Dollars gegen 53,758 Dollars im Jahre 1951. Diese Steigerung ist um so bemerkenswerter, da eine große Anzahl Stipendien vergeben waren (236 Schulgelder Stipendien). Ein großer Teil der Stipendien ist an den "Revolving Fund" zurückzahlbar; die hierdurch einlaufenden Beträge kommen anderen Studenten für die kommenden Jahre zugute.

Massimo Freccia leitet NBC Symphonie

Massimo Freccia hat für das Programm des Konzertes der NBC Symphonie, Samstag, den 16. Aug., 6.30 Uhr, im Belasko Theater Beethovens "Egmont"-Ouvertüre und Mozarts Haffner Symphonie gewählt. Luigi Dallapiccola ist Solist in seinem "Concerto für Klavier und Kammerorchester", das zur amerikanischen Erstaufführung kommt.

Musikwettbewerbe

Drei Geldpreise wurden im Jascha-Heifetz-, Gregor-Piatigorski- und Samuel-Wechseler-Wettbewerb begabten Musikern zuerkannt. Im Heifetz-Wettbewerb erhielten zwei Geiger, Serge Blanc (Paris) und Elisabeth Walker (Oxford, Ohio) den Preis, der Cellist John Sant Ambrogio (Bloomfield, N. J.) qualifizierte sich für den Piatikorski-Preis und Allen Sapp (Boston) war Preisträger der "Wechsler Commission", die einem ehemaligen Schüler der Kompositionsklassen des Berkshire Music Center zuzuerkennen ist. Samuel Wechsler war früher ebenfalls Student im Music Center.

Die drei Preise wurden im Rahmen des Orchesterkonzertes, Freitag nachmittags als Schlußfeier der Saison 1952, übergeben; es sind Anerkennungen, die begabten Studenten finanzielle Beihilfe zu ihrem weiteren Studium geben sollen. Der Gewinner des Kompositionswettbewerbes, Allen Sapp, war 1942 Student des Music Center bei Aaron Copland und hat schon vorher den Kniht-Preis für eine Geigensonate (mit Klavier) und den Preis der New Yorker Philharmonie gewonnen. Die beiden Geiger, Serge Blanc (Student des Pariser Konservatoriums) und Elisabeth Walker (Assistant Professor der Miami Universität in Oxford) sind durch ihre künstlerische Tätigkeit bereits bekannt; Serge Blanc hat wiederholt in Konzerten in Paris, London, Belgien, Holland, Schweiz und Österreich solistisch mitgewirkt, Elisabeth Walker ist Mitglied des Miami Universität-Streichquartetts.

Der Cellist John Sant Ambrogio ist Student des Lebanon Valley College in Annville und Mitglied der Harrisburg Symphonie. — Die Preise wurden von Frederic Mann, Industrieller und Präsident der Robin Hood Dell-Konzerte, Philadelphia, überreicht; Frederic Mann ist auch Stifter von zwei Stipendien, das eine für einen Studenten der Kapellmeisterklassen in Gedenken an Serge Koussevitzky, das andere für einen Cellisten zur Ehrung Gregor Piatigorskys, ~~Leiters der Kammer~~musikklassen des Berkshire Music Center.

HOLLYWOOD, CAL.
CITIZEN-NEWS

AUG 16 1952

Hollywood, Saturday, Aug. 16, 1952

MUSICAL SCORE

Evenings on the Roof launches its 15th season Sept. 15 with a series of 10 concerts, six on the regular season and four special ones, all to be played in West Hollywood Auditorium.

Choice items will include the first American performances of Pierre Boulez's Polyphony X (1951) and two works for wind instruments by Haydn to be performed by the Los Angeles Woodwinds and Brass ensemble, conducted by Robert Craft.

First Los Angeles performances will have the Madrigal Singers and A Cappella Choir from USC performing a Monteverdi madrigal, "Tears of a Lover at the Tomb of the Beloved," and Luigi Dallapiccola's "Songs of Captivity."

The American String Quartet will play Haydn's Opus 76, No. 6, Bartok's Fourth and the Schubert "Death and the Maiden." Beethoven's Trio, Opus 70, No. 2 has been programmed with Frances Mullen, piano, Howard Coif, violin and Michel Penha, cello.

Recital programs will be offered by the New Friends of Old Music; Suzanne Bloch, lute player; and by Marjorie Low, soprano, and Marvin Hayes, bass, winners of the Evenings on the Roof's recent art song competition.

Other interesting prospects include a new translation of Schubert's "Die Schoene Muellerin" song cycle by Shibley Boyes which will be sung by Caryl Porter, contralto, and a series of four concerts, titled "A Schoenberg Retrospective," dedicated to the composer's chamber works. "The Ode to Napoleon," "The Book of the Hanging Gardens," the piano pieces, "Pierrot Lunaire," the second and fourth quartets, the serenade, the suite, opus 29, "Herzgewaechse," and the wind quintet are listed in addition to premiere performances of two cantatas, "The Lover's Wish" and "The New Classicism."

* * *

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles ~~Munch~~ conducting, has concluded its 15th Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., and termed it "one of the most successful for the orchestra."

In the six weeks of the Tanglewood season, attendance totalled 119,375, the attendance at student performances averaged higher than in previous years and Thursday evening records were topped twice.

On the financial side, the gross receipts for the 15 concerts totalled $271,000 as against $249,000 for the 1951 season. Tuition and dormitory receipts were $55,850, compared with $53,758 last year. The increase is in spite of a greater number of scholarships. For the first time, 236 tuition scholarships and 22 work scholarships were given talented musicians. Most of the grants are returnable by the recipients to a revolving fund from which other young musicians may benefit in future seasons.

Cash prizes, named for their donors, went to three winners at the Berkshire Music Center. The Jascha Heifetz Award was won by ~~two violinists~~, Serge Blanc, of Paris, France, and Elizabeth Walker, of Oxford, Ohio; the Gregor Piatigorsky Award went to John Sant Ambrogio, cellist, of Bloomfield, N. J., and the Samuel Wechsler Commission was given to Allen Sapp of Boston, Mass., for a short work suitable for study by the Tanglewood Study Group.

* * *

Plans are under way for a worldwide music festival honoring the Steinway Centennial during the 1953-54 music season. The event will commemorate 100 years since Henry Engelhard Steinway built the first Steinway piano in New York City. ~~From~~ that time, the firm has been under the direction of five generations of Steinways.

Pianist Josef Hofmann has been named honorary chairman of a special artists committee which is being organized by Edward Johnson, former general manager of the Metropolitan Opera Co. The centennial fete will be highlighted by many outstanding events including tours of famous Steinway artists, various projects in the field of music education, television, film and radio concerts and a special program at Carnegie Hall, New York City.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 11 1952

TANGLEWOOD ENDS WITH BERLIOZ OPUS

Munch Conducts His Requiem in 1952 Finale—Bernstein Leads Koussevitzky Tribute

By OLIN DOWNES
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 10—The concluding concerts of the 1952 Berkshire Music Festival this afternoon and last night had rare impressiveness. This afternoon's program was devoted to the Berlioz Requiem, "The Grand Mass for the Dead," which, interpreted as it was by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, assisted by the Berkshire Festival Chorus and Andrew McKinley tenor, had an overwhelming effect.

Last night at Tanglewood saw the Koussevitzky Memorial Concert, conducted by Leonard Bernstein before an audience of 12,000. Its program consisted of two works that had been particular features of Dr. Koussevitzky's repertory, and a composition, commissioned by the Natalie Koussevitzky Foundation, which is turning out to be one of the most important works commissioned by that institution.

Mr. Bernstein opened the concert very simply, with a dignity and unostentation eminently befitting the occasion. He signaled to orchestra and audience to rise, and all stood for a moment of silent tribute to the sovereign conductor and artist who had made the Berkshire Festival what it is today, and also had founded and established by his own vision and persistence toward his high objective the Berkshire School of Music.

The composition chosen by Mr. Bernstein for his opening ceremony of homage was the slow movement of the K. P. E. Bach concerto Dr. Koussevitzky had commissioned Maximilian Steinberg to orchestrate, from a score originally in a chamber music form by that composer.

The music is elegiac, of uncommon depth and reflectiveness for this composer of the epoch of the "style gallant." The movement, indeed, could almost be an aria from one of the J. S. Bach Passions. Nothing could have spoken more eloquently of the spirit of the departed leader. After this Mr. Bernstein addressed himself to Aaron Copland's symphony.

Maintains High Level

This symphony grows upon the writer with every hearing. Its mood and its architecture are of the highest level of conception. The music starts, and remains, on mountain heights. Things that have impressed us in the past as mannerisms, or temporary and perhaps extraneous elements of Mr. Copland's style, have disappeared. He has cultivated the grand simplicities.

It is a four-movement symphony. Each of the three first movements is admirably proportioned and concentrated. The finale, aiming at a summation of the main ideas of the entire structure, may not prove to have completely succeeded in the synthesis. There is the feeling that a cut, an omission of a repetitive passage or two, would clear it up.

The performance of this symphony, not as yet over-familiar, impressed one as being about as fine and nobly proportioned as an interpretation of it could be. Mr. Bernstein gave every quality of musicianship and sensitive understanding that he has to the adequate presentation of the composer's thought.

It may have been partly as a result of intense concentration and possibly special preparation that he had given to the Copland work that the performance of the Sibelius Symphony was on a lower level than previous readings of that score we have heard from the same conductor.

As for the work itself, it remains one of the supreme masterpieces of the first half of our century's music, and it needs neither desciption nor justification here, save, perhaps, to record again the impression of the final pages, which are as grand and powerful in their build-up and in their elemental splendor as an Alpine sunrise.

Simplicity of Lines Evident

Its fundamental quality is the grand simplicity of its lines, and the remarkable variety of effect, economy of means, subtlety and novelty of tone colors Berlioz evolves from various combinations of voices and instruments; and the grandly creative quality of the music.

Here are serene as well as tumultuous grandeurs. The crashing orchestras of the "Dies Irae" and "Tuba Mirum" are but the beginnings of wonders, of a sort that recur in certain places. But the exquisite "Querens Me," sung a cappella, and softly, in six parts is very moving; the "Offertorium," in which the words of the prayer are sung upon the same recurrent tone, while the orchestra weaves symphonic developments and commentary about it, is one of the most moving pages we know in choral music.

As a final achievement of this festival came Mr. Munch's superb presentation of the great Berlioz Requiem, and the opportunity, which is much too rare, to hear this extraordinary work.

Acquaintance with it emphasizes one particular thing—the misguided accounts of it that have been given so many times, as principally a work of monster sonorities and spectacular musical efforts arranged by the composer on a unrivaled scale.

The four supplementary orchestras of brass and woodwind instruments, which Berlioz demands to supplement the main orchestra, which in itself is immense, have been the features of the work that history has exploited. And they are tremendous effects, as the four orchestras answer each other from what the composer conceived as something akin to four corners of the universe, or combined in vast unisions with the main instrumental body. But that is only one aspect of this great Requiem.

Triumph for Participants

The performance was a triumph, the honor not only to the conductor and the Boston Symphony, but to the supplementary forces. As large a chorus as the Berkshire School of Music could supply was needed, and that—a matter of some 125 voices—was comparatively small for a score that calls for a minimum of 700 or 800 voices if the wishes of the composer are to be followed.

But the chorus, admirably prepared by Hugh Ross, and having in the ranks, Mr. Ross himself, Boris Goldovsky of the opera department, Harvey Generaux, baggage master of the Boston Symphony, and James Alifieri, Mr. Ross' assistant conductor, with four or five of the ushers and music teachers and scholars of the school, did a very remarkable task in attack, shading, enunciation, and dramatic feeling. Mr. McKinley addressed himself bravely and with high credit of the cruel tessiture of the tenor part.

The spirit of the interpretation was not of contagious enthusiasm, but of exceptional intelligence. Mr. Munch, who on more than one occasion has proven himself a singular gifted interpreter of Berlioz, led the performance with complete authority and revealing imagination.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

AUG 11 1952

Tanglewood Closes

Boston Symphony Winds Up Its 15th Berkshire Festival

Lenox, Mass.—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, closed its 15th Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood yesterday and the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school, ended its 10th session.

In the six weeks season the festival attendance totalled 119,375. In addition 35,750 attended the public performances of the school.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 11 1952

Tanglewood Season Ends In Downpour

Audience Braves Rain To Hear Performance Of Berlioz' Requiem

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass. Aug. 10 (Special) — Under intermittently drenching skies, the 15th Berkshire Music Festival ended this afternoon, with a performance of Berlioz' Requiem by Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the festival chorus.

The big music shed was well filled for the performance, but only a few hardy souls braved the wide open spaces of the lawn. Most of the standees crowded under the shed eaves, with permission of a tenderhearted management, like a barnyard flock in the shelter of the woodshed. A few huddled together under umbrellas, which taken with the music itself, afforded a kind of super production of the funeral scene of Thornton Wilder's "Our Town."

Day Fits Production

Yet the gloomy day was more fitting for a Messe des Mortes than a bright one when, at Tanglewood, all nature seems bursting with life and sap. Of course, what is really needed for Berlioz' Requiem are the stone vaults of a great church, so that the music can fill it with flamboyant echoes and the music itself will come back with heart-sinking hollowness.

For this mass is a remarkable and striking work, and as such really made a more fitting commemoration of Sergei Koussevitzky than the big, bold concert by the master's favorite pupil, Leonard Bernstein, here last night. It was more fitting, naturally, because of its memorial nature and because again it is a work of magnificent show, the kind of smashing composition with which the great, good doctor worked so brilliantly and seizingly.

Presentation Compelling

Today's presentation of the Requiem was compelling throughout, but more for its tenderness, so characteristic of Mr. Munch, than its excitement, the huge anguish and praise which mark this Messe des Morts so peculiarly and so wonderfully as Berlioz. In this performance, the various episodes of the mass were not as highly contrasted as might be, nor so redolent of the florid poetry the composer found for it, to make it so extraordinarily rich a composition. Though naturally Mr. Munch showed all its aspects, he seemed essentially to aim at an over-all form and harmony for the Requiem. Actually, the sections are so different that they seem to have been written entirely separately, quite without thought of any unity.

These remarkable distinctions, episode by episode, are really what give Berlioz's Requiem its most arresting quality. Indeed, they are pre-dictated by the service of the mass itself. But Berlioz has filled each with superlatively vivid differences, and this Mr. Munch did not emphasize to the fullest and most imaginative extent.

Greatly Rewarding Event

Sheerly in point of performance, the event was greatly rewarding. Hugh Ross had prepared the festival chorus, as usual, and brought them to their customary high level of discipline. The balance was good enough to suggest the division into boys and men's voice, which, if this reporter remembers correctly, is what the score calls for, rather than a mixed choir. The diction was excellent, something especially essential for the nature of the work.

The one major merit which the chorus does not have, real quality of voice, was of course lacking again today. In the quieter passage of the Requiem, they did indeed attain some nice effects. But at the big moments there was a kind of rawness about the singing, and a roughness of ensemble, which only closer screening of chorus candidates or a great deal more experience will obviate.

The fact is, of course, too, that this is a chorus, not a choir in the churchly sense. The distinction may seem a hair-splitting one. In fact, however, it is not. The best musical as well as spiritual preparation any singers could have for Berlioz's Requiem, would be to be taken to an actual requiem, at some Catholic church, to absorb the temper of this service in the actual face of human sorrow and Divine promise. It would not only afford a sensitivity and insight into the meaning of Requiem spiritually, but it could not but help color their actual singing. The chorus approached the score today as music, as concert. The difference is very great, in the sense of supplication, poignancy and exaltation.

Brass Choirs Added

Four additional brass choirs had been installed in the music shed for today's performance, facing each other from the sides across the big audience, to secure that wonderful antiphonal clashing of sound that comes with "Tuba Mirum." This is the greatest, single, scalp-tingling moment in all music, and it was sumptuously done today. That perhaps is not quite the effect wanted, something a little more terrorizing and majestic at the same time is suggested. But it was pretty exciting just the same,

The orchestra played well, but without any special brilliance of effect, probably because they were being held somewhat in check not to hamper the chorus, and partly because Mr. Munch's approach to the Requiem is deep-felt but not essentially vivid. Andrew McKinley sang the tenor solo of the Sanctus lyrically, but a little tightly in voice.

Rain held the days attendance down to 7,950. Previous attendance during the three weeks' festival had been a record 111,000 Had the day been as fair at the outset as it suddenly turned out the moment the last notes of the Requiem were being sounded, the management had expected that attendance would have been the greatest in the festival's 15 years history.

T.H.P.

AUGUSTA, ME.
KENNEBEC JOURNAL

AUG 11 1952

15th Berkshire Music Fete Ends

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 10—(AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, closed its 15th Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood today and the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school, ended its 10th session.

In the six weeks season the festival attendance totalled 119,375. In addition 35,750 attended the public performances of the school.

Gross receipts for festival concerts total $271,000, an increase of $22,000 over last season. Scholarships amounting to $34,370 were given to 236 of the 410 talented young musicians of the school.

George E. Judd, orchestra manager, gratified by the successful season, listed as the reasons: the enthusiasm for the music, the increased enrollment of the school, and the increased revenue, which added to gifts of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will help to maintain it.

BOSTON, MASS.
HERALD
AUG 11 1952

MUSIC

TANGLEWOOD
Berkshire Festival

[illegible]

By ELINOR HUGHES

LENOX, Aug. 10— [illegible]

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 11 1952

Tanglewood
The Berks

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 10.— Berkshire Music Festival cl this showery afternoon in music shed at Tanglewood, w Charles Munch conducted Boston Symphony Orchestra the Berkshire Chorus in the Re em of Hector Berlioz. Andrew Kinley was the tenor soloist twenty-seven extra musicians mented the orchestra's chorus. The pervasive rain da ened what had promised to banner attendance figure for last series of the festival, with Thursday's 10,200 and more than 12,000 who listen last night's Koussevitzky mem concert under Leonard Bern Under the circumstances, th of the audience, 7,950, was no showing the appeal of this f in general and of the Berlioz terpiece in particular.

The Requiem or, to use it cial title, the "Grande Mes Morts," was performed fo first time at Tanglewood. It often given in this country April's performance by th tional Orchestral Associatio Dessoff Chorus was New first in many years. The tional number of brass ments required and their im sonority are probably the most conspicuous features.

Memorable Results

For today's representati Munch had placed fou groups at either end of t and in the adjacent corne result was memorable in volume, color and pervasiv tone. It does not sugges diosity, but a vastness of imagination corresponding vastness of the subject; "Dies Irae" is set forth cally this reflects the drama of the text.

But size and grandeur the only characteristics of quiem—it is also marke timacy and tenderness. outspoken and in more measures there is a p expressive sincerity. Sub emotional shading and o tral color are also typica music, which runs an gamut from fear and la to religious hope and con

Mr. Munch, who is no interpreter of Berlioz mu performance which was both from the instrum vocal points of view, and vailing emotional convic pressiveness of tone qual the playing of all sectio orchestra, and the chor by Hugh Ross sang wit ship and understandin mirable and well bala quality in all its voices. Kinley's tenor solo in t tus," if not without s forcing in the top notes.

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE

AUG 11 1952

Impressive Berlioz Requiem Ends Berkshire Music Festival

Gigantic Work Marked By Great Originality And Harmonic Beauty; Occasion Memorable

By JULIAN SEAMAN
Blade Staff Writer

TANGLEWOOD, Mass., Aug. 11—An impressive performance of the Berlioz "Grand Mass for the Dead," surnamed requiem in the parlance of musical scholars, concluded the 15th Berkshire Music Festival here yesterday afternoon.

This gigantic work will be performed again on Aug. 23 to celebrate the 25th anniversary of the National Music Camp at Interlochen, Mich.

Grandiose Proportions Cut

The grandiose proportions specified by Berlioz, which could be adjusted to circumstances with the express permission of the composer himself, had been reduced to fit the resources at hand. The four brass bands, of 16 instruments each, were cut to eight; the chorus numbered a third of its possible size and the orchestra came to half of the Berlioz ideal.

This is stunning [illegible] great originality [illegible] beauty. Its [illegible] and emotional [illegible] noble enough to [illegible] ma of hysteria. [illegible] perhaps inordinate [illegible] ering the germ of [illegible] Done Tole Me" in the

Lone Soloist Admirable

There is a lone [illegible] mighty hymn [illegible] part sung by Andrew [illegible] in the sanctus. M[illegible] whose voice I have [illegible] New York, cannot be [illegible] bust or sonorous in the [illegible] of his singing, yet his taste [illegible] without blemish and his [illegible] admirable.

Altogether, this was an occasion memorable in festival annals and a happy departure from the trough of mediocrity into which these concerts have lapsed of late.

Mus
Ber

[illegible]

[101]

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 11 1952

Tanglewood

The Berkshire Festival

* * *

By Francis D. Perkins

[illegible]

The Requiem or, to list its official title, the "Grande Messe des M[illegible]" was performed for the [illegible] time at Tanglewood. It is not often given in this country. Last April's performance by the National Orchestral Association and Dessoff Chorus was New York's first in many years. The exceptional number of brass instruments required and their imposing sonority are probably the work's most conspicuous features.

Memorable Results

For today's representation Mr. Munch had placed four brass groups at either end of the stage and in the adjacent corners. The [illegible] was memorable in impact, volume, color and pervasiveness of tone. It does not suggest grandiosity, but a vastness of musical imagination corresponding to the [illegible] of the subject; if the "Dies Irae" is set forth dramatically this reflects the inherent drama of the text.

But size and grandeur are not the only characteristics of the Requiem—it is also marked by intimacy and tenderness. Both in outspoken and in more intimate measures there is a persuasive, expressive sincerity. Subtleties of emotional shading and of orchestral color are also typical of this music, which runs an expressive gamut from fear and lamentation to religious hope and confidence.

Mr. Munch, who is noted as an interpreter of Berlioz music, led a performance which was admirable both from the instrumental and vocal points of view, and in its prevailing emotional conviction. Impressiveness of tone quality marked the playing of all sections of the orchestra and the chorus trained by Hugh Ross sang with muscianship and understanding and admirable and well balanced tone quality in all its voices. Mr. McKinley's tenor solo in the "Sanctus," if not without some slight forcing in the top notes, more than offset this in the general quality of its tone and its thorough sense of sincere and communicative devotion.

For Koussevitzky

Last night's concert, directed by Leonard Bernstein, was dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony for twenty-five years and founder of the Berkshire Music Center. Mr. Bernstein, who had studied with Dr. Koussevitzky at Tanglewood, invited the orchestra and the audience to rise, and all stood in silence as a memorial tribute before the performance of the "Andante" of Maximilian Steinberg's arrangement of a Concerto in D Major for Strings, attributed to Emanuel Bach. This is music which seems to repeat itself, but its lyric and elegaic dignity were appropriate to this occasion, and the spirit and quality of the performance were equally appropriate.

This prefaced two symphonies by living composers, Aaron Copland's third and the fifth of Jean Sibelius. Mr. Copland's symphony, commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation, was completed six years ago and has been played by most American major orchestras. For a reviewer hearing it for the first time in several seasons, it again seemed a major American work which is impressive in several respects, particularly for its spaciousness and its emotional persuasion; its length of forty-seven minutes reflects largeness of scale rather than prolixity; the skilled scoring has a wide range of color and timbre. The symphony has some occasionally reminiscent passages besides those which are particularly characteristic of the composer but it is individual in its general conception. It has contrasts of contemplative breadth with momentum and energy unlike certain later American works which provide too little relief from a bustling vigor.

There are perhaps too many all-out climaxes, although one could not be sure whether this was inherent in the score or whether Mr. Bernstein could have graduated the climaxes so that one would not have offset the other. But the general interpretation under his gesturesome direction was impressive in quality of performance, expressiveness and intensity; the composer and conductor shared a warm ovation.

The performance of the Sibelius symphony, while often eloquent, was less consistently impressive; a sense of occasional departure from clarity of medium and detail and unbalance in the brass did not seem entirely due to acoustic conditions in the left front region of the music shed. But the concert as a whole was a fitting tribute to the great conductor which it commemorated.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
AUG 11 1952

Berkshire Festival Ends With Berlioz Requiem

By CARL E. LINDSTROM

THE thousands who heard the last concert of the 1952 Berkshire Festival Sunday afternoon will remember longest the brass choirs which reinforced the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Festival Chorus in the Berlioz Requiem.

These were four in number, some 30 players in all, arranged four trombones and four trumpets, at either wing of the stage; and tubas and ophicleides supporting two similar groups on specially-rigged platforms at either side of the shed.

The chords and fanfares poured out from these brazen throats were overpowering in their brilliance. The effect was apocalyptic, which is precisely what Berlioz asked for but never expected to get. Add to it those parts of the Tuba Mirum and the Lacrymosa in which the chorus and orchestra joined in this mighty paean and you have a criterion against which all gorgeous sound can be measured in future.

The Berlioz Requiem does not have to be done with this perfect implementation in order to be great music, but since it is so far-ranging in all its contrasts and effects there is great satisfaction in being able to survey its complete horizon.

* * *

THIS LUSTROUS performance would have been impossible without specifically the Festival Chorus. I know of nothing quite like it. There are one or two unique ensembles composed entirely of fine singers carefully chosen, but the characterizing difference at Tanglewood is that these young men and women are musicians who sing. The distinction is important.

The integration of voices and instruments is about as near the ideal as one can expect in an imperfect world. The choral discipline, musically, had as fine an edge as that of the orchestra; the response was almost instrumental.

The thrilling vocal power and precision of Rex Tremendae and the equally fastidious and ever-so-soft part singing of the succeeding Quaerens Me could be achieved only by a perfectly balanced company of eager, note-hungry voices.

* * *

THE TRAINING was that of Hugh Ross; the interpretation Dr. Munch's. Both were recalled repeatedly in the frenzied demonstration which followed. It had stopped raining by that time, but the audience remained to prolong its homage.

Sharing the honors also was the tenor soloist for the Sanctus, Andrew McKinley, a fervent singer with an opulent voice which he poured out unsparingly.

Despite the dripping, gray skies it was a great afternoon. The Requiem is the masterpiece of a fevered and extravagant soul who wrote most of his madness into the symphonies. This is religious music, whose grandeur is incidental to its vision. It contains awesome intimations of the words:

"I John, who also am your brother . . . . was in the isle that is called Patmos . . . . ."

* * *

Saturday Concert

Saturday night was dedicated to Koussevitzky. It was Leonard Bernstein, his protege, who signalled orchestra and audience to rise and all bowed for a moment in tribute to the late master of Tanglewood who rests in the cemetery on the hill in Lenox.

After a poignant playing of K. P. E. Bach's D major threnody, called Concerto, Bernstein, without acknowledging the audience, few of whom felt like applauding, walked sadly off the stage.

Aaron Copland's Third Symphony was inscribed to Natalie Koussevitzky and Sibelius' E flat Symphony was a favorite with the great Boston conductor.

Yet the best tribute to his memory was the recreative manner in which the music was far removed from crepe and cypress. It was living music, the only kind that Koussevitzky knew how to make.

* * *

COPLAND was there, loping down the aisle at Bernstein's beckoning to take his plaudits from the stage. He congratulated the orchestra and deservedly, for these Boston men had done well by him

He employed them all and all the resources of their instruments. Superficially, it was a good deal like finger painting with sound—at least the harmonic masses and the percussion display. I heard a man say he "didn't mind it a bit." Praise couldn't be fainter.

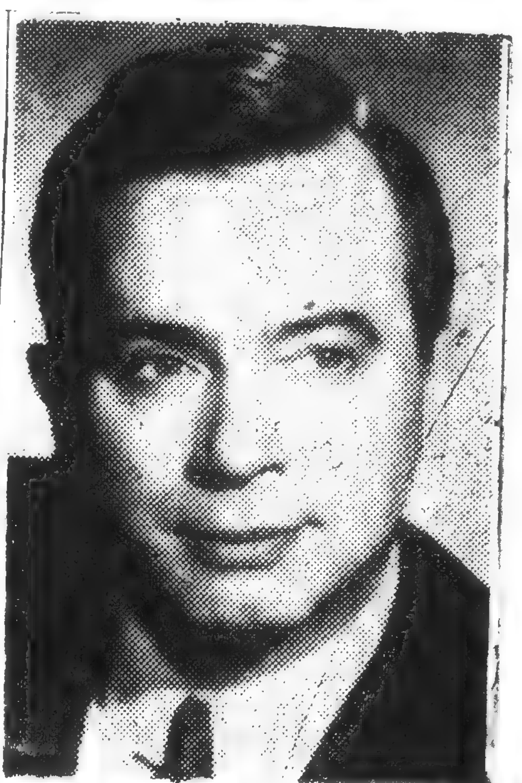
Copland writes few melodies, more tunes but mostly themes which he worries in a pre-occupied way, and in the instrumentation self-consciously.

The movements are contrasted—the riotous scherzo, with the amiable, even songful movement which follows it and the monorhythmic almost rhythmless opening section. Within the four sections of what is a fairly long symphony there is not much contrasted material. The symphony sounds long.

* * *

BY COMPARISON the Fifth of Sibelius is terse and dramatic. Here there is less distinction between themes and melodies for even the fragmentation of Sibelius' themes is lyrical and buoyant. The chanting and resplendent finale was a transfiguring memorial.

Bernstein is developing a more individualistic style of conducting, less reminiscent of his model, but no less tense and palpitating.



ANDREW McKINLEY, tenor, sang at Tanglewood, Sunday afternoon.

BANGOR, ME.
NEWS
AUG 11 1952

Berkshire Music Festival Concluded

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 10 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, closed its 15th Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood today and the Berkshire Music Center, the Orchestra's summer school, ended its 10th session.

In the six weeks season the festival attendance totalled 119,375. In addition 35,750 attended the public performances of the school.

Gross receipts for festival concerts total $271,000, an increase of $22,000 over last season. Scholarships amounting to $34,370 were given to 236 of the 410 talented young musicians of the school.

George E. Judd, orchestra manager, gratified by the successful season, listed as the reasons: the enthusiasm for the music, the increased enrollment of the school, and the increased revenue, which added to gifts of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, will help to maintain it.

PORTLAND, ME.
EXPRESS
AUG 11 1952

Boston Symphony Festival Closes

Lenox, Mass. (AP)—The Boston Symphony Ochestra's 15th Berkshire festival at Tanglewood closed its six weeks season yesterday.

Its total attendance was 119,375 and its gross receipts $271,000, an increase of $22,000 over last year.

The Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school, cllosed its 10th season at the same time. It's public performances were attended by 35,750.

Scholarships totaling $34,370 were given to 236 of the 410 young musicians of the school.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
AUG 11 1952

Music

Berlioz 'Requiem' Closes Tanglewood Festival

By ROBERT BAGAR.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 11.—The Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood came to an end yesterday afternoon with a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra of the Brelioz "Requiem." Charles Munch conducted. The interpretative forces utilized were tenor soloist Andrew McKinley (who appeared in only one number of the piece) the Berkshire Festival Chorus, Hugh Ross, director, and the Boston Symphony, augmented.

Berlioz's score, with its huge personnel, is vivid, tuneful, only rarely liturgical. It depends, for expression on the text, upon excitements in massive sound, interlarded with delicate sequences of the most tender and prayerful beauty. It would not seem necessary to perform this work in a cathedral, owing to the considerable lack of churchly character in the musi. Yet, for all that, the cathedral surroundings might lend it an aura of churchliness which in the concert hall—or, as here, in the wide open spaces—it does not achieve.

Orchestra Augmented.

Mr. Munch augmented his orchestra, as called for by Berlioz, except that the augmentation took place mainly in the department of brass; hence the 38 additional instruments, neatly comprising 16 trumpets, 16 trombones, two tubas and four ophicleides. Nor were the tympani increased to the amount suggested—namely, eight pairs.

On the other hand, the Berkshire Festival Chorus numbered some 125, thereby causing a lack of balance between orchestra and vocal forces in the selections "Tuba Kirum," "Dies Irae," and "Lacrymosa." Moreover, while singing of the young people who constituted the chorus was adequate, it wanted the resonance, the massed body of sound one should expect in these sections.

8000 in Audience.

A more professional chorus—not to forget, more numerous—might have done worlds: for the rendering, which pleasing as it was, yet attended neither the urgency nor the mature communicativeness demanded.

In any case, the Berlioz score was wonderfully received by an audience—kept down by rain—of 8000. And Mr. Munch got himself an ovation at this concluding concert of the festival.

Bernstein Scores.

On Saturday evening Leonard Bernstein, making his lone appearance as guest conductor of the orchestra, gave a three-part program before 12,000 listeners. There was the andante molto lento from the C. P. E. Each concerto in D Major for stringed instruments, the Third Symphony of Aaron Copland and the Sibelius Fifth.

This young conductor, quite idolized hereabouts, delivered the evening's music beautifully, with special sensitiveness and musical polish. The Bach andante, offered in memory of the late Serge Koussevitsky, was itself a gem of string playing, its long and elegiac lines obtaining a perfectly lovely expression.

Marvelous Work.

In the Copland Symphony Mr. Bernstein was truly fine. This music is positively congenial to him and he proved it with a superior reading. The symphony is rather marvelous, you know. It is modern, typically Copland and it boasts much variety and freshness of invention. The last movement, perhaps, could stand shortening, although I don't know just where and how that could be done.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN

AUG 11 1952

15th Berkshire Festival Closes

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., Aug. 11.—Performing Berlioz's "Requiem," Charles Munch brought the 15th Berkshire Festival to a close yesterday afternoon. Rain cut attendance to 7,950, but the weekend figure mounted to 30,950 people. Receipts for the whole festival totaled $22,000 more than a year ago.

Since performances of the "Requeim" are relatively rare, this one presented an opportunity eagerly sought. Munch is temperamentally suited to cope with its contrasts, its underlying sincerity, and its drama. While the amazing score yielded to his interpretation, he did not have all the forces necessary to create quite the overwhelming effect of its most tumultuous pages. Many details revealed his command of their secret and the softer passages were beautifully fashioned.

Just to hear the work, however, remains an unforgettable experience. Berlioz's imagination in conceiving it, his consummate skill in composing it, and the nobility expressed through it testify to his fertility of ideas and his resourcefulness in expressivity. These stunning qualities were quite evident on this occasion.

While the Boston Symphony was augmented in the brasses as the score requires, the Berkshire Festival chorus numbered only 150 members. In all their earnestness they could not attain the volume of sound demanded at strategic points. Nevertheless, they had been carefully prepared by Hugh Ross and met the musical demands made upon them most creditably. The tenor solo of the Sanctus was adequately sung by Andrew McKinley.

Leonard Bernstein conducted the Saturday program known as the Koussevitzky memorial concert. In a special mood of dedication, made the more personal because of his position as Koussevitzky's "disciple," Bernstein played the "andante" from C. P. E. Bach's "Concerto in D for Stringed Instruments." The choice was most appropriate because Koussevitzky had "discovered" the work in Paris and suggested that Maximilian Steinberg make the orchestral arrangement he frequently performed.

The program was most important for the inclusion of Copland's Third Symphony, completed in 1946 on a commission by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation. The work emerged again as Copland's most mature achievement. His enviable skill linked with a noble purpose has created a formidable score of positive conviction and individual style.

Reminiscences of his association with folklore and some influence of the modern Russian symphonists crop up on repeated hearings, but the spacious quality peculiar to Copland and his handling of the brass instruments (especially in an outstanding fanfare) stand out impressively in this music.

Bernstein revealed his exceptional talent conducting the Copland. The performance stands out among his many achievements with contemporary scores. He also gave a fine account of Sibelius' Fifth Symphony, a score much beloved by Koussevitzky.

With the announcement of the 16th Berkshire Festival and the 11th session of the Berkshire Music Center made in the program book, the spirit of Koussevitzky carries on.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

AUG 12 1952

Tanglewood

The Berkshire Festival

* * *

By Francis D. Perkins

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 10.—The Berkshire Music Festival closed on a showery Monday in the music shed at Tanglewood, where Charles Munch conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Chorus in the Requiem of Hector Berlioz. Andrew McKinley was the tenor soloist and twenty-seven extra musicians augmented the orchestra's brass chorus.

The Requiem or, to use its official title, the "Grande Messe des Morts," was performed for the first time at Tanglewood. It is not often given in this country. Last April's performance by the National Orchestral Association and Dessoff Chorus was New York's first in many years. The exceptional number of brass instruments required and their imposing sonority are probably the work's most conspicuous features.

Memorable Results

For Sunday's representation Mr. Munch had placed four brass groups at either end of the stage and in the adjacent corners. The result was memorable in impact, volume, color and pervasiveness of tone. It does not suggest grandiosity, but a vastness of musical imagination corresponding to the vastness of the subject; if the "Dies Irae" is set forth dramatically this reflects the inherent drama of the text.

But size and grandeur are not the only characteristics of the Requiem—it is also marked by intimacy and tenderness. Both in outspoken and in more intimate measures there is a persuasive, expressive sincerity. Subtleties of emotional shading and of orchestral color are also typical of this music, which runs an expressive gamut from fear and lamentation to religious hope and confidence.

For Koussevitzky

Mr. Munch, who is noted as an interpreter of Berlioz music, led a performance which was admirable both from the instrumental and vocal points of view, and in its prevailing emotional conviction. Impressiveness of tone quality marked the playing of all sections of the orchestra, and the chorus trained by Hugh Ross sang with muscianship and understanding and admirable and well balanced tone quality in all its voices. Mr. McKinley's tenor solo in the "Sanctus," if not without some slight forcing in the top notes, more than offset this in the general quality of its tone and its thorough sense of sincere and communicative devotion.

Saturday night's concert, directed by Leonard Bernstein, was dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony for twenty-five years and founder of the Berkshire Music Center. Mr. Bernstein, who had studied with Dr. Koussevitzky at Tanglewood, invited the orchestra and the audience to rise, and all stood in silence as a memorial tribute before the performance of the "Andante" of Maximilian Steinberg's arrangement of a Concerto in D Major for Strings, attributed to Emanuel Bach. This is music which seems to repeat itself, but its lyric and elegaic dignity were appropriate to this occasion, and the spirit and quality of the performance were equally appropriate.

This prefaced two symphonies by living composers, Aaron Copland's third and the fifth of Jean Sibelius. Mr. Copland's symphony, commissioned by the Koussevitzky Foundation, was completed six years ago and has been played by most American major orchestras. For a reviewer hearing it for the first time in several seasons, it again seemed a major American work which is impressive in several respects, particularly for its spaciousness and its emotional persuasion; its length of forty-seven minutes reflects largeness of scale rather than prolixity; the skilled scoring has a wide range of color and timbre. The symphony has some occasionally reminiscent passages besides those which are particularly characteristic of the composer but it is individual in its general conception. It has contrasts of contemplative breadth with momentum and energy unlike certain later American works which provide too little relief from a bustling vigor.

There are perhaps too many all-out climaxes, although one could not be sure whether this was inherent in the score or whether Mr. Bernstein could have graduated the climaxes so that one would not have offset the other. But the general interpretation under his gesturesome direction was impressive in quality of performance, expressiveness and intensity; the composer and conductor shared a warm ovation.

The performance of the Sibelius symphony, while often eloquent, was less consistently impressive; a sense of occasional departure from clarity of medium and detail and unbalance in the brass did not seem entirely due to acoustic conditions in the left front region of the music shed. But the concert as a whole was a fitting tribute to the great conductor which it commemorated.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
AUG 11 1952

Tanglewood Season's Receipts Total $271,000

Attendance at Nine Concerts Was 119,375; Concluding Program Great Rendition of Berlioz Work

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Tanglewood, Aug. 10—Tanglewood's 1952 season closed this afternoon with a superb performance of the Berlioz "Grande Messe Des Morts." It was a performance of choral and instrumental splendor guided expertly by Charles Munch.

Chorus, Acoustics Superior

We heard Mr. Munch conduct this work in Boston last year, using the Radcliffe and Harvard choruses. The Berkshire Center chorus this afternoon was far superior and the acoustics of the shed much more brilliant than those of Symphony Hall. Thus, all elements, architectural and musical, combined to provide probably the greatest performance of this work given in the United States since it was first presented in New York in 1881.

Mr. Munch used the desired four extra brass choirs and in the "Tuba Mirum," "Rex Tremendae" and "Lacrymosa" the volume of tone from chorus and orchestra hit one with tremendous impact. Yet it was in the purely lyrical movements of the "Offertorium," "Quaerens Me" and "Agnus Dei" that the full beauty and expertness of the chorus trained by Hugh Ross was mostly fully evident.

Andrew McKinley was the tenor soloist in the "Sanctus" singing with firm, right tones. We felt his approach might have been more [illegible].

We learned today that the total attendance at the nine festival concerts was 119,375. Had it not rained today during the festival, the audience would have been far greater than the 7950 who braved the storm and the total attendance would have soared above last year. But as it did rain, the total attendance for the series was slightly below last season. Aside from those who were festival patrons, there were also 35,750 persons who attended the various events of the Berkshire Center.

Gross receipts this season amount to $271,000 as against $249,000 last season.

Record Audience

The Saturday night concert a memorial to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky was conducted by Leonard Bernstein, a protege of Dr. Koussevitzky. A record audience of 12,250 persons was on hand to pay tribute to the memory of the founder of Tanglewood and the Berkshire Center. Before the concert started, orchestra and audience stood for a moment in complete silence. Then the orchestra played the exquisite andante from the "Concerto in D Major" by C. P. E. Bach. The remainder of the program was given over to Copland's "Symphony No. 3, commissioned by the Koussevitzky foundation and the "Symphony No. 5 in E Flat Major" by Sibelius. Dr. Koussevitzky had made both works particularly his own.

The Copeland Symphony is really orchestrated, often blatant, always impressive, but it is a marvel of craftsmanship, rather than a work with a message for its listeners.

The spell of Jan Sibelius was never stronger than in his Fifth Symphony. Leonard Bernstein threw himself into it, providing a reading which penetrated every passage. Mr. Bernstein remains one of the great musicians of the time and that he has a large and vocal host of admirers was more than evident in the enthusiastic response his [illegible] received Saturday night.

This has been an interesting festival. Certain performances stand [illegible] in our memory. There was the charming program of [illegible] music led by Mr. Munch [illegible] theater shed. Then [illegible] get the [illegible] by Lukas Foss, nor the [illegible] Mozart program [illegible] Munch. Pierre Monteux [illegible] an all-Wagner program with Margaret Harshaw as soloist was a brilliant occasion, [illegible] Arthur Rubinstein's perusal of the [illegible] concerto of Brahms was [illegible] opera "Titus" was the finest [illegible] ment of the opera department [illegible] we remember. There were [illegible] other fine performances, [illegible] we remember especially.

CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR

AUG 15 1952

Boston Symphony Concludes Festival

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, Mass., Aug. 15—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, closed its fifteenth Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood today with the monumental Berlioz "Requiem." Remarking that the season had been one of the most successful for the orchestra at its summer home in the Berkshires, and for the Berkshire Music Center, its summer school, George E. Judd, the manager listed as causes for feeling gratified "the enthusiasm for the music played, the interesting programs, the increased enrollment of the school, in its tenth session, and the splendid Berkshire weather."

In the six weeks of the Tanglewood season the festival attendance totalled 119,375. The audience at student performances, open to friends of the school, was 35,750 for 29 events, a higher average than in previous years. Twice records were topped for Thursday evenings.

WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

AUG 12 1952

Behind the Statistics Of Tanglewood's 15th.

SPEAKING of music festivals, as Worcester will be doing in earnest very soon now, the season at Tanglewood this year seems to have been a banner one.

The figures are impressive. The Berkshire Music Festival, in its 15th year, drew a total attendance of 119,375 for 15 concerts of the six-week series. That is slightly under the 1951 total, but the decline is somewhat offset by a $22,000 rise in gross receipts to $271,000. In addition, the tenth year of the Berkshire Music Center attracted 35,750 paid admissions, and a gain of $2000 in receipts for a total of $55,850. Of 410 students, 236 received scholarships aggregating $34,370.

Statistics do not, of course, make music nor do they measure art. But in the case of Tanglewood they bear witness to the astounding achievement of the late Serge Koussevitzky who developed the concept of a great Summer music center and festival in the Berkshires. The Boston Symphony has, of course, been a major factor throughout, not only in the brilliance of the festival concerts but the high quality of the Music Center's school. It has performed both old and new works, as on the final week end when it gave the Berlioz Requiem and Aaron Copland's Third Symphony to great audiences. But the secret of Tanglewood's dazzling success story is in the spirit that has dominated it.

It ventures. It searches for new music and new artists. It teaches. It creates. It has become a pioneer without for a moment slighting the classic and the old. One result is that the world of music gives instant and close attention to everything Tanglewood does.

[103]

Music in Varied Moods for Summer—

Boston Symphony Orchestra Heard in the Berkshires

By Klaus George Roy

Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

After the relative intimacy of the Bach-Mozart-Haydn concerts during the first three weeks of the Berkshire Festival, the focus of operations was transferred from the Theater-Concert Hall to the enormous Music Shed, which seats 6,000. There is ample space for the same number on the beautiful lawn outside, and the remarkable acoustics of the open Shed are a boon to listeners.

With the Boston Symphony Orchestra reassembled to full strength, Charles Munch opened the second part of the Festival leading Beethoven's Fifth Symphony and Brahms' First Symphony on Thursday, July 24. On Saturday he relinquished the baton to his friend and associate, Pierre Monteux, with whom he had just completed an enormously successful European tour.

Mr. Monteux began with the charming Overture to "The Secret Marriage" by Cimarosa, and continued with Schubert's great Symphony No. 7 in C major. In matters of orchestral balance and over-all cohesiveness, this was not a fully satisfactory reading; the middle movements, in any case, were superbly done.

Ice-Cold Precision

That Mr. Monteux is the world's outstanding interpreter of Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" is an open secret. Interpreting is perhaps the wrong word for his way with the "Rite"; he plays it straight, with ice-cold precision, uncanny control, and—without a score. The composer liked it that way in Paris a few months ago; so did the audience at Tanglewood. The orchestra played as if this cataclysmic, thrilling score were the easiest of repertory pieces.

On Sunday, the director of both the Festival and the Music Center, Mr. Munch, took over again. He conducted Franck's uneventful Symphonic Piece from "Redemption" and Bizet's ingratiating C major Symphony with his accustomed verve. Hugh Ross, the choral director of the Center, authoritatively led the Berkshire Festival Chorus in a most fascinating work by the Italian composer, Luigi Dallapiccola, now in his second year as associate to Aaron Copland in the composition department.

The "Canti di Prigionia" ("Songs in Captivity"), written between 1938 and 1941, are powerful, evocative expressions of the yearning, brooding, or defiant moods in the prayers of Mary Stuart, Boethius, and Savonarola. The colors produced by an orchestra of two harps, two pianos, and percussion are strikingly original and highly disturbing; the modified 12-tone method, as has often been remarked, is no strait jacket to this composer.

After the intermission, Mr. Munch returned to give an impassioned and lustrous performance of both Suite I and II from Ravel's ballet "Daphnis et Chloé." The chorus, not often heard with this music, sang its wordless lines with assurance, and the effect of the Suites was electrifying.

Wagnerian Problem

The concert of Saturday night, Aug. 2, once more placed in doubt the wisdom of extracting sections from Wagnerian music dramas and presenting them in concert form. Wagner's idea, after all, was the "Gesamtkunstwerk," an indivisible fusion of music, poetry, drama, and the visual arts of staging, scenery, and costume. The music by itself, except for the always effective "Rhine Journey" and "Funeral Music," cannot produce the necessary illusion for [illegible] listeners.

James Pease, the young bass, sang well, as usual, in Wotan's Farewell, but the tenor, Howard Vandenburg, though a cultivated singer, seemed not quite heroic enough for Siegfried. The triumph of the evening was scored by the soprano, Margaret Harshaw, of the Metropolitan, in an incandescent traversal of the Immolation Scene from "Götterdämmerung."

Beethoven's "Egmont" Overture and Eighth Symphony opened the Sunday concert under Charles Munch. Both were most convincingly rendered. The astonishing colors and subtle aromas of Debussy's "Iberia" were conveyed with the utmost flexibility. Greatest interest attached to Arthur Honegger's Cantata "La Danse des Morts" (1938), for Soloists, Narrator, Chorus and Orchestra. It appeared, at first hearing, an intensely dramatic work of mighty emotional impact, with Honegger's most effectual orchestral devices freely employed. The performance was magnificent from all concerned.

The program of Thursday, Aug. 7, included the prize-winning "Short Symphony," by the American composer Howard Swanson, and the Piano Concerto No. 2 of Brahms, with Arthur Rubinstein as soloist. Several other events at Tanglewood are worthy of mention, particularly the gala concert of former students called "Tanglewood on Parade," and the imaginative revival by Boris Goldovsky and the Opera Department of Mozart's last and neglected opera "Titus."

Copland Symphony

Leonard Bernstein conducted the Koussevitzky Memorial Concert on Aug. 9, with his fabulous musicianship and rhythmic drive, though his personal idiosyncracies of gesture continue unabated. The affecting Andante from C. P. E. Bach's Concerto for Orchestra was played in honor of the late conductor—a moment of sincere homage to one of the greatest musical personalities America has ever had.

Aaron Copland's Third Symphony of 1946, commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation, made a strong impression. One must call it a real masterwork, one of the finest symphonies American music has to its credit. That it has not yet been recorded, with 15 other Copland works already available, is one of the mysteries of LP. The concert closed with Sibelius' noble Fifth Symphony, in a performance which brought forth the Boston Symphony tone at its most marvelous.

On Sunday, Mr. Munch ended the Festival with the fifteenth concert of the series, presenting a stunning and devoted reading of Berlioz "Grande Messe des Morts." The chorus had been well prepared by Hugh Ross and James Aliferis, and the four extra brass bands placed off stage scored their stupendous effects on schedule.

This reviewer, although he acknowledges the many beautiful and touching moments in the "Requiem," cannot regard the whole work as a completely satisfying musical experience, mainly because of its stylistic inconsistencies. That it made a grandiloquent and in many ways memorable conclusion to this year's Berkshire Festival cannot be denied.

RCA Victor

Pierre Monteux, who conducted Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" at the Berkshire Festival.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
AUG 17 1952

Tanglewood Results

Berlioz' Requiem closed Berkshire's 15th annual Festival last Sunday with Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra. George ~~E. Judd, manager~~ of the music center, said the current season was one of the most successful. The staff was gratified by the performance enthusiasm, program interest, increased inrollment and splendid weather.

Tanglewood's six weeks lured a total audience of 119,375. The attendance at student performances, open to friends of the school, was 35,750 for the 29 events, a higher average than in previous years.

With a student body of 410, another season increase, the activities of the music center also mounted. The choral section, under Hugh Ross, performed often, and the opera department, under Boris Goldovsky, produced its major work in Mozart's Titus, in addition to Leonard Bernstein's Trouble in Tahiti.

Composers' forums were held for the performance and discussion of the students' compositions. William Kroll conducted chamber music concerts each Sunday morning. Bernstein and the student orchestra gave six programs in the Shed in which a cross-section of orchestra repertoire was performed with students and faculty members conducting.

The newly-organized Tanglewood Study Group, under Ingolf Dahl, investigated a vast amount of old music, proving a highly successful venture for the music teacher, music lover and interested amateurs.

Practically every student participated in the school's 30-odd public performances, thereby learning by doing.

On the financial side, the gross receipts for the 15 festival concerts totaled $271,000. This surpasses the 1951 season by $22,000. Tuition and dormitory receipts were $55,850, compared with $53,758 last year.

To talented young musicians, according to a plan adopted this year for the first time, 236 tuition scholarships and 22 work scholarships were awarded. Most of these grants are returnable by the recipients to a revolving fund in order that others may benefit in the future.

Three special awards were made by Berkshire, with the Jascha ~~Heifetz~~ prize going to two violinists, Serge Blanc of Paris, France, and Elizabeth Walker of Oxford, O. The Piatigorsky Cello Award was given to John Sant Ambrogio of Bloomfield, N. J., and the Samuel Wechsler Commission for a work suitable for study by the Tanglewood Study Group went to Allen Sapp of Boston, Mass.

NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

AUG 19 1952

LOCAL MAN HEARS, PRAISES BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL CONCERT

It was this writer's opportunity to attend the Berkshire Festival last week when the proceedings were at their zenith. The occasion was the concert of Thursday evening, Aug. 7 which drew an audience approximating 10,000. The program consisted of the First Symphony by Schumann, Short Symphony by Howard Swanson, and the Second Piano Concerto by Brahms, with Artur Rubinstein as soloist. The Boston Symphony was presided over by its regular conductor, Charles Munch.

Schumann's symphony, christened by the composer, "Spring Symphony" was, in his own words, "composed toward the end of the winter of 1841, under the impulse of that vernal ardor which carries away man, even at the most advanced age, and seizes upon him anew every year." In another commentary to a friend and conductor, Schumann wrote: "I should be blessed if you could imbue your orchestra with something of the mood of spring-time. I should like to have the very opening trumpet call sound as if it came from on high, like a summons to an awakening. By what follows the introduction, I might then suggest how, on all sides, the green leaves are sprouting, perhaps how a butterfly appears, and by the Allegro, how gradually everything that belongs to Spring bursts forth."

The "Short Symphony" is the work voted by the New York Music Critics' Circle the best orchestral work that has been introduced to New York since October, 1950. The composer, Howard Swanson, is one of the roster of very distinguished contemporary Negroes, comprising Roland Hayes, Marian Anderson, Ralph Bunche, et al. Born in Atlanta, Ga., in 1909, his last composition teacher was Nadia Boulanger, of Paris, to whom he went in 1937, on a Rosenwald Fellowship. This symphony is his second. In it, according to the program notes, the composer has aimed, in the space of a 12-minute symphony to encompass "the depth, seriousness and intensity inherent in a large work." The Short Symphony, composed in 1948, had its first performance by the New York Philharmonic Symphony in the same year, Dmitri Mitropoulos conducting. The performance at this concert was the first by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Without delving into details, the work expresses striking originality, mastery command of contrapuntal writing, a delightful sense of humor, and utmost conciseness.

About the Second Brahms Piano Concerto, Lawrence Gilman, distinguished late critic of the Herald Tribune, wrote: "This concerto is a monumental work; full-stored and spacious, steeped in loveliness and poetry, overflowing with imaginative life. Some critics have called it a "symphony with piano obligato." It's prolific, creative range and power was evidenced by the extension of the conventional concerto form from three to four movements.

Much conducting is characterized by his comprehensive grasp of the material as a whole, and this grasp is complemented by elegance and dash. This makes for a styles which never loses itself in detail, but maintains a vigorous flow and continuity of the form and emotion of the work as a whole. What was most revealing to this listener was that here was a great conductor who never addressed himself to individual players, but to entire sections, marshalling, so to speak, entire divisions of sound and design, en bloc. Both in the Spring Symphony and in the Short Symphony, one could relish an abundance of grace and flexibility. It is perhaps superflous to praise the superb accomplishment of the Boston Symhony as the long acknowledged paramount symphonic body in this country. In the Piano Concerto, Rubinstein rose to the heights of glowing, Brahmsian interpretation, using all his technical prowess to serve the great work at hand. His is a ravishing beauty of tone and poetic sensibility. With this great orchestra, he brought the concert to a triumphant conclusion, calling forth a long-protracted ovation.

The Tanglewod Project is an institution which truly justifies the term unique. Unlike Salsburg and Beyreuth which concentrate exclusively on performances, we find here the parallel activity of a great educational institution. It is a music workshop par excellence, for composers and performers alike. Daily classes, seminars, and pupils' concerts consider advanced musical problems under guidance of prominent contemporary musicians, and test them by actual performances. It is only to be regretted that the season is so short, for one would wish that such a project were carried on throughout the year. We may be truly grateful for what Tanglewood is contributing to the musical world in such an outstanding way.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

AUG 18 1952

Antics of Conductor Dim Appreciation of Symphony

By ALICE HUGHES

New York, Aug. 17—No Summer is complete without driving to Tanglewood in the Massachusetts Berkshires. There Nathanial Hawthorne once wrote his famous Tanglewood Tales and there the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducts an annual Summer school of drama and music while presenting a five week festival of magical concerts in an outdoor music-shell built to afford the utmost in accoustics. There at Lenox, in an atmosphere primly New England, the world's most prodigal music is played each Summer by this superb orchestra of about 150 men.

Alice Hughes

Even its competitors concede that the Boston is the ne plus ultra of symphony bands. Conductor Serge Koussevitzki set its high standards until his recent death. Since then Charles Munch has directed the famed orchestra to even greater heights. Music critics' phrases, always florid, go positively ecstatic when eulogizing the quality of music Munch extracts from the B. S. O.

The final week of the festival was a memorial to Koussevitzki. The next-to-the-last concert was conducted by Koussy's most brilliant pupil and protege, Leonard Bernstein. The last performance was the rendition of Berlioz' "Requiem Mass for the Dead," with Munch at the baton. This two-hour symphony was written for 700 voices and 300 orchestral instruments. Munch conducted it with 300 performers but never was more heroic music written nor did more majestic sounds emerge than under his emotional, dignified direction. To procure the many singers needed, the nearby towns of Lenox, Pittsfield and Stockbridge were combed for voices. I recognized the mailman and several chambermaids and waitresses from local inns among the chorus personnel.

Leonard Bernstein is known as a conductor and composer of symphony music and ballet. I had never before seen him conduct, and I was horrified. The symphonies had been selected as Koussevitzki's favorites. To assure perfect quiet for the Bach Concerto in D Major for Stringed Instruments, a printed note lay on each seat in the outdoor auditorium reading: "You are requested not to applaud this number out of respect for the memory of Serge Koussevitzki." No one felt like applauding, but it was hard to refrain from booing or hissing Bernstein's zany gestures as he led this superb orchestra. Koussy had been a mannered conductor, yes, but he had jelled into considerable dignity. Whereas Bernstein, a young jackanapes, hammed and contorted himself into boogy-woogie and jazz body motions and embarrassed the audience.

He so out-Koussevitzki-ed Koussevitzki that in the second of the three symphonies Bernstein conducted — Copeland's Symphony No. 3 — some man did actually boo, loud and clear. For a moment everyone was paralyzed, then a ripple of talk grew into a buzz. Such behavior is unknown at the Boston Symphony. A conductor may have a few idiosyncrasies, but they never obtrude into the music.

Conductor Stokowski waves his hands theatrically and shakes his mane of blued-white hair when he conducts. Toscanini sings along with his band, often off-key, but never out of beat. Koussy played to the gallery and so do other directors. Munch, Monteux and Ensermets conduct with great dignity and almost no mannerisms, never seeking to be seen and heard above the music. Bernstein is too talented to make such a spectacle of himself as he stands on the podium where great music flows through great conductors. He uses no baton, merely clenches and unclenches his hands, sways, grimaces, tosses his mane, shakes his shoulders and carries on more like Johnny Ray, the "cry-singer" than like Leonard Bernstein, noted composer and conductor.

Copyright, 1952, King Features Synd., Inc.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
NEWSWEEK

AUG 25 1952

Dallapiccola: His daughter likes it

Dallapiccola Debut

A gnomelike man with a shock of graying hair, Luigi Dallapiccola ambled out to the piano on the stage of the Belasco Theater in New York. He sat down, fidgeted nervously for a few seconds, and struck out the opening chords of his Concerto for Piano and Chamber Orchestra. One of Italy's foremost composers was making his American debut with the NBC Summer Symphony Orchestra last Saturday, as well as playing his concerto for the first time in the United States.

Among the most controversial musicians of modern times, Dallapiccola has been teaching composition at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood for the past two summers. And although he had played this concerto the length and breadth of Europe for nearly a decade, his American piano performances had been strictly private.

But as a composer and fervent exponent of Arnold Schönberg's strange-to-the-ear twelve-tone system, Dallapiccola is well accustomed to both gibes and praises (NEWSWEEK, Dec. 4, 1950). Not until 1948 was any of his music heard in the United States—but the tide now seems to be turning in his favor.

Many critics feel that Dallapiccola is becoming more melodic, but he denies he is now writing in a popular vein. "I use any method I need to express myself. The important thing is to have a vital idea. The public understands better than certain professional musicians."

Apart from the public, critics, or rivals, Dallapiccola's greatest satisfaction lies in observing his 7-year-old daughter Annalibera. She is busily studying piano—and "last year, she began to like the music of her father."

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE

[illegible]

Final Concert Performed At Interlochen

Audience Of 5,000 Is One Of Largest In Camp's History

By JULIAN SEAMAN
Blade Staff Writer

INTERLOCHEN, Mich., A
25—More than 5,000 perso from the land at large came train and gasoline engine hea the final concert last night this 25th year of music at t
National Music Camp.

Thousands of visitors fr across the nation have been a riving this week and the au ence was one of the largest the quarter-century of t camp's history.

Bedrolls and suitcases, instr
ments and bundles filled t parking lot around the camp hotel, for 1,600 students ha been packing for the trek ho
tomorrow—by plane, bus, mo
and train—to homes in 46 stat
Canada, South America a
Israel.

260 Concerts

There have been 260 concer this year during the summ session of 57 days. More th 1,200 students, with the facu participating, put on this fi concert. The entire assortme of orchestras, bands, choirs an the ballet corps, under the d rection of Dr. Joseph E. Madd founder and president of th camp, made up an enormo show in the famous old outdo
Interlochen Bowl.

Teh Brahms fourth symph with a 250-piece orchestra a Liszt's "Lee preludes" [illegible] to the same [illegible] plus ballet and choir [illegible] the gist of this final effort. The were speeches, of course, an much impulsive fanfare, fo purely local consumption.

One of the most imposing co certs this year was a per formance, without cuts and i the original instrumentation, o the Berlioz Requiem, probabl the first in this country, a though I am not sure of that.

3 Major Performances

This was the third major per formance of this work since las spring—Leon Barzin and th
National Orchestra Associati presented the work in Carnegi
Hall, New York, last May
Charles Munch and the Bosto
Symphony Orchestra conducte the present season at Tangle wood with the Requiem Aug. 1
and Maynard Klein conducte
the score here.

New York and Tanglewood performances were abbreviated to suit the physical resources available, but the performance here was exactly as Berlioz had decreed—orchestra of [illegible] chor of 500, four brass bands of 16 players each, 16 tympani and one tenor, Harold Haugh, a notable oratorio singer, of the voice faculty at the University of Michigan.

Awards and scholarships were announced this morning at a ceremony called "Honors As sembly." Scholarships are financed by admissions to con certs, ballet and theatrical per formances, sales of booklets and pamphlets, gifts from alumni and a small grant from the op erating fund. This amounts to about $7,000 a year.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 31 1952

The Lively Arts

Untangli

Like Elie Saarinen's big Musi
the press house at Tanglewoo
"functional" structure. Constru
plain board without and within,
with typewriters arrayed on trestles and equipped with simp
ing metal chairs, it is a neat gaudy place to chronicle the
to-concert doings of the Berksh
sic Festival.

In the press house, the publ tions staff for the Festival posts
tendance figures for each co
8,000, 12,000, 19,000—and for son's grand total, figures runni
six places.

What do these impressive di veal about the Berkshire Musi val? Shake and shuffle them will, they really disclose not all. They may seem to indica the concerts are a great succe quantitatively they probably do.
the deeper worth of the Festi teen years after its founding, on seek other proofs. Then the figu out to be painted veils.

The fact that 19,000 persons
Music Shed and blot out the Tanglewood on a starry Saturda or fair Sunday afternoon, might en as evidence of popular inter love of musiculture. Don't you it. More and more people are Tanglewood, but anyone with eye can see that it is not mu plain and simple tourism that the bulk of them. Tanglewood main stop on the poor man'
Tour.

★

In the primordial days of th shire Music Festival, the audie
a composite of old age and
There were dowagers in Pierce debutantes in mink, and the lat Apley might be seen in white and Norfolk jacket. The boxes plainer-Jane version of the Horseshoe. This was Tanglewo dal period.

But the Boston Symphony C
was a brilliant instrument,
Great, Good Doctor a fabled c and with an increasing number phony lovers everywhere about ca, the Festival could not re preserve of Privilege. So the at figures continued to climb, bo
the influx of young people rimmed glasses and clutching the works to be played. T
Tanglewood's period of enlight

Now, what is it like? Hordes in dungarees, clutching cameras of scores, hordes of little ca uniform, two'sing in the wake cilors, hordes of picnickers hampers over the lawns of Tan
Music-lovers, poor but honest?
deed — sightseers, people come
ride, music's me-too-ers,
ooking for something to do.

UNION CITY, N. J.
HUDSON DISPATCH

AUG 21 1952

ocial Briefs

North Bergen

d Mrs. Edward Devine
ghters, Joy and Sharon
10 76th st., North Bergen,
rned from a vacation to
nd Atlantic City.

arold G. Humphrey, pres-
New Jersey Federation of ubs, has returned from Mass., where she was a the conference of New
District of the national
Mrs. Humphrey, who
7607 Boulevard East,
d New Jersey at the con-
held in the library of Hall, on the grounds
where the val was h

Mrs. H
cert of t chestra
Festival

Mr. a son, Ro
North trip thr
also visi
The cou
Tuesday
Paul Co
into the

Mr. an formerly Bergen, h
av., Jerse

NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

AUG 19 1952

LOCAL MAN HEARS, PRAISES BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL CONCERT

It was this writer's opportunity to attend the Berkshire Festival last week when the proceedings were at their zenith. The occasion was the concert of Thursday evening, Aug. 7 which drew an audience approximating 10,000. The program consisted of the First Symphony by Schumann, Short Symphony by Howard Swanson, and the Second Piano Concerto by Brahms, with Artur Rubinstein as soloist. The Boston Symphony was presided over by its regular conductor, Charles Munch.

Schumann's symphony, christened by the composer, "Spring Symphony" was, in his own words, "composed toward the end of the winter of 1841, under the impulse of that vernal ardor which carries away man, even at the most advanced age, and seizes upon him anew every year." In another commentary to a friend and conductor, Schumann wrote: "I should be blessed if you could imbue your orchestra with something of the mood of spring-time. I should like to have the very opening trumpet call sound as if it came from on high, like a summons to an awakening. By what follows the introduction, I might then suggest how, on all sides, the green leaves are sprouting, perhaps how a butterfly appears, and by the Allegro, how gradually everything that belongs to Spring bursts forth."

The "Short Symphony" is the work voted by the New York Music Critics' Circle the best orchestral work that has been introduced to New York since October, 1950. The composer, Howard Swanson, is one of the roster of very distinguished contemporary Negroes, comprising Roland Hayes, Marian Anderson, Ralph Bunche, et al. Born in Atlanta, Ga., in 1909, his last composition teacher was Nadia Boulanger, of Paris, to whom he went in 1937, on a Rosenwald Fellowship. This symphony is his second. In it, according to the program notes, the composer has aimed, in the space of a 12-minute symphony to encompass "the depth, seriousness and intensity inherent in a large work." The Short Symphony, composed in 1948, had its first performance by the New York Philharmonic Symphony in the same year, Dmitri Mitropoulos conducting. The performance at this concert was the first by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Without delving into details, the work expresses striking originality, mastery command of contrapuntal writing, a delightful sense of humor, and utmost conciseness.

About the Second Brahms Piano Concerto, Lawrence Gilman, distinguished late critic of the Herald Tribune, wrote: "This concerto is a monumental work; full-stored and spacious, steeped in loveliness and poetry, overflowing with imaginative life. Some critics have called it a "symphony with piano obligato." It's prolific, creative range and power was evidenced by the extension of the conventional concerto form from three to four movements.

Much conducting is characterized by his comprehensive grasp of the material as a whole, and this grasp is complemented by elegance and dash. This makes for a styles which never loses itself in detail, but maintains a vigorous flow and continuity of the form and emotion of the work as a whole. What was most revealing to this listener was that here was a great conductor who never addressed himself to individual players, but to entire sections, marshalling, so to speak, entire divisions of sound and design, en bloc. Both in the Spring Symphony and in the Short Symphony, one could relish an abundance of grace and flexibility. It is perhaps superflous to praise the superb accomplishment of the Boston Symhony as the long acknowledged paramount symphonic body in this country. In the Piano Concerto, Rubinstein rose to the heights of glowing, Brahmsian interpretation, using all his technical prowess to serve the great work at hand. His is a ravishing beauty of tone and poetic sensibility. With this great orchestra, he brought the concert to a triumphant conclusion, calling forth a long-protracted ovation.

The Tanglewod Project is an institution which truly justifies the term unique. Unlike Salsburg and Beyreuth which concentrate exclusively on performances, we find here the parallel activity of a great educational institution. It is a music workshop par excellence, for composers and performers alike. Daily classes, seminars, and pupils' concerts consider advanced musical problems under guidance of prominent contemporary musicians, and test them by actual performances. It is only to be regretted that the season is so short, for one would wish that such a project were carried on throughout the year. We may be truly grateful for what Tanglewood is contributing to the musical world in such an outstanding way.

BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS

AUG 18 1952

Antics of Conductor Dim Appreciation of Symphony

By ALICE HUGHES

New York, Aug. 17—No Summer is complete without driving to Tanglewood in the Massachusetts Berkshires. There Nathanial Hawthorne once wrote his famous Tanglewood Tales and there the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducts an annual Summer school of drama and music while presenting a five week festival of magical concerts in an outdoor music-shell built to afford the utmost in accoustics. There at Lenox, in an atmosphere primly New England, the world's most prodigal music is played each Summer by this superb orchestra of about 150 men.

Alice Hughes

Even its competitors concede that the Boston is the ne plus ultra of symphony bands. Conductor Serge Koussevitzki set its high standards until his recent death. Since then Charles Munch has directed the famed orchestra to even greater heights. Music critics' phrases, always florid, go positively ecstatic when eulogizing the quality of music Munch extracts from the B. S. O.

The final week of the festival was a memorial to Koussevitzki. The next-to-the-last concert was conducted by Koussy's most brilliant pupil and protege, Leonard Bernstein. The last performance was the rendition of Berlioz' "Requiem Mass for the Dead," with Munch at the baton. This two-hour symphony was written for 700 voices and 300 orchestral instruments. Munch conducted it with 300 performers but never was more heroic music written nor did more majestic sounds emerge than under his emotional, dignified direction. To procure the many singers needed, the nearby towns of Lenox, Pittsfield and Stockbridge were combed for voices. I recognized the mailman and several chambermaids and waitresses from local inns among the chorus personnel.

Leonard Bernstein is known as a conductor and composer of symphony music and ballet. I had never before seen him conduct, and I was horrified. The symphonies had been selected as Koussevitzki's favorites. To assure perfect quiet for the Bach Concerto in D Major for Stringed Instruments, a printed note lay on each seat in the outdoor auditorium reading: "You are requested not to applaud this number out of respect for the memory of Serge Koussevitzki." No one felt like applauding, but it was hard to refrain from booing or hissing Bernstein's zany gestures as he led this superb orchestra. Koussy had been a mannered conductor, yes, but he had jelled into considerable dignity. Whereas Bernstein, a young jackanapes, hammed and contorted himself into boogy-woogie and jazz body motions and embarrassed the audience.

He so out-Koussevitzki-ed Koussevitzki that in the second of the three symphonies Bernstein conducted — Copeland's Symphony No. 3 — some man did actually boo, loud and clear. For a moment everyone was paralyzed, then a ripple of talk grew into a buzz. Such behavior is unknown at the Boston Symphony. A conductor may have a few idiosyncrasies, but they never obtrude into the music.

Conductor Stokowski waves his hands theatrically and shakes his mane of blued-white hair when he conducts. Toscanini sings along with his band, often off-key, but never out of beat. Koussy played to the gallery and so do other directors. Munch, Monteux and Ensermets conduct with great dignity and almost no mannerisms, never seeking to be seen and heard above the music. Bernstein is too talented to make such a spectacle of himself as he stands on the podium where great music flows through great conductors. He uses no baton, merely clenches and unclenches his hands, sways, grimaces, tosses his mane, shakes his shoulders and carries on more like Johnny Ray, the "cry-singer" than like Leonard Bernstein, noted composer and conductor.

Copyright, 1952, King Features Synd., Inc.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
NEWSWEEK

AUG 25 1952

Dallapiccola: His daughter likes it

Dallapiccola Debut

A gnomelike man with a shock of graying hair, Luigi Dallapiccola ambled out to the piano on the stage of the Belasco Theater in New York. He sat down, fidgeted nervously for a few seconds, and struck out the opening chords of his Concerto for Piano and Chamber Orchestra. One of Italy's foremost composers was making his American debut with the NBC Summer Symphony Orchestra last Saturday, as well as playing his concerto for the first time in the United States.

Among the most controversial musicians of modern times, Dallapiccola has been teaching composition at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood for the past two summers. And although he had played this concerto the length and breadth of Europe for nearly a decade, his American piano performances had been strictly private.

But as a composer and fervent exponent of Arnold Schönberg's strange-to-the-ear twelve-tone system, Dallapiccola is well accustomed to both gibes and praises (NEWSWEEK, Dec. 4, 1950). Not until 1948 was any of his music heard in the United States—but the tide now seems to be turning in his favor.

Many critics feel that Dallapiccola is becoming more melodic, but he denies he is now writing in a popular vein: "I use any method I need to express myself. The important thing is to have a vital idea. The public understands better than certain professional musicians."

Apart from the public, critics, or rivals, Dallapiccola's greatest satisfaction lies in observing his 7-year-old daughter Annalibera. She is busily studying piano—and "last year, she began to like the music of her father."

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE

AUG 25 1952

Final Concert Performed At Interlochen

Audience Of 5,000 Is One Of Largest In Camp's History

By JULIAN SEAMAN
Blade Staff Writer

INTERLOCHEN, Mich.,
25—More than 5,000 pe from the land at large, born train and gasoline engine, he the final concert last nigh this 25th year of music at National Music Camp.

Thousands of visitors fr across the nation have been riving this week and the a ence was one of the largest the quarter-century of camp's history.

Bedrolls and suitcases, inst
ments and bundles filled parking lot around the camp hotel, for 1,600 students h been packing for the trek b
tomorrow—by plane, bus, mo
and train—to homes in 46 sta
Canada, South America
Israel.

260 Concerts

There have been 260 conce
this year during the sum session of 57 days. More t 1,200 students, with the fac participating, put on this fi concert. The entire assortm of orchestras, bands, choirs a the ballet corps, under the rection of Dr. Joseph E. Mad founder and president of camp, made up an enorm show in the famous old out
Interlochen Bowl.

Teh Brahms fourth sympho with a 250-piece orchestra Liszt's "Lee preludes," attac to the same mammoth gro plus ballet and choir, compri the gist of this final effort. Th were speeches, of course, a much impulsive fanfare,
purely local consumption.

One of the most imposing c certs this year was a p formance, without cuts and the original instrumentation, the Berlioz Requiem, probab
the first in this counrty,
though I am not sure of that.

3 Major Performances

This was the third major pe formance of this work since la spring—Leon Barzin and t
National Orchestra Associati presented the work in Carneg
Hall, New York, last Ma
Charles Munch and the Bost Symphony Orchestra conclud the present season at Tang wood with the Requiem Aug.
and Maynard Klein conduct
the score here.

New York and Tanglewo performances were abbreviate to suit the physical resource available, but the performanc here was exactly as Berlioz ha decreed—orchestra of 450, choi of 500, four brass bands of players each, 16 typani and on tenor, Harold Haugh, a notabl oratorio singer, of the voic faculty at the University
Michigan.

Awards and scholarships wer announced this morning at ceremony called "Honors A sembly." Scholarships ar financed by admission to co certs, ballet and theatrical per formances, sales of booklets an pamphlets, gifts from and a small grant from the erating fund. This amou about $7,000 a year.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 31 1952

The Lively Arts

Untangli

Like Elie Saarinen's big Musi
the press house at Tanglewoo
"functional" structure. Constru
plain board without and within,
with typewriters arrayed on trestles and equipped with simp
ing metal chairs, it is a neat
gaudy place to chronicle the
to-concert doings of the Berksh
sic Festival.

In the press house, the pub
tions staff for the Festival pos
tendance figures for each co
8,000, 12,000, 19,000—and for son's grand total, figures run
six places.

What do these impressive d
veal about the Berkshire Mu val? Shake and shuffle them will, they really disclose n
all. They may seem to indic the concerts are a great succ quantitatively they probably d
the deeper worth of the Fe teen years after its founding, o seek other proofs. Then the fig out to be painted veils.

The fact that 19,000 persons
Music Shed and blot out the Tanglewood on a starry Satur or fair Sunday afternoon, mig en as evidence of popular inte love of musiculture. Don't yo it. More and more people a Tanglewood, but anyone wi eye can see that it is not plain and simple tourism th
the bulk of them. Tanglewood
main stop on the poor man
Tour.

*

In the primordial days of shire Music Festival, the au
a composite of old age and
There were dowagers in Pier debutantes in mink, and the Apley might be seen in whi and Norfolk jacket. The box plainer-Jane version of the Horseshoe. This was Tanglew
dal period.

But the Boston Symphony
was a brilliant instrument
Great, Good Doctor a fabled and with an increasing numbe phony lovers everywhere abo ca, the Festival could not preserve of Privilege. So the figures continued to climb,
the influx of young people
rimmed glasses and clutching the works to be played.
Tanglewood's period of enligh

Now, what is it like? Hordes in dungarees, clutching camer of scores, hordes of little uniform, two'sing in the cilors, hordes of picnick hampers over the lawns of Music-lovers, poor but hon deed — sightseers, people ride, music's me-too-ers, looking for something to

UNION CITY, N. J.
HUDSON DISPATCH

AUG 21 1952

ocial Briefs

North Bergen

d Mrs. Edward Devine
hters, Joy and Sharon
0 76th st., North Bergen,
rned from a vacation to
nd Atlantic City.

rold G. Humphrey, pres-
New Jersey Federation of ubs, has returned from lass., where she was a
the conference of New
District of the national
Mrs. Humphrey, who
7607 Boulevard East,
d New Jersey at the con-
held in the library of Hall, on the grounds
where th
val was h

Mrs. H
cert of chestra
Festival

Mr. a son, Ro
North trip thr
also visi
The co
Tuesday
Paul Co
into the

Mr. an formerly Bergen, h
av., Jerse

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE

AUG 25 1952

Final Conce Performed A Interlochen

Audience Of 5,0 Is One Of Larg In Camp's Hist

By JULIAN SEAM
Blade Staff Writer

INTERLOCHEN, Mic 25—More than 5,000 from the land at large, train and gasoline engin the final concert last this 25th year of musi National Music Camp.

Thousands of visito across the nation have riving this week and t ence was one of the la the quarter-century camp's history.

Bedrolls and suitcases ments and bundles fil parking lot around the hotel, for 1,600 studen been packing for the tr tomorrow—by plane, bu and train—to homes in 4 Canada, South Ameri Israel.

260 Concerts

There have been 260 this year during the session of 57 days. Mo 1,200 students, with the participating, put on th concert. The entire ass of orchestras, bands, ch the ballet corps, under rection of Dr. Joseph E. founder and president camp, made up an e show in the famous old Interlochen Bowl.

Teh Brahms fourth sym with a 250-piece orche Liszt's "Lee preludes," to the same mammoth plus ballet and choir, co the gist of this final effor were speeches, of cour much impulsive fanfa purely local consumptio

One of the most impo certs this year was formance, without cuts the original instrumenta the Berlioz Requiem, p the first in this coun though I am not sure of

3 Major Performances

This was the third ma formance of this work spring—Leon Barzin National Orchestra As presented the work in Hall, New York, las Charles Munch and the Symphony Orchestra c the present season at wood with the Requiem and Maynard Klein c the score here.

New York and Tan performances were abb to suit the physical r available, but the perf here was exactly as Be decreed—orchestra of 4 of 500, four brass band players each, 16 typani tenor, Harold Haugh, a oratorio singer, of th faculty at the Unive Michigan.

Awards and scholarsh announced this mornin ceremony called "Hon ly." Scholarship ced by admission ballet and theatr nces, sales of book lets, gifts from small grant from fund. This am $7,000 a year.

HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

The Lively Arts

Untangling Tanglewood

By T. H. Parker

Like Eliel Saarinen's big Music Shed, the press house at Tanglewood is a functional structure. Constructed of plain board without and within, stocked with typewriters arrayed on wooden tables and equipped with simple, folding metal chairs, it is a neat and not gaudy place to chronicle the concert-to-concert doings of the Berkshire Music Festival.

In the press house, the public relations staff for the Festival posts the attendance figures for each concert — 9,000, 12,000, 19,000 and for the season's grand total, figures running into six figures.

What do these impressive digits reveal about the Berkshire Music Festival? Shake and shuffle them as you will, they really disclose nothing at all. They may seem to indicate that the concerts are a great success, and quantitatively they probably do. But for the deeper worth of the Festival, fifteen years after its founding, one has to seek other proofs. Then the figures turn out to be painted veils.

The fact that 19,000 persons pack the Music Shed and blot out the lawns of Tanglewood on a starry Saturday night, or fair Sunday afternoon, might be taken as evidence of popular interest in or love of musiculture. Don't you believe it. More and more people are going to Tanglewood, but anyone with half an eye can see that it is not music, but plain and simple tourism that fetches the bulk of them. Tanglewood is now a main stop on the poor man's Grand Tour.

★

In the primordial days of the Berkshire Music Festival, the audience was a composite of old age and elegance. There were dowagers in Pierce-Arrows, debutantes in mink, and the late George Apley might be seen in white flannels and Norfolk jacket. The boxes were a plainer-Jane version of the Diamond Horseshoe. This was Tanglewood's feudal period.

But the Boston Symphony Orchestra was a brilliant instrument, and the Great, Good Doctor a fabled conductor, and with an increasing number of symphony lovers everywhere about America, the Festival could not remain the preserve of Privilege. So the attendance figures continued to climb, boosted by the influx of young people in horn-rimmed glasses and clutching scores of the works to be played. This was Tanglewood's period of enlightenment.

Now, what is it like? Hordes of people in dungarees, clutching cameras instead of scores, hordes of little campers in uniform, two'sing in the wake of counsellors, hordes of picnickers lugging hampers over the lawns of Tanglewood. Music-lovers, poor but honest? No, indeed — sightseers, people come for the ride, music's me-too-ers, vacationers looking for something to do. You've seen Provincetown — Now see Tanglewood!

And the concerts themselves are the best proof of the case. No one but tourists would possibly swarm in to hear the same, monotonous programs as the Boston Symphony Orchestra offers year after year. One wondered if the coming of Charles Munch, fresh from Europe, would snap the Festival out of its conservatism, give it a more adventurous sense of music. It has not. Among fifteen concerts this season, not a piece was new and being premiered. Out of some fifty compositions played, less than a dozen were of contemporary origin at all. Among the theater-concert hall performances, there was a slight broadening of the list of early composers, but this was something for the collector, not to say the pedant, the "musicologist."

But thumb through any periodical, and take a look at what has been going on in music festivals around the world, from Cheltenham, England, to Sydney, Australia. New music, the music of our times, on all sides. At Cheltenham, the British composer gets his annual chance. In Paris, "L'Oeuvre de 20eme Siecle." At Salzburg, the International Society for Contemporary Music. Concerts commemorating anniversaries of Stravinsky and Honegger. Even in the Antipodes, wideworld composers of today. Indeed, in many places the annual repainting of well-weathered classic took place. But in many others there was at least an attempt to get on with music.

★

What's the trouble at Tanglewood? One is led to speculate whether money is not as high as music, in the Festival's figuring. The Festival certainly must be a gold mine for the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Not many of the country's big orchestras have such a summer plum to pick, to offset winter deficits, augment winter profits. As long as the Festival is to be a tourist spot, obviously the wise thing to do is to play safe, provide these audiences with the old chestnuts, not frighten them off with something new.

But if the Berkshire Music Festival really means to live up to its name, instead of re-christening itself the Berkshire Summer Carnival, we wish it would take a little more seriously its responsibility to the art upon which it now battens. The music has gone round and round long enough. The Festival owes it a chance to head in new directions.

UNION CITY, N. J.
HUDSON DISPATCH

AUG 21 1952

Social Briefs

North Bergen

[illegible]

where the Berkshire Music Festival was held.

Mrs. Humphrey attended a concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Berkshire Music Festival during her visit to Lenox.

Mr. and Mrs. John Connolly and son, Roger Connolly, 1304 91st st., North Bergen, are home after a trip through New England. They also visited Saratoga Springs, N. Y. The couple gave a farewell party Tuesday night for their son, John Paul Connolly, who was inducted into the service yesterday.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert B. Horan, formerly of 2039 46th st., North Bergen, have moved to 154 Central av., Jersey City.

MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD

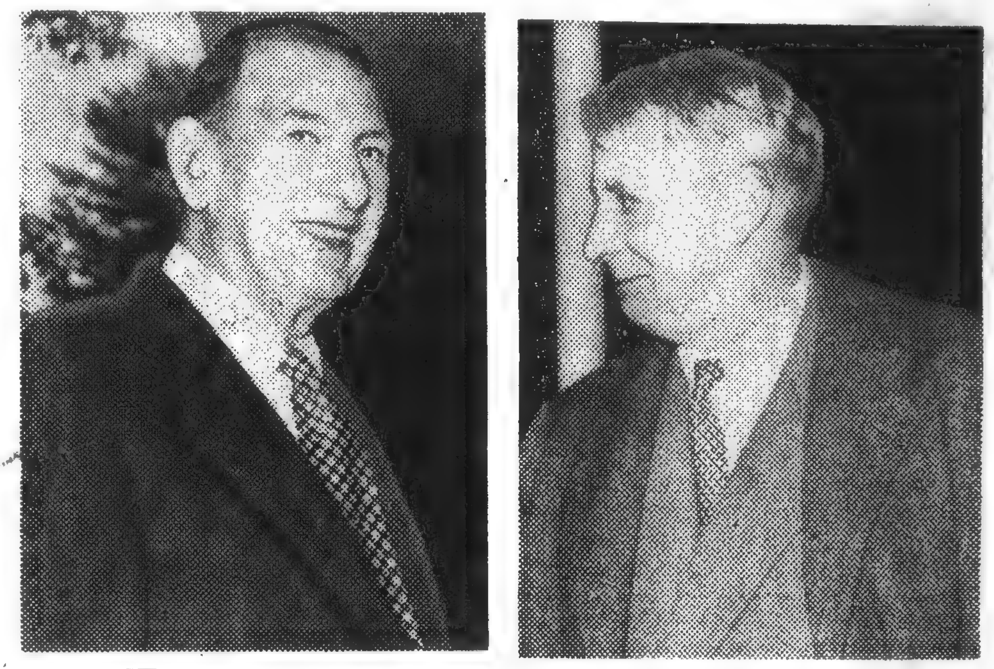
SEP 14 1952

Jean Bedetti To Perform With Boston Symphony

By DORIS RENO
Herald Music and Art Editor

One of the first Miamians we met at Tanglewood, Mass. this summer was Jean Bedetti, University of Miami's beloved 'cellist and chamber music instructor, who was winding up his summer affairs there.

He was satisified and beaming, partly because his chamber music students had done well in their assignments throughout the summer, and also because he had just been accorded a high and unique honor.



JEAN BEDETTI   CHARLES MUNCH

. . . UM 'cellist and Boston Symphony maestro

The former first 'cellist. (for 30 years) with the Boston Symphony had just been invited by Charles Munch, the masterful present leader of the Boston ensemble, to "come up and perform the Schumann A Minor Concerto with the boys next winter."

It was absolutely the first time, Bedetti says proudly, that any retired member of the Boston ensemble had been asked back as soloist.

Since arriving at his Miami home the musician has received and signed contracts setting his dates for the Schumann performance as Jan. 25 and 27 in Boston's Symphony Hall. He may repeat the concerto twice later during the Boston's out-of-town series, but details for that have not been worked out. He has played under Munch previously when that eminent maestro "guested" with the Boston group.

During the final weekend at Tanglewood, when we bounced into the Bedettis several times, the 'cellist was also glowing because his presentation of John Bitter's Quartet in Three-Quarter Time had been so warmly received by the connoisseur audiences that habitually listen to the student performances. (We caught only the last two days of the festival, so did not hear his performance.)

Bedetti prepared and presented the Quartet during the last week of July as one of four performances allotted him during the summer. Bitter, then on his brief vacation from conducting the summer "pop" concerts here, was in the audience.

Other works Bedetti prepared and presented on one or another of the more-than-40 concerts which are given each season by Tanglewood students for Friends of the Berkshire Music Center were the two Schubert 'Cello Quintets in C major and the Debussy Quartet.

At least one of the young 'cellists who studied with Bedetti at the Berkshire Music Center this past summer will study with him here this winter and participate in the work of the master-'cellist's chamber music class at University of Miami's school of music.

Bedetti was one of five chamber-music leaders who assisted William Kroll in the chamber music department at Tanglewood. The others were Lukas Foss, Willem Valkenier, Ruth Posselt and Ralph Berkowitz.

Munch was faculty director and Aaron Copland was assistant director and head of the composition department.

★ ★ ★

tirring Experience

WE MUST CONFESS we were excited and uplifted by practically everything we saw and heard at Tanglewood on its final weekend of the six-week school period.

Five concerts were presented on those two days and we heard them all — two by the great Boston Symphony, which we had never had the joy of hearing previously in "live" session, and three by the student organizations. The groups we heard were the student orchestra, the small choir, and the chamber music group.

COPLAND

We were not for a moment disappointed in the Boston ensemble's work, though we keep running across the critical reiteration that the strings are not what they were under the late Serge Koussevitzky. We found the strings—and the brass—and the woodwinds—and everything else superb and moving.

We have never heard brass speak so splendidly as Munch's four extra choirs in the Berlioz Requiem, which was performed on the last Sunday afternoon of the Festival.

For us the whole performance was thrilling and stirring—so that we wondered a bit about the youthful blase criticism we heard in the departing bus, when one "knowledgeable" student confided to another that "the Tuba Mirum made up for everything, and for the rest, I thought it quite good." What do they, we wondered, want?

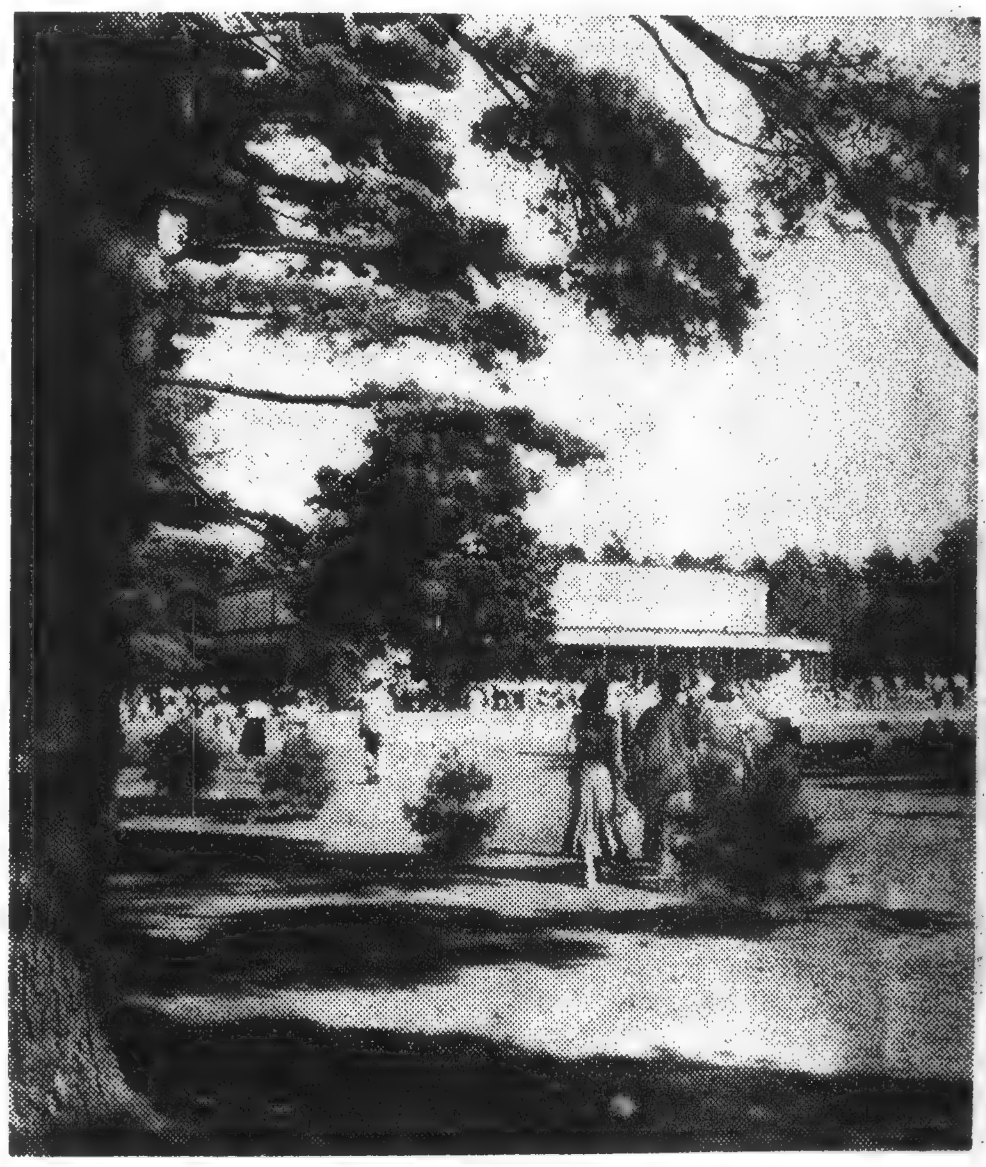
Munch used a chorus of about 120 voices for the "Requiem" — and it was charming to hear such an ensemble composed entirely of young and fresh voices that could still soar effortlessly.

The conductor kept his huge orchestral forces sufficiently at bay so that the chorus could be heard satisfactorily at most times. We tried to count the kettle-drums between sections, and think there were eight instead of 16—which to us seemed plenty.

★ ★ ★

Maestros Compared

WE HEARD LEONARD BERNSTEIN conduct the next-to-the-last festival program on Saturday night, and could not hope to describe the contrast better than Klaus George Roy, The Christian Science Monitor's music writer, did on Monday morning when he characterized Munch's conducting as a study in "supremely expressive immobility" and Bernstein's " a flamboyantly fascinating study in choreography." We gathered that he infinitely preferred Munch's ways — as did we.



SCENE AT TANGLEWOOD MUSIC FESTIVAL

. . . acoustics of The Shed, background, are famous

We felt, however, as Roy did, the sincerity and real passion behind Bernstein's gyrations, and thought he did a magnificent job on Aaron Copland's Third Symphony—so much so that we wondered whether this work may not have emerged as greater and more compelling than it really is.

It seemed a very eloquent and strong work, masterfully put together and fairly spell-binding. Bernstein is evidently the right man to interpret it.

★ ★ ★

Sound Judgment

WE CAN'T RESIST making comment on the perfection of the acoustics of both the Shed (which seats nearly 7,000 persons) and the Theater-Concert hall (which seats 1,150).

Both these buildings are of wood with dirt floors, arranged to open two-thirds of their wall surface to the open air. Yet in both you hear perfectly, magnificently—the smallest shading of a sound is alive, the general effect totally satisfying. You hear what is played, no matter where you sit, and there is no experience so delightful as to know you're hearing what is being played.

There's only one thing to be said: the builder who designs for sound, and forgets the frivolities, does the job for which patrons are eternally grateful. The hundreds of builders of unhappy cement-block auditoriums across the country could learn much from Tanglewood's simple buildings.

The Shed was built in 1937 for $80,000, the Theater-Concert Hall and a smaller Chamber Music Hall (seating 500) in 1941. The Finnish architect, Eliel Saarinen, designed them all, and Prof. Richard D. Fay of Massachusetts Institute of Technology devised the acoustics of the Shed.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

berkshire Sketch

July 17-23, 1952

Original Drawing of Berkshire Scene
by Ture Bengtz

- what to see
- where to go
- where to dine
- where to stay
- where to play

20c

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

berkshire Sketch

July 17-23, 1952

Original Drawing of Berkshire Scene
by Ture Bengtz

20c

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

berkshire Sketch

August 7, 1952

Souvenir
Tanglewood
Program

Autographs:
Charles Munch
Pierre Monteux
Leonard Bernstein

what to see where to go where to dine
where to stay
where to play

20c

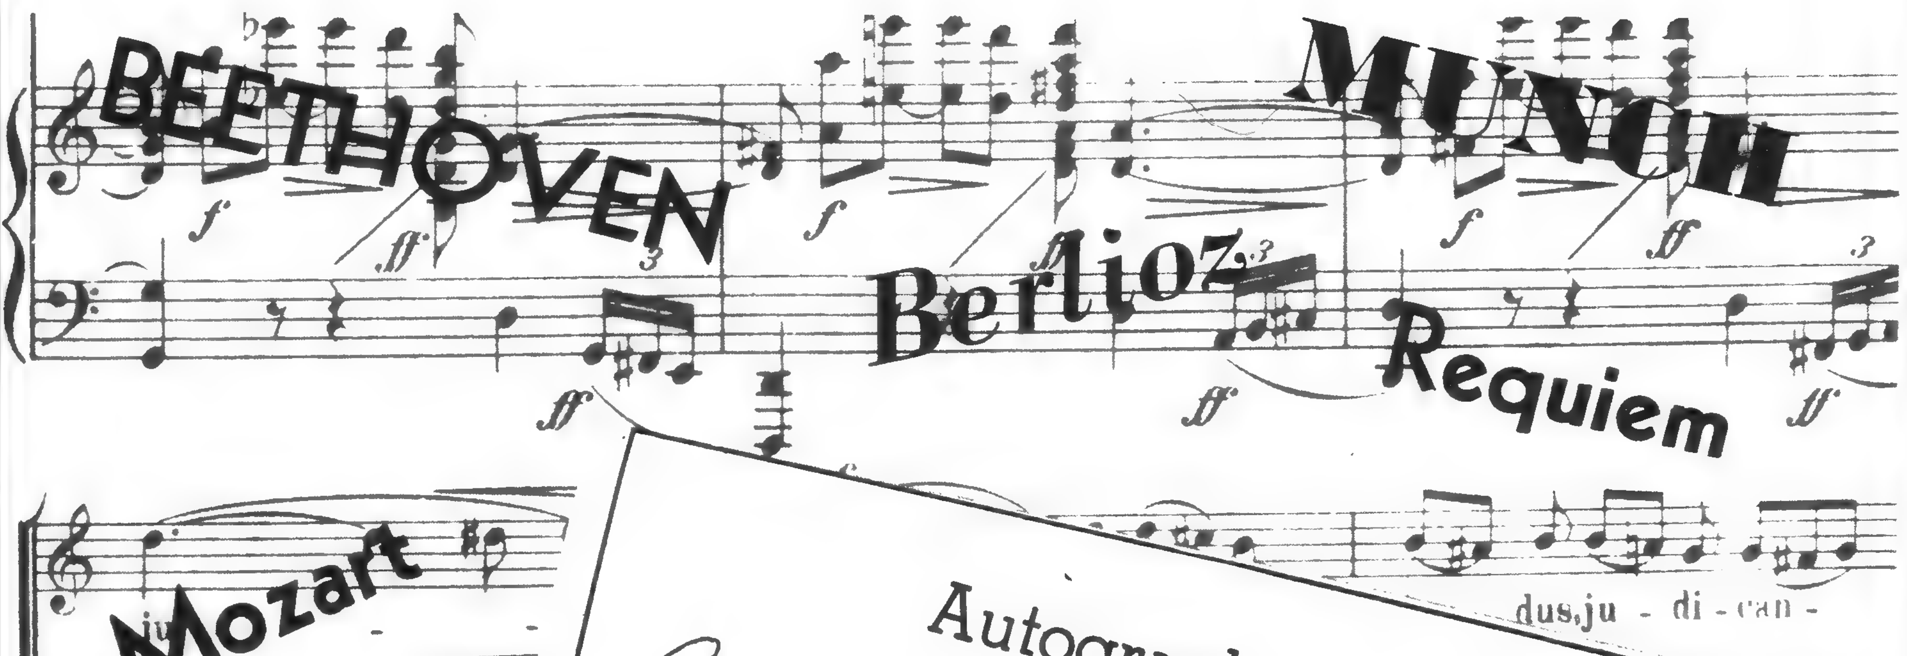
BEETHOVEN
MUNCH
Berlioz
Requiem
Mozart
Bernstein
Bach
TANGLEWOOD
WAGNER
Brahms
Festival
Monteux

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

berkshire
Sketch

August 7, 1952

Souvenir
Tanglewood
Program



BEETHOVEN
MUNCH
Berlioz
Requiem
Mozart
Bernstein
Autographs:
Charles Munch
Pierre Monteux
Leonard Bernstein
dus,ju - di - can - dus, ju -
Bach
B
dus ho - mo re - -us. La - cry - mo - sa di - es il -
TANGLEWOOD
mo, ho - mo re - -us. La - cry - mo - sa di - es
WAGNER
Brahms
La - cry - mo - sa di - es il - Festival
Monteux

what to see where to go where to dine
where to stay
where to play

20c

VACATION WITH MUSIC

Usually a workshop is a dull place for anyone to visit . . . and certainly no place for a vacationer.

But right in the heart of the Berkshires is a different and special kind of workshop, which participants and visitors enjoy to the fullest.

A music workshop! To see and hear the best musicians . . . to see and hear young people molding their way towards bright careers under the formers' guidance . . . has been something for only a privileged few in the past. But here in Tanglewood, music has come into an entirely new conception.

Students from all over the world gather to study, compose, play and conduct as professional musicians help develop them as artists.

The trails to the nearby town of Lenox, Massachusetts, have been many indeed. The early settlers came from West Hartford, Connecticut and New York's Long Island, around the time of the Revolutionary War. Not too far away is another and more famous path, the Mohawk Trail. And now every summer, over every conceivable trailway, vacationers head for Tanglewood for a vacation with a musical background.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra having just completed a grand successful tour in Europe plays an important part in the festival. Under the direction of Conductor Charles Munch, its members will give six concerts on each Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon during the first three weeks in July. Mr. Munch will be joined by Pierre Monteux and Leonard Bernstein in conducting concerts to be held in the famous shed on the following three Thursday evenings and Saturday afternoons.

Numerous performances throughout the season running from June 30th to August 10th are open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Since a voluntary contribution constitutes membership, it is easy for anyone to join and it's an opportunity you shouldn't miss.

The festival has come to be one of the great music attractions of the year and is a living tribute to the late Serge Koussevitzky's efforts in the cause of music.

By the way, there are plenty of excellent hotel and guest accommodations available throughout this famous and interesting area. The Berkshire Hills Conference in Pittsfield can help you secure reservations.

Menve June 1952

New Features At Tanglewood Next Season

Scholarship Policy Broadened—Study Group Planned

Charles [illegible] director of the Bos[illegible] Orchestra and direc[illegible] Center, [illegible] summer school at [illegible] announces several [illegible] in the plans for the school [illegible] session [illegible] June 30

There [illegible] enlarged [illegible] will award [illegible] from the Tanglewood [illegible] Fund to all [illegible] in the advanced departments. The [illegible] scholarship [illegible] broadened to help make [illegible] for preprofessional [illegible] admitted on considerations of musical promise alone, [illegible] regard for their present [illegible]

Another development is the arrangement that advanced students may concentrate on chamber music or song repertoire alone. A new feature of the summer session will be an expanded department for general music students, music educators and amateurs. Called the Tanglewood Study Group, it will be headed by [illegible] Dahl and will carry into the [illegible] contemporary music the collegium musicum idea of group performance for the pleasure of the participants. Students in this department who are not able to attend the full six-week session will be able to enroll for two or four weeks.

реку, а затем бросилась в воду и сама.

Прохожие успели спасти одну старшую девочку, а остальные утонули вместе с матерью.

[illegible] 1951

ПО НЬЮ ИОРКУ

В театре Бут с большим успехом проходит пьеса, носящая название «Кружево на ея юбке». Эта пьеса имеет много комических моментов, чередующихся с мелодраматическими. Диалог в этой пьесе живой и интересный. Ея продюсером является известный на Бродвее Г[illegible]ман Шумлин.

Музыкальные празднества в горах Беркшайр закончились в конце этого летнего сезона с выдающимся успехом. Одним из выдающихся дирижеров на этом празднестве был Елеазар де Карвало, который в августе дирижировал симфонию Мусоргского «Картины на выставке», и также концерт ном. 2 Прокофьева, который отлично был сыгран пианистом из Южной Америки Ж. Болетом.

Анна Гордон

SPRINGFIELD FREE PRESS—SATURDAY, MARCH 1, 1952

New Features At Tanglewood

Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Director of the Berkshire Music Center, the Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood announces several additions in the plans for the school, which will hold its tenth session for six weeks beginning June 30. There will be a new and much enlarged scholarship policy which will award tuition grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund to all active students in the advanced departments. The school's scholarship policy, which has always been generous, is now broadened to help make it possible for preprofessional students to be admitted on considerations of musical promise alone, without regard for their present ability to pay tuition. Another development is the arrangement that advanced students may concentrate on chamber music or song repertoire alone. An important new feature of the summer session will be an expanded department for general music students, music educators and amateurs. Called the Tanglewood Study Group, it will be headed by Ingolf Dahl and will carry into the field of contemporary music the collegium musicum idea of group performance for the pleasure of the participants. Students in this department who are not able to attend the full six-week session will be able to enroll for two or four weeks.

THE FREE PRESS BY MAIL
$1 A YEAR!

Study Group New Feature At Berkshire Center

AN IMPORTANT new feature of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood this Summer, as announced by Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony and director of the center, will be an expanded department for general music students, music educators and amateurs. Called the Tanglewood Study Group, it will be headed by Ingolf Dahl, and will carry into the field of contemporary music the collegium musicum idea of group performance for the pleasure of the participants. Students in this department who are unable to attend the full six-week session will be able to enroll for two or four weeks.

There will also be a new and enlarged scholarship policy which will award tuition grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund to all active students in the advanced departments, thus broadening the school's already generous scholarship policy to make it possible for preprofessional students to be admitted on considerations of

[illegible] 16 [illegible]

VACATION WITH MUSIC

Usually a workshop is a dull place for anyone to visit . . . and certainly no place for a vacationer.

But right in the heart of the Berkshires is a different and special kind of workshop, which participants and visitors enjoy to the fullest.

A music workshop! To see and hear the best musicians . . . to see and hear young people molding their way towards bright careers under the formers' guidance . . . has been something for only a privileged few in the past. But here in Tanglewood, music has come into an entirely new conception.

Students from all over the world gather to study, compose, play and conduct as professional musicians help develop them as artists.

The trails to the nearby town of Lenox, Massachusetts, have been many indeed. The early settlers came from West Hartford, Connecticut and New York's Long Island, around the time of the Revolutionary War. Not too far away is another and more famous path, the Mohawk Trail. And now every summer, over every conceivable trailway, vacationers head for Tanglewood for a vacation with a musical background.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra having just completed a grand successful tour in Europe plays an important part in the festival. Under the direction of Conductor Charles Munch, its members will give six concerts on each Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon during the first three weeks in July. Mr. Munch will be joined by Pierre Monteux and Leonard Bernstein in conducting concerts to be held in the famous shed on the following three Thursday evenings and Saturday afternoons.

Numerous performances throughout the season running from June 30th to August 10th are open to members of the Society of Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Since a voluntary contribution constitutes membership, it is easy for anyone to join and it's an opportunity you shouldn't miss.

The festival has come to be one of the great music attractions of the year and is a living tribute to the late Serge Koussevitzky's efforts in the cause of music.

By the way, there are plenty of excellent hotel and guest accommodations available throughout this famous and interesting area. The Berkshire Hills Conference in Pittsfield can help you secure reservations.

Henve" June 1952

New Features At Tanglewood Next Season

Scholarship Policy Broadened—Study Group Planned

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and director of the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood announces several additions in the plans for the school, which will hold its 10th session for six weeks beginning June 30.

There will be new and much enlarged scholarship policy which will award tutition grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund to all active students in the advanced departments. The school's scholarship policy is now broadened to help make it possible for preprofessional students to be admitted on considerations of musical promise alone, without regard for their present ability to pay tuition.

Another development is the arrangement that advanced students may concentrate on chamber music or song repertoire alone. A new feature of the summer session will be an expanded department for general music students, music educators and amateurs. Called the Tanglewood Study Group, it will be headed by Ingolf Dahl and will carry into the field of contemporary music the collegium musicum idea of group performance for the pleasure of the participants. Students in this department who are not able to attend the full six-week session will be able to enroll for two or four weeks.

реку, а затем бросилась в воду и сама.

Прохожие успели спасти одну старшую девочку, а остальные утонули вместе с матерью.

Nov. 10, 1951

ПО НЬЮ ИОРКУ

В театре Бут с большим успехом проходит пьеса, носящая название «Кружево на ея юбке». Эта пьеса имеет много комических моментов, чередующихся с мелодраматическими. Диалог в этой пьесе живой и интересный. Ея продюсером являнтся известный на Бродвее Герман Шумлин.

Музыкальные празднества в горах Беркшайр закончились в конце этого летнего сезона с выдающимся успехом. Одним из выдающихся дирижеров на этом празднестве был Елеазар де Кальвало, который в августе дирижировал симфонию Муссоргского «Картины на выставке», и также концерт ном. 2 Прокофьева, который отлично был сыгран пианистом из Южной Америки Ж. Болетом.

Анна Гордон

SPRINGFIELD FREE PRESS—SATURDAY, MARCH 1, 1952

New Features At Tanglewood

Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Director of the Berkshire Music Center, the Orchestra's summer school at Tanglewood announces several additions in the plans for the school, which will hold its tenth session for six weeks beginning June 30. There will be a new and much enlarged scholarship policy which will award tuition grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund to all active students in the advanced departments. The school's scholarship policy, which has always been generous, is now broadened to help make it possible for preprofessional students to be admitted on considerations of musical promise alone, without regard for their present ability to pay tuition. Another development is the arrangement that advanced students may concentrate on chamber music or song repertoire alone. An important new feature of the summer session will be an expanded department for general music students, music educators and amateurs. Called the Tanglewood Study Group, it will be headed by Ingolf Dahl and will carry into the field of contemporary music the collegium musicum idea of group performance for the pleasure of the participants. Students in this department who are not able to attend the full six-week session will be able to enroll for two or four weeks.

THE FREE PRESS BY MAIL
$1 A YEAR!

Study Group New Feature At Berkshire Center

AN IMPORTANT new feature of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood this Summer, as announced by Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony and director of the center, will be an expanded department for general music students, music educators and amateurs. Called the Tanglewood Study Group, it will be headed by Ingolf Dahl, and will carry into the field of contemporary music the collegium musicum idea of group performance for the pleasure of the participants. Students in this department who are unable to attend the full six-week session will be able to enroll for two or four weeks.

There will also be a new and enlarged scholarship policy which will award tuition grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund to all active students in the advanced departments, thus broadening the school's already generous scholarship policy to make it possible for preprofessional students to be admitted on considerations of Buffalo Ev.

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE
SEP 11 1952

Library Film Lending Service Is Renewed Here

The Warren Public Library is again ready to loan films to groups either private or organized, in Trumbull County.

The film service this year offers a selection of 45 films which are 16 mm. sound movies in black and white or color in a wide variety of entertaining and educational subjects. The films may be borrowed from the library for 24 hours and may be booked by calling at the library.

The library is offering seven new films this month, which are in addition to those they have had in other years, are:

"Circus Show," 17 minutes, shows the highlights of an entire circus performance under the big top.

"For All The World's Children," 30 minutes, shows how the world's starving children are fed by the U.N.

"Italy-Peninsula of Contrasts," 17 minutes, color, shows major historical, industrial, geographical, and scenic highlights of the principal cities of Italy, emphasizing people in how they make their living.

"Lincoln Speaks At Gettysburg" 10 minutes, recreates through art that historical moment when Lincoln first uttered his famous, "Gettysburg Address."

"Mother Mack Trains Her Seven Puppies," 10 minutes, color, shows how a Scottish terrier brings up her seven puppies.

"The Story Of Time," 10 minutes color, describes the methods of measuring them through the ages.

"Tanglewood-Music School And Music Festival," 21 minutes, pictures the famous Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., students at the schoo, performing themselves and listening to others.

A complete list of the films available during September may be secured at the library.

MUSIC X 7

ITALIAN OPERA

Dallapiccola's Work Deals With Theme for Today

By MARK SCHUBART
Dean, Juilliard School of Music

AGAINST a background of perhaps unparalleled political and economic difficulties, the creative artists of the European continent are slowly emerging from the blackout of the most terrible of all wars. American musicians have been watching this emergence with more than casual interest, eagerly exploring each indication of musical vitality that finds its way across the Atlantic. Thus far, the gleanings have been less discouraging than one might have expected.

The most curious returns of all have been coming in from Italy. Like its political situation, Italy's musical life has, in recent years, been unclear, and without profile.

It is most likely this generally unclear picture which makes the career of Luigi Dallapiccola stand out in greater relief. For to many, he is one of the few Italian composers today who gives promise of assuming real leadership in his field.

Leader

It is strange that this mantle of leadership may fall on the shoulders of a man who, to the casual musical observer, may be classified as a "twelve-tone composer." Strange, because it is only very recently that the so-called twelve-tone school, predominantly Germanic of origin, has begun to find its way to the West and South. But Dallapiccola is a twelve-toner only in the sense that Alban Berg was a twelve-toner, and he himself disdains the label, maintaining that he uses only certain twelve-tone techniques.

This week New Yorkers will have an opportunity to hear for themselves, when the Juilliard School's Opera Theatre presents the first performances in America of Dallapiccola's most important work to date—his opera, "The Prisoner." Written during 1946 and 1947, the work had its first stage performance at the Florentine May Festival in 1950 and has been given radio performances in Turin in 1949 and in Brussels in February of this year.

The Juilliard School commissioned the composer to write a reduced orchestral version of the work and also commissioned an English translation by Harold Heiberg. Frederic Cohen is staging the work, Frederic Waldman is the conductor and the sets and costumes were designed by Frederick Kiesler. The cast will be made up of members of the Opera Theatre and recent graduates of the school. Three public performances will be given on Friday, Saturday and

[110]

REDUCTION

RATIO

17x

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

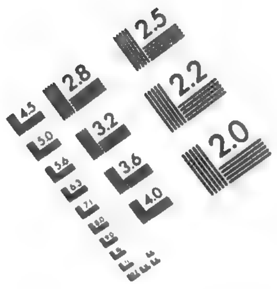
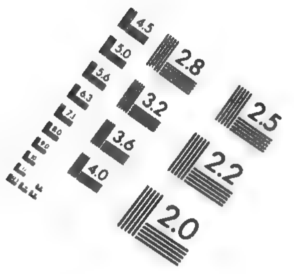
2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

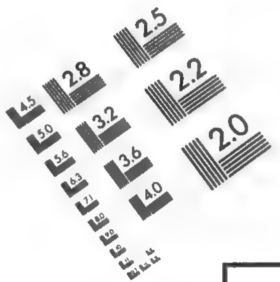


2.5
2.8
2.2
3.2
2.0
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6

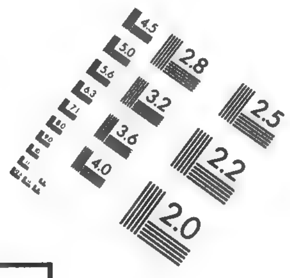


2.8
2.5
3.2
2.2
3.6
4.0
2.0
4.5
5.0
5.6

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



2.5
2.8
2.2
3.2
2.0
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6

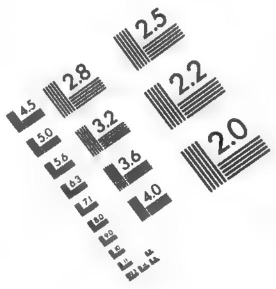


2.8
2.5
3.2
2.2
3.6
4.0
2.0
4.5
5.0
5.6

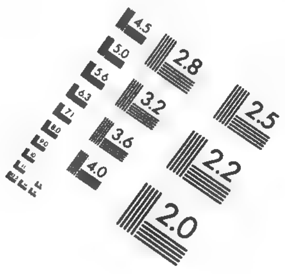
200 mm

150 mm

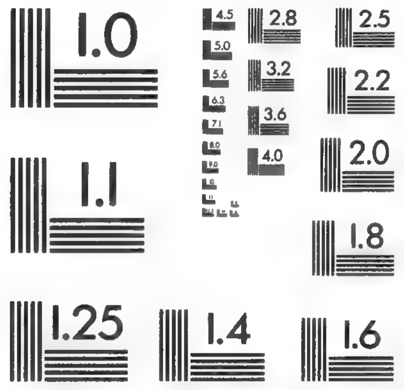
100 mm



2.5
2.8
2.2
3.2
2.0
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
5.6



2.8
2.5
3.2
2.2
3.6
4.0
2.0
4.5
5.0
5.6



1.0
4.5
2.8
2.5
5.0
3.2
2.2
5.6
3.6
4.0
2.0
1.1
1.8
1.25
1.4
1.6

1.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

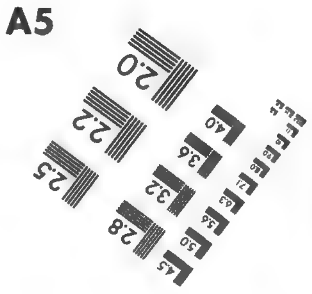
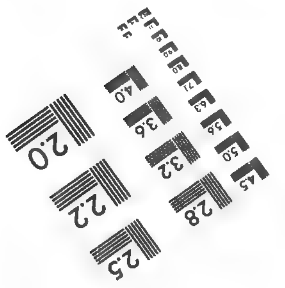
A5



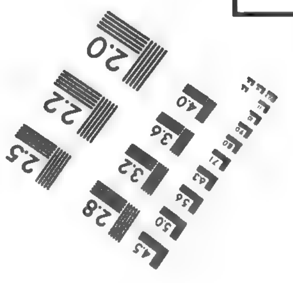
2.0
2.2
4.0
2.5
3.6
3.2
2.8
4.5



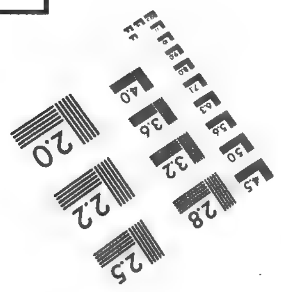
4.0
3.6
2.0
3.2
2.2
2.8
2.5

A4

A3



2.0
2.2
4.0
2.5
3.6
3.2
2.8
4.5



4.0
3.6
2.0
3.2
2.2
2.8
2.5

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

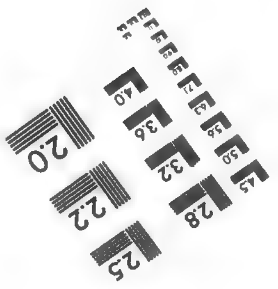
2.0
2.2
4.0
2.5
3.6
3.2
2.8
4.5



4.0
3.6
2.0
3.2
2.2
2.8
2.5

3.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE
SEP 11 1952

Library Film Lending Service Is Renewed Here

The Warren Public Library is again ready to loan films to groups either private or organized, in Trumbull County.

The film service this year offers a selection of 45 films which are 16 mm. sound movies in black and white or color in a wide variety of entertaining and educational subjects. The films may be borrowed from the library for 24 hours and may be booked by calling at the library.

The library is offering seven new films this month, which are in addition to those they have had in other years, are:

"Circus Show," 17 minutes, shows the highlights of an entire circus performance under the big top.

"For All The World's Children," 30 minutes, shows how the world's starving children are fed by the U.N.

"Italy-Peninsula of Contrasts," 17 minutes, color, shows major historical, industrial, geographical, and scenic highlights of the principal cities of Italy, emphasizing people in how they make their living.

"Lincoln Speaks At Gettysburg" 10 minutes, recreates through art that historical moment when Lincoln first uttered his famous, "Gettysburg Address."

"Mother Mack Trains Her Seven Puppies," 10 minutes, color, shows how a Scottish terrier brings up her seven puppies.

"The Story Of Time," 10 minutes color, describes the methods of measuring them through the ages.

"Tanglewood-Music School And Music Festival," 21 minutes, pictures the famous Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., students at the schoo, performing themselves and listening to others.

A complete list of the films available during September may be secured at the library.

MUSIC X 7

ITALIAN OPERA

Dallapiccola's Work Deals With Theme for Today

By MARK SCHUBART
Dean, Juilliard School of Music

AGAINST a background of perhaps unparalleled political and economic difficulties, the creative artists of the European continent are slowly emerging from the blackout of the most terrible of all wars. American musicians have been watching this emergence with more than casual interest, eagerly exploring each indication of musical vitality that finds its way across the Atlantic. Thus far, the gleanings have been less discouraging than one might have expected.

The most curious returns of all have been coming in from Italy. Like its political situation, Italy's musical life has, in recent years, been unclear, and without profile.

It is most likely this generally unclear picture which makes the career of Luigi Dallapiccola stand out in greater relief. For to many, he is one of the few Italian composers today who gives promise of assuming real leadership in his field.

Leader

It is strange that this mantle of leadership may fall on the shoulders of a man who, to the casual musical observer, may be classified as a "twelve-tone composer." Strange, because it is only very recently that the so-called twelve-tone school, predominantly Germanic of origin, has begun to find its way to the West and South. But Dallapiccola is a twelve-toner only in the sense that Alban Berg was a twelve-toner, and he himself disdains the label, maintaining that he uses only certain twelve-tone techniques.

This week New Yorkers will have an opportunity to hear for themselves, when the Juilliard School's Opera Theatre presents the first performances in America of Dallapiccola's most important work to date—his opera, "The Prisoner." Written during 1946 and 1947, the work had its first stage performance at the Florentine May Festival in 1950 and has been given radio performances in Turin in 1949 and in Brussels in February of this year.

The Juilliard School commissioned the composer to write a reduced orchestral version of the work and also commissioned an English translation by Harold Heiberg. Frederic Cohen is staging the work, Frederic Waldman is the conductor and the sets and costumes were designed by Frederick Kiesler. The cast will be made up of members of the Opera Theatre and recent graduates of the school. Three public performances will be given on Friday, Saturday and next Monday evenings at 8:45.

The importance of "The Prisoner" in acquainting the American public with Dallapiccola's music lies not only in the scope of the work itself but also in the message it brings from the country of its birth. For "The Prisoner" is an opera about Freedom, with a capital F. The composer himself wrote the libretto, basing it on a short story by William de l'Isle Adam, and Charles de Coster's "Ulenspiegel."

It tells the story of the imprisonment of a Flemish Protestant in the fight for liberation from the Spaniards in the sixteenth century. The characters in the opera are obviously of their period, and the figure of the Grand Inquisitor is not identified with any living figure. But at the same time the message of the work and the reminders it contains are of unmistakable significance to the audience of 1951.

The dimensions of the work are not grandiose, despite the fact that it employs a truly operatic panoply of forces. In Juilliard's production it calls for an orchestra of fifty-five players, a large chorus, a smaller chorus and a cast of six principals. It lasts approximately one hour, the action being continuous.

The fact that Dallapiccola chose such a subject for his opera is perhaps significant, in view of the conflicts raging within his country at the present time. He is himself a great believer in personal liberty and a devout Catholic. He has been called left-wing by the right wing, and right-wing by the left wing. He has been called too modern by the musical reactionaries and reactionary by the followers of strict and dogmatic [illegible] [illegible].

Serious

In [illegible], this publicly controversial figure is a quiet-spoken, [illegible] man. Dallapi[illegible] [illegible] talking about his work, and [illegible] own [illegible]

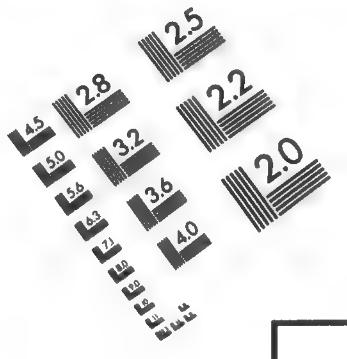
A [illegible] opera [illegible] the [illegible]

REDUCTION

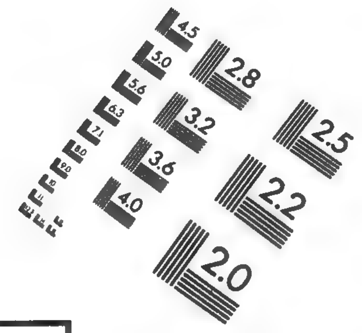
RATIO

14x

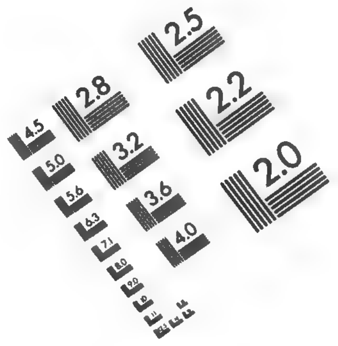
PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



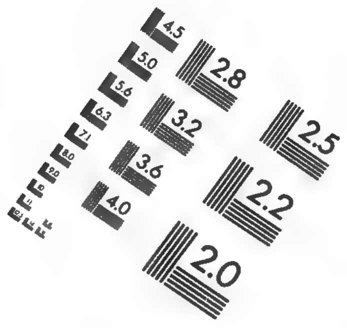
2.5
2.8
2.2
4.5
3.2
2.0
5.0
3.6
5.6
6.3
4.0
7.1



4.5
5.0
2.8
3.2
2.5
3.6
4.0
2.2
2.0



2.5
2.8
2.2
4.5
3.2
5.0
2.0
3.6
4.0

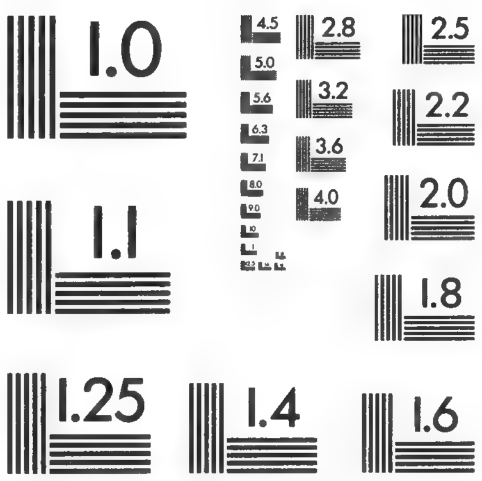


4.5
5.0
2.8
3.2
2.5
3.6
2.2
4.0
2.0

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm



1.0
4.5
5.0
5.6
6.3
7.1
8.0
9.0
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
2.5
2.2
2.0
1.8
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

1.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 1234567890

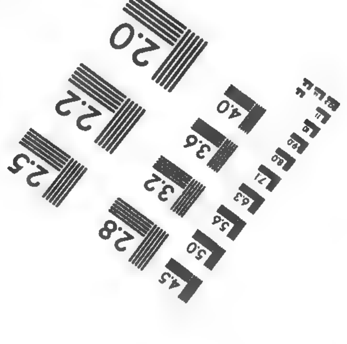
2.5 mm

A5

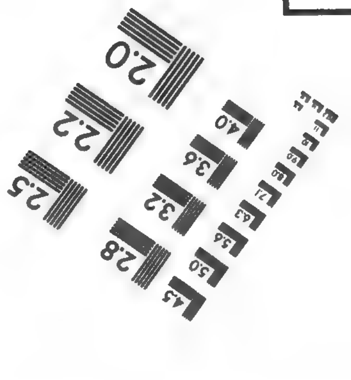


2.0
2.2
4.0
3.6
2.5
3.2
2.8
5.0
4.5

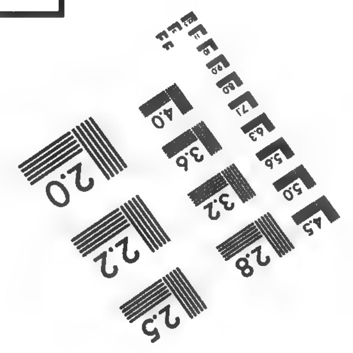
4.0
2.0
3.6
3.2
2.2
5.0
2.8
4.5
2.5

A4

A3



2.0
2.2
4.0
3.6
2.5
3.2
2.8
5.0
4.5



4.0
2.0
3.6
3.2
2.2
5.0
2.8
4.5
2.5

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P 1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE
SEP 11 1952

Library Film Lending Service Is Renewed Here

The Warren Public Library is again ready to loan films to groups either private or organized, in Trumbull County.

The film service this year offers a selection of 45 films which are 16 mm. sound movies in black and white or color in a wide variety of entertaining and educational subjects. The films may be borrowed from the library for 24 hours and may be booked by calling at the library.

The library is offering seven new films this month, which are in addition to those they have had in other years, are:

"Circus Show," 17 minutes, shows the highlights of an entire circus performance under the big top.

"For All The World's Children," 30 minutes, shows how the world's starving children are fed by the U.N.

"Italy-Peninsula of Contrasts," 17 minutes, color, shows major historical, industrial, geographical, and scenic highlights of the principal cities of Italy, emphasizing people in how they make their living.

"Lincoln Speaks At Gettysburg" 10 minutes, recreates through art that historical moment when Lincoln first uttered his famous, "Gettysburg Address."

"Mother Mack Trains Her Seven Puppies," 10 minutes, color, shows how a Scottish terrier brings up her seven puppies.

"The Story Of Time," 10 minutes color, describes the methods of measuring them through the ages.

"Tanglewood-Music School And Music Festival," 21 minutes, pictures the famous Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., students at the schoo, performing themselves and listening to others.

A complete list of the films available during September may be secured at the library.

MUSIC X 7

ITALIAN OPERA

Dallapiccola's Work Deals With Theme for Today

By MARK SCHUBART
Dean, Juilliard School of Music

AGAINST a background of perhaps unparalleled political and economic difficulties, the creative artists of the European continent are slowly emerging from the blackout of the most terrible of all wars. American musicians have been watching this emergence with more than casual interest, eagerly exploring each indication of musical vitality that finds its way across the Atlantic. Thus far, the gleanings have been less discouraging than one might have expected.

The most curious returns of all have been coming in from Italy. Like its political situation, Italy's musical life has, in recent years, been unclear, and without profile.

It is most likely this generally unclear picture which makes the career of Luigi Dallapiccola stand out in greater relief. For to many, he is one of the few Italian composers today who gives promise of assuming real leadership in his field.

Leader

It is strange that this mantle of leadership may fall on the shoulders of a man who, to the casual musical observer, may be classified as a "twelve-tone composer." Strange, because it is only very recently that the so-called twelve-tone school, predominantly Germanic of origin, has begun to find its way to the West and South. But Dallapiccola is a twelve-toner only in the sense that Alban Berg was a twelve-toner, and he himself disdains the label, maintaining that he uses only certain twelve-tone techniques.

This week New Yorkers will have an opportunity to hear for themselves, when the Juilliard School's Opera Theatre presents the first performances in America of Dallapiccola's most important work to date—his opera, "The Prisoner." Written during 1946 and 1947, the work had its first stage performance at the Florentine May Festival in 1950 and has been given radio performances in Turin in 1949 and in Brussels in February of this year.

The Juilliard School commissioned the composer to write a reduced orchestral version of the work and also commissioned an English translation by Harold Heiberg. Frederic Cohen is staging the work, Frederic Waldman is the conductor and the sets and costumes were designed by Frederick Kiesler. The cast will be made up of members of the Opera Theatre and recent graduates of the school. Three public performances will be given on Friday, Saturday and next Monday evenings at 8:45.

The importance of "The Prisoner" in acquainting the American public with Dallapiccola's music lies not only in the scope of the work itself but also in the message it brings from the country of its birth. For "The Prisoner" is an opera about Freedom, with a capital F. The composer himself wrote the libretto, basing it on a short story by William de l'Isle Adam, and Charles de Coster's "Ulenspiegel."

It tells the story of the imprisonment of a Flemish Protestant in the fight for liberation from the Spaniards in the sixteenth century. The characters in the opera are obviously of their period, and the figure of the Grand Inquisitor is not identified with any living figure. But at the same time the message of the work and the reminders it contains are of unmistakable significance to the audience of 1951.

The dimensions of the work are not grandiose, despite the fact that it employs a truly operatic panoply of forces. In Juilliard's илась в во-

и спасти одку, а осталь
е матерью

0, 1951

ОРКУ

ольшим ус-еса, нося-жево на ея меет много ов, череду-матическипьесе жи-Ея продюестный на
млин.

здиества в
кончились о сезона с
м. Одним ижеров на ый Елеа-торый в
л симфо-«Картины е концерт который пианисрики Ж.

Гордон

WARREN, OHIO
TRIBUNE-CHRONICLE
SEP 11 1952

Library Film Lending Service Is Renewed Here

The Warren Public Library is again ready to loan films to groups either private or organized, in Trumbull County.

The film service this year offers a selection of 45 films which are 16 mm. sound movies in black and white or color in a wide variety of entertaining and educational subjects. The films may be borrowed from the library for 24 hours and may be booked by calling at the library.

The library is offering seven new films this month, which are in addition to those they have had in other years, are:

"Circus Show," 17 minutes, shows the highlights of an entire circus performance under the big top.

"For All The World's Children," 30 minutes, shows how the world's starving children are fed by the U.N.

"Italy-Peninsula of Contrasts," 17 minutes, color, shows major historical, industrial, geographical, and scenic highlights of the principal cities of Italy, emphasizing people in how they make their living.

"Lincoln Speaks At Gettysburg" 10 minutes, recreates through art that historical moment when Lincoln first uttered his famous, "Gettysburg Address."

"Mother Mack Trains Her Seven Puppies," 10 minutes, color, shows how a Scottish terrier brings up her seven puppies.

"The Story Of Time," 10 minutes color, describes the methods of measuring them through the ages.

"Tanglewood-Music School And Music Festival," 21 minutes, pictures the famous Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., students at the schoo, performing themselves and listening to others.

A complete list of the films available during September may be secured at the library.

[110]

With Theme for Today

By MARK SCHUBART
Dean, Juilliard School of Music

AGAINST a background of perhaps unparalleled political and economic difficulties, the creative artists of the European continent are slowly emerging from the blackout of the most terrible of all wars. American musicians have been watching the emergence with more than casual interest, eagerly exploring each indication of musical vitality that finds its way across the Atlantic. Thus far, the gleanings have been less discouraging than one might have expected.

The most curious returns of all have been coming in from Italy. Like its political situation, Italy's musical life has, in recent years, been unclear, and without profile.

It is most likely this generally unclear picture which makes the career of Luigi Dallapiccola stand out in greater relief. For to many, he is one of the few Italian composers today who gives promise of assuming real leadership in his field.

Leader

It is strange that this mantle of leadership may fall on the shoulders of a man who, to the casual musical observer, may be classified as a "twelve-tone composer." Strange, because it is only very recently that the so-called twelve-tone school, predominantly Germanic of origin, has begun to find its way to the West and South. But Dallapiccola is a twelve-toner only in the sense that Alban Berg was a twelve-toner, and he himself disdains the label, maintaining that he uses only certain twelve-tone techniques.

This week New Yorkers will have an opportunity to hear for themselves, when the Juilliard School's Opera Theatre presents the first performances in America of Dallapiccola's most important work to date—his opera, "The Prisoner." Written during 1946 and 1947, the work had its first stage performance at the Florentine May Festival in 1950 and has been given radio performances in Turin in 1949 and in Brussels in February of this year.

The Juilliard School commissioned the composer to write a reduced orchestral version of the work and also commissioned an English translation by Harold Heiberg. Frederic Cohen is staging the work, Frederic Waldman is the conductor and the sets and costumes were designed by Frederick Kiesler. The cast will be made up of members of the Opera Theatre and recent graduates of the school. Three public performances will be given on Friday, Saturday and next Monday evenings at 8:45.

The importance of "The Prisoner" in acquainting the American public with Dallapiccola's music lies not only in the scope of the work itself but also in the message it brings from the country of its birth. For "The Prisoner" is an opera about Freedom, with a capital F. The composer himself wrote the libretto, basing it on a short story by William de l'Isle Adam, and Charles de Coster's "Ulenspiegel."

It tells the story of the imprisonment of a Flemish Protestant in the fight for liberation from the Spaniards in the sixteenth century. The characters in the opera are obviously of their period, and the figure of the Grand Inquisitor is not identified with any living figure. But at the same time the message of the work and the reminders it contains are of unmistakable significance to the audience of 1951.

The dimensions of the work are not grandiose, despite the fact that it employs a truly operatic panoply of forces. In Juilliard's production it calls for an orchestra of fifty-five players, a large chorus, a smaller chorus and a cast of six principals. It lasts approximately one hour, the action being continuous.

The fact that Dallapiccola chose such a subject for his opera is perhaps significant, in view of the conflicts raging within his country at the present time. He is himself a great believer in personal liberty and a devout Catholic. He has been called left-wing by the right wing, and right-wing by the left wing. He has been called too modern by the musical reactionaries and reactionary by the followers of strict and dogmatic twelve-tonism.

Serious

In person, this publicly controversial figure is a quiet-spoken, extremely serious man. Dallapiccola is 46 and an experienced musician, despite the fact that his list of works is not unusually large. In conversation he is earnest, extremely intense in talking about his works, and very sure of his own musical objectives.

As Dallapiccola himself no doubt knows perfectly well, no opera either succeeds or fails on the basis of its extra-musical or extra-dramatic meanings. The form itself is too complicated to take fire from anything but the true welding of drama with music, of voice with orchestra, of score with stage direction and scenic effect. "Fidelio" is a great drama, but it is the towering genius of Beethoven which gives it meaning for us today. Nevertheless, if Dallapiccola's work finds favor here as it has in much of Europe, the courage and humanity of the composer in choosing a subject of such immediacy should make his victory doubly sweet.

TIGHT BINDING

Salute From the Berkshires
To the Boston Symphony Orchestra

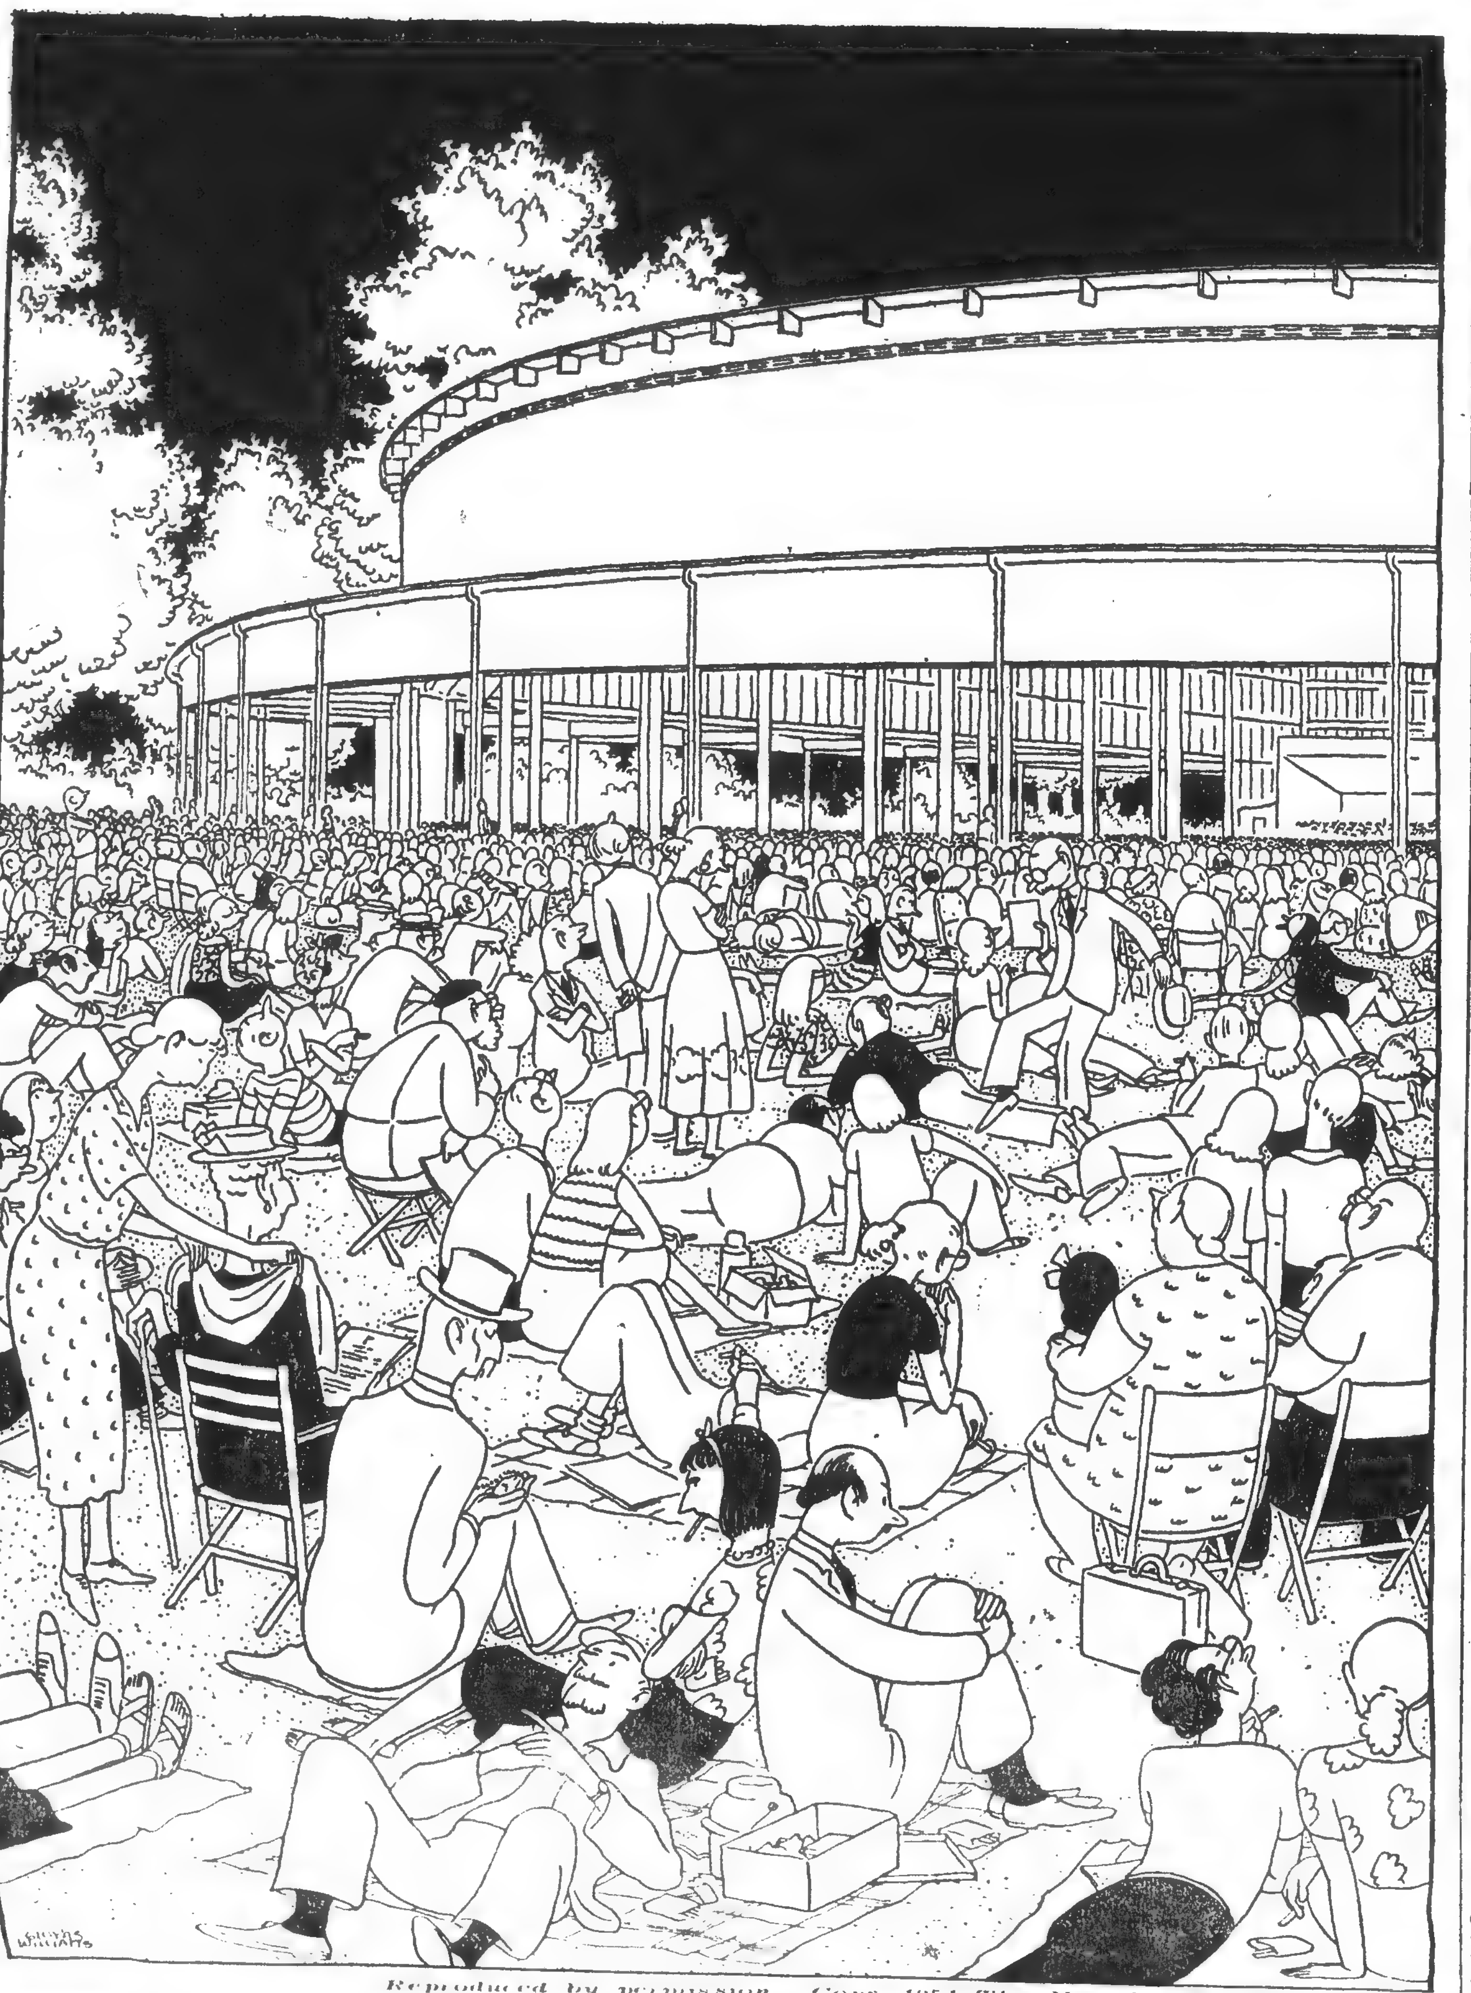
FOR the first time since its return from a triumphal tour of Europe, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be at full strength at Thursday night's opening concert of the 1952 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. The evening will be in the nature of a Berkshire tribute to the orchestra which has brought fame, summer visitors and a wealth of fine music to the county. As its contribution to this pleasant event, The Eagle herewith presents the pictures and brief biographies of the men whose combined musicianship makes the Boston Symphony one of the world's great orchestras, if not the greatest.

Raymond Allard, principal bassoon. A native of Din-le-Noble, France, he studied at Douai Conservatory. After winning first prize at the Paris Conservatory in 1922 he joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Monteux. Teaching at the New England and Conservatories, he likes to fish, take pictures and practice carpentry.

Louis Artieres, viola. Son of an opera singer in Lyon, France, he won the Paris Conservatory first prize in 1920. He played in the Colonne Orchestra for a year until he joined the BSO and the Longy School faculty. His hobbies are photography and fishing. Brought up in Paris, he went through the World War and received the croix de guerre at Verdun. He is known for his good nature.

Albert Yves Bernard, viola. After graduating with a law degree from Chaptal College in Paris, where he was born, he won first prize and first mention in viola at the Conservatory and a medal in solfeggio. Before he joined the BSO in 1925 he played in the Paris Opera Orchestra and the Oberdoerffer Quartet. When he isn't teaching, playing chamber music or the treble viol in the Boston Society of Ancient Instruments, he cooks and raises cacti.

John Barwicki, double bass. Born in Boston, he attended South Boston High School and the New England Conservatory, coming to the Berkshires with the first Festival orchestra in 1936



Reproduced by permission. Copr. 1951 The New Yorker Magazine, Inc.

Concert at Tanglewood

Paul Fedorovsky, first violin. He attended the Academy of Music in Vienna, high school in Russia and was two years at the University of Zurich, Switzerland. After earning a diploma at the Russian Conservatory he took a concert tour through Siberia, China and Japan, and joined the BSO in 1925. He teaches at the New England Conservatory, and plays pardessus de viol as a member of the Society of Ancient Instruments. He has a fine violin made by Carlo Antonio Testore.

Enrico E. Fabrizio, cello. Born in Boston, he studied there and in Europe and toured the United States and Canada at the age of 17 as soloist. A member of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra when offered a position with the Philadelphia and Boston Orchestras in 1918, he chose the latter. He teaches at the Beaver Country Day School and concertizes. He owns a Roggieri made in 1671 and a Tourte bow, but plays a cello that he made himself in 1940.

Armando Ghitalla, trumpet. Born in Alpha, Ill., he studied at the Juilliard School of Music and played with the New York City Center Opera and Ballet Company, the RCA Orchestra and the Houston Symphony Orchestra. He joined the BSO last year. He is a favorite Pops performer. The hit of an end of season concert this spring was a stunt in which he and Roger Voisin dressed as old-time musicians.

Henri Girard, double bass. Born in France, he was a prize student Einar Bech Hansen, first violin. Born in Copenhagen, he studied at Hamburg Conservatory under Max Fiedler on a full scholarship and in Berlin. He was concertmaster of the Bremen and Dresden Orchestras and made several tours through Sweden and Russia, joining the BSO in 1926. His outside interests are chess, Hindu philosophy, psychology and winter bathing. He owns a Guarnerius violin made in 1676.

Lucien Hansotte, trombone. A native of Liege, Belgium, of a musical family, he was educated in Geneva, Switzerland and won first prize at the National French Academy in 1914. He played with the Orchestra de la Suisse Romande in Geneva before joining the BSO in 1925. He has a son in military service. His trombone is a Stradivarius.

John Holmes, oboe. Born in Cleveland, he studied trumpet before switching to oboe. A graduate of Eastman School of Music, he attended the Berkshire Music Center in 1941 and 1942. He played with the orchestras of Oklahoma City, Kansas City, Buffalo, Washington, St. Louis, and Chautauqua, joining the BSO in 1946. Although he is not married, he likes to cook and do household repairs in addition to studying astronomy, for which he has made a telescope.

Ludwig Juht, double bass. Son of a trumpet soloist in a military band, he studied contra-bass in Tartu, Estonia, and at the St. Petersburg Conservatory

Emil Kornsand, first violin. Educated in Berlin, he was for 13 years first violinist at the State Opera in Berlin and played first violin and viola in the Edwin Fisher Chamber Orchestra. He joined the BSO in 1939 under Koussevitzky. Since 1921 he has played in established string quartets. His hobbies are composing, painting and drawing. He has a Testori violin and an Albani viola.

Jacobus Langendoen, cello. Of Dutch origin, he attended the Royal Conservatory of Music in The Hague. At the age of 16 he had began his study of the cello at Capetown, South Africa, and later with Izak Mossell in Amsterdam. He was first cellist of the Royal Opera at The Hague for three years, joining the BSO in 1920. First cellist in the Pops Orchestra, he composes music for chamber groups and cello. His hobbies are caricature drawing and sailing.

Georges Laurent, principal flute. At the age of 12 he started flute lessons with Phillipe Gaubert in Paris. From his fifteenth to his eighteenth year he studied Paul Keaney, French horn. Born in Beverly, he attended the Longy School of Music and joined the orchestra in 1937. He gives private lessons and teaches at the Boston Center for Adult Education. He has a boy of 10 and a girl of 12. He is interested in children's music in Jamaica Plains, where he lives. His special interest is Boy Scouts, especially Cubs.

Phillip Kaplan, flute. Born in Boston, he held the Oliver Ditson Scholarship at the New England Conservatory. He was an original member of the New Friends of Music Orchestra and the American Lyric Opera. He is artistic director of Musica Antiquia Ensemble, and has recorded extensively.

Bernard Kadinoff, viola. A New Yorker by birth, he attended the College of the City of New York, and studied with Moldavan, Katims and Vardi. He joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra last year. He played in the BSO Orchestra and at Radio Music Hall. He concerts, lectures and plays. He has a young son and daughter.

---

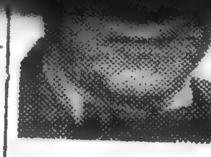
Stanley Benson, first violin section. A native of Brockton, whose mother was an amateur violinist, he joined the BSO six years ago. He has played in the Zimbler Sinfonietta and taught privately. His hobby is the

Harold Farberman, percussion player. He was born in New York of a family who were musicians as far back as his great-grandparents in Europe. His father and brothers are also drummers. Granted a scholarship at the

Theodore E. Brewster, bassoon. Born in Cleveland Heights, Ohio, he graduated from the New England Conservatory, studying with Ernst Panenka and Raymond Allard of the BSO, Dall Fields of Chicago, Simon Ko-

Henry Greenberg, double bass. Born in Warsaw, Poland, his father was a band leader, his mother a pianist and four brothers professional musicians. He studied at the Warsaw Conservatory, where he was awarded an old Italian in-



"The Rite of Spring" 39 years ago, he joined the BSO in 1920 when Monteux was conductor. He is a member of the Lake Placid Ensemble, the Flute Club Players and Arthur Fiedler's Symphonietta. His hobby is old books. He owns two double basses—a Sfretchner made in 1790 and a Tyrolian made in 1780.

Ralph Gomberg, principal oboe.

Symphony Orchestra, the Estonia Opera and was professor at the Conservatory of Latvia. Joining the BSO in 1934, he teaches and concertizes, composes and writes in his spare time. He has an instrument made by Francesco Ruggeri of Cremona in 1679, which he bought from the Duke of Windsor in 1936.

Eugene Lehner, viola. A Hungarian, he studied composition with Kodaly and played in the

It was one of the foremost musical organizations in Boston, where its chamber music concerts were very popular. His flute is one of the distinguishing voices of the orchestra.

Clarence F. Knudson, principal second violin. A native of Lynn, he studied at the New England Conservatory under Adamowski, joining the BSO in 1920. He is a member of the Zimbler

National Conservatory in Paris, winning first medals in solfeggio at the age of 10 and in violin under Touche at 14, with first prize in violin at 17. He studied with Camille Chevillard, D'Indy and Enesco. At 18 he was appointed ton Society of Ancient Instruments, he cooks and raises cacti.

John Barwicki, double bass. Born in Boston, he attended South Boston High School and the New England Conservatory, coming to the Berkshires with the Reproduced by permission. Copr. 1951 The New Yorker Magazine, Inc.

Symphony Orchestra. He joined the BSO last year. He is a favorite Pops performer. The hit of an end of season concert this spring was a stunt in which he and Roger Voisin dressed as old-time musicians.

Henri Girard, double bass. Born in France, he was a prize student BSO in 1946. Although he is not married, he likes to cook and do household repairs in addition to studying astronomy, for which he has made a telescope.

Ludwig Juht, double bass. Son of a trumpet soloist in a military band, he studied contra-bass in Tartu, Estonia, and at the St. Petersburg Concellist in the Pops Orchestra, he composes music for chamber groups and cello. His hobbies are caricature drawing and sailing.

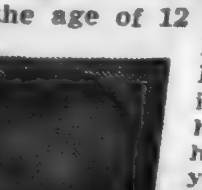
Georges Laurent, principal flute. At the age of 12 he started flute lessons with Phillipe Gaubert in Paris. From his fifteenth to his eighteenth year he studied at the Paris



Yorker by birth, he attended the College of the City of New York, and studied with Moldavan, Katims and Vardi. He joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra last year. He played in the BSO Orchestra and at Radio Music Hall. He concerts, lectures and plays. He has a young son and daughter.

---

TIGHT BINDING

Stanley Benson, first violin section. A native of Brockton, whose mother was an amateur violinist, he joined the BSO six years ago. He has played in the Zimbler Sinfonietta and taught privately. His hobby is the study of violins and bows, of which he has a fine collection. His violin, made by Jean Baptiste Vuillaume of Paris in 1860 is one of the finest.

Melvin H. Bryant, second violin section. Born in Somerville, of parents who were amateur musicians, he joined the BSO in 1918 after studying under Karl Scheurer, Alexander Ribarsch and Earl Rissland, members of the orchestra. His hobbies are rose growing and genealogy.

Richard Burgin, concertmaster. Born in Warsaw, Poland, he studied, with Lotto, Joachim in Berlin and Leopold Auer in Leningrad. His first public appearance was at the age of 11 as soloist with the Warsaw Philharmonic Society. He has been concertmaster and soloist of the Leningrad, Helsinki, Christiania and Stockholm Orchestras, serving under Fiedler, Nikisch, Richard Strauss, Schneevoigt and Sibelius. He became concertmaster of the BSO in 1920, organizing the Burgin String Quartet the following year. Last year he became conductor of the Portland (Maine) Orchestra. He is associate conductor of the BSO, which he has led many times. He is married to Ruth Posselt, a concert violinist. They have two young children.

Jean M. Cauhape, viola. Born in Toulouse, France, he attended theological school and the Toulouse and Paris Conservatories, where he was awarded first prize for viola. His mother was an amateur pianist. He joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1925.

Harold Farberman, percussion player. He was born in New York of a family who were musicians as far back as his great-grandparents in Europe. His father and brothers are also drummers. Granted a scholarship at the Juilliard School of Music, he became the youngest snare drummer at the age of 20 at Radio City Music Hall. In the past season he accompanied a friend seeking a position in the BSO and took it himself instead. He owns a Billy Gladstone custom built drum, the "Strad" of snare drums. His hobby is rooting for the New York Giants.

Gino B. Cioffi, principal clarinet. Distantly related to Pasquale Cioffi of 254 Dalton Avenue, Pittsfield, he was born in Naples of a musical family. Beginning music at the age of seven, he studied with Piccone and Carpio at the Naples Conservatory, graduating when he was 17. Since coming to America he has played solo clarinet with leading orchestras, including those of Radio City, New York, Cleveland, the Metropolitan Opera and NBC under Toscanini. His clarinet is considered one of the finest in the world. One son, who is a graduate of the Juilliard School, is assistant first clarinet in the Army Band in Washington. Another is in the Arkansas Army Band.

Harry Ellis Dickson, first violin. Born in Cambridge, he graduated from the New England Conservatory and won a scholarship at the Hochschule for Musik in Berlin. Joining the BSO in 1938, he is a member of the Boston Conservatory String Quartet and the Zimbler Sinfonietta and conducts the Providence Civic Orchestra. He has an interesting violin made in Milan in 1755 by Jean Baptiste Guadagnini which was exhibited at the Brooklyn Museum in 1935. He collects anecdotes about musicians and conductors.

Theodore E. Brewster, bassoon. Born in Cleveland Heights, Ohio, he graduated from the New England Conservatory, studying with Ernst Panenka and Raymond Allard of the BSO, Dall Fields of Chicago, Simon Kovac of New York and Saul Schoenback of Philadelphia. He was a student at the Berkshire Music Center in 1947 and 1949, when he joined the orchestra. He is a golfer.

Paul Cherkassky, violin. Born in Odessa, he attended conservatories there and in Leningrad, where he played with the opera orchestra. He was later concertmaster of the Helsinki Orchestra and conducted the Helsinki National Opera. Joining the BSO in 1923, he has led the Pops and Esplanade Orchestras. He teaches and plays chamber music and in concert. In his leisure time he makes recordings.

Pasquale A. Cardillo, clarinet. A native of North Adams, where his family live, he graduated from Drury High School and the New England Conservatory of Music. He joined the BSO in 1939, and teaches clarinet at the New England Conservatory and Boston University. He is a member of the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble who will play tonight at the Berkshire Music Center. His hobbies are trout fishing and Italian cooking.

Hippolyte E. Droeghmans, cello. Born in Liege, Belgium, he studied at the Conservatory in Paris, where he won first prize, under Martin Pierre Marsick, teacher of Thibaud, Enesco and Monteux. He played cello solos with the Concerts Colonne, Paris, and the Grand Opera, Nice. His cello was made in Genoa in 1745 by Bernadus Calcanius.

Henry Greenberg, double bass. Born in Warsaw, Poland, his father was a band leader, his mother a pianist and four brothers professional musicians. He studied at the Warsaw Conservatory, where he was awarded an old Italian instrument as a prize. He has played with the Warsaw Imperial Opera, and Philharmonic Orchestra and came to this country at the invitation of Gabrilowitsch to join the Detroit Symphony Orchestra. After playing with the New York Symphony he was with Toscanani at NBC for five years. He joined the BSO in 1939. His hobbies are golf and moving picture photography. His son is principal bass with the Kansas City Orchestra.

Henry S. Freeman, double bass. Born in New York City, he graduated from Eastman School of Music with highest honors. His father had been concert soloist of the Grenadier Guards Band in London, later playing in this country with Sousa and Pryor and later as first trumpet in the Eastman Theatre. He was offered the principal chair in the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra by Jose Iturbi before joining the BSO in 1945. His wife, also an Eastman graduate, was active as a violinist in Rochester. He has just acquired the famous English "Dodd" bass, known for its enormous, beautiful tone.

George Humphrey, viola. Born and brought up in Ohio, he was employed in a railroad shop untli he was 26, when he was given a ticket for a Kreisler recital. He was so deeply impressed that he took his first lesson on the violin and continued the study at the New England Conservatory. Later he switched to the viola. He left the Minneapolis Orchestra to join the BSO in 1934. He makes violins, violas and bows in his leisure time. One of his violas won an award in an exhibition of instruments made by contemporary craftsman.

he introduced Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring" 39 years ago, he joined the BSO in 1920 when Monteux was conductor. He is a member of the Lake Placid Ensemble, the Flute Club Players and Arthur Fiedler's Symphonietta. His hobby is old books. He owns two double basses—a Sfretchner made in 1790 and a Tyrolian made in 1780.

Ralph Gomberg, principal oboe. A Bostonian by birth, he has two sisters and three brothers who are professional musicians. At the age of 17 he was appointed first oboe for Stokowski's All-American Youth Orchestra. He played solo oboe for the New York City Center Symphony under Leonard Bernstein and first oboe with the Baltimore Symphony and Mutual Broadcasting Orchestras. He is a graduate of the Curtis Institute.

Samuel Leon Gorodetzky, second violin. A Frenchman by birth, he graduated from the New England Conservatory where he held a scholarship. He studied piano, but specialized in violin with Gruenberg, Winternitz and Witek, giving many recitals and concerts. He teaches and coaches violin, and in his spare time tries his hand at sculpture, painting and photography, saving some for out of door sports.

Joseph dePasquale, first viola. Born in Philadelphia of a musical family, he was first taught by his father, a professional violinist. His course at the Curtis Institute was interrupted by the war, during which he played in the Marine Band and Symphony Orchestra. With the latter he appeared often at the White House to play for state dinners, including those for Churchill and DeGaulle. Appointed first violinist with the BSO at the age of 27, he was the youngest to occupy that position in a major orchestra. He is married to a niece of Mrs. Koussevitzky, on whose estate they are living this summer with two daughters, aged six and two years.

(Finland) Symphony Orchestra, the Estonian Symphony Orchestra, the Estonia Opera and was professor at the Conservatory of Latvia. Joining the BSO in 1934, he teaches and concertizes, composes and writes in his spare time. He has an instrument made by Francesco Ruggeri of Cremona in 1679, which he bought from the Duke of Windsor in 1936.

Eugene Lehner, viola. A Hungarian, he studied composition with Kodaly and played in the Hubay, Kolisch and Stradivarius Quartets. He joined the BSO in 1939. Still a member of the Stradivarius Quartet, he says that his hobby is "music, music, music."

Manuel C. Valerio, clarinet. Born in New Bedford, he spent three years at the New England Conservatory. He was spotted for the BSO when Arthur Fiedler recruited him for the Esplanade orchestra and took him on tour with the Symphonietta through Virginia and Pennsylvania in the early 30s. He then joined the Pops and in 1933 the BSO, centually succeeded to first clarinet. He is described as "one of the smallest men in the orchestra with one of the biggest senses of humor." Although he was born in New Bedford, his parents and his wife came from the Azores.

GEORGE E. JUDD
Manager

Players Club three years later. For many years it was one of the foremost musical organizations in Boston, where its chamber music concerts were very popular. His flute is one of the distinguishing voices of the orchestra.

Clarence F. Knudson, principal second violin. A native of Lynn, he studied at the New England Conservatory under Adamowski. Joining the BSO in 1920 He is a member of the Zimbler Sinfonietta. He has four sons, ranging in age from seven to 20. His instrument is a Gand Pere, made in 1840.

Marcel Lafosse, trumpet. Of a French family of musicians, he was a first prize winner at the Paris Conservatory in 1914. He was soloist with the Opera Comique and the Concerts Colonne under Koussevitzky, who invited him to the BSO in 1926. He is now professor at the New England and Boston Conservatories. He enjoys fishing and teaching Belotte.

Alfred Krips, assistant concertmaster. Born in Berlin, he studied violin with Willy Hess at the Berlin Academy of Music, later playing first violin in the Berlin State Opera House under Walter, Furtwangler, Richard Strauss and Klemperer. He toured Europe as a chamber music player, as soloist and with Edwin Fischer's chamber orchestra. Joining the BSO in 1934, he teaches at the New England Conservatory.

Robert Karol, viola. A cousin of Norman Carol, he is fond of riding a motorcycle. On the orchestra's European tour he and his wife motorcycled through Holland. He was born in Allentown, Pa. He has played with the Little Orchestra Society of New York and Saidenberg's Little Symphony of New York. He joined the BSO two seasons ago. He is a former Tanglewood student. He likes to play golf.

Born in Aix-les-Bains, France, he studied at the National Conservatory in Paris, winning first medals in solfeggio at the age of 10 and in violin under Touche at 14, with first prize in violin at 17. He studied with Camille Chevillard, D'Indy And Enesco. At 18 he was appointed assistant concertmaster of the Concerts Straram and later concertmaster of other orchestras. Before coming to America he won the first competition conducted by the Association of the Former First Prizes of the National Paris Conservatory.

Walter G. Macdonald, French horn. A New Englander, born in Watertown, he attended Boston University and the New England Conservatory. He came to the BSO in 1932. He claims no hobbies; has two boys, aged 5 and 14. Although he started studying the trumpet at the Conservatory, he changed to the French horn because its softer tone appealed to him.

Minot Beale, first violin. One of the young American musicians who joined the orchestra in 1927, he was born in Rockland, where he still lives in the ancestral home of his family who were original settlers. His father was a pianist, who taught his son. In World War I he played the slide trombone at the Newport Naval Training Station.

Vincent J. Mauricci, viola. Born in Boston, he attended the Music School and on a viola scholarship at the New England Conservatory with Faurel, Primrose and dePasquale. He won prizes in the Herald-Traveler contest at the age of 15 and a scholarship in the National Orchestral Association under Leon Barzin. He was a member of the original American Youth Orchestra that toured South America under Stokowski.

TIGHT BINDING

S. [illegible], first violin. Born In [illegible] he studied at the Paris Conservatory, winning first prize in solfege in 1911 and in violin in 1914. He joined the BSO in 1926. He plays a Cremona instrument dated 1791. 1791. He studied in Paris, where he was taken at the age of three, under Alfred Brun, Edward Nadeau, Jaques Thibaud and Marsik. His daughter is a student at Wellesley.

Olivia Luetcke, harp. Born in New York City, she is one of five children who are musicians. Attending school at Scituate, she began to play the harp at the age of six. She studied four years with the National Orchestral Association and with Bernard Zighera, BSO harpist. She has soloed with the San Antonio Symphony and at the Pops concerts. She joined the BSO last year, and is its only woman member. A breeder of German Shepherds, she is the owner of Champion Ophelia Greenfair.

Jerome Lipson, viola. Born and educated in Boston, he is one of the first Tanglewood graduates to play solo viola. Because he likes to travel, he went to England last year to look over the possibilities for accommodation for the BSO before its European tour. He is a member of the orchestra's elected committee. He was formerly with the Indianapolis Orchestra. In World War II he played with Glen Miller's Air Force Band. He joined the BSO in 1947. His hobby is golf.

George Madsen, piccolo. He has been called a "North Shore Scandinavian" because he was born in Gloucester and his father in Norway. He plays both the flute and the piccolo. His piccolo helps to characterize the BSO. It is said that he can make even the highest note sound sweet. He is a flute specialist and collector, and can make one. He once worked in a flute factory

Harold L. Meek, French horn. Attending Denison University and Curtis Institute of Music, he graduated from Eastman School of Music. He taught theory and orchestration and conducted the orchestra and band for three years at Shurtleff College, Alton, Ill. Joining the BSO in 1943, he arranges works for woodwind ensembles. Theatre and photography are his recreation.

Saverio Messina, second violin. Born in Boston, he has a master's degree from Boston University. He joined the BSO in 1920 under Pierre Monteux. He has two boys, aged 14 and 18. Not content until he had an advanced college degree, he studied nights, while playing in the BSO, until he received an M.A. at Boston University.

Osbourne W. McConathy, French horn. Born in Chelsea, son of a music educator, he graduated from New York University, where he conducted the Glee Club, and attend the Juilliard Graduate School. He later conducted Symphony and opera in Newark, N.J. He became a member of the BSO in 1944. His recreation is research in Elizabethan music and the history of the horn and horn players.

Georges Edmond Moleux, principal double bass. Born in France, at the age of five he began to study solfeggio. At 12 he was studying double bass and clarinet, and at 20 he received the first prize at the Paris Conservatory for both instruments. He was first clarinetest at Monte Carlo and later principal double bassist of the Pasdeloup Concert in Paris. Invited to the BSO in 1930, he has been principal double bass since [illegible] Many outstanding double bassists have studied with him.

Rosario Mazzeo, bass clarinet. Growing up in Shrewsbury, he has lived near Boston all his life, studying music privately with Gaston Hamelin. He joined the BSO in 1933 to play the piccolo clarinet. He collects, designs and builds clarinets, but they are not his only interest. He says that his "life is centered indoors around music and outdoors around birds." He has an ornithological library of nearly 3000 volumes. When he travels, it is usually in quest of birds. Once he spent 30 days at an elevation of 13,000 feet in Colorado studying mountain birds. Last year he went to Labrador, and recently he was in the news for helping to make history with a Manx shearwater that he found off the coast of Scotland. He is a director of the Audubon Society. Important to the BSO is his position as orchestra personnel manager.

James Pappoutsakis, flute. Born in Cairo, Egypt, he came to Boston to the Latin School and the New England Conservatory. Joining the BSO in 1937, he plays with the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble and is on the faculty of the Conservatory and the Longy Schools.

Henry Portnoi, double bass. A native of Chelsea he studied violin under Nikolai Kaffman and bass at the Curtis Institute of Music, Philadelphia, under Torella. He played in the Indianapolis and Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestras, and with Stokowski in the Youth Orchestra, joining the BSO in 1943. He teaches at Boston University. He has two small children.

Leo Panasevich, second violin. He came to the BSO last year from the Monte Carlo Ballet Orchestra, in which his wife played the [illegible] At Tanglewood for his first Berkshire Festival, he spent the past few summers at Newcastle, N.H., where he and Mrs. Panasevich played in a summer group. In the Navy during World War I, he claims to have

CHARLES MUNCH, CONDUCTOR

Carlos Pinfield, first violin. A Bostonian by birth, he studied at the Royal Academy in Berlin, under Willy Hess, served with the armed forces in World War I and has conducted ensemble groups from the BSO. He has been guest conductor of the Pops orchestra at Symphony Hall. He teaches violin and conducts an amateur orchestra, doing gardening and woodworking in his spare time. His instrument is a Joseph Rocca, dated 1837.

Max Polster, percussion player. German-born, he taught himself, starting his professional career in 1901 and joining the BSO in 1923. With experience in leading European orchestras, he has played under Furtwangler, Muck, Lehar, Ziehrer and Monteux, Koussevitzky and Munch, and now is a member of the Pops and Esplanade Orchestras. He says that his hobby is "making and saving money."

Ernst Panenka, bassoon. Born in Vladimir Resnikoff, first violin. A native of Novgorod, Russia, son of musicians, he graduated from the Meister Schule in Vienna. Later he studied in Belgium. He was soloist with the London Philharmonic Orchestra and in Vienna. He was head of the Altman School of Music, joining the BSO in 1932. He has a violin made by Joannes Battista Guadagnini dated 1751, from the Walton collection His hobby is gardening.

Harry Dubbs, first violin. Born in Boston, he began to study violin at the age of five, later with Timothee Adamowski at the New England Conservatory and for many years with Felix Winternitz. A member of the faculty of Boston University, he is conductor of the Brookline Community Orchestra and conducts youth concerts with members of the BSO. His hobbies are photography and travel. He owns an Italian violin made by Panormio and plays an instrument made and given to him Kilton Vinal Smith, tuba. Born in Vinal Haven, Maine, for which he was named by his old New England family, he began the study of the trombone with Jacob Raichman, BSO principal trombone, at the age of 13. He later changed to the bass tuba. His hobby is refinishing furniture. He likes to buy an old piece and restore it to its original beauty. He has many pieces that he has picked up for restoration in his spare time.

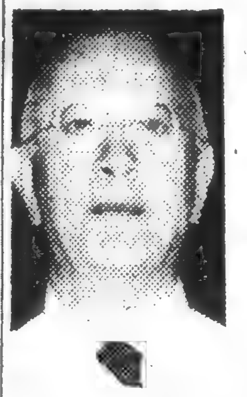
Ralph delSordo, second violin. A native of Flumeri, Italy, he studied with the famous Winternitz, Noack, Loeffler and Witek. He plays the mandolin or guitar when one is needed by the BSO. He teaches and in his spare time builds houses. He has a violin made by Vincenzo Postiglione in 1868.

Louis Speyer, English horn. French by birth, he is of a musical family, a first prize winner at the Paris Conservatory in 1911. He played in the first ballet and concert performances of Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring," coming to the United States with the French Army Band in 1918 for a three weeks' tour. He was awarded the Legion of Honor decoration in February, 1950, for "invaluable services to the dissemination of French culture." He is the leader of the Berkshire Woodwind Ensemble. Joining the BSO in 1919, he is a conductor and teacher.

James Stagliano, principal French horn. Born in Italy, he came to Detroit at the age of six. Of the third generation of musicians, mainly French horn players, he joined the Detroit Symphony Orchestra at the age of 16. He has since played with the orchestras of St. Louis, Chicago, Los Angeles and Cleveland and in 1946 joined the BSO. He likes to play golf, tennis and badminton.

Simon Sternburg, percussion.



Samuel Diamond, second violin. A native of Boston, of Lithuanian ancestry, he attended, the Boston public schools. After lessons in violin with his uncle at the age of eight, and later with Emanuel Fiedler, Felix Winternitz and Charles Loeffler, he became concertmaster for Victor Herbert in 1916. He traveled everywhere with him in 1916 and 1917, until he joined the BSO in 1918 under Monteux. He has two young children, a boy and a girl.

Gaston Elcus, first violin. A native of France, he won the first prize in violin at the Paris Conservatory. He was professor of advanced violin and chamber music in the Nadaud Conservatory, member of the committee of examinations and competitions at the Paris Conservatory, concermaster of the Opera Comique in Paris. He plays violins made by Carlo Antonio Tononi in Venice in 1717, by Vuellaume and by Chanok, famous French violin makers.

Irving Frankel, double bass. Son of an Austrian musician, he attended the Boston Conservatory. He joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1919 under Pierre Monteux. His hobbies are golf and swimming. When he came to this country at the age of 15 he was already well grounded in music, including harmony and composition as well as his instrument, the double bass. For recreation he writes music.

George Fourel, viola. Born in Grenoble, France, he attended the Lycee at Donai and Alencon. He won first prize in viola at the Paris Conservatory under Lafarge and studied orchestra under Vincent D'Indy. He entered the Lamoureux Symphony Orchestra in 1912 and the BSO nine years later. He teaches viola and string quartet at the New England Conservatory. He has Jean deVergie, oboe. A native of Marseille, France, he attended the conservatory there and in Paris, where he won first prize in oboe. After playing first oboe at the Paris Opera, he joined the BSO. In his spare time he makes oboe reeds. He teaches privately.

William Waterhouse, second violin. The only Canadian in the orchestra, he was born in Winnipeg of a musical family. Graduating from Ravenscourt at the age of 15, he won cross-country competitions in his last three years. He holds the degrees of bachelor and master of music from Boston University. He won many prizes for chamber music, violin and string quartet and piano. Among his teachers was Sir Henry Wood, who taught his father 40 years before. Serving almost six years in the Canadian Army, he played in London under outstanding British conductors, but not under Sir Thomas Beecham until he joined the BSO last year. He plays in solo and chamber music and runs an automobile agency in Norwood. His violin, made by Joseph Rocca in Genoa in 1856, is a very fine one, loaned to him for an indefinite period.

Gottfried Joseph Wilfinger, first violin. Born in Allentown, Pa., he attended the New England Conservatory for two years, winning the Philadelphia Youth Contest in 1948, and playing as soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra. He has held scholarships at Tanglewood and the Conservatory. He joined the BSO in 1950.

George Zazofsky, first violin. He was born in Boston, graduated from the Curtis Institute and was twice chosen to represent New England in the All-American Youth Orchestra that toured South America, Canada and the United States with Stokowski. He was concertmaster of the Curtis tended the Institute of the History of Arts in Petrograd, and the Conservatory of Music in Berlin, received a bachelor of music and master of arts degree at Boston University and expects chestra, studying under Professor Strobl, bassoon soloist in the Vienna Opera, until he was engaged by the Volksoper in his native city. He joined the BSO in 1930. His hobbies are mountain climbing, photographer and flying model airplanes, at which he has unusual success.

---

Festival concerts

Force Band in Paris and traveled with it about Europe. He has just built a new home in Needham. He plays in the Pops and Esplanade Orchestras, and is at Tanglewood for the Berkshire Festival concerts in the Music has written a textbook that has a high reputation among percussion players. Two members of the Concert Gebouw, on the orchestra's recent European tour, sought him out to express their appreciation for his "Progressive Exercises in Drumming," as did members of the Israeli Orchestra when they played bands while he waited to join the BSO, which was his ambition. He played in Ruby Newman's Orchestra and did much radio and other dance orchestra playing in New York. He was appointed to his pictured in the book, "How Many Gaudagninis" by Doving.

Alfred Zighera, cello. Born in Paris, he studied at the Paris Conservatory, starting at the age of 10. Playing in the Koussevitzky Concerts in Paris, he joined the BSO in 1925. A teacher at the New England

ITALO-AMERICANS IN THE BOSTON SYMPHONY

JOSEPH DE PASQUALE, violist: Born in Philadelphia of a musical family, he was first taught by his father, a professional violinist. His course at the Curtis Institute was interrupted by the war, during which he played in the Marine Band and Symphony Orchestra. With the latter he often appeared at the White House to play for state dinners, including those for Churchill and DeGaulle. Appointed first violist with the BSO at the age of 27, he was the youngest to occupy that position in a major orchestra. He is married to niece of Mrs. Koussevitzky, on whose estate they live with two daughters.

VINCENT J. MAURICCI, viola: Born in Boston he attended the Music School and on a viola scholarshipat the New England Conservatory with Fourel, Primrose and De Pasquale. He won prizes in the Herald Traveler contest at the age of 15 and a scholarship in the National Orchestra Association under Leo Barzin. He was a member of the original American Youth Orchestra that toured South America under Stokowski.

JAMES STAGLIANO, principal French Horn: Born in Italy he came to Detroit at the age of six. Of the third generation of musicians, mainly French horn players, he joined the Detroit Symphony Orchestra at the age of sixteen.

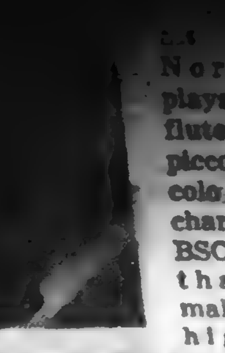
ITALO-AMERICANS IN THE BOSTON SYMPHONY

JOSEPH DE PASQUALE, violist: Born in Philadelphia of a musical family, he was first taught by his father, a professional violinist. His course at the Curtis Institute was interrupted by the war, during which he played in the Marine Band and Symphony Orchestra. With the latter he often appeared at the White House to play for state dinners, including those for Churchill and DeGaulle. Appointed first violist with the BSO at the age of 27, he was the youngest to occupy that position in a major orchestra. He is married to niece of Mrs. Koussevitzky, on whose estate they live with two daughters.

VINCENT J. MAURICCI, viola: Born in Boston he attended the Music School and on a viola scholarshipat the New England Conservatory with Fourel, Primrose and De Pasquale. He won prizes in the Herald Traveler contest at the age of 15 and a scholarship in the National Orchestra Association under Leo Barzin. He was a member of the original American Youth Orchestra that toured South America under Stokowski.

JAMES STAGLIANO, principal French Horn: Born in Italy he came to Detroit at the age of six. Of the third generation of musicians, mainly French horn players, he joined the Detroit Symphony Orchestra at the age of sixteen.

TIGHT BINDING



as father in Norway. He plays both the flute and the piccolo. His piccolo helps to characterize the BSO. It is said that he can make even the highest note sound sweet. He is a flute special-at 20 he received the first prize at the Paris Conservatory for both instruments. He was first clarinetest at Monte Carlo and later principal double bassist of the Pasdeloup Concert in Paris. Invited to the BSO in 1930, he has been principal double bass since Ballet Orchestra, in which his wife played the French horn. At Tanglewood for his first Berkshire Festival, he spent the past few summers at Newcastle, N.H., where he and Mrs. Panasevich played in a sumperience in leading European orchestras, he has played under Furtwangler, Muck, Lehar, Ziehrer and Monteux, Koussevitzky and Munch, and now is a member of the Pops and Esplanade Orchestras. He says that his hobby is "making and saving money."

New England Conservatory and for many years with Felix Winternitz. A member of the faculty of Boston University, he is conductor of the Brookline Community Orchestra and conducts youth concerts with members of the BSO. His hobbies are photography and travel. He owns an Italian violy French horn players, he joined the Detroit Symphony Orchestra at the age of 16. He has since played with the orchestras of St. Louis, Chicago, Los Angeles and Cleveland and in 1946 joined the BSO. He likes to play golf, tennis and badminton.

and Alencon. He won first prize in viola at the Paris Conservatory under Lafarge and studied orchestra under Vincent D'Indy. He entered the Lamoureux Symphony Orchestra in 1912 and the BSO nine years later. He teaches viola and string quartet at the New

George [illegible] was born in graduated from the Curtis Institute and was twice chosen to represent New England in the All-American Youth Orchestra that toured South America, Canada and the United States with Stokowski. He was concertmas-itute of the History of Arts in Petrograd, and the Conservatory of Music in Berlin, received a bachelor of music and master of arts degree at Boston University and expects expects to earn a Ph. D. at Harvard in 1954. He conducted the Cecelia Society Chorus of Boston and led and directed the Army Air Force Symphony Orchestra in the war. He came to the BSO in 1947. In his leisure he writes, plays chess and rides.

---

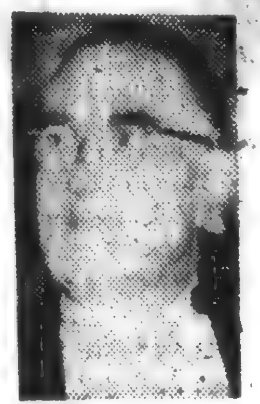
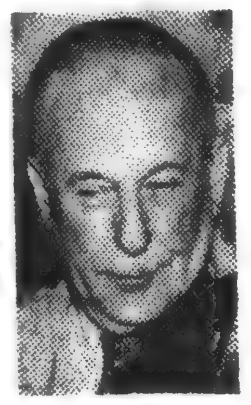
L. Marjollet, cello. A Frenchman, he served in World War I, joining the BSO in 1920 under Monteux. Born in Chalons-sur-Marne, France, his mother was a singer. He entered the Paris Conservatory, studying with Professor Pessard. He spent four years in World War I. He toured through France and Mexico before coming to the BSO. Handy with tools, he has made furniture for his house.



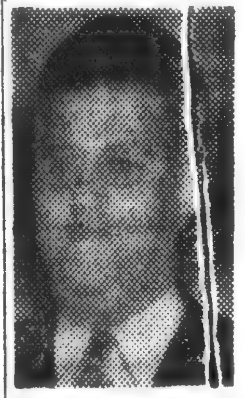
Pierre Mayer, second violin. Born in Paris, he studied under the famous Andre Tourret and Andre Caplet. He played with the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande of Geneva, the Societe des Concerts du Conservatoire and the Concerts Straram of Paris. He joined the BSO in 1925.



Samuel Houston Mayes, principal cello. Born in St. Louis, his mother was a musician from Atlanta, Ga., his father was a surgeon and his grandfather, for whom he was named, was a full-blooded Cherokee Indian. At the age of four, on the advice of Will Rogers, his father's first cousin, he was given a small cello and started to study. At the age of eight he appeared as soloist with the St. Louis Orchestra and at 12 he entered the Curtis Institute, joining the Philadelphia Orchestra in 1936 and advancing to first desk three years later.

Laszlo James Nagy, second violin. Born in New York City of Hungarian parentage, he studied privately piano, violin and theory. When very young he was concertmaster of the famous St. Louis Philharmonic Orchestra, made up of amateur and semi-professional musicians. Before coming to the BSO he was for 15 years first violin and sometimes viola with the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra. He writes short stories that often appear in magazines. He has four young children.

Michael Nieland, cellist. Philadelphia born, son and brother of musicians, he studied under Stephen Deak of Curtis Institute and Dican Alexanian of the Peabody Institute, whose assistant he was. For three years he sang baritone with the Philadel Grand Opera Company and played with the Baltimore and National Symphonies and the Pro Musica and Harewood Quartets. His hobbies are tennis, fishing and skating, repairing old cellos and looking for a fine old Italian instrument.



Willis Page, associate principal double bass. He was born in Rochester, N.Y. Graduating from Eastman School of Music in that city, he was the first student to receive a performer's degree in two instruments — double bass and tuba. An astronomist in his leisure time, he owns a 54-inch telescope with a six-inch mirror.

Bernard Parronchi, cello. Born in New York, he studied in Italy, France and in Spain under the great Pablo Casals, Andre Servato. He joined the BSO under Serge Koussavitzyk. He has given recitals in principal European cities and three at Town Hall, New York. He likes to fish.

Boaz Piller, contra bass. Born in The Hague, Holland, he came to New Orleans in 1910 with the famous French Opera Company after graduating from the Royal Conservatory in The Hague. At the age of 27 he joined the faculty of the New England Conservatory, the BSO in 1916 and play for 29 years at Crawford House, New Hampshire, in the summer. He has played chamber music with Albert Einstein, the scientist. Pursing his hobby of collecting musical autographs, he has 450 and 100 musical caricatures. He owns a complete set of prints of the 57 Musical Daumiers.

Joseph A. Orosz, trombone. Born in Toledo, Ohio, son of a clarinet player, he took a business course before graduating from the Boston Conservatory with highest honors in trombone. At nine he played with the Hungarian Gypsies and at 11 he was organist of his church. He teaches privately and at the Boston Conservatory. His bobbies are photography and mountain climbing. He plays a trombone made especially for him.

the school orchestra, studying under Professor Strobl, bassoon soloist in the Vienna Opera, until he was engaged by the Volksoper in his native city. He joined the BSO in 1930. His hobbies are [illegible], photographer and flying model airplanes, at which he has unusual success. He carried colored film all over Europe on the orchestra's tour, making a photographic log of the trip.

Sheldon Rotenberg, second violin. Born in Attleboro, he holds an A.B. and an M.A. degree from Tufts. He studied at the Sorbonne in Paris and with Winternitz, Enesco, Thibaud, Keller and Burgin, with two seasons at Tanglewood. A Paris recital was sponsored by the Baroness de Rothschild. His career, interrupted by five years of military service in England, France and Germany, includes appearances with the Pops and Indianapolis Orchestras and the Boston String Quartet. He has a certified Guarnerius (Joseph) instrument, dated 1710.

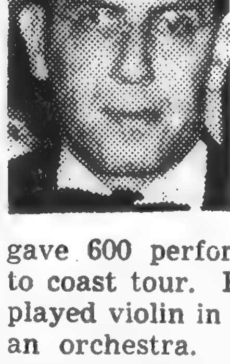
Jacob Raichman, principal trombone. Born in Vitebsk, Russia, he studied at the St. Petersburg Conservatory, receiving a scholarship as "an exceptionally gifted student" and receiving the diploma of "Free Artist." He won a contest with 22 applicants for the position of first trombonist at the Imperial Boishoi Theatre in Moscow, appearing as soloist. With the BSO since 1927, he teaches. Many of his students have important positions in major American orchestras. His hobby is machinery.

Roger Schermanski, first violin. A Parisian by birth, he won first prize at the Paris Conservatory and played solos with the National Orchestra of France and the French Radio. He joined the BSO in 1950 under Charles Munch. He joined the BSO in 1947. He is married to Irene, daughter of Jacob Raichman, first trombone of the orchestra.

the Army Air Force Band in Paris and traveled with it about Europe. He has just built a new home in Needham. He plays in the Pops and Esplanade Orchestras, and is at Tanglewood for the Berkshire Festival concerts in the Music Shed.

Herman Silberman, first violin. Born in Boston, of a musical family, he studied at the Longy School and in Europe. At the age of 14 he appeared in Symphony Hall as soloist. A member of the New Art String Quartet of New York, he played in the WOR string Symphonietta under Wallenstein and conducted radio broadcasts over two networks, as well as a series of Boston concerts. He became a member of the BSO in 1944. He is currently a member of the Stradivarius Quartet.

Charles Smith, percussion. Born in Newark, N.J., he was a special student at the Juilliard School of Music and studied with Gene Krupa, celebrated jazz player. For 39 weeks he played under Alexander Smallens in the road production of Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess," which gave 600 performances in a coast to coast tour. His wife, Josephine, played violin in Spitalny's all-woman orchestra. He teaches at the New England Conservatory and Boston University College of Music.



about which he has written a textbook that has a high reputation among percussion players. Two members of the Concert Gebouw, on the orchestra's recent European tour, sought him out to express their appreciation for his "Progressive Exercises in Drumming," as did member of the Israeli Orchestra when they played in Boston. He has a business interest in a music store not far from Symphony Hall.

Lloyd Stonestreet, second violin. He comes of an old Yankee family who lived in Revere when he was born. He studied under private teachers in New York and at the New England Conservatory, joining the BSO in 1920. He has a business interest in a haberdashery shop at Harvard Square. He is the only musician in the orchestra who is a Harvard graduate.

Roger Louis Voisin, principal trumpet. Born in Angers, France, he attended the English High School in Boston. His grandfather was a musician, as was his father, under whom he studied at the New England Conservatory and whom he succeeded as principal trumpet player with the BSO. He is married to a Southern girl. They have a two-year-old son and a six-month-old daughter. He teaches solfege at the Berkshire Music Center and takes pictures in his spare time.

bands while he waited to join the BSO, which was his ambition. He played in Ruby Newman's Orchestra and did much radio and other dance orchestra playing in New York. He was appointed to his present position two seasons ago by Charles Munch, the musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Rolland Sylvester Taplay, first violin. Born in Hudson, he studied violin with Felix Winternitz and saxophone with Andrew Jacobsen, joining the BSO in 1920. He conducts various school and business men's amateur orchestras and plays solo. He likes to hunt, fish, play bridge and experiment in the measure of musical aptitude. He has three children, more than the average for BSO members.

Roman Szulz, timpani. Born in Warsaw, he came to the United States in 1935, when he became a member of the BSO, succeeding the great trombonist, Ritter. He learned enough English on his way across the ocean to get about Boston until he picked up some more. He played first timpani for almost every great conductor in Europe. His two sons are also musicians. Walter plays the trombone and Andrew the piano in popular dance orchestras.

Karl Zeise, cello. A painter as well as a musician, he became interested in both arts at the age of eight. He learned to play the cello because his uncle left his about the house. He started his career as a pictorial artist when he sketched scenes near his family's home in Needham and their summer cottage on the Kennebec River near Demariscotta, Me. While playing cello with the Philadelphia Orchestra he studied oil painting at the Academy of Fine Arts. His exhibit in the Tanglewood reception room last summer included scenes of the sea and of Lenox.

violin dated Milan, 1702, which is pictured in the book, "How Many Gaudagninis" by Doving.

Alfred Zighera, cello. Born in Paris, he studied at the Paris Conservatory, starting at the age of 10. Playing in the Koussevitzky Concerts in Paris, he joined the BSO in 1925. A teacher at the New England Conservatory and Wellesley College, he plays in the Boston String Quartet and the Boston Society of Ancient Instruments, in which he plays viola da gamba. He is a member of the Tanglewood faculty.

Bernard Zighera, principal harp. Born in Paris of a Romanian father and Polish mother, he began to study piano at the age of 8 and harp at 12, winning prizes in both at the Paris Conservatory. He followed his brother to the BSO in 1926. He founded and conducted a series of concerts by a chamber orchestra. He teaches at the New England Conservatory and Tanglewood. He often plays piano with the orchestra.

Manuel Zung, second violin. Born in Russia, he graduated with honors from the New England Consrvatory, where he studied under Eugene Gruenberg. Joining the BSO in 1925, he is a member of the Zimbler Sinfonietta. He likes to play bridge. His instrument is a Gagliano.

Joseph Zimbler, cello. Born in Pilsen, Czechoslovakia, he comes of a family of professional musicians. Three uncles were members of the BSO and Arthur Fiedler, Pops and Esplanade conductor, is his cousin. He studied in Pilsen, Prague and Berlin and filled solo and chamber music engagements in various European countries. Since coming to the BSO he organized a string quartet and the Zimbler Sinfonietta, playing in concert and recording. His hobby is playing chamber music and collecting coins and stamps. He has a collection of old cello bows and an instrument made by Joseph Ingliano of Naples in 1760.

Berkshire Eagl. July 22, 1952

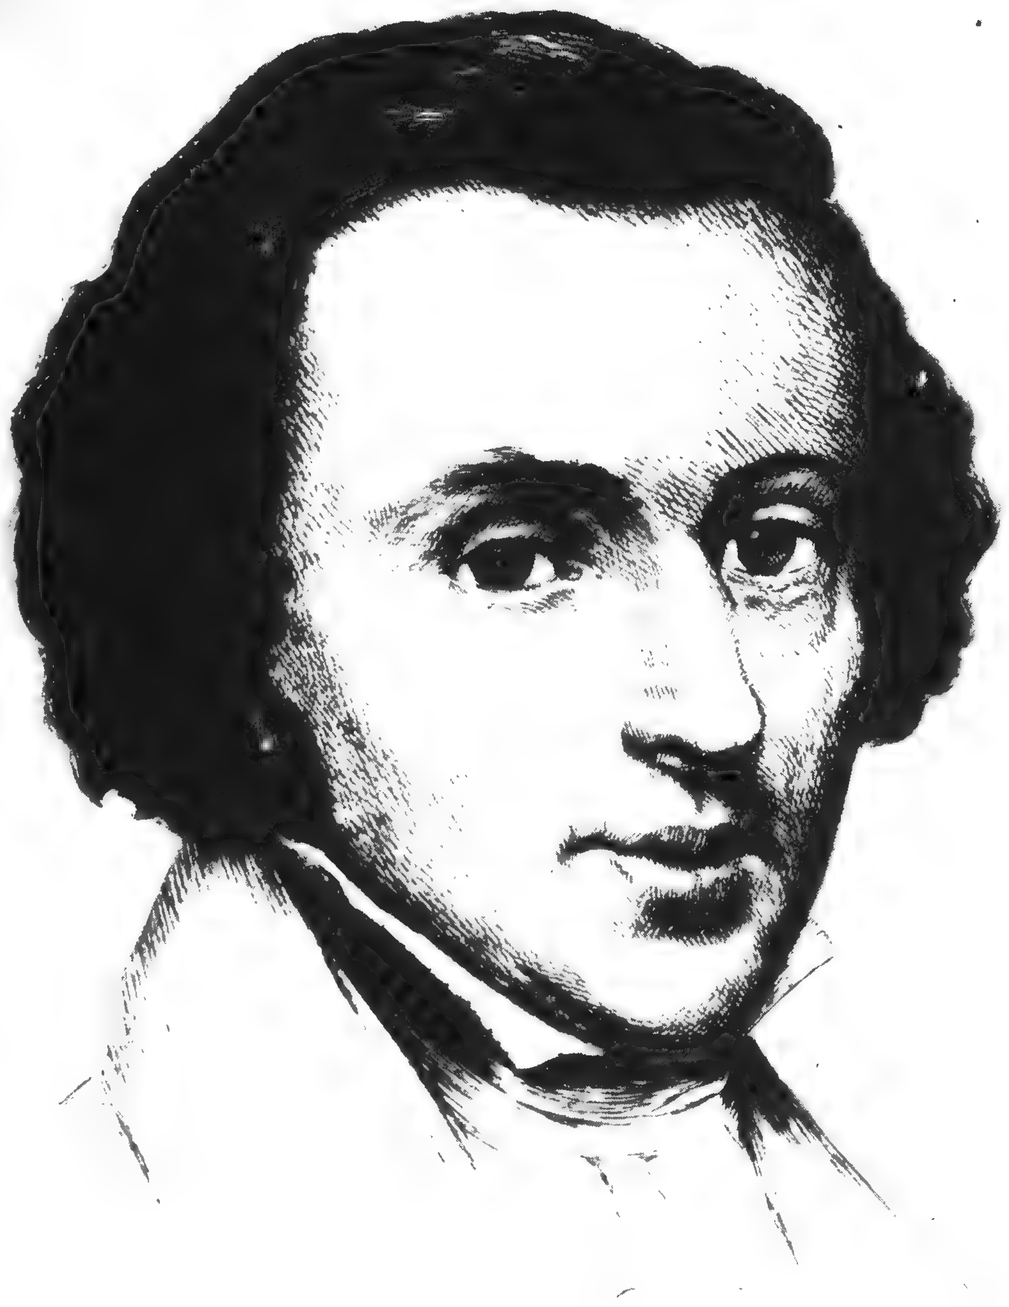
BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

Etude

the music magazine

FEBRUARY 1953
40 CENTS
$3.50 A YEAR



In this Issue . . .

Ability and Training
Ezio Pinza

"Your Musical Dawn Is at Hand"
Boris Goldovsky

Security for Music Teachers
James Francis Cooke

Midland Makes Its Own Music
T. Gordon Harrington

Gershwin Is Here to Stay
Mario Braggiotti

The Healthy Habit of Doubting
Jan Smeterlin

Ten Years at Tanglewood
Ralph Berkowitz

Who Are the World's Greatest Piano Teachers?
Doron K. Antrim

FRÉDÉRIC FRANCOIS CHOPIN
Born Feb. 22, 1810
See Composer of the Month, Page 3

Denver, Colo.
Post
4/28/53

Orchestra To Provide Auditions

Auditions for the Berkshire Music Center will be held by the Boston Symphony orchestra when it comes to Denver for a concert appearance May 13 in the city auditorium.

This is the summer school of music maintained by the orchestra at Tanglewood, Mass., in connection with the Berkshire Music Festival.

Denver is one of the cities on the orchestra's cross-country tour where such instrumental auditions have been scheduled.

The auditions will be offered at 6 p. m. May 13, in the city auditorium. Anyone wishing to be heard must register his name and the name of his instrument before May 12 at the office of the Denver Symphony society in the Kittredge building.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS

APR 11 1953

Students May Audition for Tanglewood

While the Boston Symphony Orchestra is in Dallas for its April 30 concert at the State Fair Auditorium, it will hold auditions for students applying for admission and scholarships at the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lennox, Mass.

Auditions will be held at 6 p.m. April 30, a Thursday, at the auditorium. Student applicants should leave their names and the name of the instrument they play, before

---

BOSTON, MASS.
TRAVELER

APR 9 - 1953

BERKSHIRE AUDITIONS

Auditions for young musicians seeking admission and scholarships at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school in Tanglewood, Lenox, will be held at Symphony Hall tomorrow at 10 A. M.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
CALL BULLETIN

1953

Set Symphony Auditions Here

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will visit San Francisco for concerts in the Opera House on May 7 and 9, will hold instrumental auditions for students applying for admission and scholarships at the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Candidates for audition, to be held at 6 p. m. May 9 in the Opera House, may contact the San Francisco Symphony office at the Opera House, UN. 1-4008, prior to May 8, giving names and instruments played.

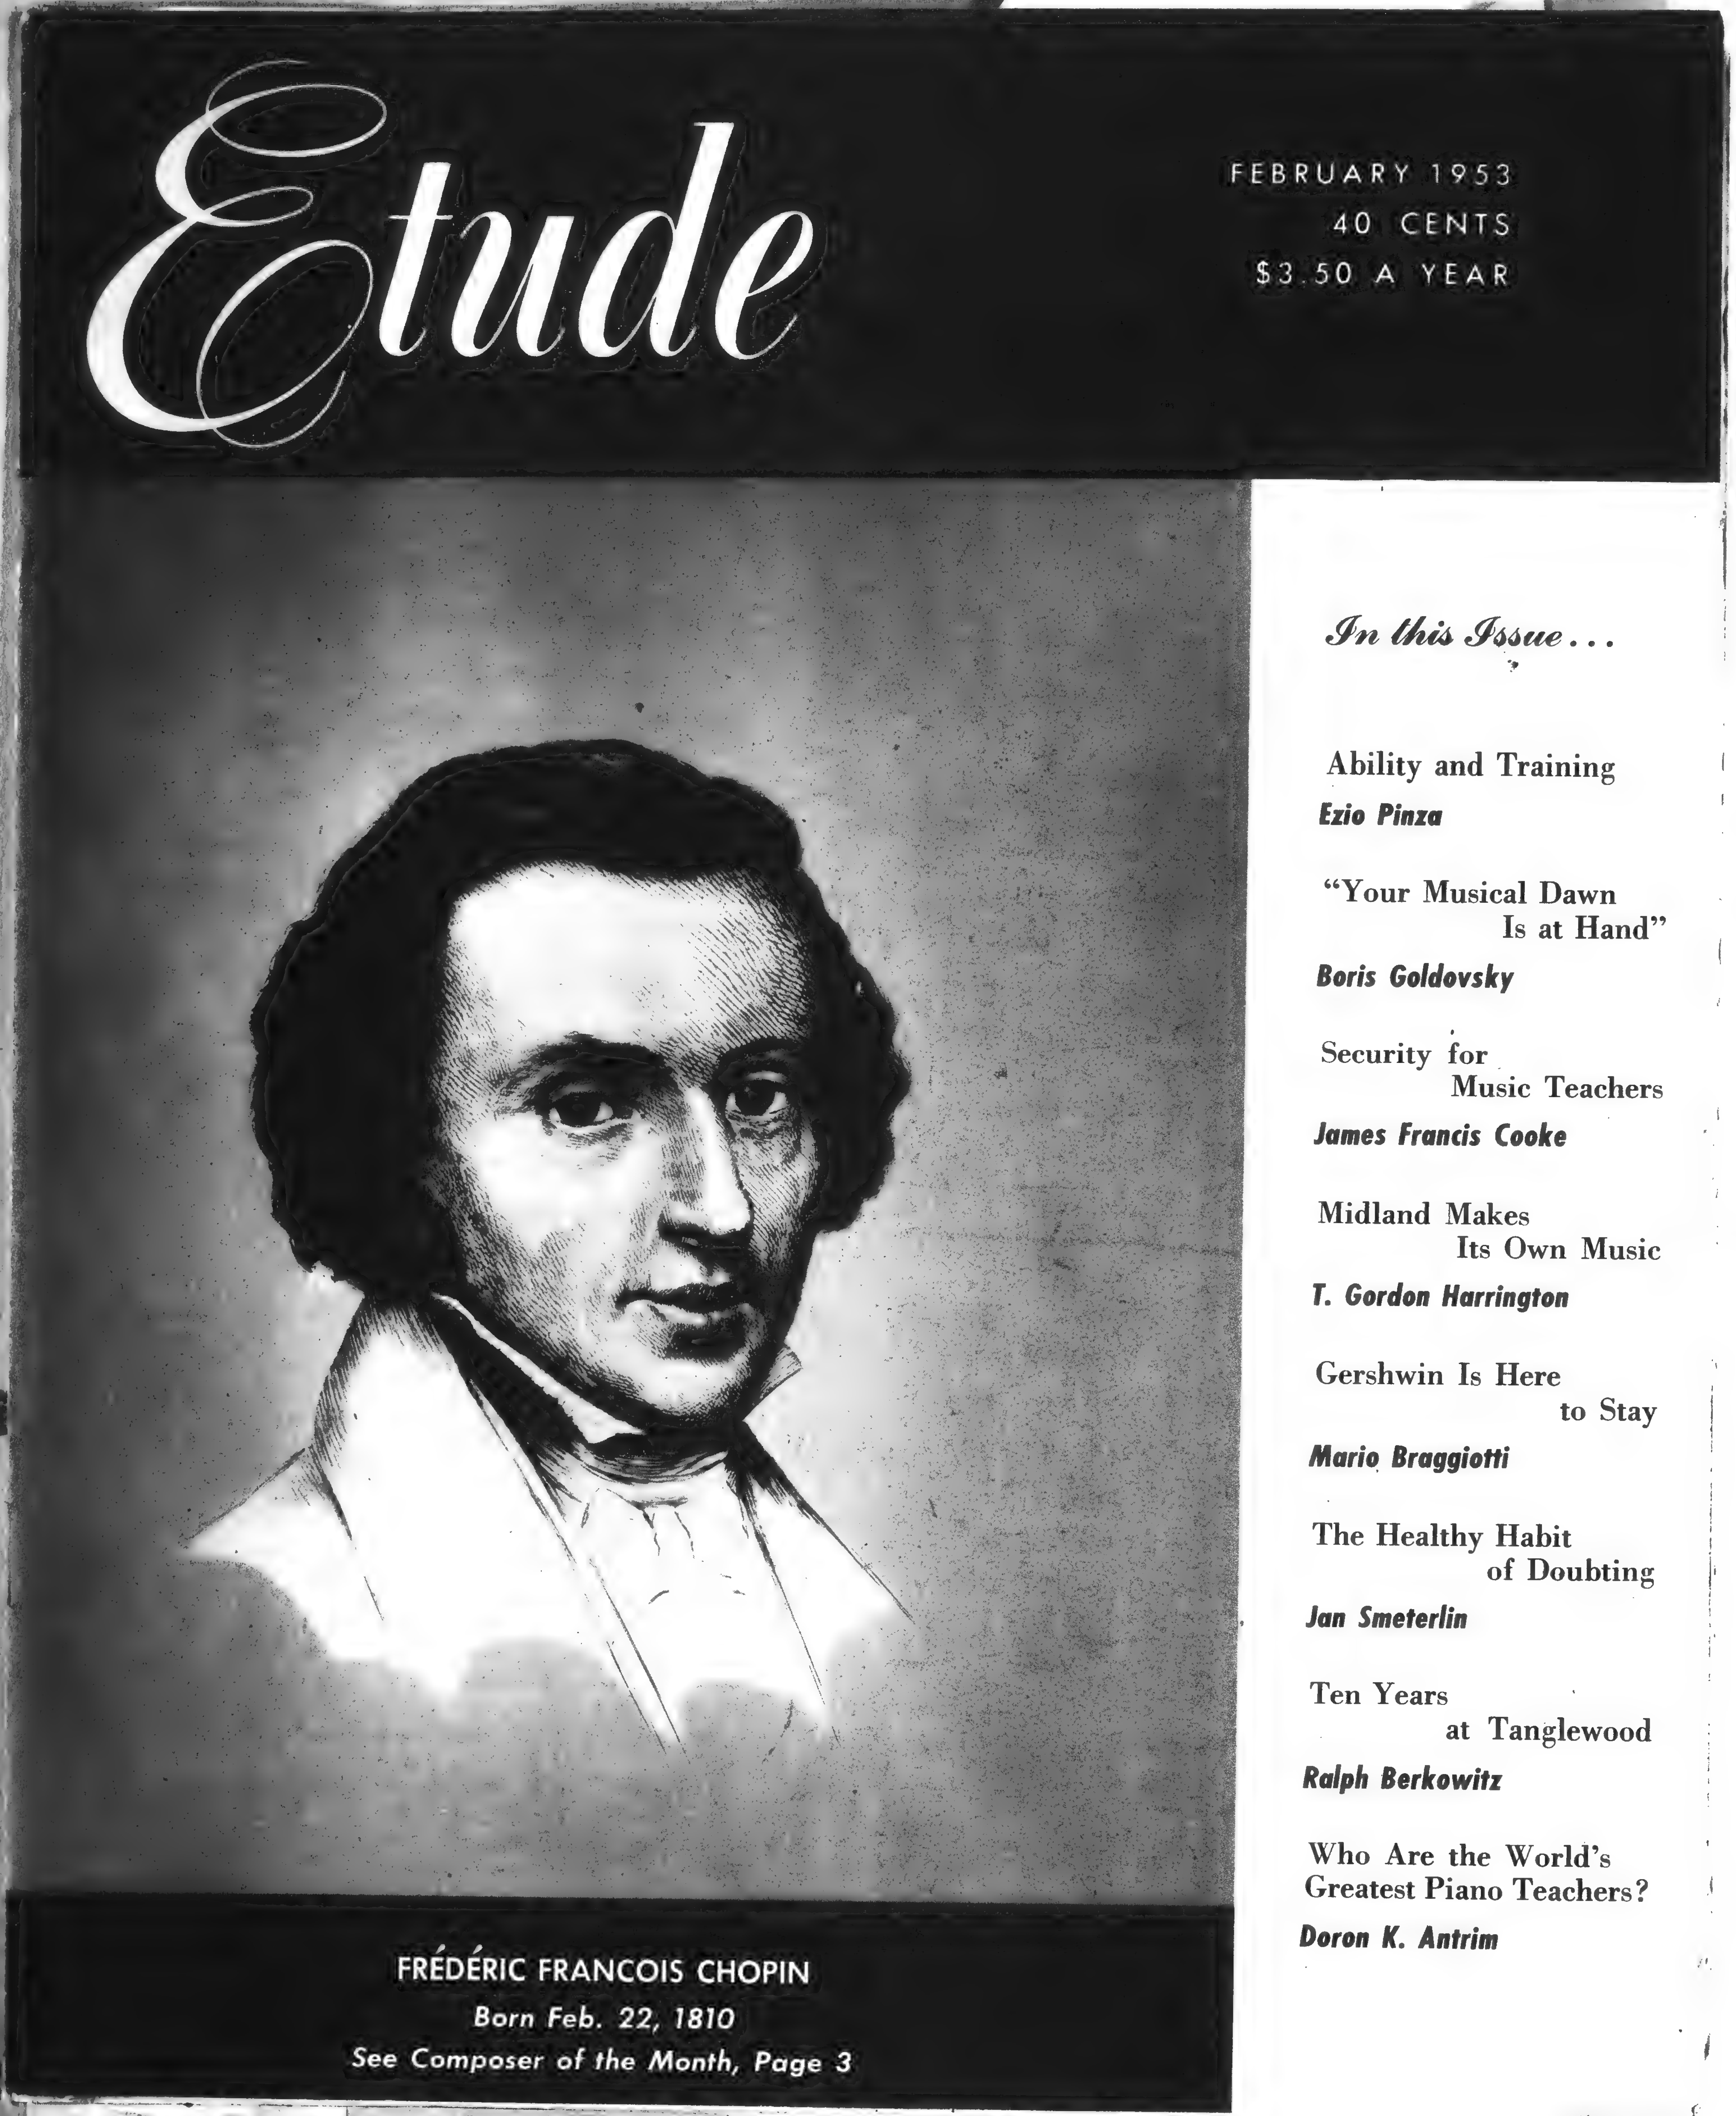
The auditions are open only to performers on orchestral instruments and the piano. Accompanists are not required.

DALLAS, TEX.
TIMES HERALD
AP

Boston Orchestra To Audition Here

While the Boston Symphony Orchestra is in Dallas for its April 30 concert in State Fair Auditorium, it will hold instrumental auditions for students applying for admission and scholarships at the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lennox, Mass.

Students who wish to take an audition should list their names and their instrument before April 29 with auditorium officials.



Etude

FEBRUARY 1953
40 CENTS
$3.50 A YEAR

In this Issue . . .

Ability and Training
Ezio Pinza

"Your Musical Dawn Is at Hand"
Boris Goldovsky

Security for Music Teachers
James Francis Cooke

Midland Makes Its Own Music
T. Gordon Harrington

Gershwin Is Here to Stay
Mario Braggiotti

The Healthy Habit of Doubting
Jan Smeterlin

Ten Years at Tanglewood
Ralph Berkowitz

Who Are the World's Greatest Piano Teachers?
Doron K. Antrim

FRÉDÉRIC FRANCOIS CHOPIN
Born Feb. 22, 1810
See Composer of the Month, Page 3

Denver, Colo.
Post
4/28/53

Orchestra To Provide Auditions

Auditions for the Berkshire Music Center will be held by the Boston Symphony orchestra when it comes to Denver for a concert appearance May 13 in the city auditorium.

This is the summer school of music maintained by the orchestra at Tanglewood, Mass., in connection with the Berkshire Music Festival.

Denver is one of the cities on the orchestra's cross-country tour where such instrumental auditions have been scheduled.

The auditions will be offered at 8 p. m. May 13, in the city auditorium. Anyone wishing to be heard must register his name and the name of his instrument before May 12 at the office of the Denver Symphony society in the Kittredge building.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
APR 11 1953

Students May Audition for Tanglewood

While the Boston Symphony Orchestra is in Dallas for its April 30 concert at the State Fair Auditorium, it will hold auditions for students applying for admission and scholarships at the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lennox, Mass.

Auditions will be held at 6 p.m. April 30, a Thursday, at the auditorium. Student applicants should leave their names and the name of the instrument they play, before

---

BOSTON, MASS.
TRAVELER
APR 9 - 1953

BERKSHIRE AUDITIONS

Auditions for young musicians seeking admission and scholarships at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school in Tanglewood, Lenox, will be held at Symphony Hall tomorrow at 10 A. M.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
CALL BULLETIN
[illegible] 1953

Set Symphony Auditions Here

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will visit San Francisco for concerts in the Opera House on May 7 and 9, will hold instrumental auditions for students applying for admission and scholarships at the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Candidates for audition, to be held at 6 p. m. May 9 in the Opera House, may contact the San Francisco Symphony office at the Opera House, UN. 1-4008, prior to May 8, giving names and instruments played.

The auditions are open only to performers on orchestral instruments and the piano. Accompanists are not required.

DALLAS, TEX.
TIMES HERALD
APR [illegible]

Boston Orchestra To Audition Here

While the Boston Symphony Orchestra is in Dallas for its April 30 concert in State Fair Auditorium, it will hold instrumental auditions for students applying for admission and scholarships at the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lennox, Mass.

Students who wish to take an audition should list their names and their instrument before April 29 with auditorium officials.

[117]

The Dean of the Berkshire Music Center gives a highly interesting behind-the-scene view of the details involved in getting 400 students lined up for their summer musical experiences.

by RALPH BERKOWITZ

Ten Years at Tanglewood

AT NINE O'CLOCK on a Monday morning last July, some 400 music students from all corners of the earth began a six week session of study at Tanglewood—a place-name which has achieved more fame than any other musical center in our country. Tanglewood, with its literary associations going back for a century, has now become a source of vital interest to students of music in Ankara, Rio de Janeiro, Tel-Aviv, and Los Angeles. At no time in America's musical growing-up has a school accomplished so much so quickly, nor have influences made themselves so apparent as those emanating from Tanglewood's Berkshire Music Center.

The Berkshire Music Center, Serge Koussevitzky's name for the music school he founded in association with the Berkshire Festival, which had begun the Boston Symphony Orchestra summer concerts in the Berkshire Hills a few years earlier, has recently completed its tenth anniversary session.

It may be interesting to share a behind-the-scene view of what happens in order to get 400 students to begin their summer of musical experience on that Monday in early July. Work on the 10th session began directly after the last concert of the Berkshire Festival more than a year ago. Soon after the 10,000 listeners' applause had stopped reverberating in the great Shed, while the Boston Symphony musicians were slowly packing their travel trunks and crews began their usual after-concert cleaning-up of Tanglewood's vast rolling lawns, the school's Faculty Board met in the Library for the last time that summer. This meeting of Charles Munch who was to become the Music Center's director, with Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Boris Goldovsky, William Kroll, Hugh Ross, Richard Burgin, Thomas Perry, the executive secretary, and myself, consisted of a critical estimate of the school's work and a man by man platform of what ought to be done for the following summer's musical planning.

It is necessary to understand that music study at Tanglewood does not consist of getting lessons in voice or on one's instrument. It was Koussevitzky's view that qualified young musicians should come together for ensemble work of a type which no private teacher or conservatory could offer. So that from the numerous chamber-music groups up through the larger choruses, the opera productions and the student symphony orchestra, the young musician at Tanglewood is constantly in a milieu which his winter study is not likely to afford him. The summer's work is, therefore, in no sense a form of competition with private or conservatory study, but rather a pendant which broadens the future musician's horizon.

The Berkshire Music Center's five departments each in their way offer this type of music-making. Department One is the chamber music and orchestral division of the school.

An oboe student in Cleveland, let us say, has heard of Tanglewood and wants to come there to play in the orchestra. He writes to Symphony Hall in Boston, where each mail from November on brings queries and requests for acceptance. Application forms are sent along with word that an audition committee from the Berkshire Music Center will be in Cleveland's Severance Hall on April 17th from 1 to 4 o'clock. As the weeks go by oboists in Chicago, New York, Tulsa and Dallas also apply. With one of the letters will come a recommendation from a 1946 conducting student at Tanglewood that this boy in Kansas City is a terrific talent and looks like a coming first oboe for any major orchestra. Several former oboe students' applications also roll in toward spring and a few European students apply as well.

Guileless in spirit and armed with forms, audition reports and lots of orchestral music, a committee leaves Boston in April for a few weeks of auditions in an area bounded by Toronto, St. Louis and Baltimore. Duly on April 17th at 1 o'clock they are in Severance Hall in Cleveland and among violinists, sopranos, trumpets and tubas the oboe applicant appears. He plays a movement of a Handel Concerto in which the warmth and steadiness of his tone are apparent. The stylistic treatment of the music shows a natural refinement. The quick movement is dashing and spirited, but articulation of some passages is rather lacking in control. He is asked to read some music at sight. Has he had orchestral experience? No. He has only been studying three and a half years. An oboe part of a Mendelssohn Symphony is placed before him. Rhythmically weak but tonally a good result. Another try at it. This time much better rhythmically but as the passage goes along the steadiness of tone is lost. How about a try at some Brahms? The first reading is poor. A few moments to look at it and then talent shines through again. A grasp of the style, good tone, some difficult rhythms well achieved.

Aaron Copland with members of his composition class at Tanglewood.

Tanglewood students

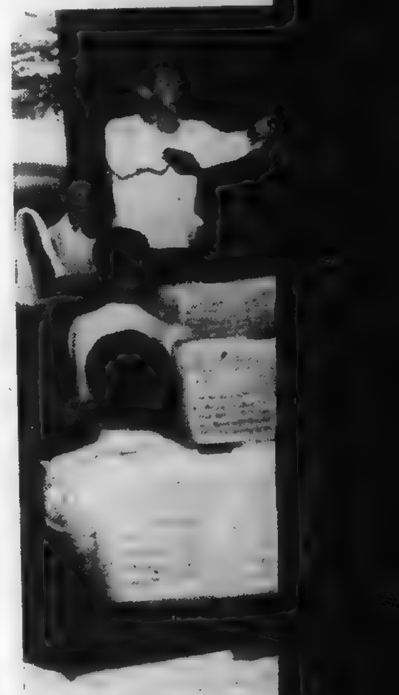
In about ten minutes the auditors know whether this young musician is likely to hold his own in a first-rate student orchestra. Does he have the solid make-up for the first desk? Is he flexible enough? Is his mastery of the instrument up to following a conductor's stick in an unfamiliar work? Can he learn quickly? Is he a weak talent well-taught or a fine talent poorly-taught? Will he be able to take part in a woodwind quintet working on Hindemith in the afternoon following a morning of orchestral rehearsal of Beethoven and Stravinsky?

A few weeks later in Boston, having listened to several hundred applicants in more than a dozen cities, their audition reports bearing the tale of talents high and low, the auditors begin to weed out the unprepared as well as the too professional. When the oboe division is considered, it is done in collaboration with Louis Speyer, the faculty member from the Boston Symphony Orchestra representing that instrument. It is necessary to choose five oboists —two of whom shall also play the English Horn—from the many who tried out, and also, of course, from those too far away to have been able to travel to an audition city.

All things considered, the Cleveland oboe student is written to, telling him that five oboes have been selected for Tanglewood and that he is not among them, but that his talent and ability have placed him on an alternate list and in the event that someone should drop out. etc. etc. Ten days later one of the accepted oboists writes that, delighted as he is to have been (Continued on Page 50)

(above) Charles M

(below) Leonard



Denver, Colo.
Post
4/28/53

Orchestra To Provide Auditions

Auditions for the Berkshire Music Center will be held by the Boston Symphony orchestra when it comes to Denver for a concert appearance May 13 in the city auditorium.

This is the summer school of music maintained by the orchestra at Tanglewood, Mass., in connection with the Berkshire Music Festival.

Denver is one of the cities on the orchestra's cross-country tour where such instrumental auditions have been scheduled.

The auditions will be offered at 6 p. m. May 13, in the city auditorium. Anyone wishing to be heard must register his name and the name of his instrument before May 12 at the office of the Denver Symphony society in the Kittredge building.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
APR 11 1953

Students May Audition for Tanglewood

While the Boston Symphony Orchestra is in Dallas for its April 30 concert at the State Fair Auditorium, it will hold auditions fo students applying for admissio and scholarships at the orchestra' summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lennox, Mass.

Auditions will be held at 6 p.m April 30, a Thursday, at the aud torium. Student applicants shoul leave their names and the nam of the instrument they play, befor

---

BOSTON, MASS.
TRAVELER
APR 9 - 1953

BERKSHIRE AUDITIONS

Auditions for young musicians seeking admission and scholarships at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school in Tanglewood, Lenox, will be held at Symphony Hall tomorrow at 10 A. M.

at Tanglewood

consist of getting lessons in voice or on one's instrument. oussevitzky's view that qualified young musicians should gether for ensemble work of a type which no private or conservatory could offer. So that from the numerous -music groups up through the larger choruses, the opera ons and the student symphony orchestra, the young musi- Tanglewood is constantly in a milieu which his winter not likely to afford him. The summer's work is, therefore, nse a form of competition with private or conservatory it rather a pendant which broadens the future musician's erkshire Music Center's five departments each in their r this type of music-making. Department One is the music and orchestral division of the school.

oe student in Cleveland, let us say, has heard of Tangle- l wants to come there to play in the orchestra. He writes hony Hall in Boston, where each mail from November queries and requests for acceptance. Application forms along with word that an audition committee from the Music Center will be in Cleveland's Severance Hall 17th from 1 to 4 o'clock. As the weeks go by oboists go, New York. Tulsa and Dallas also apply. With one ters will come a recommendation from a 1946 conduct- nt at Tanglewood that this boy in Kansas City is a lent and looks like a coming first oboe for any major Several former oboe students' applications also roll in pring and a few European students apply as well.

ss in spirit and armed with forms, audition reports and rchestral music, a committee leaves Boston in April for ks of auditions in an area bounded by Toronto, St. Louis imore. Duly on April 17th at 1 o'clock they are in Hall in Cleveland and among violinists, sopranos, trumpets and tubas the oboe applicant appears. He plays a movement of a Handel Concerto in which the warmth and steadiness of his tone are apparent. The stylistic treatment of the music shows a natural refinement. The quick movement is dashing and spirited, but articulation of some passages is rather lacking in control. He is asked to read some music at sight. Has he had orchestral experience? No. He has only been studying three and a half years. An oboe part of a Mendelssohn Symphony is placed before him. Rhythmically weak but tonally a good result. Another try at it. This time much better rhythmically but as the passage goes along the steadiness of tone is lost. How about a try at some Brahms? The first reading is poor. A few moments to look at it and then talent shines through again. A grasp of the style, good tone, some difficult rhythms well achieved.

Aaron Copland with members of his composition class at Tanglewood.

Tanglewood students relaxing during lunch hour in front of Concert Hall.

In about ten minutes the auditors know whether this young musician is likely to hold his own in a first-rate student orchestra. Does he have the solid make-up for the first desk? Is he flexible enough? Is his mastery of the instrument up to following a conductor's stick in an unfamiliar work? Can he learn quickly? Is he a weak talent well-taught or a fine talent poorly-taught? Will he be able to take part in a woodwind quintet working on Hindemith in the afternoon following a morning of orchestral rehearsal of Beethoven and Stravinsky?

A few weeks later in Boston, having listened to several hundred applicants in more than a dozen cities, their audition reports bearing the tale of talents high and low, the auditors begin to weed out the unprepared as well as the too professional. When the oboe division is considered, it is done in collaboration with Louis Speyer, the faculty member from the Boston Symphony Orchestra representing that instrument. It is necessary to choose five oboists—two of whom shall also play the English Horn—from the many who tried out, and also, of course, from those too far away to have been able to travel to an audition city.

All things considered, the Cleveland oboe student is written to, telling him that five oboes have been selected for Tanglewood and that he is not among them, but that his talent and ability have placed him on an alternate list and in the event that someone should drop out, etc. etc. Ten days later one of the accepted oboists writes that, delighted as he is to have been (Continued on Page 50)

(above) Charles Munch conducts a rehearsal of the student orchestra.

(below) Leonard Bernstein conducting the student orchestra.

Denver, Colo.
Post
4/28/53

Orchestra To Provide Auditions

Auditions for the Berkshire Music Center will be held by the Boston Symphony orchestra when it comes to Denver for a concert appearance May 13 in the city auditorium.

This is the summer school of music maintained by the orchestra at Tanglewood, Mass., in connection with the Berkshire Music Festival.

Denver is one of the cities on the orchestra's cross-country tour where such instrumental auditions have been scheduled.

The auditions will be offered at 8 p. m. May 13, in the city auditorium. Anyone wishing to be heard must register his name and the name of his instrument before May 12 at the office of the Denver Symphony society in the Kittredge building.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
APR 11 1953

Students May Audition for Tanglewood

While the Boston Symphony Orchestra is in Dallas for its April 30 concert at the State Fair Auditorium, it will hold auditions for students applying for admission and scholarships at the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lennox, Mass.

Auditions will be held at 6 p.m. April 30, a Thursday, at the auditorium. Student applicants should leave their names and the name of the instrument they play, before

---

BOSTON, MASS.
TRAVELER
APR 9 - 1953

BERKSHIRE AUDITIONS

Auditions for young musicians seeking admission and scholarships at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school in Tanglewood, Lenox, will be held at Symphony Hall tomorrow at 10 A. M.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
CALL BULLETIN
[illegible] 1953

Set Symphony Auditions Here

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will visit San Francisco for concerts in the Opera House on May 7 and 9, will hold instrumental auditions for students applying for admission and scholarships at the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Candidates for audition, to be held at 6 p. m. May 9 in the Opera House, may contact the San Francisco Symphony office at the Opera House, UN. 1-4008, prior to May 8, giving names and instruments played.

The auditions are open only to performers on orchestral instruments and the piano. Accompanists are not required.

DALLAS, TEX.
TIMES HERALD
APR 12 1953

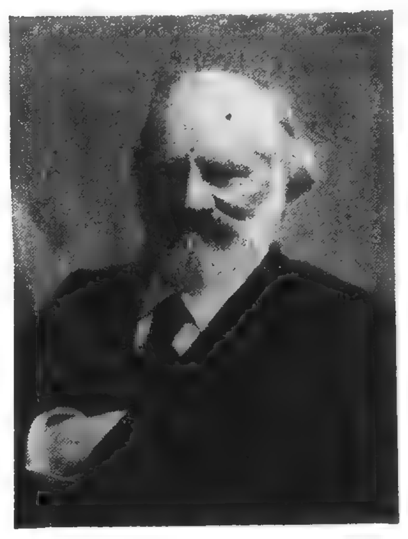
Boston Orchestra To Audition Here

While the Boston Symphony Orchestra is in Dallas for its April 30 concert in State Fair Auditorium, it will hold instrumental auditions for students applying for admission and scholarships at the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lennox, Mass.

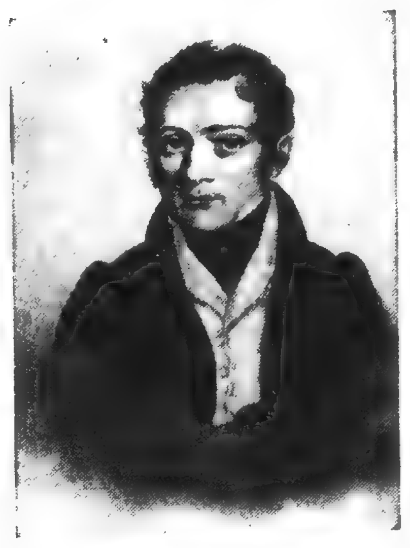
Students who wish to take an audition should list their names and their instrument before April 29 with auditorium officials.

[117]

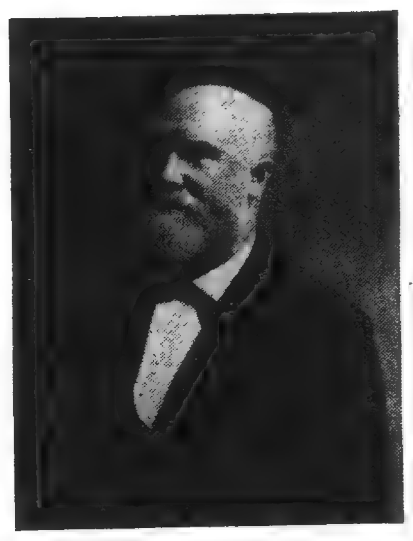
William Mason



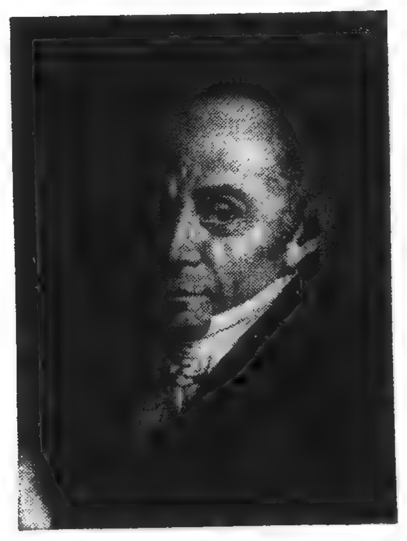
Theodor Leschetizky



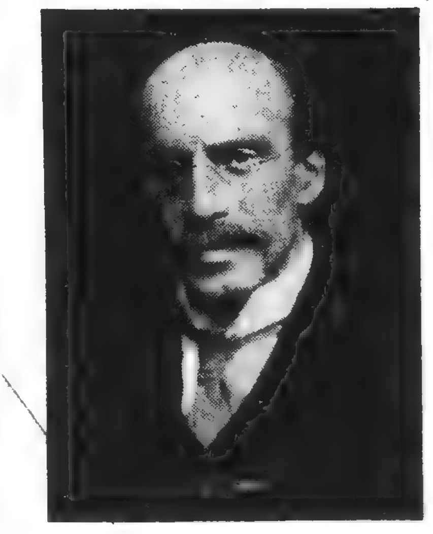
Carl Czerny



Ludwig Deppe



Muzio Clementi



Tobias Matthay

Who are the World's Greatest Piano Teachers?

How would you evaluate the key board technicians of the past and present? Here's a striking analysis based on a poll conducted by Doron K. Antrim

WHO ARE the great piano teachers of all time? I submitted that question to a number of those qualified to pass judgment. Each candidate to fame was evaluated on these points: number of his famous pupils, significance of new principles and techniques to future generations, extent to which he advanced the art of piano playing. After returns were in, the list was narrowed down to ten names receiving the greatest number of votes and falling in chronological order. They are:

Muzio Clementi (1752-1832), John B. Cramer (1771-1858), Frederick Wieck (1785-1873), Carl Czerny (1791-1857), Frédéric Chopin (1810-1849), Franz Liszt (1811-1886), Ludwig Deppe (1828-1890), William Mason (1829-1908), Theodor Leschetizky (1830-1915), Tobias Matthay (1858-1945).

A striking family relationship is noted here. Six in one big family influenced or studied with one another; Clementi, Cramer, Czerny, Liszt, Mason, and Leschetizky. The more independent off-shoots are: Wieck, Chopin, Deppe, and Matthay.

Taking them in order, Clementi was probably the first to see the amazing possibilities in a new instrument of orchestral dimensions, the pianoforte. In fact, his faith was such, he manufactured as well as taught the instrument. He lived through a most memorable period in the history of music. At his birth Handel was alive. Beethoven, Schubert and Weber were distinguished contemporaries.

Among Clementi's numerous pupils were: John Field, John B. Cramer, Zeuner, Alex. Klengel, Ludwig Berger, B. A. Bertini, Meyerbeer, and J. Moscheles.

But according to the judges, for his Gradus ad Parnassum, Clementi deserves a place in the piano teacher's Hall of Fame. Grove says of this work, "That superb series of 100 studies, upon which to this day the art of solid pianoforte playing rests." The Gradus, containing exercises of his own and of other composers, is Clementi's blue-print for acquiring virtuosity on the new instrument. He also left a number of compositions and studies. His sonatinas are still the backbone of beginning piano students. Clementi was great as a virtuoso, teacher and composer. He might rightly be called the father of pianoforte playing.

John B. Cramer lived most of his life in London, where he enjoyed a world-wide reputation as pianist and teacher. He studied with Clementi when 12 and 13, carried on many of his teacher's precepts and made his own contribution through melodious studies, chiefly the Bülow edition of Fifty Selected Studies. Bülow considered these studies essential to a pianist's development and as preparation to the Gradus. He saw in them an effort to advance the art along with the continuing improvement of the instrument and particularly in foreseeing the modern method of fingering in which transposition can be made with equal facility into any key.

"E.D." writing (Continued on Page 20)

TEN YEARS AT TANGLEWOOD

(Continued from Page 17)

honored by our acceptance and as much as he has been looking forward to spending a summer in Tanglewood, he has just been offered a job playing for the summer opera in New Orleans and since he needs the money badly he hopes we are not too inconvenienced by his withdrawal at this time, very truly. Alternate lists are brought out and a telegram goes to Cleveland. Our young applicant has made it.

The choice of all the other orchestral students takes place in a like manner. Auditions, recommendations by astute musicians, attendance at a previous Tanglewood session, requests from UNESCO, the winning of a National Federation of Music Clubs' contest—from these and similar sources the 40 violins, 12 violas, 10 cellos, 10 contrabasses, 5 flutes, 5 oboes, 5 clarinets, 4 bassoons, 8 French Horns, 5 trumpets, 5 trombones, the tuba, 3 harps, and 5 percussion students are assembled for work under Leonard Bernstein.

All the orchestral students are given scholarships but will be obliged to pay for their living expenses, which in the dormitories is $175. The tuition scholarship in the value of $150 is part of the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund, and each student signs a promise of willingness to repay a like amount when his circumstances will permit, so that other orchestras will be able to assemble in the Shed in years to come. This intricate procedure of putting a student orchestra together from all points of the compass during the spring weeks, is matched by other departments and divisions of the school.

Department Two, the choral department, is assembling with a two-fold purpose. It must form a class of choral conductors for work with Hugh Ross, and a Small Choir of 40 to 50 choral singers that will form the nucleus of the great Festival Chorus which will perform later with the Boston Symphony in the Berkshire Festival.

Department Three is devoted to Composition, It is the most restricted in numbers and accepts students of what one might call post-graduate level. After examining a mountainous heap of scores, about twenty composers were accepted in 1952 for study with either Aaron Copland, Luigi Dallapicolla or Lukas Foss. The list of former instructors invited from Europe who have been associated with Copland in Tanglewood's Department Three is extraordinarily strong in the varied influences which young American composers have faced. Past summers have seen such figures as Hindemith, Lopatnikoff, Honegger, Milhaud, Messiaen, and Ibert in residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

The Opera Department—Department Four—of necessity becomes one of the most complex problems of assembly. In order to function as a complete opera theatre, students are accepted for work here in stage directing, scenic design, costuming and lighting. Student coaches and stage directors are interviewed. Boris Goldovsky, the opera's Head, and other faculty members such as Paul Ulanovsky and Felix Wolfes listen to hundreds of singers in various parts of the country. Those acceptable are assigned to one of three divisions—Active, Associate, or Auditor—depending upon vocal ability, knowledge of operatic repertoire, and character type.

Audition reports, applications, supplementary forms with height, weight, studies, and operatic repertoire, song repertoire, questionnaires, and numerous letters, swell the opera department's files quickly. By June first they are enormous. But by that time there are about fifty singers and around thirty students chosen for the other divisions of coaching, stage directing, and scenic design. These are all briefed by letter during June concerning the productions they will work on during the summer.

At that Faculty Board meeting more than a year ago, one of the things most discussed was the choice of a suitable musician to head Department Five. Many musicians and educators were considered as possible for this invitation until the field was narrowed down to a California composer—Ingolf Dahl.

Tanglewood's Department Five is the division to which musical amateurs and the less advanced student are invited. It also is intended for the music teacher from Arkansas who wants a clean sweep of new musical excitement and the New York teacher who wants to relax under an elm and listen to the Boston Symphony Orchestra rehearsing in the distance. I brought this challenge of the heterogenous group to Ingolf Dahl in California last September, and a month later we again met in New York with Aaron Copland, Hugh Ross, and Thomas Perry to plan a workable musical activity for Department Five—renamed the Tanglewood Study Group.

Enrollment in the Study Group is simple; it only requires the ability to read music. In order to keep to a well-defined and not over-ambitious project—the music to be studied—sung and played—was restricted to 16th to 18th century compositions and simple modern ones adaptable to groups of various sizes. Here the amateur flutist—during the rest of the year an industrial engineer, and the violist who teaches mathematics at a large university—could indulge in serious music-making under expert guidance, for fun.

Another factor which sought to make the Tang a serious music mit two-week
ment in it, as six weeks of who joined th
Dahl also sang under Charles Boston Symph had, as it were,
view of Tangle tivities. The nat activities—its 4
certs, its lectur
the dominant winter months

Leonard Bern
like the studen Strauss' "Don its weekly conce
have a cellist
the solo part?
Berlioz "Requie
students be capa
the extra bands quires? Will th take cognizance in choral writin ductors and sin classic repertoi suggests that an included on each music concerts.

VOLUMES
LISZ
MEN
MOZ
SCH
SCH
ANTHOLOGI
86 MODERN R
23
DIES
R CO., it our retail store 171

Denver, Colo.
Post
4/28/53

Orchestra To Provide Auditions

Auditions for the Berkshire Music Center will be held by the Boston Symphony orchestra when it comes to Denver for a concert appearance May 13 in the city auditorium.

This is the summer school of music maintained by the orchestra at Tanglewood, Mass., in connection with the Berkshire Music Festival.

Denver is one of the cities on the orchestra's cross-country tour where such instrumental auditions have been scheduled.

The auditions will be offered at 6 p. m. May 13, in the city auditorium. Anyone wishing to be heard must register his name and the name of his instrument before May 12 at the office of the Denver Symphony society in the Kittredge building.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
APR 11 1953

Students May Audition for Tanglewood

While the Boston Symphony Orchestra is in Dallas for its April 30 concert at the State Fair Auditorium, it will hold auditions for students applying for admission and scholarships at the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lennox, Mass.

Auditions will be held at 6 p.m. April 30, a Thursday, at the auditorium. Student applicants should leave their names and the name of the instrument they play, before

---

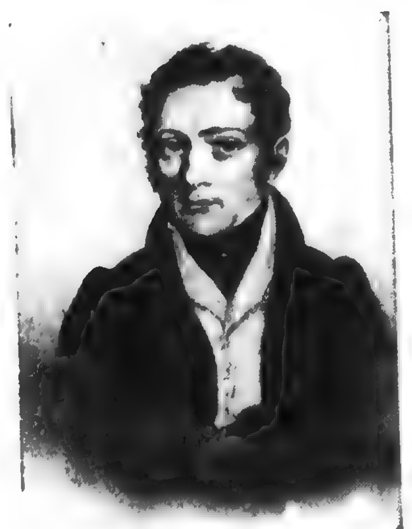
BOSTON, MASS.
TRAVELER
APR 9 - 1953

BERKSHIRE AUDITIONS

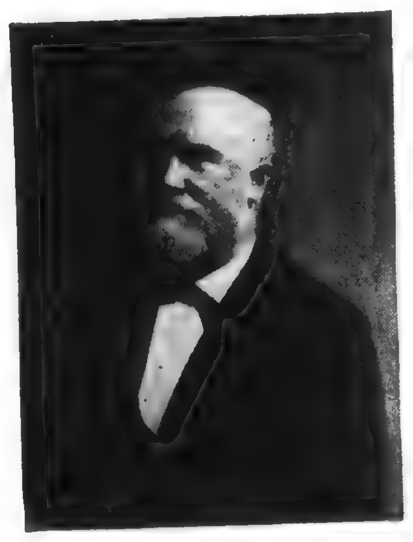
Auditions for young musicians seeking admission and scholarships at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school in Tanglewood, Lenox, will be held at Symphony Hall tomorrow at 10 A. M.

Theodor Leschetizky

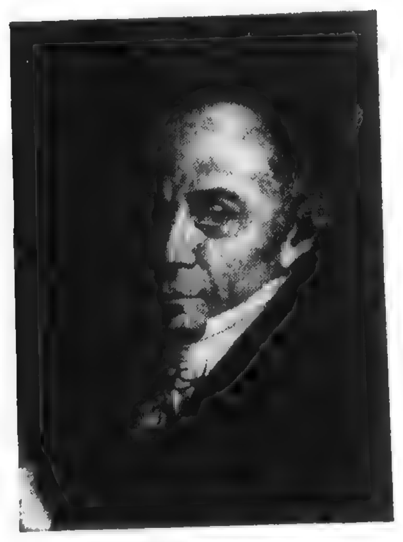
Carl Czerny



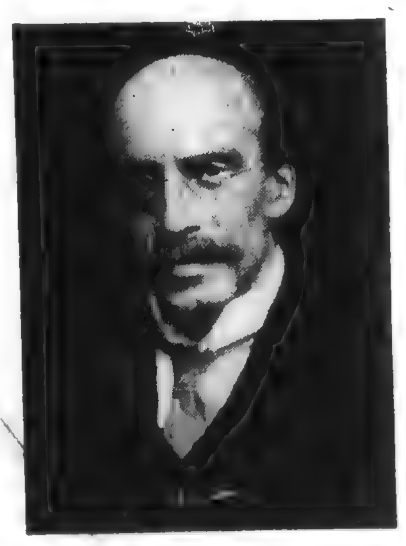
Ludwig Deppe



Muzio Clementi



Tobias Matthay



Piano Teachers?

's a d umerous pupils were:

ramer, Zeuner, Alex.
ger, B. A. Bertini, scheles.
the judges, for his , Clementi deserves a cher's Hall of Fame.
work. "That superb upon which to this l pianoforte playing ontaining exercises of composers, is Clemenquiring virtuosity on le also left a number studies. His sonatinas e of beginning piano
s great as a virtuoso,
. He might rightly be pianoforte playing.
ived most of his life enjoyed a world-wide st and teacher. He when 12 and 13, car-teacher's precepts and ution through melodithe Bülow edition of
es. Bülow considered l to a pianist's develration to the Gradus.
effort to advance the ntinuing improvement
d particularly in fore-ethod of fingering in an be made with equal ontinued on Page 20)

TEN YEARS AT TANGLEWOOD

(Continued from Page 17)

honored by our acceptance and as much as he has been looking forward to spending a summer in Tanglewood, he has just been offered a job playing for the summer opera in New Orleans and since he needs the money badly he hopes we are not too inconvenienced by his withdrawal at this time, very truly. Alternate lists are brought out and a telegram goes to Cleveland. Our young applicant has made it.

The choice of all the other orchestral students takes place in a like manner. Auditions, recommendations by astute musicians, attendance at a previous Tanglewood session, requests from UNESCO, the winning of a National Federation of Music Clubs' contest—from these and similar sources the 40 violins, 12 violas, 10 cellos, 10 contrabasses, 5 flutes, 5 oboes, 5 clarinets, 4 bassoons, 8 French Horns, 5 trumpets, 5 trombones, the tuba, 3 harps, and 5 percussion students are assembled for work under Leonard Bernstein.

All the orchestral students are given scholarships but will be obliged to pay for their living expenses, which in the dormitories is $175. The tuition scholarship in the value of $150 is part of the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund, and each student signs a promise of willingness to repay a like amount when his circumstances will permit, so that other orchestras will be able to assemble in the Shed in years to come. This intricate procedure of putting a student orchestra together from all points of the compass during the spring weeks, is matched by other departments and divisions of the school.

Department Two, the choral department, is assembling with a twofold purpose. It must form a class of choral conductors for work with Hugh Ross, and a Small Choir of 40 to 50 choral singers that will form the nucleus of the great Festival Chorus which will perform later with the Boston Symphony in the Berkshire Festival.

Department Three is devoted to Composition, It is the most restricted in numbers and accepts students of what one might call post-graduate level. After examining a mountainous heap of scores, about twenty composers were accepted in 1952 for study with either Aaron Copland, Luigi Dallapicolla or Lukas Foss. The list of former instructors invited from Europe who have been associated with Copland in Tanglewood's Department Three is extraordinarily strong in the varied influences which young American composers have faced. Past summers have seen such figures as Hindemith, Lopatnikoff, Honegger, Milhaud, Messiaen, and Ibert in residence at the Berkshire Music Center.

The Opera Department—Department Four—of necessity becomes one of the most complex problems of assembly. In order to function as a complete opera theatre, students are accepted for work here in stage directing, scenic design, costuming and lighting. Student coaches and stage directors are interviewed. Boris Goldovsky, the opera's Head, and other faculty members such as Paul Ulanovsky and Felix Wolfes listen to hundreds of singers in various parts of the country. Those acceptable are assigned to one of three divisions—Active, Associate, or Auditor—depending upon vocal ability, knowledge of operatic repertoire, and character type.

Audition reports, applications, supplementary forms with height, weight, studies, and operatic repertoire, song repertoire, questionnaires, and numerous letters, swell the opera department's files quickly. By June first they are enormous. But by that time there are about fifty singers and around thirty students chosen for the other divisions of coaching, stage directing, and scenic design. These are all briefed by letter during June concerning the productions they will work on during the summer.

At that Faculty Board meeting more than a year ago, one of the things most discussed was the choice of a suitable musician to head Department Five. Many musicians and educators were considered as possible for this invitation until the field was narrowed down to a California composer—Ingolf Dahl.

Tanglewood's Department Five is the division to which musical amateurs and the less advanced student are invited. It also is intended for the music teacher from Arkansas who wants a clean sweep of new musical excitement and the New York teacher who wants to relax under an elm and listen to the Boston Symphony Orchestra rehearsing in the distance. I brought this challenge of the heterogenous group to Ingolf Dahl in California last September, and a month later we again met in New York with Aaron Copland, Hugh Ross, and Thomas Perry to plan a workable musical activity for Department Five—renamed the Tanglewood Study Group.

Enrollment in the Study Group is simple; it only requires the ability to read music. In order to keep to a well-defined and not over-ambitious project—the music to be studied—sung and played—was restricted to 16th to 18th century compositions and simple modern ones adaptable to groups of various sizes. Here the amateur flutist—during the rest of the year an industrial engineer, and the violist who teaches mathematics at a large university—could indulge in serious music-making under expert guidance, for fun.

Another factor which sought to make the Tanglewood Study Group a serious musical holiday was to permit two-week and four-week enrollment in it, as well as for the usual six weeks of the session. The 110 who joined the work with Ingolf Dahl also sang in the Festival Chorus under Charles Munch, listened to Boston Symphony rehearsals and had, as it were, a constant bird's-eye view of Tanglewood's numerous activities. The nature of Tanglewood's activities—its 40 or so student concerts, its lecture courses—is one of the dominant problems during the winter months of planning.

Leonard Bernstein says he would like the student orchestra to play Strauss' "Don Quixote" at one of its weekly concerts. Fine. But will we have a cellist strong enough for the solo part? Mr. Munch plans the Berlioz "Requiem." Will our brass students be capable of taking part in the extra bands which the score requires? Will the choral repertoire take cognizance of the newest trends in choral writing and still give conductors and singers enough of the classic repertoire? William Kroll suggests that an American work be included on each of the six chamber-music concerts. Is the talent available in the Department to undertake this? Hugh Ross would like to include a new work on a Small Choir program which needs 13 instruments. Can some students of orchestra and chamber-music find time for this? The opera department's major production will be Mozart's "Titus." The orchestra for it is small and needs few winds. What work can be found for the remainder of the orchestra now largely woodwinds and brass? The Heifetz Award, the Piatigorsky Prize, the Wechsler Award must be given to worthy talents at the end of the session. Are they appearing in the enrollment?

The winter meetings in New York and Boston for such problems and for the discussion of ideas which occur to thinking musicians seeking as a group to carry out an ideal, makes the year go by quickly. Tanglewood's ideal is a living and working in music by a body of musicians and music students seeking to further the art they serve, and also to further the art of this country.

For those of us who work for Tanglewood there is not much time to slow down. July 1953 and Tanglewood's eleventh session are almost here.

THE END

VOLUMES

LISZT, FRANZ
Twenty Original Piano Compositions..430–40012
Twenty Piano Transcriptions.........430–40013
Ten Hungarian Rhapsodies..........430–40011

MENDELSSOHN, FELIX
Thirty Piano Compositions..........430–40014

MOZART, WOLFGANG AMADEUS
Twenty Piano Compositions..........430–40015

SCHUBERT, FRANZ
Selected Piano Compositions..........430–40016

SCHUMANN, ROBERT
Fifty Piano Compositions...........430–40017

ANTHOLOGIES

36 MODERN RUSSIAN PIANO MUSIC
Vol. I Akimenko to Korestchenko..................430–40024
23 Vol. II Liadoff to Wrangell......................430–40025

DIES 430–40026

R CO., Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania

it our retail store 1712 Chestnut Street

Denver, Colo.
Post
4/28/53

Orchestra To Provide Auditions

Auditions for the Berkshire Music Center will be held by the Boston Symphony orchestra when it comes to Denver for a concert appearance May 13 in the city auditorium.

This is the summer school of music maintained by the orchestra at Tanglewood, Mass., in connection with the Berkshire Music Festival.

Denver is one of the cities on the orchestra's cross-country tour where such instrumental auditions have been scheduled.

The auditions will be offered at 6 p. m. May 13, in the city auditorium. Anyone wishing to be heard must register his name and the name of his instrument before May 12 at the office of the Denver Symphony society in the Kittredge building.

DALLAS, TEX.
NEWS
APR 11 1953

Students May Audition for Tanglewood

While the Boston Symphony Orchestra is in Dallas for its April 30 concert at the State Fair Auditorium, it will hold auditions for students applying for admission and scholarships at the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lennox, Mass.

Auditions will be held at 6 p.m. April 30, a Thursday, at the auditorium. Student applicants should leave their names and the name of the instrument they play, before

---

BOSTON, MASS.
TRAVELER
APR 9 - 1953

BERKSHIRE AUDITIONS

Auditions for young musicians seeking admission and scholarships at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school in Tanglewood, Lenox, will be held at Symphony Hall tomorrow at 10 A. M.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
CALL BULLETIN
[illegible] 1953

Set Symphony Auditions Here

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will visit San Francisco for concerts in the Opera House on May 7 and 9, will hold instrumental auditions for students applying for admission and scholarships at the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Candidates for audition, to be held at 6 p. m. May 9 in the Opera House, may contact the San Francisco Symphony office at the Opera House, UN. 1-4008, prior to May 8, giving names and instruments played.

The auditions are open only to performers on orchestral instruments and the piano. Accompanists are not required.

DALLAS, TEX.
TIMES HERALD
APR 12 1953

Boston Orchestra To Audition Here

While the Boston Symphony Orchestra is in Dallas for its April 30 concert in State Fair Auditorium, it will hold instrumental auditions for students applying for admission and scholarships at the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lennox, Mass.

Students who wish to take an audition should list their names and their instrument before April 29 with auditorium officials.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS

MAY 2 1953

Boston Orchestra Will Audition BYU Musicians

While the Boston Symphony Orchestra is in Provo to give its concert at Brigham Young University Smith Auditorium on Tuesday, May 12, it will hold instrumental auditions for students applying for admission and scholarships at the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Auditions will be held at 6 p.m. at the auditorium on May 12, 1953. Students who wish to be given an audition should leave their names and the name of the instrument they play before May 11 with Dr. John R. Halliday or Professor Lawrence Sardoni of the Brigham Young University music faculty.

The Berkshire Music Center, started in 1940 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the late Serge Koussevitsky, will hold a six-week session at Tanglewood beginning July 6, with Charles Munch, conductor of the orchestra including the principals, as well as William Kroll, violinist of the Kroll String Quartet, cellist Gregor Piatigorsky, violinist Ruth Posselt and others.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
TRIBUNE

Richard Burgin, concertmaster of Boston Symphony, talks to Anna J. Hoyt and Ted Wight, auditioned for "Tanglewood."

Young Musicians Heard at Y.. Collegium Musicum Dated

A number of outstanding young Utah musicians were auditioned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra when it appeared in Provo May 12. The auditions were for students applying for admission and scholarships at the orchestra's famed summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., beginning July 6.

Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the orchestra, conducted the auditions held in the Joseph Smith Building Auditorium. Dr. John R. Halliday and Prof. Lawrence Sardoni of the Brigham Young University music department assisted.

Those accepted from auditions conducted all over the United States will be announced later.

This Clipping From
BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

MAY 10 1953

WHILE PURSUING its nationwide tour, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is not forgetting obligations to its summer activities in Tanglewood. In many metropolitan centers auditions are being held for students applying for admission and scholarship study in the Berkshire Music Center (as the summer school is known). In Chicago, for example, the auditions will be held in Orchestra Hall at 6:00 P.M. on May 16, when the orchestra will be in town for a concert. Students who qualify for performance in the student orchestra trained by Leonard Bernstein receive grants covering their tuition.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

APR 7 - 1953

Berkshire Auditions

The Berkshire Music Center will hold auditions in the Carnegie Recital Hall for singers and players of orchestral instruments applying for admission and scholarships in this summer's session. Singers applying for the opera department will be heard tomorrow from 9 to 11 a. m. Instrumentalists will be heard Monday from 10 a. m. to 1 p. m. The center's session at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., runs for six weeks, July 5 to Aug. 16.

WICHITA, KAN.
BEACON

JUN 3 1953

18—The Wichita Beacon Wednesday, June 3, 1953

STUDENT WINS SUMMER STUDY

A scholarship for summer study at the Berkshire Music Center, Lennox, Mass., has been awarded to Miss Sylvia McKibben, sophomore string bass student in the University of Wichita school of music.

The award covers full tuition for the orchestral training course of study. Under auspices of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Music Center provides its students with the opportunity to play under such conductors as Charles Munch, Leonard Bernstein, and Pierre Monteux.

Entrance is upon competitive audition. Miss McKibben, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rex McKibben of Winfield, Kas., auditioned in May at Denver, Colo., before George Moleux, principal bass player of the Boston Symphony.

She is a member of the University and Wichita symphonies.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
OKLAHOMAN

MAY 24 1953

The Berkshire Music Festival scholarship committee has announced the granting of a full tuition scholarship to Kyla Bynum, Oklahoma university student.

The scholarship will enable Miss Bynum to participate in the festival at Tanglewood, Mass.; which is sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Conductors for the student orchestra, as well as the Boston Symphony, will be Charles Munsch, Leonard Bernstein and Carlos Chavez.

Miss Bynum will attend the festival from July 2 to August 17 as a student of violin.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
TRIBUNE

MAY 3 1953

Auditions Set For Provo By Symphony

A highlight of the spring musical season in Utah will be the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in both Salt Lake City and Provo, but of interest to music students is the announcement that the orchestra will hold auditions at Provo for the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The auditions will be held at 6 p.m. May 12 in the Joseph Smith Auditorium.

Students who wish to be considered should contact Dr. John R. Halliday or Prof. Lawrence Sardoni of the Brigham Young University music faculty before May 11.

The Berkshire Music Center, originated in 1940 by the Boston Symphony under the late Serge Koussevitsky, will conduct a six-week session at Tanglewood beginning July 6. Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director and conductor, will direct.

Others who will participate include composer Aaron Copland; William Kroll, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist; Ruth Posselt, violinist, and others, including principals of the orchestra.

The instrumental divisions of the school include a full symphony orchestra for advanced students who work under the direction of Leonard Bernstein and intensive work in chamber music.

LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL

JUN 9 - 1953

U. of L. Graduate Gets Trombone Scholarship

Ray Parnes, 21, of 746 S. 18th, will study at the Berkshire Music Festival this summer on a scholarship. Parnes, a trombonist, was graduated Sunday from the University of Louisville School of Music.

He was auditioned for the scholarship by the first trombonist of the Boston Symphony in Cincinnati. The festival at Tanglewood, Mass., is operated by the symphony.

Parnes will be at Tanglewood for six weeks, beginning July 1. He is a graduate of Louisville Male High School and was a scholarship student at the U. of L. He was voted outstanding senior at the Music School.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MAY 9 - 1953

Symphony Holds Tanglewood Tests

By IRVING KOLODIN

WHILE pursuing its nationwide tour, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is not forgetting obligations to its Summer activities in Tanglewood.

In many metropolitan centers auditions are being held for students applying for admission and scholarship study in the Berkshire Music Center (as the Summer school is known). Students who qualify for performance in the student orchestra trained by Leonard Bernstein receive grants covering their tuition.

Cir. (D 280,526) (S 303,360)

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES-HERALD

MAY 3 - 1953

Set Auditions for Berkshire Scholarships

Instrumental auditions for Berkshire Music center scholarship and orchestral participation will be held in Chicago May 16 at 6 p. m. The auditions will coincide with the visit of the Boston Symphony orchestra, some of whose members will conduct the auditions. Applicants who are admitted to the student orchestra receive grants for tuition from the Tanglewood scholarship fund. Students seeking auditions should apply to the office of Orchestra hall, 220 S. Michigan av., Chicago, before May 15, sending name, address, phone number and name of instrument.

* * *

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MAY 25 1953

Miss Haley Awarded Choral Scholarship

HOPE HALEY

Miss Hope Haley, soprano and senior at the Hartt College of Music, has been awarded a scholarship in choral leadership by the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass.

Miss Haley will study at Tanglewood for six weeks. She is a pupil of Samuel Bertsche of Hartford and Louis Polanski of the Hartt faculty and will graduate in June with a bachelor of music education degree. She previously received a four-year college tuition grant and yearly music education scholarships.

A few of the works the Tanglewood singers, including Miss Haley, will perform are Haydn's St. Theresa Mass, "A Parable of Death" by Lukas Foss and the Brahms Requiem.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
GLOBE DEMOCRAT

MAR 16 1953

IN

ASPIRING YOUNG musicians of our town who want to audition for the annual scholarship to Berkshire Music Center in Massachusetts have until Wednesday to file applications. The Women's Association of the St. Louis Symphony again is granting a $300 scholarship to the music center, which opens its annual six-week course about July 1. The competition is open to students of orchestral instruments, but you have to be darned good. Only advanced students or young professionals should apply. Applicants must be between the ages of 18 and 25, be residents of Greater St. Louis and intend to make music a profession. Application blanks containing the student's name, address, telephone number, instrument, educational background and musical background must be in the hands of Mrs. Kenneth M. Davis, 6366 Wydown, St. Louis, by Wednesday. Auditions are scheduled for Mar. 25 at the Musicians' Club, 3535 Pine. You take it from there.

Cir. (D 93,339) (S 126,831)

This Clipping From
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
TRIBUNE

MAY 31 1953

Naomi San
After Winn

By

To Study at Tanglewood

Three Brigham Young University music students, who were auditioned by the Boston Symphony to participate in the Tanglewood Music Festival at Lennox, Mass., have accepted invitations to attend.

They are Glen Williams, Kemmerer, Wyo., a bassoonist, Cherry Beauregard, Fillmore, tuba, and Anna Julia Hoyt, Nephi, violinist.

The trio was among the many auditioned under direction of Richard Burgin, concertmaster for the Boston Orchestra.

They will attend the Tanglewood Festival, which will feature instruction by principals of the famed orchestra.

NORWICH, CONN.
BULLETIN

MAY 13 1953

MUSIC SCHOLARSHIP FOR MISS ELEEN DUSIO

Miss Eleen Dusio, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Dusio of 465 Dalton avenue, Pittsfield, Mass. who is assistant music supervisor in the Norwich public schools, has been granted a full tuition scholarship in advanced active choral conducting at the Tanglewood Berkshire Music Center, Lenox, Mass.

The Berkshire Music Center is a summer school of music maintained by the Boston Symphony orchestra in connection with its Berkshire festival concerts. It is under the leadership of Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The central purpose of the Berkshire Music Center is to provide for study of music on an advanced level through experience in actual performance and to offer instruction by established leaders in the various fields of music expression. A limited number is chosen for active status by auditions held during the spring.

Miss Dusio, a graduate from New England Conservatory of Music, Boston, with a bachelor's degree in music education, is taking courses towards a master's degree in music education at the New England Conservatory of Music.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS

MAY 2 1953

Boston Orchestra Will Audition BYU Musicians

While the Boston Symphony Orchestra is in Provo to give its concert at Brigham Young University Smith Auditorium on Tuesday, May 12, it will hold instrumental auditions for students applying for admission and scholarships at the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Auditions will be held at 6 p.m. at the auditorium on May 12, 1953. Students who wish to be given an audition should leave their names and the name of the instrument they play before May 11 with Dr. John R. Halliday or Professor Lawrence Sardoni of the Brigham Young University music faculty.

The Berkshire Music Center, started in 1940 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the late Serge Koussevitsky, will hold a six-week session at Tanglewood beginning July 6, with Charles Munch, conductor of the orchestra including the principals, as well as William Kroll, violinist of the Kroll String Quartet, cellist Gregor Piatigorsky, violinist Ruth Posselt and others.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
TRIBUNE

[illegible] 4 1953

Richard Burgin, concertmaster of Boston Symphony, talks to Anna J. Hoyt and Ted Wight, auditioned for "Tanglewood."

Young Musicians Heard at Y.. Collegium Musicum Dated

A number of outstanding young Utah musicians were auditioned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra when it appeared in Provo May 12. The auditions were for students applying for admission and scholarships at the orchestra's famed summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., beginning July 6.

Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the orchestra, conducted the auditions held in the Joseph Smith Building Auditorium. Dr. John R. Halliday and Prof. Lawrence Sardoni of the Brigham Young University music department assisted.

Those accepted from auditions conducted all over the United States will be announced later.

EX.
ALD
[illegible] 1953

stra
Here

Symphony
for its
State Fair
hold instru-r students
n and schol-tra's sum-at Tang to take an heir names ent before torium offi-

This Clipping From
BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

MAY 10 1953

WHILE PURSUING its nationwide tour, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is not forgetting obligations to its summer activities in Tanglewood. In many metropolitan centers auditions are being held for students applying for admission and scholarship study in the Berkshire Music Center (as the summer school is known). In Chicago, for example, the auditions will be held in Orchestra Hall at 6:00 P.M. on May 16, when the orchestra will be in town for a concert. Students who qualify for performance in the student orchestra trained by Leonard Bernstein receive grants covering their tuition.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

APR 7 - 1953

Berkshire Auditions

The Berkshire Music Center will hold auditions in the Carnegie Recital Hall for singers and players of orchestral instruments applying for admission and scholarships in this summer's session. Singers applying for the opera department will be heard tomorrow from 9 to 11 a. m. Instrumentalists will be heard Monday from 10 a. m. to 1 p. m. The center's session at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., runs for six weeks, July 5 to Aug. 16.

WICHITA, KAN.
BEACON

JUN 3 1953

18—The Wichita Beacon Wednesday, June 3, 1953

STUDENT WINS SUMMER STUDY

A scholarship for summer study at the Berkshire Music Center, Lennox, Mass., has been awarded to Miss Sylvia McKibben, sophomore string bass student in the University of Wichita school of music.

The award covers full tuition for the orchestral training course of study. Under auspices of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Music Center provides its students with the opportunity to play under such conductors as Charles Munch, Leonard Bernstein, and Pierre Monteux.

Entrance is upon competitive audition. Miss McKibben, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rex McKibben of Winfield, Kas., auditioned in May at Denver, Colo., before George Moleux, principal bass player of the Boston Symphony.

She is a member of the University and Wichita symphonies.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
OKLAHOMAN

MAY 24 1953

2

The Berkshire Music Festival scholarship committee has announced the granting of a full tuition scholarship to Kyla Bynum, Oklahoma university student.

The scholarship will enable Miss Bynum to participate in the festival at Tanglewood, Mass.; which is sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Conductors for the student orchestra, as well as the Boston Symphony, will be Charles Munsch, Leonard Bernstein and Carlos Chavez.

Miss Bynum will attend the festival from July 2 to August 17 as a student of violin.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
TRIBUNE

MAY 3 1953

Auditions Set For Provo By Symphony

A highlight of the spring musical season in Utah will be the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in both Salt Lake City and Provo, but of interest to music students is the announcement that the orchestra will hold auditions at Provo for the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The auditions will be held at 6 p.m. May 12 in the Joseph Smith Auditorium.

Students who wish to be considered should contact Dr. John R. Halliday or Prof. Lawrence Sardoni of the Brigham Young University music faculty before May 11.

The Berkshire Music Center, originated in 1940 by the Boston Symphony under the late Serge Koussevitsky, will conduct a six-week session at Tanglewood beginning July 6. Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director and conductor, will direct.

Others who will participate include composer Aaron Copland; William Kroll, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist; Ruth Posselt, violinist, and others, including principals of the orchestra.

The instrumental divisions of the school include a full symphony orchestra for advanced students who work under the direction of Leonard Bernstein and intensive work in chamber music.

LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL

JUN 9 - 1953

U. of L. Graduate Gets Trombone Scholarship

Ray Parnes, 21, of 746 S. 18th, will study at the Berkshire Music Festival this summer on a scholarship. Parnes, a trombonist, was graduated Sunday from the University of Louisville School of Music.

He was auditioned for the scholarship by the first trombonist of the Boston Symphony in Cincinnati. The festival at Tanglewood, Mass., is operated by the symphony.

Parnes will be at Tanglewood for six weeks, beginning July 1. He is a graduate of Louisville Male High School and was a scholarship student at the U. of L. He was voted outstanding senior at the Music School.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MAY 9 - 1953

Symphony Holds Tanglewood Tests

By IRVING KOLODIN

WHILE pursuing its nationwide tour, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is not forgetting obligations to its summer activities in Tanglewood.

In many metropolitan centers auditions are being held for students applying for admission and scholarship study in the Berkshire Music Center (as the Summer school is known). Students who qualify for performance in the student orchestra trained by Leonard Bernstein receive grants covering their tuition.

Cir. (D 280,526) (S 303,360)

This Clipping From
~~WASHINGTON, D. C.~~
~~TIMES-HERALD~~
CHICAGO D.

MAY 3 - 1953

Set Auditions for Berkshire Scholarships

Instrumental auditions for Berkshire Music center scholarship and orchestral participation will be held in Chicago May 16 at 6 p. m. The auditions will coincide with the visit of the Boston Symphony orchestra, some of whose members will conduct the auditions. Applicants who are admitted to the student orchestra receive grants for tuition from the Tanglewood scholarship fund. Students seeking auditions should apply to the office of Orchestra hall, 220 S. Michigan av., Chicago, before May 15, sending name, address, phone number and name of instrument.

• • •

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MAY 25 1953

Miss Haley Awarded Choral Scholarship

HOPE HALEY

Miss Hope Haley, soprano and senior at the Hartt College of Music, has been awarded a scholarship in choral leadership by the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass.

Miss Haley will study at Tanglewood for six weeks. She is a pupil of Samuel Bertsche of Hartford and Louis Polanski of the Hartt faculty and will graduate in June with a bachelor of music education degree. She previously received a four-year college tuition grant and yearly music education scholarships.

A few of the works the Tanglewood singers, including Miss Haley, will perform are Haydn's St. Theresa Mass, "A Parable of Death" by Lukas Foss and the Brahms Requiem.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
GLOBE DEMOCRAT

MAR 16 1953

IN

ASPIRING YOUNG musicians of our town who want to audition for the annual scholarship to Berkshire Music Center in Massachusetts have until Wednesday to file applications. The Women's Association of the St. Louis Symphony again is granting a $300 scholarship to the music center, which opens its annual six-week course about July 1. The competition is open to students of orchestral instruments, but you have to be darned good. Only advanced students or young professionals should apply. Applicants must be between the ages of 18 and 25, be residents of Greater St. Louis and intend to make music a profession. Application blanks containing the student's name, address, telephone number, instrument, educational background and musical background must be in the hands of Mrs. Kenneth M. Davis, 6366 Wydown, St. Louis, by Wednesday. Auditions are scheduled for Mar. 25 at the Musicians' Club, 3535 Pine. You take it from there.

Cir. (D 93,339) (S 126,831)

This Clipping From
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
TRIBUNE

MAY 31 1953

Naomi Sanc After Winn

best supper clubs. By

To Study at Tanglewood

Three Brigham Young University music students, who were auditioned by the Boston Symphony to participate in the Tanglewood Music Festival at Lennox, Mass., have accepted invitations to attend.

They are Glen Williams, Kemmerer, Wyo., a bassoonist, Cherry Beauregard, Fillmore, tuba, and Anna Julia Hoyt, Nephi, violinist.

The trio was among the many auditioned under direction of Richard Burgin, concertmaster for the Boston Orchestra.

They will attend the Tanglewood Festival, which will feature instruction by principals of the famed orchestra.

NORWICH, CONN.
BULLETIN

MAY 13 1953

MUSIC SCHOLARSHIP FOR MISS ELEEN DUSIO

Miss Eleen Dusio, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Dusio of 465 Dalton avenue, Pittsfield, Mass. who is assistant music supervisor in the Norwich public schools, has been granted a full tuition scholarship in advanced active choral conducting at the Tanglewood Berkshire Music Center, Lenox, Mass.

The Berkshire Music Center is a summer school of music maintained by the Boston Symphony orchestra in connection with its Berkshire festival concerts. It is under the leadership of Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The central purpose of the Berkshire Music Center is to provide for study of music on an advanced level through experience in actual performance and to offer instruction by established leaders in the various fields of music expression. A limited number is chosen for active study by auditions held during the spring.

Miss Dusio, a graduate from New England Conservatory of Music, Boston, with a bachelor's degree in music education, is taking courses towards a master's degree in music education at the New England Conservatory of Music.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS

MAY 2 1953

Boston Orchestra Will Audition BYU Musicians

While the Boston Symphony Orchestra is in Provo to give its concert at Brigham Young University Smith Auditorium on Tuesday May 12, it will hold instrumental auditions for students applying for admission and scholarships at the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Auditions will be held at 6 p.m. at the auditorium on May 12, 1953. Students who wish to be given an audition should leave their names and the name of the instrument they play before May 11 with Dr. John R. Halliday or Professor Lawrence Sardoni of the Brigham Young University music faculty.

The Berkshire Music Center, started in 1940 by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the late Serge Koussevitsky, will hold a six-week session at Tanglewood beginning July 6, with Charles Munch, conductor of the orchestra including the principals, as well as William Kroll, violinist of the Kroll String Quartet, cellist Gregor Piatigorsky, violinist Ruth Posselt and others.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
TRIBUNE

Richard Burgin, concertmaster of Boston Symphony, talks to Anna J. Hoyt and Ted Wight, auditioned for "Tanglewood."

Young Musicians Heard at Y.. Collegium Musicum Dated

A number of outstanding young Utah musicians were auditioned by the Boston Symphony Orchestra when it appeared in Provo May 12. The auditions were for students applying for admission and scholarships at the orchestra's famed summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., beginning July 6.

Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the orchestra, conducted the auditions held in the Joseph Smith Building Auditorium. Dr. John R. Halliday and Prof. Lawrence Sardoni of the Brigham Young University music department assisted.

Those accepted from auditions conducted all over the United States will be announced later.

TEX.
ALD 1953 estra Here

Symphony
for its
State Fair
hold instrustudents and schol-stra's sum-at Tangl-

to take an their names nent before torium offi-

This Clipping From
BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

MAY 10 1953

WHILE PURSUING its nationwide tour, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is not forgetting obligations to its summer activities in Tanglewood. In many metropolitan centers auditions are being held for students applying for admission and scholarship study in the Berkshire Music Center (as the summer school is known). In Chicago, for example, the auditions will be held in Orchestra Hall at 6:00 P.M. on May 16, when the orchestra will be in town for a concert. Students who qualify for performance in the student orchestra trained by Leonard Bernstein receive grants covering their tuition.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE

APR 7 - 1953

Berkshire Auditions

The Berkshire Music Center will hold auditions in the Carnegie Recital Hall for singers and players of orchestral instruments applying for admission and scholarships in this summer's session. Singers applying for the opera department will be heard tomorrow from 9 to 11 a. m. Instrumentalists will be heard Monday from 10 a. m. to 1 p. m. The center's session at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., runs for six weeks, July 5 to Aug. 16.

WICHITA, KAN.
BEACON

JUN 3 1953

18—The Wichita Beacon

STUDENT WINS SUMMER STUDY

A scholarship for summer study at the Berkshire Music Center, Lennox, Mass., has been awarded

W…

The award covers full tuition for the orchestral training course of study. Under auspices of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Music Center provides its students with the opportunity to play under such conductors as Charles Munch, Leonard Bernstein, and Pierre Monteux.

Entrance is upon competitive audition. Miss McKibben, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rex McKibben of Winfield, Kas., auditioned in May at Denver, Colo., before George

---

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
OKLAHOMAN

MAY 24 1953

The Berkshire Music Festival scholarship committee has announced the granting of a full tuition scholarship to Kyla Bynum, Oklahoma university student.

The scholarship will enable Miss Bynum to participate in the festival at Tanglewood, Mass.; which is sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Conductors for the student orchestra, as well as the Boston Symphony, will be Charles Munsch, Leonard Bernstein and Carlos Chavez.

Miss Bynum will attend the festival from July 2 to August 17 as a student of violin.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
TRIBUNE

MAY 3 1953

Auditions Set For Provo By Symphony

A highlight of the spring musical season in Utah will be the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in both Salt Lake City and Provo, but of interest to music students is the announcement that the orchestra will hold auditions at Provo for the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The auditions will be held at 6 p.m. May 12 in the Joseph Smith Auditorium.

Students who wish to be considered should contact Dr. John R. Halliday or Prof. Lawrence Sardoni of the Brigham Young University music faculty before May 11.

The Berkshire Music Center, originated in 1940 by the Boston Symphony under the late Serge Koussevitsky, will conduct a six-week session at Tanglewood beginning July 6. Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director and conductor, will direct.

Others who will participate include composer Aaron Copland; William Kroll, violinist; Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist; Ruth Posselt, violinist, and others, including principals of the orchestra.

The instrumental divisions of the school include a full symphony orchestra for advanced students who work under the direction of Leonard Bernstein and intensive work in chamber music.

LOUISVILLE, KY.
COURIER-JOURNAL

JUN 9 - 1953

U. of L. Graduate Gets Trombone Scholarship

Ray Parnes, 21, of 746 S. 18th, will study at the Berkshire Music Festival this summer on a scholarship. Parnes, a trombonist, was graduated Sunday from the University of Louisville School of Music.

He was auditioned for the scholarship by the first trombonist of the Boston Symphony in Cincinnati. The festival at Tanglewood, Mass., is operated by the symphony.

Parnes will be at Tanglewood for six weeks, beginning July 1. He is a graduate of Louisville Male High School and was a scholarship student at the U. of L. He was voted outstanding senior at the Music School.

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MAY 9 - 1953

Symphony Holds Tanglewood Tests

By IRVING KOLODIN

WHILE pursuing its nationwide tour, the Boston Symphony Orchestra is not forgetting obligations to its Summer activities in Tanglewood.

In many metropolitan centers auditions are being held for students applying for admission and scholarship study in the Berkshire Music Center (as the Summer school is known). Students who qualify for performance in the student orchestra trained by Leonard Bernstein receive grants covering their tuition.

Cir. (D 280,526) (S 303,360)

This Clipping From
WASHINGTON, D. C.
TIMES-HERALD

MAY 3 - 1953

Set Auditions for Berkshire Scholarships

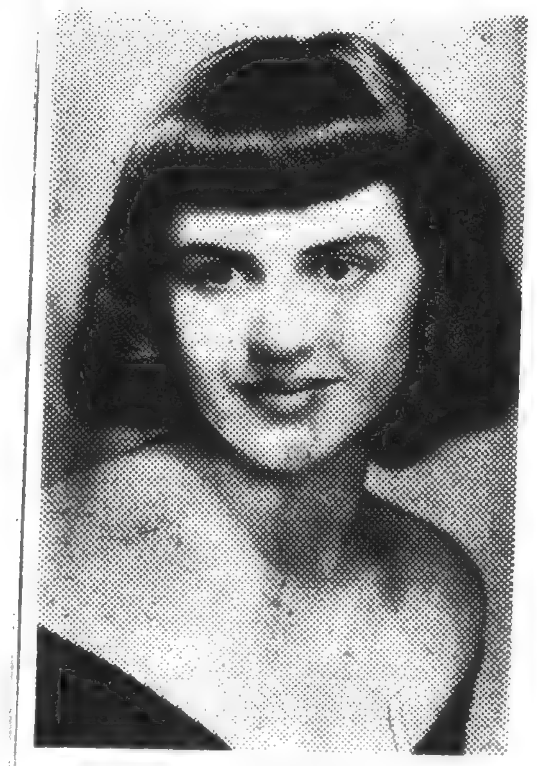
Instrumental auditions for Berkshire Music center scholarship and orchestral participation will be held in Chicago May 16 at 6 p. m. The auditions will coincide with the visit of the Boston Symphony orchestra, some of whose members will conduct the auditions. Applicants who are admitted to the student orchestra receive grants for tuition from the Tanglewood scholarship fund. Students seeking auditions should apply to the office of Orchestra hall, 220 S. Michigan av., Chicago, before May 15, sending name, address, phone number and name of instrument.

• • •

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

MAY 25 1953

Miss Haley Awarded Choral Scholarship



HOPE HALEY

Miss Hope Haley, soprano and senior at the Hartt College of Music, has been awarded a scholarship in choral leadership by the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass.

Miss Haley will study at Tanglewood for six weeks. She is a pupil of Samuel Bertsche of Hartford and Louis Polanski of the Hartt faculty and will graduate in June with a bachelor of music education degree. She previously received a four-year college tuition grant and yearly music education scholarships.

A few of the works the Tanglewood singers, including Miss Haley, will perform are Haydn's St. Theresa Mass, "A Parable of Death" by Lukas Foss and the Brahms Requiem.

ST. LOUIS, MO.
GLOBE DEMOCRAT

MAR 16 1953

IN

ASPIRING YOUNG musicians of our town who want to audition for the annual scholarship to Berkshire Music Center in Massachusetts have until Wednesday to file applications. The Women's Association of the St. Louis Symphony again is granting a $300 scholarship to the music center, which opens its annual six-week course about July 1. The competition is open to students of orchestral instruments, but you have to be darned good. Only advanced students or young professionals should apply. Applicants must be between the ages of 18 and 25, be residents of Greater St. Louis and intend to make music a profession. Application blanks containing the student's name, address, telephone number, instrument, educational background and musical background must be in the hands of Mrs. Kenneth M. Davis, 6366 Wydown, St. Louis, by Wednesday. Auditions are scheduled for Mar. 25 at the Musicians' Club, 3535 Pine. You take it from there.

Cir. (D 93,339) (S 126,831)

This Clipping From
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
TRIBUNE

MAY 31 1953

Naomi San After Winn

By

To Study at Tanglewood

Three Brigham Young University music students, who were auditioned by the Boston Symphony to participate in the Tanglewood Music Festival at Lennox, Mass., have accepted invitations to attend.

They are Glen Williams, Kemmerer, Wyo., a bassoonist, Cherry Beauregard, Fillmore, tuba, and Anna Julia Hoyt, Nephi, violinist.

The trio was among the many auditioned under direction of Richard Burgin, concertmaster for the Boston Orchestra.

They will attend the Tanglewood Festival, which will feature instruction by principals of the famed orchestra.

NORWICH, CONN.
BULLETIN

MAY 13 1953

MUSIC SCHOLARSHIP FOR MISS ELEEN DUSIO

Miss Eleen Dusio, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Dusio of 465 Dalton avenue, Pittsfield, Mass. who is assistant music supervisor in the Norwich public schools, has been granted a full tuition scholarship in advanced active choral conducting at the Tanglewood Berkshire Music Center, Lenox, Mass.

The Berkshire Music Center is a summer school of music maintained by the Boston Symphony orchestra in connection with its Berkshire festival concerts. It is under the leadership of Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The central purpose of the Berkshire Music Center is to provide for study of music on an advanced level through experience in actual performance and to offer instruction by established leaders in the various fields of music expression. A limited number is chosen for active study by auditions held during the spring.

Miss Dusio, a graduate from New England Conservatory of Music, Boston, with a bachelor's degree in music education, is taking courses towards a master's degree in music education at the New England Conservatory of Music.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.
STATES

JUN 9 - 1953

Two from LSU Get Scholarships

Richard Braud and Jeanne McCoy of New Orleans, students at Louisiana State university last term, have received scholarships to the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Mass., July 6-Aug. 16.

Braud, who just received his master of music degree, will study in the opera department under Boris Goldovsky and participate in numerous productions. Son of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Braud, he has sung in many LSU operas.

Miss McCoy, a junior last term in music education, will enroll in the orchestra department. Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. W. McCoy, she plays the French horn.

ST. PAUL, MINN.
PIONEER PRESS

MAY 31 1953

U Student Wins Scholarship

Tossi Ichiyanagi of Tokyo, a music student at the University of Minnesota, has been awarded a scholarship in composition to study with the eminent American composer Aaron Copland at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Mass., this summer.

Twenty-year-old Ichiyanagi received many music honors in his native Japan before coming to this country last year. He twice won first prize in the annual composition contests sponsored by Minichi, the leading Tokyo newspaper, in competition with Japanese composers of all ages.

Variety - July

Berkshire Fest Sales Up; 2 Operas Commissioned

Lenox, Mass., June 30.

The Berkshire Music Center, at Tanglewood here, has commissioned two young American composers to write operas for it. Opera director Boris Goldovsky announced that Leonard Rosenman, of N. Y., and Louis Mennini, of Rochester, have each received $750 commissions, and will be guests of the Center this summer while working on their operas. Center starts its 11th annual six-week session next Sunday (5).

Meantime, Boston Symphony Orchestra manager George E. Judd announced that the sale of tix for the 1953 Berkshire Festival has passed 1952's mark, with $59,000 of subscription sales already in. These are for the three series of BSO concerts July 31-Aug. 1-2; Aug. 7-8-9. and Aug. 14-15-16.

~~PAGE EIGHTEEN~~ Herald July 4

Munch Arrives to Direct Tanglewood

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony, has arrived in Tanglewood to assume his summer duties as conductor of the 1953 Berkshire Festival at Lenox after a month's vacation in his native Paris. He will address the opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center on Sunday afternoon and conduct members of the Boston Symphony in the initial two all-Bach programs in the Theater-Concert Hall, Saturday evening, July 11, and Sunday afternoon, July 12.

~~Lafayette Ga~~

MUSIC

May 2

The Boston Symphony Orchestra announces revisions in its six weekends of concerts in the Theater-Concert Hall and in the Music Shed, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. for the 1953 Berkshire Festival. Charles Munch, the Orchestra's Music Director, will conduct; with Pierre Monteux as Guest Conductor on August 1; Leonard Bernstein on August 8 and 15. An important innovation this season will see the concerts in the 6,000-seat Shed performed consecutively on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, July 31-August 16; with the chamber concerts in the 1,200-seat Concert Hall, as always on Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons, July 11-26.

This 16th Berkshire Festival since the open-air concerts were inaugurated in the hills of Western Massachusetts in 1934, the fourteenth since the Boston Symphony Orchestra participated, will mark the first summer in several seasons when Sunday afternoon concerts will be simultaneously broadcast over a coast-to-coast network. The first portion of the concerts, lasting an hour-and-a-half, on July 26, August 2, 9, and 16, will be carried by the Columbia Broadcasting System as part of its summer program of international music festivals. The Berkshire Festival will be the only American event in weekly programs, commencing tomorrow (Sunday, May 3), which will include broadcasts of the Florence, Salzburg, Bayreuth, Edinburgh Festivals in Europe.

Because the Columbia broadcasts commence at 2:30 p. m. Charles Munch has advanced to that hour all of this season's six Sunday afternoon Berkshire Festival programs which in other years have started at 3 p. m. Although the broadcast portion of the program ends at 4 p. m., Tanglewood audiences will hear the remainder of the concerts, following an intermission.

* * *

Eagle 5/21/53

Tanglewood Well Represented On International Music Board

Eight of the 11 members of the international music advisory board of the Congress for Cultural Freedom who recently selected 12 composers to compete for the newly-established 20th Century Masterpiece Awards have been active at Tanglewood. With the European Center of Culture and the Italian National Radio Network the congress will sponsor the contest in Rome next spring.

Four members of the board have been resident teachers of composition at the Berkshire Music Center and a fifth, Carlos Chavez, will come from Mexico to occupy the position for the coming season. Former Tanglewood teachers on the board are Samuel Barber, American composer; Luigi Dallapiccola, Italian; and Arthur Honegger, and Darius Milhaud, French. Igor Stravinsky has heard his music played in the Tanglewood Shed, Benjamin Britten came from England to assist in the first American presentation of his opera, "Peter Grimes," and Virgil Thomson, principal music critic of the New York Herald Tribune, has lectured at the school. Others on the board are Boris Blacher, Francesco Malipiero and Frank Martin.

12 Composers Accept

Acceptances have been received from all 12 composers whose works will be judged in performance by celebrated composers, performing artists and music critics during an international conference April 5 to 15. A winning work will be selected from each of three categories: A violin concerto with a prize of $3000, competed for by Ben Weber, U.S.A., Mario Peragallo, Italy, Carmago Guarnieri, Brazil, and Peter Racine Fricker, Great Britain; for a short symphonic work, approximately $2000, Conrad Beck of Switzerland, Vladimir Vogel, expatriate, Henri Dutilleux, France, and Giselhard Kleber, Germany; and for works for voice and chamber orchestra, about $1200, Camillo Togni, Italy, Jean-Louis Martinet, France and Lou Harrison, U.S.A.

In addition to cash awards, the prize-winning compositions are promised performance by three major European and three major American orchestras, publication, and recording by a leading company. The remaining entries also will be published. The Italian government will contribute the Rome radio orchestra for the performance of the competing works. The prizes are part of a cultural freedom awards program headed by Julius Fleischmann of Cincinnati, Ohio, who was instrumental in sending the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Europe last spring.

Nicholas Nabokov, secretary-general of the congress, announces, "The contest is designed to encourage gifted young musicians from all lands to provide an opportunity for having their works performed. The plan will help remove parochial barriers in contemporary music, and at the same time will enlarge the world's repertoire by adding works of superior quality to the programs of symphony orchestras, chamber music groups and individual performers everywhere."

NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AY 16 1953

'Best Congregation Of Talent' Expected At Music Center

With an expected 1,500 candidates to select from, the Berkshire Music center, advanced school for serious students of music at Tanglewood, Lenox, will have "the best congregation of advanced musical talent in some years" when it opens for its 11th season July 5.

That is the opinion of Ralph Berkowitz, dean of the center, who said that 500 applications already are being considered and that more than 1,000 additional inquiries are expected. In past years the school usually has had about 450 enrolled for its six weeks' course which coincides with the Berkshire Symphonic festival season at Tanglewood.

In connection with the current coast-to-coast tour of the Boston Symphony orchestra which presents the festival concerts and supplies many of the instructors for the school, auditions of prospective students are being held in many cities, Mr. Berkowitz said. He asserted, though, that there still are openings in all five divisions of the school: instrumental music which includes orchestral conducting, orchestra and chamber music; choral music including choral conducting, small choirs and the festival chorus; composition, opera and the Tanglewood study group. The latter group, initiated last season, is a department of general music study which makes the resources of Tanglewood available to music educators and amateurs.

Charles Munch, music director of the orchestra and director of the school, announced that Carlos Chavez, Mexican composer-conductor, will join Aaron Copland as teacher of composition, and that Mrs. Lorna Cook de Varon conductor of the New England Conservatory of Music chorus in Boston, will assist Hugh Ross in the Choral department.

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBU

Berkshires Ready for Festivals

By RICHARD V. HAPPEL

PITTSFIELD, Mass.

